Adjectives, when something depends on them, or when they have the import of a dependent clause, should, with their adjuncts, be set off by the comma; as,

1. -----“Among the roots
Of hazel, pendent o’er the plaintive stream,
They frame the first foundation of their domes.”—Thomson.

2. -----“Up springs the lark,
Shrill-voic’d and loud, the messenger of morn.”—Id.

EXCEPTION.—ADJECTIVES RESTRICTIVE.

When an adjective immediately follows its noun, and is taken in a restrictive sense, the comma should not be used before it; as,

——“And on the coast averse
From entrance or cherubic watch.”—Milton, P. L., B. ix, l. 68.

RULE IX.—FINITE VERBS.

Where a finite verb is understood, a comma is generally required; as, "From law arises security; from security, curiosity; from curiosity, knowledge."—Murray.

"Else all my prose and verse were much the same;
This, prose on stilts; that, poetry fallen lame."—Pope.

EXCEPTION.—VERY SLIGHT PAUSE.

As the semicolon must separate the clauses when the comma is inserted by this rule, if the pause for the omitted verb be very slight, it may be left unmarked, and the comma be used for the clauses; as, "When the profligate speaks of piety, the miser of generosity, the coward of valour, and the corrupt of integrity, they are only the more despised by those who know them."—Comstock's Elocution, p. 132.

RULE X.—INFINITIVES.

The infinitive mood, when it follows a verb from which it must be separated, or when it depends on something remote or understood, is generally, with its adjuncts, set off by the comma; as, "One of the greatest secrets in composition is, to know when to be simple."—Jamieson's Rhet., p. 151. "To confess the truth, I was much in fault."—Murray's Gram., p. 271.

Page 1422

"The Governor of all—has interposed,
Not seldom, his avenging arm, to smite
The injurious trampler upon nature's law."—Cowper.

RULE XI.—PARTICIPLES.

Participles, when something depends on them, when they have the import of a dependent clause, or when they relate to something understood, should, with their adjuncts, be set off by the comma; as, 1. "Law is a rule of civil conduct, prescribed by the supreme power in a state, commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong."—BLACKSTONE: Beattie's Moral Science, p. 346.

2. "Young Edwin, lighted by the evening star,
Lingering and list'ning wander'd down the vale."—Beattie.
3. "United, we stand; divided, we fall."—Motto.
4. "Properly speaking, there is no such thing as chance."

EXCEPTION.—PARTICIPLES RESTRICTIVE.

When a participle immediately follows its noun, and is taken in a restrictive sense, the comma should not be used before it; as,

"A man renown'd for repartee,
Will seldom scruple to make free
With friendship's finest feeling."—Cowper.

RULE XII.—ADVERBS. Adverbs, when they break the connexion of a simple sentence, or when they have not a close dependence on some particular word in the context, should, with their adjuncts, be set off by the comma; as, "We must not, however, confound this gentleness with the artificial courtesy of the world."—"Besides, the mind must be employed."—Gilpin. "Most unquestionably, no fraud was equal to all this."—Lyttelton. "But, unfortunately for us, the tide was ebbing already."

"When buttress and buttress, alternately,
Seem framed of ebon and ivory."—Scott's Lay, p. 33.

RULE XIII.—CONJUNCTIONS.

Conjunctions, when they are separated from the principal clauses that depend on them, or when they introduce examples, are generally set off by the comma; as, "But, by a timely call upon Religion, the force of Habit was eluded."—Johnson.

“They know the neck that joins the shore and sea,
Or, ah! how chang’d that fearless laugh would be.”—Crabbe.

RULE XIV.—PREPOSITIONS.

Prepositions and their objects, when they break the connexion of a simple sentence, or when they do not closely follow the words on which they depend, are generally set off by the comma; as, “Fashion is, for the most part, nothing but the ostentation of riches.”—“By reading, we add the experience of others to our own.”

“In vain the sage, with retrospective eye,
Would from th’ apparent What conclude the Why.”—Pope.

Page 1423

RULE XV.—INTERJECTIONS.

Interjections that require a pause, though more commonly emphatic and followed by the ecphoneme, are sometimes set off by the comma; as, “For, lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north.”—Jeremiah, i, 15. “O, ’twas about something you would not understand.”—Columbian Orator, p. 221. “Ha, ha! you were finely taken in, then!”—Aikin. “Ha, ha, ha! A facetious gentleman, truly!”—Id.

“Oh, when shall Britain, conscious of her claim, Stand emulous of Greek and Roman fame?”—Pope.

RULE XVI.—WORDS REPEATED.

A word emphatically repeated, is generally set off by the comma; as, “Happy, happy, happy pair!”—Dryden. “Ay, ay, there is some comfort in that.”—Shak. “Ah! no, no, no.”—Dryden.

“The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket, which hung in the well!”—Woodworth.

RULE XVII.—DEPENDENT QUOTATIONS.

A quotation, observation, or description, when it is introduced in close dependence on a verb, (as, say, reply, cry, or the like,) is generally separated from the rest of the sentence by the comma; as, “‘The book of nature,’ said he, ‘is before thee.’”——Hawkesworth. “‘I say unto all, Watch.’”—Mark. “‘The boy has become a man,’ means, ‘he has grown to be a man.’ ‘Such conduct becomes a man,’ means, ‘such conduct befits him.’”—Hart’s Gram., p. 116.

“While man exclaims, ‘See all things for my use!’
‘See man for mine!’ replies a pamper’d goose.”—Pope.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PUNCTUATION.—ERRORS CONCERNING THE COMMA.

UNDER RULE I.—OF SIMPLE SENTENCES.

“Short, simple sentences should not be separated by a comma.”—Felton’s Gram., 1st Ed., p. 135; 3d Ed., Stereotyped, p. 137.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because a needless comma is put after short, the sentence being simple. But, according to Rule 1st for the Comma, “A simple sentence does not, in general, admit the comma.” Therefore, this comma should be omitted; thus, “Short simple sentences should not be separated by a comma.” Or, much better: “A short simple sentence should rarely be divided by the comma.” For such sentences, combined to form a period, should generally be separated; and even a single one may have some phrase that must be set off.]

Page 1424

"A regular and virtuous education, is an inestimable blessing."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 174. "Such equivocal expressions, mark an intention to deceive."—ib., p. 256. "They are, This and that, with their plurals these and those."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 26; Practical Lessons, p. 3. "A nominative case and a verb, sometimes make a complete sentence; as, He sleeps."—Felton's Gram., p. 78. "Tense, expresses the action connected with certain relations of time; mood, represents it as farther modified by circumstances of contingency, conditionally, &c."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 37. "The word Noun, means name."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 14. "The present, or active participle, I explained then."—ib., p. 97. "Are some verbs used, both transitively and intransitively?"—Cooper's Pt. and Pract. Gram., p. 54. "Blank verse, is verse without rhyme."—Hallock's Gram., p. 242. "A distributive adjective, denotes each one of a number considered separately."—ib., p. 51.

"And may at last my weary age,
Find out the peaceful hermitage."
—Murray's Gr., 12mo, p. 205; 8vo, 255.

UNDER THE EXCEPTION CONCERNING SIMPLE SENTENCES.

"A noun without an Article to limit it is taken in its widest sense."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 8; Practical Lessons, p. 10.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma is here set before the verb is taken. But, according to the Exception to Rule 1st for the Comma, "When the nominative in a long simple sentence is accompanied by inseparable adjuncts, or when several words together are used in stead of a nominative, a comma should be placed immediately before the verb." Therefore, a comma should be here inserted; thus, "A noun without an article to limit it, is taken in its widest sense."—Lennie's Gram., p. 6.]

"To maintain a steady course amid all the adversities of life marks a great mind."—Day's District School Gram., p. 84. "To love our Maker supremely and our neighbor as ourselves comprehends the whole moral law."—ibid. "To be afraid to do wrong is true courage."—ib., p. 85. "A great fortune in the hands of a fool is a great misfortune."—Bullions, Practical Lessons, p. 89. "That he should make such a remark is indeed strange."—Farnum, Practical Gram., p. 30. "To walk in the fields and groves is delightful."—Id., ib. "That he committed the fault is most certain."—Id., ib. "Names common to all things of the same sort or class are called Common nouns; as, man, woman, day."—Bullions, Pract. Les., p. 12. "That it is our duty to be pious admits not of any doubt."—Id., E. Gram., p. 118. "To endure misfortune with resignation is the characteristic of a great mind,"—Id., ib., p. 81. "The assisting of a friend in such circumstances was certainly a duty."—Id., ib., 81. "That a life of virtue is the safest is certain.”—Hallock’s Gram., p. 169. “A collective noun denoting the idea of unity should be represented by a pronoun of the singular number.”—lb., p. 167.

Page 1425

UNDER RULE II.—OF SIMPLE MEMBERS.

"When the sun had arisen the enemy retreated."—Day's District School Gram., p. 85.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma here separates the two simple members which compose the sentence. But, according to Rule 2d, "The simple members of a compound sentence, whether successive or involved, elliptical or complete, are generally divided by the comma." Therefore, a comma should be inserted after arisen; thus, "When the sun had arisen, the enemy retreated."]

"If he become rich he may be less industrious."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 118. "The more I study grammar the better I like it."—Id., ib., p. 127. "There is much truth in the old adage that fire is a better servant than master."—Id., ib., p. 128. "The verb do, when used as an auxiliary gives force or emphasis to the expression."—Day's Gram., p. 39. "Whatsoever it is incumbent upon a man to do it is surely expedient to do well."—J. Q. Adams's Rhetoric, Vol. i, p. 46. "The soul which our philosophy divides into various capacities, is still one essence."—Channing, on Self-Culture, p. 15. "Put the following words in the plural and give the rule for forming it."—Bullions, Practical Lessons, p. 19. "We will do it if you wish."—Id., ib., p. 29. "He who does well will be rewarded."—Id., ib., 29. "That which is always true is expressed in the present tense."—Id., ib., p. 119. "An observation which is always true must be expressed in the present tense."—Id., Prin. of E. Gram., p. 123. "That part of orthography which treats of combining letters to form syllables and words is called SPELLING."—Day's Gram., p. 8. "A noun can never be of the first person except it is in apposition with a pronoun of that person."—Id., p. 14. "When two or more singular nouns or pronouns refer to the same object they require a singular verb and pronoun."—Id., p. 80. "James has gone but he will return in a few days."—Id., 89. "A pronoun should have the same person, number, and gender as the noun for which it stands."—Id., 89 and 80. "Though he is out of danger he is still afraid."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 80. "She is his inferior in sense but his equal in prudence."—Id., p. 81. "The man who has no sense of religion is little to be trusted."—Id., 81. "He who does the most good has the most pleasure."—Id., 81. "They were not in the most prosperous circumstances when we last saw them."—Id., 81. "If the day continue pleasant I shall return."—Felton's Gram., 1st Ed., p. 22; Ster. Ed., 24. "The days that are past are gone for ever."—Id., pp. 89 and 92. "As many as are friendly to the cause will sustain it."—Id., 89 and 92. "Such as desire aid will receive it."—Id., 89 and 92. "Who gave you that book which you prize so much?"—Bullions, Pract. Lessons, p. 32. "He who made it now preserves and governs it."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 83.

Page 1426

“Shall he alone, whom rational we call,
Be pleased with nothing if not blessed with all?”
—Felton’s Gram., p. 126.

UNDER THE EXCEPTIONS CONCERNING SIMPLE MEMBERS.

“Newcastle is the town, in which Akenside was born.”—Bucke’s Classical Gram., p. 54.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because a needless comma here separates the restrictive relative which from its antecedent town. But, according to Exception 1st to Rule 2d, “When a relative immediately follows its antecedent, and is taken in a restrictive sense, the comma should not be introduced before it.” Therefore, this comma Should be omitted; thus, “Newcastle is the town in which Akenside was born.”]

“The remorse, which issues in reformation, is true repentance.”—Campbell’s Philos. of Rhet., p. 255. “Men, who are intemperate, are destructive members of community.”—Alexander’s Gram., p. 93. “An active-transitive verb expresses an action, which extends to an object.”—Felton’s Gram., pp. 16 and 22. “They, to whom much is given, will have much to answer for.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 188. “The prospect, which we have, is charming.”—Cooper’s Pl. and Pr. Gram., p. 143. “He is the person, who informed me of the matter.”—ib., p. 134; Cooper’s Murray, 120. “These are the trees, that produce no fruit.”—ib., 134; and 120. “This is the book, which treats of the subject.”—ib., 134; and 120. “The proposal was such, as pleased me.”—Cooper, Pl. and Pr. Gram., p. 134. “Those, that sow in tears, shall reap in joy.”—Id., ib., pp. 118 and 124; and Cooper’s Murray, p. 141. “The pen, with which I write, makes too large a mark.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 71. “Modesty makes large amends for the pain, it gives the persons, who labour under it, by the prejudice, it affords every worthy person in their favour.”—ib., p. 80. “Irony is a figure, whereby we plainly intend something very different from what our words express.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 108. “Catachresis is a figure, whereby an improper word is used instead of a proper one.”—ib., p. 109. “The man, whom you met at the party, is a Frenchman.”—Frost’s Practical Gram., p. 155.

UNDER RULE III.—OF MORE THAN TWO WORDS.

“John, James and Thomas are here: that is, John and James, &c.”—Cooper’s Plain and Practical Grammar, p. 153.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma is here used after James, or after Thomas, or again after John, in the latter clause; the three nouns being supposed to be in the same construction, and all of them nominatives to the verb are. But, according to Rule 3d for the Comma, “When more than two words or terms are connected in the same construction, or in a joint dependence on some other term, by conjunctions expressed or understood, the comma should be inserted after every one of them but the last; and, if they are nominatives before a verb, the comma should follow the last also." Therefore, the comma should be inserted after each; thus, "John, James, and Thomas, are here: that is, John, and James, and Thomas, are here."][463]

Page 1427

"Adverbs modify verbs adjectives and other adverbs."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 97. "To Nouns belong Person, Gender, Number and Case."—Id., Practical Lessons, p. 12. "Wheat, corn, rye, and oats are extensively cultivated."—Id., ib., p. 13. "In many, the definitions, rules and leading facts are prolix, inaccurate and confused."—Finch's Report on Gram., p. 3. "Most people consider it mysterious, difficult and useless."—Id., p. 3. "His father and mother, and uncle reside at Rome."—Farnum's Gram., p. 11. "The relative pronouns are who, which and that."—Bullions, Practical Lessons, p. 29. "That is sometimes a demonstrative, sometimes a relative and sometimes a conjunction."—Id., ib., p. 33. "Our reputation, virtue, and happiness greatly depend on the choice of our companions."—Day's Gram., p. 92. "The spirit of true religion is social, kind and cheerful."—Felton's Gram., p. 81. "Do, be, have and will are sometimes principal verbs."—Id., p. 26. "John and Thomas and Peter reside at Oxford."—Webster, Philos. Gram., p. 142; Improved Gram., p. 96. "The most innocent pleasures are the most rational, the most delightful and the most durable."—Id., ib., pp. 215 and 151. "Love, joy, peace and blessedness are reserved for the good."—Id., ib., 215 and 151. "The husband, wife and children, suffered extremely."—Murray's Gram., 4th Am. Ed., 8vo, p. 269. "The husband, wife, and children suffer extremely."—Sanborn's Analytical Gram., p. 268. "He, you, and I have our parts assigned us."—Ibid.

"He moaned, lamented, tugged and tried,
Repented, promised, wept and sighed."—Felton's Gr., p. 108.

UNDER RULE IV.—OF ONLY TWO WORDS.

"Disappointments derange, and overcome, vulgar minds."—Murray's Exercises, p. 15.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the two verbs here connected by and, are needlessly separated from each other, and from their object following. But, according to Rule 4th, "When only two words or terms are connected by a conjunction, they should not be separated by the comma." Therefore, these two commas should be omitted; thus, "Disappointments derange and overcome vulgar minds."]

"The hive of a city, or kingdom, is in the best condition, when there is the least noise or buzz in it."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 171. "When a direct address is made, the noun, or pronoun, is in the nominative case independent."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 88. "The verbs love and teach, make loved, and taught, in the imperfect and participle."—Id., p. 97. "Neither poverty, nor riches were injurious to him."—Cooper's Pl. and Pr. Gram., p. 133. "Thou, or I am in fault."—Wright's Gram., p. 136. "A verb is a word that expresses action, or being.”—Day’s District School Gram., pp. 11 and 61. “The Objective Case denotes the object of a verb, or a preposition.”—lb., pp. 17 and 19. “Verbs of the second conjugation may be either transitive, or intransitive.”—lb., p. 41. “Verbs of the fourth conjugation may be either transitive, or intransitive.”—lb., 41. “If a verb does not form its past indicative by adding d, or ed to the indicative present, it is said to be irregular.”—lb., 41. “The young lady is studying rhetoric, and logic.”—Cooper’s Pl. and Pr. Gram., p. 143. “He writes, and speaks the language very correctly.”—lb., p. 148. “Man’s happiness, or misery, is, in a great measure, put into his own hands.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 183. “This accident, or characteristic of nouns, is called their Gender.”—Bullions, E. Gram., 1843, p. 195.

Page 1428

“Grant that the powerful still the weak controul;
Be Man the Wit, and Tyrant of the whole.”
—POPE: Brit. Poets, vi, 375.

UNDER EXCEPTION I.—TWO WORDS WITH ADJUNCTS.

“Franklin is justly considered the ornament of the new world and the pride of modern philosophy.”—Day’s District School Gram., p. 88.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the words ornament and pride, each of which has adjuncts, are here connected by and without a comma before it. But, according to Exception 1st to Rule 4th, “When the two words connected have several adjuncts, or when one of them has an adjunct that relates not to both, the comma is inserted.” Therefore, a comma should be set before and; thus, “Franklin is justly considered the ornament of the New World, and the pride of modern philosophy.”]

“Levity and attachment to worldly pleasures, destroy the sense of gratitude to him.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 183. “In the following Exercise, point out the adjectives and the substantives which they qualify.”—Bullions, Practical Lessons, p. 100. “When a noun or pronoun is used to explain or give emphasis to a preceding noun or pronoun.”—Day’s Gram., p. 87. “Superior talents and briliancy of intellect do not always constitute a great man.”—lb., p. 92. “A word that makes sense after an article or the phrase speak of, is a noun.”—Bullions, Practical Lessons, p. 12. “All feet used in poetry, are reducible to eight kinds; four of two syllables and four of three.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 123. “He would not do it himself nor let me do it.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 113.[464] “The old writers give examples of the subjunctive mode and give other modes to explain what is meant by the words in the subjunctive.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 352.

UNDER EXCEPTION II.—TWO TERMS CONTRASTED.

Page 1429

"We often commend as well as censure imprudently."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 214. "It is as truly a violation of the right of property, to take little as to take much; to purloin a book, or a penknife, as to steal money; to steal fruit as to steal a horse; to defraud the revenue as to rob my neighbour; to overcharge the public as to overcharge my brother; to cheat the postoffice as to cheat my friend."—Wayland's Moral Science, 1st Edition, p. 254. "The classification of verbs has been and still is a vexed question."—Bullions, E. Grammar, Revised Edition, p. 200. "Names applied only to individuals of a sort or class and not common to all, are called Proper Nouns."—Id., Practical Lessons, p. 12. "A hero would desire to be loved as well as to be revered."—Day's Gram., p. 108. "Death or some worse misfortune now divides them."—Cooper's Pl. and Pr. Gram., p. 133. "Alexander replied, 'The world will not permit two suns nor two sovereigns.'"—Goldsmith's Greece, Vol. ii, p. 113.

"From nature's chain, whatever link you strike, Tenth or ten thousandth, breaks the chain alike."
—Felton's Gram., p. 131.

UNDER EXCEPTION III.—ALTERNATIVE OF WORDS.

"Metre or Measure is the number of poetical feet which a verse contains."—Hiley's Gram., p. 123. "The Caesura or division, is the pause which takes place in a verse, and which divides it into two parts."—Id., 123. "It is six feet or one fathom deep."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 113. "A BRACE is used in poetry at the end of a triplet or three lines which rhyme together."—Felton's Gram., p. 142. "There are four principal kinds of English verse or poetical feet."—Id., p. 143. "The period or full stop denotes the end of a complete sentence."—Sanborn's Analytical Gram., p. 271. "The scholar is to receive as many jetons or counters as there are words in the sentence."—St. Quentin's Gram., p. 16. "That [thing] or the thing which purifies, fortifies also the heart."—Peirce's Gram., p. 74. "That thing or the thing which would induce a laxity in public or private morals, or indifference to guilt and wretchedness, should be regarded as the deadly Sirocco."—Id., 74. "What is elliptically what thing or that thing which."—Sanborn's Gram., p. 99. "Demonstrate means show or point out precisely."—Id., p. 139. "The man or that man, who endures to the end, shall be saved."—Hiley's Gram., p. 73. UNDER EXCEPTION IV.—A SECOND COMMA.

Page 1430

"Reason, passion answer one great end."—Bullions's E. Gram., p. 152; Hiley's, p. 112.
 "Reason, virtue answer one great aim."—Cooper's Pl. and Pract. Gram., p. 194;
Butler's, 204. "Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above."—Felton's Gram.,
 p. 90. "Every plant, and every tree produces others after its kind."—Day's Gram., p. 91.
 "James, and not John was paid for his services."—Ib., 91. "The single dagger, or obelisk [Dagger] is the second."—Ib., p. 113. "It was I, not he that did it."—St. Quentin's
Gram., p. 152. "Each aunt, (and) each cousin hath her speculation."—Sanborn's Gram., p. 139. "'I shall see you when you come,' is equivalent to 'I shall see you then, or at that time when you come.'"—Butler's Pract. Gram., p. 121.

"Let wealth, let honour wait the wedded dame,
 August her deed, and sacred be her fame."—Pope, p. 334.

UNDER RULE V.—OF WORDS IN PAIRS.

"My hopes and fears, joys and sorrows centre in you."—B. GREENLEAF: Sanborn's
Gram., p. 268.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma here separates the second pair of nominatives from the verb. But, according to Rule 5th, "When successive words are joined in pairs by conjunctions, they should be separated in pairs by the comma." Therefore, an other comma should be inserted after sorrows; thus, "My hopes and fears, joys and sorrows, centre in you."]

"This mood implies possibility, or liberty, will, or obligation."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 113.
 "Substance is divided into Body, and Spirit into Extended and Thinking."—Brightland's Gram., p. 253. "These consonants, [d and t,] like p, and b, f, and v, k, and hard g, and s, and z, are letters of the same organ."—Walkers Dict., p. 41: Principles, No. 358.
 "Neither fig nor twist pigtail nor cavendish have passed my lips since, nor ever shall they again."—Boston Cultivator, Vol. vii, p. 36. "The words WHOEVER, or WHOSOEVER, WHICHEVER, or WHICHSOEVER, and WHATEVER, or WHATSOEVER are called COMPOUND RELATIVE PRONOUNS."—Day's Gram., p. 23. "Adjectives signifying profit or disprofit, likeness or unlikeness govern the dative."—Bullions, Lat. Gram., 12th Ed., 215.

UNDER RULE VI.—OF WORDS ABSOLUTE.

"Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 135.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma is here set after staff, which, with the noun rod, is put absolute by pleonasm. But, according to Rule 6th, "Nouns or pronouns put absolute, should, with their adjuncts, be set off by the comma.” Therefore, a comma should be here inserted; thus, “Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me.”—Psalms xxiii, 4.]

Page 1431

"Depart ye wicked."—Wright's Gram., p. 70. "He saith to his mother, Woman behold thy son."—Gurney's Portable Evidences, p. 44. "Thou God seest me."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 9; Practical Lessons, p. 13. "Thou, God seest me."—Id., E. Gram., Revised Ed., p. 195. "John write me a letter. Henry go home."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 356. "John; write a letter. Henry; go home."—Id., p. 317. "Now, G. Brown; let us reason together."—Id., p. 326. "Smith: You say on page 11, the objective case denotes the object."—Id., p. 344. "Gentlemen: will you always speak as you mean?"—Id., p. 352. "John: I sold my books to William for his brothers."—Id., p. 47. "Walter and Seth: I will take my things, and leave yours."—Id., p. 69. "Henry: Julia and Jane left their umbrella, and took yours."—Id., p. 73. "John; harness the horses and go to the mine for some coal. William; run to the store for a few pounds of tea."—Id., p. 160. "The king being dead the parliament was dissolved."—Chandler's Gram., p. 119.

"Cease fond nature, cease thy strife,
And let me languish into life."—Bullions's E. Gram., p. 173.

"Forbear great man, in arms renown'd, forbear."—Id., p. 174.

"Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind,
Each prayer accepted and each wish resign'd."—Hiley's Gr., p. 123.

UNDER RULE VII.—WORDS IN APPOSITION.

"We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice," &c.—Hallock's Gram., p. 200.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma is here set after the pronoun We, with which the word people, which has adjuncts, is in apposition. But, according to Rule 7th, "Words in apposition, (especially if they have adjuncts,) are generally set off by the comma." Therefore, an other comma should be here inserted; thus, "We, the people of the United States," &c.]

"The Lord, the covenant God of his people requires it."—Anti-Slavery Magazine, Vol. i, p. 73. "He as a patriot deserves praise."—Hallock's Gram., p. 124. "Thomson the watchmaker and jeweller from London, was of the party."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 128. "Every body knows that the person here spoken of by the name of the conqueror, is William duke of Normandy."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 33. "The words myself, thysself, himself, herself, and their plurals ourselves, yourselves, and themselves are called Compound Personal Pronouns."—Day's Gram., p. 22.

"For who to dumb forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing anxious being e'er resign'd,

Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing, ling'ring look behind?"—U. Poems, p. 68.

Page 1432

UNDER EXCEPTIONS CONCERNING APPPOSITION.

“Smith and Williams’ store; Nicholas, the emperor’s army.”—Day’s Gram., p. 17. “He was named William, the conqueror.”—Ib., p. 80. “John, the Baptist, was beheaded.”—Ib., p. 87. “Alexander, the coppersmith, did me great harm.”—Hart’s Gram., p. 126. “A nominative in immediate apposition; as, ‘The boy, Henry, speaks.’”—Smart’s Accidence, p. 29. “A noun objective can be in apposition with some other; as, ‘I teach the boy, Henry.’”—Ib., p. 30.

UNDER RULE VIII.—OF ADJECTIVES.

“But he found me, not singing at my work ruddy with health vivid with cheerfulness; but pale and dejected, sitting on the ground, and chewing opium.”

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the phrases, “ruddy with health,” and “vivid with cheerfulness,” which begin with adjectives, are not here commaed. But, according to Rule 8th, “Adjectives, when something depends on them, or when they have the import of a dependent clause, should, with their adjuncts, be set off by the comma.” Therefore, two other commas should be here inserted; thus, “But he found me, not singing at my work, ruddy with health, vivid with cheerfulness; but pale,” &c.—Dr. Johnson.]

“I looked up, and beheld an inclosure beautiful as the gardens of paradise, but of a small extent.”—See Key. “A is an article, indefinite and belongs to ‘book.’”—Bullions, Practical Lessons, p. 10. “The first expresses the rapid movement of a troop of horse over the plain eager for the combat.”—Id., Lat. Gram., p. 296. “He [, the Indian chieftain, King Philip,] was a patriot, attached to his native soil; a prince true to his subjects and indignant of their wrongs; a soldier daring in battle firm in adversity patient of fatigue, of hunger, of every variety of bodily suffering and ready to perish in the cause he had espoused.”—See Key.

“For thee, who mindful of th’ unhonour’d dead
Dost in these lines their artless tale relate.”
—Union Poems, p. 68.

“Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest:
Some Cromwell guiltless of his country’s blood.”
—Day’s Gram., p. 117.

“Idle after dinner in his chair
Sat a farmer ruddy, fat, and fair.”
—Hiley’s Gram., p. 125.

UNDER THE EXCEPTION CONCERNING ADJECTIVES.

Page 1433

"When an attribute becomes a title, or is emphatically applied to a name, it follows it; as Charles, the Great; Henry, the First; Lewis, the Gross."—Webster's Philos. Gram., p. 153; Improved Gram., p. 107. "Feed me with food, convenient for me."—Cooper's Practical Gram., p. 118. "The words and phrases, necessary to exemplify every principle progressively laid down, will be found strictly and exclusively adapted to the illustration of the principles to which they are referred."—Ingersoll's Gram., Pref., p. x. "The Infinitive Mode is that form of the verb which expresses action or being, unlimited by person, or number."—Day's Gram., p. 35. "A man, diligent in his business, prospers."—Frost's Practical Gram., p. 113.

"O wretched state! oh bosom, black as death!"
—Hallock's Gram., p. 118.

"O, wretched state! O, bosom, black as death!"
—Singer's Shak., Vol. ii, p. 494.

UNDER RULE IX.—OF FINITE VERBS.

"The Singular denotes one; the Plural more than one."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 12; Pract. Lessons, p. 16; Lennie's Gram., p. 7.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma is here set after Plural, where the verb denotes is understood. But, according to Rule 9th, "Where a finite verb is understood, a comma is generally required." Therefore, a comma should be inserted at the place mentioned; thus, "The Singular denotes one; the Plural, more than one."]

"The comma represents the shortest pause; the semicolon a pause longer than the comma; the colon longer than the semicolon; and the period longer than the colon."—Hiley's Gram., p. 111. "The comma represents the shortest pause; the semicolon a pause double that of the comma; the colon, double that of the semicolon; and the period, double that of the colon."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 151; Pract. Lessons, p. 127. "Who is applied only to persons; which to animals and things; what to things only; and that to persons, animals, and things."—Day's Gram., p. 23. "A or an is used before the singular number only; the before either singular or plural."—Bullions, Practical Lessons, p. 10. "Homer was the greater genius; Virgil the better artist."—Day's Gram., p. 96. "Homer was the greater genius, Virgil the better artist."—POPE'S PREFACE: British Poets, Vol. vi, p. viii. "Words are formed of syllables; syllables of letters."—St. Quentin's General Gram., p. 2. "The Conjugation of an active verb is styled the ACTIVE VOICE; and that of a passive verb the PASSIVE VOICE."—Frost's El. of E. Gram., p. 19. "The CONJUGATION of an active verb is styled the ACTIVE VOICE, and that of a passive verb the PASSIVE VOICE."—Smith's

Page 1434

New. Gram., p. 171. "The possessive is sometimes called the genitive case; and the objective the accusative."—L. Murray's Gram., 12mo, p. 44. "Benevolence is allied to few vices; selfishness to fewer virtues."—Kames, Art of Thinking, p. 40. "Orthography treats of Letters, Etymology of Words, Syntax of Sentences, and Prosody of Versification."—Hart's English Gram., p. 21.

"Earth praises conquerors for shedding blood;
Heaven those that love their foes, and do them good."—See Key.

UNDER RULE X.—OF INFINITIVES.

"His business is to observe the agreement or disagreement of words."—Bullions, E. Grammar, Revised Edition, p. 189.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma here divides to observe from the preceding verb. But, according to Rule 10th, "The infinitive mood, when it follows a verb from which it must be separated, or when it depends on something remote or understood, is generally, with its adjuncts, set off by the comma." Therefore, a comma should be inserted after is; thus, "His business is, to observe the agreement or disagreement of words."]

"It is a mark of distinction to be made a member of this society."—Farnum's Gram., 1st Ed., p. 25; 2d Ed., p. 23. "To distinguish the conjugations let the pupil observe the following rules."—Day's D. S. Gram., p. 40. "He was now sent for to preach before the Parliament."—Life of Dr. J. Owen, p. 18. "It is incumbent on the young to love and honour their parents."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 83. "It is the business of every man to prepare for death."—Id., ib., 83. "It argued the sincerest candor to make such an acknowledgement."—Id., ib., p. 115. "The proper way is to complete the construction of the first member, and leave that of the second understood."—Id., ib., p. 125. "ENEMY is a name. It is a term of distinction given to a certain person to show the character in which he is represented."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 23. "The object of this is to preserve the soft sound of c and g."—Hart's Gram., p. 29. "The design of grammar is to facilitate the reading, writing, and speaking of a language."—Barrett's Gram., 10th Ed., Pref., p. iii. "Four kinds of type are used in the following pages to indicate the portions that are considered more or less elementary."—Hart's Gram., p. 3.

UNDER RULE XI.—OF PARTICIPLES.

"The chancellor being attached to the king secured his crown."—Wright's Gram., p. 114.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the phrase, "being attached to the king," is not commaed. But, according to Rule 11th, "Participles, when something depends on them, when they have the import of a dependent clause, or when they relate to something understood, should, with their adjuncts, be set off by the comma.” Therefore, two commas should be here inserted; thus, “The chancellor, being attached to the king, secured his crown.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 66.]

Page 1435

"The officer having received his orders, proceeded to execute them."—Day's Gram., p. 108. "Thus used it is in the present tense."—Bullions, E. Gram., Revised Ed., p. 33. "The Imperfect tense has three distinct forms corresponding to those of the present tense."—Id., ib., p. 40. "Every possessive case is governed by some noun denoting the thing possessed."—Id., ib., p. 87. "The word that used as a conjunction is preceded by a comma."—Id., ib., p. 154. "His narrative being composed upon such good authority, deserves credit."—Cooper's Pl. and Pr. Gram., p. 97. "The hen being in her nest, was killed and eaten there by the eagle."—Murray's Key, 8vo. p. 252. "Pronouns being used instead of nouns are subject to the same modifications."—Sanborn's Gram., p. 92. "When placed at the beginning of words they are consonants."—Hallock's Gram., p. 14. "Man starting from his couch, shall sleep no more."—Id., p. 222. "His and her followed by a noun are possessive pronouns: not followed by a noun they are personal pronouns."—Bullions, Practical Lessons, p. 33.

"He with viny crown advancing,
First to the lively pipe his hand addressed."—Id., E. Gram., p. 83.

UNDER THE EXCEPTION CONCERNING PARTICIPLES.

"But when they convey the idea of many, acting individually, or separately, they are of the plural number."—Day's Gram., p. 15. "Two or more singular antecedents, connected by and require verbs and pronouns of the plural number."—Id., pp. 80 and 91. "Words ending in y, preceded by a consonant, change y into i when a termination is added."—Butlers Gram., p. 11. "A noun, used without an article to limit it, is generally taken in its widest sense."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 30. "Two nouns, meaning the same person or thing, frequently come together."—Bucke's Gram., p. 89. "Each one must give an account to God for the use, or the abuse of the talents, committed to him."—Coopers Pl. and Pract. Gram., p. 133. "Two vowels, united in one sound, form a diphthong."—Frost's El. of Gram., p. 6. "Three vowels, united in one sound, form a triphthong."—Id. "Any word, joined to an adverb, is a secondary adverb."—Barrett's Revised Gram., p. 68. "The person, spoken to, is put in the Second person. The person, spoken of, in the Third person."—Cutler's Gram., p. 14. "A man, devoted to his business, prospers."—Frost's Pr. Gram., p. 113.

UNDER RULE XII.—OF ADVERBS.

"So in indirect questions; as, 'Tell me when he will come.'"—Butler's Gram., p. 121.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the adverb So is not set off by the comma. But according to Rule 12th, "Adverbs, when they break the connexion of a simple sentence, or when they have not a close dependence on some particular word in the context, should, with their adjuncts, be set off by the comma.” Therefore, a comma should be inserted after So; thus, “So, in indirect questions; as,” &c.]

Page 1436

"Now when the verb tells what one person or thing does to another, the verb is transitive."—Bullions, Pract. Les., p. 37. "Agreeably to your request I send this letter."—Id., E. Gram., p. 141. "There seems therefore, to be no good reason for giving them a different classification."—Id., E. Gram., p. 199. "Again the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls."—ALGER'S BIBLE: Matt., xiii, 45. "Again the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea."—Id., ib., verse 47. "Cease however, is used as a transitive verb by our best writers."—Webster's Philos. Gram., p. 171. "Time admits of three natural divisions, namely: Present, Past, and Future."—Day's Gram., p. 37. "There are three kinds of comparison, namely: regular, irregular, and adverbial."—Id., p. 31. "There are five Personal Pronouns namely: I, thou, he, she, and it."—Id., p. 22. "Nouns have three cases, viz. the Nominative, Possessive, and Objective."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 16; P. Lessons, p. 19. "Hence in studying Grammar, we have to study words."—Frazee's Gram., p. 18. "Participles like Verbs relate to Nouns and Pronouns."—Miller's Ready Grammarian, p. 23. "The time of the participle like that of the infinitive is estimated from the time of the leading verb."—Bullions, Lat. Gram., p. 97.

"The dumb shall sing the lame his crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe."—Hiley's Gram., p. 123.

UNDER RULE XIII.—OF CONJUNCTIONS.

"But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them."—FRIENDS' BIBLE, and SMITH'S: Matt., xiii, 29.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma is inserted after lest. But, according to Rule 13th, "Conjunctions, when they are separated from the principal clauses that depend on them, or when they introduce examples, are generally set off by the comma." Therefore, a comma should be put after the word lest; thus, "But he said, Nay; lest, while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them."—SCOTT'S BIBLE, ALGER'S, BRUCE'S.]

"Their intentions were good; but wanting prudence, they missed the mark at which they aimed."—Murray's Key, 8vo, Vol. ii, p. 221. "The verb be often separates the name from its attribute; as war is expensive."—Webster's Philos. Gram., p. 153. "Either and or denote an alternative; as 'I will take either road at your pleasure.'"—Id., p. 63; Imp. Gram., 45. "Either is also a substitute for a name; as 'Either of the roads is good.'"—Webster, both Grams., 63 and 45. "But alas! I fear the consequence."—Day's Gram., p. 74. "Or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?"—Scott's

Page 1437

Bible, and Smith's. "Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion?"—Smiths Bible. "The infinitive sometimes performs the office of a nominative case, as 'To enjoy is to obey.'—POPE."—Cutler's Gram., p. 62. "The plural is commonly formed by adding s to the singular, as book, books."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 12. "As 'I were to blame, if I did it.'"—Smart's Accidence, p. 16.

"Or if it be thy will and pleasure
Direct my plough to find a treasure."—Hiley's Gram., p. 124.

"Or if it be thy will and pleasure,
Direct my plough to find a treasure."—Hart's Gram., p. 185.

UNDER RULE XIV.—OF PREPOSITIONS.

"Pronouns agree with the nouns for which they stand in gender, number, and person."—Butler's Practical Gram., pp. 141 and 148; Bullions's Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 150.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the preposition in has not the comma before it, as the text requires. But, according to Rule 14th, "Prepositions and their objects, when they break the connexion of a simple sentence, or when they do not closely follow the words on which they depend, are generally set off by the comma." Therefore, a comma should be here inserted; thus, "Pronouns agree with the nouns for which they stand, in gender, number, and person." Or the words may be transposed, and the comma set before with; thus, "Pronouns agree in gender, number, and person, with the nouns for which they stand."]

"In the first two examples the antecedent is person, or something equivalent; in the last it is thing."—Butler, ib., p. 53. "In what character he was admitted is unknown."—ib., p. 55. "To what place he was going is not known."—ib., p. 55. "In the preceding examples John, Caesar, and James are the subjects."—ib., p. 59. "Yes is generally used to denote assent in the answer to a question."—ib., p. 120. "That in its origin is the passive participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb thean, to take"—ib., p. 127. "But in all these sentences as and so are adverbs."—ib., p. 127. "After an interjection or exclamatory sentence is placed the mark of exclamation."—Blair's Gram., p. 116. "Intransitive verbs from their nature can have no distinction of voice."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 30. "To the inflection of verbs belong Voices, Moods, Tenses, Numbers, and Persons."—Id., ib., p. 33; Pract. Lessons, p. 41. "As and so in the antecedent member of a comparison are properly adverbs."—Id., E. Gram., p. 113. "In the following Exercise point out the words in apposition."—Id., P. Lessons, p. 103. "In the following Exercise point out the noun or pronoun denoting the possessor.”— Id., ib., p. 105. “Its is not found in the Bible except by misprint.”— Hallock’s Gram., p. 68. “No one’s interest is concerned except mine.”— Ib., p. 70. “In most of the modern languages there are four concords.”— St. Quentin’s Gen. Gram., p. 143. “In illustration of these remarks let us suppose a case.”— Hart’s Gram., p. 104. “On the right management of the emphasis depends the life of pronunciation.”— Ib., p. 172; Murray’s, 8vo, p. 242.

Page 1438

UNDER RULE XV.—OF INTERJECTIONS.

“Behold he is in the desert.”—SCOTT’S BIBLE: Matt., xxiv, 26.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the interjection Behold, which has usually a comma after it in Scripture, has here no point. But, according to Rule 15th, “Interjections that require a pause, though more commonly emphatic and followed by the ecphoneme, are sometimes set off by the comma.” In this instance, a comma should be used; thus, “Behold, he is in the desert.”—Common Bible.]

“And Lot said unto them, Oh not so my Lord.”—SCOTT’S BIBLE: Gen., xix, 18. “Oh let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live.”—SCOTT: Gen., xix, 20. “Behold! I come quickly.—BIBLE.”—Day’s Gram., p. 74. “Lo! I am with you always.”—Day’s Gram., pp. 10 and 73. “And lo! I am with you always.”—Ib., pp. 78 and 110. “And lo, I am with you alway.”—SCOTT’S BIBLE, and BRUCE’S: Matt., xxviii, 20. “Ha! ha! ha! how laughable that is.”—Bullions, Pract. Les., p. 83. “Interjections of Laughter,—Ha! he! hi! ho!”—Wright’s Gram., p. 121.

UNDER RULE XVI.—OF WORDS REPEATED.

“Lend lend your wings! I mount! I fly!”—Example varied.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the repeated word lend has here no comma. But, according to Rule 16th, “A word emphatically repeated, is generally set off by the comma.” In this instance, a comma is required after the former lend, but not after the latter; thus,

“Lend, lend your wings! I mount! I fly!”—Pope’s Poems, p. 317.

]

“To bed to bed to bed. There is a knocking at the gate. Come come come. What is done cannot be undone. To bed to bed to bed.”—See Burgh’s Speaker, p. 130. “I will roar, that the duke shall cry, Encore encore let him roar let him roar once more once more."—See ib., p. 136.

"Vital spark of heav'nly flame,
Quit oh quit this mortal frame."—Hiley's Gram., p. 126.

"Vital spark of heav'nly flame,
Quit, oh quit, this mortal frame!"—Bullions, E. Gr., p. 172.

"O the pleasing pleasing Anguish,
When we love, and when we languish."—Ward's Gram., p. 161.

"Praise to God immortal praise
For the love that crowns our days!"—Hiley's Gram., p. 124.

Page 1439

UNDER RULE XVII.—OF DEPENDENT QUOTATIONS.

"Thus, of an infant, we say 'It is a lovely creature.'"—Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., p. 12.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because no comma is here inserted between say and the citation which follows. But, according to Rule 17th, "A quotation, observation, or description, when it is introduced in close dependence on a verb, (as, say, reply, cry, or the like.) is generally separated from the rest of the sentence by the comma." Therefore, a comma should be put after say; as, "Thus, of an infant, we say, 'It is a lovely creature.'"]

"No being can state a falsehood in saying I am; for no one can utter it, if it is not true."—Cardell's Gram., 18mo, p. 118. "I know they will cry out against this and say 'should he pay, means if he should pay.'"—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 352. "For instance, when we say 'the house is building,' the advocates of the new theory ask, 'building what?' We might ask in turn, when you say 'the field ploughs well,' ploughs what? 'Wheat sells well,' sells what? If usage allows us to say 'wheat sells at a dollar' in a sense that is not active, why may it not also allow us to say 'wheat is selling at a dollar' in a sense that is not active?"—Hart's English Gram., p. 76. "Man is accountable, equals mankind are accountable."—S. Barrett's Revised Gram., p. 37. "Thus, when we say 'He may be reading,' may is the real verb; the other parts are verbs by name only."—Smart's English Accidence, p. 8. "Thus we say an apple, an hour, that two vowel sounds may not come together."—ib., p. 27. "It would be as improper to say an unit, as to say an youth; to say an one, as to say an wonder."—ib., p. 27. "When we say 'He died for the truth,' for is a preposition."—ib., p. 28. "We do not say 'I might go yesterday,' but 'I might have gone yesterday.'"—ib., p. 11. "By student, we understand one who has by matriculation acquired the rights of academical citizenship; but, by bursche, we understand one who has already spent a certain time at the university."—Howitt's Student-Life in Germany, p. 27.

SECTION II.—THE SEMICOLON.

The Semicolon is used to separate those parts of a compound sentence, which are neither so closely connected as those which are distinguished by the comma, nor so little dependent as those which require the colon.

RULE I.—COMPLEX MEMBERS.

Page 1440

When two or more complex members, or such clauses as require the comma in themselves, are constructed into a period, they are generally separated by the semicolon: as, "In the regions inhabited by angelic natures, unmingled felicity forever blooms; joy flows there with a perpetual and abundant stream, nor needs any mound to check its course."—Carter. "When the voice rises, the gesture naturally ascends; and when the voice makes the falling inflection, or lowers its pitch, the gesture follows it by a corresponding descent; and, in the level and monotonous pronunciation of the voice, the gesture seems to observe a similar limitation, by moving rather in the horizontal direction, without much varying its elevation."—Comstock's Elocution, p. 107.

"The wide, the unbounded prospect lies before me;
But shadows, clouds, and darkness, rest upon it."—Addison.

RULE II.—SIMPLE MEMBERS.

When two or more simple members, or such clauses as complete their sense without subdivision, are constructed into a period; if they require a pause greater than that of the comma, they are usually separated by the semicolon: as, "Straws swim upon the surface; but pearls lie at the bottom."—Murray's Gram., p. 276. "Every thing grows old; every thing passes away; every thing disappears."—Hiley's Gram., p. 115. "Alexander asked them the distance of the Persian capital; what forces the king of Persia could bring into the field; what the Persian government was; what was the character of the king; how he treated his enemies; what were the most direct ways into Persia."—Whelpley's Lectures, p. 175.

"A longer care man's helpless kind demands;
That longer care contracts more lasting bands."—Pope.

RULE III.—OF APPOSITION, &C.

Words in apposition, in disjunct pairs, or in any other construction, if they require a pause greater than that of the comma, and less than that of the colon, may be separated by the semicolon: as, "Pronouns have three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective."—Murray's Gram., p. 51. "Judge, judgement; lodge, lodgement; acknowledge, acknowledgement."—Butler's Gram., p. 11. "Do not the eyes discover humility, pride; cruelty, compassion; reflection, dissipation; kindness, resentment?"—Sheridan's Elocution, p. 159. "This rule forbids parents to lie to children, and children to parents; instructors to pupils, and pupils to instructors; the old to the young, and the young to the old; attorneys to jurors, and jurors to attorneys; buyers to sellers, and sellers to buyers."—Wayland's Moral Science, p. 304.

*"Make, made; have, had; pay, paid; say, said; leave, left; Dream, dreamt; mean, meant; reave and bereave have reft."
—Ward's Gr., p. 66.*

Page 1441

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PUNCTUATION.—ERRORS CONCERNING THE SEMICOLON.

UNDER RULE I.—OF COMPLEX MEMBERS.

“The buds spread into leaves, and the blossoms swell to fruit, but they know not how they grow, nor who causes them to spring up from the bosom of the earth.”—Day’s E. Gr., p. 72.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the two chief members which compose this period, are separated only by the comma after “fruit.” But, according to Rule 1st for the Semicolon, “When two or more complex members, or such clauses as require the comma in themselves, are constructed into a period, they are generally separated by the semicolon.” Therefore, the pause after “fruit” should be marked by a semicolon.]

“But he used his eloquence chiefly against Philip, king of Macedon, and, in several orations, he stirred up the Athenians to make war against him.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 84. “For the sake of euphony, the n is dropped before a consonant, and because most words begin with a consonant, this of course is its more common form.”—lb., p. 192. “But if I say ‘Will a man be able to carry this burden?’ it is manifest the idea is entirely changed, the reference is not to number, but to the species, and the answer might be ‘No; but a horse will.’”—lb., p. 193. “In direct discourse, a noun used by a speaker or writer to designate himself, is said to be of the first person—used to designate the person addressed, it is said to be of the second person, and when used to designate a person or thing spoken of, it is said to be of the third person.”—lb., p. 195. “Vice stings us, even in our pleasures, but virtue consoles us, even in our pains.”—Day’s Gram., p. 84. “Vice is infamous though in a prince, and virtue honorable though in a peasant.”—lb., p. 72. “Every word that is the name of a person or thing, is a Noun, because ‘A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing.’”—Bullions, Pract. Les., p. 83.

“This is the sword, with which he did the deed,
And that the shield by which he was defended.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 56.

UNDER RULE II.—OF SIMPLE MEMBERS.

“A deathlike paleness was diffused over his countenance [sic—KTH], a chilling terror convulsed his frame; his voice burst out at intervals into broken accents.”—Principles of Eloquence, p. 73.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the first pause in this sentence is not marked by a suitable point. But, according to Rule 2d for the Semicolon, “When two or more simple members, or such clauses as complete their sense without subdivision, are constructed into a period; if they require a pause greater than that of the comma, they are usually separated by the semicolon.” Therefore, the comma after “countenance” should be changed to a semicolon.]

Page 1442

"The Lacedemonians never traded—they knew no luxury—they lived in houses built of rough materials—they lived at public tables—fed on black broth, and despised every thing effeminate or luxurious."—Whelpley's Lectures, p. 167. "Government is the agent. Society is the principal."—Wayland's Moral Science, 1st Ed., p. 377. "The essentials of speech were anciently supposed to be sufficiently designated by the Noun and the Verb, to which was subsequently added, the Conjunction"—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 191. "The first faint gleamings of thought in its mind are but the reflections from the parents' own intellect,—the first manifestations of temperament are from the contagious parental fountain,—the first aspirations of soul are but the warmings and promptings of the parental spirit."—Jocelyn's Prize Essay, p. 4. "Older and oldest refer to maturity of age, elder and eldest to priority of right by birth. Farther and farthest denote place or distance: Further and furthest, quantity or addition."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 148. "Let the divisions be natural, such as obviously suggest themselves to the mind, and as may aid your main design, and be easily remembered."—Goldsbury's Manual of Gram., p. 91.

"Gently make haste, of labour not afraid:

A hundred times consider what you've said."—Dryden's Art of Poetry.

UNDER RULE III.—OF APPOSITION, &c.

(1.) "Adjectives are divided into two classes: Adjectives denoting quality, and Adjectives denoting number."—Frost's Practical Gram., p. 31.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the colon after the word "classes," is not the most suitable sign of the pause required. But according to Rule 3d for the Semicolon, "Words in apposition, in disjunct pairs, or in any other construction if they require a pause greater than that of the comma, and less than that of the colon, maybe separated by the semicolon." In this case, the semicolon should have been preferred to the colon.]

(2.) "There are two classes of adjectives—qualifying adjectives, and limiting adjectives."—Butler's Practical Gram., p. 33. (3.) "There are three Genders, the Masculine, the Feminine, and the Neuter."—Frost's Pract. Gram., p. 51; Hiley's Gram., p. 12; Alger's, 16; S. Putnam's, 14; Murray's, 8vo, 37; and others. (4.) "There are three genders: the MASCULINE, the FEMININE, and the NEUTER."—Murray's Gram., 12mo. p. 39; Jaudon's, 25. (5.) "There are three genders: The Masculine, the Feminine, and the Neuter."—Hendrick's Gram., p. 15. (6.) "The Singular denotes ONE, and the Plural MORE THAN ONE."—Hart's Gram., p. 40. (7.) "There are three Cases viz., the Nominative, the Possessive, and the Objective”—Hendrick’s Gram., p. 7. (8.) “Nouns have three cases, the nominative, the possessive, and the objective.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 41. (9.) “In English, nouns have three cases—the nominative, the possessive, and the objective.”—R. C. Smith’s New Gram., p. 47. (10.) “Grammar is divided into four parts, namely, ORTHOGRAPHY, ETYMOLOGY, SYNTAX, PROSODY.”—ib., p. 41. (11) “It is divided into four parts, viz. ORTHOGRAPHY, ETYMOLOGY, SYNTAX, and PROSODY.”—L. Murray’s Grammars all; T. Smith’s Gram., p. 5. (12.) “It is divided into four parts: viz. Orthography—Etymology—Syntax—Prosody.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 3. (13.) “It is divided into four parts, namely, Orthography. Etymology, Syntax and Prosody.”—Day’s Gram., p. 5. (14.) “It is divided into four parts: viz. Orthography, Etymology, Syntax and Prosody.”—Hendrick’s Gram., p. 11. (15.) “Grammar is divided into four parts: viz. Orthography, Etymology. Syntax and Prosody.”—Chandler’s Gram., p. 13. (16.) “It is divided into four parts: Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.”—Cooper’s Pl. and Pract. Gram., p. 1; Frost’s Pract. Gram., 19. (17.) “English grammar has been usually divided into four parts, viz: Orthography, Etymology, Syntax and Prosody.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 13. (18.) “Temperance leads to happiness, intemperance to misery.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 137 Hart’s, 180. (19.) “A friend exaggerates a man’s virtues, an enemy his crimes.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 137 (20.) “A friend exaggerates a man’s virtues: an enemy his crimes.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo., p. 325 (21.) “Many writers use a plural noun after the second of two numeral adjectives, thus, ‘The first and second pages are torn.’”—Bullions, E. Gram., 5th Ed., p. 145 (22.) “Of these, the Latin has six, the Greek, five, the German, four, the Saxon, six, the French, three, &c.”—Id., ib., p. 196.

Page 1443

“In (ing) it ends, when doing is express’d,
In d, t, n, when suffering’s confess’d.”
—Brightland’s Gram., p. 93.

MIXED EXAMPLES OF ERROR.

“In old books i is often used for j, v for u, vv for w, and ii or ij for y.”—Hart’s E. Gram., p. 22. “The forming of letters into words and syllables is also called Spelling.”—ib., p. 21. “Labials are formed chiefly by the lips, dentals by the teeth, palatals by the palate, gutturals by the throat, nasals by the nose, and linguals by the tongue.”—ib., p. 25. “The labials are p, b, f, v; the dentals t, d, s, z; the palatals g soft and j; the gutturals k, q, and c and g hard; the nasals m and n; and the linguals l and r.”—Ib., p. 25. “Thus, ‘the man having finished his letter, will carry it to the post office.”—Ib., p. 75. “Thus, in the sentence ‘he had a dagger concealed under his cloak,’ concealed is passive, signifying being concealed; but in the former combination, it goes to make up a form, the force of which is active.”—Ib., p. 75. “Thus, in Latin, ‘he had concealed the dagger’ would be ‘pugionem abdiderat,’ but ‘he had the dagger concealed’ would be ‘pugionem abditum habebat.”—Ib., p. 75. “Here, for instance, means ‘in this place,’ now, ‘at this time,’ &c.”—Ib., p. 90. “Here when both declares the time of the action, and so is an adverb, and also connects the two verbs, and so is a conjunction.”—Ib., p. 91. “These words were all no doubt originally other parts of speech, viz.: verbs, nouns, and adjectives.”—Ib., p. 92. “The principal parts of a sentence are the subject, the attribute, and the object, in other words the nominative, the verb, and the objective.”—Ib., p. 104. “Thus, the adjective is connected with the noun, the adverb with the verb or adjective, pronouns with their antecedents, &c.”—Ib., p. 104. “Between refers to two, among to more than two.”—Ib., p. 120. “At is used after a verb of rest, to after a verb of motion.”—Ib., p. 120. “Verbs are of three kinds, Active, Passive, and Neuter.”—Lennie’s Gram., p. 19; Bullions, Prin., 2d Ed., p. 29 “Verbs are divided into two classes: Transitive and Intransitive.”—Hendrick’s Gram., p. 28 “The Parts of Speech in the English language are nine, viz. The Article, Noun, Adjective, Pronoun, Verb, Adverb, Preposition. Interjection and Conjunction.”—Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., p. 7 “Of these the Noun, Pronoun, and Verb are declined, the rest are indeclinable.”—Id., ib., p. 7; Practical Lessons, p. 9. “The first expression is called the ‘Active form.’ The second the ‘Passive form.’”—Welds Gram., 2d Ed., p. 83; Abridged, p. 66.

Page 1444

“O ’tis a godlike privilege to save,
And he that scorns it is himself a slave.”—Cowper, Vol. i., p. 123

SECTION III.—THE COLON.

The Colon is used to separate those parts of a compound sentence, which are neither so closely connected as those which are distinguished by the semicolon, nor so little dependent as those which require the period.

RULE I.—ADDITIONAL REMARKS.

When the preceding clause is complete in itself, but is followed by some additional remark or illustration, especially if no conjunction is used, the colon is generally and properly inserted: as, “Avoid evil doers: in such society, an honest man may become ashamed of himself.”—“See that moth fluttering incessantly round the candle: man of pleasure, behold thy image!"—Art of Thinking, p. 94. "Some things we can, and others we cannot do: we can walk, but we cannot fly."—Beanie's Moral Science, p. 112.

Page 1445

“Remember Heav’n has an avenging rod:
To smite the poor, is treason against God.”—Cowper.

RULE II.—GREATER PAUSES.

When the semicolon has been introduced, or when it must be used in a subsequent member, and a still greater pause is required within the period, the colon should be employed: as, “Princes have courtiers, and merchants have partners; the voluptuous have companions, and the wicked have accomplices: none but the virtuous can have friends.”—“Unless the truth of our religion be granted, a Christian must be the greatest monster in nature: he must at the same time be eminently wise, and notoriously foolish; a wise man in his practice, and a fool in his belief: his reasoning powers must be deranged by a constant delirium, while his conduct never swerves from the path of propriety.”—Principles of Eloquence, p. 80.

“A decent competence we fully taste;
It strikes our sense, and gives a constant feast:
More we perceive by dint of thought alone;
The rich must labour to possess their own.”—Young.

RULE III.—INDEPENDENT QUOTATIONS.

A quotation introduced without a close dependence on a verb or a conjunction, is generally preceded by the colon; as, “In his last moments, he uttered these words: ‘I fall a sacrifice to sloth and luxury.’”—“At this the king hastily retorted: ‘No put-offs, my lord; answer me presently.’”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 367. “The father addressed himself to them to this effect: ‘O my sons, behold the power of unity!’”—Ripplingham’s Art of Speaking, p. 85.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PUNCTUATION.—ERRORS CONCERNING THE COLON.

UNDER RULE I.—ADDITIONAL REMARKS.

“Of is a preposition, it expresses the relation between fear and Lord.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 133.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the additional remark in this sentence is not sufficiently separated from the main clause, by the comma after the word preposition. But, according to Rule 1st for the Colon, “When the preceding clause is complete in itself, but is followed by some additional remark or illustration, especially if no conjunction is used, the colon is generally and properly inserted.” Therefore, the colon should here be substituted for the comma.]

“Wealth and poverty are both temptations to man; that tends to excite pride, this discontentment.”—Id., ib., p. 93; see also Lennie’s Gram., p. 81; Murray’s, 56; Ingersoll’s 61; Alger’s, 25; Merchant’s, 44; Hart’s, 137; et al. “Religion raises men above themselves, irreligion sinks them beneath the brutes; this binds them down to a poor pitiable speck of perishable earth, that opens for them a prospect in the skies.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 98; Lennie’s Gram., p. 81. “Love not idleness, it destroys many.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 71. “Children, obey your parents; honour thy father and mother, is the first commandment with promise.”—Bullions, Pract. Lessons, p. 88. “Thou art my hiding place, and my shield, I hope in thy promises.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 56. “The sun shall not smite me by day nor the moon by night. The Lord will preserve from evil. He will save my soul.—BIBLE.”—ib., p. 57. “Here Greece is assigned the highest place in the class of objects among which she is numbered—the nations of antiquity—she is one of them.”—Lennie’s Gram., p. 79.

Page 1446

“From short (as usual) and disturb’d repose
I wake; how happy they who wake no more!”—Hallock’s Gram., p. 216.

UNDER RULE II.—GREATER PAUSES.

“A taste of a thing, implies actual enjoyment of it; but a taste for it, implies only capacity for enjoyment; as, ‘When we have had a true taste of the pleasures of virtue, we can have no relish for those of vice.’”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 147.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pause after enjoyment is marked only by a semicolon. But, according to Rule 2d for the Colon, “When the semicolon has been introduced, or when it must be used in a subsequent member, and a still greater pause is required within the period, the colon should be employed.” Therefore, the second semicolon here should be changed to a colon.]

“The Indicative mood simply declares a thing; as, He loves; He is loved; Or, it asks a question; as, Lovest thou me?”—Id., ib., p. 35; Pract. Lessons, p. 43; Lennie’s Gr., p. 20. “The Indicative Mood simply indicates or declares a thing: as, ‘He loves, he is loved.’ or it asks a question: as, ‘Does he love?’ ‘Is he loved?’”—L. Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 63; 12mo, p. 63. “The Imperfect (or Past) tense represents an action or event indefinitely as past; as, Caesar came, and saw, and conquered; or it represents the action definitely as unfinished and continuing at a certain time, now entirely past; as, My father was coming home when I met him.”—Bullions, P. L., p. 45; E. Gr., 39. “Some nouns have no plural; as, gold, silver, wisdom, health; others have no singular; as, ashes, shears, tongs; others are alike in both numbers; as, sheep, deer, means, news”—Day’s School Gram., p. 15. “The same verb may be transitive in one sense, and intransitive in another; thus, in the sentence, ‘He believes my story,’ believes is transitive; but in this phrase, ‘He believes in God,’ it is intransitive.”—Butler’s Gram., p. 61. “Let the divisions be distinct; one part should not include another, but each should have its proper place, and be of importance in that place, and all the parts well fitted together and united, should present a whole.”—Goldsbury’s C. S. Gram., p. 91. “In the use of the transitive verb there are always three things implied,—the actor, the act, and the object acted upon. In the use of the intransitive there are only two—the subject or thing spoken of, and the state, or action attributed to it.”—Bullions, E. Gram.

Page 1447

“Why labours reason? instinct were as well;
Instinct far better; what can choose, can err.”
—Brit. Poets, Vol. viii.

UNDER RULE III.—INDEPENDENT QUOTATIONS.

“The sentence may run thus; ‘He is related to the same person, and is governed by him.’”—Hart’s Gram.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the semicolon is here inserted, in an unusual manner, before a quotation not closely dependent. But, according to Rule 3d for the Colon, “A quotation introduced without a close dependence on a verb or a conjunction, is generally preceded by the colon.” Therefore, the colon should be here preferred.]

“Always remember this ancient proverb, ‘Know thyself.’”—Hallock’s Gram. “Consider this sentence. The boy runs swiftly.”—Frazee’s Gram., Stereotype Ed. 1st Ed. “The comparative is used thus; ‘Greece was more polished than any other nation of antiquity.’ The same idea is expressed by the superlative when the word other is left out. Thus, ‘Greece was the most polished nation of antiquity’”—Bullions, E. Gram. see Lennie’s Gram. “Burke, in his speech on the Carnatic war, makes the following allusion to the well known fable of Cadmus’s sowing dragon’s teeth;—‘Every day you are fatigued and disgusted with this cant, the Carnatic is a country that will soon recover, and become instantly as prosperous as ever. They think they are talking to innocents, who believe that by the sowing of dragon’s teeth, men may come up ready grown and ready made.’”—Hiley’s Gram., see also Hart’s.

“For sects he car’d not, ‘they are not of us,
Nor need we, brethren, their concerns discuss.’”—Crabbe.

“Habit with him was all the test of truth,
‘It must be right: I’ve done it from my youth.’
Questions he answered in as brief a way,
‘It must be wrong—it was of yesterday.’”—Id., Borough.

MIXED EXAMPLES OF ERROR.

Page 1448

"This would seem to say, 'I doubt nothing save one thing, namely, that he will fulfil his promise;' whereas, that is the very thing not doubted."—Bullions, E. Gram.. "The common use of language requires that a distinction be made between morals and manners, the former depend upon internal dispositions, the latter on outward and visible accomplishments."—Beattie's Moral Science. "Though I detest war in each particular fibre of my heart yet I honor the Heroes among our fathers who fought with bloody hand: Peacemakers in a savage way they were faithful to their light; the most inspired can be no more, and we, with greater light, do, it may be, far less."—Parker's Idea of a Church. "The Article the, like a, must have a substantive joined with it, whereas that, like one, may have it understood; thus, speaking of books, I may select one, and say, 'give me that;' but not, 'give me the;' 'give me one;' but not 'give me a.'"—Bullions's E. Gram.. "The Present tense has three distinct forms—the simple; as, I read; the emphatic; as, I do read; and the progressive; as, I am reading'."—Id.. "The tenses in English are usually reckoned six. The Present, the Imperfect, the Perfect, the Pluperfect, the Future, and the Future Perfect."—Id.. "There are three participles, the Present or Active, the Perfect or Passive, and the Compound Perfect; as, loving, loved, having loved."—L. Murray's Gram., 2d Edition; Alger's; Fisk's; Bacon's. "The Participles are three, the Present, the Perfect, and the Compound Perfect; as, loving, loved, having loved."—Hart's Gram.. "Will is conjugated regularly, when it is a principal verb, as, present, I will, past, I willed, &c."—Frazee's Gram., Ster. Ed.; Old Ed. "And both sounds of x are compound, one is that of gz, and the other, that of ks"—Id., Ster. Ed. "The man is happy: he is benevolent: he is useful."—Cooper's Murray; Pl. and Pract. Gr. "The Pronoun stands instead of the noun; as, The man is happy; he is benevolent; he is useful."—L. Murray's Gram., 2d Ed. "A pronoun is a word used instead of a noun, to avoid the too frequent repetition of the same word: as, 'The man is happy,' 'he is benevolent,' 'he is useful.'"—Id.. "A pronoun is a word, used in the room of a noun, or as a substitute for one or more words, as: the man is happy; he is benevolent; he is useful."—Cooper's Pl. and Pr. Gram., his Abridg. of Mur. "A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class of beings, or things, as: animal; tree; insect; fish; fowl"—Cooper's Pl. and Pr. Gram. "Nouns have three persons: the first; the second; and the third."—Id.

Page 1449

“(Eve) so saying, her rash hand in evil hour
Forth reaching to the fruit; she pluck’d, she ate
Earth felt the wound: and nature from her seat,
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of wo,
That all was lost.”—Cooper’s Pl. and Pr. Gram.

SECTION IV.—THE PERIOD.

The Period, or Full Stop, is used to mark an entire and independent sentence, whether simple or compound.

RULE I.—DISTINCT SENTENCES.

When a sentence, whether long or short, is complete in respect to sense, and independent in respect to construction, it should be marked with the period: as, “Every deviation from truth is criminal. Abhor a falsehood. Let your words be ingenuous. Sincerity possesses the most powerful charm.”—“The force of a true individual is felt through every clause and part of a right book; the commas and dashes are alive with it.”—R. W. Emerson.

“By frequent trying, TROY was won.
All things, by trying, may be done.”—Lloyd, p. 184.

RULE II.—ALLIED SENTENCES.

The period is often employed between two sentences which have a general connexion, expressed by a personal pronoun, a conjunction, or a conjunctive adverb: as, “The selfish man languishes in his narrow circle of pleasures. They are confined to what affects his own interests. He is obliged to repeat the same gratifications, till they become insipid. But the man of virtuous sensibility moves in a wider sphere of felicity.”—Blair.

“And whether we shall meet again, I know not.
Therefore our everlasting farewell take.”—Shak., J. C.

RULE III.—ABBREVIATIONS.

The period is generally used after abbreviations, and very often to the exclusion of other points; but, as in this case it is not a constant sign of pause, other points may properly follow it, if the words written in full would demand them: as, A. D. for Anno Domini;—

Pro tem. for pro tempore;—Ult. for ultimo;—i.e. for id est, that is;—Add., Spect, No. 285; i.e., Addison, in the Spectator, Number 285th.

“Consult the statute; ‘quart.’ I think, it is,
‘Edwardi sext.,’ or ‘prim. et quint. Eliz.’”—Pope, p. 399.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—It seems to be commonly supposed, whether correctly or not, that short sentences which are in themselves distinct, and which in their stated use must be separated by the period, may sometimes be rehearsed as examples, in so close succession as not to require this point: as, “But if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.”—SCOTT, ALGER, AND OTHERS: Matt., xix, 17, 18, 19. “The following sentences exemplify the possessive pronouns:—’My lesson is finished; Thy books are defaced; He loves his studies; She performs her duty; We own our faults; Your situation is distressing; I admire their virtues.’”—L. Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 55. What mode of pointing is best adapted to examples like these, is made a very difficult question by the great diversity of practice in such cases. The semicolon, with guillemets, or the semicolon and a dash, with the quotation marks, may sometimes be sufficient; but I see no good reason why the period should not in general be preferred to the comma, the semicolon, or the colon, where full and distinct sentences are thus recited. The foregoing passage of Scripture I have examined in five different languages, ten different translations, and seventeen different editions which happened to be at hand. In these it is found pointed in twelve different ways. In Leusden’s, Griesbach’s, and Aitton’s Greek, it has nine colons; in Leusden’s Latin from Montanus, eight; in the common French version, six; in the old Dutch, five; in our Bibles, usually one, but not always. In some books, these commandments are mostly or wholly divided by periods; in others, by colons; in others, by semicolons; in others, as above, by commas. The first four are negative, or prohibitory; the other two, positive, or mandatory. Hence some make a greater pause after the fourth, than elsewhere between any two. This greater pause is variously marked by the semicolon, the colon, or the period; and the others, at the same time, as variously, by the comma, the semicolon, or the colon. Dr. Campbell, in his Four Gospels, renders and points the latter part of this passage thus: “Jesus answered, ‘Thou shalt not commit murder. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not give false testimony. Honour thy father and mother; and love thy neighbour as thyself.’” But the corresponding passage in Luke, xviii 20, he exhibits thus: “Thou knowest the commandments. Do not commit adultery; do not commit murder; do not steal; do not give false testimony; honour thy father and thy mother.” This is here given as present advice, referring to the commandments, but not actually quoting them; and, in this view of the matter, semicolons, not followed by capitals may be right. See the common reading under Rule XIV for Capitals, on page 166.

Page 1450

Page 1451

OBS. 2.—Letters written for numbers, after the manner of the Romans, though read as words, are never words in themselves; nor are they, except perhaps in one or two instances, abbreviations of words. C, a hundred, comes probably from Centum; and M, a thousand, is the first letter of Mille; but the others, I, V, X, L, D, and the various combinations of them all, are direct numerical signs, as are the Arabic figures. Hence it is not really necessary that the period should be set after them, except at the end of a sentence, or where it is suitable as a sign of pause. It is, however, and always has been, a prevalent custom, to mark numbers of this kind with a period, as if they were abbreviations; as, “While pope Sixtus V. who succeeded Gregory XIII. fulminated the thunder of the church against the king of Navarre.”—Smollet’s Eng., iii, 82. The period is here inserted where the reading requires only the comma; and, in my opinion, the latter point should have been preferred. Sometimes, of late, we find other points set after this period; as, “Otho II., surnamed the Bloody, was son and successor of Otho I.; he died in 983.”—Univ. Biog. Dict. This may be an improvement on the former practice, but double points are not generally used, even where they are proper; and, if the period is not indispensable, a simple change of the point would perhaps sooner gain the sanction of general usage.

OBS. 3.—Some writers, judging the period to be wrong or needless in such cases, omit it, and insert only such points as the reading requires; as, “For want of doing this, Judge Blackstone has, in Book IV, Chap. 17, committed some most ludicrous errors.”—Cobbett’s Gram., Let. XIX, 251. To insert points needlessly, is as bad a fault as to omit them when they are requisite. In Wm. Day’s “Punctuation Reduced to a System,” (London, 1847,) we have the following obscure and questionable RULE: “Besides denoting a grammatical pause, the full point is used to mark contractions, and is requisite after every abbreviated word, as well as after numeral letters.”—Page 102. This seems to suggest that both a pause and a contraction may be denoted by the same point. But what are properly called “contractions,” are marked not by the period, but by the apostrophe, which is no sign of pause; and the confounding of these with words “abbreviated,” makes this rule utterly absurd. As for the period “after numeral letters,” if they really needed it at all, they would need it severally, as do the abbreviations; but there are none of them, which do not uniformly dispense with it, when not final to the number; and they may as well dispense with it, in like manner, whenever they are not final to the sentence.

Page 1452

OBS. 4.—Of these letters, Day gives this account: “M. denotes mille, 1,000; D., dimidium mille, half a thousand, or 500; C. centum, 100; L. represents the lower half of C., and expresses 50; X. resembles V. V., the one upright, the other inverted, and signifies 10; V. stands for 5, because its sister letter U is the fifth vowel; and I. signifies 1, probably because it is the plainest and simplest letter in the alphabet.”—Day’s Punctuation, p. 103. There is some fancy in this. Dr. Adam says, “The letters employed for this purpose [i.e., to express numbers.] were C. I. L. V. X.”—Latin and Eng. Gram., p. 288. And again: “A thousand is marked thus CI [C-reversed], which in later times was contracted into M. Five hundred is marked thus, I [C-reversed], or by contraction, D.”—ib. Day inserts periods thus: “IV. means 4; IX., 9; XL., 40; XC., 90; CD., 400; CM., 900.”—Page 703. And again: “4to., quarto, the fourth of a sheet of paper; 8vo., octavo, the eighth part of a sheet of paper; 12mo., duodecimo, the twelfth of a sheet of paper; N. L., 8 deg., 9’, 10”, North latitude, eight degrees, nine minutes, ten seconds.”—Page 104. But IV may mean 4, without the period; 4to or 8vo has no more need of it than 4th or 8th; and N. L. 8 deg. 9’ 10” is an expression little to be mended by commas, and not at all by additional periods.

OBS. 5.—To allow the period of abbreviation to supersede all other points wherever it occurs, as authors generally have done, is sometimes plainly objectionable; but, on the other hand, to suppose double points to be always necessary wherever abbreviations or Roman numbers have pauses less than final, would sometimes seem more nice than wise, as in the case of Biblical and other references. A concordance or a reference Bible pointed on this principle, would differ greatly from any now extant. In such references, numbers are very frequently pointed with the period, with scarcely any regard to the pauses required in the reading; as, “DIADEM, Job 29. 14. Isa. 28. 5. and 62. 3. Ezek. 21. 26.”—Brown’s Concordance. “Where no vision is, the people perish, Prov. xxix. 18. Acts iv. 12. Rom. x. 14.”—Brown’s Catechism, p. 104. “What I urge from 1. Pet. 3. 21. in my Apology.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 498. “I. Kings—II. Kings.”—Alger’s Bible, p. iv. “Compare iii. 45. with 1. Cor. iv. 13.”—Scott’s Bible, Pref. to Lam. Jer. “Hen. v. A. 4. Sc. 5.”—Butler’s Gram., p. 41. “See Rule iii. Rem. 10.”—ib., p. 162. Some set a colon between the number of the chapter and that of the verse; which mark serves well for distinction, where both numbers are in Arabic figures: as, “He that formed the eye, shall he not see?”—Ps. 94: 9.”—Wells’s Gram., p. 126. “He had only a lease-hold title to his service. Lev. 25: 39, Exod.

Page 1453

21: 2.”—True Amer., i. 29. Others adopt the following method which seems preferable to any of the foregoing: “Isa. iv, 3; Ezek. xviii, 20; Mic. vi, 7.”—Gurney’s Essays, p. 133. Churchill, who is uncommonly nice about his punctuation, writes as follows: “Luke. vi, 41, 42. See also Chap. xv, 8; and Phil., iii. 12.”—New Gram., p. 353.

OBS. 6.—Arabic figures used as ordinals, or used for the numeral adverbs, first, or firstly, secondly, thirdly, &c., are very commonly pointed with the period, even where the pause required after them is less than a full stop; as, “We shall consider these words, 1. as expressing resolution; and 2. as expressing futurity.”—Butler’s Gram., p. 106. But the period thus followed by a small letter, has not an agreeable appearance, and some would here prefer the comma, which is, undoubtedly, better suited to the pause, A fitter practice, however, would be, to change the expression thus: “We shall consider these words, 1st, as expressing resolution; and, 2dly, as expressing futurity.”

OBS. 7.—Names vulgarly shortened, then written as they are spoken, are not commonly marked with a period; as, Ben for Benjamin. “O RARE BEN JOHNSON!”—Biog. Dict.

“From whence the inference is plain,
Your friend MAT PRIOR wrote with pain.”
—LLOYD: B. P., Vol. viii, p. 188.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PUNCTUATION.—ERRORS CONCERNING THE PERIOD.

UNDER RULE I.—DISTINCT SENTENCES.

“The third person is the position of the name spoken of; as, Paul and Silas were imprisoned, the earth thirsts, the sun shines.”—Frazee’s Gram., 1st Ed., p. 21; Ster. Ed., p. 23.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because three totally distinct sentences are here thrown together as examples, with no other distinction than what is made by two commas. But, according to Rule 1st for the Period, “When a sentence, whether long or short, is complete in respect to sense, and independent in respect to construction, it should be marked with the period.” Therefore, these commas should be periods; and, of course, the first letter of each example must be a capital.]

“Two and three and four make nine; if he were here, he would assist his father and mother, for he is a dutiful son; they live together, and are happy, because they enjoy each other's society; they went to Roxbury, and tarried all night, and came back the next day."—Goldsbury's Parsing Lessons in his Manual of E. Gram., p. 64.

"We often resolve, but seldom perform; she is wiser than her sister; though he is often advised, yet he does not reform; reproof either softens or hardens its object; he is as old as his classmates, but not so learned; neither prosperity, nor adversity, has improved him; let him that standeth, take heed lest he fall; he can acquire no virtue, unless he make some sacrifices."—Ibid.

Page 1454

"Down from his neck, with blazing gems array'd,
Thy image, lovely Anna! hung portray'd,
Th' unconscious figure, smiling all serene,
Suspended in a golden chain was seen,"—S. Barrett's E. Gr., p. 92.

UNDER RULE II.—ALLIED SENTENCES.

"This life is a mere prelude to another, which has no limits, it is a little portion of duration. As death leaves us, so the day of judgment will find us."—Merchant's School Gram., p. 76.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pause after limits, which is sufficient for the period, is marked only by the comma. But, according to Rule 2d, "The period is often employed between two sentences which have a general connexion, expressed by a personal pronoun, a conjunction, or a conjunctive adverb." It would improve the passage, to omit the first comma, change the second to a period, and write the pronoun it with a capital. Judgment also might be bettered with an e, and another is properly two words.]

"He went from Boston to New York; he went from Boston; he went to New York; in walking across the floor, he stumbled over a chair."—Goldsbury's Manual of E. Gram., p. 62.

"I saw him on the spot, going along the road, looking towards the house; during the heat of the day, he sat on the ground, under the shade of a tree."—Id., ib.

"George came home, I saw him yesterday, here; the word him, can extend only to the individual George"—S. Barrett's E. Gram., 10th Ed., p. 45.

"Commas are often used now, where parentheses were formerly; I cannot, however, esteem this an improvement."—See the Key.

"Thou, like a sleeping, faithless sentinel
Didst let them pass unnoticed, unimproved,
And know, for that thou slumb'rest on the guard,
Thou shalt be made to answer at the bar
For every fugitive."
—Hallock's Gram., p. 222; Enfield's Sp., p. 380.

UNDER RULE III.—OF ABBREVIATIONS.

"The term pronoun (Lat pronomen) strictly means a word used for, or instead of a noun."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 198.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the syllable here put for the word Latin, is not marked with a period. But, according to Rule 3d, “The period is generally used after abbreviations, and very often to the exclusion of other points; but, as in this case it is not a constant sign of pause, other points may properly follow it, if the words written in full would demand them.” In this instance, a period should mark the abbreviation, and a comma be set after of. By analogy, in stead is also more properly two words than one.]

“The period is also used after abbreviations; as, A. D. P. S. G. W. Johnson.”—Butler’s Pract. Gram., p. 211. “On this principle of classification, the later Greek grammarians divided words into eight classes or parts of speech, viz: the Article, Noun, Pronoun, Verb, Participle, Adverb, Preposition, and Conjunction.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 191.

Page 1455

“Metre is not confined to verse: there is a tune in all good prose; and Shakspeare’s was a sweet one.’—Epea Pter, II, 61. Mr. H. Tooke’s idea was probably just, agreeing with Aristotle’s, but not accurately expressed.”—Churchill’s New Gram., p. 385.

“Mr. J. H. Tooke was educated at Eton and at Cambridge, in which latter college he took the degree of A. M; being intended for the established church of England, he entered into holy orders when young, and obtained the living of Brentford, near London, which he held ten or twelve years.”—Div. of Purley, 1st Amer. Edition, Vol. i, p. 60.

“I, nor your plan, nor book condemn,
But why your name, and why A. M!”—Lloyd.

MIXED EXAMPLES OF ERROR.

“If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, &c. Isaiah. lviii. 7.”—Butler’s Gram., p. 67.
“He that hath eeris of herynge, here he. Wiclif. Matt xi.”—Butler’s Gram., p. 76. “See General Rules for Spelling, iii., v., and vii.”—Butler’s Gram., p. 81. “False witnesses did rise up.’ Ps. xxxv. ii.”—Butlers Gram., p. 105.

“An explicative sentence is used for explaining. An interrogative sentence for enquiring. An imperative sentence for commanding.”—S. Barrett’s Prin. of Language, p. 87. “In October, corn is gathered in the field by men, who go from hill to hill with baskets, into which they put the ears; Susan labors with her needle for a livelihood; notwithstanding his poverty, he is a man of integrity.”—Goldsbury’s Parsing, Manual of E. Gram., p. 62.

“A word of one syllable, is called a monosyllable. A word of two syllables; a dissyllable. A word of three syllables; a trissyllable. A word of four or more syllables; a polysyllable.”—Frazee’s Improved Gram., 1st Ed., p. 15. “A word of one syllable, is called a monosyllable. A word of two syllables, a dissyllable. A word of three syllables, a trissyllable. A word of four or more syllables, a polysyllable.”—Frazee’s Improved Gram., Ster. Ed., p. 17.

“If I say, ‘if it did not rain, I would take a walk;’ I convey the idea that it does rain, at the time of speaking, If it rained, or did it rain, in the present time, implies, it does not rain; If it did not rain, or did it not rain, in present time, implies that it does rain; thus in this peculiarity, an affirmative sentence always implies a negation, and a negative sentence an affirmation.”—Frazee’s Gram., 1st Ed., p. 61; Ster. Ed., 62. “If I were loved, and, were I loved, imply, I am not loved; if I were not loved, and, were I not loved, imply, I am loved; a negative sentence implies an affirmation; and an affirmative sentence implies a negation, in these forms of the subjunctive.”—Ib., Old Ed., p. 73; Ster. Ed., 72.

Page 1456

“What is Rule III.?”—Hart’s Gram., p. 114. “How is Rule III. violated?”—lb., p. 115. “How do you parse ‘letter’ in the sentence, ‘James writes a letter’? Ans.—‘Letter is a noun com., of the MASC. gend., in the 3d p., sing. num., and objective case, and is governed by the verb ‘writes,’ according to Rule III., which says. ‘A transitive verb,’ &c.”—lb., p. 114.[465]

“Creation sleeps. ’T is as the general pulse
Of life stood still, and nature made a pause;
An awful pause! prophetic of her end,
And let her prophecy be soon fulfilled;
Fate drop the curtain; I can lose no more.”—Hallock’s Gram., p. 216.

SECTION V.—THE DASH.

The Dash is mostly used to denote an unexpected or emphatic pause, of variable length; but sometimes it is a sign of faltering, or of the irregular stops of one who hesitates in speaking: as, “Then, after many pauses, and inarticulate sounds, he said: ‘He was very sorry for it, was extremely concerned it should happen so—but—a—it was necessary—a—’ Here lord E----- stopped him short, and bluntly demanded, if his post were destined for an other.”—See Churchill’s Gram., p. 170.

RULE I.—ABRUPT PAUSES.

A sudden interruption, break, or transition, should be marked with the dash; as, 1. “I must inquire into the affair; and if—’And if!’ interrupted the farmer.” 2. “Whom I—But first ’t is fit the billows to restrain.”—Dryd. Virg. 3. “HERE LIES THE GREAT—False marble! where? Nothing but sordid dust lies here.”—Young.

RULE II.—EMPHATIC PAUSES.

To mark a considerable pause, greater than the structure or the sentence or the points inserted would seem to require, the dash may be employed; as, 1. “I pause for a reply.—None?—Then none have I offended.—I have done no more to Caesar, than you should do to Brutus.”—SHAKESPEARE: Enfields Speaker, p. 182.

2. “Tarry a little. There is something else.—
This bond—doth give thee here—no jot of blood.”
—ID.: Burgh’s Sp., p. 167.
3. “It thunders;—but it thunders to preserve.”—Young.
4. “Behold the picture!—Is it like?—Like whom?”—Cowper.

RULE III.—FAULTY DASHES.

Dashes needlessly inserted, or substituted for other stops more definite, are in general to be treated as errors in punctuation; as, "Here Greece stands by itself as opposed to the other nations of antiquity—She was none of the other nations—She was more polished than they."—Lennie's Gram., p. 78. "Here Greece stands by herself, as opposed to the other nations of antiquity. She was none of the other nations: She was more polished than they."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 114. If this colon is sufficient, the capital after it is needless: a period would, perhaps, be better.

Page 1457

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—The dash does not appear to be always a rhetorical stop, or always intended to lengthen the pause signified by an other mark before it. As one instance of a different design, we may notice, that it is now very often employed between a text and a reference;—i.e., between a quotation and the name of the author of the book quoted;—in which case, as Wm. Day suggests, “it serves as a connecting mark for the two.”—Day’s Punctuation, p. 131. But this usage, being comparatively recent, is, perhaps, not so general or so necessary, that a neglect of it may properly be censured as false punctuation.

OBS. 2.—An other peculiar use of the dash, is its application to side-titles, to set them off from other words in the same line, as is seen often in this Grammar as well as in other works. Day says of this, “When the substance of a paragraph is given as a side-head, a dash is necessary to connect it with its relative matter.”—Ibid. Wilson also approves of this usage, as well as of the others here named; saying, “The dash should be inserted between a title and the subject-matter, and also between the subject-matter, and the authority from which it is taken, when they occur in the same paragraph.”—Wilson’s Punctuation, Ed. of 1850, p. 139.

OBS. 3.—The dash is often used to signify the omission of something; and, when set between the two extremes of a series of numbers, it may represent all the intermediate ones; as, “Page 10-15;” i. e., “Page 10, 11, 12, &c. to 15.”—“Matt, vi, 9-14.”

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PUNCTUATION.—ERRORS CONCERNING THE DASH.

UNDER RULE I.—ABRUPT PAUSES.

“And there is something in your very strange story, that resembles ... Does Mr. Bevil know your history particularly?”—See Key.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the abrupt pause after resembles is here marked by three periods. But, according to Rule 1st for the Dash. “A sudden interruption, break, or transition, should be marked with the dash.” Therefore, the dash should be preferred to these points.]

“Sir, Mr. Myrtle, Gentlemen! You are friends; I am but a servant. But.”—See Key.

“Another man now would have given plump into this foolish story; but I? No, no, your humble servant for that.”—See Key.

“Do not plunge thyself too far in anger lest thou hasten thy trial; which if Lord have mercy on thee for a hen!”—See Key.

“But ere they came, O, let me say no more!
Gather the sequel by that went before.”—See Key.

UNDER RULE II.—EMPHATIC PAUSES.

“M, Malvolio; M, why, that begins my name.”

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pauses after M and Malvolio seem not to be sufficiently indicated here. But, according to Rule 2d for the Dash, “To mark a considerable pause, greater than the structure of the sentence or the points inserted would seem to require, the dash may be employed.” Therefore, a dash may be set after the commas and the semicolon, in this sentence.]

Page 1458

“Thus, by the creative influence of the Eternal Spirit, were the heavens and the earth finished in the space of six days, so admirably finished, an unformed chaos changed into a system of perfect order and beauty, that the adorable Architect himself pronounced it very good, and all the sons of God shouted for joy.”—See Key.

“If I were an American, as I am an Englishman, while a foreign troop remained in my country, I NEVER would lay down my arms; NEVER, NEVER, NEVER.”—Columbian Orator, p. 265.

“Madam, yourself are not exempt in this,
Nor your son Dorset, Buckingham, nor you.”—See Key.

UNDER RULE III.—FAULTY DASHES.

“—You shall go home directly, Le Fevre, said my uncle Toby, to my house,—and we’ll send for a doctor to see what’s the matter,—and we’ll have an apothecary,—and the corporal shall be your nurse;—and I’ll be your servant, Le Fevre.”—STERNE: Enfield’s Speaker, p. 306.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because all the dashes here quoted, except perhaps the last, are useless, or obviously substituted for more definite marks. But, according to Rule 3d, “Dashes needlessly inserted, or substituted for other stops more definite, are in general to be treated as errors in punctuation.” Therefore, the first of these should be simply expunged; the second, third, and fourth, with their commas, should be changed to semicolons; and the last, with its semicolon, may well be made a colon.]

“He continued—Inferior artists may be at a stand, because they want materials.”—HARRIS: Enfield’s Speaker, p. 191. “Thus, then, continued he—The end in other arts is ever distant and removed.”—Id., ib.

“The nouns must be coupled with and, and when a pronoun is used it must be plural, as in the example—When the nouns are disjoined the pronoun must be singular.”—Lennie’s Gram., 5th Ed., p. 57.

“Opinion is a noun or substantive common,—of the singular number,—neuter gender,—nominative case,—and third person.”—Wright’s Philos. Gram., p. 228.

“The mountain—thy pall and thy prison—may keep thee;
I shall see thee no more; but till death I will weep thee.”
—Felton’s Gram., p. 146.

MIXED EXAMPLES OF ERROR

“If to accommodate man and beast, heaven and earth; if this be beyond me, ’tis not possible.—What consequence then follows? or can there be any other than this—if I seek an interest of my own, detached from that of others; I seek an interest which is chimerical, and can never have existence.”—HARRIS: Enfield’s Speaker, p. 139.

“Again—I must have food and clothing—Without a proper genial warmth, I instantly perish—Am I not related, in this view, to the very earth itself? To the distant sun, from whose beams I derive vigour?”—Id., ib., p. 140.

Page 1459

"Nature instantly ebb'd again—the film returned to its place—the pulse flutter'd—stopp'd—went on—throbb'd—stopp'd again—mov'd—stopp'd—shall I go on?—No."—STERNE: ib., p. 307.

"Write ten nouns of the masculine gender. Ten of the feminine. Ten of the neuter. Ten indefinite in gender."—Pardon Davis's Gram., p. 9.

"The Infinitive Mode has two tenses—the Indicative, six—the Potential, two—the Subjunctive, six, and the Imperative, one."—Frazee's Gram., Ster. Ed., p. 39; 1st Ed., 37. "Now notice the following sentences. John runs,—boys run—thou runnest."—ib., Ster. Ed., p. 50; 1st Ed., p. 48.

"The Pronoun sometimes stands for a name—sometimes for an adjective—a sentence—a part of a sentence—and, sometimes for a whole series of propositions."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., 1st Ed., 12mo, p. 321.

"The self-applauding bird, the peacock, see—
Mark what a sumptuous pharisee is he!"—Cowper, i, 49.

SECTION VI.—THE EROTEME.

The Eroteme, or Note of Interrogation, is used to designate a question.

RULE I.—QUESTIONS DIRECT.

Questions expressed directly as such, if finished, should always be followed by the note of interrogation; as, "Was it possible that virtue so exalted should be erected upon injustice? that the proudest and the most ambitious of mankind should be the great master and accomplished pattern of humility? that a doctrine so pure as the Gospel should be the work of an uncommissioned pretender? that so perfect a system of morals should be established on blasphemy?"—Jerningham's Essay, p. 81.

"In life, can love be bought with gold?
Are friendship's pleasures to be sold?"—Johnson.

RULE II.—QUESTIONS UNITED.

When two or more questions are united in one compound sentence, the comma, semicolon, or dash, is sometimes used to separate them, and the eroteme occurs after the last only; as, 1. "When—under what administration—under what exigencies of war or peace—did the Senate ever before deal with such a measure in such a manner? Never, sir, never."—D. Webster, in Congress, 1846.

2. "Canst thou, and honour'd with a Christian name,
Buy what is woman-born, and feel no shame;
Trade in the blood of innocence, and plead
Expedience as a warrant for the deed?"—Cowper.
3. "Truths would you teach, or save a sinking land?
All fear, none aid you, and few understand."—Pope.

RULE III.—QUESTIONS INDIRECT.

When a question is mentioned, but not put directly as a question, it loses both the quality and the sign of interrogation; as, "The Cyprians asked me why I wept."—Murray.

Page 1460

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—The value of the eroteme as a sign of pause, is stated very differently by different grammarians; while many of the vast multitude, by a strange oversight, say nothing about it. It is unquestionably variable, like that of the dash, or of the ecphoneme. W. H. Wells says, “The comma requires a momentary pause; the semicolon, a pause somewhat longer than the comma; the colon, a pause somewhat longer than the semicolon; and the period, a full stop. The note of interrogation, or the note of exclamation, may take the place of EITHER of these, and accordingly requires a pause of the same length as the point for which it is substituted.”—Wells’s School Gram., p. 175. This appears to be accurate in idea, though perhaps hardly so in language. Lindley Murray has stated it thus: “The interrogation and exclamation points are intermediate as to their quantity or time, and may be equivalent in that respect to a semicolon, a colon, or a period, as the sense may require.”—Octavo Gram., p. 280. But Sanborn, in regard to his “Question Point,” awkwardly says: “This pause is generally some longer than that of a period.”—Analytical Gram., p. 271. Buchanan, as long ago as 1767, taught as follows: “The Pause after the two Points of Interrogation and Admiration ought to be equal to that of the Period, or a Colon at least.”—English Syntax, p. 160. And J. S. Hart avers, that, “A question is reckoned as equal to a complete sentence, and the mark of interrogation as equal to a period.”—Hart’s English Gram., p. 166. He says also, that, “the first word after a note of interrogation should begin with a capital.”—Ib., p. 162. In some instances, however, he, like others, has not adhered to these exceptionable principles, as may be seen by the false grammar cited below.

OBS. 2.—Sometimes a series of questions may be severally complete in sense, so that each may require the interrogative sign, though some or all of them may be so united in construction, as not to admit either a long intermediate pause or an initial capital; as, “Is there no honor in generosity? nor in preferring the lessons of conscience to the impulses of passion? nor in maintaining the supremacy of moral principle, and in paying reverence to Christian truth?”—Gannett. “True honour is manifested in a steady, uniform train of actions, attended by justice, and directed by prudence. Is this the conduct of the duellist? will justice support him in robbing the community of an able and useful member? and in depriving the poor of a benefactor? will it support him in preparing affliction for the widow’s heart? in filling the orphan’s eyes with tears?”—Jerningham’s Essay, p. 113. But, in this latter example, perhaps, commas might be substituted for the second and fourth erotemes; and the word will might, in both instances, begin with a capital.

Page 1461

OBS. 3.—When a question is mentioned in its due form, it commonly retains the sign of interrogation, though not actually asked by the writer; and, except perhaps when it consists of some little interrogative word or phrase, requires the initial capital: as, “To know when this point ought to be used, do not say:[,] ‘Is a question asked?’ but, ‘Does the sentence ask a question?’”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 368. “They put their huge inarticulate question, ‘What do you mean to do with us?’ in a manner audible to every reflective soul in the kingdom.”—Carlyle’s Past and Present, p. 16. “An adverb may be generally known, by its answering to the question, How? how much? when? or where? as, in the phrase, ‘He reads correctly,’ the answer to the question, How does he read? is correctly.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 28. This passage, which, without ever arriving at great accuracy, has been altered by Murray and others in ways innumerable, is everywhere exhibited with five interrogation points. But, as to capitals and commas, as well as the construction of words, it would seem no easy matter to determine what impression of it is nearest right. In Flint’s Murray it stands thus: “An adverb may generally be known by its answering the question, How? How much? When? or Where? As in the phrase, ‘He reads correctly. The answer to the question, ‘How does he read?’ is, ‘correctly.’” Such questions, when the pause is slight, do not, however, in all cases, require capitals: as, “Rosal. Which of the visors was it, that you wore?

Biron. Where? when? what visor? why demand you this?”

Shakspeare, Love’s Labour Lost, Act V, Sc. 2.

OBS. 4.—A question is sometimes put in the form of a mere declaration; its interrogative character depending solely on the eroteme, and the tone, or inflection of voice, adopted in the utterance: as, “I suppose, Sir, you are his apothecary?”—SWIFT: Burgh’s Speaker, p. 85. “I hope, you have, upon no account, promoted sternutation by hellebore?”—Id., ib. “This priest has no pride in him?”—SINGER’S SHAK., Henry VIII, ii, 2.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PUNCTUATION.—ERRORS CONCERNING THE EROTEME.

UNDER RULE I.—QUESTIONS DIRECT.

“When will his ear delight in the sound of arms.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., 12mo, p. 59.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because here is a finished question with a period set after it. But, according to Rule 1st for the Eroteme, “Questions expressed directly as such, if finished, should always be followed by the note of interrogation.” Therefore, the eroteme, or note of interrogation, should here be substituted for the period.]

“When shall I, like Oscar, travel in the light of my steel.”—ib., p. 59. “Will Henry call on me while he shall be journeying South.”—Peirce, ib., p. 133.

Page 1462

“An Interrogative Pronoun is one that is used in asking a question; as, ‘who is he, and what does he want?’”—Day’s School Gram., p. 21. “Who is generally used when we would inquire for some unknown person or persons; as, who is that man.”—lb., p. 24. “Our fathers, where are they, and the prophets, do they live forever?”—lb., p. 109.

“It is true, that some of our best writers have used than whom; but it is also true, that they have used other phrases which we have rejected as ungrammatical: then why not reject this too.—The sentences in the Exercises [with than who] are correct as they stand.”—Lennie’s Gram., 5th Ed., 1819, p. 79.

“When the perfect participle of an active-intransitive verb is annexed to the neuter verb to be? What does the combination form?”—Hallock’s Gram., p. 88. “Those adverbs which answer to the question where, whither or whence, are called adverbs of place.”—lb., p. 116.

“Canst thou, by searching, find out God; Canst thou find out the Almighty to perfection; It is high as heaven, what canst thou do? deeper than hell, what canst thou know?”—Blair’s Rhet. p. 132.

“Where, where, for shelter shall the guilty fly,
When consternation turns the good man pale.”—lb., p. 222.

UNDER RULE II.—QUESTIONS UNITED.

“Who knows what resources are in store? and what the power of God may do for thee?”

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because an eroteme is set after store, where a comma would be sufficient. But, according to Rule 2d for the Eroteme, “When two or more questions are united in one compound sentence, the comma, semicolon, or dash, is sometimes used to separate them, and the eroteme occurs after the last only.” Therefore, the comma should here be preferred, as the author probably wrote the text. See Key.]

“The Lord is not a man that he should lie, neither the son of man that he should repent. Hath he said it? and shall he not do it? Hath he spoken it? and shall he not make it good?”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 353; 12mo, 277; Hiley’s, 139; Hart’s, 181. “Hath the Lord said it? and shall he not do it? Hath he spoken it? and shall he not make it good?”—Lennie’s Gram., p. 113; Bullions’s, 176.

“Who calls the council, states the certain day?
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way.”
—Brit. Poets, vi, 376.

UNDER RULE III.—QUESTIONS INDIRECT.

“To be, or not to be?—that is the question.”—Enfield’s Sp., p. 367; Kirkham’s Eloc., 123. [466]

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the note of interrogation is here set after an expression which has neither the form nor the nature of a direct question. But, according to Rule 3d for the Eroteme, “When a question is mentioned, but not put directly as a question, it loses both the quality and the sign of interrogation.” Therefore, the semicolon, which seems adapted to the pause, should here be preferred.]

Page 1463

"If it be asked, why a pause should any more be necessary to emphasis than to an accent? or why an emphasis alone, will not sufficiently distinguish the members of sentences from each other, without pauses, as accent does words? the answer is obvious; that we are pre-acquainted with the sound of words, and cannot mistake them when distinctly pronounced, however rapidly; but we are not pre-acquainted with the meaning of sentences, which must be pointed out to us by the reader or speaker."—Sheridan's Rhet. Gram., p. lvi.

"Cry, By your Priesthood tell me what you are?"
—POPE: British Poets, London, 1800, Vol. vi, p. 411.

MIXED EXAMPLES OF ERROR.

"Who else can he be. Where else can he go."—S. Barrett's Gram., 1845, p. 71. "In familiar language here, there and where are used for hither, thither and whither."—N. Butler's Gram., p. 183. "Take, for instance, this sentence, 'Indolence undermines the foundation of virtue.'"—Hart's Gram., p. 106. "Take, for instance, the sentence before quoted. 'Indolence undermines the foundation of virtue.'"—ib., p. 110. "Under the same head are considered such sentences as these, 'he that heareth, let him hear,' 'Gad, a troop shall overcome him,' &c."—ib., p. 108.

"TENSES are certain modifications of the verb which point out the distinctions of time."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 38; Pract. Les., p. 44. "Calm was the day and the scene delightful."—Id. E. Gr., p. 80. "The capital letters used by the Romans to denote numbers, were C. I. L. V. X. which are therefore called Numeral Letters. I, denotes one; V, five; X, ten; L, fifty; and C, a hundred."—Id., Lat. Gram., p. 56. "I shall have written;" viz, at or before some future time or event."—Id., ib., p. 89. "In Latin words the liquids are l and r only. In Greek words l, r, m, n."—Id., ib., p. 277. "Each legion was divided into ten cohorts, each cohort into three maniples, and each maniple into two centuries."—Id., ib., p. 300. "Of the Roman literature previous to A. U. 514 scarcely a vestige remains."—Id., ib., p. 312.

"And that, which He delights in must be happy.
But when!—or where!—This world was made for Caesar."
—Burgh's Sp., p. 122.

"And that which he delights in must be happy.
But when, or where? This world was made for Caesar."
—Enfield's Sp., p. 321.

"Look next on greatness. Say, where greatness lies?
Where but among the heroes and the wise."
—Burgh's Sp., p. 91.

“Look next on greatness! say where greatness lies.
Where, but among the heroes and the wise?”
—Essay on Man, p. 51.

Page 1464

"Look next on Greatness; say where Greatness lies:
Where, but among the Heroes and the Wise?"

—Brit. Poets, vi, 380.

SECTION VII—THE ECPHONEME.

The Ecphoneme, or Note of Exclamation, is used to denote a pause with some strong emotion of admiration, joy, grief, or other feeling; and, as a sign of great wonder, it is sometimes, though not very elegantly, repeated: as, "Grammatical consistency!!! What a gem!"—Peirce's Gram., p. 352.

RULE I.—INTERJECTIONS, &c.

Emphatic interjections, and other expressions of great emotion, are generally followed by the note of exclamation; as, "Hold! hold! Is the devil in you? Oh! I am bruised all over."—MOLIERE: Burgh's Speaker, p. 250.

"And O! till earth, and seas, and heav'n decay, Ne'er may that fair creation fade away!"—Dr. Lowth.

RULE II.—INVOCATIONS.

After an earnest address or solemn invocation, the note of exclamation is now generally preferred to any other point; as, "Whereupon, O king Agrippa! I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision."—Acts, xxvi, 19.

"Be witness thou, immortal Lord of all!
Whose thunder shakes the dark aerial hall."—Pope.

RULE III.—EXCLAMATORY QUESTIONS.

Words uttered with vehemence in the form of a question, but without reference to an answer, should be followed by the note of exclamation; as, "How madly have I talked!"—Young.

"An Author! 'Tis a venerable name!
How few deserve it, and what numbers claim!"
—Id., Br. Po., viii, 401.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PUNCTUATION.—ERRORS CONCERNING THE ECAPHONEME.

UNDER RULE I.—OF INTERJECTIONS, &c.

(1.) “O that he were wise.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 111.

[FORMULE. Not proper, because this strong wish, introduced by “O,” is merely marked with a period. But, according to Rule 1st for the Ecphoneme, “Emphatic interjections, and other expressions of great emotion, are generally followed by the note of exclamation.” Therefore, the pause after this sentence, should be marked with the latter sign; and, if the “O” be read with a pause, the same sign may be there also.]

(2.) “O that his heart was tender.”—Exercises, ib., p. 111. (3.) “Oh, what a sight is here!”—Lennie’s Gram., p. 48. (4.) “Oh! what a sight is here.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 71; (Obs. 2;) Pract. Les., p. 83. (5.) “O virtue! How amiable thou art.”—Id., p. 71; Pract. Les., p. 82. (6.) “O virtue! how amiable thou art.”—Day’s Gram., p. 109. (7.) “O, virtue! how amiable

Page 1465

thou art.”—S. Putnam’s Gram., p. 53. (8.) “Oh! virtue, how amiable thou art!”—Hallock’s Gram., p. 191; O. B. Peirce’s, 375. (9.) “O virtue! how amiable thou art!”—Hallock’s Gram., p. 126. (10.) “Oh! that I had been more diligent.”—Hart’s Gram., p. 167; see Hiley’s, 117. (11.) “O! the humiliation to which vice reduces us.”—Farnum’s Gram., p. 12; Murray’s Ex., p. 5. (12.) “O! that he were more prudent.”—Farnum’s Gram., p. 81. (13.) “Ah! me.”—P. Davis’s Gram., p. 79. (14.) “Ah me!”—ib., p. 122. (15.) “Lately alas I knew a gentle boy,” _&c.—The Dial, Vol. i, p. 71.

(16.) “Wo is me Alhama.”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 190.

(17.) “Wo is me, Alhama.”—Ibid., “113th Thousand,” p. 206.

UNDER RULE II.—OF INVOCATIONS.

“Weep on the rocks of roaring winds, O maid of Inistore.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 131; Cooper’s Plain and Practical Gram., p. 158.

[FORMULE—Not proper, because the emphatic address in this sentence, is marked with a period after it. But, according to Rule 2d for the Ecphoneme, “After an earnest address or solemn invocation, the note of exclamation is now generally preferred to any other point.” Therefore, this period should be changed to the latter sign.]

“Cease a little while, O wind; stream, be thou silent a while; let my voice be heard around. Let my wanderer hear me. Salgar, it is Colma who calls. Here is the tree, and the rock. Salgar, my love, I am here. Why delayest thou thy coming? Lo, the calm moon comes forth. The flood is bright in the vale.”—See Key.

“Ah, stay not, stay not, guardless and alone;
Hector, my lov’d, my dearest, bravest son.”—See Key.

UNDER RULE III.—EXCLAMATORY QUESTIONS.

“How much better is wisdom than gold.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 153; Hiley, p. 113.

[FORMULE—Not proper, because this exclamatory sentence is pointed with a period at the end. But, according to Rule 3d for the Ecphoneme, “Words uttered with vehemence in the form of a question, but without reference to an answer, should be followed by the note of exclamation.” Therefore, this period should be changed to the latter sign.]

“O virtue! how amiable art thou.”—Flint’s Murray, p. 51. “At that hour, O how vain was all sublunary happiness.”—Day’s Gram., p. 74. “Alas! how few and transitory are the joys which this world affords to man.”—lb., p. 12. “Oh! how vain and transitory are all things here below.”—lb., p. 110.

“And oh! what change of state, what change of rank,
In that assembly everywhere was seen.”—Day’s Gram., p. 12.

“And O! what change of state! what change of rank!
In that assembly every where was seen!”—Pollok, B. ix, l. 781.

Page 1466

MIXED EXAMPLES OF ERROR.

"O shame! where is thy blush."—S. Barren's Principles of Language, p. 86. "O shame, where is thy blush; John, give me my hat."—ib., p. 98. "What! is Moscow in flames."—ib., p. 86. "Ah! what happiness awaits the virtuous."—ib., 86.

"Ah, welladay,—do what we can for him, said Trim, maintaining his point,—the poor soul will die."—STERNE: Enfield's Speaker, p. 306. "A well o'day! do what we can for him, said Trim, maintaining his point: the poor soul will die"—Kirkham's Elocution, p. 340.

"Will John return to-morrow."—S. Barrett's Gram., Tenth Ed., p. 55. "Will not John return to-morrow."—ib., 55. "John! return to-morrow; Soldiers! stand firm."—ib., 55. "If mea which means my is an adjective in Latin, why may not my be so called in English, and if my is an adjective, why not Barrett's"—ib., p. 50.

"Oh? Absalom, my son."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 375. "Oh! STAR-EYED SCIENCE!! whither hast thou fled?"—ib., p. 366. "Why do you tolerate your own inconsistency, by calling it the present tense!"—ib., p. 360. "Thus the declarative mode may be used in asking a question; as, what man is frail."—ib., p. 358. "What connexion has motive wish, or supposition, with the term subjunctive!"—ib., p. 348. "A grand reason, truly! for calling it a golden key."—ib., p. 347. "What 'suffering'! the man who can say this, must be 'enduring.'"—ib., p. 345. "What is Brown's Rule! in relation to this matter?"—ib., p. 334.

"Alas! how short is life." "Thomas, study your book."—Day's District School Gram., p. 109. "As, 'alas!' how short is life; Thomas, study your book."—ib., p. 82. "Who can tell us who they are."—Sanborn's Gram., p. 178. "Lord have mercy on my son; for he is a lunatic, etc."—Felton's Gram., 1st Ed., p. 138; Ster. Ed., 140. "O, ye wild groves, O, where is now your bloom!"—ib., p. 88; Ster. Ed., 91.

"O who of man the story will unfold!"
—Farnum's Gr., 2d Ed., p. 104.

"Methought I heard Horatio say to-morrow.
Go to I will not hear of it—to-morrow."
—Hallock's Gr., 1st Ed., p. 221.

"How his eyes languish? how his thoughts adore
That painted coat which Joseph never wore?"
—Love of Fame, p. 66.

SECTION VIII.—THE CURVES.

The Curves, or Marks of Parenthesis, are used to distinguish a clause or hint that is hastily thrown in between the parts of a sentence to which it does not properly belong; as, "Their enemies (and enemies they will always have) would have a handle for exposing their measures."—Walpole.

Page 1467

"To others do (the law is not severe)
What to thyself thou wishest to be done."—Beattie.

OBS.—The incidental clause should be uttered in a lower tone, and faster than the principal sentence. It always requires a pause as great as that of a comma, or greater.

RULE I.—THE PARENTHESIS.

A clause that breaks the unity of a sentence or passage too much to be incorporated with it, and only such, should be inclosed within curves, as a parenthesis; as, "For I know that in me, (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing."—Rom., vii, 18.

"Know then this truth, (enough for man to know,) Virtue alone is happiness below."—Pope.

RULE II.—INCLUDED POINTS.

The curves do not supersede other stops; and, as the parenthesis terminates with a pause equal to that which precedes it, the same point should be included, except when the sentences differ in form: as, 1. "Now for a recompense in the same, (I speak as unto my children,) be ye also enlarged."—2 Cor., vi, 13.

2. "Man's thirst of happiness declares it is:
(For nature never gravitates to nought:)
That thirst unquench'd, declares it is not here."—Young.
3. "Night visions may befriend: (as sung above:)
Our waking dreams are fatal. How I dreamt
Of things impossible! (could sleep do more?)
Of joys perpetual in perpetual change!"—Young.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PUNCTUATION.—ERRORS CONCERNING THE CURVES.

UNDER RULE I.—OF THE PARENTHESIS.

"Another is composed of the indefinite article an, which, etymologically means one and other, and denotes one other."—Hallock's Gram., p. 63.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the parenthetical expression, "which etymologically means one," is not sufficiently separated from the rest of the passage. But, according to Rule 1st for the Curves, “A clause that breaks the unity of a sentence or passage too much to be incorporated with it, and only such, should be enclosed within curves, as a parenthesis.” Therefore, the curves should be here inserted; and also, by Rule 2d, a comma at the word one.]

“Each mood has its peculiar Tense, Tenses (or Times).”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 58.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the expression, “or Times,” which has not the nature of a parenthesis, is here marked with curves. But, according to Rule 1st for the Curves, “A clause that breaks the unity of a sentence or passage too much to be incorporated with it, and only such, should be enclosed within curves, as a parenthesis.” Therefore, these marks should be omitted; and a comma should be set after the word “Tenses,” by Rule 3d.]

Page 1468

"In some very ancient languages, as the Hebrew, which have been employed chiefly for expressing plain sentiments in the plainest manner, without aiming at any elaborate length or harmony of periods, this pronoun [the relative] occurs not so often."—L. Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 127.

"Before I shall say those Things, (O conscript Fathers) about the Public Affairs, which are to be spoken at this Time; I shall lay before you, in few Words, the Motives of the Journey, and the Return."—Brightland's Gram., p. 149.

"Of well-chose Words some take not care enough.
And think they should be (like the Subject) rough."
—lb., p. 173.

"Then having shewed his wounds, he'd sit (him) down."
—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 32.

UNDER RULE II.—OF INCLUDED POINTS.

"Then Jael smote the Nail into his Temples, and fastened it to the Ground: (for he was fast asleep and weary) so he died. OLD TEST."—Ward's Gram., p. 17.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because this parenthesis is not marked as terminating with a pause equal to that which precedes it. But, according to Rule 2d above, "The curves do not supersede other stops; and, as the parenthesis terminates with a pause equal to that which precedes it, the same point should be included, except when the sentences differ in form." Therefore, a colon should be inserted within the curve after weary.]

"Every thing in the Iliad has manners (as Aristotle expresses it) that is, every thing is acted or spoken."—Pope, Pref. to Homer, p. vi.

"Those nouns, that end in f. or fe (except some few I shall mention presently), form plurals by changing those letters into ves: as, thief, thieves; wife, wives."—Bucke's Gram., p. 35.

"As, requires as; (expressing equality) Mine is as good as yours. As,—so; (expressing equality) As the stars, so shall thy seed be. So,—as; (with a negative expressing inequality) He is not so wise as his brother. So.—that; (expressing consequence) I am so weak that I cannot walk."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 113; Pract. Les., p. 112.

"A captious question, sir (and yours is one.)
Deserves an answer similar, or none."—Cowper, ii. 228.

MIXED EXAMPLES OF ERROR.

“Whatever words the verb TO BE serves to unite referring to the same thing, must be of the same case; Sec.61, as, Alexander is a student.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 75. “When the objective is a relative or interrogative, it comes before the verb that governs it. Sec.40, R. 9. (Murray’s 6th rule is unnecessary.)”—Id., ib., p. 90. “It is generally improper (except in poetry,) to omit the antecedent to a relative; and always to omit a relative when of the nominative case.”—Id., ib., p. 130. “In every sentence there must be a verb and a nominative (or subject) expressed or understood.”—Id., ib., p. 87; Pract. Lessons, p. 91. “Nouns and pronouns, and especially words denoting time, are often governed by prepositions understood; or are used to restrict verbs or adjectives without a governing word, Sec.50. Rem. 6 and Rule; as, He gave (to) me a full account of the whole affair.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 80. “When should is used instead of ought, to express present duty, Sec.20, 4, it may be followed by the present; as, ‘You should study that you may become learned.’”—Id., ib., p. 123. “The indicative present is frequently used after the words, when, till, before, as soon as, after, to express the relative time of a future action; (Sec.24, I, 4,) as, ‘When he comes, he will be welcome.’”—Id., ib., p. 124. “The relative is parsed by stating its gender, number, case, and antecedent, (the gender and number being always the same as those of the antecedent) thus, ‘The boy who.’ ‘Who’ is a relative pronoun, masculine, singular, the nominative, and refers to ‘boy’ as its antecedent.”—Bullions, Pract. Les., p. 31.

Page 1469

“Now, now, I seize, I clasp thy charms,
And now you burst; ah! cruel from my arms.”

Here is an unnecessary change from the second person singular to the second plural. It would have been better thus,

“Now, now I seize, I clasp your charms,
And now you burst; ah! cruel from my arms.”
—J. Burn’s Gram., p. 193.

SECTION IX.—THE OTHER MARKS.

There are also several other marks, which are occasionally used for various purposes, as follow:—

I. ['] The APOSTROPHE usually denotes either the possessive case of a noun, or the elision of one or more letters of a word: as, “The girl’s regard to her parents’ advice;”—’gan, lov’d, e’en, thro’; for began, loved, even, through. It is sometimes used in pluralizing a mere letter or sign; as, Two a’s—three 6’s. [467]

II. [-] The HYPHEN connects the parts of many compound words, especially such as have two accents; as, ever-living. It is also frequently inserted where a word is divided into syllables; as, con-tem-plate. Placed at the end of a line, it shows that one or more syllables of a word are can led forward to the next line.

III. [ˈ] The DIAERESIS, or DIALYSIS, placed over either of two contiguous vowels, shows that they are not a diphthong; as, Danaee, aerial.

IV. [ˈ] The ACUTE ACCENT marks the syllable which requires the principal stress in pronunciation; as, e'qual, equal'ity. It is sometimes used in opposition to the grave accent, to distinguish a close or short vowel; as, "Fancy:" (Murray:) or to denote the rising inflection of the voice; as, "Is it he?"

Page 1470

V. [˘] The GRAVE ACCENT is used in opposition to the acute, to distinguish an open or long vowel; as, "Favour:" (Murray:) or to denote the falling inflection of the voice; as, "Yes; it is he" It is sometimes placed over a vowel to show that it is not to be suppressed in pronunciation; as,

"Let me, though in humble speech,
Thy refined maxims teach."—Amer. Review, May, 1848.

VI. [ˆ] The CIRCUMFLEX generally denotes either the broad sound of a or an unusual sound given to some other vowel; as in all, heir, machine. Some use it to mark a peculiar wave of the voice, and when occasion requires, reverse it; as, "If you said s=o, then I said so."

VII. [˘˘] The BREVE, or STENOTONE, is used to denote either the close, short, shut sound of a vowel, or a syllable of short quantity; as, l~ive, to have life,—r~av'en, to devour,[468]—c~al~am~us, a reed.

VIII. [=] The MACRON, or MACROTONE,[469] is used to denote either the open, long, primal sound of a vowel, or a syllable of long quantity; as, l=ive, having life,—r=a'ven, a bird,—_e'qu=ine_, of a horse.

IX. [—] or [* * *] or [...] The ELLIPSIS, or SUPPRESSION, denotes the omission of some letters or words: as, K—g, for King; *c*d*, for coward; d....d, for damned.

X. [^] The CARET, used only in writing, shows where to insert words or letters that have been accidentally omitted. XI [{}] The BRACE serves to unite a triplet; or, more frequently, to connect several terms with something to which they are all related. XII. [Sec.] The SECTION marks the smaller divisions of a book or chapter; and, with the help of numbers, serves to abridge references.

XIII. [¶] The PARAGRAPH (chiefly used in the Bible) denotes the commencement of a new subject. The parts of discourse which are called paragraphs, are, in general, sufficiently distinguished by beginning a new line, and carrying the first word a little forwards or backwards. The paragraphs of books being in some instances numbered, this character may occasionally be used, in lieu of the word paragraph, to shorten references.

XIV. ["""] The GUILLEMETS, or QUOTATION POINTS, distinguish words that are exhibited as those of an other author or speaker. A quotation within a quotation, is usually marked with single points; which, when both are employed, are placed within the others: as, "And again he saith, 'Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people.'"—Rom., xv, 10.

XV. [[]] The CROTCHETS, or BRACKETS, generally inclose some correction or explanation, but sometimes the sign or subject to be explained; as, “He [Mr. Maurice] was of a different opinion.”—Allen’s Gram., p. 213.

XVI. [Fist] The INDEX, or HAND, points out something remarkable, or what the reader should particularly observe.

Page 1471

XVII. [*] The ASTERISK, or STAR, [Dagger] the OBELISK, or DAGGER, [Double dagger] the DIESIS, or DOUBLE DAGGER, and [||] the PARALLELS, refer to marginal notes. The SECTION also [Sec.], and the PARAGRAPH ¶, are often used for marks of reference, the former being usually applied to the fourth, and the latter to the sixth note on a page; for, by the usage of printers, these signs are commonly introduced in the following order: 1, *; 2, [Dagger]; 3, [Double dagger]; 4, Sec.; 5, ||; 6, ; 7, ; 8, [Dagger] [Dagger]; &c. Where many references are to be made, the small letters of the alphabet, or the numerical figures, in their order, may be conveniently used for the same purpose.

XVIII. [[Asterism]] The ASTERISM, or THREE STARS, a sign not very often used, is placed before a long or general note, to mark it as a note, without giving it a particular reference.

XIX. [.] The CEDILLA is a mark borrowed from the French, by whom it is placed under the letter c, to give it the sound of s, before a or o; as in the words, “facade,” “Alencon.” In Worcester’s Dictionary, it is attached to three other letters, to denote their soft sounds: viz., “[G] as J; [S] as Z; [x] as gz.”

[Fist][Oral exercises in punctuation should not be confined to the correction of errors. An application of its principles to points rightly inserted, is as easy a process as that of ordinary syntactical parsing, and perhaps as useful. For this purpose, the teacher may select a portion of this grammar, or of any well-pointed book, to which the foregoing rules and explanations may be applied by the pupil, as reasons for the points that occur.]

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PUNCTUATION.—MIXED EXAMPLES OF ERROR.

“The principal stops are the following:—

The Comma (,) the semicolon (;) the colon (:) the period, or fall stop (.) the note of interrogation (?) the note of exclamation (!) the parenthesis () and the dash (—) [.]” — Bullions, E. Gram., p. 151; Pract. Les., p. 127. “The modern punctuation in Latin is the same as in English. The marks employed, are the Comma (,); Semicolon (;); Colon (:); Period (.); Interrogation (?); Exclamation (!).” — Bullions, Lat. Gram., p. 3.

“Plato reproving a young man for playing at some childish game; you chide me, says the youth, for a trifling fault. Custom, replied the philosopher, is no trifle. And, adds Montaigne, he was in the right; for our vices begin in infancy.” — Home’s Art of Thinking, (N. Y. 1818,) p. 54.

“A merchant at sea asked the skipper what death his father died? ‘My father,’ says the skipper, my grandfather, and my great-grandfather, were all drowned. ‘Well,’ replies the merchant, and are not you afraid of being drowned too?”—ib., p. 135.

Page 1472

"The use of inverted comma's derives from France, where one Guillemet was the author of them; [and] as an acknowledgement for the improvement his countrymen call them after his name GUILLEMETS."—History of Printing, (London, 1770,) p. 266.

"This, however, is seldem [sic—KTH] if ever done unless the word following the possessive begins with s; thus we do not say, 'the prince' feather,' but, 'the prince's feather.'"—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 17. "And this phrase must mean the feather of the prince but princesfeather written as one word is the name of a plant: a species of amaranth."—See Key.

"Boeethius soon had the satisfaction of obtaining the highest honour his country could bestow."—Ingersoll's Gram. 12mo., p. 279. "Boethius soon had," &c.—Murray's Gram., 8vo, Vol. ii., p. 83.

"When an example, a quotation, or a speech is introduced, it is separated from the rest of the sentence either by a semicolon or a colon; as, 'The scriptures give us an amiable representation of the Deity, in these words; God is love.'"—Hiley's Gram., p. 116.

"Either the colon or semicolon may be used when an example, a quotation, or a speech is introduced; as, 'Always remember this ancient maxim; Know thyself.' 'The scriptures give us an amiable representation of the Deity, in these words: God is love.'"—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 155.

"The first word of a quotation, introduced after a colon [, must begin with a capital]; as, always remember this ancient maxim: 'Know thyself.'"—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 159; Lennie's Gram., p. 106. [Lennie has "Always" with a capital.] "The first word of a quotation, introduced after a colon, or when it is in a direct form: as, 'Always remember this ancient maxim: Know thyself.' 'Our great lawgiver says, Take up thy cross daily, and follow me.'"—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 284. "8. The first word of a quotation, introduced after a colon, or when it is in a direct form. EXAMPLES.—'Always remember this ancient maxim, 'Know thyself.' 'Our great Lawgiver says, Take up thy cross daily, and follow me.'"—Weld's Gram., Abridged., p. 17

"Tell me in whose house do you live."—N. Butler's Gram., p. 55. "He, that acts wisely, deserves praise."—ib., p. 50 "He, who steals my purse, steals trash."—ib., p. 51. "The antecedent is sometimes omitted, as, 'Who steals my purse, steals trash;' that is, he who, or person who."—ib., p. 51. "Thus, 'Whoever steals my purse steals trash;' 'Whoever does no good does harm.'"—ib., p. 53 "Thus, 'Whoever sins will suffer.' This means that any one without exception who sins will suffer."—ib., p. 53.

"Letters form syllables, syllables words, words sentences, and sentences, combined and connected form discourse."—Cooper's Plain and Practical Gram., p. 1. "A letter which forms a perfect sound, when uttered by itself, is called a vowel, as: a, e, i."—ib., p. 1. "A proper noun is the name of an individual, as: John; Boston: Hudson; America."—ib., p. 17.

Page 1473

"Many men have been capable of doing a wise thing, more a cunning thing, but very few a generous thing."—P. Davis's Gram., p. 96. "In the place of an ellipsis of the verb a comma must be inserted."—ib., p. 121. "A common noun unlimited by an article is sometimes understood in its broadest acceptance: thus, 'Fishes swim' is understood to mean all fishes. 'Man is mortal,' all men."—ib., p. 13.

"Thus those sounds formed principally by the throat are called gutturals. Those formed principally by the palate are called palatals. Those formed by the teeth, dentals—those by the lips, labials—those by the nose, nasals, &c."—P. Davis's Gram., p. 113.

"Some adjectives are compared irregularly; as, Good, better, best. Bad, worse, worst. Little, less, least."—Felton's Gram., 1st Ed., p. 63; Ster. Ed., p. 66.

"Under the fourth head of grammar, therefore, four topics will be considered, viz. PUNCTUATION, ORTHOEPEY, FIGURES, and VERSIFICATION."—Hart's Gram., p. 161.

"Direct her onward to that peaceful shore,
Where peril, pain and death are felt no more!"
Falconer's Poems, p. 136; Barrett's New Gram., p. 94

BAD ENGLISH BADLY POINTED.

LESSON I.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

"Discoveries of such a character are sometimes made in grammar also, and such, too, is often their origin and their end."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 191.

"Traverse, (to cross.) To deny what the opposite party has alleged. To traverse an indictment, &c. is to deny it."—Id., ib., p. 216.

"The Ordinal [numerals] denote the order or succession in which any number of persons or things is mentioned, as first, second, third, fourth, &c."—Hiley's Gram., p. 22.

"Nouns have three persons, FIRST, SECOND, and THIRD. The First person is the speaker, the Second is the one spoken to, the Third is the one spoken of."—Hiley's Gram., p. 44.

"Nouns have three cases, NOMINATIVE, POSSESSIVE, and OBJECTIVE. The relation indicated by the case of a noun includes three ideas, viz: those of subject, object, and ownership."—ib., p. 45.

“In speaking of animals that are of inferior size, or whose sex is not known or not regarded, they are often considered as without sex: thus, we say of a cat ‘it is treacherous,’ of an infant ‘it is beautiful,’ of a deer ‘it was killed.’”—Ib., p. 39.

“When this or these, that or those, refers to a preceding sentence; this, or these, refers to the latter member or term; that, or those, to the former.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 136; see Lowth’s Gram., p. 102.

Page 1474

"The rearing of them [i. e. of plants] became his first care, their fruit his first food, and marking their kinds his first knowledge."—N. Butler's Gram., p. 44.

"After the period used with abbreviations we should employ other points, if the construction demands it; thus, after Esq. in the last example, there should be, besides a period, a comma."—Ib., p. 212.

"In the plural, the verb is the same in all the persons; and hence the principle in Rem. 5, under Rule iii. [that the first or second person takes precedence,] is not applicable to verbs."—Ib., p. 158.

"Rex and Tyrannus are of very different characters. The one rules his people by laws to which they consent; the other, by his absolute will and power: that is called freedom, this, tyranny."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 190.

"A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, which can be known, or mentioned, as: George; London; America; goodness; charity."—Cooper's Plain and Pract. Gram., p. 17.

"Etymology treats of the classification of words; their various modifications and derivations."—Day's School Gram., p. 9. "To punctuate correctly implies a thorough acquaintance with the meaning of words and phrases, as well as of all their corresponding connexions"—W. Day's Punctuation, p. 31.

"All objects which belong to neither the male nor female kind are called neuter."—Weld's Gram., 2d Ed., p. 57. "All objects, which belong to neither the male nor female kind, are said to be of the neuter gender."—Weld's Gram., Abridged, p. 51.

"The Analysis of the Sounds in the English language presented in the preceding statements are sufficiently exact for the purpose in hand. Those who wish to pursue it further can consult Dr. Rush's admirable work, 'The Philosophy of the Human Voice.'"—Fowlers E. Gram., 1850, Sec.65. "Nobody confounds the name of w or y with their sound or phonetic import."—Ib., Sec.74.

"Order is Heaven's first law; and this confest,
Some are and must be, greater than the rest."—Ib., p. 96.

LESSON II.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

"In adjectives of one syllable, the Comparative is formed by adding -er to the positive; and the Superlative by adding -est; as, sweet, sweeter, sweetest."—Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., p. 19.

“In monosyllables the comparative is formed by adding er or r to the positive, and the superlative by adding est or st; as, tall, taller, tallest; wise, wiser, wisest.”—Id., Pract. Les., p. 24.

“By this method the confusion and unnecessary labor occasioned by studying grammars in these languages, constructed on different principles is avoided, the study of one is rendered a profitable introduction to the study of another, and an opportunity is furnished to the enquiring student of comparing the languages in their grammatical structure, and seeing at once wherein they agree, and wherein they differ.”—Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., Pref. to 5th Ed., p. vii.

Page 1475

"No larger portion should be assigned for each recitation than the class can easily master, and till this is done, a new portion should not be given out."—Id., ib., p. viii.

"The acquisitions made in every new lesson should be rivetted and secured by repeated revisals."—Id., ib., p. viii.

"The personal pronouns may be parsed briefly thus; I, the first personal pronoun, masculine (or feminine), singular, the nominative. His, the third personal pronoun, masculine, singular, the possessive, &c."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 23: Pract. Les., p. 28.

"When the male and female are expressed by distinct terms; as, shepherd, shepherdess, the masculine term has also a general meaning, expressing both male and female, and is always to be used when the office, occupation, profession, &c., and not the sex of the individual, is chiefly to be expressed. The feminine term is used only when the discrimination, of sex is indispensably necessary. Thus, when it is said 'the Poets of this country are distinguished by correctness of taste,' the term 'Poet' clearly includes both male and female writers of poetry."—Id., E. Gram., p. 12; his Analyt. and Pract. Gram., 24.

"Nouns and pronouns, connected by conjunctions, must be in the same cases."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 78. "Verbs, connected by conjunctions, must be in the same moods and tenses, and, when in the subjunctive present, they must be in the same form."—Id., p. 112.

"This will habituate him to reflection—exercise his judgment on the meaning of the author, and without any great effort on his part, impress indelibly on his memory, the rules which he is required to give. After the exercises under the rule have been gone through as directed in the note page 96, they may be read over again in a corrected state the pupil making an emphasis on the correction made, or they may be presented in writing at the next recitation."—Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., 2d Ed. Revised and Cor., p. viii.

"Man, but for that, no action could attend
And but for this, be thoughtful to no end."
—O. B. Peirce's Gram., Pref. p. 5.

LESSON III.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

"'Johnson the bookseller and stationer,' indicates that the bookseller and the stationer are epithets belonging to the same person; 'the bookseller and the stationer' would indicate that they belong to different persons."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 127.

"Past is an adjective; passed, the past tense or perfect participle of the verb, and they ought not, as is frequently done, to be confounded with each other."—Id., ib., p. 148.

“Not only the nature of the thoughts and sentiments, but the very selection and arrangement of the words, gives English poetry a character, which separates it widely from common prose.”—Id., ib., p. 178.

Page 1476

“Men of sound, discriminating, and philosophical minds—men prepared for the work by long study, patient investigation, and extensive acquirements, have labored for ages to improve and perfect it, and nothing is hazarded in asserting, that should it be unwisely abandoned, it will be long before another equal in beauty, stability and usefulness, be produced in its stead.”—Id., ib., p. 191.

“The Article The, on the other hand, is used to restrict, and is therefore termed Definite. Its proper office is to call the attention to a particular individual or class, or to any number of such, and is used with nouns in either the singular or plural number.”—Id., ib., p. 193.

“Hence also the infinitive mood, a participle, a member of a sentence, or a proposition, forming together the subject of discourse, or the object of a verb or preposition, and being the name of an act or circumstance, are in construction, regarded as nouns, and are usually called ‘substantive phrases;’ as ‘To play is pleasant,’ ‘His being an expert dancer is no recommendation,’ ‘Let your motto be Honesty is the best policy.’”—Id., ib., p. 194.

“In accordance with his definition, Murray has divided verbs into three classes, Active, Passive, and Neuter, and includes in the first class transitive verbs only, and in the last all verbs used intransitively”—Id., ib., p. 200.

“Moreover, as the name of the speaker or the person spoken to is seldom expressed, (the pronouns I and thou being used in its stead,) a noun is very seldom in the first person, not often in the second, and almost never in either, unless it be a proper noun, or a common noun personified.”—Bullions, Pract. Les., p. 13.

“In using the above exercises it will save much time, which is all important, if the pupil be taught to say every thing belonging to the nouns in the fewest words possible, and to say them always in the same order as above.”—Id., ib., p. 21.

“In any phrase or sentence the adjectives qualifying a noun may generally be found by prefixing the phrase ‘What kind of,’ to the noun in the form of a question; as, What kind of a horse? What kind of a stone? What kind of a way? The word containing the answer to the question is an adjective.”—Id., ib., p. 22.

“In the following exercise let the pupil first point out the nouns, and then the adjectives; and tell how he knows them to be so.”—Id., ib., p. 23.

“In the following sentences point out the improper ellipsis. Show why it is improper, and correct it.”—Id., ib., p. 124.

“SINGULAR PRONOUNS. PLURAL PRONOUNS.

1. I—am being smitten. 1. We—are being smitten. 2. Thou—art being smitten. 2. Ye or you—are being smitten. 3. He—is being smitten. 3. They—are being smitten.”

Page 1477

Wright's Philos. Gram., p. 98.

CHAPTER II—UTTERANCE.

Utterance Is the art or act of vocal expression. It includes the principles of articulation, of pronunciation, and of elocution.

SECTION I.—OF ARTICULATION.

Articulation is the forming of words; by the voice, with reference to their component letters and sounds.

ARTICLE I.—OF THE DEFINITION.

Articulation differs from pronunciation, in having more particular regard to the elements of words, and in not embracing accent[470]. A recent author defines it thus: "ARTICULATION is the act of forming, with the organs of speech, the elements of vocal language."—Comstock's Elocution, p. 16. And again: "A good articulation is the perfect utterance of the elements of vocal language."—Ibid.

An other describes it more elaborately thus: "ARTICULATION, in language, is the forming of the human voice, accompanied by the breath, in some few consonants, into the simple and compound sounds, called vowels, consonants, and diphthongs, by the assistance of the organs of speech; and the uniting of those vowels, consonants, and diphthongs, together, so as to form syllables and words, and constitute spoken language."—Bolles's Dict., Introd., p. 7.

ARTICLE II—OF GOOD ARTICULATION.

Correctness in articulation is of such importance, that without it speech or reading becomes not only inelegant, but often absolutely unintelligible. The opposite faults are mumbling, muttering, mincing, lisping, slurring, mouthing, drawling, hesitating, stammering, misreading, and the like. "A good articulation consists in giving every letter in a syllable its due proportion of sound, according to the most approved custom of pronouncing it; and in making such a distinction between the syllables of which words are composed, that the ear shall without difficulty acknowledge their number; and perceive, at once, to which syllable each letter belongs. Where these points are not observed, the articulation is proportionably defective."—Sheridan's Rhetorical Grammar, p. 50.

Distinctness of articulation depends, primarily, upon the ability to form the simple elements, or sounds of letters, by the organs of speech, in the manner which the custom of the language demands; and, in the next place, upon the avoidance of that precipitancy of utterance, which is greater than the full and accurate play of the organs will allow. If time be not given for the full enunciation of any word which we attempt to speak, some of the syllables will of course be either lost by elision or sounded confusedly.

Just articulation gives even to a feeble voice greater power and reach than the loudest vociferation can attain without it. It delivers words from the lips, not mutilated, distorted, or corrupted, but as the acknowledged sterling currency of thought;—"as beautiful coins newly issued from the mint, deeply and accurately impressed, perfectly finished, neatly struck by the proper organs, distinct, sharp, in due succession, and of due weight."—Austin's Chironomia, p. 38.

Page 1478

OBS.—The principles of articulation constitute the chief exercise of all those who are learning either to speak or to read. So far as they are specifically taught in this work, they will be found in those sections which treat of the powers of the letters.

SECTION II.—OF PRONUNCIATION.

Pronunciation, as distinguished from elocution, or delivery, is the utterance of words taken separately. The correct pronunciation of words, or that part of grammar which teaches it, is frequently called Orthoepy.

Pronunciation, or orthoepy, requires a knowledge of the just powers of the letters in all their combinations; of the distinction of quantity in vowels and syllables; and of the force and seat of the accent.

ARTICLE I—OF THE POWERS OF LETTERS.

The JUST POWERS of the letters, are those sounds which are given to them by the best readers. These are to be learned, as reading is learned, partly from example, and partly from such books as show or aid the pronunciation of words.

It is to be observed, however, that considerable variety, even in the powers of the letters, is produced by the character and occasion of what is uttered. It is noticed by Walker, that, "Some of the vowels, when neither under the accent, nor closed by a consonant, have a longer or a shorter, an opener or a closer sound, according to the solemnity or familiarity, the deliberation or rapidity of our delivery."—Pronouncing Dict., Preface, p. 4. In cursory speech, or in such reading as imitates it, even the best scholars utter many letters with quicker and obscurer sounds than ought ever to be given them in solemn discourse. "In public speaking," says Ripplingham, "every word should be uttered, as though it were spoken singly. The solemnity of an oration justifies and demands such scrupulous distinctness. That careful pronunciation which would be ridiculously pedantic in colloquial intercourse, is an essential requisite of good elocution."—Art of Public Speaking, p. xxxvii.

ARTICLE II—OF QUANTITY.

QUANTITY, or TIME in pronunciation, is the measure of sounds or syllables in regard to their duration; and, by way of distinction, is supposed ever to determine them to be either long or short.^[471]

The absolute time in which syllables are uttered, is very variable, and must be different to suit different subjects, passions, and occasions; but their relative length or shortness may nevertheless be preserved, and generally must be, especially in reciting poetry.

Our long syllables are chiefly those which, having sounds naturally capable of being lengthened at pleasure, are made long by falling under some stress either of accent or of emphasis. Our short syllables are the weaker sounds, which, being the less significant words, or parts of words, are uttered without peculiar stress.

Page 1479

OBS.—As quantity is chiefly to be regarded in the utterance of poetical compositions, this subject will be farther considered under the head of Versification.

ARTICLE III.—OF ACCENT.

ACCENT, as commonly understood, is the peculiar stress which we lay upon some particular syllable of a word, whereby that syllable is distinguished from and above the rest; as, gram'-mar, gram-ma'-ri-an.

Every word of more than one syllable, has one of its syllables accented; and sometimes a compound word has two accents, nearly equal in force; as, e'ven-hand'ed, home'-depart'ment. [472]

Besides the chief or primary accent, when the word is long, for the sake of harmony or distinctness, we often give a secondary or less forcible accent to an other syllable; as, to the last of tem'-per-a-ture', and to the second of in dem'-ni-fi-ca'-tion.

“Accent seems to be regulated, in a great measure, by etymology. In words from the Saxon, the accent is generally on the root; in words from the learned languages, it is generally on the termination; and if to these we add the different accent we lay on some words, to distinguish them from others, we seem to have the three great principles of accentuation; namely, the radical, the terminational, and the distinctive.”—Walker's Principles, No. 491; L. Murray's Grammar, 8vo, p. 236.

A full and open pronunciation of the long vowel sounds, a clear articulation of the consonants, a forcible and well-placed accent, and a distinct utterance of the unaccented syllables, distinguish the elegant speaker.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—The pronunciation of the English language is confessedly very difficult to be mastered. Its rules and their exceptions are so numerous, that few become thoroughly acquainted with any general system of them. Nor, among the different systems which have been published, is there any which is worthy in all respects to be accounted a STANDARD. And, if we appeal to custom, the custom even of the best speakers is far from an entire uniformity. Perhaps the most popular directory on this subject is Walker's Critical Pronouncing Dictionary. The “Principles of English Pronunciation,” which this author has furnished, occupy fifty-six closely-printed octavo pages, and are still insufficient for the purpose of teaching our orthoepy by rule. They are, however, highly valuable, and ought to be consulted by every one who wishes to be master of this subject. In its vocabulary, or stock of words, this Dictionary is likewise deficient. Other lexicographers have produced several later works, of high value to the student; and, though no one has treated the subject of pronunciation so elaborately as did Walker, some may have given the results of their diligence in a form more useful to the generality of their consulters. Among the good ones, is the Universal and Critical Dictionary of Joseph E. Worcester.

Page 1480

OBS. 2.—Our modern accentuation of Greek or Latin words is regulated almost wholly by the noted rule of Sanctius, which Walker has copied and Englished in the Introduction to his Key, and of which the following is a new version or paraphrase, never before printed:

RULE FOR THE ACCENTING OF LATIN.

One syllable has stress of course, And words of two the first enforce; In longer words the penult guides, Its quantity the point decides; If long, 'tis there the accent's due, If short, accent the last but two; For accent, in a Latin word, Should ne'er go higher than the third.

This rule, or the substance of it, has become very important by long and extensive use; but it should be observed, that stress on monosyllables is more properly emphasis than accent; and that, in English, the accent governs quantity, rather than quantity the accent.

SECTION III.—OF ELOCUTION.

Elocution is the graceful utterance of words that are arranged into sentences, and that form discourse.

Elocution requires a knowledge, and right application, of emphasis, pauses, inflections, and tones.

ARTICLE I—OF EMPHASIS.

EMPHASIS is the peculiar stress of voice which we lay upon some particular word or words in a sentence, which are thereby distinguished from the rest as being more especially significant.[473]

As accent enforces a syllable, and gives character to a word; so emphasis distinguishes a word, and often determines the import of a sentence. The right placing of accent, in the utterance of words, is therefore not more important, than the right placing of emphasis, in the utterance of sentences. If no emphasis be used, discourse becomes vapid and inane; if no accent, words can hardly be recognized as English.

“Emphasis, besides its other offices, is the great regulator of quantity. Though the quantity of our syllable is fixed, in words separately pronounced, yet it is mutable, when [the] words are [ar]ranged in[to] sentences; the long being changed into short, the short into long, according to the importance of the words with regard to meaning: and, as it is by emphasis only, that the meaning can be pointed out, emphasis must be the regulator of the quantity.”—L. Murray's Gram., p. 246.[474] “Emphasis changes, not only the quantity of words and syllables, but also, in particular cases, the sent of the accent. This is demonstrable from the following examples: 'He shall increase, but I shall decrease.' 'There is a difference between giving and forgiving.' 'In this species of composition, plausibility is much more essential than probability.' In these examples, the emphasis requires the accent to be placed on syllables to which it does not commonly belong."—ib., p. 247.

Page 1481

In order to know what words are to be made emphatic, the speaker or reader must give constant heed to the sense of what he utters; his only sure guide, in this matter, being a just conception of the force and spirit of the sentiment which he is about to pronounce. He must also guard against the error of multiplying emphatic words too much; for, to overdo in this way, defeats the very purpose for which emphasis is used. To manage this stress with exact propriety, is therefore one of the surest evidences both of a quick understanding, and of a delicate and just taste.

ARTICLE II.—OF PAUSES.

Pauses are cessations in utterance, which serve equally to relieve the speaker, and to render language intelligible and pleasing.

Pauses are of three kinds: first, distinctive or sentential pauses,—such as form the divisions required by the sense; secondly, emphatic or rhetorical pauses,—such as particularly call the hearer's attention to something which has been, or is about to be, uttered; and lastly, poetical or harmonic pauses,—such as are peculiar to the utterance of metrical compositions.

The duration of the distinctive pauses should be proportionate to the degree of connexion between the parts of the discourse. The shortest are long enough for the taking of some breath; and it is proper, thus to relieve the voice at every stop, if needful. This we may do, slightly at a comma, more leisurely at a semicolon, still more so at a colon, and completely at a period.

Pauses, whether in reading or in public discourse, ought always to be formed after the manner in which we naturally form them in ordinary, sensible conversation; and not after the stiff, artificial manner which many acquire at school, by a mere mechanical attention to the common punctuation.

Forced, unintentional pauses, which accidentally divide words that ought to be spoken in close connexion, are always disagreeable; and, whether they arise from exhaustion of breath, from a habit of faltering, or from unacquaintance with the text, they are errors of a kind utterly incompatible with graceful elocution.

Emphatic or rhetorical pauses, the kind least frequently used, may be made immediately before, or immediately after, something which the speaker thinks particularly important, and on which he would fix the attention of his audience. Their effect is similar to that of a strong emphasis; and, like this, they must not be employed too often.

The harmonic pauses, or those which are peculiar to poetry, are of three kinds: the final pause, which marks the end of each line; the caesural or divisional pause, which commonly divides the line near the middle; and the minor rests, or demi-caesuras, which often divide it still further.

In the reading of poetry, these pauses ought to be observed, as well as those which have reference to the sense; for, to read verse exactly as if it were prose, will often rob it of what chiefly distinguishes it from prose. Yet, at the same time, all appearance of singsong, or affected tone, ought to be carefully guarded against.

Page 1482

ARTICLE III.—OF INFLECTIONS.

INFLECTIONS are those peculiar variations of the human voice, by which a continuous sound is made to pass from one note, key, or pitch, into an other. The passage of the voice from a lower to a higher or shriller note, is called the rising or upward inflection. The passage of the voice from a higher to a lower or graver note, is called the falling or downward inflection. These two opposite inflections may be heard in the following examples: 1. The rising, "Do you mean to go?" 2. The falling, "When will you go?"

In general, questions that may be answered by yes or no, require the rising inflection; while those which demand any other answer, must be uttered with the falling inflection. These slides of the voice are not commonly marked in writing, or in our printed books; but, when there is occasion to note them, we apply the acute accent to the former, and the grave accent to the latter.[475]

A union of these two inflections upon the same syllable, is called a circumflex, a wave, or a "circumflex inflection." When the slide is first downward and then upward, it is called the rising circumflex, or "the gravo-acute circumflex;" when first upward and then downward, it is denominated the falling circumflex, or "the acuto-grave circumflex." Of these complex inflections of the voice, the emphatic words in the following sentences may be uttered as examples: "And it shall go h~ard but I will use the information."—"O! but he pa~used upon the brink."

When a passage is read without any inflection, the words are uttered in what is called a monotone; the voice being commonly pitched at a grum note, and made to move for the time, slowly and gravely, on a perfect level.

"Rising inflections are far more numerous than falling inflections; the former constitute the main body of oral language, while the latter are employed for the purposes of emphasis, and in the formation of cadences. Rising inflections are often emphatic; but their emphasis is weaker than that of falling inflections."—Comstock's Elocution, p. 50.

"Writers on Elocution have given numerous rules for the regulation of inflections; but most of these rules are better calculated to make bad readers than good ones. Those founded on the construction of sentences might, perhaps, do credit to a mechanic, but they certainly do none to an elocutionist."—Ib., p. 51.

"The reader should bear in mind that a falling inflection gives more importance to a word than a rising inflection. Hence it should never be employed merely for the sake of variety; but for emphasis and cadences. Neither should a rising inflection be used for the sake of mere 'harmony,' where a falling inflection would better express the meaning of the author. The sense should, in all cases, determine the direction of inflections."—Ib.

Page 1483

Cadence is a fall of the voice, which has reference not so much to pitch as to force, though it may depress both; for it seems to be generally contrasted with emphasis,[476] and by some is reprehended as a fault. "Support your voice steadily and firmly," says Ripplingham, "and pronounce the concluding words of the sentence with force and vivacity, rather than with a languid cadence."—Art of Speaking, p. 17. The pauses which L. Murray denominates the suspending and the closing pause, he seems to have discriminated chiefly by the inflections preceding them, if he can be said to have distinguished them at all. For he not only teaches that the former may sometimes be used at the close of a sentence, and the latter sometimes where "the sense is not completed;" but, treating cadence merely as a defect, adds the following caution: "The closing pause must not be confounded with that fall of the voice, or cadence, with which many readers uniformly finish a sentence. Nothing is more destructive of propriety and energy than this habit. The tones and inflections of the voice at the close of a sentence, ought to be diversified, according to the general nature of the discourse, and the particular construction and meaning of the sentence."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 250; 12mo, p. 200.

ARTICLE IV.—OF TONES.

Tones are those modulations of the voice which depend upon the feelings of the speaker. They are what Sheridan denominates "the language of emotions." And it is of the utmost importance, that they be natural, unaffected, and rightly adapted to the subject and to the occasion; for upon them, in a great measure, depends all that is pleasing or interesting in elocution.

"How much of the propriety, the force, and [the] grace of discourse, must depend on these, will appear from this single consideration; that to almost every sentiment we utter, more especially to every strong emotion, nature has adapted some peculiar tone of voice; insomuch, that he who should tell another that he was angry, or much grieved, in a tone that did not suit such emotions, instead of being believed, would be laughed at."—Blair's Rhet., p. 333.

"The different passions of the mind must be expressed by different tones of the voice. Love, by a soft, smooth, languishing voice; anger, by a strong, vehement, and elevated voice; joy, by a quick, sweet, and clear voice; sorrow, by a low, flexible, interrupted voice; fear, by a dejected, tremulous, hesitating voice; courage, by a full, bold, and loud voice; and perplexity, by a grave and earnest voice. In exordiums, the voice should be low, yet clear; in narrations, distinct; in reasoning, slow; in persuasions, strong: it should thunder in anger, soften in sorrow, tremble in fear, and melt in love."—Hiley's Gram., p. 121.

Page 1484

OBS.—Walker observes, in his remarks on the nature of Accent and Quantity, “As to the tones of the passions, which are so many and various, these, in the opinion of one of the best judges in the kingdom, are qualities of sound, occasioned by certain vibrations of the organs of speech, independent on [say of] high, low, loud, soft, quick, slow, forcible, or feeble: which last may not improperly be called different quantities of sound.”—Walker’s Key, p. 305.

CHAPTER III.—FIGURES.

A Figure, in grammar, is an intentional deviation from the ordinary spelling, formation, construction, or application, of words. There are, accordingly, figures of Orthography, figures of Etymology, figures of Syntax, and figures of Rhetoric. When figures are judiciously employed, they both strengthen and adorn expression. They occur more frequently in poetry than in prose; and several of them are merely poetic licenses.

SECTION I.—FIGURES OF ORTHOGRAPHY.

A Figure of Orthography is an intentional deviation from the ordinary or true spelling of a word. The principal figures of Orthography are two; namely, Mi-me’-sis and Ar’-cha-ism.

EXPLANATIONS.

I. Mimesis is a ludicrous imitation of some mistake or mispronunciation of a word, in which the error is mimicked by a false spelling, or the taking of one word for another; as, “Maister, says he, have you any wery good weal in you vallet?”—Columbian Orator, p. 292. “Ay, he was porn at Monmouth, captain Gower.”—Shak. “I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.”—Id.

“Perdigious! I can hardly stand.”

—LLOYD: Brit. Poets, Vol. viii, p. 184.

II. An Archaism is a word or phrase expressed according to ancient usage, and not according to our modern orthography; as, “Newe grene chese of smalle clammynes comfortethe a hotte stomake.”—T. PAYNEL: Tooke’s Diversions, ii, 132. “He hath holpen his servant Israel.”—Luke, i, 54.

“With him was rev’rend Contemplation pight,
Bow-bent with eld, his beard of snowy hue.”—Beattie.

OBS.—Among the figures of this section, perhaps we might include the foreign words or phrases which individual authors now and then adopt in writing English; namely, the Scotticisms, the Gallicisms, the Latinisms, the Grecisms, and the like, with which they too often garnish their English style. But these, except they stand as foreign quotations, in which case they are exempt from our rules, are in general offences against the purity of our language; and it may therefore be sufficient, just to mention them here, without expressly putting any of them into the category of grammatical figures.

Page 1485

SECTION II.—FIGURES OF ETYMOLOGY.

A Figure of Etymology is an intentional deviation from the ordinary formation of a word. The principal figures of Etymology are eight; namely, A-phoer'-e-sis, Pros'-the-sis, Syn'-co-pe, A-poc'-o-pe, Par-a-go'-ge, Di-oer'-e-sis, Syn-oer'-e-sis, and Tme'-sis.

EXPLANATIONS.

I. Aphaeresis is the elision of some of the initial letters of a word: as, 'gainst, for against; 'gan, for began; 'neath, for beneath; 'thout, for without.

II. Prosthesis is the prefixing of an expletive syllable to a word: as, adown, for down; appaid, for paid; bestrown, for strown; evanished, for vanished; yclad, for clad.

III. Syn'cope is the elision of some of the middle letters of a word: as, med'cine, for medicine; e'en, for even; o'er, for over; conq'ring, for conquering; se'nnight, for sevensnight.

IV. Apoc'ope is the elision of some of the final letters of a word: as, tho' for though; th', for the; t'other, for the other; thro', for through.

V. Parago'ge is the annexing of an expletive syllable to a word: as, Johnny, for John; deary, for dear; withouten, for without.

VI. Diaeresis is the separating of two vowels that might be supposed to form a diphthong: as, cooperate, not cooperate; aeronaut, not aeronaut; or'thoepy, not orthoepy.

VII. Synaeresis is the sinking of two syllables into one: as, seest, for seest; tacked, for tack-ed; drowned, for drown-ed; spoks't, for spok-est; show'dst, for show-edst; 'tis, for it is; I'll, for I will.

VIII. Tmesis is the inserting of a word between the parts of a compound, or between two words which should be united if they stood together: as, "On which side soever."—Rolla. "To us ward;" "To God ward."—Bible. "The assembling of ourselves together."—Id. "With what charms soe'er she will."—Cowper. "So new a fashion'd robe."—Shak. "Lament the live day long."—Burns.

OBS.—In all our pronunciation, except that of the solemn style, such verbal or participial terminations as can be so uttered, are usually sunk by synaeresis into mere modifications of preceding syllables. The terminational consonants, if not uttered with one vowel, must be uttered with an other. When, therefore, a vowel is entirely suppressed in pronunciation, (whether retained in writing or not,) the consonants connected with it, necessarily fall into an other syllable: thus, tried, triest, sued, suest, loved, lovest, mov'd, mov'st, are monosyllables; and studied, studiest, studi'dst, argued, arguest, argu'dst, are dissyllables; except in solemn discourse, in which the e is generally retained and made vocal.

Page 1486

SECTION III.—FIGURES OF SYNTAX.

A Figure of Syntax is an intentional deviation from the ordinary construction of words. The principal figures of Syntax are five; namely, El-lip'-sis, Ple'-o-nasm, Syl-lep'-sis, En-al'-la-ge, and Hy-per'-ba-ton. EXPLANATIONS.

I. Ellipsis is the omission of some word or words which are necessary to complete the construction, but not necessary to convey the meaning. Such words are said, in technical phrase, to be understood;^[477] because they are received as belonging to the sentence, though they are not uttered.

Of compound sentences, a vast many are more or less elliptical; and sometimes, for brevity's sake, even the most essential parts of a simple sentence, are suppressed; ^[478] as, "But more of this hereafter."—Harris's Hermes, p. 77. This means, "But I shall say more of this hereafter." "Prythee, peace."—Shak. That is, "I pray thee, hold thou thy peace."

There may be an omission of any of the parts of speech, or even of a whole clause, when this repeats what precedes; but the omission of mere articles or interjections can scarcely constitute a proper ellipsis, because these parts of speech, wherever they are really necessary to be recognized, ought to be expressed.

EXAMPLES OF ELLIPSIS SUPPLIED.

1. Of the ARTICLE:—"A man and [a] woman."—"The day, [the] month, and [the] year."—"She gave me an apple and [a] pear, for a fig and [an] orange."—Jaudon's Gram., p. 170.

2. Of the NOUN:—"The common [law] and the statute law."—"The twelve [apostles]."—"The same [man] is he."—"One [book] of my books."—"A dozen [bottles] of wine."—"Conscience, I say; not thine own [conscience], but [the conscience] of the other."—1 Cor., x, 29. "Every moment subtracts from [our lives] what it adds to our lives."—Dillwyn's Ref., p. 8. "Bad actions mostly lead to worse" [actions].—ib., p. 5.

3. Of the ADJECTIVE:—"There are subjects proper for the one, and not [proper] for the other."—Kames. "A just weight and [a just] balance are the Lord's."—Prov., xvi, 11. True ellipses of the adjective alone, are but seldom met with.

4. Of the PRONOUN:—"Leave [thou] there thy gift before the altar, and go [thou] thy way; first be [thou] reconciled to thy brother, and then come [thou] and offer [thou] thy gift,"—Matt., v, 24. "Love [ye] your enemies, bless [ye] them that curse you, do [ye] good to them that hate you."—ib., v, 44. "Chastisement does not always immediately follow error, but [it] sometimes comes when [it is] least expected."—Dillwyn, Ref., p.

31. “Men generally put a greater value upon the favours [which] they bestow, than upon those [which] they receive.”—Art of Thinking, p. 48. “Wisdom and worth were all [that] he had.”—Allen’s Gram., p. 294.

Page 1487

5. Of the VERB:—"The world is crucified unto me, and I [am crucified] unto the world."—Gal., vi, 14. "Hearts should not [differ], though heads may, differ."—Dillwyn, p.

11. "Are ye not much better than they" [are]?"—Matt., vi, 26. "Tribulation worketh patience; and patience [worketh] experience; and experience [worketh] hope."—Romans, v, 4. "Wrongs are engraved on marble; benefits [are engraved] on sand."—Art of Thinking, p. 41. "To whom thus Eve, yet sinless" [spoke].—Milton.

6. Of the PARTICIPLE:—"That [being] o'er, they part."—"Animals of various natures, some adapted to the wood, and some [adapted] to the wave."—Melmoth, on Scripture, p. 13.

"His knowledge [being] measured to his state and place,
His time [being] a moment, and a point [being] his space."—Pope.

7. Of the ADVERB:—"He can do this independently of me, if not [independently] of you."

"She shows a body rather than a life;
A statue, [rather] than a breather."
—Shak., Ant. and Cleo., iii, 3.

8. Of the CONJUNCTION:—"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, [and] joy, [and] peace, [and] long suffering, [and] gentleness, [and] goodness, [and] faith, [and] meekness, [and] temperance."—Gal., v, 22. The repetition of the conjunction is called Polysyndeton; and the omission of it, Asyndeton.

9. Of the PREPOSITION:—"It shall be done [on] this very day."—"We shall set off [at] some time [in] next month."—"He departed [from] this life."—"He gave [to] me a book."—"We walked [through] a mile."—"He was banished [from] the kingdom."—W. Allen. "He lived like [to] a prince."—Wells.

10. Of the INTERJECTION:—"Oh! the frailty, [oh!] the wickedness of men."—"Alas for Mexico! and [alas] for many of her invaders!"

11. Of PHRASES or CLAUSES:—"The active commonly do more than they are bound to do; the indolent [commonly do] less" [than they are bound to do].—"Young men, angry, mean less than they say; old men, [angry, mean] more" [than they say].—"It is the duty of justice, not to injure men; [it is the duty] of modesty, not to offend them."—W. Allen.

OBSERVATIONS.

Page 1488

OBS. 1.—Grammarians in general treat of ellipsis without defining it; and exhibit such rules and examples as suppose our language to be a hundred-fold more elliptical than it really is.[479] This is a great error, and only paralleled by that of a certain writer elsewhere noticed, who denies the existence of all ellipsis whatever. (See Syntax, Obs. 24th on Rule 22d.) Some have defined this figure in a way that betrays a very inaccurate notion of what it is: as, “ELLIPSIS is when one or more words are wanting to complete the sense.”—Adam’s Lat. and Eng. Gram., p. 235; Gould’s, 229. “ELLIPSIS is the omission of one or more words necessary to complete the sense.”—Bullions, Lat. Gram., p. 265. These definitions are decidedly worse than none; because, if they have any effect, they can only mislead. They absurdly suggest that every elliptical sentence lacks a part of its own meaning! Ellipsis is, in fact, the mere omission or absence of certain suggested words; or of words that may be spared from utterance, without defect in the sense. There never can be an ellipsis of any thing which is either unnecessary to the construction or necessary to the sense; for to say what we mean and nothing more, never can constitute a deviation from the ordinary grammatical construction of words. As a figure of Syntax, therefore, the ellipsis can only be of such words as are so evidently suggested to the reader, that the writer is as fully answerable for them as if he had written them.

OBS. 2.—To suppose an ellipsis where there is none, or to overlook one where it really occurs, is to pervert or mutilate the text, in order to accommodate it to the parser’s or reader’s ignorance of the principles of syntax. There never can be either a general uniformity or a self-consistency in our methods of parsing, or in our notions of grammar, till the true nature of an ellipsis is clearly ascertained; so that the writer shall distinguish it from a blundering omission that impairs the sense, and the reader or parser be barred from an arbitrary insertion of what would be cumbrous and useless. By adopting loose and extravagant ideas of the nature of this figure, some pretenders to learning and philosophy have been led into the most whimsical and opposite notions concerning the grammatical construction of language. Thus, with equal absurdity, Cardell and Sherman, in their Philosophic Grammars, attempt to confute the doctrines of their predecessors, by supposing ellipses at pleasure. And while the former teaches, that prepositions do not govern the objective case, but that every verb is transitive, and governs at least two objects, expressed or understood, its own and that of a preposition: the latter, with just as good an argument, contends that no verb is transitive, but that every objective case is governed by a preposition expressed or understood. A world of nonsense for lack of a definition!

Page 1489

II. PLEONASM is the introduction of superfluous words; as, "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it."—Gen., ii, 17. This figure is allowable only, when, in animated discourse, it abruptly introduces an emphatic word, or repeats an idea to impress it more strongly; as, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."—Bible. "All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth."—Id. "There shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down."—Id. "I know thee who thou art."—Id. A Pleonasm, as perhaps in these instances, is sometimes impressive and elegant; but an unemphatic repetition of the same idea, is one of the worst faults of bad writing.

OBS.—Strong passion is not always satisfied with saying a thing once, and in the fewest words possible; nor is it natural that it should be. Hence repetitions indicative of intense feeling may constitute a beauty of the highest kind, when, if the feeling were wanting, or supposed to be so, they would be reckoned intolerable tautologies. The following is an example, which the reader may appreciate the better, if he remembers the context: "At her feet he bowed, he fell, he lay down; at her feet he bowed, he fell; where he bowed, there he fell down dead."—Judges, v, 27.

III. SYLLEPSIS is agreement formed according to the figurative sense of a word, or the mental conception of the thing spoken of, and not according to the literal or common use of the term; it is therefore in general connected with some figure of rhetoric: as "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt amongst us, and we beheld his glory."—John, i, 14. "Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them."—Acts, viii, 5. "The city of London have expressed their sentiments with freedom and firmness."—Junius, p. 159. "And I said [to backsliding Israel,] after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me; but she returned not: and her treacherous sister Judah saw it."—Jer., iii, 7. "And he surnamed them Boanerges, which is, The sons of thunder."—Mark, iii, 17.

"While Evening draws her crimson curtains round."—Thomson, p. 63.

"The Thunder raises his tremendous voice."—Id., p. 113.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—To the parser, some explanation of that agreement which is controlled by tropes, is often absolutely necessary; yet, of our modern grammarians, none appear to have noticed it; and, of the oldest writers, few, if any, have given it the rank which it deserves among the figures of syntax. The term Syllepsis literally signifies conception, comprehension, or taking-together.

Page 1490

Under this name have been arranged, by the grammarians and rhetoricians, many different forms of unusual or irregular agreement; some of which are quite too unlike to be embraced in the same class, and not a few, perhaps, too unimportant or too ordinary to deserve any classification as figures. I therefore omit some forms of expression which others have treated as examples of Syllepsis, and define the term with reference to such as seem more worthy to be noticed as deviations from the ordinary construction of words. Dr. Webster, allowing the word two meanings, explains it thus: "SYLLEPSIS, n. [Gr. syllaepsis.] 1. In grammar, a figure by which we conceive the sense of words otherwise than the words import, and construe them according to the intention of the author; otherwise called substitution.^[480] 2. The agreement of a verb or adjective, not with the word next to it, but with the most worthy in the sentence."—American Dict.

OBS. 2.—In short, Syllepsis is a conception of which grammarians have conceived so variously, that it has become doubtful, what definition or what application of the term is now the most appropriate. Dr. Prat, in defining it, cites one notion from Sanctius, and adds an other of his own, thus: "SYLLEPSIS, id est, Conceptio, est quoties Generibus, aut Numeris videntur voces discrepare. Sanct. l. 4. c. 10. Vel sit Comprehensio indignioris sub digniore."—Prat's Lat. Gram., Part ii, p. 164. John Grant ranks it as a mere form or species of Ellipsis, and expounds it thus: "Syllepsis is when the adjective or verb, joined to different substantives, agrees with the more worthy."—Institutes of Lat. Gram., p. 321. Dr. Littleton describes it thus: "SYLLLEPSIS [sic—KTH],—A Grammatical figure where two Nominative Cases singular of different persons are joined to a Verb plural."—Latin Dict., 4to. By Dr. Morell it is explained as follows: "SYLLEPSIS,—A grammatical figure, where one is put for many, and many for one, Lat. Conceptio."—Morell's Ainsworth's Dict., 4to, Index Vitand. IV. Enallage is the use of one part of speech, or of one modification, for an other. This figure borders closely upon solecism; and, for the stability of the language, it should be sparingly indulged. There are, however, several forms of it which can appeal to good authority: as,

1. "You know that you are Brutus, that say this."—Shak.
2. "They fall successive[ly], and successive[ly] rise."—Pope.
3. "Than whom [who] a fiend more fell is nowhere found."—Thomson.
4. "Sure some disaster has befell" [befallen].—Gay.
5. "So furious was that onset's shock,
Destruction's gates at once unlock" [unlocked].—Hogg.

OBSERVATIONS.

Page 1491

OBS. 1.—Enallage is a Greek word, signifying commutation, change, or exchange. “Enallage, in a general sense, is the change of words, or of their accidents, one for another.”—Grant’s Latin Gram., p. 322. The word Antimeria, which literally expresses change of parts, was often used by the old grammarians as synonymous with Enallage; though, sometimes, the former was taken only for the substitution of one part of speech for an other, and the latter, only, or more particularly, for a change of modification—as of mood for mood, tense for tense, or number for number. The putting of one case for an other, has also been thought worthy of a particular name, and been called Antiptosis. But Enallage, the most comprehensive of these terms, having been often of old applied to all such changes, reducing them to one head, may well be now defined as above, and still applied, in this way, to all that we need recognize as figures. The word Enallaxis, preferred by some, is of the same import. “ENALLAXIS, so called by Longinus, or ENALLAGE, is an Exchange of Cases, Tenses, Persons, Numbers, or Genders.”—Holmes’s Rhet., Book i, p. 57.

“An ENALLAXIS changes, when it pleases,
Tenses, or Persons, Genders, Numbers, Cases.”—Ib., B. ii, p. 50.

OBS. 2.—Our most common form of Enallage is that by which a single person is addressed in the plural number. This is so fashionable in our civil intercourse, that some very polite grammarians improperly dispute its claims to be called a figure; and represent it as being more ordinary, and even more literal than the regular phraseology; which a few of them, as we have seen, would place among the archaisms. The next in frequency, (if indeed it can be called a different form,) is the practice of putting we for I, or the plural for the singular in the first person. This has never yet been claimed as literal and regular syntax, though the usages differ in nothing but commonness; both being honourably authorized, both still improper on some occasions, and, in both, the Enallage being alike obvious. Other varieties of this figure, not uncommon in English, are the putting of adjectives for adverbs, of adverbs for nouns, of the present tense for the preterit, and of the preterit for the perfect participle. But, in the use of such liberties, elegance and error sometimes approximate so nearly, there is scarcely an obvious line between them, and grammarians consequently disagree in making the distinction.

Page 1492

OBS. 3.—Deviations of this kind are, in general, to be considered solecisms; otherwise, the rules of grammar would be of no use or authority. Despauter, an ancient Latin grammarian, gave an improper latitude to this figure, or to a species of it, under the name of Antiptosis; and Behourt and others extended it still further. But Sanctius says, “Antiptosi grammaticorum nihil imperitius, quod figmentum si esset verum, frustra quaereretur, quem casum verba regerent.” And the Messieurs De Port Royal reject the figure altogether. There are, however, some changes of this kind, which the grammarian is not competent to condemn, though they do not accord with the ordinary principles of construction.

V. Hyperbaton is the transposition of words; as, “He wanders earth around.”—Cowper “Rings the world with the vain stir.”—Id. “Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.”—Acts, xvii, 23. “‘Happy’, says Montesquieu, ‘is that nation whose annals are tiresome.’”—Corwin, in Congress, 1847. This figure is much employed in poetry. A judicious use of it confers harmony, variety, strength, and vivacity upon composition. But care should be taken lest it produce ambiguity or obscurity, absurdity or solecism.

OBS.—A confused and intricate arrangement of words, received from some of the ancients the name of Syn’chysis, and was reckoned by them among the figures of grammar. By some authors, this has been improperly identified with Hyper’baton, or elegant inversion; as may be seen under the word Synchysis in Littleton’s Dictionary, or in Holmes’s Rhetoric, at page 58th. Synchysis literally means confusion, or commixtion; and, in grammar, is significant only of some poetical jumble of words, some verbal kink or snarl, which cannot be grammatically resolved or disentangled: as,

“Is piety thus and pure devotion paid?”
—Milton, P. L., B. xi, l. 452.

“An ass will with his long ears fray
The flies that tickle him away;
But man delights to have his ears
Blown maggots in by flatterers.”
—Butler’s Poems, p. 161.

SECTION IV.—FIGURES OF RHETORIC.

A Figure of Rhetoric is an intentional deviation from the ordinary application of words. Several of this kind of figures are commonly called Tropes, i.e., turns; because certain words are turned from their original signification to an other.[481]

Numerous departures from perfect simplicity of diction, occur in almost every kind of composition. They are mostly founded on some similitude or relation of things, which, by the power of imagination, is rendered conducive to ornament or illustration.

Page 1493

The principal figures of Rhetoric are sixteen; namely, Sim'-i-le, Met'-a-phor, Al'-le-gor-y, Me-ton'-y-my, Syn-ec'-do-che, Hy-per'-bo-le, Vis'-ion, A-pos'-tro-phe, Per-son'-i-fi-ca'-tion, Er-o-te'-sis, Ec-pho-ne'-sis, An-tith'-e-sis, Cli'-max, I'-ro-ny, A-poph'-a-sis, and On-o-ma-to-poe'-ia.

EXPLANATIONS.

I. A Simile is a simple and express comparison; and is generally introduced by like, as, or so: as, "Such a passion is like falling in love with a sparrow flying over your head; you have but one glimpse of her, and she is out of sight."—Colliers Antoninus.
 "Therefore they shall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away; as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney."—Hosea, xiii.

"At first, like thunder's distant tone,
 The rattling din came rolling on."—Hogg.

"Man, like the generous vine, supported lives;
 The strength he gains, is from th' embrace he gives."—Pope.

OBS.—Comparisons are sometimes made in a manner sufficiently intelligible, without any express term to point them out. In the following passage, we have a triple example of what seems the Simile, without the usual sign—without like, as, or so: "Away with all tampering with such a question! Away with all trifling with the man in fetters! *Give a hungry man a stone, and tell what beautiful houses are made of it;—give ice to a freezing man, and tell him of its good properties in hot weather;—throw a drowning man a dollar, as a mark of your good will;—*but do not mock the bondman in his misery, by giving him a Bible when he cannot read it."—FREDERICK DOUGLASS: Liberty Bell, 1848.

II. A Metaphor is a figure that expresses or suggests the resemblance of two objects by applying either the name, or some attribute, adjunct, or action, of the one, directly to the other; as,

1. "The LORD is my rock, and my fortress."—Psal., xviii 1.
2. "His eye was morning's brightest ray."—Hogg.
3. "An angler in the tides of fame."—Id., Q. W.
4. "Beside him sleeps the warrior's bow."—Langhorne.
5. "Wild fancies in his moody brain
Gambol'd unbridled and unbound."—Hogg, Q. W.

6. "Speechless, and fix'd in all the death of wo."—Thomson.

Page 1494

OBS.—A Metaphor is commonly understood [sic—KTH] to be only the tropical use of some single word, or short phrase; but there seem to be occasional instances of one sentence, or action, being used metaphorically to represent an other. The following extract from the London Examiner has several figurative expressions, which perhaps belong to this head: “In the present age, nearly all people are critics, even to the pen, and treat the gravest writers with a sort of taproom familiarity. If they are dissatisfied, they throw a short and spent cigar in the face of the offender; if they are pleased, they lift the candidate off his legs, and send him away with a hearty slap on the shoulder. Some of the shorter, when they are bent to mischief, dip a twig in the gutter, and drag it across our polished boots: on the contrary, when they are inclined to be gentle and generous, they leap boisterously upon our knees, and kiss us with bread-and-butter in their mouths.”—WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

III. An Allegory is a continued narration of fictitious events, designed to represent and illustrate important realities. Thus the Psalmist represents the Jewish nation under the symbol of a vine: “Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt: thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it. Thou preparedst room before it, and didst cause it to take deep root; and it filled the land. The hills were covered with the shadow of it, and the boughs thereof were like the goodly cedars.”—Psalms, lxxx, 8-10.

OBS.—The Allegory, agreeably to the foregoing definition of it, includes most of those similitudes which in the Scriptures are called parables; it includes also the better sort of fables. The term allegory is sometimes applied to a true history in which something else is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken. See an instance in Galatians, iv, 24. In the Scriptures, the term fable denotes an idle and groundless story: as, in 1 Timothy, iv, 7; and 2 Peter, i, 16. It is now commonly used in a better sense. “A fable may be defined to be an analogical narrative, intended to convey some moral lesson, in which irrational animals or objects are introduced as speaking.”—Philological Museum, Vol. i, p. 280.

IV. A Metonymy is a change of names between things related. It is founded, not on resemblance, but on some such relation as that of cause and effect, of progenitor and posterity, of subject and adjunct, of place and inhabitant, of container and thing contained, or of sign and thing signified: as, (1.) “God is our salvation,” i.e., Saviour. (2.) “Hear, O Israel,” i.e. O ye descendants of Israel. (3.) “He was the sigh of her secret soul,” i.e., the youth she loved. (4.) “They smote the city,” i.e., the citizens. (5.) “My son, give me thy heart,” i.e., affection. (6.) “The sceptre shall not depart from Judah,” i.e., kingly power. (7.) “They have Moses and the prophets,” i.e., their writings. See Luke, xvi, 29.

Page 1495

V. Synecdoche, (that is, Comprehension), is the naming of a part for the whole, or of the whole for a part; as, (1.) "This roof [i.e., house] protects you." (2.) "Now the year [i.e., summer] is beautiful." (3.) "A sail [i.e., a ship or vessel] passed at a distance." (4.) "Give us this day our daily bread;" i.e., food. (5.) "Because they have taken away my Lord, [i.e., the body of Jesus,] and I know not where they have laid him."—John. (6.) "The same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls;" i.e., persons.—Acts. (7.) "There went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world [i.e., the Roman empire] should be taxed."—Luke, ii, 1.

VI. Hyperbole is extravagant exaggeration, in which the imagination is indulged beyond the sobriety of truth; as, "My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins."—2 Chron., x, 10. "When I washed my steps with butter, and the rock poured me out rivers of oil."—Job, xxix, 6.

"The sky shrunk upward with unusual dread,
And trembling Tiber div'd beneath his bed."—Dryden.

VII. Vision, or Imagery, is a figure by which the speaker represents the objects of his imagination, as actually before his eyes, and present to his senses; as,

"I see the dagger-crest of Mar!
I see the Moray's silver star
Wave o'er the cloud of Saxon war,
That up the lake comes winding far!"—Scott, L. L., vi, 15.

VIII. Apostrophe is a turning from the regular course of the subject, into an animated address; as, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O Death! where is thy sting? O Grave! where is thy victory?"—1 Cor., xv, 55.

IX. Personification is a figure by which, in imagination, we ascribe intelligence and personality to unintelligent beings or abstract qualities; as,

1. "The Worm, aware of his intent,
Harangued him thus, right eloquent."—Cowper.
2. "Lo, steel-clad War his gorgeous standard rears!"—Rogers.
3. "Hark! Truth proclaims, thy triumphs cease!"—Idem.

X. Erotesis is a figure in which the speaker adopts the form of interrogation, not to express a doubt, but, in general, confidently to assert the reverse of what is asked; as, "Hast thou an arm like God? or canst thou thunder with a voice like him?"—Job, xl, 9. "He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall he not see?"—Psalms, xciv, 9.

XI. Ecphonesis is a pathetic exclamation, denoting some violent emotion of the mind; as, "O liberty!—O sound once delightful to every Roman ear!—O sacred privilege of Roman citizenship!—once sacred—now trampled upon."—Cicero. "And I said, O that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest."—Psalms, lv, 6.

Page 1496

XII. Antithesis is a placing of things in opposition, to heighten their effect by contrast; as, "I will talk of things heavenly, or things earthly; things moral, or things evangelical; things sacred, or things profane; things past, or things to come; things foreign, or things at home; things more essential, or things circumstantial; provided that all be done to our profit."—Bunyan, P. P., p. 90.

"Contrasted faults through all his manners reign;
Though poor, luxurious; though submissive, vain;
Though grave, yet trifling; zealous, yet untrue;
And e'en in penance, planning sins anew."—Goldsmith.

XIII. Climax is a figure in which the sense is made to advance by successive steps, to rise gradually to what is more and more important and interesting, or to descend to what is more and more minute and particular; as, "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity."—2 Peter, i, 5.

XIV. Irony is a figure in which the speaker sneeringly utters the direct reverse of what he intends shall be understood; as, "We have, to be sure, great reason to believe the modest man would not ask him for a debt, when he pursues his life."—Cicero. "No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you."—Job, xii, 2. "They must esteem learning very much, when they see its professors used with such little ceremony!"—Goldsmith's Essays, p. 150.

XV. Apophysis, or Paralipsis, [482] is a figure in which the speaker or writer pretends to omit what at the same time he really mentions; as, "I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it; albeit I do not say to thee, how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides."—Philemon, 19.

XVI. Onomatopoeia is the use of a word, phrase, or sentence, the sound of which resembles, or intentionally imitates, the sound of the thing signified or spoken of: as, "Of a knocking at the door, Rat a tat tat."—J. W. GIBBS: in Fowler's Gram., p. 334. "Ding-dong! ding-dong! Merry, merry, go the bells, Ding-dong! ding-dong!"—H. K. White. "Bow-wow n. The loud bark of a dog. Booth."—Worcester's Dict. This is often written separately; as, "Bow wow."—Fowler's Gram., p. 334. The imitation is better with three sounds: "Bow wow wow." The following verses have been said to exhibit this figure:

"But when loud surges lash the sounding shore,
The hoarse rough verse should like the torrent roar."
—Pope, on Crit., l. 369.

Page 1497

OBS.—The whole number of figures, which I have thought it needful to define and illustrate in this work, is only about thirty. These are the chief of what have sometimes been made a very long and minute catalogue. In the hands of some authors, Rhetoric is scarcely anything else than a detail of figures; the number of which, being made to include almost every possible form of expression, is, according to these authors, not less than two hundred and forty. Of their names, John Holmes gives, in his index, two hundred and fifty-three; and he has not all that might be quoted, though he has more than there are of the forms named, or the figures themselves. To find a learned name for every particular mode of expression, is not necessarily conducive to the right use of language. It is easy to see the inutility of such pedantry; and Butler has made it sufficiently ridiculous by this caricature:

“For all a rhetorician’s rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools.”—Hudibras, P. i, C. i, l. 90.

SECTION V.—EXAMPLES FOR PARSING.

PRAXIS XIV.—PROSODICAL.

In the Fourteenth Praxis, are exemplified the several Figures of Orthography, of Etymology, of Syntax, and of Rhetoric, which the parser may name and define; and by it the pupil may also be exercised in relation to the principles of Punctuation, Utterance, Analysis, or whatever else of Grammar, the examples contain.

LESSON I.—FIGURES OF ORTHOGRAPHY.

MIMESIS AND ARCHAISM.

“I ax’d you what you had to sell. I am fitting out a wessel for Wenice, loading her with various keinds of provisions, and wittualling her for a long woyage; and I want several undred weight of weal, wenison, &c., with plenty of inyons and winegar, for the preserwation of ealth.”—Columbian Orator, p. 292.

“God bless you, and lie still quiet (says I) a bit longer, for my shister’s afraid of ghosts, and would die on the spot with the fright, was she to see you come to life all on a sudden this way without the least preparation.”—Edgeworth’s Castle Rackrent, p. 143.

“None [else are] so desperately evill, as they that may bee good and will not: or have beene good and are not.”—Rev. John Rogers, 1620. “A Carpenter finds his work as hee left it, but a Minister shall find his sett back. You need preach continually.”—Id.

“Here whilom ligg’d th’ Esopus of his age,
But call’d by Fame, in soul ypricked deep.”—Thomson.

"It was a fountain of Nepenthe rare, Whence, as Dan Homer sings, huge pleasaunce grew."—Id.

LESSON II.—FIGURES OF ETYMOLOGY.

Page 1498

APHAERESIS, PROSTHESIS, SYNCOPE, APOCOPE, PARAGOGUE, DIAERESIS, SYNAERESIS, AND TMESIS.

"Bend 'gainst the steepy hill thy breast,
Burst down like torrent from its crest."—Scott.

"'Tis mine to teach th' inactive hand to reap Kind nature's bounties, o'er the globe diffus'd."—Dyer.

"Alas! alas! how impotently true
Th' aerial pencil forms the scene anew."—Cawthorne.

"Here a deformed monster joy'd to won,
Which on fell rancour ever was ybent."—Lloyd.

"Withouten trump was proclamation made."—Thomson.

"The gentle knight, who saw their rueful case, Let fall adown his silver beard some tears. 'Certes,' quoth he, 'it is not e'en in grace, T' undo the past and eke your broken years."—Id.

"Vain tamp'ring has but foster'd his disease;
'Tis desp'rate, and he sleeps the sleep of death."—Cowper.

"'I have a pain upon my forehead here'—
'Why that's with watching; 'twill away again.'"—Shakspeare.

"I'll to the woods, among the happier brutes;
Come, let's away; hark! the shrill horn resounds."—Smith.

"What prayer and supplication soever be made."—Bible. "By the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you ward."—lb.

LESSON III.—FIGURES OF SYNTAX.

FIGURE I.—ELLIPSIS.

"And now he faintly kens the bounding fawn,
And [—] villager [—] abroad at early toil."—Beattie.

"The cottage curs at [—] early pilgrim bark."—Id.

"'Tis granted, and no plainer truth appears,
Our most important [—] are our earliest years."—Cowper.

"To earn her aid, with fix'd and anxious eye,
He looks on nature's [—] and on fortune's course."—Akenside.

"For longer in that paradise to dwell,
The law [—] I gave to nature him forbids."—Milton.

"So little mercy shows [—] who needs so much."—Cowper.

"Bliss is the same [—] in subject, as [—] in king;
In [—] who obtain defence, and [—] who defend."—Pope.

"Man made for kings! those optics are but dim
That tell you so—say rather, they [—] for him."—Cowper.

"Man may dismiss compassion from his heart,
But God will never [-----]."—Id.

"Vigour [—] from toil, from trouble patience grows."—Beattie.

"Where now the rill melodious, [—] pure, and cool,
And meads, with life, and mirth, and beauty crown'd?"—Id.

Page 1499

“How dead the vegetable kingdom lies!
How dumb the tuneful [-----]!”--Thomson.

“Self-love and Reason to one end aspire,
Pain [—] their aversion, pleasure [—] their desire;
But greedy that its object would devour,
This [—] taste the honey, and not wound the flower.”—Pope.

LESSON IV.—FIGURES OF SYNTAX.

FIGURE II.—PLEONASM.

“According to their deeds, accordingly he will repay, fury to his adversaries, recompense to his enemies; to the islands he will repay recompense.”—Isaiah, lix, 18. “Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night.”—Song of Sol., v, 2. “Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke: turn thou me, and I shall be turned; for thou art the Lord my God.”—Jer., xxxi, 18. “Consider the lilies of the field how they grow.”—Matt., vi, 28. “He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.”—2 Cor., x, 17.

“He too is witness, noblest of the train
That wait on man, the flight-performing horse.”—Cowper.

FIGURE III.—SYLLEPSIS.

“‘Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas:’ which is, by interpretation a stone.”—John, i, 42. “Thus saith the Lord of hosts, ‘Behold, I will break the bow of Elam, the chief of their might.’”—Jer., xlix, 35. “Behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling-stone and rock of offence: and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.”—Rom., ix, 33.

“Thus Conscience pleads her cause within the breast,
Though long rebell’d against, not yet suppressed.”—Cowper.

“Knowledge is proud that he has learn’d so much;
Wisdom is humble that he knows no more.”—Id.

“For those the race of Israel oft forsook Their living strength, and unfrequented left His righteous altar, bowing lowly down To bestial gods.”—Milton, Paradise Lost, B. i, l. 432.

LESSON V.—FIGURES OF SYNTAX.

FIGURE IV.—ENALLAGE.

“Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemned to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold.”—Shakspeare.

“Come, Philomelus; let us instant go,
O’erturn his bow’rs, and lay his castle low.”—Thomson.

“Then palaces shall rise; the joyful son
Shall finish what the short-liv’d sire begun”—Pope.

“Such was that temple built by Solomon,
Than whom none richer reign’d o’er Israel.”—Author.

Page 1500

"He spoke: with fatal eagerness we burn,
And quit the shores, undestin'd to return."—Day.

"Still as he pass'd, the nations he sublimes."—Thomson.

"Sometimes, with early morn, he mounted gay."—Id.

"'I've lost a day'—the prince who nobly cried,
Had been an emperor without his crown."—Young.

FIGURE V.—HYPERBATON.

"Such resting found the sole of unblest feet."—Milton.

"Yet, though successful, will the toil delight."—Thomson.

"Where, 'midst the changeful scen'ry ever new,
Fancy a thousand wondrous forms describes."—Beattie.

"Yet so much bounty is in God, such grace,
That who advance his glory, not their own,
Them he himself to glory will advance."—Milton.

"No quick reply to dubious questions make;
Suspense and caution still prevent mistake."—Denham.

LESSON VI.—FIGURES OF RHETORIC.

FIGURE I.—SIMILE.

"Human greatness is short and transitory, as the odour of incense in the fire."—Dr. Johnson. "Terrestrial happiness is of short continuance: the brightness of the flame is wasting its fuel, the fragrant flower is passing away in its own odours."—Id. "Thy nod is as the earthquake that shakes the mountains; and thy smile, as the dawn of the vernal day."—Id.

"Plants rais'd with tenderness are seldom strong; Man's coltish disposition asks the thong; And, without discipline, the fav'rite child, Like a neglected forester, runs wild."—Cowper.

"As turns a flock of geese, and, on the green,
Poke out their foolish necks in awkward spleen,
(Ridiculous in rage!) to hiss, not bite,
So war their quills, when sons of dullness write."—Young.

“Who can unpitying see the flowery race,
Shed by the morn, their new-flush’d bloom resign,
Before th’ unbating beam? So fade the fair,
When fevers revel through their azure veins.”—Thomson.

FIGURE II.—METAPHOR.

“Cathmon, thy name is a pleasant gale.”—Ossian. “Rolled into himself he flew, wide on the bosom of winds. The old oak felt his departure, and shook its whistling head.”—Id. “Carazan gradually lost the inclination to do good, as he acquired the power; as the hand of time scattered snow upon his head, the freeziny influence [sic—KTH] extended to his bosom.”—Hawkesworth. “The sun grew weary of gilding the palaces of Morad; the clouds of sorrow gathered round his head; and the tempest of hatred roared about his dwelling.”—Dr. Johnson.

Page 1501

LESSON VII.—FIGURES OF RHETORIC.

FIGURE III.—ALLEGORY.

“But what think ye? A certain man had two sons; and he came to the first, and said, ‘Son, go work to-day in my vineyard.’ He answered and said, ‘I will not;’ but afterward he repented, and went. And he came to the second, and said likewise. And he answered and said, ‘I go, sir;’ and went not. Whether of them twain did the will of his father? They say unto him, ‘The first.’”—Matt., xxi, 28-31.

FIGURE IV.—METONYMY.

“Swifter than a whirlwind, flies the leaden death.”—Hervey. “‘Be all the dead forgot,’ said Foldath’s bursting wrath. ‘Did not I fail in the field?’”—Ossian.

“Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke.”—Gray.

“Firm in his love, resistless in his hate,
His arm is conquest, and his frown is fate.”—Day.

“At length the world, renew’d by calm repose,
Was strong for toil; the dappled morn arose.”—Parnell.

“What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole’s dim curtain and the lynx’s beam!
Of hearing, from the life that fills the flood,
To that which warbles through the vernal wood!”—Pope.

FIGURE V.—SYNECDOCHE.

“‘Twas then his threshold first receiv’d a guest.”—Parnell.

“For yet by swains alone the world he knew,
Whose feet came wand’ring o’er the nightly dew.”—Id.

“Flush’d by the spirit of the genial year,
Now from the virgin’s cheek a fresher bloom
Shoots, less and less, the live carnation round.”—Thomson.

LESSON VIII.—FIGURES OF RHETORIC.

FIGURE VI.—HYPERBOLE.

"I saw their chief, tall as a rock of ice; his spear, the blasted fir; his shield the rising moon; he sat on the shore, like a cloud of mist on the hill."—Ossian.

"At which the universal host up sent
A shout, that tore Hell's concave, and beyond
Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night."—Milton.

"Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood
Clean from my hand? No; this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine,
Making the green one red!"—Shakspeare.

FIGURE VII.—VISION.

"How mighty is their defence who reverently trust in the arm of God! How powerfully do they contend who fight with lawful weapons! Hark! 'Tis the voice of eloquence, pouring forth the living energies of the soul; pleading, with generous indignation and holy emotion, the cause of injured humanity against lawless might, and reading the awful destiny that awaits the oppressor!—I see the stern countenance of despotism overawed! I see the eye fallen, that kindled the elements of war! I see the brow relaxed, that scowled defiance at hostile thousands! I see the knees tremble, that trod with firmness the embattled field! Fear has entered that heart which ambition had betrayed into violence! The tyrant feels himself a man, and subject to the weakness of humanity!—Behold! and tell me, is that power contemptible which can thus find access to the sternest hearts?”—Author.

Page 1502

FIGURE VIII.—APOSTROPHE.

“Yet still they breathe destruction, still go on, Inhumanly ingenious to find out New pains for life, new terrors for the grave; Artificers of death! Still monarchs dream Of universal empire growing up From universal ruin. Blast the design, Great God of Hosts! nor let thy creatures fall Unpitied victims at Ambition’s shrine.”—Porteus.

LESSON IX.—FIGURES OF RHETORIC.

FIGURE IX.—PERSONIFICATION.

“Hail, sacred Polity, by Freedom rear’d!
Hail, sacred Freedom, when by Law restrain’d!
Without you, what were man? A grov’ling herd,
In darkness, wretchedness, and want, enchain’d.”—Beattie.

“Let cheerful Mem’ry, from her purest cells,
Lead forth a godly train of Virtues fair,
Cherish’d in early youth, now paying back
With tenfold usury the pious care.”—Porteus.

FIGURE X.—EROTESIS.

“He that chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct? He that teacheth man knowledge, shall not he know?”—Psalms, xciv, 10. “Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil.”—Jeremiah, xiii, 23.

FIGURE XI.—ECPHONESIS. “O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people! O that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of way-faring men, that I might leave my people, and go from them!”—Jeremiah, ix, 1.

FIGURE XII.—ANTITHESIS.

“On this side, modesty is engaged; on that, impudence: on this, chastity; on that, lewdness: on this, integrity; on that, fraud: on this, piety; on that, profaneness: on this, constancy; on that, fickleness: on this, honour; on that, baseness: on this, moderation; on that, unbridled passion.”—Cicero.

“She, from the rending earth, and bursting skies,
Saw gods descend, and fiends infernal rise;
Here fix’d the dreadful, there the blest abodes;
Fear made her devils, and weak hope her gods.”—Pope.

LESSON X.—FIGURES OF RHETORIC.

FIGURE XIII.—CLIMAX.

“Virtuous actions are necessarily approved by the awakened conscience; and when they are approved, they are commended to practice; and when they are practised, they become easy; and when they become easy, they afford pleasure; and when they afford pleasure, they are done frequently; and when they are done frequently, they are confirmed by habit: and confirmed habit is a kind of second nature.”—Inst., p. 246.

Page 1503

“Weep all of every name: begin the wo,
Ye woods, and tell it to the doleful winds;
And doleful winds, wail to the howling hills;
And howling hills, mourn to the dismal vales;
And dismal vales, sigh to the sorrowing brooks;
And sorrowing brooks, weep to the weeping stream;
And weeping stream, awake the groaning deep;
And let the instrument take up the song,
Responsive to the voice—harmonious wo!”—Pollok, B. vi, l. 115.

FIGURE XIV.—IRONY.

“And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, ‘Cry aloud; for he is a god: either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in [on] a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked!’ “—1 Kings, xviii, 27.

“After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years; and ye shall know my breach of promise.”—Numbers, xiv, 34.

“Some lead a life unblamable and just,
Their own dear virtue their unshaken trust;
They never sin—or if (as all offend)
Some trivial slips their daily walk attend,
The poor are near at hand, the charge is small,
A slight gratuity atones for all.”—Cowper.

FIGURE XV.—APOPHASIS, OR PARALIPSIS.

I say nothing of the notorious profligacy of his character; nothing of the reckless extravagance with which he has wasted an ample fortune; nothing of the disgusting intemperance which has sometimes caused him to reel in our streets;—but I aver that he has not been faithful to our interests,—has not exhibited either probity or ability in the important office which he holds.

FIGURE XVI.—ONOMATOPOEIA.

[Fist][The following lines, from Swift’s Poems, satirically mimick the imitative music of a violin.]

“Now slowly move your fiddle-stick;
Now, tantan, tantantivi, quick;
Now trembling, shivering, quivering, quaking,
Set hoping hearts of Lovers aching.”

“Now sweep, sweep the deep.
See Celia, Celia dies,
While true Lovers’ eyes
Weeping sleep, Sleeping weep,
Weeping sleep, Bo-peep, bo-peep.”

CHAPTER IV.—VERSIFICATION.

Versification is the forming of that species of literary composition which is called verse; that is, poetry, or poetic numbers.

SECTION I.—OF VERSE.

Verse, in opposition to prose, is language arranged into metrical lines of some determinate length and rhythm—language so ordered as to produce harmony, by a due succession of poetic feet, or of syllables differing in quantity or stress.

DEFINITIONS AND PRINCIPLES.

The rhythm of verse is its relation of quantities; the modulation of its numbers; or, the kind of metre, measure, or movement, of which it consists, or by which it is particularly distinguished.

Page 1504

The quantity of a syllable, as commonly explained, is the relative portion of time occupied in uttering it. In poetry, every syllable is considered to be either long or short. A long syllable is usually reckoned to be equal to two short ones.

In the construction of English verse, long quantity coincides always with the primary accent, generally also with the secondary, as well as with emphasis; and short quantity, as reckoned by the poets, is found only in unaccented syllables, and unemphatical monosyllabic words.[483]

The quantity of a syllable, whether long or short, does not depend on what is called the long or the short sound of a vowel or diphthong, or on a supposed distinction of accent as affecting vowels in some cases and consonants in others, but principally on the degree of energy or loudness with which the syllable is uttered, whereby a greater or less portion of time is employed.

The open vowel sounds, which are commonly but not very accurately termed long, are those which are the most easily protracted, yet they often occur in the shortest and feeblest syllables; while, on the other hand, no vowel sound, that occurs under the usual stress of accent or of emphasis, is either so short in its own nature, or is so “quickly joined to the succeeding letter,” that the syllable is not one of long quantity.

Most monosyllables, in English, are variable in quantity, and may be made either long or short, as strong or weak sounds suit the sense and rhythm; but words of greater length are, for the most part, fixed, their accented syllables being always long, and a syllable immediately before or after the accent almost always short.

One of the most obvious distinctions in poetry, is that of rhyme and blank verse. Rhyme is a similarity of sound, combined with a difference: occurring usually between the last syllables of different lines, but sometimes at other intervals; and so ordered that the rhyming syllables begin differently and end alike. Blank verse is verse without rhyme.

The principal rhyming syllables are almost always long. Double rhyme adds one short syllable; triple rhyme, two. Such syllables are redundant in iambic and anapestic verses; in lines of any other sort, they are generally, if not always, included in the measure.

A Stanza is a combination of several verses, or lines, which, taken together, make a regular division of a poem. It is the common practice of good versifiers, to form all stanzas of the same poem after one model. The possible variety of stanzas is infinite; and the actual variety met with in print is far too great for detail.

OBSERVATIONS.

Page 1505

OBS. 1.—Verse, in the broadest acceptation of the term, is poetry, or metrical language, in general. This, to the eye, is usually distinguished from prose by the manner in which it is written and printed. For, in very many instances, if this were not the case, the reader would be puzzled to discern the difference. The division of poetry into its peculiar lines, is therefore not a mere accident. The word verse, from the Latin versus, literally signifies a turning. Each full line of metre is accordingly called a verse; because, when its measure is complete, the writer turns to place another under it. A verse, then, in the primary sense of the word with us, is, “A line consisting of a certain succession of sounds, and number of syllables.”—Johnson, Walker, Todd, Bottes, and others. Or, according to Webster, it is, “A poetic line, consisting of a certain number of long and short syllables, disposed according to the rules of the species of poetry which the author intends to compose.”—See American Dict., 8vo.

OBS. 2.—If to settle the theory of English verse on true and consistent principles, is as difficult a matter, as the manifold contrarieties of doctrine among our prosodists would indicate, there can be no great hope of any scheme entirely satisfactory to the intelligent examiner. The very elements of the subject are much perplexed by the incompatible dogmas of authors deemed skillful to elucidate it. It will scarcely be thought a hard matter to distinguish true verse from prose, yet is it not well agreed, wherein the difference consists: what the generality regard as the most essential elements or characteristics of the former, some respectable authors dismiss entirely from their definitions of both verse and versification. The existence of quantity in our language; the dependence of our rhythms on the division of syllables into long and short; the concurrence of our accent, (except in some rare and questionable instances,) with long quantity only; the constant effect of emphasis to lengthen quantity; the limitation of quantity to mere duration of sound; the doctrine that quantity pertains to all syllables as such, and not merely to vowel sounds; the recognition of the same general principles of syllabication in poetry as in prose; the supposition that accent pertains not to certain letters in particular, but to certain syllables as such; the limitation of accent to stress, or percussion, only; the conversion of short syllables into long, and long into short, by a change of accent; our frequent formation of long syllables with what are called short vowels; our more frequent formation of short syllables with what are called long or open vowels; the necessity of some order in the succession of feet or syllables to form a rhythm; the need of framing each line to correspond with some other line or lines in length; the propriety of always making each line susceptible of scansion by itself: all these points, so essential to a true explanation of the nature of English verse, though, for the most part, well maintained by some prosodists, are nevertheless denied by some, so that opposite opinions may be cited concerning them all. I would not suggest that all or any of these points are thereby made doubtful; for there may be opposite judgements in a dozen cases, and yet concurrence enough (if concurrence can do it) to establish them every one.

Page 1506

OBS. 3.—An ingenious poet and prosodist now living,[484] Edgar Allan Poe, (to whom I owe a word or two of reply,) in his “Notes upon English Verse,” with great self-complacency, represents, that, “While much has been written upon the structure of the Greek and Latin rhythms, comparatively nothing has been done as regards the English;” that, “It may be said, indeed, we are without a treatise upon our own versification;” that “The very best” definition of versification[485] to be found in any of “our ordinary treatises on the topic,” has “not a single point which does not involve an error;” that, “A leading deft in each of these treatises is the confining of the subject to mere versification, while metre, or rhythm, in general, is the real question at issue;” that, “Versification is not the art, but the act—of making verses;” that, “A correspondence in the length of lines is by no means essential;” that “Harmony” produced “by the regular alternation of syllables differing in quantity,” does not include “melody;” that “A regular alternation, as described, forms no part of the principle of metre:” that “There is no necessity of any regularity in the succession of feet;” that, “By consequence,” he ventures to “dispute the essentiality of any alternation, regular or irregular, of syllables long and short:” that, “For anything more intelligible or more satisfactory than this definition [i. e., G. Brown’s former definition of versification,] we shall look in vain in any published treatise upon the subject;” that, “So general and so total a failure can be referred only to some radical misconception;” that, “The word verse is derived (through versus from the Latin verto, I turn,) and * * * it can be nothing but this derivation, which has led to the error of our writers upon prosody;” that, “It is this which has seduced them into regarding the line itself—the versus, or turning—as an essential, or principle of metre;” that, “Hence the term versification has been employed as sufficiently general, or inclusive, for treatises upon rhythm in general;” that, “Hence, also, [comes] the precise catalogue of a few varieties of English lines, when these varieties are, in fact, almost without limit;” that, “I,” the aforesaid

Page 1507

Edgar Allan Poe, “shall dismiss entirely, from the consideration of the principle of rhythm, the idea of versification, or the construction of verse;” that, “In so doing, we shall avoid a world of confusion;” that, “Verse is, indeed, an afterthought, or an embellishment, or an improvement, rather than an element of rhythm;” that, “This fact has induced the easy admission, into the realms of Poesy, of such works as the ‘Telemaque’ of Fenelon;” because, forsooth, “In the elaborate modulation of their sentences, THEY FULFIL THE IDEA OF METRE.”—The Pioneer, a Literary and Critical Magazine (Boston, March, 1843,) Vol. I, p. 102 to 105.

OBS. 4.—“Holding these things in view,” continues this sharp connoisseur, “the prosodist who rightly examines that which constitutes the external, or most immediately recognisable, form of Poetry, will commence with the definition of Rhythm. Now rhythm, from the Greek [Greek: arithmos], number, is a term which, in its present application, very nearly conveys its own idea. No more proper word could be employed to present the conception intended; for rhythm, in prosody, is, in its last analysis, identical with time in music. For this reason,” says he, “I have used, throughout this article, as synonymous with rhythm, the word metre from [Greek: metron], measure. Either the one or the other may be defined as the arrangement of words into two or more consecutive, equal, pulsations of time. These pulsations are feet. Two feet, at least, are requisite to constitute a rhythm; just as, in mathematics, two units are necessary to form [a] number. [486] The syllables of which the foot consists, when the foot is not a syllable in itself, are subdivisions of the pulsations. No equality is demanded in these subdivisions. It is only required that, so far as regards two consecutive feet at least, the sum of the times of the syllables in one, shall be equal to the sum of the times of the syllables in the other. Beyond two pulsations there is no necessity for equality of time. All beyond is arbitrary or conventional. A third or fourth pulsation may embody half, or double, or any proportion of the time occupied in the two first. Rhythm being thus understood, the prosodist should proceed to define versification as the making of verses, and verse as the arbitrary or conventional isolation of rhythm into masses of greater or less extent.”—Ib., p. 105.

Page 1508

OBS. 5.—No marvel that all usual conceptions and definitions of rhythm, of versification, and of verse, should be found dissatisfactory to the critic whose idea of metre is fulfilled by the pompous prose of Fenelon's Telemaque. No right or real examination of this matter can ever make the most immediately recognizable form of poetry to be any thing else than the form of verse—the form of writing in specific lines, ordered by number and chime of syllables, and not squared by gage of the composing-stick. And as to the derivation and primitive signification of rhythm, it is plain that in the extract above, both are misrepresented. The etymology there given is a gross error; for, “the Greek [Greek: arithmos], number,” would make, in English, not rhythm, but arithm, as in arithmetic. Between the two combinations, there is the palpable difference of three or four letters in either six; for neither of these forms can be varied to the other, but by dropping one letter, and adding an other, and changing a third, and moving a fourth. Rhythm is derived, not thence, but from the Greek [Greek: rhythmos]; which, according to the lexicons, is a primitive word, and means, rhythmus, rhythm, concinnity, modulation, measured tune, or regular flow, and not “number.”

OBS. 6.—Rhythm, of course, like every other word not misapplied, “conveys its own idea,” and that, not qualifiedly, or “very nearly,” but exactly. That this idea, however, was originally that of arithmetical number, or is nearly so now, is about as fanciful a notion, as the happy suggestion added above, that rhythm in lieu of arithm or number, is the fittest of words, because “rhythm in prosody is time in music!” Without dispute, it is important to the prosodist, and also to the poet or versifier, to have as accurate an idea as possible of the import of this common term, though it is observable that many of our grammarians make little or no use of it. That it has some relation to numbers, is undeniable. But what is it? Poetic numbers, and numbers in arithmetic, and numbers in grammar, are three totally different sorts of things. Rhythm is related only to the first. Of the signification of this word, a recent expositor gives the following brief explanation: “RHYTHM, n. Metre; verse; numbers. Proportion applied to any motion whatever.”—Bolles's Dictionary, 8vo. To this definition, Worcester prefixes the following: “The consonance of measure and time in poetry, prose composition, and music;—also in dancing.”—Universal and Critical Dict. In verse, the proportion which forms rhythm—that is, the chime of quantities—is applied to the sounds of syllables. Sounds, however, may be considered as a species of motion, especially those which are rhythmical or musical.[487]

Page 1509

It seems more strictly correct, to regard rhythm as a property of poetic numbers, than to identify it with them. It is their proportion or modulation, rather than the numbers themselves. According to Dr. Webster, "RHYTHM, or RHYTHMUS, in music [is] variety in the movement as to quickness or slowness, or length and shortness of the notes; or rather the proportion which the parts of the motion have to each other."—American Dict. The "last analysis" of rhythm can be nothing else than the reduction of it to its least parts. And if, in this reduction, it is "identical with time," then it is here the same thing as quantity, whether prosodical or musical; for, "The time of a note, or syllable, is called quantity. The time of a rest is also called quantity; because rests, as well as notes are a constituent of rhythm."—Comstock's Elocution, p. 64. But rhythm is, in fact, neither time nor quantity; for the analysis which would make it such, destroys the relation in which the thing consists.

SECTION II.—OF ACCENT AND QUANTITY.

Accent and Quantity have already been briefly explained in the second chapter of Prosody, as items coming under the head of Pronunciation. What we have to say of them here, will be thrown into the form of critical observations; in the progress of which, many quotations from other writers on these subjects, will be presented, showing what has been most popularly taught.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Accent and quantity are distinct things;[488] the former being the stress, force, loudness, or percussion of voice, that distinguishes certain syllables from others; and the latter, the time, distinguished as long or short, in which a syllable is uttered. But, as the great sounds which we utter, naturally take more time than the small ones, there is a necessary connexion between quantity and accent in English,—a connexion which is sometimes expounded as being the mere relation of cause and effect; nor is it in fact much different from that. "As no utterance can be agreeable to the ear, which is void of proportion; and as all quantity, or proportion of time in utterance, depends upon a due observation of the accent; it is a matter of absolute necessity to all, who would arrive at a good and graceful delivery, to be master of that point. Nor is the use of accent in our language confined to quantity alone; but it is also the chief mark by which words are distinguished from mere syllables. Or rather I may say, it is the very essence of words, which without that, would be only so many collections of syllables."—Sheridan's Lectures on Elocution, p. 61. "As no utterance which is void of proportion, can be agreeable to the ear; and as quantity, or proportion of time in utterance, greatly depends on a due attention to the accent; it is absolutely necessary for every person, who would attain a just and pleasing delivery, to be master of that point.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 241; 12mo, 194.

Page 1510

OBS. 2.—In the first observation on Prosody, at page 770, and in its marginal notes, was reference made to the fact, that the nature and principles of accent and quantity are involved in difficulty, by reason of the different views of authors concerning them. To this source of embarrassment, it seems necessary here again to advert; because it is upon the distinction of syllables in respect to quantity, or accent, or both, that every system of versification, except his who merely counts, is based. And further, it is not only requisite that the principle of distinction which we adopt should be clearly made known, but also proper to consider which of these three modes is the best or most popular foundation for a theory of versification. Whether or wherein the accent and quantity of the ancient languages, Latin and Greek, differed from those of our present English, we need not now inquire. From the definitions which the learned lexicographers Littleton and Ainsworth give to prosodia, prosody, it would seem that, with them, “the art of accenting” was nothing else than the art of giving to syllables their right quantity, “whether long or short.” And some have charged it as a glaring error, long prevalent among English grammarians, and still a fruitful source of disputes, to confound accent with quantity in our language.[489] This charge, however, there is reason to believe, is sometimes, if not in most cases, made on grounds rather fanciful than real; for some have evidently mistaken the notion of concurrence or coincidence for that of identity. But, to affirm that the stress which we call accent, coincides always and only with long quantity, does not necessarily make accent and quantity to be one and the same thing. The greater force or loudness which causes the accented syllable to occupy more time than any other, is in itself something different from time. Besides, quantity is divisible,—being either long or short: these two species of it are acknowledged on all sides, and some few prosodists will have a third, which they call “common.” [490] But, of our English accent, the word being taken in its usual acceptation, no such division is ever, with any propriety, made; for even the stress which we call secondary accent, pertains to long syllables rather than to short ones; and the mere absence of stress, which produces short quantity, we do not call accent.[491]

OBS. 3.—The impropriety of affirming quantity to be the same as accent, when its most frequent species occurs only in the absence of accent, must be obvious to every body; and those writers who anywhere suggest this identity, must either have written absurdly, or have taken accent in some sense which includes the sounds of our unaccented syllables. The word sometimes means, “The modulation of the voice in speaking.”—Worcester’s Dict., w. Accent. In this sense, the lighter as well as the more impressive sounds are included; but still, whether both together, considered as accents, can be reckoned the same as long and short quantities, is questionable. Some say, they cannot; and insist that they are yet as different, as the variable tones of a trumpet, which swell and fall, are different from the merely loud and soft notes of the monotonous drum. This illustration of the “easy Distinction betwixt Quantity and Accent” is cited with commendation, in Brightland’s Grammar, on page 157th;[492] the author of which grammar, seems to have understood Accent, or Accents, to be the same as Inflections—though these are still unlike to quantities, if he did so. (See an explanation of Inflections in Chap. II, Sec. iii, Art. 3, above.) His exposition is this: “Accent is the rising and falling of the Voice, above or under its usual Tone. There are three Sorts of Accents, an Acute, a Grave, and an Inflex, which is also call’d a Circumflex. The Acute, or Sharp, naturally raises the Voice; and the Grave, or Base, as naturally falls it. The Circumflex is a kind of Undulation, or Waving of the Voice.”—Brightland’s Gram., Seventh Ed., Lond., 1746, p. 156.

Page 1511

OBS. 4.—Dr. Johnson, whose great authority could not fail to carry some others with him, too evidently identifies accent with quantity, at the commencement of his Prosody. “PRONUNCIATION is just,” says he, “when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.”—Johnson’s Gram., before Dict., 4to, p. 13; John Burn’s Gram., p. 240; Jones’s Prosodial Gram., before Dict., p. 10. Now our most common notion of accent—the sole notion with many—and that which the accentuation of Johnson himself everywhere inculcates—is, that it belongs not to “every syllable,” but only to some particular syllables, being either “a stress of voice on a certain syllable,” or a small mark to denote such stress.—See Scott’s Dict., or Worcester’s. But Dr. Johnson, in the passage above, must have understood the word accent agreeably to his own imperfect definition of it; to wit, as “the sound given to the syllable pronounced.”—Joh. Dict. An unaccented syllable must have been to him a syllable unpronounced. In short he does not appear to have recognized any syllables as being unaccented. The word unaccented had no place in his lexicography, nor could have any without inconsistency. [sic—KTH] It was unaptly added to his text, after sixty years, by one of his amenders, Todd or Chalmers; who still blindly neglected to amend his definition of accent. In these particulars, Walker’s dictionaries exhibit the same deficiencies as Johnson's; and yet no author has more frequently used the words accent and unaccented, than did Walker.[493] Mason's Supplement, first published in 1801, must have suggested to the revisers of Johnson the addition of the latter term, as appears by the authority cited for it: "UNA'CCENTED, adj. Not accented. 'It being enough to make a syllable long, if it be accented, and short, if it be unaccented.' Harris's Philological Inquiries."—Mason's Sup.

Page 1512

OBS. 5—This doctrine of Harris's, that long quantity accompanies the accent, and unaccented syllables are short, is far from confounding or identifying accent with quantity, as has already been shown; and, though it plainly contradicts some of the elementary teaching of Johnson, Sheridan, Walker, Murray, Webster, Latham, Fowler, and others, in regard to the length or shortness of certain syllables, it has been clearly maintained by many excellent authors, so that no opposite theory is better supported by authority. On this point, our language stands not alone; for the accent controls quantity in some others.[494] G H. Noehden, a writer of uncommon ability, in his German Grammar for Englishmen, defines accent to be, as we see it is in English, "that stress which marks a particular syllable in speaking;" and recognizing, as we do, both a full accent and a partial one, or "demi-accent," presents the syllables of his language as being of three conditions: the "accented," which "cannot be used otherwise than as long;" the "half-accented" which "must be regarded as ambiguous, or common;" and the "accentless," which "are in their nature short."—See Noehden's Gram., p. 87. His middle class, however, our prosodists in general very properly dispense with. In Fiske's History of Greek Literature, which is among the additions to the Manual of Classical Literature from the German of Eschenburg, are the following passages: "The tone [i.e. accent] in Greek is placed upon short syllables as well as long; in German, it accompanies regularly only long syllables."—"In giving an accent to a syllable in an English word we thereby render it a long syllable, whatever may be the sound given to its vowel, and in whatever way the syllable may be composed; so that as above stated in relation to the German, an English accent, or stress in pronunciation, accompanies only a long syllable."—Manual of Class. Lit., p. 437. With these extracts, accords the doctrine of some of the ablest of our English grammarians. "In the English Pronunciation," says William Ward, "there is a certain Stress of the Voice laid on some one syllable at least, of every Word of two or more Syllables; and that Syllable on which the Stress is laid may be considered long. Our Grammarians have agreed to consider this Stress of the Voice as the Accent in English; and therefore the Accent and long Quantity coincide in our Language."—Ward's Practical Gram., p. 155. As to the vowel sounds, with the quantity of which many prosodists have greatly puzzled both themselves and their readers, this writer says, "they may be made as long, or as short, as the Speaker pleases."—Ib., p. 4.

Page 1513

OBS. 6.—From the absurd and contradictory nature of many of the principles usually laid down by our grammarians, for the discrimination of long quantity and short, it is quite apparent, that but very few of them have well understood either the distinction itself or their own rules concerning it. Take Fisher for an example. In Fisher's Practical Grammar, first published in London in 1753,—a work not unsuccessful, since Wells quotes the "28th edition" as appearing in 1795, and this was not the last—we find, in the first place, the vowel sounds distinguished as long or short thus: "Q. How many Sounds has a Vowel? A. Two in general, viz. 1. A LONG SOUND, When the Syllable ends with a Vowel, either in Monosyllables, or in Words of more Syllables; as, t=ake, w=e, =l, g=o, n=il; or, as, N=ature, N=ero, N=itre, N=ovice, N=uisance. 2. A SHORT SOUND, When the Syllable ends with a Consonant, either in Monosyllables, or others; as H~at, h~er, b~it, r~ob, T~un; or, as B~arber, b~itten, B~utton."—See p. 5. To this rule, the author makes needless exceptions of all such words as balance and banish, wherein a single consonant between two vowels goes to the former; because, like Johnson, Murray, and most of our old grammarians, he divides on the vowel; falsely calls the accented syllable short; and imagines the consonant to be heard twice, or to have "a double Accent." On page 35th, he tells us that, "Long and short Vowels, and long and short Syllables, are synonymous [—synonymous, from [Greek: synonymos]—] Terms;" and so indeed have they been most erroneously considered by sundry subsequent writers; and the consequence is, that all who judge by their criteria, mistake the poetic quantity, or prosodical value, of perhaps one half the syllables in the language. Let each syllable be reckoned long that "ends with a Vowel," and each short that "ends with a Consonant," and the decision will probably be oftener wrong than right; for more syllables end with consonants than with vowels, and of the latter class a majority are without stress and therefore short. Thus the foregoing principle, contrary to the universal practice of the poets, determines many accented syllables to be "short;" as the first in "barber, bitten, button, balance, banish;"—and many unaccented ones to be "long;" as the last in sofa, specie, noble, metre, sorrow, daisy, valley, nature, native; or the first in around, before, delay, divide, remove, seclude, obey, cocoon, presume, propose, and other words innumerable.

OBS. 7.—Fisher's conceptions of accent and quantity, as constituting prosody, were much truer to the original and etymological sense of the words, than to any just or useful view of English versification: in short, this latter subject was not even mentioned by him; for prosody, in his scheme, was nothing but the right pronunciation of words, or what we now call orthoepy. This part of his Grammar commences with the following questions and answers:

Page 1514

“Q. What is the Meaning of the Word PROSODY? A. It is a Word borrowed from the Greek; which, in Latin, is rendered Accentus, and in English Accent. “Q. What do you mean by Accent? A. Accent originally signified a Modulation of the Voice, or chanting to a musical Instrument; but is now generally used to signify Due Pronunciation, i.e. the pronouncing [of] a syllable according to its Quantity, (whether it be long or short,) with a stronger Force or Stress of Voice than the other Syllables in the same Word; as, a in able, o in above, &c. “Q. What is Quantity? A. Quantity is the different Measure of Time in pronouncing Syllables, from whence they are called long or short. “Q. What is the Proportion between a long and a short Syllable? A. Two to one; that is, a long Syllable is twice as long in pronouncing as a short one; as, Hate, Hat. This mark (=) set over a Syllable, shows that it is long, and this (~) that it is short; as, r=ecord, r~ecord. “Q. How do you know long and short Syllables? A. A Syllable is long or short according to the Situation of the Vowel, i.e. it is generally long when it ends with a Vowel, and short when with a Consonant; as, F=a- in Favour, and M~an- in Manner.”—Fisher’s Practical Gram., p. 34.

Now one grand mistake of this is, that it supposes syllabication to fix the quantity, and quantity to determine the accent; whereas it is plain, that accent controls quantity, so far at least that, in the construction of verse, a syllable fully accented cannot be reckoned short. And this mistake is practical; for we see, that, in three of his examples, out of the four above, the author himself misstates the quantity, because he disregards the accent: the verb re-cord’, being accented on the second syllable, is an iambus; and the nouns rec’-ord and man’-ner, being accented on the first, are trochees; and just as plainly so, as is the word f=av~our. But a still greater blunder here observable is, that, as a “due pronunciation” necessarily includes the utterance of every syllable, the explanation above stolidly supposes all our syllables to be accented, each “according to its Quantity, (whether it be long or short,)” and each “with a stronger Force or Stress of Voice, than the other Syllables!” Absurdity akin to this, and still more worthy to be criticised, has since been propagated by Sheridan, by Walker, and by Lindley Murray, with a host of followers, as Alger, D. Blair, Comly, Cooper, Cutler, Davenport, Felton, Fowler, Frost, Guy, Jaudon, Parker and Fox, Picket, Pond, Putnam, Russell, Smith, and others.

Page 1515

OBS. 8.—Sheridan was an able and practical teacher of English pronunciation, and one who appears to have gained reputation by all he undertook, whether as an actor, as an elocutionist, or as a lexicographer. His publications that refer to that subject, though now mostly superseded by others of later date, are still worthy to be consulted. The chief of them are, his Lectures on Elocution, his Lectures on the Art of Reading, his Rhetorical Grammar, his Elements of English, and his English Dictionary. His third lecture on Elocution, and many pages of the Rhetorical Grammar, are devoted to accent and quantity—subjects which he conceived to have been greatly misrepresented by other writers up to his time.[495] To this author, as it would seem, we owe the invention of that absurd doctrine, since copied into a great multitude of our English grammars, that the accent on a syllable of two or more letters, belongs, not to the whole of it, but only to some ONE LETTER; and that according to the character of this letter, as vowel or consonant, the same stress serves to lengthen or shorten the syllable's quantity! Of this matter, he speaks thus: "The great distinction of our accent depends upon its seat; which may be either upon a vowel or a consonant. Upon a vowel, as in the words, glory, father, holy. Upon a consonant, as in the words, hab'it, bor'row, bat'tle. When the accent is on the vowel, the syllable is long; because the accent is made by dwelling upon the vowel. When it is on the consonant, the syllable is short; [496] because the accent is made by passing rapidly over the vowel, and giving a smart stroke of the voice to the following consonant. Obvious as this point is, it has wholly escaped the observation of all our grammarians and compilers of dictionaries; who, instead of examining the peculiar genius of our tongue, implicitly and pedantically have followed the Greek method of always placing the accentual mark over a vowel."—Sheridan's Rhetorical Gram., p. 51. The author's reprehension of the old mode of accentuation, is not without reason; but his "great distinction" of short and long syllables is only fit to puzzle or mislead the reader. For it is plain, that the first syllables of hab'it, bor'row, and bat'tle, are twice as long as the last; and, in poetry, these words are trochees, as well as the other three, glo'ry, fa'ther, and ho'ly.

OBS. 9.—The only important distinction in our accent, is that of the primary and the secondary, the latter species occurring when it is necessary to enforce more syllables of a word than one; but Sheridan, as we see above, after rejecting all the old distinctions of rising and falling, raising and depressing, acute and grave, sharp and base, long and short, contrived a new one still more vain, which he founded on that of vowels and consonants, but "referred to time, or quantity." He recognized, in fact, a vowel accent and a consonant accent; or, in reference to quantity, a lengthening accent and a shortening accent. The discrimination of these was with him "THE GREAT DISTINCTION of our accent." He has accordingly mentioned it in several different places of his works, and not always with that regard to consistency which becomes a precise theorist. It led him to new and variant ways of defining accent; some of which seem to imply a division of consonants from their vowels in utterance, or to suggest that syllables are not the least parts of spoken words. And no sooner has he told us that our accent is but one single mode of distinguishing a syllable, than he proceeds to declare it two. Compare the following citations: "As the pronunciation of English words is chiefly regulated by accent, it will be necessary to have a precise idea of that term. Accent with us means no more than a certain stress of the voice upon one letter of a syllable, which distinguishes it from all the other letters in a word."—Sheridan's Rhetorical Gram., p. 39. Again: "Accent, in the English language, means a certain stress of the voice upon a particular letter of a syllable which distinguishes it from the rest, and, at the same time, distinguishes the syllable itself to which it belongs from the others which compose the word."—Same work, p. 50. Again: "But as our accent consists in stress only, it can just as well be placed on a consonant as [on] a vowel."—Same, p. 51. Again: "By the word accent, is meant the stress of the voice on one letter in a syllable."—Sheridan's Elements of English, p. 55. Again: "The term [accent] with us has no reference to inflexions of the voice, or musical notes, but only means a peculiar manner of distinguishing one syllable of a word from the rest, denominated by us accent; and the term for that reason [is] used by us in the singular number.—This distinction is made by us in two ways; either by dwelling longer upon one syllable than the rest; or by giving it a smarter percussion of the voice in utterance. Of the first of these, we have instances in the words, gl=ory, f=ather, h=o=ly; of the last, in bat'tle, hab'it, bor'row. So that accent, with us, is not referred to tune, but to time; to quantity, not quality; to the more equable or precipitate motion of the voice, not to the variation of notes or inflexions."—Sheridan's Lectures on Elocution, p. 56; Flint's Murray's Gram., p. 85.

Page 1516

Page 1517

OBS. 10.—How “precise” was Sheridan’s idea of accent, the reader may well judge from the foregoing quotations; in four of which, he describes it as “a certain stress,” “the stress,” and “stress only,” which enforces some “letter,” while, in the other, it is whimsically made to consist in two different modes of pronouncing “syllables”—namely, with equability, and with precipitance—with “dwelling longer,” and with “smarter percussion”—which terms the author very improperly supposes to be opposites: saying, “For the two ways of distinguishing syllables by accent, as mentioned before, are directly opposite, and produce quite contrary effects; the one, by dwelling on the syllable, necessarily makes it long; the other, by the smart percussion—of the voice, as necessarily makes it short”—Ib., p. 57. Now it is all a mistake, however common, to suppose that our accent, consisting as it does, in stress, enforcement, or “percussion of voice,” can ever shorten the syllable on which it is laid; because what increases the quantum of a vocal sound, cannot diminish its length; and a syllable accented will always be found longer as well as louder, than any unaccented one immediately before or after it. Though weak sounds may possibly be protracted, and shorter ones be exploded loudly, it is not the custom of our speech, so to deal with the sounds of syllables.

OBS. 11.—Sheridan admitted that some syllables are naturally and necessarily short, but denied that any are naturally and necessarily long. In this, since syllabic length and shortness are relative to each other, and to the cause of each, he was, perhaps, hardly consistent. He might have done better, to have denied both, or neither. Bating his new division of accent to subject it sometimes to short quantity, he recognized very fully the dependence of quantity, long or short, whether in syllables or only in vowels, upon the presence or absence of accent or emphasis. In this he differed considerably from most of the grammarians of his day; and many since have continued to uphold other views. He says, “It is an infallible rule in our tongue that no vowel ever has a long sound in an unaccented syllable.”—Lectures on Elocution, p. 60. Again: “In treating of the simple elements or letters, I have shown that some, both vowels and consonants, are naturally short; that is, whose sounds cannot possibly be prolonged; and these are the [short or shut] sounds of e, i, and u, of vocal sounds; and three pure mutes, k, p, t, of the consonant; as in the words _beck, lip, cut_. I have shown also, that the sounds of all the other vowels, and of the consonant semivowels, may be prolonged to what degree we please; but at the same time it is to be observed, that all these may also be reduced to a short quantity, and are capable of being uttered in as short a space of time as those which are naturally short. So that they who speak of syllables as absolutely in their own nature long, _the common cant of prosodians_, speak of a nonentity: for though, as I have shown above, there are syllables absolutely short, which cannot possibly be prolonged by any effort of the speaker, yet it is in his power to shorten or prolong the others to what degree he pleases.”—_Sheridan’s Rhetorical Gram._, p. 52. And again: “I have already mentioned that when the accent is on the vowel, it of course makes the syllable _long_; and when the accent is on the consonant, the syllable may be _either long or short_, according to the nature of the consonant, or _will of the speakers_. And as _all unaccented syllables are short_, the quantity of our syllables is adjusted by the easiest and simplest rule in the world, and in the exactest proportion.”—_Lect. on Elocution_, p. 66.

Page 1518

OBS. 12.—This praise of our rule for the adjustment of quantity, would have been much more appropriate, had not the rule itself been greatly mistaken, perplexed, and misrepresented by the author. If it appear, on inspection, that “beck, lip, cut,” and the like syllables, are twice as long when under the accent, as they are when not accented, so that, with a short syllable annexed or a long one prefixed, they may form trochees; then is it not true, that such syllables are either always necessarily and inherently short, or always, “by the smart percussion of the voice, as necessarily made short;” both of which inconsistent ideas are above affirmed of them. They may not be so long as some other long syllables; but, if they are twice as long as the accompanying short ones, they are not short. And, if not short, then that remarkable distinction in accent, which assumes that they are so, is as needless as it is absurd and perplexing. Now let the words, beck’on, lip’ping, cut’ter, be properly pronounced, and their syllables be compared with each other, or with those of lim’beck, fil’lip, Dr=a’cut; and it cannot but be perceived, that beck, lip, and cut, like other syllables in general, are lengthened by the accent, and shortened only in its absence; so that all these words are manifestly trochees, as all similar words are found to be, in our versification. To suppose “as many words as we hear accents,” or that “it is the laying of an accent on one syllable, which constitutes a word,” and then say, that “no unaccented syllable or vowel is ever to be accounted long,” as this enthusiastic author does in fact, is to make strange scansion of a very large portion of the trissyllables and polysyllables which occur in verse. An other great error in Sheridan’s doctrine of quantity, is his notion that all monosyllables, except a few small particles, are accented; and that their quantity is determined to be long or short by the seat or the mode of the accent, as before stated. Now, as our poetry abounds with monosyllables, the relative time of which is adjusted by emphasis and cadence, according to the nature and importance of the terms, and according to the requirements of rhythm, with no reference to this factitious principle, no conformity thereto but what is accidental, it cannot but be a puzzling exercise, when these difficulties come to be summed up, to attempt the application of a doctrine so vainly conceived to be “the easiest and simplest rule in the world!”

Page 1519

OBS. 13.—Lindley Murray’s principles of accent and quantity, which later grammarians have so extensively copied, were mostly extracted from Sheridan’s; and, as the compiler appears to have been aware of but few, if any, of his predecessor’s errors, he has adopted and greatly spread well-nigh all that have just been pointed out; while, in regard to some points, he has considerably increased the number. His scheme, as he at last fixed it, appears to consist essentially of propositions already refuted, or objected to, above; as any reader may see, who will turn to his definition of accent, and his rules for the determination of quantity. In opposition to Sheridan, who not very consistently says, that, “All unaccented syllables are short,” this author appears to have adopted the greater error of Fisher, who supposed that the vowel sounds called long and short, are just the same as the long and short syllabic quantities. By this rule, thousands of syllables will be called long, which are in fact short, being always so uttered in both prose and poetry; and, by the other, some will occasionally be called short, which are in fact long, being made so by the poet, under a slight secondary accent, or perhaps none. Again, in supposing our numerous monosyllables to be accented, and their quantity to be thereby fixed, without excepting “the particles, such as a, the, to, in, &c.,” which were excepted by Sheridan, Murray has much augmented the multitude of errors which necessarily flow from the original rule. This principle, indeed, he adopted timidly; saying, as though he hardly believed the assertion true: “And some writers assert, that every monosyllable of two or more letters, has one of its letters thus distinguished.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 236; 12mo, 189. But still he adopted it, and adopted it fully, in his section on Quantity; for, of his twelve words, exemplifying syllabic time so regulated, no fewer than nine are monosyllables. It is observable, however, that, in some instances, it is not one letter, but two, that he marks; as in the words, “m=o=od, h=o=use.”—ib., p. 239; 12mo, 192. And again, it should be observed, that generally, wherever he marks accent, he follows the old mode, which Sheridan and Webster so justly condemn; so that, even when he is speaking of “the accent on the consonant,” the sign of stress, as that of time, is set over a vowel: as, “Sadly, robber.”—ib., 8vo, 240; 12mo, 193. So in his Spelling-Book, where words are often falsely divided: as, “Ve nice,” for Ven’-ice; “Ha no ver,” for Han’o-ver; &c.—See p. 101.

Page 1520

OBS. 14.—In consideration of the great authority of this grammarian, now backed by a score or two of copyists and modifiers, it may be expedient to be yet more explicit. Of accent Murray published about as many different definitions, as did Sheridan; which, as they show what notions he had at different times, it may not be amiss for some, who hold him always in the right, to compare. In one, he describes it thus: “Accent signifies that stress of the voice, which is laid on one syllable, to distinguish it from the rest.”—Murray’s Spelling-Book, p. 138. He should here have said, (as by his examples it would appear that he meant,) “on one syllable of a word,” for, as the phrase now stands, it may include stress on a monosyllable in a sentence; and it is a matter of dispute, whether this can properly be called accent. Walker and Webster say, it is emphasis, and not accent. Again, in an other definition, which was written before he adopted the notion of accent on consonants, of accent on monosyllables, or of accent for quantity in the formation of verse, he used these words: “Accent is the laying of a peculiar stress of the voice on a certain vowel or syllable in a word, that it may be better heard than the rest, or distinguished from them; as, in the word presume, the stress of the voice must be on the second syllable, sume, which takes the accent.”—Murray’s Gram., Second Edition, 12mo, p. 161. In this edition, which was published at York, in 1796, his chief rules of quantity say nothing about accent, but are thus expressed: [1.] “A vowel or syllable is long, when the vowel or vowels contained in it are slowly joined in pronunciation with the following letters; as, ‘F=all, b=ale, m=o=od, h=o=use, f=eature.’ [2.] A syllable is short, when the vowel is quickly joined to the succeeding letter; as, ‘art, bonn~et, h~ung~er.”—ib., p. 166. Besides the absurdity of representing “a vowel” as having “vowels contained in it,” these rules are made up of great faults. They confound syllabic quantities with vowel sounds. They suppose quantity to be, not the time of a whole syllable, but the quick or slow junction of some of its parts. They apply to no syllable that ends with a vowel sound. The former applies to none that ends with one consonant only; as, “mood” or the first of “feat-ure.” In fact, it does not apply to any of the examples given; the final letter in each of the other words being silent. The latter rule is worse yet: it misrepresents the examples; for “bonnet” and “hunger” are trochees, and “art,” with any stress on it, is long.

Page 1521

OBS. 15.—In all late editions of L. Murray's Grammar, and many modifications of it, accent is defined thus: "Accent is the laying of a peculiar stress of the voice, on a certain letter OR syllable in a word, that it may be better heard than the rest, or distinguished from them; as, in the word presume, the stress of the voice must be on the letter u, AND [the] second syllable, sume, which takes the accent."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 235; 12mo, 188; 18mo, 57; Alger's, 72; Bacon's, 52; Comly's, 168; Cooper's, 176; Davenport's, 121; Felton's, 134; Frost's El., 50; Fisk's, 32; Merchant's, 145; Parker and Fox's, iii, 44; Pond's, 197; Putnam's, 96; Russell's, 106; R. O. Smith's, 186. Here we see a curious jumble of the common idea of accent, as "stress laid on some particular syllable of a word," with Sheridan's doctrine of accenting always "a particular letter of a syllable,"—an idle doctrine, contrived solely for the accommodation of short quantity with long, under the accent. When this definition was adopted, Murray's scheme of quantity was also revised, and materially altered. The principles of his main text, to which his copiers all confine themselves, then took the following form:

"The quantity of a syllable, is that time which is occupied in pronouncing it. It is considered as LONG or SHORT.

"A vowel or syllable is long, when the accent is on the vowel; which occasions it to be slowly joined in pronunciation with the following letters: as, 'F=all, b=ale, m=o=od, h=o=use, f=eature.'

"A syllable is short, when the accent is on the consonant; which occasions the vowel to be quickly joined to the succeeding letter: as, 'ant, b=onnet, h=ung~er.'

"A long syllable generally requires double the time of a short one in pronouncing it: thus, 'M=ate' and 'N=ote' should be pronounced as slowly again as 'M~at' and 'N~ot.'"—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 239; 12mo, 192; 18mo, 57; Alger's, 72; D. C. Allen's, 86; Bacon's, 52; Comly's, 168; Cooper's, 176; Cutler's, 165; Davenport's, 121; Felton's, 134; Frost's El., 50; Fisk's, 32; Maltby's, 115; Parker and Fox's, iii, 47; Pond's, 198; S. Putnam's, 96; R. C. Smith's, 187; Rev. T. Smith's, 68.

Here we see a revival and an abundant propagation of Sheridan's erroneous doctrine, that our accent produces both short quantity and long, according to its seat; and since none of all these grammars, but the first two of Murray's, give any other rules for the discrimination of quantities, we must infer, that these were judged sufficient. Now, of all the principles on which any have ever pretended to determine the quantity of syllables, none, so far as I know, are more defective or fallacious than these. They are liable to more objections than it is worth while to specify. Suffice it to observe, that they divide certain accented syllables into long and short, and say nothing of the unaccented; whereas it is plain, and acknowledged even by Murray and Sheridan themselves, that in "ant, bonnet, hunger" and the like, the unaccented syllables are the only short ones: the rest can be, and here are, lengthened.[497]

Page 1522

OBS. 16.—The foregoing principles, differently expressed, and perchance in some instances more fitly, are found in many other grammars, and in some of the very latest; but they are everywhere a mere dead letter, a record which, if it is not always untrue, is seldom understood, and never applied in any way to practice. The following are examples:

(1.) "In a long syllable, the vowel is accented; in a short syllable [,] the consonant; as [,] r=oll, p=oll; t~op, c~ut."—Rev. W. Allen's Gram., p. 222. (2.) "A syllable or word is long, when the accent is on the vowel: as n=o, l=ine, l=a, m=e; and short, when on the consonant: as n~ot, l~in, L~atin, m~et."—S. Barrett's Grammar, ("Principles of Language,") p. 112.

(3.) "A syllable is long when the accent is on the vowel, as, P=all, s=ale, m=o=use, cr=eature. A syllable is short when the accent is placed on the consonant; as great, letter, master."—Rev. D. Blair's Practical Gram., p. 117.

(4.) "When the stress is on the vowel, the measure of quantity is long: as, Mate, fate, complain, playful, un der mine. When the stress is on a consonant, the quantity is short: as, Mat, fat, com pel, progress, dis mantle."—Pardon Davis's Practical Gram., p. 125.

(5.) "The quantity of a syllable is considered as long or short. It is long when the accent is on the vowel; as, F=all, b=ale, m=ood, ho=use, f=eature. It is short when the accent is placed on the consonant; as, Master, letter."—Guy's School Gram., p. 118; Picket's Analytical School Gram., 2d Ed., p. 224.

(6.) "A syllable is long when the accent is on the vowel; and short, when the accent is on the consonant. A long syllable requires twice the time in pronouncing it that a short one does. Long syllables are marked thus =; as, t=ube; short syllables, thus ~; as, m~an."—Hiley's English Gram., p. 120.

(7.) "When the accent is on a vowel, the syllable is generally long; as _ =aleho=use, am=usement, f=eatures_. But when the accent is on a consonant, the syllable is mostly short; as, h~ap'py, m~an'ner. A long syllable requires twice as much time in the pronunciation, as a short one; as, h=ate, h~at; n=ote, n~ot; c=ane, c~an; f=ine, f~in.—Jaudon's Union Gram., p. 173.

(8.) "If the syllable be long, the accent is on the vowel; as, in b=ale, m=o=od, educ=ation; &c. If short, the accent is on the consonant; as, in _~ant, b~onnet, h~unger_, &c."—Merchant's American School Gram., p. 145.

Page 1523

The quantity of our unaccented syllables, none of these authors, except Allen, thought it worth his while to notice. But among their accented syllables, they all include words of one syllable, though most of them thereby pointedly contradict their own definitions of accent. To find in our language no short syllables but such as are accented, is certainly a very strange and very great oversight. Frazee says, "The pronunciation of an accented syllable requires double the time of that of an unaccented one."—Frazee's Improved Gram., p. 180. If so, our poetical quantities are greatly misrepresented by the rules above cited. Allen truly says, "Unaccented syllables are generally short; as, r~eturn, turn~er."—Elements of E. Gram., p. 222. But how it was ever found out, that in these words we accent only the vowel u, and in such as hunter and bluntly, some one of the consonants only, he does not inform us.

OBS. 17.—As might be expected, it is not well agreed among those who accent single consonants and vowels, what particular letter should receive the stress and the mark. The word or syllable "ant," for example, is marked "ant" by Alger, Bacon, and others, to enforce the n; "ant" by Frost, Putnam, and others, to enforce the t; "ant" by Murray, Russell, and others, to show, as they say, "_the accent on the consonant_!" But, in "ANTLER," Dr. Johnson accented the _a_; and, to mark the same pronunciation, Worcester now writes, "ANTLER;" while almost any prosodist, in scanning, would mark this word "_~antl~er_" and call it a trochee. [498] Churchill, who is in general a judicious observer, writes thus: "The leading feature in the English language, on which it's melody both in prose and verse chiefly depends, is it's accent. Every word in it of more than one syllable has one of it's syllables distinguished by this from the rest; the accent being in some cases on the vowel, in others on the consonant that closes the syllable; on the vowel, when it has it's long sound; on the consonant, when the vowel is short."—Churchill's New Gram., p. 181. But to this, as a rule of accentuation, no attention is in fact paid nowadays. Syllables that have long vowels not final, very properly take the sign of stress on or after a consonant or a mute vowel; as, =angel, ch=amber, sl=ayer, b=eadroll, sl=eazy, sl=e=eper, sl=e=eveless, l=ively, m=indful, sl=ightly, sl=iding, b=oldness, gr=ossly, wh=olly, =useless.—See Worcester's Dict.

OBS. 18.—It has been seen, that Murray's principles of quantity were greatly altered by himself, after the first appearance of his grammar. To have a full and correct view of them, it is necessary to notice something more than his main text, as revised, with which all his amenders content themselves, and which he himself thought sufficient for his Abridgement. The following positions, which, in some of his revisals, he added to the large grammar, are therefore cited:—

Page 1524

(1.) “Unaccented syllables are generally short: as, ‘admire, boldness, sinn~er.’ But to this rule there are many exceptions: as, ‘als=o, ex=ile, gangr=ene, ump=ire, f=oretaste,’ &c.

(2.) “When the accent is on the consonant, the syllable is often more or less short, as it ends with a single consonant, or with more than one: as, ‘Sadly, robber; persist, matchless.’

(3.) “When the accent is on a semi-vowel, the time of the syllable may be protracted, by dwelling upon the semi-vowel: as, ‘Cur, can, f~ulfil’ but when the accent falls on a mute, the syllable cannot be lengthened in the same manner: as, ‘Bubble, captain, totter.’”—L. Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 240; 12mo, 193.

(4.) “In this work, and in the author’s Spelling-book, the vowels e and o, in the first syllable of such words as, behave, prejudice, domain, propose; and in the second syllable of such as pulley, turkey, borrow, follow; are considered as long vowels. The second syllables in such words as, baby, spicy, holy, fury, are also considered as long syllables.”—ib., 8vo, p. 241.

(5.) “In the words scarecrow, wherefore, both the syllables are unquestionably long, but not of equal length. We presume therefore, that the syllables under consideration, [i.e., those which end with the sound of e or o without accent,] may also be properly styled long syllables, though their length is not equal to that of some others.”—Murray’s Octavo Gram., p. 241.

OBS. 19.—Sheridan’s “infallible rule, that no vowel ever has a long sound in an unaccented syllable,” is in striking contrast with three of these positions, and the exact truth of the matter is with neither author. But, for the accuracy of his doctrine, Murray appeals to “the authority of the judicious Walker,” which he thinks sufficient to prove any syllable long whose vowel is called so; while the important distinction suggested by Walker, in his Principles, No. 529, between “the length or shortness of the vowels,” and “that quantity which constitutes poetry,” is entirely overlooked. It is safe to affirm, that all the accented syllables occurring in the examples above, are long; and all the unaccented ones, short: for Murray’s long syllables vary in length, and his short ones in shortness, till not only the just proportion, but the actual relation, of long and short, is evidently lost with some of them. Does not match in “matchless,” sad in “sadly,” or bub in “bubble,” require more time, than so in “also,” key in “turkey,” or ly in “holy”? If so, four of the preceding positions are very faulty. And so, indeed, is the remaining one; for where is the sense of saying, that “when the accent falls on a mute, the syllable cannot be lengthened by dwelling upon the semi-vowel”? This is an apparent truism, and yet not true. For a semivowel in the middle or at the beginning of a syllable, may lengthen it as much as if it stood at the end. “Cur” and “can,” here given as protracted syllables, are certainly no longer by usage, and no more susceptible of protraction, than “mat” and “not,” “art” and “ant,” which are among the author’s examples of short quantity. And if a semivowel accented will make the syllable long, was it not both an error and a self-contradiction, to give “b~onnet” and “h~unger” as examples of quantity shortened by the accent? The syllable man has two semivowels; and the letter l, as in “ful fil,” is the most sonorous of consonants; yet, as we see above, among their false examples of short syllables accented, different authors have given the words “man” and “manner,” “dismantle” and “com pel,” “master” and “letter,” with sundry other sounds which may easily be lengthened. Sanborn says, “The breve distinguishes a short syllable; as, m~anner.”—Analytical Gram., p. 273. Parker and Fox say, “The Breve (thus ~) is placed over a vowel to indicate its short sound; as, St. H~elena.”—English Gram., Part iii, p. 31. Both explanations of this sign are defective; and neither has a suitable example. The name “St. H~l=en~a,” as pronounced by Worcester, and as commonly heard, is two trochees; but “Helena,” for Helen, having the penult short, takes the accent on the first syllable, which is thereby made long, though the vowel sound is called short. Even Dr. Webster, who expressly notes the difference between “long and short vowels” and “long and short syllables,” allows himself, on the very same page, to confound them: so that, of his three examples of a short syllable,—“th~at, not, m~elon,”—all are erroneous; two being monosyllables, which any emphasis must lengthen; and the third,—the word “m~elon,”—with the first syllable marked short, and not the last! See Webster’s Improved Gram., p. 157.

Page 1525

OBS. 20.—Among the latest of our English Grammars, is Chandler’s new one of 1847. The Prosody of this work is fresh from the mint; the author’s old grammar of 1821, which is the nucleus of this, being “confined to Etymology and Syntax.” [sic—KTH] If from anybody the public have a right to expect correctness in the details of grammar, it is from one who has had the subject so long and so habitually before him. “Accent” says this author, “is the stress on a syllable, or letter.”—Chandler’s Common School Gram., p. 188. Now, if our less prominent words and syllables require any force at all, a definition so loose as this, may give accent to some words, or to all; to some syllables, or to all; to some letters, or to all—except those which are silent! And, indeed, whether the stress which distinguishes some monosyllables from others, is supposed by the writer to be accent, or emphasis, or both, it is scarcely possible to ascertain from his elucidations. “The term emphasis,” says he, “is used to denote a fuller sound of voice after certain words that come in antithesis; that is, contrast. ‘He can write, but he cannot read.’ Here, read and write are antithetical (that is, in contrast), and are accented, or emphasized.”—P. 189. The word “after” here may be a misprint for the word upon; but no preposition really suits the connexion: the participle impressing or affecting would be better. Of quantity, this work gives the following account: “The quantity of a syllable is that time which is required to pronounce it. A syllable may be long or short. Hate is long, as the vowel a is elongated by the final e; hat is short, and requires about half the time for pronunciation which is used for pronouncing hate. So of ate, at; bate, bat; cure, cur. Though unaccented syllables are usually short, yet many of those which are accented are short also. The following are short: advent, sinner, supper. In the following, the unaccented syllables are long: al_so_, ex_ile_, gan_grene_, um_pire_. It maybe remarked, that the quantity of a syllable is short when the accent is on a consonant; as, art, bonnet, hunger. The hyphen (-), placed over a syllable, denotes that it is long: n=ature. The breve (~) over a syllable, denotes that it is short; as, d~etr=act.”—Chandler’s Common School Gram., p. 189. This scheme of quantity is truly remarkable for its absurdity and confusion. What becomes of the elongating power of e, without accent or emphasis, as in juncate, palate, prelate? Who does not know that such syllables as “at, bat, and cur” are often long in poetry? What more absurd, than to suppose both syllables short in such words as, “_~advent, sinner, supper_,” and then give “serm~on, f=ilt~er, sp=ir~it, g=ath~er,” and the like, for regular trochees, with “the first syllable long, and the second short,” as does this author? What more contradictory and confused, than to pretend that the primal sound of a vowel lengthens an unaccented syllable, and accent on the consonant shortens an accented one, as if in “also” the first syllable must be short and the second long, and then be compelled, by the evidence of one’s senses to mark “ech~o” as a trochee, and “detract” as an iambus? What less pardonable misnomer, than for a great critic to call the sign of long quantity a “hyphen”?

Page 1526

Page 1527

OBS. 21.—The following suggestions found in two of Dr. Webster's grammars, are not far from the truth: "Most prosodians who have treated particularly of this subject, have been guilty of a fundamental error, in considering the movement of English verse as depending on long and short syllables, formed by long and short vowels. This hypothesis has led them into capital mistakes. The truth is, many of those syllables which are considered as long in verse, are formed by the shortest vowels in the language; as, strength, health, grand. The doctrine that long vowels are necessary to form long syllables in poetry is at length exploded, and the principles which regulate the movement of our verse, are explained; viz. accent and emphasis. Every emphatical word, and every accented syllable, will form what is called in verse, a long syllable. The unaccented syllables, and unemphatical monosyllabic words, are considered as short syllables."—Webster's Philosophical Gram., p. 222; Improved Gram., 158. Is it not remarkable, that, on the same page with this passage, the author should have given the first syllable of "melon" as an example of short quantity?

OBS. 22.—If the principle is true, which every body now takes for granted, that the foundation of versifying is some distinction pertaining to syllables; it is plain, that nothing can be done towards teaching the Art of Measuring Verses, till it be known upon what distinction in syllables our scheme of versification is based, and by what rule or rules the discrimination is, or ought to be, made. Errors here are central, radical, fundamental. Hence the necessity of these present disquisitions. Without some effectual criticism on their many false positions, prosodists may continue to theorize, dogmatize, plagiarize, and blunder on, as they have done, indefinitely, and knowledge of the rhythmic art be in no degree advanced by their productions, new or old. For the supposition is, that in general the consulters of these various oracles are persons more fallible still, and therefore likely to be misled by any errors that are not expressly pointed out to them. In this work, it is assumed, that quantity, not laboriously ascertained by "a great variety of rules applied from the Greek and Latin Prosody," but discriminated on principles of our own—quantity, dependent in some degree on the nature and number of the letters in a syllable, but still more on the presence or absence of stress—is the true foundation of our metre. It has already been stated, and perhaps proved, that this theory is as well supported by authority as any; but, since Lindley Murray, persuaded wrong by the positiveness of Sheridan, exchanged his scheme of feet formed by quantities, for a new one of "feet formed by accents"—or, rather, for an impracticable mixture of both, a scheme of supposed "duplicates of each foot"—it has been becoming more and more common for grammarians to represent the basis of English versification to be, not the distinction of long and short quantities, but the recurrence of accent at certain intervals. Such is the doctrine of Butler, Felton, Fowler, S. S. Greene, Hart, Hiley, R. C. Smith, Weld, Wells, and perhaps others. But, in this, all these writers contradict themselves; disregard their own definitions of accent; count monosyllables to be accented or unaccented; displace emphasis from the rank which Murray and others give it, as “the great regulator of quantity;” and suppose the length or shortness of syllables not to depend on the presence or absence of either accent or emphasis; and not to be of much account in the construction of English verse. As these strictures are running to a great length, it may be well now to introduce the poetic feet, and to reserve, for notes under that head, any further examination of opinions as to what constitutes the foundation of verse.

Page 1528

SECTION III.—OF POETIC FEET.

A verse, or line of poetry., consists of successive combinations of syllables, called feet. A poetic foot, in English, consists either of two or of three syllables, as in the following examples:

1. “C=an t=y | -r~ants b=ut | b~y t=y | -r~ants c=on | -qu~ered

b=e?”—Byron.

2. “H=ol~y, | h=ol~y, | h=ol~y! | =all th~e | s=aints a | -d=ore thee.”—Heber.

3. “And th~e br=eath | of the D=e | -ity c=ir | -cl~ed th~e ro=om.”—Hunt.

4. “H=ail t~o th~e | chi=ef wh~o in | tr=iumph ad |-v=ances!”—Scott.

EXPLANATIONS AND DEFINITIONS.

Poetic feet being arbitrary combinations, contrived merely for the measuring of verses, and the ready ascertainment of the syllables that suit each rhythm, there is among prosodists a perplexing diversity of opinion, as to the number which we ought to recognize in our language. Some will have only two or three; others, four; others, eight; others, twelve. The dozen are all that can be made of two syllables and of three. Latinists sometimes make feet of four syllables, and admit sixteen more of these, acknowledging and naming twenty-eight in all. The principal English feet are the Iambus, the Trochee, the Anapest, and the Dactyl.

1. The Iambus, or Iamb, is a poetic foot consisting of a short syllable and a long one; as, b~etr=ay, c~ontf=ess, d~em=and, ~intent, d~egr=ee.
2. The Trochee, or Choree, is a poetic foot consisting of a long syllable and a short one; as, h=atet~ul, p=ett~ish, l=eg~al, m=eas~ure, h=ol~y.
3. The Anapest is a poetic foot consisting of two short syllables and one long one; as, c~ontr~av=ene, ~acqu~i=esce, ~imp~ort=une.

Page 1529

4. The Dactyl is a poetic foot consisting of one long syllable and two short ones; as, l=ab~our~er, p=oss~ibl~e, w=ond~erf~ul.

These are our principal feet, not only because they are oftenest used, but because each kind, with little or no mixture, forms a distinct order of numbers, having a peculiar rhythm. Of verse, or poetic measure, we have, accordingly, four principal kinds, or orders; namely, Iambic, Trochaic, Anapestic, and Dactylic; as in the four lines cited above.

The more pure these several kinds are preserved, the more exact and complete is the chime of the verse. But exactness being difficult, and its sameness sometimes irksome, the poets generally indulge some variety; not so much, however, as to confound the drift of the rhythmical pulsations: or, if ever these be not made obvious to the reader, there is a grave fault in the versification.

The secondary feet, if admitted at all, are to be admitted only, or chiefly, as occasional diversifications. Of this class of feet, many grammarians adopt four; but they lack agreement about the selection. Brightland took the Spondee, the Pyrrhic, the Moloss, and the Tribrach. To these, some now add the other four; namely, the Amphibrach, the Amphimac, the Bacchy, and the Antibacchy.

Few, if any, of these feet are really necessary to a sufficient explanation of English verse; and the adopting of so many is liable to the great objection, that we thereby produce different modes of measuring the same lines. But, by naming them all, we avoid the difficulty of selecting the most important; and it is proper that the student should know the import of all these prosodical terms.

5. A Spondee is a poetic foot consisting of two long syllables; as, c=old n=ight, p=o=or s=ouls, ~am~en, shr=ovet=ide.

6. A Pyrrhic is a poetic foot consisting of two short syllables; as, presumpt-|_~uo~us_, perpet-|_~u~al_, unhap-|_p~il~y_, inglo-|_r~io~us_.

7. A Moloss is a poetic foot consisting of three long syllables; as, De~ath's p=ale h=orse,—gre=at wh=ite thr=one,—d=eep d=amp v=a=ult.

8. A Tribrach is a poetic foot consisting of three short syllables; as, prohib-|_~it~or~y_, unnat-|_~ur~all~y_, author-|_~it~at~ive_, innum-|_~er~abl~e_.

9. An Amphibrach is a poetic foot of three syllables, having both sides short, the middle long; as, _~impr=ud~ent, c~ons=id~er, tr~ansp=ort~ed._

10. An Amphimac, Amphimacer, or Cretic, is a poetic foot of three syllables, having both sides long, the middle short; as, w~ind~ingsh=eet, l=ife~est=ate, s=oul~d~is~eased.

11. A Bacchy is a poetic foot consisting of one short syllable and two long ones; as, th=e wh=ole w~orld,—~a gre=at v=ase,—=of p=ure g=old.

Page 1530

12. An Antibacchy, or Hypobacchy, is a poetic foot consisting of two long syllables and a short one; as, kn=ight-s=erv~ice, gl=obe-d=ais~y, gr=ape-flow~er, g=old-b=eat~er.

Among the variegations of verse, one emphatic syllable is sometimes counted for a foot. "When a single syllable is [thus] taken by itself, it is called a Caesura, which is commonly a long syllable." [499]

FOR EXAMPLE:—

"Keeping | time, | time, | time,
In a | sort of | Runic | rhyme,
To the | tintin| -nabu| -lation that so | musi| -cally | wells
From the | bells, | bells, | bells, | bells,
Bells, | bells, | bells."

—EDGAR A. POE: Union Magazine, for Nov. 1849; Literary World,
No. 143.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—In defining our poetic feet, many late grammarians substitute the terms accented and unaccented for long and short, as did Murray, after some of the earlier editions of his grammar; the only feet recognized in his second edition being the Iambus, the Trochee, the Dactyl, and the Anapest, and all these being formed by quantities only. This change has been made on the supposition, that accent and long quantity, as well as their opposites, nonaccent and short quantity, may oppose each other; and that the basis of English verse is not, like that of Latin or Greek poetry, a distinction in the time of syllables, not a difference in quantity, but such a course of accenting and nonaccenting as overrides all relations of this sort, and makes both length and shortness compatible alike with stress or no stress. Such a theory, I am persuaded, is untenable. Great authority, however, may be quoted for it, or for its principal features. Besides the several later grammarians who give it countenance, even "the judicious Walker," who, in his Pronouncing Dictionary, as before cited, very properly suggests a difference between "that quantity which constitutes poetry," and the mere "length or shortness of vowels," when he comes to explain our English accent and quantity, in his "Observations on the Greek and Latin Accent and Quantity," finds "accent perfectly compatible with either long or short quantity;" (Key, p. 312;) repudiates that vulgar accent of Sheridan and others, which "is only a greater force upon one syllable than another;" (Key, p. 313;) prefers the doctrine which "makes the elevation or depression of the voice inseparable from accent;" (Key, p. 314;) holds that, "unaccented vowels are frequently pronounced long when the accented vowels are short;" (Key, p. 312;) takes long or short vowels and long or short syllables to be things everywhere tantamount; saying, "We have no conception of quantity arising from any thing but the nature of the vowels, as they are pronounced long or short;" (ibid.;) and again: "Such long quantity" as consonants may produce with a close or short vowel, "an English ear has not the least idea of. Unless the sound of the vowel be altered, we have not any conception of a long or short syllable."—Walker's Key, p. 322; and Worcester's Octavo Dict., p. 935.

Page 1531

OBS. 2.—In the opinion of Murray, Walker's authority should be thought sufficient to settle any question of prosodial quantities. "But," it is added, "there are some critical writers, who dispute the propriety of his arrangement."—Murray's Octavo Gram., p. 241. And well there may be; not only by reason of the obvious incorrectness of the foregoing positions, but because the great orthoepist is not entirely consistent with himself. In his "Preparatory Observations," which introduce the very essay above cited, he avers that, "the different states of the voice," which are indicated by the comparative terms high and low, loud and soft, quick and slow, forcible and feeble, "may not improperly be called quantities of sound."—Walker's Key, p. 305. Whoever thinks this, certainly conceives of quantity as arising from several other things than "the nature of the vowels." Even Humphrey, with whom, "Quantity differs materially from time," and who defines it, "the weight, or aggregate quantum of sounds," may find his questionable and unusual "conception" of it included among these.

OBS. 3.—Walker must have seen, as have the generality of prosodists since, that such a distinction as he makes between long syllables and short, could not possibly be the basis of English versification, or determine the elements of English feet; yet, without the analogy of any known usage, and contrary to our customary mode of reading the languages, he proposes it as applicable—and as the only doctrine conceived to be applicable—to Greek or Latin verse. Ignoring all long or short quantity not formed by what are called long or short vowels,[500] he suggests, "as a last refuge," (Sec.25,) the very doubtful scheme of reading Latin and Greek poetry with the vowels conformed, agreeably to this English sense of long and short vowel sounds, to the ancient rules of quantity. Of such words as fallo and ambo, pronounced as we usually utter them, he says, "nothing can be more evident than the long quantity of the final vowel though without the accent, and the short quantity of the initial and accented syllable."—Obs. on Greek and Lat. Accent, Sec.23; Key, p. 331. Now the very reverse of this appears to me to be "evident." The a, indeed, may be close or short, while the o, having its primal or name sound, is called long; but the first syllable, if fully accented, will have twice the time of the second; nor can this proportion be reversed but by changing the accent, and misplacing it on the latter syllable. Were the principle true, which the learned author pronounces so “evident,” these, and all similar words, would constitute iambic feet; whereas it is plain, that in English they are trochees; and in Latin,—where “o final is common,”—either trochees or spondees. The word ambo, as every accurate scholar knows, is always a trochee, whether it be the Latin adjective for “both,” or the English noun for “a reading desk, or pulpit.”

Page 1532

OBS. 4.—The names of our poetic feet are all of them derived, by change of endings, from similar names used in Greek, and thence also in Latin; and, of course, English words and Greek or Latin, so related, are presumed to stand for things somewhat similar. This reasonable presumption is an argument, too often disregarded by late grammarians, for considering our poetic feet to be quantitative, as were the ancient,—not accentual only, as some will have them,—nor separately both, as some others absurdly teach. But, whatever may be the difference or the coincidence between English verse and Greek or Latin, it is certain, that, in our poetic division of syllables, strength and length must always concur, and any scheme which so contrasts accent with long quantity, as to confound the different species of feet, or give contradictory names to the same foot, must be radically and grossly defective. In the preceding section it has been shown, that the principles of quantity adopted by Sheridan, Murray, and others, being so erroneous as to be wholly nugatory, were as unfit to be the basis of English verse, as are Walker’s, which have just been spoken of. But, the puzzled authors, instead of reforming these their elementary principles, so as to adapt them to the quantities and rhythms actually found in our English verse, have all chosen to assume, that our poetical feet in general differ radically from those which the ancients called by the same names; and yet the coincidence found—the “exact sameness of nature” acknowledged—is sagely said by some of them to duplicate each foot into two distinct sorts for our especial advantage; while the difference, which they presume to exist, or which their false principles of accent and quantity would create, between feet quantitative and feet accentual, (both of which are allowed to us,) would implicate different names, and convert foot into foot—iambes, trochees, spondees, pyrrhics, each species into some other—till all were confusion!

Page 1533

OBS. 5.—In Lindley Murray's revised scheme of feet, we have first a paragraph from Sheridan's Rhetorical Grammar, suggesting that the ancient poetic measures were formed of syllables divided "into long and short," and affirming, what is not very true, that, for the forming of ours, "In English, syllables are divided into accented and unaccented."—Rhet. Gram., p. 64; Murray's Gram., 8vo, 253; Hart's Gram., 182; and others. Now some syllables are accented, and others are unaccented; but syllables singly significant, i.e., monosyllables, which are very numerous, belong to neither of these classes. The contrast is also comparatively new; our language had much good poetry, long before accented and unaccented were ever thus misapplied in it. Murray proceeds thus: "When the feet are formed by accent on vowels, they are exactly of the same nature as ancient feet, and have the same just quantity in their syllables. So that, in this respect, we have all that the ancients had, and something which they had not. We have in fact duplicates of each foot, yet with such a difference, as to fit them for different purposes, to be applied at our pleasure."—Ib., p. 253. Again: "We have observed, that English verse is composed of feet formed by accent; and that when the accent falls on vowels, the feet are equivalent to those formed by quantity."—Ib., p. 258. And again: "From the preceding view of English versification, we may see what a copious stock of materials it possesses. For we are not only allowed the use of all the ancient poetic feet, in our heroic measure, but we have, as before observed, duplicates of each, agreeing in movement, though differing in measure,[501] and which make different impressions on the ear; an opulence peculiar to our language, and which may be the source of a boundless variety."—Ib., p. 259.

OBS. 6.—If it were not dullness to overlook the many errors and inconsistencies of this scheme, there should be thought a rare ingenuity in thus turning them all to the great advantage and peculiar riches of the English tongue! Besides several grammatical faults, elsewhere noticed, these extracts exhibit, first, the inconsistent notion—of "duplicates with a difference;" or, as Churchill expresses it, of "two distinct species of each foot;" (New Gram., p. 189;) and here we are gravely assured withal, that these different sorts, which have no separate names, are sometimes forsooth, "exactly of the same nature"! Secondly, it is incompatibly urged, that, "English verse is composed of feet formed by accent," and at the same time shown, that it partakes largely of feet "formed by quantity." Thirdly, if "we have all that the ancients had," of poetic feet, and "duplicates of each," "which they had not" we are encumbered with an enormous surplus; for, of the twenty-eight Latin feet,[502] mentioned by Dr. Adam and others, Murray never gave the names of more than eight, and his early editions acknowledged but four, and these single, not "duplicates"—unigenous, not severally of "two species." Fourthly, to suppose a multiplicity of feet to be "a copious stock of materials" for versification, is as absurd as to imagine, in any other case, a variety of measures to be materials for producing the thing measured. Fifthly, "our heroic measure" is iambic pentameter, as Murray himself shows; and, to give to this, "all the ancient poetic feet," is to bestow most of them where they are least needed. Sixthly, "feet differing in measure," so as to "make different impressions on the ear," cannot well be said to "agree in movement," or to be "exactly of the same nature!"

Page 1534

OBS. 7.—Of the foundation of metre, Wells has the following account: "The quantity of a syllable is the relative time occupied in its pronunciation. A syllable may be long in quantity, as fate; or short, as let. The Greeks and Romans based their poetry on the quantity of syllables; but modern versification depends chiefly upon accent, the quantity of syllables being almost wholly disregarded."—School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 185. Again: "Versification is a measured arrangement of words[,] in which the accent is made to recur at certain regular intervals. This definition applies only to modern verse. In Greek and Latin poetry, it is the regular recurrence of long syllables, according to settled laws, which constitutes verse."—Ib., p. 186. The contrasting of ancient and modern versification, since Sheridan and Murray each contrived an example of it, has become very common in our grammars, though not in principle very uniform; and, however needless where a correct theory prevails, it is, to such views of accent and quantity as were adopted by these authors, and by Walker, or their followers, but a necessary counterpart. The notion, however, that English verse has less regard to quantity than had that of the old Greeks or Romans, is a mere assumption, originating in a false idea of what quantity is; and, that Greek or Latin verse was less accentual than is ours, is another assumption, left proofless too, of what many authors disbelieve and contradict. Wells's definition of quantity is similar to mine, and perhaps unexceptionable; and yet his idea of the thing, as he gives us reason to think, was very different, and very erroneous. His examples imply, that, like Walker, he had "no conception of quantity arising from any thing but the nature of the vowels,"—no conception of a long or a short syllable without what is called a long or a short vowel sound. That "the Greeks and Romans based their poetry on quantity” of that restricted sort,—on such “quantity” as “fate” and “let” may serve to discriminate,—is by no means probable; nor would it be more so, were a hundred great modern masters to declare themselves ignorant of any other. The words do not distinguish at all the long and short quantities even of our own language; much less can we rely on them for an idea of what is long or short in other tongues. Being monosyllables, both are long with emphasis, both short without it; and, could they be accented, accent too would lengthen, as its absence would shorten both. In the words phosphate and streamlet, we have the same sounds, both short; in lettuce and fateful, the same, both long. This cannot be disproved. And, in the scansion of the following stanza from Byron, the word “Let” twice used, is to be reckoned a long syllable, and not (as Wells would have it) a short one:

Page 1535

“Cavalier! and man of worth!
Let these words of mine go forth;
Let the Moorish Monarch know,
That to him I nothing owe:
Wo is me, Alhama!”

OBS. 8.—In the English grammars of Allen H. Weld, works remarkable for their egregious inaccuracy and worthlessness, yet honoured by the Boston school committee of 1848 and '9, the author is careful to say, “Accent should not be confounded with emphasis. Emphasis is a stress of voice on a word in a sentence, to mark its importance. Accent is a stress of voice on a syllable in a word.” Yet, within seven lines of this, we are told, that, “A verse consists of a certain number of accented and unaccented syllables, arranged according to certain rules.”—Weld’s English Grammar, 2d Edition, p. 207; “Abridged Edition,” p. 137. A doctrine cannot be contrived, which will more evidently or more extensively confound accent with emphasis, than does this! In English verse, on an average, about three quarters of the words are monosyllables, which, according to Walker, “have no accent,” certainly none distinguishable from emphasis; hence, in fact, our syllables are no more “divided into accented and unaccented” as Sheridan and Murray would have them, than into emphasized and unemphasized, as some others have thought to class them. Nor is this confounding of accent with emphasis at all lessened or palliated by teaching with Wells, in its justification, that, “The term accent is also applied, in poetry, to the stress laid on monosyllabic words.”—Wells’s School Gram., p. 185; 113th Ed., Sec.273. What better is this, than to apply the term emphasis to the accenting of syllables in poetry, or to all the stress in question, as is virtually done in the following citation? “In English, verse is regulated by the emphasis, as there should be one emphatic syllable in every foot; for it is by the interchange of emphatick and non-emphatick syllables, that verse grateful to the ear is formed.”—Thomas Coar’s E. Gram., p. 196. In Latin poetry, the longer words predominate, so that, in Virgil’s verse, not one word in five is a monosyllable; hence accent, if our use of it were adjusted to the Latin quantities, might have much more to do with Latin verse than with English. With the following lines of Shakspeare, for example, accent has, properly speaking, no connexion;

Page 1536

“Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet;
But thou shalt have; and creep time ne’er so slow,
Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good.
I had a thing to say,—But let it go.”—King John, Act iii, Sc. 3.

OBS. 9.—T. O. Churchill, after stating that the Greek and Latin rhythms are composed of syllables long and short, sets ours in contrast with them thus: “These terms are commonly employed also in speaking of English verse, though it is marked, not by long and short, but by accented and unaccented syllables; the accented syllables being accounted long; the unaccented, short.”—Churchill’s New Gram., p. 183. This, though far from being right, is very different from the doctrine of Murray or Sheridan; because, in practice, or the scansion of verses, it comes to the same results as to suppose all our feet to be “formed by quantity.” To account syllables long or short and not believe them to be so, is a ridiculous inconsistency: it is a shuffle in the name of science.

OBS. 10.—Churchill, though not apt to be misled by others’ errors, and though his own scanning has no regard to the principle, could not rid himself of the notion, that the quantity of a syllable must depend on the “vowel sound.” Accordingly he says, “Mr. Murray justly observes, that our accented syllables, or those reckoned long; may have either a long or [a] short vowel sound, so that we have two distinct species of each foot.”—New Gram., p. 189. The obvious impossibility of “two distinct species” in one,—or, as Murray has it, of “duplicates fitted for different purposes,”—should have prevented the teaching and repeating of this nonsense, propound it who might. The commender himself had not such faith in it as is here implied. In a note, too plainly incompatible with this praise, he comments thus: “Mr. Murray adds, that this is ‘an opulence peculiar to our language, and which may be the source of a boundless variety:’ a point, on which, I confess, I have long entertained doubts. I am inclined to suspect that the English mode of reading verse is analogous to that of the ancient Greeks and Romans. Dion. Hal., de Comp., Verb. Sec.xi, speaks of the rhythm of verse differing from the proper measure of the syllables, and often reversing it: does not this imply, that the ancients, contrary to the opinion of the learned author of Metronariston, read verse as we do?”—Churchill’s New Gram., p. 393, note 329.

Page 1537

OBS. 11.—The nature, chief sources, and true distinction of quantity, at least as it pertains to our language, I have set forth with clearness, first in the short chapter on Utterance, and again, more fully in this, which treats of Versification; but that the syllables, long and short, of the old Greek and Latin poets, or the feet they made of them, are to be expounded on precisely the same principles that apply to ours. I have not deemed it necessary to affirm or to deny. So far as the same laws are applicable, let them be applied. This important property of syllables,—their quantity, or relative time,—which is the basis of all rhythm, is, as my readers have seen, very variously treated, and in general but ill appreciated, by our English prosodists, who ought, at least in this their own province, to understand it all alike, and as it is; and so common among the erudite is the confession of Walker, that “the accent and quantity of the ancients” are, to modern readers, “obscure and mysterious,” that it will be taken as a sign of arrogance and superficiality, to pretend to a very certain knowledge of them. Nor is the difficulty confined to Latin and Greek verse: the poetry of our own ancestors, from any remote period, is not easy of scansion. Dr. Johnson, in his History of the English Language, gave examples, with this remark: “Of the Saxon poetry some specimen is necessary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their syllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impossible, to recover, excludes us from that pleasure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.”

OBS. 12.—The imperfect measures of “the father of English poetry,” are said by Dryden to have been adapted to the ears of the rude age which produced them. “The verse of Chaucer,” says he, “I confess, is not harmonious to us; but it is like the eloquence of one whom Tacitus commends, it was auribus istius temporis accommodata:’ they who lived with him, and sometime after him, thought it musical; and it continues so even in our judgment, if compared with the numbers of Lidgate and Gower, his contemporaries: there is the rude sweetness of a Scotch tune in it, which is natural and pleasing, though not perfect. It is true, I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him; for he would make us believe that the fault is in our ears, and that there were really ten syllables in a verse where we find but nine: but this opinion is not worth confuting; it is so gross and obvious an error, that common sense (which is a rule in every thing but matters of faith and revelation) must convince the reader that equality of numbers in every verse, which we call Heroic, was either not known, or not always practised in Chaucer’s age. It were an easy matter to produce some thousands of his verses, which are lame for want of half a foot, and sometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwise. We can only say, that he lived in the infancy of our poetry, and that nothing is brought to perfection at the first.”—British Poets, Vol. iii, p. 171.

Page 1538

OBS. 13.—Dryden appears to have had more faith in the ears of his own age than in those of an earlier one; but Poe, of our time, himself an ingenious versifier, in his Notes upon English Verse, conveys the idea that all ears are alike competent to appreciate the elements of metre. “Quantity,” according to his dogmatism, “is a point in the investigation of which the lumber of mere learning may be dispensed with, if ever in any. Its appreciation” says he, “is universal. It appertains to no region, nor race, nor era in especial. To melody and to harmony the Greeks hearkened with ears precisely similar to those which we employ, for similar purposes, at present; and a pendulum at Athens would have vibrated much after the same fashion as does a pendulum in the city of Penn.”—The Pioneer, Vol. i. p. 103. Supposing here not even the oscillations of the same pendulum to be more uniform than are the nature and just estimation of quantity the world over, this author soon after expounds his idea of the thing as follows: “I have already said that all syllables, in metre, are either long or short. Our usual prosodies maintain that a long syllable is equal, in its time, to two short ones; this, however, is but an approach to the truth. It should be here observed that the quantity of an English syllable has no dependence upon the sound of its vowel or diphthong [diphthong], but [depends] chiefly upon accentuation. Monosyllables are exceedingly variable, and, for the most part, may be either long or short, to suit the demand of the rhythm. In polysyllables, the accented ones [say, syllables] are always long, while those which immediately precede or succeed them, are always short. Emphasis will render any short syllable long.”—Ibid., p. 105. In penning the last four sentences, the writer must have had Brown’s Institutes of English Grammar before him, and open at page 235.

OBS. 14.—Sheridan, in his Rhetorical Grammar, written about 1780, after asserting that a distinction of accent, and not of quantity, marks the movement of English verse, proceeds as follows: “From not having examined the peculiar genius of our tongue, our Prosodians have fallen into a variety of errors; some having adopted the rules of our neighbours, the French; and others having had recourse to those of the ancients; though neither of them, in reality, would square with our tongue, on account of an essential difference between them. [He means, “between each language and ours,” and should have said so.] With regard to the French, they measured verses by the number of syllables whereof they were composed, on account of a constitutional defect in their tongue, which rendered it incapable of numbers formed by poetic feet. For it has neither accent nor quantity suited to the purpose; the syllables of their words being for the most part equally accented; and the number of long syllables being out of all proportion greater than that of the short. Hence for a long time it was supposed, as it is by most people at present, that our verses were composed, not of feet, but syllables; and accordingly they are denominated verses often, eight, six, or four syllables, even to this day. Thus have we lost sight of the great advantage which our language has given us over the French, in point of poetic numbers, by its being capable of a geometrical proportion, on which the harmony of versification depends; and blindly reduced ourselves to that of the arithmetical kind which contains no natural power of pleasing the ear. And hence like the French, our chief pleasure in verse arises from the poor ornament of rhyme.”—Sheridan’s Rhetorical Gram., p. 64.

Page 1539

OBS. 15.—In a recent work on this subject, Sheridan is particularly excepted, and he alone, where Hallam, Johnson, Lord Kames, and other “Prosodians” in general, are charged with “astonishing ignorance of the first principles of our verse;” and, at the same time, he is as particularly commended of having “especially insisted on the subject of Quantity.”—Everett’s English Versification, Preface, p. 6. That the rhetorician was but slenderly entitled to these compliments, may plainly appear from the next paragraph of his Grammar just cited; for therein he mistakingly represents it as a central error, to regard our poetic feet as being “formed by quantity” at all. “Some few of our Prosodians,” says he, “finding this to be an error, and that our verses were really composed of feet, not syllables, without farther examination, boldly applied all the rules of the Latin prosody to our versification; though scarce any of them answered exactly, and some of them were utterly incompatible with the genius of our tongue. Thus because the Roman feet were formed by quantity, they asserted the same of ours, denominating all the accented syllables long; whereas I have formerly shewn, that the accent, in some cases, as certainly makes the syllable on which it is laid, short, as in others it makes it long. And their whole theory of quantity, borrowed from the Roman, in which they endeavour to establish the proportion of long and short, as immutably fixed to the syllables of words constructed in a certain way, at once falls to the ground; when it is shewn, that the quantity of our syllables is perpetually varying with the sense, and is for the most part regulated by EMPHASIS: which has been fully proved in the course of Lectures on the Art of reading Verse; where it has been also shewn, that this very circumstance has given us an amazing advantage over the ancients in the point of poetic numbers.”—Sheridan’s Rhetorical Gram., p. 64.

Page 1540

OBS. 16.—The lexicographer here claims to have “shewn” or “proved,” what he had only affirmed, or asserted. Erroneously taking the quality of the vowel for the quantity of the syllable, he had suggested, in his confident way, that short quantity springs from the accenting of consonants, and long quantity, from the accenting of vowels—a doctrine which has been amply noticed and refuted in a preceding section of the present chapter. Nor is he, in what is here cited, consistent with himself. For, in the first place, nothing comes nearer than this doctrine of his, to an “endeavour to establish the proportion of long and short, as immutably fixed to the syllables of words constructed in a certain way”! Next, although he elsewhere contrasts accent and emphasis, and supposes them different, he either confounds them in reference to verse, or contradicts himself by ascribing to each the chief control over quantity. And, lastly, if our poetic feet are not quantitative, not formed of syllables long and short, as were the Roman, what “advantage over the ancients,” can we derive from the fact, that quantity is regulated by stress, whether accent or emphasis?

OBS. 17.—We have, I think, no prosodial treatise of higher pretensions than Erastus Everett’s “System of English Versification,” first published in 1848. This gentleman professes to have borrowed no idea but what he has regularly quoted. “He mentions this, that it may not be supposed that this work is a compilation. It will be seen,” says he, “how great a share of it is original; and the author, having deduced his rules from the usage of the great poets, has the best reason for being confident of their correctness.”—Preface, p. 5. Of the place to be filled by this System, he has the following conception: “It is thought to supply an important desideratum. It is a matter of surprise to the foreign student, who attempts the study of English poetry and the structure of its verse, to find that we have no work on which he can rely as authority on this subject. In the other modern languages, the most learned philologists have treated of the subject of versification, in all its parts. In English alone, in a language which possesses a body of poetical literature more extensive, as well as more valuable than any other modern language, not excepting the Italian, the student has no rules to guide him, but a few meagre and incorrect outlines appended to elementary text-books.” Then follows this singularly inconsistent exception: “We must except from this remark two works, published in the latter part of the sixteenth century. But as they were written before the poetical language of the English tongue was fixed, and as the rules of verse were not then settled, these works can be of little practical utility.”—Preface, p. 1. The works thus excepted as of reliable authority without practical utility, are “a short tract by Gascoyne,” doubtless George Gascoigne's 'Notes of Instruction concerning the making of Verse or Rhyme in English,' published in 1575, and Webbe's 'Discourse of English Poetry,' dated 1586, neither of which does the kind exceptor appear to have ever seen! Mention is next made, successively, of Dr. Carey, of Dryden, of Dr. Johnson, of Blair, and of Lord Kames. "To these guides," or at least to the last two, "the author is indebted for many valuable hints;" yet he scruples not to say, "Blair betrays a paucity of knowledge on this subject;"—"Lord Kames has slurred over the subject of Quantity," and "shown an unpardonable ignorance of the first principles of Quantity in our verse;"—and, "Even Dr. Johnson speaks of syllables in such a manner as would lead us to suppose that he was in the same error as Kames. These inaccuracies," it is added, "can be accounted for only from the fact that Prosodians have not thought Quantity of sufficient importance to merit their attention."—See Preface, p. 4-6.

Page 1541

OBS. 18.—Everett's Versification consists of seventeen chapters, numbered consecutively, but divided into two parts, under the two titles Quantity and Construction. Its specimens of verse are numerous, various, and beautiful. Its modes of scansion—the things chiefly to be taught—though perhaps generally correct, are sometimes questionable, and not always consonant with the writer's own rules of quantity. From the citations above, one might expect from this author such an exposition of quantity, as nobody could either mistake or gainsay; but, as the following platform will show, his treatment of this point is singularly curt and incomplete. He is so sparing of words as not even to have given a definition of quantity. He opens his subject thus: "VERSIFICATION is the proper arrangement of words in a line according to their quantity, and the disposition of these lines in couplets, stanzas, or in blank verse, in such order, and according to such rules, as are sanctioned by usage.—A FOOT is a combination of two or more syllables, whether long or short.—A LINE is one foot, or more than one.—The QUANTITY of each word depends on its accent. In words of more than one syllable, all accented syllables are long, and all unaccented syllables are short. Monosyllables are long or short, according to the following Rules:—1st. All Nouns, Adjectives, Verbs, and Participles are long.—2nd. The articles are always short.—3rd, The Pronouns are long or short, according to emphasis.—4th. Interjections and Adverbs are generally long, but sometimes made short by emphasis.—5th. Prepositions and Conjunctions are almost always short, but sometimes made long by emphasis."—English Versification, p. 13. None of these principles of quantity are unexceptionable; and whoever follows them implicitly, will often differ not only from what is right, but from their author himself in the analysis of verses. Nor are they free from important antagonisms. "Emphasis," as here spoken of, not only clashes with "accent," but contradicts itself, by making some syllables long and some short; and, what is more mysteriously absurd, the author says, "It frequently happens that syllables long by QUANTITY become short by EMPHASIS."—Everett's Eng. Versif., 1st Ed., p. 99. Of this, he takes the first syllable of the following line, namely, "the word bids," to be an example:

Page 1542

"B~ids m~e l~ive b~ut t~o h~ope f~or p~ost~er~it~y's pr~aise."

OBS. 19.—In the American Review, for May, 1848, Everett's System of Versification is named as "an apology and occasion"—not for a critical examination of this or any other scheme of prosody—but for the promulgation of a new one, a rival theory of English metres, "the principles and laws" of which the writer promises, "at an other time" more fully "to develop." The article referred to is entitled, "The Art of Measuring Verses." The writer, being designated by his initials, "J. D. W.," is understood to be James D. Whelpley, editor of the Review. Believing Everett's principal doctrines to be radically erroneous, this critic nevertheless excuses them, because he thinks we have nothing better! "The views supported in the work itself," says his closing paragraph, "are not, indeed, such as we would subscribe to, nor can we admit the numerous analyses of the English metres which it contains to be correct; yet, as it is as complete in design and execution as anything that has yet appeared on the subject, and well calculated to excite the attention, and direct the inquiries, of English scholars, to the study of our own metres, we shall even pass it by without a word of criticism."—American Review, New Series, Vol. I, p. 492.

OBS. 20.—Everett, although, as we have seen, he thought proper to deny that the student of English versification had any well authorized "rules to guide him," still argues that, "The laws of our verse are just as fixed, and may be as clearly laid down, if we but attend to the usage of the great Poets, as are the laws of our syntax."—Preface, p. 7. But this critic, of the American Review, ingenious though he is in many of his remarks, flippantly denies that our English Prosody has either authorities or principles which one ought to respect; and accordingly cares so little whom he contradicts, that he is often inconsistent with himself. Here is a sample: "As there are no established authorities in this art, and, indeed, no acknowledged principles—every rhymester being permitted to invent his own method, and write by instinct or imitation—the critic feels quite at liberty to say just what he pleases, and offer his private observations as though these were really of some moment."—Am. Rev., Vol. i, p. 484. In respect to writing, "to invent," and "to imitate," are repugnant ideas; and so are, after a "method," and "by instinct." Again, what sense is there in making the "liberty" of publishing one's "private observations" to depend on the presumed absence of rivals? That the author did not lack confidence in the general applicability of his speculations, subversive though they are of the best and most popular teaching on this subject, is evident from the following sentence: "We intend, also, that if these principles, with the others previously expressed, are true in the given instances, they are equally true for all languages and all varieties of metre, even to the denial that any poetic metres, founded on other principles, can properly exist."—Ib., p. 491

Page 1543

OBS. 21.—J. D. W. is not one of those who discard quantity and supply accent in expounding the nature of metre; and yet he does not coincide very nearly with any of those who have heretofore made quantity the basis of poetic numbers. His views of the rhythmical elements being in several respects peculiar, I purpose briefly to notice them here, though some of the peculiarities of this new "Art of Measuring Verses," should rather be quoted under the head of Scanning, to which they more properly belong. "Of every species of beauty," says this author, "and more especially of the beauty of sounds, continuousness is the first element; a succession of pulses of sound becomes agreeable, only when the breaks or intervals cease to be heard." Again: "Quantity, or the division into measures of time, is a second element of verse; each line must be stuffed out with sounds, to a certain fullness and plumpness, that will sustain the voice, and force it to dwell upon the sounds."—Rev., p. 485. The first of these positions is subsequently contradicted, or very largely qualified, by the following: "So, the line of significant sounds, in a verse, is also marked by accents, or pulses, and divided into portions called feet. These are necessary and natural for the very simple reason that continuity by itself is tedious; and the greatest pleasure arises from the union of continuity with variety. [That is, with "interruption," as he elsewhere calls it!] In the line,

'Full many a tale their music tells,'

there are at least four accents or stresses of the voice, with faint pauses after them, just enough to separate the continuous stream of sound into these four parts, to be read thus:

Fullman—yataleth—eirmus—ictells,[503]

Page 1544

by which, new combinations of sound are produced, of a singularly musical character. It is evident from the inspection of the above line, that the division of the feet by the accents is quite independent of the division of words by the sense. The sounds are melted into continuity, and re-divided again in a manner agreeable to the musical ear.”—Ib., p. 486. Undoubtedly, the due formation of our poetic feet occasions both a blending of some words and a dividing of others, in a manner unknown to prose; but still we have the authority of this writer, as well as of earlier ones, for saying, “Good verse requires to be read with the natural quantites [sic—KTH] of the syllables,” (p. 487,) a doctrine with which that of the redivision appears to clash. If the example given be read with any regard to the caesural pause, as undoubtedly it should be, the th of their cannot be joined, as above, to the word tale; nor do I see any propriety in joining the s of music to the third foot rather than to the fourth. Can a theory which turns topsyturvy the whole plan of syllabication, fail to affect “the natural quantities of syllables?”

OBS. 22—Different modes of reading verse, may, without doubt, change the quantities of very many syllables. Hence a correct mode of reading, as well as a just theory of measure, is essential to correct scansion, or a just discrimination of the poetic feet. It is a very common opinion, that English verse has but few spondees; and the doctrine of Brightland has been rarely disputed, that, “Heroic Verses consist of five short, and five long Syllables intermixt, but not so very strictly as never to alter that order.”—Gram., 7th Ed., p. 160.[504] J. D. W., being a heavy reader, will have each line so “stuffed out with sounds,” and the consonants so syllabled after the vowels, as to give to our heroics three spondees for every two iambuses; and lines like the following, which, with the elisions, I should resolve into four iambuses, and without them, into three iambuses and one anapest, he supposes to consist severally of four spondees:—

“When coldness wraps this suffering clay,
Ah! whither strays the immortal mind?”

[These are] to be read,” according to this prosodian,

“Whencoldn—esswrapsth—issuff’r—ingclay,
Ah! whith—erstraysth’—immort—almind?”

“The verse,” he contends, “is perceived to consist of six [probably he meant to say eight] heavy syllables, each composed of a vowel followed by a group of consonantal sounds, the whole measured into four equal feet. The movement is what is called spondaic, a spondee being a foot of two heavy sounds. The absence of short syllables gives the line a peculiar weight and solemnity suited to the sentiment, and doubtless prompted by it.”—American Review, Vol. i, p. 487. Of his theory, he subsequently says: “It maintains that good English verse is as thoroughly quantitative as the Greek, though it be much more heavy and spondaic.”—Ib., p. 491.[505]

Page 1545

OBS. 23—For the determining of quantities and feet, this author borrows from some old Latin grammar three or four rules, commonly thought inapplicable to our tongue, and, mixing them up with other speculations, satisfies himself with stating that the “Art of Measuring Verses” requires yet the production of many more such! But, these things being the essence of his principles, it is proper to state them in his own words: “A short vowel sound followed by a double consonantal sound, usually makes a long quantity; [506] so also does a long vowel like y in beauty, before a consonant. The metrical accents, which often differ from the prosaic, mostly fall upon the heavy sounds; which must also be prolonged in reading, and never slurred or lightened, unless to help out a bad verse. In our language the groupings of the consonants furnish a great number of spondaic feet, and give the language, especially its more ancient forms, as in the verse of Milton and the prose of Lord Bacon, a grand and solemn character. One vowel followed by another, unless the first be naturally made long in the reading, makes a short quantity, as in th[=e] old. So, also, a short vowel followed by a single short consonant, gives a short time or quantity, as in toe give. [Fist] A great variety of rules for the detection of long and short quantities have yet to be invented, or applied from the Greek and Latin prosody. In all languages they are of course the same, making due allowance for difference of organization; but it is as absurd to suppose that the Greeks should have a system of prosody differing in principle from our own, as that their rules of musical harmony should be different from the modern. Both result from the nature of the ear and of the organ of speech, and are consequently the same in all ages and nations.”—Am. Rev., Vol. i, p. 488.

OBS. 24.—QUANTITY is here represented as “time” only. In this author’s first mention of it, it is called, rather less accurately, “the division into measures of time.” With too little regard for either of these conceptions, he next speaks of it as including both “time and accent.” But I have already shown that “accents or stresses” cannot pertain to short syllables, and therefore cannot be ingredients of quantity. The whole article lacks that clearness which is a prime requisite of a sound theory. Take all of the writer’s next paragraph as an example of this defect: “The two elements of musical metre, time and accent, both together constituting quantity, are equally elements of the metre of verse. Each iambic foot or metre, is marked by a swell of the voice, concluding abruptly in an accent, or interruption, on the last sound of the foot; or, [omit this ‘or:’ it is improper,] in metres of the trochaic order, in such words as dandy, handy, bottle, favor, labor, it [the foot] begins with a heavy accented sound, and declines to a faint or light one at the close. The line is thus composed of a series of swells or waves of sound, concluding and beginning alike. The accents, or points at which the voice is most forcibly exerted in the feet, being the divisions of time, by which a part of its musical character is given to the verse, are usually made to coincide, in our language, with the accents of the words as they are spoken; which [coincidence] diminishes the musical character of our verse. In Greek hexameters and Latin hexameters, on the contrary, this coincidence is avoided, as tending to monotony and a prosaic character.”—Ibid.

Page 1546

OBS. 25.—The passage just cited represents “accent” or “accents” not only as partly constituting quantity, but as being, in its or their turn, “the divisions of time,”—as being also stops, pauses, or “interruptions” of sound else continuous;—as being of two sorts, “metrical” and “prosaic,” which “usually coincide,” though it is said, they “often differ,” and their “interference” is “very frequent,”—as being “the points” of stress “in the feet,” but not always such in “the words,” of verse;—as striking different feet differently, “each iambic foot” on the latter syllable and every trochee on the former, yet causing, in each line, only such waves of sound as conclude and begin “alike,”—as coinciding with the long quantities and “the prosaic accents,” in iambics and trochaics, yet not coinciding with these always;—as giving to verse “a part of its musical character,” yet diminishing that character, by their usual coincidence with “the prose accents,”—as being kept distinct in Latin and Greek, “the metrical” from “the prosaic” and their “coincidence avoided,” to make poetry more poetical,—though the old prosodists, in all they say of accents, acute, grave, and circumflex, give no hint of this primary distinction! In all this elementary teaching, there seems to be a want of a clear, steady, and consistent notion of the things spoken of. The author’s theory led him to several strange combinations of words, some of which it is not easy, even with his whole explanation before us, to regard as other than absurd. With a few examples of his new phraseology, Italicized by myself, I dismiss the subject: “It frequently happens that word and verse accent fall differently.”—P. 489. “The verse syllables, like the verse feet, differ in the prosaic and [the] metrical reading of the line.”—Ib. “If we read it by the prosaic syllabication, there will be no possibility of measuring the quantities.”—Ib. “The metrical are perfectly distinct from the prosaic properties of verse.”—Ib. “It may be called an iambic dactyl, formed by the substitution of two short for one long time in the last portion of the foot. Iambic spondees and dactyls are to be distinguished by the metrical accent falling on the last syllable.”—P. 491.

Page 1547

SECTION IV.—THE KINDS OF VERSE.

The principal kinds of verse, or orders of poetic numbers, as has already been stated, are four; namely, Iambic, Trochaic, Anapestic, and Dactylic. Besides these, which are sometimes called "the simple orders" being unmixed, or nearly so, some recognize several "Composite orders" or (with a better view of the matter) several kinds of mixed verse, which are said to constitute "the Composite order." In these, one of the four principal kinds of feet must still be used as the basis, some other species being inserted therewith, in each line or stanza, with more or less regularity.

PRINCIPLES AND NAMES.

The diversification of any species of metre, by the occasional change of a foot, or, in certain cases, by the addition or omission of a short syllable, is not usually regarded as sufficient to change the denomination, or stated order, of the verse; and many critics suppose some variety of feet, as well as a studied diversity in the position of the caesural pause, essential to the highest excellence of poetic composition.

The dividing of verses into the feet which compose them, is called Scanning, or Scansion. In this, according to the technical language of the old prosodists, when a syllable is wanting, the verse is said to be catalectic; when the measure is exact, the line is acatalectic; when there is a redundant syllable, it forms hypermeter.

Since the equal recognition of so many feet as twelve, or even as eight, will often produce different modes of measuring the same lines; and since it is desirable to measure verses with uniformity, and always by the simplest process that will well answer the purpose; we usually scan by the principal feet, in preference to the secondary, where the syllables give us a choice of measures, or may be divided in different ways.

A single foot, especially a foot of only two syllables, can hardly be said to constitute a line, or to have rhythm in itself; yet we sometimes see a foot so placed, and rhyming as a line. Lines of two, three, four, five, six, or seven feet, are common; and these have received the technical denominations of dim'eter, trim'eter, tetram'eter, pentam'eter, hexam'eter, and heptam'eter. On a wide page, iambics and trochaics may possibly be written in octom'eter; but lines of this measure, being very long, are mostly abandoned for alternate tetrameters.

ORDER I.—IAMBIC VERSE.

In Iambic verse, the stress is laid on the even syllables, and the odd ones are short. Any short syllable added to a line of this order, is supernumerary; iambic rhymes, which are naturally single, being made double by one, and triple by two. But the adding of one short syllable, which is much practised in dramatic poetry, may be reckoned to convert the last foot into an amphibrach, though the adding of two cannot. Iambics consist of the following measures:—

Page 1548

MEASURE I.—IAMBIC OF EIGHT FEET, OR OCTOMETER.

Psalm XLVII, 1 and 2.

“O = all | y~e p=eo | -pl~e, cl=ap | y~our h=ands, | and w=ith / tri=um
| -ph~ant v=oi | -c~es s=ing;

No force | the might | -=y power | withstands | of God, | the u
| -niver | -sal King.”

See the “Psalms of David, in Metre,” p. 54.

Each couplet of this verse is now commonly reduced to, or exchanged for, a simple stanza of four tetrameter lines, rhyming alternately, and each commencing with a capital; but sometimes, the second line and the fourth are still commenced with a small letter: as,

“Your ut | -most skill | in praise | be shown,
for Him | who all | the world | commands,
Who sits | upon | his right | -eous throne,
and spreads | his sway | o’er heath | -en lands.”
Ib., verses 7 and 8; Edition bound with Com. Prayer,
N. Y., 1819.

An other Example.

“The hour | is come | —the cher | -ish’d hour,
When from | the bus | -y world | set free,
I seek | at length | my lone | -ly bower,
And muse | in si | -lent thought | on thee.”

THEODORE HOOK’S REMAINS: The Examiner, No. 82.

MEASURE II.—IAMBIC OF SEVEN FEET, OR HEPTAMETER.

Example I.—Hat-Brims.

“It’s odd | how hats | expand [their brims | as youth | begins
| to fade,
As if | when life | had reached | its noon, | it want | -ed them
| for shade.”

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES: From a Newspaper.

Example II.—Psalm XLII, 1.

“As pants | the hart | for cool | -ing streams, | when heat | -ed in
| the chase;
So longs | my soul, | O God, | for thee, | and thy | refresh
| -ing grace.”

EPISCOPAL PSALM-BOOK: The Rev. W. Allen's Eng. Gram., p. 227.

Example III.—The Shepherd's Hymn.

“Oh, when | I rove | the des | -ert waste, | and 'neath | the hot
| sun pant,
The Lord | shall be | my Shep | -herd then, | he will | not let
| me want;
He'll lead | me where | the past | -ures are | of soft | and shad
| -y green,
And where | the gen | -tle wa | -ters rove, | the qui | -et hills
| between.

And when | the sav | -age shall | pursue, | and in | his grasp
| I sink,
He will | prepare | the feast | for me, | and bring | the cool
| -ing drink,
And save | me harm | -less from | his hands, and strength | -en me
| in toil,
And bless | my home | and cot | -tage lands, and crown | my head
| with oil.

With such | a Shep | -herd to | protect, | to guide | and guard
| me still,
And bless | my heart | with ev | -'ry good, | and keep | from ev
| -'ry ill,
Surely | I shall | not turn | aside, | and scorn | his kind
| -ly care,
But keep | the path | he points | me out, | and dwell | for ev
| -er there.”

W. GILMORE SIMMS: North American Reader, p. 376.

Example IV.—“The Far, Far Fast.”—First six Lines.

Page 1549

“It was | a dream | of earl | -y years, | the long | -est and
 | the last,
 And still | it ling | -ers bright | and lone | amid | the drear
 | -y past;
 When I | was sick | and sad | at heart | and faint | with grief
 | and care,
 It threw | its ra | -diant smile | athwart | the shad | -ows of
 | despair:
 And still | when falls | the hour | of gloom | upon | this way
 | -ward breast,
 Unto | THE FAR, | FAR EAST | I turn | for sol | -ace and | for rest.”
Edinburgh Journal; and The Examiner,

Example V.—“Lament of the Slave.”—Eight Lines from thirty-four.

“Behold | the sun | which gilds | yon heaven, how love | -ly it
 | appears!
 And must | it shine | to light | a world | of war | -fare and
 | of tears?
 Shall hu | -man pas | -sion ev | -er sway | this glo | _-rious world_
 | of God,
 And beau | -ty, wis | -dom, hap | -piness, | sleep with | the tram
 | -pled sod?
 Shall peace | ne’er lift | her ban | -ner up, | shall truth | and rea
 | -son cry,
 And men | oppress | them down | with worse | than an | -cient tyr
 | -anny?
 Shall all | the les | -sons time | has taught, | be so | long taught
 | in vain;
 And earth | be steeped | in hu | -man tears, | and groan | with hu
 | -man pain?”
 ALONZO LEWIS: Freedom’s Amulet, Dec. 6, 1848.

Example VI.—“Greek Funeral Chant.”—First four of sixty-four Lines.

“A wail | was heard | around | the bed, | the death | -bed of
 | the young;
 Amidst | her tears, | the Fu | _-neral Chant_ | a mourn | -ful moth

| -er sung.
'I-an | -this dost | thou sleep?— | Thou sleepst!— | but this
| is not | the rest,
The breath | -ing, warm, | and ros | -y calm, | I've pil | -low'd on
| my breast!"

FELICIA HEMANS: Poetical Works, Vol. ii, p. 37.

Everett observes, "The Iliad was translated into this measure by CHAPMAN, and the AEneid by PHAER."—Eng. Versif., p. 68. Prior, who has a ballad of one hundred and eighty such lines, intimates in a note the great antiquity of the verse. Measures of this length, though not very uncommon, are much less frequently used than shorter ones. A practice has long prevailed of dividing this kind of verse into alternate lines of four and of three feet, thus:—

"To such | as fear | thy ho | -ly name,
myself | I close | -ly join;
To all | who their | obe | -dient wills
to thy | commands | resign."
Psalms with Com. Prayer: Psalm cxix, 63.

This, according to the critics, is the most soft and pleasing of our lyric measures. With the slight change of setting a capital at the head of each line, it becomes the regular ballad-metre of our language. Being also adapted to hymns, as well as to lighter songs, and, more particularly, to quaint details of no great length, this stanza, or a similar one more ornamented with rhymes, is found in many choice pieces of English poetry. The following are a few popular examples:—

Page 1550

“When all | thy mer | -cies, O | my God!
My ris | -ing soul | surveys,
Transport | -ed with | the view | I’m lost
In won | -der, love, | and praise.”
Addison’s Hymn of Gratitude.

“John Gil | -pin was | a cit | -izen
Of cred | -it and | renown,
A train | -band cap | -tain eke | was he
Of fam | -ous Lon | -don town.”
Cowper’s Poems, Vol. i, p. 275.

“God pros | -per long | our no | -ble king,
Our lives | and safe | -ties all;
A wo | -ful hunt | -ing once | there did
In Chev | -y Chase | befall,”
Later Reading of Chevy Chase.

“Turn, An | -geli | -na, ev | -er dear,
My charm | -er, turn | to see
Thy own, | thy long | -lost Ed | -win here,
Restored | to love | and thee.”
Goldsmith’s Poems, p. 67.

“‘Come back! | come back!’ | he cried | in grief,
Across | this storm | -y wa_ter_:
‘And I’ll | forgive | your High | -land chief,
My daugh | -ter!—oh | my daugh_ter_!
’Twas vain: | the loud | waves lashed | the shore,
Return | or aid | prevent_ing_:—
The wa | -ters wild | went o’er | his child,—
And he | was left | lament_ing_.”—Campbell’s Poems, p. 110.

The rhyming of this last stanza is irregular and remarkable, yet not unpleasant. It is contrary to rule, to omit any rhyme which the current of the verse leads the reader to expect. Yet here the word “shore” ending the first line, has no correspondent sound, where twelve examples of such correspondence had just preceded; while the third line, without previous example, is so rhymed within itself that one scarcely perceives the omission. Double rhymes are said by some to unfit this metre for serious subjects, and to adapt it only to what is meant to be burlesque, humorous, or satiric. The example above does not confirm this opinion, yet the rule, as a general one, may still be just. Ballad verse may in some degree imitate the language of a simpleton, and become popular by clownishness, more than by elegance: as,

“Father | and I | went down | to the camp
Along | with cap | -tain Goodwin,
And there | we saw | the men | and boys
As thick | as hast | -y pudding;

And there | we saw | a thun | -dering gun,—
It took | a horn | of powder,—
It made | a noise | like fa | -ther’s gun,
Only | a na | -tion louder.”
Original Song of Yankee Doodle.

Even the line of seven feet may still be lengthened a little by a double rhyme: as,

How gay | -ly, o | -ver fell | and fen, | yon sports | -man light
| is dashing!
And gay | -ly, in | the sun | -beams bright, | the mow |—er’s blade
| is flashing!

Of this length, T. O. Churchill reckons the following couplet; but by the general usage of the day, the final ed is not made a separate syllable:—

Page 1551

“With hic | and hoec, | as Pris | -cian tells, | sacer / -dos was
| de_cli | -n~ed_
But now | its gen | -der by | the pope | far bet | -ter is | de_fi
| -n~ed_.”
Churchill's New Grammar, p. 188.

MEASURE III.—IAMBIC OF SIX FEET, OR HEXAMETER.

Example I.—A Couplet.

“S~o v=a | _r~y~ing still_ | th~eir m=ooods, | obs=erv / -ing =yet
| in =all
Their quan / -tities, | their rests, | their cen / -sures met
| -rical.”
MICHAEL DRAYTON: _Johnson's Quarto Dict., w. Quantity_.

Example II.—From a Description of a Stag-Hunt.

“And through | the cumb | -rous thicks, | as fear | -fully | he makes,
He with | his branch | -ed head | the ten | -der sap | -lings shakes,
That sprink | -ling their | moist pearl | do seem | for him | to weep;
When aft | -er goes | the cry, | with yell | -ings loud | and deep,
That all | the for | -est rings, | and ev | -ery neigh
| -boursing place:
And there | is not | a hound | but fall | -eth to | the chase.”
DRAYTON: Three Couplets from twenty-three, in Everett's Versif., p. 66.

Example III.—An Extract from Shakespeare.

“If love | make me | forsworn, | how shall | I swear | to love? O, nev | -er faith | could hold, | if not | to beau | -ty vow'd: Though to | myself | forsworn, | to thee | I'll con | -stant prove; Those thoughts, | to me | like oaks, | to thee | like o | -siers bow'd. St=ud~y | his bi | -as leaves, | and makes | his book | thine eyes, Where all | those pleas | -ures live, | that art | can com | -prehend. If knowl | -edge be | the mark, | to know | thee shall | suffice; Well learn | -ed is | that tongue | that well | can thee | commend; All ig | -norant | that soul | that sees | thee with' | o~ut wonder; Which is | to me | some praise, | that I |
thy parts | admire: Thine eye | Jove's light | -ning seems, | thy voice | his dread
| _ful thunder_,

Which (not | to an | -ger bent) | is mu | -sic and | sweet fire. Celes | -tial as | thou art, |
O, do | not love | that wrong, To sing | the heav | -ens' praise | with such | an earth | -ly tongue."

The Passionate Pilgrim, Stanza IX;

SINGER'S SHAK., Vol. ii, p. 594.

Example IV.—The Ten Commandments Versified.

"Adore | no God | besides | me, to | provoke | mine eyes;
Nor wor | -ship me | in shapes | and forms | that men | devise;
With rev | 'rence use | my name, | nor turn | my words | to jest;
Observe | my sab | -bath well, | nor dare | profane | my rest;
Honor | and due | obe | -dience to | thy pa | -rents give;
Nor spill | the guilt | -less blood, | nor let | the guilt
| -y live;[507]
Preserve | thy bod | -y chaste, | and flee | th' unlaw | -ful bed;
Nor steal | thy neigh | -bor's gold, | his gar | -ment, or | his bread;
Forbear | to blast | his name | with false | -hood or deceit;
Nor let | thy wish | -es loose | upon | his large | estate."
DR. ISAAC WATTS: Lyric Poems, p. 46.

Page 1552

This verse, consisting, when entirely regular, of twelve syllables in six iambs, is the Alexandrine; said to have been so named because it was “first used in a poem called Alexander.”—Worcester’s Dict. Such metre has sometimes been written, with little diversity, through an entire English poem, as in Drayton’s Polyolbion; but, couplets of this length being generally esteemed too clumsy for our language, the Alexandrine has been little used by English versifiers, except to complete certain stanzas beginning with shorter iambs, or, occasionally, to close a period in heroic rhyme. French heroics are similar to this; and if, as some assert, we have obtained it thence, the original poem was doubtless a French one, detailing the exploits of the hero “Alexandre.” The phrase, “an Alexandrine verse,” is, in French, “un vers Alexandrin.” Dr. Gregory, in his Dictionary of Arts and Sciences, copies Johnson’s Quarto Dictionary, which says, “ALEXANDRINE, a kind of verse borrowed from the French, first used in a poem called Alexander. They [Alexandrines] consist, among the French, of twelve and thirteen syllables, in alternate couplets; and, among us, of twelve.” Dr. Webster, in his American Dictionary, improperly (as I think) gives to the name two forms, and seems also to acknowledge two sorts of the English verse: “ALEXAN’DRINE, or ALEXAN’DRIAN, n. A kind of verse, consisting of twelve syllables, or of twelve and thirteen alternately.” “The Pet-Lamb,” a modern pastoral, by Wordsworth, has sixty-eight lines, all probably meant for Alexandrines; most of which have twelve syllables, though some have thirteen, and others, fourteen. But it were a great pity, that versification so faulty and unsuitable should ever be imitated. About half of the said lines, as they appear in the poet’s royal octave, or “the First Complete American, from the Last London Edition,” are as sheer prose as can be written, it being quite impossible to read them into any proper rhythm. The poem being designed for children, the measure should have been reduced to iambic trimeter, and made exact at that. The story commences thus:—

“The dew | was fall | -ing fast, | the stars | began | to blink;
I heard | a voice; | it said, | ’Drink, pret | -ty crea
| -ture, drink!’
And, look | -ing o’er | the hedge, | before | me I | espied
A snow | -white moun | -tain Lamb | w=ith =a M=aid | -en at
| its side.”

All this is regular, with the exception of one foot; but who can make any thing but prose of the following?

“Thy limbs will shortly be twice as stout as they are now,
Then I’ll yoke thee to my cart like a pony in the plough.”
“Here thou needest not dread the raven in the sky; Night and day thou art safe,—our cottage is hard by.”
WORDSWORTH’S Poems, New-Haven Ed., 1836, p. 4.

Page 1553

In some very ancient English poetry, we find lines of twelve syllables combined in couplets with others of fourteen; that is, six iambic feet are alternated with seven, in lines that rhyme. The following is an example, taken from a piece of fifty lines, which Dr. Johnson ascribes to the Earl of Surry, one of the wits that flourished in the reign of Henry VIII:—

“Such way | -ward wayes | hath Love, | that most | part in | discord,
Our willes | do stand, | whereby | our hartes | but sel | -dom do

| accord;
Decyte | is hys | delighte, | and to | begyle | and mocke,
The sim | ple hartes | which he | doth strike | with fro | -ward di

| -vers stroke.
He caus | -eth th’ one | to rage | with gold | -en burn | -ing darte,
And doth | allay | with lead | -en cold, | again | the oth

| -er’s harte;
Whose gleames | of burn | -ing fyre | and eas | -y sparkes | of flame,
In bal | -ance of | un=e | -qual weyght | he pon | -dereth | by ame.”
See Johnson’s Quarto Dict., History of the Eng. Lang., p. 4.

MEASURE IV.—IAMBIC OF FIVE FEET, OR PENTAMETER.

Example I.—Hector to Andromache.

“Andr=om | -ach=e! | m=y s=oul’s | far b=et | -t~er p=art,
Wh=y w~ith | untine | -ly | sor | -rows heaves | thy heart?
No hos | -tile hand | can an | -tedate | my doom,
Till fate | condemns | me to | the si | -lent tomb.
Fix’d is | the term | to all | the race | of earth;
And such | the hard | conditi | -on of | our birth,
No force | can then | resist, | no flight | can save;
All sink | alike, | the fear | -ful and | the brave.”
POPE’S HOMER: Iliad, B. vi, l. 624-632.

Example II.—Angels’ Worship.

“No soon | -er had | th’ Almighty | -y ceas’d | but all
The mul | -titude | of an | -gels with | a shout
Loud as | from num | -bers with’ | -out num | -ber, sweet
As from | blest voi | -ces ut | t~er ~ing j=oy, | heav’n rung
With ju | -bilee, | and loud | hosan | -nas fill’d
Th’ eter | -nal | re | -gions; low | -ly rev | -erent

Tow'rds ei | -ther throne | they bow, | and to | the ground
With sol | -emn ad | -ora | -tion down | they cast
Their crowns | inwove | with am | -arant | and gold."
MILTON: Paradise Lost, B. iii, l. 344.

Example III.—Deceptive Glosses.

"The world | is still | deceiv'd | with or | -nament.
In law, | what plea | so taint | -ed and | corrupt,
But, be | -ing sea | -son'd with | a gra | -cious voice,
Obscures | the show | of e | -vil? In | religi~on,
What dam | —n~ed er | -ror, but | some so | -ber brow
Will bless | it, and | approve | it with | a text,
Hid~ing | the gross | -ness with | fair or | -nament?"
SHAKSPEARE: Merch. of Venice, Act iii, Sc. 2.

Page 1554

Example IV.—Praise God.

“Ye head | -long tor | -rents, rap | -id, and | profound;
 Ye soft | -er floods, | that lead | the hu | -mid maze
 Along | the vale; | and thou, | majes | -tic main,
 A se | -cret world | of won | -ders in | thyself,
 Sound His | stupen | -dous | praise; | whose great | -er voice
 Or bids | you roar, | or bids | your roar | -ings fall.”

THOMSON: Hymn to the Seasons.

Example V.—The Christian Spirit.

“Like him | the soul, | thus kin | -dled from | above,
 Spreads wide | her arms | of u | -niver | -sal love;
 And, still | enlarg’d | as she | receives | the grace,
 Includes | cr~e=a | -tion in | her close | embrace.
 Behold | a Chris | -tian! and | without | the fires
 The found | -_~er of_ | that name | alone | inspires,
Though all | accom | -plishment, | all knowl | -edge meet,
To make | the shin | -ing prod | -igy | complete,
Whoev | -er boasts | that name— | behold | a cheat!”

COWPER: Charity; Poems, Vol. i, p. 135.

Example VI.—To London.

“Ten right | -eous would | have sav’d | a cit | -y once,
 And thou | hast man | -y right | -eous.—Well | for thee—
 That salt | preserves | thee; more | corrupt | -ed else,
 And there | -fore more | obnox | -ious, at | this hour,
 Than Sod | -om in | her day | had pow’r | to be,
 For whom | God heard | his Abr’ | -ham plead | in vain.”

IDEM: The Task, Book iii, at the end.

This verse, the iambic pentameter, is the regular English heroic—a stately species, and that in which most of our great poems are composed, whether epic, dramatic, or descriptive. It is well adapted to rhyme, to the composition of sonnets, to the formation of stanzas of several sorts; and yet is, perhaps, the only measure suitable for blank verse—which latter form always demands a subject of some dignity or sublimity.

The Elegiac Stanza, or the form of verse most commonly used by elegists, consists of four heroics rhyming alternately; as,

“Thou knowst | how trans | -port thrills | the ten | -der breast,
 Where love | and fan | -cy fix | their ope | -ning reign;

How na | -ture shines | in live | -lier col | -ours dress'd,
To bless | their un | -ion, and | to grace | their train."
SHENSTONE: British Poets, Vol. vii, p. 106.

Iambic verse is seldom continued perfectly pure through a long succession of lines. Among its most frequent diversifications, are the following; and others may perhaps be noticed hereafter:—

(1.) The first foot is often varied by a substitutional trochee; as,

Page 1555

“Bacchus, | that first | from out | the pur | -ple grape
 Crush’d the | sweet poi | -son of | mis-=us | -ed wine,
 After | the Tus | -can mar | -iners | transform’d,
 Coasting | the Tyr | -rhene shore, | as th~e | winds list_~ed_,
 On Cir | -ce’s isl | -and fell. | Who knows | not Cir_c~e_,
 The daugh | -ter of | the sun? | whose charm | -ed cup
 Whoev | -er tast | -ed, lost | his up | -right shape,
 And down | -ward fell | _=into_ a grov | -elling swine.”
 MILTON: Comus; British Poets, Vol. ii, p. 147.

(2.) By a synaeresis of the two short syllables, an anapest may sometimes be employed for an iambus; or a dactyl, for a trochee. This occurs chiefly where one unaccented vowel precedes an other in what we usually regard as separate syllables, and both are clearly heard, though uttered perhaps in so quick succession that both syllables may occupy only half the time of a long one. Some prosodists, however, choose to regard these substitutions as instances of trissyllabic feet mixed with the others; and, doubtless, it is in general easy to make them such, by an utterance that avoids, rather than favours, the coalescence. The following are examples:—

“No rest: | through man | _-y a dark_ | and drear | -y vale
 They pass’d, | and man | _-y a re_ | -gion dol | -orous,
 O’er man | _-y a fro_ | -zen, man | _-y a fi_ | _-ery Alp_.”
 —MILTON: P. L., B. ii, l. 618.

“Rejoice | ye na | -tions, vin | -dicate | the sway
 Ordain’d | for com | -mon hap | -piness. | Wide, o’er
 The globe | terra | _-queous, let_ | Britan | _-nia pour_
 The fruits | of plen | -ty from | her co | _-pious horn_.”
 —DYER: Fleece, B. iv, l. 658.

“Myriads | of souls | that knew | one pa | -rent mold,
 See sad | -ly sev | er’d by | the laws | of chance!
 Myriads, | in time’s | peren | _-nial list_ | enroll’d,
 Forbid | by fate | to change | one tran | _-sient glance!_”
 SHENSTONE: British Poets, Vol. vii, p. 109.

(3.) In plays, and light or humorous descriptions, the last foot of an iambic line is often varied or followed by an additional short syllable; and, sometimes, in verses of triple rhyme, there is an addition of two short syllables, after the principal rhyming syllable. Some prosodists call the variant foot, in the former instance, an amphibrach, and would probably, in the latter, suppose either an additional pyrrhic, or an amphibrach with still a surplus syllable; but others scan, in these cases, by the iambus only, calling what remains after the last long syllable hypermeter; and this is, I think, the better way. The following examples show these and some other variations from pure iambic measure:

—

Example 1.—Grief.

Page 1556

“Each sub | st~ance of | a grief | hath twen | -ty shad_ows_,
 Which show | like grief | itself, | but are | not so:
 For sor | -row’s eye, | gl=az~ed | with blind | -ing tears,
 Divides one thing | entire | to man |—y ob_j~ects_;
 Like per | -spectives, | which, right | -ly gaz’d | upon,
 Show noth | -ing but | confu | -sion; ey’d | awry,
 Distin | -guish form: | so your | sweet maj | -esty,
 Lo=ok~ing | awry | upon | your lord’s | depart_~ure_,
 Finds shapes | of grief, | more than | himself, | to wail;
 Which, look’d | on as | it is, | is nought | but shad_~ows_.”
 SHAKSPEARE: Richard II, Act ii, Sc. 2.

Example II.—A Wish to Please.

“O, that | I had | the art | of eas | -y writing
 What should | be eas | -y read | -ing | could | I scale
 Parnas | -sus, where | the Mus | -es sit | in_diting_
 Those pret | -ty po | -ems nev | -er known | to fail,
 How quick | -ly would | I print | (the world | de_lighting_)
 A Gre | -cian, Syr | -ian, or | Assy | -ian tale;
 And sell | you, mix’d | with west | -ern sen | -ti_mentalism_,
 Some sam | -ples of | the fin | -est O | -ri_entalism_.”
 LORD BYRON: Beppo, Stanza XLVIII.

MEASURE V.—IAMBIC OF FOUR FEET, OR TETRAMETER.

Example I.—Presidents of the United States of America.

“First stands | the loft | -y Wash | -ington,
 That no | -ble, great, | immor | -tal one;
 The eld | -er Ad | -ams next | we see;
 And Jef | -ferson | comes num | -ber three;
 Then Mad | -ison | is fourth, | you know;
 The fifth | one on | the list, | Monroe;
 The sixth | an Ad | -ams comes | again;
 And Jack | -son, sev | -enth in | the train;
 Van Bu | -ren, eighth | upon | the line;
 And Har | -rison | counts num | -ber nine;
 The tenth | is Ty | -ler, in | his turn;
 And Polk, | elev | -enth, as | we learn;
 The twelfth | is Tay | -lor, peo | -ple say;
 The next | we learn | some fu | -ture day.”
 ANONYMOUS: From Newspaper, 1849.

Example II.—The Shepherd Bard.

“The bard | on Ett | -rick’s moun | tain green
In Na | -ture’s bo | -som nursed | had been,
And oft | had marked | in for | -est lone
Her beau | -ties on | her moun | -tain throne;
Had seen | her deck | the wild | -wood tree,
And star | with snow | -y gems | the lea;
In love | _-li~est c=ol_ | -ours paint | the plain,
And sow | the moor | with pur | -ple grain;
By gold | -en mead | and moun | -tain sheer,
Had viewed | the Ett | -rick wav | -ing clear,
Where shad | _-=ow=y fl=ocks_ | of pur | -est snow
Seemed graz | -ing in | a world | below.”

JAMES HOGG: The Queen’s Wake, p. 76.

Page 1557

Example III.—Two Stanzas from Eighteen, Addressed to the Ettrick Shepherd.

“O Shep | -herd! since | 'tis thine | to boast
 The fas | -cinat | -ing pow'rs | of song,
 Far, far | above | the count | -less host,
 Who swell | the Mus | -es' sup | -pli~ant throng,

The GIFT | OF GOD | distrust | no more,
 His in | -spira | -tion be | thy guide;
 Be heard | thy harp | from shore | to shore,
 Thy song's | reward | thy coun | -try's pride.”
 B. BARTON: Verses prefixed to the Queen's Wake.

Example IV.—“Elegiac Stanzas,” in Iambics of Four feet and Three.

“O for | a dirge! | But why | complain?
 Ask rath | -er a | trium | -phal strain
 When FER | MOR'S race | is run;
 A gar | -land of | immor | -tal boughs
 To bind | around | the Chris | -tian's brows,
 Whose glo | _-rious work_ | is done.

We pay | a high | and ho | -ly debt;
 No tears | of pas | -sionate | regret
 Shall stain | this vo | -tive lay;
 Ill-wor | -thy, Beau | -mont! were | the grief
 That flings | itself | on wild | relief
 When Saints | have passed | away.”

W. WORDSWORTH: Poetical Works, First complete Amer. Ed., p. 208.

This line, the iambic tetrameter, is a favourite one, with many writers of English verse, and has been much used, both in couplets and in stanzas. Butler's Hudibras, Gay's Fables, and many allegories, most of Scott's poetical works, and some of Byron's, are written in couplets of this measure. It is liable to the same diversifications as the preceding metre. The frequent admission of an additional short syllable, forming double rhyme, seems admirably to adapt it to a familiar, humorous, or burlesque style. The following may suffice for an example:—

“First, this | large par | -cel brings | you tidings
 Of our | good Dean's | eter | -nal chidings;
 Of Nel | -ly's pert | -ness, Rob | -in's leasings,
 And Sher | -idan's | perpet | -ual teasings.
 This box | is cramm'd | on ev | -ery side
 With Stel | -la's mag | -iste | -rial pride.”

DEAN SWIFT: British Poets, Vol. v, p. 334.

The following lines have ten syllables in each, yet the measure is not iambic of five feet, but that of four with hypermeter:—

“There was | an =an | -cient sage | phi_losopher_,
Who had | read Al | -exan | -der_Ross over_.”—Butler’s Hudibras_.

“I’ll make | them serve | for per | -pen_diculars_,
As true | as e’er | were us’d | by bricklayers_.”
—Ib., Part ii, C. iii, l. 1020.

MEASURE VI.—IAMBIC OF THREE FEET, OR TRIMETER.

Example.—To Evening.

“Now teach | me, maid | compos’d
To breathe | some soft | -en’d strain.”—Collins, p. 39.

Page 1558

This short measure has seldom, if ever, been used alone in many successive couplets; but it is often found in stanzas, sometimes without other lengths, but most commonly with them. The following are a few examples:—

Example I.—Two ancient Stanzas, out of Many,

“This while | we are | abroad,
Shall we | not touch | our lyre?
Shall we | not sing | an ode?
Shall now | that ho | -ly fire,
In us, | that strong | -ly glow’d,
In this | cold air, | expire?

Though in | the ut | -most peak,
A while | we do | remain,
Amongst | the moun | -tains bleak,
Expos’d | to sleet | and rain,
No sport | our hours | shall break,
To ex | -ercise | our vein.”

DRAYTON: Dr. Johnson’s Gram., p. 13; John Burn’s, p. 244.

Example II.—Acis and Galatea.

“For us | the zeph | -yr blows,
For us | distils | the dew,
For us | unfolds | the rose,
And flow’rs | display | their hue;

For us | the win | -ters rain,
For us | the sum | -mers shine,
Spring swells | for us | the grain,
And au | -tumn bleeds | the vine.”

JOHN GAY: British Poets, Vol. vii, p. 376.

Example III.—“Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin.”

“The king | was on | his throne,
The sa | -traps thronged | the hall;
A thou | -sand bright | lamps shone
O’er that | high fes | -tival.
A thou | -sand cups | of gold,
In Ju | -dah deemed | divine—
Jeho | -vah’s ves | -sels, hold
The god | -less Hea | -then’s wine!

In that | same hour | and hall,
The fin | -gers of | a hand
Came forth | against | the wall,
And wrote | as if | on sand:
The fin | -gers of | a man,—
A sol | -ita | -ry hand
Along | the let | -ters ran,
And traced | them like | a wand.”
LORD BYRON: Vision of Belshazzar.

Example IV.—Lyric Stanzas.

“Descend, | celes | -tial fire,
And seize | me from | above,
Melt me | in flames | of pure | desire,
A sac | -rifice | to love.

Let joy | and wor | -ship spend
The rem | -nant of | my days,
And to | my God, | my soul | ascend,
In sweet | perfumes | of praise.”
WATTS: Poems sacred to Devotion, p. 50.

Example V.—Lyric Stanzas.

“I would | begin | the mu | -sic here,
And so | my soul | should rise:
O for | some heav’n | -ly notes | to bear
My spir | -it to | the skies!

There, ye | that love | my say | -iour, sit,
There I | would fain | have place
Amongst | your thrones | or at | your feet,
So I | might see | his face.”
WATTS: Same work, “Horae Lyricae,” p. 71.

Page 1559

Example VI.—England's Dead.

"The hur | -ricane | hath might
Along | the In | -dian shore,
And far, | by Gan | -ges' banks | at night,
Is heard | the ti | -ger's roar.

But let | the sound | roll on!
It hath | no tone | of dread
For those | that from | their toils | are gone;—
There slum | -ber Eng | -land's dead."
HEMANS: Poetical Works, Vol. ii, p. 61.

The following examples have some of the common diversifications already noticed under the longer measures:—

Example I.—"Languedocian Air."

"L=ove ~is | a hunt | -er boy,
Who makes | young hearts | his prey;
And in | his nets | of joy
Ensnares | them night | and day.

In vain | conceal'd | they lie,
Love tracks | them ev' | -ry where;
In vain | aloft | they fly,
Love shoots | them fly | -ing there.

But 'tis | his joy | most sweet,
At earl | -y dawn | to trace
The print | of Beau | -ty's feet,
And give | the trem | -bler chase.

And most | he loves | through snow
To track | those foot | -steps fair,
For then | the boy | doth know,
None track'd | before | him there."
MOORE'S Melodies and National Airs, p. 274.

Example II.—From "a Portuguese Air."

"Flow on, | thou shin | -ing river,
But ere | thou reach | the sea,
Seek El | -la's bower, | and give her
The wreaths | I fling | o'er thee.

But, if | in wand' | -ring thither,
Thou find | she mocks | my pray'r,
Then leave | those wreaths | to wither
Upon | the cold | bank there."
MOORE: Same Volume, p. 261.

Example III.—Resignation.

"O Res | -igna | -tion! yet | unsung,
Untouch'd | by for | -mer strains;
Though claim | -ing ev | -ery mu | -se's smile,
And ev | -ery po | -et's pains!

All oth | -er du | -ties cres | -cents are
Of vir | -tue faint | -ly bright;
The glo | -rious con | -summa | -tion, thou,
Which fills | her orb | with light!"
YOUNG: British Poets, Vol. viii, p. 377.

MEASURE VII.—IAMBIC OF TWO FEET, OR DIMETER.

Example—A Scolding Wife.

1.

"There was | a man
Whose name | was Dan,
Who sel | -dom spoke;
His part | -ner sweet
He thus | did greet,
Without | a joke;

2.

My love | -ly wife,
Thou art | the life
Of all | my joys;
Without | thee, I
Should sure | -ly die
For want | of noise.

Page 1560

3.

O, prec | -ious one,
Let thy | tongue run
In a | sweet fret;
And this | will give
A chance | to live,
A long | time yet.

4.

When thou | dost scold
So loud | and bold,
I'm kept | awake;
But if | thou leave,
It will | me grieve,
Till life | forsake.

5.

Then said | his wife,
I'll have | no strife
With you, | sweet Dan;
As 'tis | your mind,
I'll let | you find
I am | your man.

6.

And fret | I will,
To keep | you still
Enjoy | -ing life;
So you | may be
Content | with me,
A scold | -ing wife."

ANONYMOUS: Cincinnati Herald, 1844.

Iambic dimeter, like the metre of three iambs, is much less frequently used alone than in stanzas with longer lines; but the preceding example is a refutation of the idea, that no piece is ever composed wholly of this measure, or that the two feet cannot constitute a line. In Humphrey's English Prosody, on page 16th, is the following paragraph; which is not only defective in style, but erroneous in all its averments:—

“Poems are never composed of lines of two [-] feet metre, in succession: they [combinations of two feet] are only used occasionally in poems, hymns, odes, &c. to diversify the metre; and are, in no case, lines of poetry, or verses; but hemistichs, [hemistichs,] or half lines. The shortest metre of which iambic verse is composed, in lines successively, is that of three feet; and this is the shortest metre which can be denominated lines, or verses; and this is not frequently used.”

In ballads, ditties, hymns, and versified psalms, scarcely any line is more common than the iambic trimeter, here denied to be “frequently used;” of which species, there are about seventy lines among the examples above. Dr. Young’s poem entitled “Resignation,” has eight hundred and twenty such lines, and as many more of iambic tetrameter. His “Ocean” has one hundred and forty-five of the latter, and two hundred and ninety-two of the species now under consideration; i.e., iambic dimeter. But how can the metre which predominates by two to one, be called, in such a case, an occasional diversification of that which is less frequent?

Lines of two iambs are not very uncommon, even in psalmody; and, since we have some lines yet shorter, and the lengths of all are determined only by the act of measuring, there is, surely, no propriety in calling dimeters “hemistichs,” merely because they are short. The following are some examples of this measure combined with longer ones:—

Example I.—From Psalm CXLVIII.

1, 2.

“Ye bound | -less realms | of joy,
Exalt | your Ma | -ker’s fame;
His praise | your songs | employ
Above | the star | -ry frame:
Your voi | -ces raise,
Ye Cher | -ubim,
And Ser | -aphim,
To sing | his praise.

Page 1561

3, 4.

Thou moon, | that rul'st | the night,
And sun, | that guid'st | the day,
Ye glitt' | -ring stars | of light,
To him | your hom | -age pay:
His praise | declare,
Ye heavens | above,
And clouds | that move
In liq | -uid air."

The Book of Psalms in Metre, (with Com. Prayer,) 1819.

Example II.—From Psalm CXXXVI.

"To God | the might | -y Lord,
your joy | -ful thanks | repeat;
To him | due praise | afford,
as good | as he | is great:
For God | does prove
Our con | -stant friend,
His bound | -less love
Shall nev | -er end."—Ib., p. 164.

Example III.—Gloria Patri.

"To God | the Fa | -ther, Son,
And Spir | -it ev | -er bless'd,
Eter | -nal Three | in One,
All wor | -ship be | address'd;
As here | -tofore
It was, | is now,
And shall | be so
For ev | -ermore."—Ib., p. 179.

Example IV.—Part of Psalm III.

[O] "Lord, | how man | -y are | my foes!
How man | -y those
That [now] | in arms | against | me rise!
Many | are they
That of | my life | distrust | -fully | thus say:
'No help | for him | in God | there lies.'

But thou, | Lord, art | my shield | my glo_ry_;
Thee, through | my sto_ry_,

Th' exalt | -er of | my head | I count;
 Aloud | I cried
 Unto | Jeho | -vah, he | full soon | replied,
 And heard | me from | his ho | -ly mount."
 MILTON: Psalms Versified, British Poets, Vol. ii, p. 161.

Example V.—Six Lines of an "Air."

"As when | the dove
 Laments | her love
 All on | the na | -ked spray;

 When he | returns,
 No more | she mourns,
 But loves | the live | -long day."
 JOHN GAY: British Poets, Vol. vii, p. 377.

Example VI.—Four Stanzas of an Ode.

"XXVIII.
 Gold pleas | -ure buys;
 But pleas | -ure dies",
 Too soon | the gross | fruiti | -on cloys:
 Though rapt | -ures court,
 The sense | is short;
 But vir | -tue kin | -dles liv | -ing joys:

 XXIX.
 Joys felt | alone!
 Joys ask'd | of none!
 Which Time's | and For | -tune's ar | -rows miss;
 Joys that | subsist,
 Though fates | resist,
 An un | -preca | -rious, end | -less bliss!

 XXX.
 The soul | refin'd
 Is most | inclin'd
 To ev | -_~er=y m=or_ | -al ex | -cellence;
 All vice | is dull,
 A knave's | a fool;
 And Vir | -tue is | the child | of Sense.

Page 1562

XXXI.

The vir | -tuous mind
 Nor wave, | nor wind,
 Nor civ | -il rage, | nor ty | -rant's frown,
 The shak | -en ball,
 Nor plan | -ets' fall,
 From its | firm ba | -sis can | dethrone."

YOUNG'S "OCEAN:" British Poets, Vol. viii, p 277.

There is a line of five syllables and double rhyme, which is commonly regarded as iambic dimeter with a supernumerary short syllable; and which, though it is susceptible of two other divisions into two feet, we prefer to scan in this manner, because it usually alternates with pure iambics. Twelve such lines occur in the following extract:—

LOVE TRANSITORY

"Could Love | for ev_er_
 Run like | a riv_er_,
 And Time's | endeav_our_
 Be tried | in vain,—
 No oth | -er pleas_ure_
 With this | could meas_ure_;
 And like | a treas_ure_
 We'd hug | the chain.

But since | our sigh_ing_
 Ends not | in dy_ing_,
 And, formed | for fly_ing_,
 Love plumes | his wing;
 Then for | this rea_son_
 Let's love | a sea_son_;
 But let | that sea_son_
 Be on | -ly spring."

LORD BYRON: See Everett's Versification, p. 19;
Fowler's E. Gram., p. 650.

MEASURE VIII.—IAMBIC OF ONE FOOT, OR MONOMETER.

"The shortest form of the English Iambic," says Lindley Murray, "consists of an Iambus with an additional short syllable: as,

Disdaining,
Complaining,
Consenting,
Repenting.

We have no poem of this measure, but it may be met with in stanzas. The iambus, with this addition, coincides with the Amphibrach.”—Murray’s Gram., 12mo, p. 204; 8vo, p. 254. This, or the substance of it, has been repeated by many other authors. Everett varies the language and illustration, but teaches the same doctrine. See E. Versif., p. 15.

Now there are sundry examples which may be cited to show, that the iambus, without any additional syllable, and without the liability of being confounded with an other foot, may, and sometimes does, stand as a line, and sustain a regular rhyme. The following pieces contain instances of this sort:—

Example I.—“How to Keep Lent.”

“Is this | a Fast, | to keep
The lard | -er lean
And clean
From fat | of neats | and sheep?

Is it | to quit | the dish
Of flesh, | yet still
To fill
The plat | -ter high | with fish?

Is it | to fast | an hour,
Or ragg’d | to go,
Or show
A down | -cast look | and sour?

No:—’Tis | a Fast | to dole
Thy sheaf | of wheat,
And meat,
Unto | the hun | -gry soul.

It is | to fast | from strife,
From old | debate,
And hate;
To cir | -cumcise | thy life;

Page 1563

To show | a heart | grief-rent;
 To starve | thy sin,
 Not bin:

Ay, that's | to keep | thy Lent."

ROBERT HERRICK: Clapp's Pioneer, p. 48.

Example II.—"To Mary Ann."

[This singular arrangement of seventy-two separate iambic feet, I find without intermediate points, and leave it so. It seems intended to be read in three or more different ways, and the punctuation required by one mode of reading would not wholly suit an other.]

"Your face	Your tongue	Your wit
So fair	So sweet	So sharp
First bent	Then drew	Then hit
Mine eye	Mine ear	Mine heart

Mine eye	Mine ear	Mine heart
To like	To learn	To love
Your face	Your tongue	Your wit
Doth lead	Doth teach	Doth move

Your face	Your tongue	Your wit
With beams	With sound	With art
Doth blind	Doth charm	Doth rule
Mine eye	Mine ear	Mine heart

Mine eye	Mine ear	Mine heart
With life	With hope	With skill
Your face	Your tongue	Your wit
Doth feed	Doth feast	Doth fill

O face	O tongue	O wit
With frowns	With cheek	With smart
Wrong not	Vex not	Wound not
Mine eye	Mine ear	Mine heart

This eye	This ear	This heart
Shall joy	Shall bend	Shall swear
Your face	Your tongue	Your wit

To serve To trust To fear.”

ANONYMOUS: Sundry American Newspapers, in 1849.

Example III.—Umbrellas.

“The late George Canning, of whom Byron said that ‘it was his happiness to be at once a wit, poet, orator, and statesman, and excellent in all,’ is the author of the following clever jeu d’esprit:” [except three lines here added in brackets:]

“I saw | a man | with two | umbrellas,
 (One of | the lon |—gest kind | of fellows,)
 When it rained,
 M=eet =a | l=ady
 On the | shady
 Side of | thirty |-three,
 Minus | one of | these rain |-dispellers.
 ‘I see,’
 Says she,
 ‘Your qual | -ity | of mer | -cy is | not strained.’
 [Not slow | to comprehend | an inkling,
 His eye | with wag |-gish hu |-mour twinkling.]
 Replied | he, ‘Ma’am,
 Be calm;
 This one | under | my arm
 Is rotten,
 [And can |-not save | you from | a sprinkling.]
 Besides | to keep | you dry,
 ‘Tis plain | that you | as well | as I,
 ‘Can lift | your cotton.’”
 See The Essex County Freeman, Vol. i, No. 1.

Example IV.—Shreds of a Song.

I. SPRING.

“The cuck |—oo then, | on ev |—ery tree,
 Mocks mar |—ried men, | for thus | sings he, Cuckoo’;
 Cuckoo’, | cuckoo’,— | O word | of fear,
 Unpleas |-ing to | a mar |-ried ear!”

Page 1564

II. WINTER.

“When blood | is nipp’d, | and ways | be foul,
 Then night | -ly sings | the star | -ing owl, To-who;
 To-whit, | to-who, | a mer | -ry note,
 While greas | -y Joan | doth keel | the pot.”
 —SHAKESPEARE: Love’s Labour’s Lost, Act v, Sc. 2.

Example V.—Puck’s Charm.

[When he has uttered the fifth line, he squeezes a juice on Lysander’s eyes.]

“On the ground,
 Sleep sound;
 I’ll apply
 To your eye,
 Gentle | lover, | remedy.
 When thou wak’st,
 Thou tak’st
 True delight
 In the sight
 Of thy | former | lady’s eye.” [508]
 IDEM: Midsummer-Night’s Dream, Act iii, Sc. 2.

ORDER II.—TROCHAIC VERSE.

In Trochaic verse, the stress is laid on the odd syllables, and the even ones are short. Single-rhymed trochaic omits the final short syllable, that it may end with a long one; for the common doctrine of Murray, Chandler, Churchill, Bullions, Butler, Everett, Fowler, Weld, Wells, Mulligan, and others, that this chief rhyming syllable is “additional” to the real number of feet in the line, is manifestly incorrect. One long syllable is, in some instances, used as a foot; but it is one or more short syllables only, that we can properly admit as hypermeter. Iambics and trochaics often occur in the same poem; but, in either order, written with exactness, the number of feet is always the number of the long syllables.

Examples from Gray’s Bard.

(1.)

“Ruin | seize thee, | ruthless | king! Confu | -sion on | thy ban | -ners wait, Though, fann’d
 | by Con | -quest’s crim | -son wing. They mock | the air | with i | -dle state. Helm, nor | hauberk’s | twisted | mail, Nor e’en | thy vir | -tues, ty | -rant, shall | avail.”

(2.)

"Weave the | warp, and | weave the | woof,
The wind | -ing-sheet | of Ed | -ward's race.
Give am | -ple room, | and verge | enough,
The char | -acters | of hell | to trace.
Mark the | year, and | mark the | night,
When Sev | -ern shall | re-ech | -o with | affright."
"The Bard, a Pindaric Ode;"
British Poets, Vol. vii, p. 281 and 282.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Trochaic verse without the final short syllable, is the same as iambic would be without the initial short syllable;—it being quite plain, that iambic, so changed, becomes trochaic, and is iambic no longer. But trochaic, retrenched of its last short syllable, is trochaic still; and can no otherwise be made iambic, than by the prefixing of a short syllable to the line. Feet, and the orders of verse, are distinguished one from an other by two things, and in general by two only; the number of syllables taken as a foot, and the order of their quantities. Trochaic verse is always as distinguishable from iambic, as iambic is from any other. Yet have we several grammarians and prosodies who contrive to confound them—or who, at least, mistake catalectic trochaic for catalectic iambic; and that too, where the syllable wanting affects only the last foot, and makes it perhaps but a common and needful caesura.

Page 1565

OBS. 2.—To suppose that iambic verse may drop its initial short syllable, and still be iambic, still be measured as before, is not only to take a single long syllable for a foot, not only to recognize a pedal caesura at the beginning of each line, but utterly to destroy the only principles on which iambics and trochaics can be discriminated. Yet Hiley, of Leeds, and Wells, of Andover, while they are careful to treat separately of these two orders of verse, not only teach that any order may take at the end “an additional syllable,” but also suggest that the iambic may drop a syllable “from the first foot,” without diminishing the number of feet,—without changing the succession of quantities,—without disturbing the mode of scansion! “Sometimes,” say they, (in treating of iambics,) “a syllable is cut off from the first foot; as,

Praise | to God, | immor |-tal praise,
For | the love | that crowns | our days.”[—BARBAULD.]
Hiley’s E. Gram., Third Edition, London, p. 124;
Wells’s, Third Edition, p. 198.

OBS. 3.—Now this couplet is the precise exemplar, not only of the thirty-six lines of which it is a part, but also of the most common of our trochaic metres; and if this may be thus scanned into iambic verse, so may all other trochaic lines in existence: distinction between the two orders must then be worse than useless. But I reject this doctrine, and trust that most readers will easily see its absurdity. A prosodist might just as well scan all iambics into trochaics, by pronouncing each initial short syllable to be hypermeter. For, surely, if deficiency may be discovered at the beginning of measurement, so may redundancy. But if neither is to be looked for before the measurement ends, (which supposition is certainly more reasonable,) then is the distinction already vindicated, and the scansion above-cited is shown to be erroneous.

OBS. 4.—But there are yet other objections to this doctrine, other errors and inconsistencies in the teaching of it. Exactly the same kind of verse as this, which is said to consist of “four iambuses” from one of which “a syllable is cut off,” is subsequently scanned by the same authors as being composed of “three trochees and an additional syllable; as,

'Haste thee, | Nymph, and | bring with | thee
Jest and | youthful | Jolli |-ty.'—MILTON."
Wells's School Grammar, p. 200.

Page 1566

"V=it~al | sp=ark of | he=av'nly | fl=me,
Q=uit oh | q=uit this | m=ort~al | fr=ame." [509][—POPE.]

Hiley's English Grammar, p. 126.

There is, in the works here cited, not only the inconsistency of teaching two very different modes of scanning the same species of verse, but in each instance the scansion is wrong; for all the lines in question are trochaic of four feet,—single-rhymed, and, of course, catalectic, and ending with a caesura, or elision. In no metre that lacks but one syllable, can this sort of foot occur at the beginning of a line; yet, as we see, it is sometimes imagined to be there, by those who have never been able to find it at the end, where it oftenest exists!

OBS. 5.—I have hinted, in the main paragraph above, that it is a common error of our prosodists, to underrate, by one foot, the measure of all trochaic lines, when they terminate with single rhyme; an error into which they are led by an other as gross, that of taking for hypermeter, or mere surplus, the whole rhyme itself, the sound or syllable most indispensable to the verse.

"(For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which, like ships, they steer their courses.)"—Hudibras.

Iambics and trochaics, of corresponding metres, and exact in them, agree of course in both the number of feet and the number of syllables; but as the former are slightly redundant with double rhyme, so the latter are deficient as much, with single rhyme; yet, the number of feet may, and should, in these cases, be reckoned the same. An estimable author now living says, "Trochaic verse, with an additional long syllable, is the same as iambic verse, without the initial short syllable."—N. Butler's Practical Gram., p. 193. This instruction is not quite accurate. Nor would it be right, even if there could be "iambic verse without the initial short syllable," and if it were universally true, that, "Trochaic verse may take an additional long syllable."—Ibid. For the addition and subtraction here suggested, will inevitably make the difference of a foot, between the measures or verses said to be the same!

OBS. 6.—"I doubt," says T. O. Churchill, "whether the trochaic can be considered as a legitimate English measure. All the examples of it given by Johnson have an additional long syllable at the end: but these are iambics, if we look upon the additional syllable to be at the beginning, which is much more agreeable to the analogy of music."—Churchill's New Gram., p. 390. This doubt, ridiculous as must be all reasoning in support of it, the author seriously endeavours to raise into a general conviction that we have no trochaic order of verse! It can hardly be worth while to notice here all his remarks. "An additional long syllable" Johnson never dreamed of—"at the end"—"at the beginning”—or anywhere else. For he discriminated metres, not by the number of feet, as he ought to have done, but by the number of syllables he found in each line. His doctrine is this: “Our iambick measure comprises verses—Of four syllables,—Of six,—Of eight,—Of ten. Our trochaick measures are—Of three syllables,—Of five,—Of seven. These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton’s Polyolbion; and of fourteen, as Chapman’s Homer.” “We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the anapestick.”

Page 1567

‘May I govern my passion with absolute sway,
And grow wiser and better as life wears away.’ Dr. Pope.

“In this measure a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot, [;] as [,]

‘When present we love, and when absent agree,
I th’nk not of l’ris [,] nor l’ris of me.’ Dryden.

“These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick measure.

’Tis the divinity that stirs within us,
’Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter..’ Addison.

“So in that of eight syllables,

’They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded.’ Prior.

“In that of seven,

’For resistance I could fear none,
But with twenty ships had done,
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast achieved with six alone.’ Glover.

“To these measures and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.”—Dr. Johnson’s Grammar of the English Tongue, p. 14. See his Quarto Dict. Here, except a few less important remarks, and sundry examples of the metres named, is Johnson’s whole scheme of versification.

OBS. 7.—How, when a prosodist judges certain examples to “have an additional long syllable at the end,” he can “look upon the additional syllable to be at the beginning,” is a matter of marvel; yet, to abolish trochaics, Churchill not only does and advises this, but imagines short syllables removed sometimes from the beginning of lines; while sometimes he couples final short syllables with initial long ones, to make iambs, and yet does not always count these as feet in the verse, when he has done so! Johnson's instructions are both misunderstood and misrepresented by this grammarian. I have therefore cited them the more fully. The first syllable being retrenched from an anapest, there remains an iambus. But what countenance has Johnson lent to the gross error of reckoning such a foot an anapest still?—or to that of commencing the measurement of a line by including a syllable not used by the poet? The preceding stanza from Glover, is trochaic of four feet; the odd lines full, and of course making double rhyme; the even lines catalectic, and of course ending with a long syllable counted as a foot. Johnson cited it merely as an example of “double endings” imagining in it no “additional syllable,” except perhaps the two which terminate the two trochees, “fear none” and “Vernon.” These, it may be inferred, he improperly conceived to be additional to the regular measure; because he reckoned measures by the number of syllables, and probably supposed single rhyme to be the normal form of all rhyming verse.

Page 1568

OBS. 8.—There is false scansion in many a school grammar, but perhaps none more uncouthly false, than Churchill's pretended amendments of Johnson's. The second of these—wherein “the old seven[-]_foot iambic_” is professedly found in two lines of Glover's trochaic tetrameter—I shall quote:—

“In the anapaestic measure, Johnson himself allows, that a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot; yet he gives as an example of trochaics with an additional syllable at the end of the even lines a stanza, which, by adopting the same principle, would be in the iambic measure:

“For | resis- | tance | I | could fear | none,
But | with twen | ty ships | had done,
What | thou, brave | and hap | py Ver- | non,
Hast | achiev’d | with six | alone.

In fact, the second and fourth lines here stamp the character of the measure; [Fist] which is the old seven[-]foot iambic broken into four and three, WITH AN ADDITIONAL SYLLABLE AT THE BEGINNING.”—Churchill’s New Gram., p. 391.

After these observations and criticisms concerning the trochaic order of verse, I proceed to say, trochaics consist of the following measures, or metres:—

MEASURE I.—TROCHAIC OF EIGHT FEET, OR OCTOMETER.

Example I.—“The Raven”—First Two out of Eighteen Stanzas.

1.

“Once up | -on a | midnight | dreary, | while I | pondered, | weak and
 | weary,
 Over | m=any ~a | quaint and | c=ur~io~us | volume | of for
 | -gotten | lore,
 While I | nodded, | nearly | napping, | sudden |-ly there | came a

| tapping,
As of | some one | gently | rapping, | rapping | at my | chamber

| door.
"Tis some | visit | -or,' I | muttered, | 'tapping | at my | chamber

| door--
Only | this, and | nothing | more."

2.

9.

Out a |—las! if | mightiest | empires | leave so | little | mark be | -hind,
How much | less must | heroes | hope for, | in the | wreck of | human
| kind!
Less than | e'en this | darksome | picture, | which I | tread be
| -neath my | feet,
Copied | by a | lifeless | moonbeam | on the | pebbles | of the | street;
Since if | Caesar's | best am | -bition, | living, | was, to | be re
| -nowned,
What shall | Cassar | leave be | -hind him, | save the | shadow | of a
| sound?"
T. W. PARSONS: Lowell and Carter's "Pioneer," Vol. i, p. 120.

Example III.—"The Slaves of Martinique."—Nine Couplets out of Thirty-six.

Page 1570

“Beams of | noon, like | burning | lances, | through the | tree-tops
| flash and | glisten,
As she | stands be | -fore her | lover, | with raised | face to
| look and | listen.

Dark, but | comely, | like the | maiden | in the | ancient | Jewish
| song,
Scarcely | has the | toil of | task-fields | done her graceful | beauty
| wrong.

He, the | strong one, | and the | manly, | with the | vassal’s
| garb and | hue,
Holding | still his | spirit’s | birthright, | to his | higher | nature
| true;

Hiding | deep the | strengthening | purpose | of a | freeman | in his | heart,
As the | Greegree | holds his | Fetish | from the | white man’s
| gaze a | -part.

Ever | foremost | of the | toilers, | when the | driver’s | morning
| horn
Calls a | -way to | stifling | millhouse, | or to | fields of
| cane and | corn;

Fall the | keen and | burning | lashes | never | on his | back or
| limb;
Scarce with | look or | word of | censure, | turns the | driver | unto
| him.

Yet his | brow is | always | thoughtful, | and his | eye is | hard and
| stern;
Slavery’s | last and | humblest | lesson | he has | never
| deigned to | learn.”

“And, at evening | when his | comrades | dance be | -fore their
| master’s | door,
Folding arms and | knitting | forehead, | stands he | silent | ever
|-more.

God be | praised for | every | instinct | which re | -bels a | -gainst a
| lot

Where the | brute sur | -vives the | human, | and man's | upright
| form is | not!"

—J. G. WHITTIER: National Era, and other Newspapers, Jan. 1848.

Example IV.—“The Present Crisis”—Two Stanzas out of sixteen.

“Once to | every | man and | nation | comes the | moment | to de
| -cide,
In the | strife of | Truth with | Falsehood, | for the | good or | evil
| side;
Some great | cause, God's | new Mes | -siah, | offering | each the
| bloom or | blight,
Parts the | goats up | -on the | left hand, | and the | sheep up
| -on the | right,
And the | choice goes | by for | -ever | 'twixt that | darkness
| and that | light.

Have ye | chosen, | O my | people, | on whose | party | ye shall
| stand,
Ere the | Doom from | its worn | sandals | shakes the | dust a
| -gainst our | land?
Though the | cause of | evil | prosper, | yet the | Truth a | -lone is | strong,
And, al | beit she | wander | outcast | now, I | see a | -round her
| throng
Troops of | beauti | -ful tall | angels | to en | -shield her
| from all | wrong.”
JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL: Liberator, September 4th, 1846.

Example V.—The Season of Love.—A short Extract.

Page 1571

“In the | Spring, a | fuller | crimson | comes up | -on the | robin’s
 | breast;
 In the | Spring, the | wanton | lapwing | gets him | -self an | other
 | crest;
 In the | Spring, a | livelier | iris | changes | on the | burnished
 | dove;
 In the | Spring, a | young man’s | fancy | lightly | turns to
 | thoughts of | love.

Then her | cheek was | pale, and | thinner | than should | be for
 | one so | young;
 And her | eyes on | all my | motions, | with a | mute ob | -servance,
 | hung.
 And I | said, ‘My | cousin | Amy, | speak, and | speak the | truth to
 | me;
 Trust me, | cousin, | all the | current | of my | being | sets to
 | thee.’”

Poems by ALFRED TENNYSON, Vol. ii, p. 35.

Trochaic of eight feet, as these sundry examples will suggest, is much oftener met with than iambic of the same number; and yet it is not a form very frequently adopted. The reader will observe that it requires a considerable pause after the fourth foot; at which place one might divide it, and so reduce each couplet to a stanza of four lines, similar to the following examples:—

PART OF A SONG, IN DIALOGUE.

SYLVIA.

“Corin, | cease this | idle | teasing;
 Love that’s | forc’d is | harsh and | sour;
 If the | lover | be dis | -pleasing,
 To per | -sist dis | -gusts the | more.”

CORIN.

“‘Tis in | vain, in | vain to | fly me,
Sylvia, | I will | still pur | -sue;
 Twenty | thousand | times de | -ny me,
 I will | kneel and | weep a | -new.”

SYLVIA.

“Cupid | ne’er shall | make me | languish,
I was | born a | -verse to | love;
Lovers’ | sighs, and | tears, and | anguish,
Mirth and | pastime | to me | prove.”

CORIN.

“Still I | vow with | patient | duty
Thus to | meet your | proudest | scorn;
You for | unre | -lenting | beauty
I for | constant | love was | born.”

Poems by ANNA LAETITIA BARBAULD, p. 56.

PART OF A CHARITY HYMN.

1.

“Lord of | life, all | praise ex | -celling,
thou, in | glory | uncon | -fin’d,
Deign’st to | make thy | humble | dwelling
with the | poor of | humble | mind.

2.

As thy | love, through | all cre | -ation,
beams like | thy dif | -fusive | light;
So the | scorn’d and | humble | station
shrinks be | -fore thine | equal | sight.

3.

Thus thy | care, for | all pro | -viding,
warm’d thy | faithful | prophet’s | tongue;
Who, the | lot of | all de | -ciding,
to thy | chosen | Israel | sung:

4.

Page 1572

'When thine | harvest | yields thee | pleasure,
thou the | golden | sheaf shalt | bind;
To the | poor be | -longs the | treasure
of the | scatter'd | ears be | -hind.'"

Psalms and Hymns of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Hymn LV.

A still more common form is that which reduces all these tetrameters to single rhymes, preserving their alternate succession. In such metre and stanza, is Montgomery's "Wanderer of Switzerland, a Poem, in Six Parts," and with an aggregate of eight hundred and forty-four lines. Example:—

1.

"'Wanderer, | whither | wouldst thou | roam?
To what | region | far a | -way,
Bend thy | steps to | find a | home,
In the | twilight | of thy | day?'

2.

'In the | twilight | of my | day,
I am | hastening | to the | west;
There my | weary limbs | to lay,
Where the | sun re | -tires to | rest.

3.

Far be | -yond the At | -lantic | floods,
Stretched be | -neath the | evening | sky,
Realms of | mountains, | dark with | woods,
In Co | -lumbia's | bosom | lie.

4.

There, in | glens and | caverns | rude,
Silent | since the | world be | -gan,
Dwells the | virgin | Soli | -tude,
Unbe | -trayed by | faithless | man:

5.

Where a | tyrant | never | trod,
Where a | slave was | never | known,
But where | nature | worships | God
In the | wilder | -ness a | -lone.

6.

Thither, | thither | would I | roam;
There my | children | may be | free;
I for | them will | find a | home;
They shall | find a | grave for | me.”

First six stanzas of Part VI, pp. 71 and 72.

MEASURE II.—TROCHAIC OF SEVEN FEET, OR HEPTAMETER.

Example.—Psalm LXX,[510] Versified.

Hasten, | Lord, to | rescue | me, and | set me | safe from | trouble;
Shame thou | those who | seek my | soul, re | -ward their | mischief
| double.
Turn the | taunting | scorners | back, who | cry, ‘A | -ha!’ so
| loudly;
Backward | in con | -fusion | hurl the | foe that | mocks me | proudly.
Then in | thee let | those re | -joice, who | seek thee, | self-de
| -nying;
All who | thy sal | -vation | love, thy | name be | glory | -fying.
So let | God be | magni | -fied. But | I am | poor and | needy:
Hasten, | Lord, who | art my | Helper; | let thine | aid be | speedy.

Page 1573

This verse, like all other that is written in very long lines, requires a caesural pause of proportionate length; and it would scarcely differ at all to the ear, if it were cut in two at the place of this pause—provided the place were never varied. Such metre does not appear to have been at any time much used, though there seems to be no positive reason why it might not have a share of popularity. To commend our versification for its “boundless variety,” and at the same time exclude from it forms either unobjectionable or well authorized, as some have done, is plainly inconsistent. Full trochaics have some inconvenience, because all their rhymes must be double; and, as this inconvenience becomes twice as much when any long line of this sort is reduced to two short ones, there may be a reason why a stanza precisely corresponding to the foregoing couplets is seldom seen. If such lines be divided and rhymed at the middle of the fourth foot, where the caesural pause is apt to fall, the first part of each will be a trochaic line of four feet, single-rhymed and catalectic, while the rest of it will become an iambic line of three feet, with double rhyme and hypermeter. Such are the prosodial characteristics of the following lines; which, if two were written as one, would make exactly our full trochaic of seven feet, the metre exhibited above:—

“Whisp’ring, | heard by | wakeful | maids,
To whom | the night | stars guide | us,
Stolen | walk, through | moonlight | shades,
With those | we love | beside | us”—Moore’s Melodies, p. 276.

But trochaic of seven feet may also terminate with single rhyme, as in the following couplet, which is given anonymously, and, after a false custom, erroneously, in N. Butler’s recent Grammar, as “trochaic of six feet, with an additional long syllable:—

“Night and | morning | were at | meeting | over | Water | -loo;
Cocks had | sung their | earliest | greeting; | faint and | low they
| crew.” [511]

In Frazee’s Grammar, a separate line or two, similar in metre to these, and rightly reckoned to have seven feet, and many lines, (including those above from Tennyson, which W. C. Fowler erroneously gives for Heptameter,) being a foot longer, are presented as trochaics of eight feet; but Everett, the surest of our prosodists, remaining, like most others, a total stranger to our octometers, and too little acquainted with trochaic heptameters to believe the species genuine, on finding a couple of stanzas in which two such lines are set with shorter ones of different sorts, and with some which are defective in metre, sagely concludes that all lines of more than “six trochees” must necessarily be condemned as prosodial anomalies. It may be worth while to repeat the said stanzas here, adding such corrections and marks as may suggest their proper form and scansion. But since they commence with the shorter metre of six trochees only, and are already placed under that head, I too may take them in the like connexion, by now introducing my third species of trochaics, which is Everett’s tenth.

Page 1574

MEASURE III.—TROCHAIC OF SIX FEET, OR HEXAMETER.

Example.—Health.

“Up the | dewy | mountain, | Health is | bounding | lightly;
On her | brows a | garland, | twin’d with | richest | posies:
Gay is | she, e | -late with | hope, and | smiling | sprightly;
Redder | is her | cheek, and | sweeter | than the | rose is.”
G. BROWN: The Institutes of English Grammar, p. 258.

This metre appears to be no less rare than the preceding; though, as in that case, I know no good reason why it may not be brought into vogue. Professor John S. Hart says of it: “This is the longest Trochaic verse that seems to have been cultivated.”—Hart’s Eng. Gram., p. 187. The seeming of its cultivation he doubtless found only in sundry modern grammars. Johnson, Bicknell, Burn, Coar, Ward, Adam,—old grammarians, who vainly profess to have illustrated “every species of English verse,”—make no mention of it; and, with all the grammarians who notice it, one anonymous couplet, passing from hand to hand, has everywhere served to exemplify it.

Of this, “the line of six Trochees,” Everett says: “This measure is languishing, and rarely used. The following example is often cited:

‘On a | mountain, | stretched be | -neath a | hoary | willow,
Lay a | shepherd | swain, and | view’d the | rolling
| billow.’”[512]

Again: “We have the following from BISHOP HEBER:—

‘H=ol~y, | h=ol~y | h=ol~y! | =all th~e | s=aints a | -d=ore thee,
C=ast~ing | d=own th~eir | g=old~en | cr=owns a | -r=ound the
| gl=ass~y | s=ea;
Ch=er~u | -b=im and | s=era | -ph=im [~_are_] | f=all~ing
| d=own b~e | -f=ore th~ee,
Wh~ich w=ert, | and =art, | and =ev | -erm=ore | shalt b=e!

Holy, | holy, | holy! | though the | darkness | hide thee,
Though the | eye of | sinful | man thy | glory | may not | see,
Only | thou, [O | God,] art | holy; | there is | none be
| -side thee,
P=erf~ect | in p=ow’r, | in l=ove, | and p=u | -rit=y.’

Only the first and the third lines of these stanzas are to our purpose,” remarks the prosodist. That is, only these he conceived to be “lines of six Trochees.” But it is plain, that the third line of the first stanza, having seven long syllables, must have seven feet, and cannot be a trochaic hexameter; and, since the third below should be like it in metre, one can hardly forbear to think the words which I have inserted in brackets, were accidentally omitted.

Further: “It is worthy of remark,” says he, “that the second line of each of these stanzas is composed of six Trochees and an additional long syllable. As its corresponding line is an iambic, and as the piece has some licenses in its construction, it is far safer to conclude that this line is an anomaly than that it forms a distinct species of verse. We must therefore conclude that the tenth [the metre of six trochees] is the longest species of Trochaic line known to English verse.”—Everett’s Versification, pp. 95 and 96.

Page 1575

This, in view of the examples above, of our longer trochaics, may serve as a comment on the author's boast, that, "having deduced his rules from the usage of the great poets, he has the best reason for being confident of their correctness."—Ibid., Pref., p. 5.

Trochaic hexameter, too, may easily be written with single rhyme; perhaps more easily than a specimen suited to the purpose can be cited from any thing already written. Let me try:—

Example I.—The Sorcerer.

Lonely | in the | forest, | subtle | from his | birth,
Lived a | necro | -mancer, | wondrous | son of | earth.
More of | him in | -quire not, | than I | choose to | say;
Nymph or | dryad | bore him— | else 'twas | witch or | fay;
Ask you | who his | father?— | haply | he might | be
Wood-god, | satyr, | sylvan; | —such his | pedi | -gree.
Reared mid | fauns and | fairies, | knew he | no com | -peers;
Neither | cared he | for them, | saving | ghostly | seers.
Mistress | of the | black-art, | "wizard | gaunt and | grim,"
Nightly | on the | hill-top, | "read the | stars to | him."
These were | welcome | teachers; | drank he | in their | lore;
Witchcraft | so en | -ticed him, | still to | thirst for | more.
Spectres | he would | play with, | phantoms | raise or | quell;
Gnomes from | earth's deep | centre | knew his | potent | spell.
Augur | or a | -ruspex | had not | half his | art;
Master | deep of | magic, | spirits | played his | part;
Demons, | imps in | -fernal, | conjured | from be | -low,
Shaped his | grand en | -chantments | with im | -posing | show.

Example II.—An Example of Hart's, Corrected

"Where the | wood is | waving, | shady, | green, and | high,
Fauns and | dryads, | nightly, | watch the | starry | sky."
See Hart's E. Gram., p. 187; or the citation thence below.

A couplet of this sort might easily be reduced to a pleasant little stanza, by severing each line after the third foot, thus:—

Hearken! | hearken! | hear ye;
Voices | meet my | ear.
Listen, | never | fear ye;
Friends—or | foes—are | near.

Friends! "So | -ho!" they're | shouting.—
"Ho! so | -ho, a | -hoy!"—
'Tis no | Indian, | scouting.
Cry, so | -ho! with | joy.

But a similar succession of eleven syllables, six long and five short, divided after the seventh, leaving two iambs to form the second or shorter line,—(since such a division produces different orders and metres both,—) will, I think, retain but little resemblance in rhythm to the foregoing, though the actual sequence of quantities long and short is the same. If this be so, the particular measure or correspondent length of lines is more essential to the character of a poetic strain than some have supposed. The first four lines of the following extract are an example relevant to this point:—

Page 1576

Ariel's Song.

"C=ome un | -t=o these | y=ell~ow | s=ands,
 And th=en | t~ake h=ands:
 Court'sied | when you | have and | kiss'd,
 (The wild | waves whist,)
 Foot it | featly | here and | there;
 And, sweet | sprites, the | burden | bear."
 SINGER'S SHAKSPEARE: Tempest, Act i, Sc. 2.

MEASURE IV.—TROCHAIC OF FIVE FEET, OR PENTAMETER

Example I.—Double Rhymes and Single, Alternated.

"Mountain | winds! oh! | whither | do ye | call me?
 Vainly, | vainly, | would my | steps pur | -sue:
 Chains of | care to | lower | earth en | -thrall me,
 Wherefore | thus my | weary | spirit | woo?
 Oh! the | strife of | this di | -vided | being!
 Is there | peace where | ye are | borne, on | high?
 Could we | soar to | your proud | eyries | fleeing,
 In our | hearts, would | haunting | m=em~or~ies | die?"
 FELICIA HEMANS: "To the Mountain Winds:" Everet's Versif., p. 95.

Example II—Rhymes Otherwise Arranged.

"Then, me | -thought, I | heard a | hollow | sound,
G=ath~er~ing | up from | all the lower | ground:
N=arr~ow~ing | in to | where they | sat as | -sembled,
 Low vo | -l~upt~uo~us_ | music, | winding, | trembled."
 ALFRED TENNYSON: Frazee's Improved Gram., p. 184; Fowler's, 657.

This measure, whether with the final short syllable or without it, is said, by Murray, Everett, and others, to be "very uncommon." Dr. Johnson, and the other old prosodists named with him above, knew nothing of it. Two couplets, exemplifying it, now to be found in sundry grammars, and erroneously reckoned to differ as to the number of their feet, were either selected or composed by Murray, for his Grammar, at its origin—or, if not then, at its first reprint, in 1796. They are these:—

(1.)

“All that | walk on | foot or | ride in | chariots,
All that | dwell in | pala |-ces or | garrets.”

L. Murray's Gram., 12mo, 175; 8vo, 257; Chandler's, 196; Churchill's, 187; Hiley's, 126; et al.

(2.)

“Idle | after | dinner, | in his | chair,
Sat a | farmer, | ruddy, | fat, and | fair.”

Murray, same places; N. Butler's Gr., p. 193; Hallock's, 244; Hart's, 187; Weld's, 211; et al.

Richard Hiley most absurdly scans this last couplet, and all verse like it, into “the Heroic measure,” or a form of our iambic pentameter; saying, “Sometimes a syllable is cut off from the first foot; as,

=l |-dl~e =af |-t~er d=inn |-n~er =in | h~is ch=air [,]
S=at | a f=ar |-mer [,] r=ud |-dy, f=at, | =and f=air.”
Hiley's English Grammar, Third Edition, p. 125.

Page 1577

J. S. Hart, who, like many others, has mistaken the metre of this last example for “Trochaic Tetrameter,” with a surplus “syllable,” after repeating the current though rather questionable assertion, that, “this measure is very uncommon,” proceeds with our “Trochaic Pentameter,” thus: “This species is likewise uncommon. It is composed of five trochees; as,

=In th~e | d=ark and | gr=een and | gl=oom~y | v=all~ey,
S=at~yrs | b=y th~e | br=ookl~et | l=ove t~o | d=all~y.”

And again: [[Fist]] “The SAME with an ADDITIONAL accented syllable; as,

Wh=ere th~e | w=ood is | w=aving |gr=een and | _h=igh_,
F=auns and | Dr=y~ads | w=atch th~e | st=arr~y | sky.”
Hart’s English Grammar, First Edition, p. 187.

These examples appear to have been made for the occasion; and the latter, together with its introduction, made unskillfully. The lines are of five feet, and so are those about the ruddy farmer; but there is nothing “additional” in either case; for, as pentameter, they are all catalectic, the final short syllable being dispensed with, and a caesura preferred, for the sake of single rhyme, otherwise not attainable. “Five trochees” and a rhyming “syllable” will make trochaic hexameter, a measure perhaps more pleasant than this. See examples above.

MEASURE V.—TROCHAIC OF FOUR FEET, OR TETRAMETER.

Example I.—A Mournful Song.

1.

“Raving | winds a | -round her | blowing,
Yellow | leaves the | woodlands | strewing,
By a | river | hoarsely | roaring,
Isa | -bella | strayed de | -ploring.
'Farewell | hours that | late did | measure
Sunshine | days of | joy and | pleasure;
Hail, thou | gloomy | night of | sorrow,
Cheerless | night that | knows no | morrow.

2.

O'er the | past too | fondly | wandering,
On the | hopeless | future | pondering,

Chilly | grief my | life-blood | freezes,
Fell de | -spair my | fancy | seizes.
Life, thou | soul of | every | blessing,
Load to | misery | most dis | -tressing,
O how | gladly | I'd re | -sign thee,
And to | dark ob | _-livion_ | join thee.”

ROBERT BURNS: Select Works, Vol. ii, p. 131

Example II.—A Song Petitionary.

“Powers ce | -lestial, | whose pro | -tection
Ever | guards the | virtuous | fair,
While in | distant | climes I | wander,
Let my | Mary | be your | care:
Let her | form so | fair and | faultless,
Fair and | faultless | as your | own;
Let my | Mary's | kindred | spirit
Draw your | choicest | influence | down.

Page 1578

Make the | gales you | waft a | -round her
 Soft and | peaceful | as her | breast;
 Breathing | in the | breeze that | fans her,
 Soothe her | bosom | into | rest:
Guardian | angels, | O pro | -tect her,
 When in | distant | lands I | roam;
To realms | unknown | while fate | exiles me,
 Make her | bosom | still my | home.”
 BURNS'S SONGS, Same Volume, p. 165.

Example III.—Song of Juno and Ceres.

Ju. “Honour, | riches, marriage | -blessing,
 Long con | _-tinuance_, | and in | -creasing,
 Hourly | joys be | still up | -on you!
Juno | sings her | blessings | on you.”
Cer. “Earth’s in | -crease, and | foison | plenty;
 Barns and | garner | never | empty;
 Vines with | clust’ring | bunches | growing;
 Plants with | goodly | burden | bowing;
 Spring come | to you, | at the | farthest,
 In the | very | end of | harvest!
 Scarci | -ty and | want shall | shun you;
Ceres’ | blessing | so is | on you.”
 SHAKESPEARE: Tempest, Act iv, Sc. 1.

Example IV.—On the Vowels.

“We are | little | airy | creatures,
 All of | diff’rent | voice and | features;
 One of | us in | glass is | set,
 One of | us you’ll | find in | jet;
 T’other | you may | see in | tin,
 And the | fourth a | box with | -in;
 If the | fifth you | should pur | -sue,
 It can | never | fly from | you.”
 SWIFT: Johnson’s British Poets, Vol. v, p. 343.

Example V.—Use Time for Good.

“Life is | short, and | time is | swift;
 Roses | fade, and | shadows | shift;

But the ocean | and the | river
Rise and | fall and | flow for | ever;

Bard! not | vainly | heaves the | ocean;
Bard! not | vainly | flows the | river;
Be thy | song, then, | like their | motion,
Blessing | now, and | blessing | ever.”

EBENEZER ELLIOT: From a Newspaper.

Example IV.[sic for VI—KTH]—“The Turkish Lady”—First Four Stanzas.

1.

“’Twas the | hour when | rites un | -holy
Called each | Paynim | voice to | pray’r,
And the | star that | faded | slowly,
Left to | dew’s the | freshened | air.

2.

Day her | sultry | fires had | wasted,
Calm and | sweet the | moonlight | rose;
E’en a | captive’s | spirit | tasted
Half ob | -livion | of his | woes.

3.

Then ’twas | from an | Emir’s | palace
Came an | eastern | lady | bright;
She, in | spite of | tyrants | jealous,
Saw and | loved an | English | knight.

4.

’Tell me, | captive, | why in | anguish
Foes have | dragged thee | here to | dwell
Where poor | Christians, | as they | languish.
Hear no | sound of | sabbath | bell?”

THOMAS CAMPBELL: Poetical Works, p. 115.

Page 1579

Example VII.—The Palmer's Morning Hymn.

"Lauded | be thy | name for | ever, Thou, of | life the | guard and | giver! Thou canst | guard thy | creatures | sleeping, Heal the | heart long | broke with | weeping, Rule the |
=oupes and | =elves at | w=ill Th~at v=ex | th~e =air | _~or h=aunt_ | th~e h=ill, _~And
=all_ | th~e f=u | _~r~y s=ub_ | _~j~ect k=eepest_ ~Of b=oil_ | _~ing cl=oud_ | _~and ch=af_
| _~ed d=eepest!"

I have | s=een, and | w=ell I | kn=ow it!
Thou hast | done, and | Thou wilt | do it!
God of | stillness | and of | motion!
Of the | rainbow | and the | ocean!
Of the | mountain, | rock, and | river!
Blessed | be Thy | name for | ever!
I have | seen thy | wondrous | might
Through the | shadows | of this | night!

Thou, who | slumber'st | not, nor | sleepest!
Blest are | they thou | kindly | keepest!
Spirits, | from the | ocean | under,
Liquid | flame, and | levell'd | thunder,
Need not | waken | nor a | -larm them—
All com | -bined, they | cannot | harm them.

God of | evening's | yellow | ray,
God of | yonder | dawning | day,
Thine the | flaming | sphere of | light!
Thine the | darkness | of the | night!
Thine are | all the | gems of | even,
God of | angels! | God of | heaven!"

JAMES HOGG: Mador of the Moor, Poems, p. 206.

Example VIII.—A Short Song, of Two Stanzas.

"Stay, my | charmer, | can you | leave me?
Cruel, | cruel, | to de | -ceive me!
Well you | know how | much you | grieve me:
Cruel | charmer, | can you | go?
Cruel | charmer, | can you | go?"

By my | love, so | ill re | -quited;
By the | faith you | fondly plighted;
By the | pangs of | lovers slighted;
Do not, | do not | leave me | so!

Do not, | do not | leave me | so!"

ROBERT BURNS: Select Works, Vol. ii, p. 129.

Example IX.—Lingering Courtship.

1. "Never | wedding, | ever | wooing, Still | lovelorn | heart pur |-suing, Read you | not the | wrong you're | doing, In my | cheek's pale | hue? All my | life with | sorrow | strewing, Wed, or | cease to | woo.2. Rivals | banish'd, | bosoms | plighted, Still our | days are | disu |-nited; Now the | lamp of | hope is | lighted, Now half | quench'd ap |
-pears, Damp'd, and | wavering, and be | -nighted, Midst my | sighs and | tears.

3.

Charms you | call your | dearest | blessing,
Lips that | thrill at | your ca | -ressing,
Eyes a | mutual soul con | -fessing,
Soon you'll | make them | grow
Dim, and | worthless | your pos | -singing,
Not with | age, but | woe!"

CAMPBELL: Everett's System of Versification, p. 91.

Page 1580

Example X.—“Boadicea”—Four Stanzas from Eleven.

1. “When the | British | warrior | queen, Bleeding | from the | Roman | rods, Sought, with | an in | -dignant | mien, Counsel | of her | country’s | gods,2. Sage be | -neath the | spreading | oak, Sat the | Druid, | hoary | chief; Every burning | word he | spoke Full of | rage, and | full of | grief.3. Princess! | if our | aged | eyes Weep up | -on thy | matchless | wrongs, ’Tis be | -cause re | -sentment | ties All the | terrors | of our | tongues.

4.

ROME SHALL | PERISH— | write that | word
In the | blood that | she hath | spilt;
Perish, | hopeless | and ab | -horr’d,
Deep in | ruin | as in | guilt.”

WILLIAM COWPER: Poems, Vol. ii, p. 244.

Example XI—“The Thunder Storm”—Two Stanzas from Ten.

“Now in | deep and | dreadful | gloom,
Clouds on | clouds por | -tentous | spread,
Black as | if the | day of | doom
Hung o’er | Nature’s | shrinking | head:
Lo! the | lightning | breaks from | high,
God is | coming! |—God is | nigh!

Hear ye | not his | chariot | wheels,
As the | mighty | thunder | rolls?
Nature, | startled | Nature | reels,
From the | centre | to the | poles:
Tremble! | —Ocean, | Earth, and | Sky!
Tremble! | —God is | passing | by!”

J. MONTGOMERY: Wanderer of Switzerland, and other Poems, p. 130.

Example XII.—“The Triumphs of Owen,” King of North Wales. [513]

“Owen’s | praise de | -mands my song,
Owen | swift and | Owen | strong;
Fairest | flow’r of | Roderick’s | stem,
Gwyneth’s | shield, and | Britain’s | gem.
He nor | heaps his | brooded | stores,
Nor the | whole pro | -fusely | pours;
Lord of | every | regal | art,
Liberal | hand and | open | heart.
Big with | hosts of | mighty | name,
Squadrons | three a | -gainst him came;

This the | force of | Eirin | hiding,
Side by | side as | proudly | riding,
On her | shadow | long and | gay,
Lochlin | ploughs the | watery | way:
There the Norman | sails a | -far
Catch the | winds, and | join the | war;
Black and | huge, a | -long they | sweep,
Burthens | of the | angry | deep.

Dauntless | on his | native | sands,
The Drag | -on-son | of Mo | -na stands;[514]
In glit | -tering arms | and glo | -ry drest,
High he | rears his | ruby | crest.
There the | thundering | stroke be | -gin,
There the | press, and | there the | din;
Taly | -malfra's | rocky | shore
Echoing | to the | battle's | roar;
Where his | glowing | eyeballs | turn,

Page 1581

Thousand | banners | round him | burn.
Where he | points his | purple | spear,
Hasty, | hasty | rout is | there,
Marking | with in | -dignant | eye
Fear to | stop, and | shame to | fly.
There Con | -fusion, | Terror's | child,
Conflict | fierce, and | Ruin | wild,
Ago | -ny, that | pants for | breath,
Despair, | and HON | -OURA | -BLE DEATH."
THOMAS GRAY: Johnson's British Poets, Vol. vii, p. 285.

Example XIII.—“Grongar Hill.”—First Twenty-six Lines.

“Silent | Nymph, with | curious | eye, Who, the | purple | eve, dost | lie On the | mountain's | lonely | van, Beyond | the noise | of bus | _-y man_; Painting | fair the | form of | things, While the | yellow | linnet | sings; Or the | tuneful | nightin | -gale Charms the | forest | with her | tale; Come, with | all thy | various hues, Come, and | aid thy | sister |
Muse. Now, while | Phoebus, | riding | high, Gives lus | _-tre to_ | the land | and sky,
Grongar | Hill in | -vites my | song; Draw the | landscape | bright | and strong; Grongar, |
in whose | mossy | cells, Sweetly | -musing | Quiet | dwells; Grongar, | in whose | silent | shade, For the | modest | Muses | made, So oft | I have, | the eve | _-ning still_, At the | fountain | of a | rill, Sat up | -on a | flowery | bed, With my | hand be | -neath my | head,
While stray'd | my eyes | o'er Tow | _-y's flood_, Over | mead and | over wood, From house | to house, | from hill | to hill, Till Con | _-templa_ | _-tion had_ | her fill.”
JOHN DYER: Johnson's British Poets, Vol. vii, p. 65.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—This is the most common of our trochaic measures; and it seems to be equally popular, whether written with single rhyme, or with double; in stanzas, or in couplets; alone, or with some intentional intermixture. By a careful choice of words and style, it may be adapted to all sorts of subjects, grave, or gay; quaint, or pathetic; as may the corresponding iambic metre, with which it is often more or less mingled, as we see in some of the examples above. Milton's L'Allegro, or Gay Mood, has one hundred and fifty-two lines; ninety-eight of which are iambs; fifty-four trochaic tetrameters; a very few of each order having double rhymes. These orders the poet has not—“very ingeniously alternated” as Everett avers; but has simply interspersed, or commingled, with little or no regard to alternation. His Il Penseroso, or Grave Mood, has twenty-seven trochaic tetrameters, mixed irregularly with one hundred and forty-nine iambs.

Page 1582

OBS. 2.—Everett, who divides our trochaic tetrameters into two species of metre, imagines that the catalectic form, or that which is single-rhymed, “has a solemn effect,”—“imparts to all pieces more dignity than any of the other short measures,”—“that no trivial or humorous subject should be treated in this measure,”—and that, “besides dignity, it imparts an air of sadness to the subject.”—English Verses., p. 87. Our “line of four trochees” he supposes to be “difficult of construction,”—“not of very frequent occurrence,”—“the most agreeable of all the trochaic measures,”—“remarkably well adapted to lively subjects,”—and “peculiarly expressive of the eagerness and fickleness of the passion of love.”—ib., p. 90. These pretended metrical characteristics seem scarcely more worthy of reliance, than astrological predictions, or the oracular guessings of our modern craniologists.

OBS. 3.—Dr. Campbell repeats a suggestion of the older critics, that gayety belongs naturally to all trochaics, as such, and gravity or grandeur, as naturally, to iambics; and he attempts to find a reason for the fact; while, perhaps, even here—more plausible though the supposition is—the fact may be at least half imaginary. “The iambus,” says he, “is expressive of dignity and grandeur; the trochee, on the contrary, according to Aristotle, (Rhet. Lib. III.) is frolicsome and gay. It were difficult to assign a reason of this difference that would be satisfactory; but of the thing itself, I imagine, most people will be sensible on comparing the two kinds together. I know not whether it will be admitted as a sufficient reason, that the distinction into metrical feet hath a much greater influence in poetry on the rise and fall of the voice, than the distinction into words; and if so, when the cadences happen mostly after the long syllables, the verse will naturally have an air of greater gravity than when they happen mostly after the short.”—Campbell's Philosophy of Rhetoric, p. 354.

MEASURE VI.—TROCHAIC OF THREE FEET, OR TRIMETER.

Example I.—Youth and Age Contrasted.

“Crabbed | age and | youth
Cannot | live to | -gether;
Youth is | full of | pleasance,
Age is | full of | care:
Youth, like | summer | morn,
Age, like | winter | weather;
Youth, like | summer, | brave;
Age, like | winter, | bare.
Youth is | full of | sport,
Age's | breath is | short,
Youth is | nimble, | age is | lame;

Youth is | hot and | bold,
Age is | weak and | cold;
Youth is | wild, and | age is | tame.”

The Passionate Pilgrim; SINGER'S SHAKSPEARE, Vol. ii p. 594.

Example II—Common Sense and Genius.

3.

“While I | touch the | string,
Wreathe my | brows with | laurel;
For the | tale I | sing,
Has, for | once, a | moral!

Page 1583

4.

Common | Sense went | on,
Many | wise things | saying;
While the | light that | shone,
Soon set | Genius | straying.

5.

One his eye ne'er | rais'd
From the | path be | -fore him;
T' other | idly | gaz'd
On each | night-cloud | o'er him.

6.

While I | touch the | string,
Wreathe my | brows with | laurel;
For the | tale I | sing,
Has, for | once, a | moral!

7.

So they | came, at | last,
To a | shady | river;
Common | Sense soon | pass'd
Safe,—as | he doth | ever.

8.

While the | boy whose | look
Was in | heav'n that | minute,
Never | saw the | brook,—
But tum | _-bled head_ | _-long in it_.

Six Stanzas from Twelve.—MOORE'S MELODIES, p. 271.

This short measure is much oftener used in stanzas, than in couplets. It is, in many instances, combined with some different order or metre of verse, as in the following:—

Example III.—Part of a Song.

“Go where | glory | waits thee,
But while | fame e | -lates thee,
 Oh! still | remem | -ber me.
When the | praise thou | meetest,

To thine | ear is | sweetest,
 Oh! then | remem | -ber me.
 Other | arms may | press thee,
 Dearer | friends ca | -ress thee,
 All the | joys that | bless thee,
 Sweeter | far may | be:
 But when | friends are | nearest,
 And when | joys are | dearest,
 Oh! then | remem | -ber me.

When, at | eve, thou | rovest,
 By the | star thou | lovest,
 Oh! then | remem | -ber me.
 Think when | home re | -turning,
 Bright we've | seen it | burning;
 Oh! thus | remem | -ber me.
 Oft as | summer | closes,
 When thine | eye re | -poses
 On its | ling'ring | roses,
 Once so | loved by | thee,
 Think of | her who | wove them,
 Her who | made thee | love them;
 Oh! then | remem | -ber me."
 MOORE'S Melodies, Songs, and Airs, p. 107.

Example IV.—From an Ode to the Thames.

"On thy | shady | margin,
 Care its | load dis | -charging,
 Is lull'd | to gen | -tle rest:

Britain | thus dis | -arming,
 Nothing | her a | -larming,
 Shall sleep on Cae | -sar's breast."
 See ROWE'S POEMS: Johnson's British Poets, Vol. iv, p. 58.

Example V.—"The True Poet"—First Two of Nine Stanzas.

1.
 "Poet | of the | heart,
 Delving | in its | mine,
 From man | -kind a | -part,
 Yet where | jewels | shine;
 Heaving | upward | to the | light,
 Precious | wealth that | charms the | sight;

Page 1584

2.

Toil thou | still, deep | down,
 For earth's | hidden | gems;
 They shall | deck a | crown,
 Blaze in | dia | -dems;
And when | thy hand | shall fall | to rest,
Brightly | jewel | beauty's | breast."
 JANE B. LOCKE: N. Y. Evening Post; The Examiner, No. 98.

Example VI.—"Summer Longings"—First Two of Five Stanzas.

"Ah! my | heart is | ever | waiting,
 Waiting | for the | May,—
 Waiting | for the | pleasant | rambles
 Where the | fragrant | hawthorn | brambles,
 With the | woodbine | alter | -nating,
 Scent the | dewy | way.
 Ah! my | heart is | weary | waiting,
 Waiting | for the | May.

Ah! my | heart is | sick with | longing,
 Longing | for the | May,—
 Longing | to e | -scape from | study,
 To the | young face | fair and | ruddy,
 And the | thousand | charms be | -longing
 To the | Summer's | day.
 Ah! my | heart is | sick with | longing,
 Longing | for the | May."
 "D. F. M. C.:" Dublin University Magazine; Liberator, No. 952.

MEASURE VII.—TROCHAIC OF TWO FEET, OR DIMETER.

Example I.—Three Short Excerpts.

1.

"My flocks | feed not,
 My ewes | breed not,
 My rams | speed not,
 All is | amiss:
 Love's de | -nying,

Faith's de | -fying,
Heart's re | -nying,
Causer | of this."

2.

"In black | mourn I,
All fears | scorn I,
Love hath | lorn me,
Living | in thrall:
Heart is | bleeding,
All help | needing.
(Cruel | speeding,)
Fraughted | with gall."

3.

"Clear wells | spring not.
Sweet birds | sing not,
Loud bells | ring not Cheerfully;
Herds stand | weeping,
Flocks all | sleeping,
Nymphs back | creeping
Fearfully."

SHAKSPEARE: The Passionate Pilgrim. See Sec. xv.

Example II.—Specimen with Single Rhyme.

"To Quinbus Flestrin, the Man-Mountain"__

A LILLIPUTIAN ODE

I.

"In a | -maze,
Lost, I | gaze.
Can our | eyes
Reach thy | size?
May my | lays
Swell with | praise,
Worthy | thee,
Worthy | me!
Muse, in | -spire
All thy | fire!
Bards of | old
Of him | told,

When they | said
Atlas' | head
Propp'd the | skies:
See! and | believe | your eyes!

II.

Page 1585

"See him | stride
Valleys | wide:
Over | woods,
Over | floods,
When he | treads,
Mountains' | heads
Groan and | shake:
Armies | quake,
Lest his | spurn
Over | -turn
Man and | steed:
Troops, take | heed!
Left and | right
Speed your | flight!
Lest an | host
Beneath | his foot | be lost.

III.

"Turn'd a | -side
From his | hide,
Safe from | wound,
Darts re | -bound.
From his | nose,
Clouds he | blows;
When he | speaks,
Thunder | breaks!
When he | eats,
Famine | threats!
When he | drinks,
Neptune | shrinks!
Nigh thy | ear,
In mid | air,
On thy | hand,
Let me | stand.
So shall | I
(Lofty | poet!) touch the sky."

JOHN GAY: Johnson's British Poets, Vol. vii, p. 376.

Example III.—Two Feet with Four.

"Oh, the | pleasing, | pleasing | anguish,
When we | love, and | when we | languish!
Wishes | rising!

Thoughts sur | -prising!
 Pleasure | courting!
 Charms trans | -porting!
 Fancy | viewing
 Joys en | -suing!
 Oh, the | pleasing, | pleasing | anguish!"
 ADDISON'S Rosamond, Act i, Scene 6.

Example IV.—Lines of Three Syllables with Longer Metres.

1. WITH TROCHAICS.

"Or we | sometimes | pass an | hour
 Under | a green | willow,
 That de | -fends us | from the | shower,
 Making | earth our | pillow;
 Where we | may
 Think and | pray,
 B=e'fore | death
 Stops our | breath:
 Other | joys,
 Are but | toys,
 And to | be la | -mented." [515]

2. WITH IAMBICS.

"What sounds | were heard,
 What scenes | appear'd,
 O'er all | the drear | -y coasts!
 Dreadful | gleams,
 Dismal | screams,
 Fires that | glow,
 Shrieks of | wo,
 Sullen | moans,
 Hollow | groans,
 And cries | of tor | -tur'd ghosts!"
 POPE: Johnson's Brit. Poets, Vol. vi, p. 315.

Example V.—"The Shower."—In Four Regular Stanzas.

1.

"In a | valley | that I | know—
 Happy | scene!
 There are | meadows | sloping | low,
 There the | fairest | flowers | blow,
 And the | brightest | waters | flow.
 All se | -rene;

But the | sweetest | thing to | see,
If you | ask the | dripping | tree,
Or the | harvest | -hoping | swain,
Is the | Rain.

2.

Page 1586

Ah, the | dwellers | of the | town,
How they | sigh,—
How un | -grateful | -ly they | frown,
When the | cloud-king | shakes his | crown,
And the | pearls come | pouring | down
From the | sky!
They de | -scurry | charm at | all
Where the | sparkling | jewels | fall,
And each | moment | of the | shower,
Seems an | hour!

3.

Yet there's | something | very | sweet
In the | sight,
When the | crystal | currents | meet
In the | dry and | dusty | street,
And they | wrestle | with the | heat,
In their | might!
While they | seem to | hold a | talk
With the | stones a | -long the | walk,
And re | -mind them | of the | rule,
To 'keep | cool!'

4.

Ay, but | in that | quiet | dell,
Ever | fair,
Still the | Lord doth | all things | well,
When his | clouds with | blessings | swell,
And they | break a | brimming | shell
On the | air;
There the | shower | hath its | charms,
Sweet and | welcome | to the | farms
As they | listen | to its | voice,
And re | -joice!"
Rev. RALPH HOYT'S Poems: The Examiner, Nov. 6, 1847.

Example VI.—“A Good Name?”—Two Beautiful Little Stanzas.

1.

“Children, | choose it,
Don't re | -fuse it,

'Tis a | precious | dia | -dem;
Highly | prize it,
Don't de | -spise it,
You will | need it | when you're | men.

2.

Love and | cherish,
Keep and | nourish,
'Tis more | precious | far than | gold;
Watch and | guard it,
Don't dis | -card it,
You will | need it | when you're | old."
The Family Christian Almanac, for 1850, p. 20.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Trochaics of two feet, like those of three, are, more frequently than otherwise, found in connexion with longer lines, as in some of the examples above cited. The trochaic line of three syllables, which our prosodists in general describe as consisting, not of two feet; but “of one Trochee and a long syllable,” may, when it stands alone, be supposed to consist of one amphimac; but, since this species of foot is not admitted by all, and is reckoned a secondary one by those who do admit it, the better practice is, to divide even the three syllables into two feet, as above.

OBS. 2.—Murray, Hart, Weld, and many others, erroneously affirm, that, “The shortest Trochaic verse in our language, consists of one Trochee and a long syllable.”—Murray's Gram., p. 256; Hart's, First Edition, p. 186; Weld's, Second Edition, p. 210. The error of this will be shown by examples below—examples of true “Trochaic Monometer,” and not of Dimeter mistaken for it, like Weld's, Hart's, or Murray's.

Page 1587

OBS. 3.—These authors also aver, that, “This measure is defective in dignity, and can seldom be used on serious occasions.”—Same places. “Trochaic of two feet—is likewise so brief, that,” in their opinion, “it is rarely used for any very serious purpose.”—Same places. Whether the expression of love, or of its disappointment, is “any very serious purpose” or not, I leave to the decision of the reader. What lack of dignity or seriousness there is, in several of the foregoing examples, especially the last two, I think it not easy to discover.

MEASURE VIII.—TROCHAIC OF ONE FOOT, OR MONOMETER.

Examples with Longer Metres.

1. WITH IAMBICS.

“Fr~om w=alk | t~o w=alk, | fr~om sh=ade | t~o sh=ade,
 From stream to purl | -ing stream | convey'd,
 Through all | the ma | -zes of | the grove,
 Through all | the ming | -ling tracks | I rove,
 Turning,
 Burning,
 Changing,
 Ranging,
 F=ull of | gri=ef and | f=ull of | l=ove.”
ADDISON’S _Rosamond_, Act I, Sc. 4:
Everett’s Versification, p. 81.

2. WITH ANAPESTICS, &c.

“T~o l=ove and to l=angu~ish,
 T~o s=igh | and compl=ain,
 H~ow cr=u~el’s th~e =angu~ish!
 H~ow t~orm=ent | -ing the p=ain!
 Suing,
 Pursuing,
 Flying,
 Denying,
 O the curse | of disdain!
 How torment | -ing’s the pain!”
GEO. GRANVILLE: Br. Poets, Vol. v, p. 31.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—The metres acknowledged in our ordinary schemes of prosody, scarcely amount, with all their “boundless variety,” to more than one half, or three quarters, of what may be found in actual use somewhere. Among the foregoing examples, are some which are longer, and some which are shorter, than what are commonly known to our grammarians; and some, also, which seem easily practicable, though perhaps not so easily quotable. This last trochaic metre, so far as I know, has not been used alone,—that is, without longer lines,—except where grammarians so set examples of it in their prosodies.

OBS. 2.—“Trochaic of One foot,” as well as “Iambic of One foot,” was, I believe, first recognized, prosodically, in Brown’s Institutes of English Grammar, a work first published in 1823. Since that time, both have obtained acknowledgement in sundry schemes of versification, contained in the new grammars; as in Farnum’s, and Hallock’s, of 1842; in Pardon Davis’s, of 1845; in S. W. Clark’s, and S. S. Greene’s, of 1848; in Professor Fowler’s, of 1850. Wells, in his School Grammar, of 1846, and D. C. Allen, in an other, of 1847, give to the length of lines a laxity positively absurd: “Rhymed verses,” say they, “may consist of any number of syllables.”—Wells, 1st Ed., p. 187; late Ed., 204; Allen, p. 88. Everett has recognized “The line of a single Trochee,” though he repudiates some long measures that are much more extensively authorized.

Page 1588

ORDER III.—ANAPESTIC VERSE.

In full Anapestic verse, the stress is laid on every third syllable, the first two syllables of each foot being short. The first foot of an anapestic line, may be an iambus. This is the most frequent diversification of the order. But, as a diversification, it is, of course, not regular or uniform. The stated or uniform adoption of the iambus for a part of each line, and of the anapest for the residue of it, produces verse of the Composite Order. As the anapest ends with a long syllable, its rhymes are naturally single; and a short syllable after this, producing double rhyme, is, of course, supernumerary: so are the two, when the rhyme is triple. Some prosodists suppose, a surplus at the end of a line may compensate for a deficiency at the beginning of the next line; but this I judge to be an error, or at least the indulgence of a questionable license. The following passage has two examples of what may have been meant for such compensation, the author having used a dash where I have inserted what seems to be a necessary word:—

“Apol | -lo smil’d shrewd | -ly, and bade | him sit down,
With ‘Well, | Mr. Scott, | you have man | -aged the town;
Now pray, | copy less— | have a lit | -tle temer | -_~it~y_—
[And] Try | if you can’t | also man | -age poster | -ity.
[For] All | you add now | only les | -sens your cred | -it;
And how | could you think, | too, of tak | -ing to ed | -ite?”
LEIGH HUNT’S Feast of the Poets, page 20.

The anapestic measures are few; because their feet are long, and no poet has chosen to set a great many in a line. Possibly lines of five anapests, or of four and an initial iambus, might be written; for these would scarcely equal in length some of the iambics and trochaics already exhibited. But I do not find any examples of such metre. The longest anapestics that have gained my notice, are of fourteen syllables, being tetrameters with triple rhyme, or lines of four anapests and two short surplus syllables. This order consists therefore of measures reducible to the following heads:—

MEASURE I.—ANAPESTIC OF FOUR FEET, OR TETRAMETER.

Example I.—A “Postscript.”—An Example with Hypermeter.

“Lean Tom, | when I saw | him, last week, | on his horse | awry,
Threaten’d loud | -ly to turn | me to stone | with his sor | -cery.
But, I think, | little Dan, | that, in spite | of what our
| foe says,
He will find | I read Ov | -id and his | Meta_*mor*_ | -phoses.
For, omit | -ting the first, | (where I make | a com_*par*_ | -ison,
With a sort | of allu | -sion to Put | -land or Har | -rison,)
Yet, by | my descrip | -tion, you’ll find | he in short | is

Page 1589

A pack | and a gar | -ran, a top | and a tor | -toise.
 So I hope | from hencefor | -ward you ne'er | will ask, can
 | I maul
 This teas | -ing, conceit | -ed, rude, in | -solent an | -imal?
 And, if | this rebuke | might be turn'd | to his ben | -efit,
 (For I pit | -y the man,) | I should | be glad then | of it"
 SWIFT'S POEMS: Johnson's British Poets, Vol. v, p. 324.

Example II.—"The Feast of the Poets."—First Twelve Lines.

"T' other day, | as Apol | -lo sat pitch | -ing his darts
 Through the clouds | of Novem | -ber, by fits | and by starts,
 He began | to consid | -er how long | it had been
 Since the bards | of Old Eng | -land had all | been rung in.
 'I think,' | said the god, | recollect | -ing, (and then
 He fell twid | -dling a sun | -beam as I | may my pen,)
 'I think— | let me see— | yes, it is, | I declare,
 As long | ago now | as that Buck | -ingham there;
 And yet | I can't see | why I've been | so remiss,
 Unless | it may be— | and it cer | -tainly is,
 That since Dry | -den's fine ver | -ses and Mil | -ton's sublime,
 I have fair | -ly been sick | of their sing | -song and rhyme."

LEIGH HUNT: Poems, New-York Edition, of 1814.

Example III.—The Crowning of Four Favourites.

"Then, 'Come,' | cried the god | in his el | -egant mirth,
 'Let us make | us a heav'n | of our own | upon earth,
 And wake, | with the lips | that we dip | in our bowls,
 That divin | -est of mu | -sic—conge | -nial souls.'
 So say | -ing, he led | through the din | -ing-room door,
 And, seat | -ing the po | -ets, cried, 'Lau | -rels for four!
 No soon | -er demand | -ed, than, lo! | they were there,
 And each | of the bards | had a wreath | in his hair.
 Tom Camp | -bell's with wil | -low and pop | -lar was twin'd,
 And South | -ey's, with moun | -tain-ash, pluck'd | in the wind;
 And Scott's, | with a heath | from his old | garden stores,
 And, with vine | -leaves and jump | -up-and-kiss | -me, Tom Moore's."

LEIGH HUNT: from line 330 to line 342.

Example IV.—“Glenara.”—First Two of Eight Stanzas.

“O heard | ye yon pi | -broch sound sad | in the gale,
Where a band | cometh slow | -ly with weep | -ing and wail!
'Tis the chief | of Glena | -ra laments | for his dear;
And her sire, | and the peo | -ple, are called | to her bier.

Glena | -ra came first | with the mourn | -ers and shroud;
Her kins | -men, they fol | -lowed, but mourned | not aloud;
Their plaids | all their bo | -soms were fold | -ed around;
They marched | all in si | -lence—they looked | on the ground.”
T. CAMPBELL'S Poetical Works, p. 105.

Page 1590

Example V.—“Lochiel’s Warning.”—Ten Lines from Eighty-six.

“’Tis the sun | -set of life | gives me mys | -tical lore,
And com | -ing events | cast their shad | -ows before.
I tell | thee, Cullo | -den’s dread ech | -oes shall ring
With the blood | -hounds that bark | for thy fu | -gitive king.
Lo! anoint | -ed by Heav’n | with the vi | -als of wrath,
Behold, | where he flies | on his des | -olate path!
Now, in dark | -ness and bil | -lows he sweeps | from my sight;
Rise! rise! | ye wild tem | -pests, and cov | -er his flight!
’Tis fin | -ished. Their thun | -ders are hushed | on the moors;
Cullo | -den is lost, | and my coun | -try deplores.”—lb., p. 89.

Example VI.—“The Exile of Erin.”—The First of Five Stanzas.

“There came | to the beach | a poor Ex | -ile of E | -r~in,
The dew | on his thin | robe was heav | -y and chill;
For his coun | -try he sighed, | when at twi | -light repair | -__~ing_
To wan | -der alone | by the wind | -beaten hill.
But the day | -star attract | -ed his eye’s | sad devo | -t~ion,
For it rose | o’er his own | native isle | of the o | -c~ean,
Where once, | in the fire | of his youth | -ful emo | t~ion,
He sang | the bold an | -them of E | -rin go bragh.”—lb., p. 116.

Example VII.—“The Poplar Field.”

“The pop | -lars are fell’d, | farewell | to the shade, And the whis | -pering sound | of the cool | colonnade; The winds | play no lon | -ger and sing | in the leaves, Nor Ouse | on his bo | -som their im | -age receives. Twelve years | have elaps’d, | since I last | took a view Of my fa | -vourite field, | and the bank | where they grew; And now | in the grass |
behold | they are laid, And the tree | is my seat | that once lent | me a shade. The black |
-bird has fled | to anoth | -er retreat, Where the ha | -zels afford | him a screen | from the heat, And the scene, | where his mel | -ody charm’d | me before, Resounds | with his sweet | -flowing dit | -ty no more. My fu | -gitive years | are all hast | -ing away, And I | must ere long | lie as low | -ly as they, With a turf | on my breast, | and a stone | at my head, Ere anoth | -er such grove | shall arise | in its stead. ’Tis a sight | to engage | me, if an | -y thing can, To muse | on the per | -ishing pleas | -ures of man; Though his life | be a dream, | his enjoy | -ments, I see, Have a be | -ing less dur | -able e | -ven than he.”

COWPER’S Poems, Vol. i, p. 257.

OBSERVATIONS.

Page 1591

OBS. 1.—Everett avers, that, “The purely Anapestic measure is more easily constructed than the Trochee, [Trochaic,] and of much more frequent occurrence.”—English Versification, p. 97. Both parts of this assertion are at least very questionable; and so are this author’s other suggestions, that, “The Anapest is [necessarily] the vehicle of gayety and joy,” that, “Whenever this measure is employed in the treating of sad subjects, the effect is destroyed,” that, “Whoever should attempt to write an elegy in this measure, would be sure to fail,” that, “The words might express grief, but the measure would express joy,” that, “The Anapest should never be employed throughout a long piece,” because “buoyancy of spirits can never be supposed to last,”—“sadness never leaves us, BUT joy remains but for a moment,” and, again, because, “the measure is exceedingly monotonous.”—Ibid., pp. 97 and 98.

OBS. 2.—Most anapestic poetry, so far as I know, is in pieces of no great length; but Leigh Hunt’s “Feast of the Poets,” which is thrice cited above, though not a long poem, may certainly be regarded as “a long piece,” since it extends through fifteen pages, and contains four hundred and thirty-one lines, all, or nearly all, of anapestic tetrameter. And, surely, no poet had ever more need of a metre well suited to his purpose, than he, who, intending a critical as well as a descriptive poem, has found so much fault with the versification of others. Pope, as a versifier, was regarded by this author, “not only as no master of his art, but as a very indifferent practiser.”—Notes on the Feast of the Poets, p. 35. His “monotonous and cloying” use of numbers, with that of Darwin, Goldsmith, Johnson, Haley, and others of the same “school,” is alleged to have wrought a general corruption of taste in respect to versification—a fashion that has prevailed, not temporarily,

“*But ever since Pope spoil’d the ears of the town
With his cuckoo-song verses, half up and half down*”—lb.

OBS. 3.—Excessive monotony is thus charged by one critic upon all verse of “the purely Anapestic measure;” and, by an other, the same fault is alleged in general terms against all the poetry “of the school of Pope,” well-nigh the whole of which is iambic. The defect is probably in either case, at least half imaginary; and, as for the inherent joyousness of anapestics, that is perhaps not less ideal. Father Humphrey says, “Anapaestic and amphibrachic verse, being similar in measure and movement, are pleasing to the ear, and well adapted to cheerful and humorous compositions; and sometimes to elegiac compositions, and subjects important and solemn.”—Humphrey’s English Prosody, p. 17.

Page 1592

OBS. 4.—The anapest, the dactyl, and the amphibrach, have this in common,—that each, with one long syllable, takes two short ones. Hence there is a degree of similarity in their rhythms, or in their several effects upon the ear; and consequently lines of each order, (or of any two, if the amphibrachic be accounted a separate order,) are sometimes commingled. But the propriety of acknowledging an order of “Amphibrachic verse,” as does Humphrey, is more than doubtful; because, by so doing, we not only recognize the amphibrach as one of the principal feet, but make a vast number of lines ambiguous in their scansion. For our Amphibrachic order will be made up of lines that are commonly scanned as anapestics—such anapestics as are diversified by an iambus at the beginning, and sometimes also by a surplus short syllable at the end; as in the following verses, better divided as in the sixth example above:—

“Th~ere c=ame t~o | th~e b=each a | poor Ex~ile | of Erin
The dew on | his thin robe | was heavy | and chill:
F~or h~is co=un | -tr~y h~e s=ighed, | wh=en at tw=i
| -light r~ep=air | _-ing_
To wander | alone by | the wind-beat | -en hill.”

MEASURE II.—ANAPESTIC OF THREE FEET, OR TRIMETER.

Example I.—“Alexander Selkirk.”—First Two Stanzas.

I.

“I am mon | -arch of all | I survey,
My right | there is none | to dispute;
From the cen | -tre all round | to the sea,
I am lord | of the fowl | and the brute.
O Sol | -itude! where | are the charms
That sa | -ges have seen | in thy face?
Better dwell | in the midst | of alarms,
Than reign | in this hor | -rible place.

II.

I am out | of human | -ity's reach,
I must fin | -ish my jour | -ney alone,
Never hear | the sweet mu | -sic of speech,
I start | at the sound | of my own.
The beasts | that roam o | -ver the plain,
My form | with indif | -ference see;
They are so | unacquaint | -ed with man,

Their tame | -ness is shock | -ing to me.”
COWPER'S Poems, Vol. i, p. 199.

Example II.—“Catharina.”—Two Stanzas from Seven.

IV.

“Though the pleas | -ures of Lon | -don exceed
In num | -ber the days | of the year,
Cathari | -na, did noth | -ing impede,
Would feel | herself hap | -pier here;
For the close | -woven arch | -es of limes
On the banks | of our riv | -er, I know,
Are sweet | -er to her | many times
Than aught | that the cit | -y can show.

V.

So it is, | when the mind | is endued
With a well | -judging taste | from above;
Then, wheth | -er embel | -lish'd or rude,
'Tis na | -ture alone | that we love.
The achieve | -ments of art

Page 1593

| may amuse,
 May e | -ven our won | -der excite,
 But groves, | hills, and val | -leys, diffuse
 A last | -ing, a sa | -cred delight."
 COWPER'S Poems, Vol. ii, p. 232.

Example III.—“A Pastoral Ballad.”—Two Stanzas from Twenty-seven.

(8.)

“Not a pine | in my grove | is there seen,
 But with ten | -drils of wood | -bine is bound;
 Not a beech | 's more beau | -tiful green,
 But a sweet | -briar twines | it around,
 Not my fields | in the prime | of the year
 More charms | than my cat | -tle unfold;
 Not a brook | that is lim | -pid and clear,
 But it glit | -ters with fish | -es of gold.

(9)

One would think | she might like | to retire
 To the bow'r | I have la | -bour'd to rear;
 Not a shrub | that I heard | her admire,
 But I hast | -ed and plant | -ed it there.
 O how sud | -den the jes | -samine strove
 With the li | -lac to ren | -der it gay!
 Alread | -y it calls | for my love,
 To prune | the wild branch | -es away.”
 SHENSTONE: British Poets, Vol. vii, p. 139.

Anapestic lines of four feet and of three are sometimes alternated in a stanza, as in the following instance:—

Example IV.—“The Rose.”

“The rose | had been wash'd, | just wash'd | in a show'r,
 Which Ma | -ry to An | -na convey'd;
 The plen | -tiful moist | -ure encum | -ber'd the flow'r,
 And weigh'd | down its beau | -tiful head.

The cup | was all fill'd, | and the leaves | were all wet,
 And it seem'd | to a fan | -ciful view,

To weep | for the buds | it had left, | with regret,
On the flour | -ishing bush | where it grew.

I hast | -ily seized | it, unfit | as it was
For a nose | -gay, so drip | -ping and drown'd,
And, swing | -ing it rude | -ly, too rude | -ly, alas!
I snapp'd | it,—it fell | to the ground.

And such, | I exclaim'd, | is the pit | -iless part
Some act | by the del | -icate mind,
Regard | -less of wring | -ing and break | -ing a heart
Alread | -y to sor | -row resign'd.

This el | -egant rose, | had I shak | -en it less,
Might have bloom'd | with its own | -er a while;
And the tear | that is wip'd | with a lit | -tle address,
May be fol | -low'd perhaps | by a smile."

COWPER: Poems, Vol. i, p. 216; English Reader, p. 212.

MEASURE III.—ANAPESTIC OF TWO FEET, OR DIMETER.

Example I.—Lines with Hypermeter and Double Rhyme.

"CORONACH," OR FUNERAL SONG.

1.

Page 1594

"He is gone | on the mount | -a~in
 He is lost | to the for | -est
Like a sum | -mer-dried foun | -tain
 When our need | was the sor | -est.
The font, | reappear | -ing,
 From the rain | -drops shall bor | -r~ow,
 But to us | comes no cheer | -ing,
Do Dun | -can no mor | -row!

2.

The hand | of the reap | -er
Takes the ears | that are hoar | -y,
 But the voice | of the weep | -er
Wails man | -hood in glo | -ry;
 The au | -tumn winds rush | -ing,
Waft the leaves | that are sear | -est,
 But our flow'r | was in flush | -ing,
When blight | -ing was near | -est."
 WALTER SCOTT: Lady of the Lake, Canto iii, St. 16.

Example II.—Exact Lines of Two Anapests.

"Prithee, Cu | -pid, no more
 Hurl thy darts | at threescore;
 To thy girls | and thy boys,
 Give thy pains | and thy joys;
 Let Sir Trust | -y and me
 From thy fro | -lics be free."
 ADDISON: Rosamond, Act ii, Scene 2; Ev. Versif., p. 100.

Example III—An Ode, from the French of Malherbe.

"This An | -na so fair,
 So talk'd | of by fame,
 Why dont | she appear?
 Indeed, | she's to blame!
 Lewis sighs | for the sake
 Of her charms, | as they say;
 What excuse | can she make
 For not com | -ing away?
 If he does | not possess,
 He dies | with despair;

Let's give | him redress,
And go find | out the fair"

"Cette Anne si belle,
Qu'on vante si fort,
Pourquoi ne vient elle?
Vraiment, elle a tort!
Son Louis soupire,
Après ses appas;
Que veut elle dire,
Qu'elle ne vient pas?
S'il ne la possede,
Il s'en va mourir;
Donnons y remede,
Allons la querir."

WILLIAM KING, LL. D.: Johnson's British Poets, Vol. iii, p. 590.

Example IV.—'Tis the Last Rose of Summer.

1.

"'Tis the last | rose of sum | -m~er,
Left bloom | -ing alone;
All her love | -ly compan | -i~ons
Are fad | -ed and gone;
No flow'r | of her kin | -dr~ed,
No rose | -bud is nigh,
To give | back her blush | -_~es_,
Or give | sigh for sigh.

2.

I'll not leave | thee, thou lone | _~one!_
To pine | on the stem!
Since the love | -ly are sleep | -_~ing_,
Go, sleep | thou with them;
Thus kind | -ly I scat | -t~er
Thy leaves | o'er thy bed,
Where thy mates | of the gar | -d~en
Lie scent | -less and dead.

3.

Page 1595

So, soon | may I fol | -/~ow,
 When friend | -ships decay,
 And, from love's | shining cir | -cl~e,
 The gems | drop away;
 When true | hearts lie with | -_~er'd_,
 And fond | ones are flown,
 Oh! who | would inhab | -it
 This bleak | world alone ?”
 T. MOORE: Melodies, Songs, and Airs, p. 171.

Example V.—Nemesis Calling up the Dead Astarte.

“Shadow! | or spir | -_~it!_
 Whatev | -er thou art,
 Which still | doth inher | -_~it_
 The whole | or a part
 Of the form | of thy birth,
 Of the mould | of thy clay,
 Which return'd | to the earth,
 Re-appear | to the day!
 Bear what | thou bor | -_~est_,
 The heart | and the form,
 And the as | -pect thou wor | -_~est_
 Redeem | from the worm!
 Appear!—Appear!—Appear!”
 LORD BYRON: Manfred, Act ii, Sc. 4.

Example VI.—Anapestic Dimeter with Trimeter.

FIRST VOICE.

“Make room | for the com | -bat, make room;
 Sound the trum | -pet and drum;
 A fair | -er than Ve | -nus prepares
 To encoun | -ter a great | -er than Mars.
 Make room | for the com | -bat, make room;
 Sound the trum | -pet and drum.”

SECOND VOICE.

“Give the word | to begin,
 Let the com | -batants in,
 The chal | -lenger en | -ters all glo | r~io~us;
 But Love | has decreed,

Though Beau | -ty may bleed,
Yet Beau | -ty shall still | be vic_to | -r~io~us_.”

GEORGE GRANVILLE: Johnson's British Poets, Vol. v, p. 58.

Example VII.—Anapestic Dimeter with Tetrameter.

AIR.

“Let the pipe's | merry notes | aid the skill | of the voice;
For our wish | -es are crown'd, | and our hearts | shall rejoice.

Rejoice, | and be glad;

For, sure, | he is mad,

Who, where mirth, | and good hum | -mour, and har | -mony's found,

Never catch | -es the smile, | nor lets pleas | -ure go round.

Let the stu | -pid be grave,

'Tis the vice | of the slave;

But can nev | -er agree

With a maid | -en like me,

Who is born | in a coun | -try that's hap | -py and free.”

LLOYD: Johnson's British Poets, Vol. viii, p. 178.

MEASURE IV.—ANAPESTIC OF ONE FOOT, OR MONOMETER.

This measure is rarely if ever used except in connexion with longer lines. The following example has six anapestics of two feet, and two of one; but the latter, being verses of double rhyme, have each a surplus short syllable; and four of the former commence with the iambus:—

Example I.—A Song in a Drama.

Page 1596

"Now, mor | -tal, prepare, For thy fate | is at hand; Now, mor | -tal, prepare, And surr=en | -d~er.

For Love | shall arise,
Whom no pow'r | can withstand,
Who rules | from the skies
T~o th~e c=en | -tr~e."

GRANVILLE, VISCOUNT LANSDOWNE: Joh. Brit. Poets, Vol. v, p. 49.

The following extract, (which is most properly to be scanned as anapestic, though considerably diversified,) has two lines, each of which is pretty evidently composed of a single anapest:—

Example II.—A Chorus in the Same.

"Let trum | -pets and tym | -b~als,
Let at~a | —bals and cym | -b~als,
Let drums | and let haut | -boys give o | -v~er;
B~ut l~et fl=utes,
And l~et l=utes
Our pas | -sions excite
To gent | -ler delight,
And ev | -ery Mars | be a lov | -er."
Ib., p. 56.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—That a single anapest, a single foot of any kind, or even a single long syllable, may be, and sometimes is, in certain rather uncommon instances, set as a line, is not to be denied. "Dr. Caustic," or T. G. Fessenden, in his satirical "Directions for Doing Poetry," uses in this manner the monosyllables, "Whew," "Say," and "Dress" and also the iambs, "The gay" and, "All such," rhyming them with something less isolated.

OBS. 2.—Many of our grammarians give anonymous examples of what they conceive to be "Anapestic Monometer," or "the line of one anapest," while others—(as Allen, Bullions, Churchill, and Hiley—) will have the length of two anapests to be the shortest measure of this order. Prof. Hart says, "The shortest anapaestic verse is a single anapaest; as,

'In =a sw=eet
Res~on=ance,

All their f=eet
In th=e d=ance

*All th=e n=ight
Tinkl~ed l=ight.'*

This measure," it is added, "is, however, ambiguous; for by laying an accent on the first, as well as the third syllable, we may generally make it a trochaic."—Hart's English Gram., p. 188. The same six versicles are used as an example by Prof. Fowler, who, without admitting any ambiguity in the measure, introduces them, rather solecistically, thus: "Each of the following lines consist of a single Anapest."—Fowler's E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, Sec.694.

OBS. 3.—Verses of three syllables, with the second short, the last long, and the first common, or variable, are, it would seem, doubly doubtful in scansion; for, while the first syllable, if made short, gives us an anapest, to make it long, gives either an amphimac or what is virtually two trochees. For reasons of choice in the latter case, see Observation 1st on Trochaic Dimeter. For the fixing of variable quantities, since the case admits no other rule, regard should be had to the analogy of the verse, and also to the common principles of accentuation. It is doubtless possible to read the six short lines above, into the measure of so many anapests; but, since the two monosyllables “In” and “All” are as easily made long as short, whoever considers the common pronunciation of the longer words, “Resonance” and “Tinkled,” may well doubt whether the learned professors have, in this instance, hit upon the right mode of scansion. The example may quite as well be regarded either as Trochaic Dimeter, catalectic, or as Amphimacric Monometer, acatalectic. But the word resonance, being accented usually on the first syllable only, is naturally a dactyl; and, since the other five little verses end severally with a monosyllable, which can be varied in quantity, it is possible to read them all as being dactyls; and so the whole may be regarded as trebly doubtful with respect to the measure.

Page 1597

OBS. 4.—L. Murray says, “The shortest anapaestic verse must be a single anapaest; as,

B~ut in v=ain
They complain.”

And then he adds, “This measure is, however, ambiguous; for, by laying the stress of the voice on the first and third syllables, we might make a trochaic. And therefore the first and simplest form of our genuine Anapaestic verse, is made up of two anapaests.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 257; 12mo, p. 207. This conclusion is utterly absurd, as well as completely contradictory to his first assertion. The genuineness of this small metre depends not at all on what may be made of the same words by other pronunciation; nor can it be a very natural reading of this passage, that gives to “But” and “They” such emphasis as will make them long.

OBS. 5.—Yet Chandler, in his improved grammar of 1847, has not failed to repeat the substance of all this absurdity and self-contradiction, carefully dressing it up in other language, thus: “Verses composed of single Anapaests are frequently found in stanzas of songs; and the same is true of several of the other kinds of feet; but we may consider the first [i.e., shortest] form of anapaestic verse as consisting of two Anapaests.”—Chandler’s Common School Gram., p. 196.

OBS. 6.—Everett, speaking of anapestic lines, says, “The first and shortest of these is composed of a single Anapest following an Iambus.”—English Versification, p. 99. This not only denies the existence of Anapestic Monometer, but improperly takes for the Anapestic verse what is, by the statement itself, half Iambic, and therefore of the Composite Order. But the false assertion is plainly refuted even by the author himself and on the same page. For, at the bottom of the page, he has this contradictory note: “It has been remarked (Sec.15) that though the Iambus with an additional short syllable is the shortest line that is known to Iambic verse, there are isolated instances of a single lambus, and even of a single long syllable. There are examples of lines made up of a single Anapest, as the following example will show:—

Page 1598

'Jove in his chair,
Of the sky lord mayor,
With his nods
Men and gods
Keeps in awe;
When he winks,
Heaven shrinks;
* * * *

Cock of the school,
He bears despotic rule;
His word,
Though absurd,
Must be law.
Even Fate,
Though so great,
Must not prate;

His bald pate
Jove would cuff,
He's so bluff,
For a straw.
Cowed deities,
Like mice in cheese,
To stir must cease
Or gnaw.'

O'HARA:—Midas, Act i, Sc. 1."—Everett's Versification, p. 99

ORDER IV.—DACTYLIC VERSE.

In pure Dactylic verse, the stress is laid on the first syllable of each successive three; that is, on the first, the fourth, the seventh, and the tenth syllable of each line of four feet. Full dactylic generally forms triple rhyme. When one of the final short syllables is omitted, the rhyme is double; when both, single. These omissions are here essential to the formation of such rhymes. Dactylic with double rhyme, ends virtually with a trochee; dactylic with single rhyme, commonly ends with a caesura; that is, with a long syllable taken for a foot. Dactylic with single rhyme is the same as anapestic would be without its initial short syllables. Dactylic verse is rather uncommon; and, when employed, is seldom perfectly pure and regular.

MEASURE I.—DACTYLIC OF EIGHT FEET, OR OCTOMETER.

Example.—Nimrod.

Nimrod the | hunter was | mighty in | hunting, and | famed as the
| ruler of | cities of | yore;
Babel, and | Erech, and | Accad, and | Calneh, from | Shinar's fair
| region his | name afar | bore.

MEASURE II.—DACTYLIC OF SEVEN FEET, OR HEPTAMETER.

Example.—Christ's Kingdom.

Out of the | kingdom of | Christ shall be | gathered, by | angels o'er
| Satan vic | -torious,
All that of | -fendeth, that | lieth, that | faileth to | honour his
| name ever | glorious.

MEASURE III.—DACTYLIC OF SIX FEET, OR HEXAMETER.

Example I.—Time in Motion.

Time, thou art | ever in | motion, on | wheels of the | days, years, and | ages;
Restless as | waves of the | ocean, when | Eurus or | Boreas | rages.

Example II.—Where, is Grand-Pre?

“This is the | forest pri | -meval; but | where are the | hearts that be
| -neath it
Leap'd like the | roe, when he | hears in the | woodland the
| voice of the | huntsman?
Where is the | thatch-roofed | village, the | home of A | -cadian
| farmers?”
H. W. LONGFELLOW: Evangeline, Part i, l. 7—9.

MEASURE IV.—DACTYLIC OF FIVE FEET, OR PENTAMETER.

Page 1599

Example.—Salutation to America.

“Land of the | beautiful, | beautiful, | land of the | free,
Land of the | negro-slave, | negro-slave, | land of the | chivalry,
Often my | heart had turned, | heart had turned, | longing to | thee;
Often had | mountain-side, | mountain-side, | broad lake, and | stream,
Gleamed on my | waking thought, | waking thought, | crowded my | dream.
Now thou dost | welcome me, | welcome me, | from the dark | sea,
Land of the | beautiful, | beautiful, | land of the | free,
Land of the | negro-slave, | negro-slave, | land of the | chivalry.”

MEASURE V.—DACTYLIC OF FOUR FEET, OR TETRAMETER.

Example 1—The Soldier's Wife.

“Weary way | -wanderer, | languid and | sick at heart,
Travelling | painfully | over the | rugged road,
Wild-visaged | Wanderer! | God help thee, | wretched one!
Sorely thy | little one | drags by thee | barefooted;
Cold is the | baby that | hangs at thy | bending back,
Meagre, and | livid, and | screaming for | misery.
Woe-begone | mother, half | anger, half | agony,
Over thy | shoulder thou | lookest to | hush the babe,
Bleakly the | blinding snow | beats in thy | haggard face.
Ne'er will thy | husband re | -turn from the | war again,
Cold is thy | heart, and as | frozen as | Charity!
Cold are thy | children.—Now | God be thy | comforter!”
ROBERT SOUTHEY: Poems, Philad., 1843, p. 250.

Example II.—Boys.—A Dactylic Stanza.

“Boys will an | -ticipate, | lavish, and | dissipate
All that your | busy pate | hoarded with | care;
And, in their | foolishness, | passion, and | mulishness,
Charge you with | churlishness, | spurning your pray'r.”

Example III—“Labour.”—The First of Five Stanzas.

“Pause not to | dream of the | future be | -fore us;
Pause not to | weep the wild | cares that come | o'er us:
Hark, how Cre | -ation's deep, | musical | chorus,
Uninter | -mitting, goes | up into | Heaven!

Never the | ocean-wave | falters in | flowing;
Never the | little seed | stops in its | growing;
More and more | richly the | rose-heart keeps | glowing,
Till from its | nourishing | stem it is | riven."

FRANCES S. OSGOOD: Clapp's Pioneer, p. 94.

Example IV.—"Boat Song."—First Stanza of Four.

"Hail to the | chief who in | triumph ad | -vances!
Honour'd and | bless'd be the | ever-green | pine!
Long may the | tree in his | banner that | glances,
Flourish, the | shelter and | grace of our | line!
Heaven send it happy dew,
Earth lend it sap anew,
Gayly to | bourgeon, and | broadly to | grow,
While ev'ry | Highland glen
Sends our shout | back agen,
'Roderigh Vich Alpine Dhu, ho! ieroe!'"
WALTER SCOTT: Lady of the Lake, C. ii, St. 19.

Page 1600

MEASURE VI.—DACTYLIC OF THREE FEET, OR TRIMETER.

Example.—To the Katydid.

“Ka-ty-did, | Ka-ty-did, | sweetly sing,—
Sing to thy | loving mates | near to thee;
Summer is | come, and the | trees are green,—
Summer’s glad | season so | dear to thee.

Cheerily, | cheerily, | insect, sing;
Blithe be thy | notes in the | hickory;
Every | bough shall an | answer ring,
Sweeter than | trumpet of | victory.”

MEASURE VII.—DACTYLIC OF TWO FEET, OR DIMETER.

Example I.—The Bachelor.—Four Lines from Many.

“Free from sa | -tiety,
Care, and anx | -iety,
Charms in va | -riety,
Fall to his | share.”—ANON.: Newspaper.

Example II.—The Pibroch.—Sixteen Lines from Forty.

“Pibroch of | Donuil Dhu,
Pibroch of | Donuil,
Wake thy wild | voice anew.
Summon Clan | -Conuil.
Come away, | come away!
Hark to the | summons!
Come in your | war-array,
Gentles and | commons!

“Come as the | winds come, when
Forests are | rended;
Come as the | waves come, when
Navies are | stranded;
Faster come, | faster come,
Faster and | faster!

Chief, vassal, | page, and groom,
Tenant and | master.”—W. SCOTT.

Example III.—“My Boy.”

‘There is even a happiness that makes the heart afraid.’—HOOD.

1.

“One more new | claimant for
Human fra | -ternity,
Swelling the | flood that sweeps
On to e | -ternity;

I who have | filled the cup,
Tremble to | think of it;
For, be it | what it may,
I must yet | drink of it.

2.

Room for him | into the
Ranks of hu | -manity;
Give him a | place in your
Kingdom of | vanity!
Welcome the | stranger with
Kindly af | -fection;
Hopefully, | trustfully,
Not with de | -jection.

3.

See, in his | waywardness
How his fist | doubles;
Thus pugi | -listical,
Daring life’s | troubles:
Strange that the | neophyte
Enters ex | -istence
In such an | attitude,
Feigning re | -sistance.

4.

Could he but | have a glimpse
Into fu | -turity,
Well might he | fight against
Farther ma | -turity;
Yet does it | seem to me
As if his | purity
Were against | sinfulness
Ample se | -curity.

5.

Incompre | -hensible,
Budding im | -mortal,
Thrust all a | -mazedly
Under life's | portal;
Born to a | destiny
Clouded in | mystery,
Wisdom it | -self cannot
Guess at its | history.

Page 1601

6.
Something too | much of this
Timon-like | croaking;
See his face | wrinkle now,
Laughter pro | -voking.
Now he cries | lustily—
Bravo, my | hearty one!
Lungs like an | orator
Cheering his | party on.

7.
Look how his | merry eyes
Turn to me | pleadingly!
Can we help | loving him—
Loving ex | -ceedingly?
Partly with | hopefulness,
Partly with | fears,
Mine, as I | look at him,
Moisten with | tears.

8.
Now then to | find a name;—
Where shall we | search for it?
Turn to his | ancestry,
Or to the | church for it?
Shall we en | -dow him with
Title he | -roic,
After some | warrior,
Poet, or | stoic?

9.
One aunty | says he will
Soon 'lisp in | numbers,'
Turning his | thoughts to rhyme,
E'en in his | slumbers;
Watts rhymed in | babyhood,
No blemish | spots his fame—
Christen him | even so:
Young Mr. | Watts his name."
ANONYMOUS: Knickerbocker, and Newspapers, 1849.

MEASURE VIII.—DACTYLIC OF ONE FOOT, OR MONOMETER.

“Fearfully, Tearfully.”

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—A single dactyl, set as a line, can scarcely be used otherwise than as part of a stanza, and in connexion with longer verses. The initial accent and triple rhyme make it necessary to have something else with it. Hence this short measure is much less common than the others, which are accented differently. Besides, the line of three syllables, as was noticed in the observations on Anapestic Monometer, is often peculiarly uncertain in regard to the measure which it should make. A little difference in the laying of emphasis or accent may, in many instances, change it from one species of verse to another. Even what seems to be dactylic of two feet, if the last syllable be sufficiently lengthened to admit of single rhyme with the full metre, becomes somewhat doubtful in its scansion; because, in such case, the last foot maybe reckoned an amphimac, or amphimacer. Of this, the following stanzas from Barton's lines “to the Gallic Eagle,” (or to Bonaparte on St. Helena,) though different from all the rest of the piece, may serve as a specimen:—

“Far from the | battle's shock,
Fate hath fast | bound thee;
Chain'd to the | rugged rock,
Waves warring | round thee.

[Now, for] the | trumpet's sound,
Sea-birds are | shrieking;
Hoarse on thy | rampart's bound,
Billows are | breaking.”

OBS. 2.—This may be regarded as verse of the Composite Order; and, perhaps, more properly so, than as Dactylic with mere incidental variations. Lines like those in which the questionable foot is here Italicized, may be united with longer dactyls, and thus produce a stanza of great beauty and harmony. The following is a specimen. It is a song, written by I know not whom, but set to music by Dempster. The twelfth line is varied to a different measure.

Page 1602

“ADDRESS TO THE SKYLARK.”

“Bird of the | wilderness,
Blithesome and | cumberless,
Light be thy | matin o’er | moorland and | lea;
Emblem of | happiness,
Blest is thy | dwelling-place;
O! to a | -bide in the | desert with | thee!

“Wild is thy | lay, and loud,
Far on the | downy cloud;
Love gives it | energy, | love gave it | birth:
Where, on thy | dewy wing,
Where art thou | journeying?
Thy lay | is in heav | -en, thy love | is on earth.

“O’er moor and | mountain green,
O’er fell and | fountain sheen,
O’er the red | streamer that | heralds the | day;
Over the | cloudlet dim,
Over the | rainbow’s rim,
Musical | cherub, hie, | hie thee a | -way.

“Then, when the | gloamin comes,
Low in the | heather blooms.
Sweet will thy | welcome and | bed of love | be.
Emblem of | happiness,
Blest is thy | dwelling-place;
O! to a | -bide in the | desert with | thee!”

OBS. 3.—It is observed by Churchill, (New Gram., p. 387,) that, “Shakspeare has used the dactyl, as appropriate to mournful occasions.” The chief example which he cites, is the following:—

“Midnight, as | -sist our moan,
Help us to | sigh and groan
Heavily, | heavily.
Graves, yawn and | yield your dead,
Till death be | uttered
Heavily, | heavily.”—Much Ado, V, 3

OBS. 4.—These six lines of Dactylic (or Composite) Dimeter are subjoined by the poet to four of Trochaic Tetrameter. There does not appear to me to be any particular adaptation of either measure to mournful subjects, more than to others; but later instances of this metre may be cited, in which such is the character of the topic treated. The following long example consists of lines of two feet, most of them dactylic only; but, of the seventy-six, there are twelve which may be otherwise divided, and as many more which must be, because they commence with a short syllable.

“THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS.”—BY THOMAS HOOD.

“One more un | -fortunate,
Weary of | breath,
Rashly im | -portunate,
Gone to her | death!
Take her up | tenderly,
Lift her with | care;
Fashioned so | slenderly,
Young, and so | fair!

Look at her | garments
Clinging like | cerements,
Whilst the wave | constantly
Drips from her | clothing;
Take her up | instantly,
Loving, not | loathing.

Touch her not | scornfully;
Think of her | mournfully,
Gently, and | humanly;
Not of the | stains of her:
All that re | -mains of her
Now, is pure | womanly.

Make no deep | scrutiny
Into her | mutiny,
Rash and un | -dutifull;
Past all dis | -honour,
Death has left | on her
Only the | beautiful.

Page 1603

Still, for all | slips of hers,—
One of Eve's | family,—
Wipe those poor | lips of hers,
Oozing so | clammily.
Loop up her | tresses,
Escaped from the comb,—
Her fair auburn tresses;
Whilst wonderment guesses,
Where was her | home?

Who was her | father?
Who was her | mother?
Had she a | sister?
Had she a | brother?
Was there a | dearer one
Yet, than all | other?

Alas, for the rarity
Of Christian charity
Under the | sun!
O, it was | pitiful!
Near a whole | city full,
Home she had | none.

Sisterly, | brotherly,
Fatherly, | motherly,
Feelings had | changed;
Love, by harsh | evidence,
Thrown from its | eminence
Even God's | providence
Seeming e | -stranged.

Where the lamps | quiver
So far in the river,
With many a light,
From window and casement,
From garret to basement,
She stood, with amazement,
Houseless, by | night.

The bleak wind of March
Made her tremble and shiver;
But not the dark arch,
Or the black-flowing river:

Mad from life's | history,
Glad to death's | mystery,
Swift to be | hurled,—
Anywhere, | anywhere,
Out of the | world!

In she plung'd | boldly,—
No matter how coldly
The rough | river ran,—
Over the | brink of it:
Picture it, | think of it,
Dissolute | man!"
Clapp's Pioneer, p. 54.

OBS. 5.—As each of our principal feet,—the Iambus, the Trochee, the Anapest, and the Dactyl,—has always one, and only one long syllable; it should follow, that, in each of our principal orders of verse,—the Iambic, the Trochaic, the Anapestic, and the Dactylic,—any line, not diversified by a secondary foot, must be reckoned to contain just as many feet as long syllables. So, too, of the Amphibrach, and any line reckoned Amphibrachic. But it happens, that the common error by which single-rhymed Trochaics have so often been counted a foot shorter than they are, is also extended by some writers to single-rhymed Dactylics—the rhyming syllable, if long, being esteemed supernumerary! For example, three dactylic stanzas, in each of which a pentameter couplet is followed by a hexameter line, and this again by a heptameter, are introduced by Prof. Hart thus: “The Dactylic Tetrameter, Pentameter, and Hexameter, with the additional or hypermeter syllable, are all found combined in the following extraordinary specimen of versification. * * * This is the only specimen of Dactylic hexameter or even pentameter verse that the author recollects to have seen.”

LAMENT OF ADAM.

Page 1604

"Glad was our | meeting: thy | glittering | bosom I | heard,
Beating on | mine, like the | heart of a | timorous | bird;
Bright were thine | eyes as the | stars, and their | glances were
| radiant as | gleams
Falling from | eyes of the | angels, when | singing by | Eden's pur
|-pureal | streams.

"Happy as | seraphs were | we, for we | wander'd a | -lone,
Trembling with | passionate | thrills, when the | twilight had | flown:
Even the | echo was | silent: our | kisses and | whispers of | love
Languish'd un | -heard and un | -known, like the | breath of the | blossoming | buds of the | grove.

"Life hath its | pleasures, but | fading are | they as the | flowers;
Sin hath its | sorrows, and | sadly we | turn'd from those | bowers;
Bright were the | angels be | -hind with their | falchions of
| heavenly | flame!
Dark was the | desolate | desert be | -fore us, and | darker the | depth of our | shame!"
—HENRY B. HIRST: Hart's English Grammar, p. 190.

OBS. 6.—Of Dactylic verse, our prosodists and grammarians in general have taken but very little notice; a majority of them appearing by their silence, to have been utterly ignorant of the whole species. By many, the dactyl is expressly set down as an inferior foot, which they imagine is used only for the occasional diversification of an iambic, trochaic, or anapestic line. Thus Everett: "It is never used except as a secondary foot, and then in the first place of the line."—English Versification, p. 122. On this order of verse, Lindley Murray bestowed only the following words: "The DACTYLIC measure being very uncommon, we shall give only one example of one species of it:—

Fr=om th=e l~ow pl=eas~ures of th=is fall~en n=at~ure, Rise we to higher, &c."—Gram., 12mo, p. 207; 8vo, p. 257.

Read this example with "we rise" for "Rise we," and all the poetry of it is gone! Humphrey says, "Dactyle verse is seldom used, as remarked heretofore; but is used occasionally, and has three metres; viz. of 2, 3, and 4 feet. Specimens follow. 2 feet. Free from anxiety. 3 feet. Singing most sweetly and merrily. 4 feet. Dactylic measures are wanting in energy."—English Prosody, p. 18. Here the prosodist has made his own examples; and the last one, which unjustly impeaches all dactyls, he has made very badly—very prosaically; for the word "Dactylic," though it has three syllables, is properly no dactyl, but rather an amphibrach.

OBS. 7.—By the Rev. David Blair, this order of poetic numbers is utterly misconceived and misrepresented. He says of it, “DACTYLIC verse consists of a short syllable, with one, two, or three feet, and a long syllable; as,

'D~istr=act~ed w~ith w=oe,

'I'll r=ush on the f=oe.' ADDISON.”—Blair's Pract. Gram., p. 119.

Page 1605

“Y~e sh=eph~erds s~o ch=eerf~ul and g=ay,
 ‘Whose fl=ocks n~ev~er c=are~essl~y r=oam;
 ‘Sh~ould C=or~yd~on’s h=app~en t~o str=ay,
 ‘Oh! c=all th~e p=oor w=and~er~ers h=ome.’ SHENSTONE.”—lb., p. 120.

It is manifest, that these lines are not dactylic at all. There is not a dactyl in them. They are composed of iambs and anapests. The order of the versification is Anapestic; but it is here varied by the very common diversification of dropping the first short syllable. The longer example is from a ballad of 216 lines, of which 99 are thus varied, and 117 are full anapestics.

OBS. 8.—The makers of school-books are quite as apt to copy blunders, as to originate them; and, when an error is once started in a grammar, as it passes with the user for good learning, no one can guess where it will stop. It seems worth while, therefore, in a work of this nature, to be liberal in the citation of such faults as have linked themselves, from time to time, with the several topics of our great subject. It is not probable, that the false scansion just criticised originated with Blair; for the Comprehensive Grammar, a British work, republished in its third edition, by Dobson, of Philadelphia, in 1789, teaches the same doctrine, thus: “Dactylic measure may consist of one, two, or three Dactyls, introduced by a feeble syllable, and terminated by a strong one; as,

M~y | d=ear Ir~ish | f=olks,
 C=ome | l=eave off your | j=okes,
 And | b=uy up my | h=alfp~ence s~o | f=ine;
 S~o | f=air and so | br=ight,
 Th~ey’ll | g=ive y~ou d~e | -l=ight:
 Ob | -s=erve h~ow th~ey | gl=ist~er and | sh=ine. SWIFT.

A | c=obl~er th~ere | w=as and he | l=iv’d in a | st=all,
 Wh~ich | s=erv’d h~im f~or | k=itch~en, f~or | p=arl~our and | hall;
 No | c=oin in his | p=ock~et, n~o | c=are in his | p=ate;
 N~o am | -b=ition h~e | h=ad, and no | d=uns at his | g=ate.”
 —Comp. Gram., p. 150.

To this, the author adds, “Dactylic measure becomes Anapestic by setting off an Iambic foot in the beginning of the line.”—lb. These verses, all but the last one, unquestionably have an iambic foot at the beginning; and, for that reason, they are not, and by no measurement can be, dactylics. The last one is purely anapestic. All the divisional bars, in either example, are placed wrong.

ORDER V.—COMPOSITE VERSE.

Composite verse is that which consists of various metres, or different feet, combined,—not accidentally, or promiscuously, but by design, and with some regularity. In Composite verse, of any form, the stress must be laid rhythmically, as in the simple orders, else the composition will be nothing better than unnatural prose. The possible variety of combinations in this sort of numbers is unlimited; but, the pure and simple kinds being generally preferred, any stated mixture of feet is comparatively uncommon. Certain forms which may be scanned by other methods, are susceptible also of division as Composites. Hence there cannot be an exact enumeration of the measures of this order, but instances, as they occur, may be cited to exemplify it.

Page 1606

Example I.—From Swift's Irish Feast.

"O'Rourk's | noble fare | will ne'er | be forgot,
By those | who were there, | or those | who were not.
His rev | -els to keep, | we sup | and we dine
On sev | -en score sheep, | fat bul | -locks, and swine.
Usquebaugh | to our feast | in pails | was brought up,
An hun | -dred at least, | and a mad | -der our cup.
O there | is the sport! | we rise | with the light,
In disor | -derly sort, | from snor | -ing all night.
O how | was I trick'd! | my pipe | it was broke,
My pock | -et was pick'd, | I lost | my new cloak.
I'm ri | -fled, quoth Nell, | of man | -tle and kerch | -er:
Why then | fare them well, | the de'il | take the search | -er."
Johnson's Works of the Poets, Vol. v, p. 310.

Here the measure is tetrameter; and it seems to have been the design of the poet, that each hemistich should consist of one iamb and one anapest. Such, with a few exceptions, is the arrangement throughout the piece; but the hemistichs which have double rhyme, may each be divided into two amphibrachs. In Everett's Versification, at p. 100, the first six lines of this example are broken into twelve, and set in three stanzas, being given to exemplify "The Line of a single Anapest preceded by an Iambus," or what he improperly calls "The first and shortest species of Anapestic lines." His other instance of the same metre is also Composite verse, rather than Anapestic, even by his own showing. "In the following example," says he, "we have this measure alternating with Amphibrachic lines:"

Example II.—From Byron's Manfred.

"The Captive Usurper,
Hurl'd down | from the throne.
Lay buried in torpor,
Forgotten and lone;
I broke through his slumbers,
I shiv | -er'd his chain,
I leagued him with numbers—
He's Ty | -rant again!
With the blood | of a mill | -ion he'll an | -swer my care,
With a na | -tion's destruc | -tion—his flight | and despair."
—Act ii, Sc. 3.

Here the last two lines, which are not cited by Everett, are pure anapestic tetrameters; and it may be observed, that, if each two of the short lines were printed as one, the eight which are here scanned otherwise, would become four of the same sort, except that these would each begin with an iambus. Hence the specimen sounds essentially as anapestic verse.

Example III.—Woman on the Field of Battle.

“Gentle and | lovely form,
What didst | thou here,
When the fierce | battle storm
Bore down | the spear?

Banner and | shiver’d crest,
Beside | thee strown,
Tell that a |—midst the best
Thy work was done!

Low lies the | stately head,
Earth-bound | the free:
How gave those | haughty dead
A place | to thee?

Page 1607

Slumb'rer! thine | early bier
Friends should | have crown'd,
Many a |flow'r and tear
Shedding | around.

Soft voices, | dear and young,
Mingling | their swell,
Should o'er thy | dust have sung
Earth's last | farewell.

Sisters a |bove the grave
Of thy | repose
Should have bid | vi'lets wave
With the | white rose.

Now must the | trumpet's note.
Savage | and shrill,
For requi'm | o'er thee float,
Thou fair | and still!

And the swift | charger sweep,
In full | career,
Trampling thy | place of sleep—
Why cam'st | thou here?

Why?—Ask the | true heart why
Woman | hath been
Ever, where | brave men die,
Unshrink |-ing seen.

Unto this | harvest ground,
Proud reap |-ers came,
Some for that | stirring sound,
A warr |-ior's name:

Some for the | stormy play,
And joy | of strife,
And some to | fling away
A wea |-ry life.

But thou, pale | sleeper, thou,
With the | slight frame,
And the rich | locks, whose glow
Death can |-not tame;

Only one | thought, one pow'r,
 Thee could | have led,
 So through the | tempest's hour
 To lift | thy head!

Only the | true, the strong,
 The love | whose trust
 Woman's deep | soul too long
 Pours on | the dust."

HEMANS: Poetical Works, Vol. ii, p. 157.

Here are fourteen stanzas of composite dimeter, each having two sorts of lines; the first sort consisting, with a few exceptions, of a dactyl and an amphimac; the second, mostly, of two iambs; but, in some instances, of a trochee and an iamb;—the latter being, in such a connexion, much the more harmonious and agreeable combination of quantities.

Example IV.—Airs from a "Serenata."

Air 1.

"Love sounds | the alarm,
 And fear | is a-fly~ing;
 When beau |-ty's the prize,
 What mor |-tal fears dy |-ing?
In defence | of my treas |-ure,
 I'd bleed | at each vein;
 Without | her no pleas |-ure;
 For life | is a pain."

Air 2.

"Consid |-er, fond shep |-h~erd,
 How fleet |-ing's the pleas |-ure,
That flat |-ters our hopes
In pursuit | of the fair:
The joys | that attend | it,
 By mo |-ments we meas |-ure;
But life | is too lit |-tle
To meas |-ure our care."

GAY'S POEMS: Johnson's Works of the Poets, Vol. vii, p. 378.

These verses are essentially either anapestic or amphibrachic. The anapest divides two of them in the middle; the amphibrach will so divide eight. But either division will give many iambs. By the present scansion, the first foot is an iamb in all of them but the two anapestics.

Page 1608

Example V.—“The Last Leaf.”

1.

“I saw | him once | before
As he pass | -ed by | the door,
And again
The pave | -ment stones | resound
As he tot | -ters o’er | the ground
With his cane.

2.

They say | that in | his prime,
Ere the prun | -ing knife of Time
Cut him down,
Not a bet | -ter man | was found
By the cri | -er on | his round
Through the town.

3.

But now | he walks | the streets,
And he looks | at all | he meets
So forlorn;
And he shakes | his fee | -ble head,
That it seems | as if | he said,
They are gone.

4.

The mos | -sy mar | -bles rest
On the lips | that he | has press’d
In their bloom;
And the names | he lov’d | to hear
Have been carv’d | for man | -y a year
On the tomb.

5.

My grand | -mamma | has said,—
Poor old La | -dy! she | is dead
Long ago,—
That he had | a Ro | -man nose,
And his cheek | was like | a rose
In the snow.

6.

But now | his nose | is thin,

And it rests | upon | his chin
Like a staff;
And a crook | is in | his back
And a mel |-anchol |-y crack
In his laugh.

7.
I know | it is | a sin
For me [thus] | to sit | and grin
At him here;
But the old | three-cor |-ner'd hat,
And the breech |-es, and | all that,
Are so queer!

8.
And if I | should live | to be
The last leaf | upon | the tree
In the spring,—
Let them smile, | as I | do now,
At the old | forsak |-en bough
Where I cling.”

OLIVER W. HOLMES: The Pioneer, 1843, p. 108.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Composite verse, especially if the lines be short, is peculiarly liable to uncertainty, and diversity of scansion; and that which does not always abide by one chosen order of quantities, can scarcely be found agreeable; it must be more apt to puzzle than to please the reader. The eight stanzas of this last example, have eight lines of iambic trimeter; and, since seven times in eight, this metre holds the first place in the stanza, it is a double fault, that one such line seems strayed from its proper position. It would be better to prefix the word Now to the fourth line, and to mend the forty-third thus:—

“And should | I live | to be”—

The trissyllabic feet of this piece, as I scan it, are numerous; being the sixteen short lines of monometer, and the twenty-four initial feet of the lines of seven syllables. Every one of the forty—(except the thirty-sixth, “The last leaf”—) begins with a monosyllable which may be varied in quantity; so that, with stress laid on this monosyllable, the foot becomes an amphimac; without such stress, an anapest.

Page 1609

OBS. 2.—I incline to read this piece as composed of iambs and anapests; but E. A. Poe, who has commended “the effective harmony of these lines,” and called the example “an excellently well conceived and well managed specimen of versification,” counts many syllables long, which such a reading makes short, and he also divides all but the iambs in a way quite different from mine, thus: “Let us scan the first stanza.

'I s=aw | h~im =once | b~ef=ore
As h~e | p=ass~ed | b=y th~e | d=oor,
And a- | g=ain

Th~e p=ave- | m~ent st=ones | r~es=ound
As h~e | t=ott~ers | =o'er th~e | gr=ound
W=ith h~is c=ane.'

This,” says he, “is the general scansion of the poem. We have first three iambs. The second line shifts the rhythm into the trochaic, giving us three trochees, with a caesura equivalent, in this case, to a trochee. The third line is a trochee and equivalent caesura.”—POE'S NOTES UPON ENGLISH VERSE: Pioneer, p. 109. These quantities are the same as those by which the whole piece is made to consist of iambs and amphimacs.

OBS. 3.—In its rhythmical effect upon the ear, a supernumerary short syllable at the end of a line, may sometimes, perhaps, compensate for the want of such a syllable at the beginning of the next line, as may be seen in the fourth example above; but still it is unusual, and seems improper, to suppose such syllables to belong to the scansion of the subsequent line; for the division of lines, with their harmonic pauses, is greater than the division of feet, and implies that no foot can ever actually be split by it. Poe has suggested that the division into lines may be disregarded in scanning, and sometimes must be. He cites for an example the beginning of Byron's “Bride of Abydos,”—a passage which has been admired for its easy flow, and which, he says, has greatly puzzled those who have attempted to scan it. Regarding it as essentially anapestic tetrameter, yet as having some initial iambs, and the first and fifth lines dactylic, I shall here divide it accordingly, thus:—

“Kn=ow y~e th~e | l=and wh~ere th~e | c=ypr~ess and | m=yrtle
Ar~e =em | -bl~ems of d=eeds | that are d=one
| in th~eir cl=ime--

Where the rage | of the vul | -ture, the love | of the tur | -tle,
Now melt | into soft | -ness, now mad | -den to crime?
Know ye the | land of the | cedar and | vine.

Where the flow'rs | ever blos | -som, the beams | ever shine,
And the light | wings of Zeph | -yr, oppress'd | with perfume,
Wax faint | o'er the gar | -dens of Gul | in her bloom?
Where the cit | -ron and ol | -ive are fair | -est of fruit,

And the voice | of the night | -ingale nev | -er is mute?
Where the vir | -gins are soft as the ros | -es they twine,
And all, | save the spir | -it of man, | is divine?
'Tis the land | of the East- | 't is the clime | of the Sun—
Can he smile | on such deeds | as his chil | -dren have done?
Oh, wild | as the ac | -cents of lov | -ers' farewell,
Are the hearts | that they bear, | and the tales | that they tell."

Page 1610

OBS. 4.—These lines this ingenious prosodist divides not thus, but, throwing them together like prose unpunctuated, finds in them “a regular succession of dactylic rhythms, varied only at three points by equivalent spondees, and separated into two distinct divisions by equivalent terminating caesuras.” He imagines that, “By all who have ears—not over long—this will be acknowledged as the true and the sole true scansion.”—E. A. Poe: Pioneer, p. 107. So it may, for aught I know; but, having dared to show there is an other way quite as simple and plain, and less objectionable, I submit both to the judgement of the reader:—

“Kn=ow y~e th~e | l=and wh~ere th~e | c=ypr~ess and / m=yrtle are /
=emblems of / d=eds that are / d=one in th~eir | cl=ime wh~ere th~e |
r=age of the | v=ult~ure th~e | l=ove of the | t=urtl~e n~ow | m=elt into | s=oftn~ess n~ow | madd~en t~o | crime. Kn=ow y~e th~e | l=and of the | c=ed~ar and / v=ine where th~e | fl=ow’rs ever | bl=oss~om
th~e | b=eams ever | sh=ine wh~ere th~e | l=ight w~ings =of | z=eph=yr
op / -pr=ess’d with p~er | -f=ume w=ax | f=aint o’er the | g=ard~ens of / G=ul in h~er | bl=oom wh~ere th~e | c=itr~on and / =olive are /
f~airest of / fr=uit and th~e | v=oice of the | n=ight~ing~ale |
n=ev~er is / m=ute where th~e | v=irg~ins are / s=oft as th~e | r=os~es
th~ey | tw=ine =and | =all s~ave th~e | sp=ir~it of / m=an is d~i- |
v=ine ’t~is th~e | l=and of the | E=ast ’t~is th~e | cl=im~e of the |
S=un c~an h~e | sm=ile on such | d=eds as his | ch=ildr~en h~ave |
d~one =oh w~ild as the | =acc~ents of / l=overs’ f~are- | w=ell are the | h~earts th~at th~ey | be=ar and th~e | t=ales th~at th~ey |
t=ell.”—Ib.

OBS. 5.—In the sum and proportion of their quantities, the anapest, the dactyl, and the amphibrach, are equal, each having two syllables short to one long; and, with two short quantities between two long ones, lines may be tolerably accordant in rhythm, though the order, at the commencement, be varied, and their number of syllables be not equal. Of the following sixteen lines, nine are pure anapestic tetrameters; one may be reckoned dactylic, but it may quite as well be said to have a trochee, an iambus, and two anapests or two amphimacs; one is a spondee and three anapests; and the rest may be scanned as amphibrachics ending with an iambus, but are more properly anapestics commencing with an iambus. Like the preceding example from Byron, they lack the uniformity of proper composites, and are rather to be regarded as anapestics irregularly diversified.

THE ALBATROSS.

“’Tis said the Albatross never rests.”—Buffon.

Page 1611

“Wh~ere th~e f~ath | -omless w=aves | in magnif | -icence toss,
 H=omel~ess | and h=igh | soars the wild | Albatross;
 Unwea | -ried, undaunt | -ed, unshrink | -ing, alone,
 The o | -cean his em | -pire, the tem | -pest his throne.
 When the ter | -rible whirl | -wind raves wild | o’er the surge,
 And the hur | -ricane howls | out the mar | -iner’s dirge,
 In thy glo | -ry thou spurn | -est the dark | -heaving sea,
 Pr=oud b=ird | of the o | -cean-world, home | -less and free.
 When the winds | are at rest, | and the sun | in his glow,
 And the glit | -tering tide | sleeps in beau | -ty below,
 In the pride | of thy pow | -er trium | -phant above,
 With thy mate | thou art hold | -ing thy rev | -els of love.
 Untir | -ed, unfet | -tered, unwatched, | unconfined,
 Be my spir | -it like thee, | in the world | of the mind;
 No lean | -ing for earth, | e’er to wea | -ry its flight,
 And fresh | as thy pin | -ions in re | -gions of light.”

SAMUEL DALY LANGTREE: _North American Reader_, p. 443.

OBS. 6.—It appears that the most noted measures of the Greek and Latin poets were not of any simple order, but either composites, or mixtures too various to be called composites. It is not to be denied, that we have much difficulty in reading them rhythmically, according to their stated feet and scansion; and so we should have, in reading our own language rhythmically, in any similar succession of feet. Noticing this in respect to the Latin Hexameter, or Heroic verse, Poe says, “Now the discrepancy in question is not observable in English metres; where the scansion coincides with the reading, so far as the rhythm is concerned—that is to say, if we pay no attention to the sense of the passage. But these facts indicate a radical difference in the genius of the two languages, as regards their capacity for modulation. In truth, * * * the Latin is a far more stately tongue than our own. It is essentially spondaic; the English is as essentially dactylic.”—Pioneer, p. 110. (See the marginal note in Sec.3d. at Obs. 22d, above.) Notwithstanding this difference, discrepance, or difficulty, whatever it may be, some of our poets have, in a few instances, attempted imitations of certain Latin metres; which imitations it may be proper briefly to notice under the present head. The Greek or Latin Hexameter line has, of course, six feet, or pulsations. According to the Prosodies, the first four of these may be either dactyls or spondees; the fifth is always, or nearly always, a dactyl; and the sixth, or last, is always a spondee: as,

“L=ud~er~e | qu=ae v=el | -l=em c~al~a | -m=o p=er | -m=is~it a
 / -gr=est=i.”--Virg.
 “Inf=an- | d=um, R=e | -g=ina, j~u | -b=es r~en~o | -v=ar~e d~o
 | -l=or=em.”--Id.

Of this sort of verse, in English, somebody has framed the following very fair example:
—

Page 1612

“M=an is a | c=ompl=ex, | c=omp=ound | c=omp=ost, | y=et is he
| G=od-b=orn.”

OBS. 7.—Of this species of versification, which may be called Mixed or Composite Hexameter, the most considerable specimen that I have seen in English, is Longfellow’s Evangeline, a poem of one thousand three hundred and eighty-two of these long lines, or verses. This work has found admirers, and not a few; for, of these, nothing written by so distinguished a scholar could fail: but, surely, not many of the verses in question exhibit truly the feet of the ancient Hexameters; or, if they do, the ancients contented themselves with very imperfect rhythms, even in their noblest heroics. In short, I incline to the opinion of Poe, that, “Nothing less than the deservedly high reputation of Professor Longfellow, could have sufficed to give currency to his lines as to Greek Hexameters. In general, they are neither one thing nor another. Some few of them are dactylic verses—English dactyls. But do away with the division into lines, and the most astute critic would never have suspected them of any thing more than prose.”—Pioneer, p. 111. The following are the last ten lines of the volume, with such a division into feet as the poet is presumed to have contemplated:—

“Still stands the | forest pri | -meval; but | under the | shade of its
| branches
Dwells an | -other | race, with | other | customs and | language.
Only a | -long the | shore of the | mournful and | misty At | -lantic
Linger a | few A | -cadian | peasants, whose | fathers from | exile
Wandered | back to their | native | land to | die in its | bosom.
In the | fisherman’s | cot the | wheel and the | loom are still | busy;
Maidens still | wear their | Norman | caps and their | kirtles of
| homespun,
And by the | evening | fire re | -peat E | -vangeline’s story,
While from its | rocky | caverns the | deep-voiced, | neighbouring
| ocean
Speaks, and in | accents dis | -consolate | answers the | wail of the | forest.”

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW: Evangeline, p. 162.

OBS. 8.—An other form of verse, common to the Greeks and Romans, which has sometimes been imitated—or, rather, which some writers have attempted to imitate—in English, is the line or stanza called Sapphic, from the inventress, Sappho, a Greek poetess. The Sapphic verse, according to Fabricius, Smetius, and all good authorities, has eleven syllables, making “five feet—the first a trochee, the second a spondee, the third a dactyl, and the fourth and fifth trochees.” The Sapphic stanza, or what is sometimes so called, consists of three Sapphic lines and an Adonian, or Adonic,—this last being a short line composed of “a dactyl and a spondee.” Example from Horace:—

“=Int~e | -g=er v=i | -tae, sc~el~e | -r=isqu~e | p=ur~us
Non e | -get Mau | -ri jacu | -lis ne | -qu’ arcu,
Nec ven | -ena | -tis gravi | -da sa | -gittis,
Fusce, pha | -retra.”

Page 1613

To arrange eleven syllables in a line, and have half or more of them to form trochees, is no difficult matter; but, to find rhythm in the succession of “a trochee, a spondee, and a dactyl,” as we read words, seems hardly practicable. Hence few are the English Sapphics, if there be any, which abide by the foregoing formulæ of quantities and feet. Those which I have seen, are generally, if not in every instance, susceptible of a more natural scansion as being composed of trochees, with a dactyl, or some other foot of three syllables, at the beginning of each line. The caesural pause falls sometimes after the fourth syllable, but more generally, and much more agreeably, after the fifth. Let the reader inspect the following example, and see if he do not agree with me in laying the accent on only the first syllable of each foot, as the feet are here divided. The accent, too, must be carefully laid. Without considerable care in the reading, the hearer will not suppose the composition to be any thing but prose:—

“THE WIDOW.”—(IN “SAPPHICS.”)

“Cold was the | night-wind, | drifting | fast the | snow fell,
Wide were the | downs, and | shelter | -less and | naked,
When a poor | Wanderer | struggled | on her | journey,

Weary and | way-sore. Drear were the | downs, more | dreary | her re |
-flections;
Cold was the | night-wind, | colder | was her | bosom;
She had no | home, the | world was | all be | -fore her;

She had no | shelter. Fast o’er the | heath a | chariot | rattlee | by her;
‘Pity me!’ | feebly | cried the | lonely | wanderer;
‘Pity me, | strangers! | lest, with | cold and | hunger,

Here I should | perish. ‘Once I had | friends,—though | now by | all for | -saken!
‘Once I had | parents, | —they are | now in | heaven!
‘I had a | home once, | —I had | once a | husband—

Pity me, | strangers! ‘I had a | home once, | —I had | once a | husband—
‘I am a | widow, | poor and | broken | -hearted!’
Loud blew the | wind; un | -heard was | her com | -plaining;

On drove the | chariot. Then on the | snow she | laid her | down to | rest her;
She heard a | horseman; | ‘Pity | me!’ she | groan’d out;
Loud was the | wind; un | -heard was | her com | -plaining;

On went the | horseman.

Worn out with | anguish, | toil, and | cold, and | hunger,
Down sunk the | Wanderer; | sleep had | seized her | senses;

There did the | traveller | find her | in the | morning;
God had re | -leased her.”
ROBERT SOUTHEY: Poems, Philad., 1843, p. 251.

Among the lyric poems of Dr. Watts, is one, entitled, “THE DAY OF JUDGEMENT; an Ode attempted in English Sapphic.” It is perhaps as good an example as we have of the species. It consists of nine stanzas, of which I shall here cite the first three, dividing them into feet as above:—

Page 1614

"When the fierce | North Wind, | with his | airy | forces,
Rears up the | Baltic | to a | foaming | fury;
And the red | lightning | with a | storm of | hail comes

Rushing a | -main down;

How the poor | sailors | stand a | -maz'd and | tremble!
While the hoarse | thunder, | like a bloody | trumpet,
Roars a loud | onset | to the | gaping | waters,
Quick to de | -vour them.

Such shall the | noise be, | and the | wild dis | -order,
(If things e | -ternal | may be | like these | earthly,)
Such the dire | terror, | when the | great Arch | -angel
Shakes the cre | -ation."—Horae Lyricae, p. 67.

"These lines," says Humphrey, who had cited the first four, "are good English Sapphics, and contain the essential traits of the original as nearly as the two languages, Greek and English, correspond to each other. This stanza, together with the poem, from which this was taken, may stand for a model, in our English compositions."—Humphrey's E. Prosody, p. 19. This author erroneously supposed, that the trissyllabic foot, in any line of the Sapphic stanza, must occupy the second place: and, judging of the ancient feet and quantities by what he found, or supposed he found, in the English imitations, and not by what the ancient prosodists say of them, yet knowing that the ancient and the modern Sapphics are in several respects unlike, he presented forms of scansion for both, which are not only peculiar to himself, but not well adapted to either. "We have," says he, "no established rule for this kind of verse, in our English compositions, which has been uniformly adhered to. The rule for which, in Greek and Latin verse, as far as I can ascertain, was this: = ~ | = = = | ~ ~ | = ~ | = = a trochee, a moloss, a pyrrhic, a trochee, and [a] spondee; and sometimes, occasionally, a trochee, instead of a spondee, at the end. But as our language is not favourable to the use of the spondee and moloss, the moloss is seldom or never used in our English Sapphics; but, instead of which, some other trissyllable foot is used. Also, instead of the spondee, a trochee is commonly used; and sometimes a trochee instead of the pyrrhic, in the third place. As some prescribed rule, or model for imitation, may be necessary, in this case, I will cite a stanza from one of our best English poets, which may serve for a model.

'Wh=en th~e | fi=erce n=orth-w~ind, | w~ith h~is | =air~y | f=orc~es [,]
R=ears up | the B=alt~ic | t~o a | f=oaming | f=ur~y;
And th~e | r=ed l=ightn~ing | w~ith a | st=orm of | h=ail c~omes

R=ush~ing | am=ain d=own.'—Watts."—Ib., p. 19.

OBS. 12.—In “the Works of George Canning,” a small book published in 1829, there is a poetical dialogue of nine stanzas, entitled, “The Friend of Humanity and the Knife-Grinder,” said to be “a burlesque on Mr. Southey’s Sapphics.” The metre appears to be near enough like to the foregoing. But these verses I divide, as I have divided the others, into trochees with initial dactyls. At the commencement, the luckier party salutes the other thus:—

Page 1615

“Needy knife | -grinder! | whither | are you | going?
 Rough is the | road, your | wheel is | out of | order—
 Bleak blows the | blast;—your | hat has | got a | hole in’t,
 So have your | breeches!

’Weary knife | -grinder! | little | think the | proud ones
 Who in their | coaches | roll a | -long the | turnpike—
 Road, what hard | work ’tis, | crying | all day, | ’Knives and
 Scissors to | grind O!’—P. 44.

OBS. 13.—Among the humorous poems of Thomas Green Fessenden, published under the sobriquet of Dr. Caustic, or “Christopher Caustic, M. D.,” may be seen an other comical example of Sapphics, which extends to eleven stanzas. It describes a contra-dance, and is entitled, “Horace Surpassed.” The conclusion is as follows:—

“Willy Wagnimble dancing with Flirtilla,
 Almost as light as air-balloon inflated,
 Rigadoons around her, ’till the lady’s heart is Forced to surrender.

Benny Bamboozle cuts the drollest capers,
 Just like a camel, or a hippopot’mus;
 Jolly Jack Jumble makes as big a rout as Forty Dutch horses.

See Angelina lead the mazy dance down;
 Never did fairy trip it so fantastic;
 How my heart flutters, while my tongue pronounces,
 ‘Sweet little seraph!’

Such are the joys that flow from contra-dancing,
 Pure as the primal happiness of Eden,
 Love, mirth, and music, kindle in accordance Raptures extatic.”—Poems, p. 208.

SECTION V.—ORAL EXERCISES.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE PROSODY, OR ERRORS OF METRE.

LESSON I.—RESTORE THE RHYTHM.

“The lion is laid down in his lair.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 134.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the word “lion,” here put for Cowper’s word “beast” destroys the metre, and changes the line to prose. But, according to the definition given on p. 827, “Verse, in opposition to prose, is language arranged into metrical lines of some determinate length and rhythm—language so ordered as to produce harmony by a due succession of poetic feet.” This line was composed of one iamb and two anapests; and, to such form, it should be restored, thus: “The beast is laid down in his lair.”—Cowper’s Poems, Vol. i, p. 201.]

“Where is thy true treasure? Gold says, not in me.”

—Hallock’s Gram., 1842, p. 66.

“Canst thou grow sad, thou sayest, as earth grows bright?”

—Frazee’s Gram., 1845, p. 140.

“It must be so, Plato, thou reasonest well.”

—Wells’s Gram., 1846, p. 122.

“Slow rises merit, when by poverty depressed.”

—lb., p. 195; Hiley, 132; Hart, 179.

Page 1616

“Rapt in future times, the bard begun.”
—Wells’s Gram., 1846, p. 153.

“Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens
To wash it white as snow? Whereunto serves mercy,
But to confront the visage of offence!”
—Hallock’s Gram., 1842, p. 118.

“Look! in this place ran Cassius’s dagger through.”
—Kames, El. of Cr., Vol. i, p. 74.

“——When they list their lean and flashy songs, Harsh grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw.”
—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 135.

“Did not great Julius bleed for justice’s sake?”
—Dodd’s Beauties of Shak., p. 253.

“Did not great Julius bleed for justice sake?”
—Singer’s Shakspeare, Vol. ii, p. 266.

“May I, unblam’d, express thee? Since God is light.”
—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 290.

“Or hearest thou, rather, pure ethereal stream!”
—2d Perversion, ib.

“Republics; kingdoms; empires, may decay;
Princes, heroes, sages, sink to nought.”
—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 287.

“Thou bringest, gay creature as thou art,
A solemn image to my heart.”
—E. J. Hallock’s Gram., p. 197.

“Know thyself presume not God to scan;
The proper study of mankind is Man.”
—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 285.

“Raised on a hundred pilasters of gold.”
—Charlemagne, C. i, St. 40.

“Love in Adalgise’s breast has fixed his sting.”
—ib., C. i, St. 30.

“Thirty days hath September,
April, June, and November,
February twenty-eight alone,
All the rest thirty and one.”

Colet's Grammar, or Paul's Accidence. Lond., 1793, p. 75.

LESSON II.—RESTORE THE RHYTHM.

“’Twas not the fame of what he once had been,
Or tales in old records and annals seen.”

—Rowe's Lucan, B. i, l. 274.

“And Asia now and Afric are explor'd,
For high-priced dainties, and citron board.”

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. i, l. 311.

“Who knows not, how the trembling judge beheld
The peaceful court with arm'd legions fill'd?”

—Eng. Poets; ib., B. i, l. 578.

“With thee the Scythian wilds we'll wander o'er,
With thee burning Libyan sands explore.”

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. i, l. 661.

“Hasty and headlong different paths they tread,
As blind impulse and wild distraction lead.”

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. i, l. 858.

“But Fate reserv'd to perform its doom,
And be the minister of wrath to Rome.”

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. ii, l. 136.

Page 1617

"Thus spoke the youth. When Cato thus exprest
The sacred counsels of his most inmost breast."

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. ii, l. 435.

"These were the strict manners of the man,
And this the stubborn course in which they ran;
The golden mean unchanging to pursue,
Constant to keep the proposed end in view."

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. ii, l. 580.

"What greater grief can a Roman seize,
Than to be forc'd to live on terms like these!"

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. ii, l. 782.

"He views the naked town with joyful eyes,
While from his rage an arm'd people flies."

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. ii, l. 880.

"For planks and beams he ravages the wood,
And the tough bottom extends across the flood."

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. ii, l. 1040.

"A narrow pass the horned mole divides,
Narrow as that where Euripus' strong tides
Beat on Euboean Chalcis' rocky sides."

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. ii, l. 1095.

"No force, no fears their hands unarm'd bear,
But looks of peace and gentleness they wear."

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. iii, l. 112.

"The ready warriors all aboard them ride,
And wait the return of the retiring tide."

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. iv, l. 716.

"He saw those troops that long had faithful stood,
Friends to his cause, and enemies to good,
Grown weary of their chief, and satiated with blood."

—Eng. Poets: ib., B. v, l. 337.

CHAPTER V.—QUESTIONS.

ORDER OF REHEARSAL, AND METHOD OF EXAMINATION.

PART FOURTH, PROSODY.

[Fist][The following questions call the attention of the student to the main doctrines in the foregoing code of Prosody, and embrace or demand those facts which it is most important for him to fix in his memory; they may, therefore, serve not only to aid the teacher in the process of examining his classes, but also to direct the learner in his manner of preparation for recital.]

LESSON I.—OF PUNCTUATION.

1. Of what does Prosody treat? 2. What is Punctuation? 3. What are the principal points, or marks? 4. What pauses are denoted by the first four points? 5. What pauses are required by the other four? 6. What is the general use of the Comma? 7. How many rules for the Comma are there, and what are their heads? 8. What says Rule 1st of Simple Sentences? 9. What says Rule 2d of Simple Members? 10. What says Rule 3d of More than Two Words? 11. What says Rule 4th of Only Two Words? 12. What says Rule 5th of Words in Pairs? 13.

Page 1618

What says Rule 6th of Words put Absolute? 14. What says Rule 7th of Words in Apposition? 15. What says Rule 8th of Adjectives? 16. What says Rule 9th of Finite Verbs? 17. What says Rule 10th of Infinitives? 18. What says Rule 11th of Participles? 19. What says Rule 12th of Adverbs? 20. What says Rule 13th of Conjunctions? 21. What says Rule 14th of Prepositions? 22. What says Rule 15th of Interjections? 23. What says Rule 16th of Words Repeated? 24. What says Rule 17th of Dependent Quotations?

LESSON II.—OF THE COMMA.

1. How many exceptions, or forms of exception, are there to Rule 1st for the comma? 2.—to Rule 2d? 3.—to Rule 3d? 4.—to Rule 4th? 5.—to Rule 5th? 6.—to Rule 6th? 7.—to Rule 7th? 8.—to Rule 8th? 9.—to Rule 9th? 10.—to Rule 10th? 11.—to Rule 11th? 12.—to Rule 12th? 13.—to Rule 13th? 14.—to Rule 14th? 15.—to Rule 15th? 16.—to Rule 16th? 17.—to Rule 17th? 18. What says the Exception to Rule 1st of a Long Simple Sentence? 19. What says Exception 1st to Rule 2d of Restrictive Relatives? 20. What says Exception 2d to Rule 2d of Short Terms closely Connected? 21. What says Exception 3d to Rule 2d of Elliptical Members United? 22. What says Exception 1st to Rule 4th of Two Words with Adjuncts? 23. What says Exception 2d to Rule 4th of Two Terms Contrasted? 24. What says Exception 3d to Rule 4th of a mere Alternative of Words? 25. What says Exception 4th to Rule 4th of Conjunctions Understood?

LESSON III.—OF THE COMMA.

1. What rule speaks of the separation of Words in Apposition? 2. What says Exception 1st to Rule 7th of Complex Names? 3. What says Exception 2d to Rule 7th of Close Apposition? 4. What says Exception 3d to Rule 7th of a Pronoun without a Pause? 5. What says Exception 4th to Rule 7th of Names Acquired? 6. What says the Exception to Rule 8th of Adjectives Restrictive? 7. What is the rule which speaks of a finite Verb Understood? 8. What says the Exception to Rule 9th of a Very Slight Pause? 9. What is the Rule for the pointing of Participles? 10. What says the Exception to Rule 11th of Participles Restrictive?

[Now, if you please, you may correct orally, according to the formulæ given, some or all of the various examples of False Punctuation, which are arranged under the rules for the Comma in Section First.]

LESSON IV.—OF THE SEMICOLON.

1. What is the general use of the Semicolon? 2. How many rules are there for the Semicolon? 3. What are their heads? 4. What says Rule 1st of Complex Members? 5. What says Rule 2d of Simple Members? 6. What says Rule 3d of Apposition, &c.?

Page 1619

[Now, if you please, you may correct orally, according to the formules given, some or all of the various examples of False Punctuation, which are arranged under the rules for the Semicolon in Section Second.]

LESSON V.—OF THE COLON.

1. What is the general use of the Colon? 2. How many rules are there for the Colon? 3. What are their heads? 4. What says Rule 1st of Additional Remarks? 5. What says Rule 2d of Greater Pauses? 6. What says Rule 3d of Independent Quotations?

[Now, if you please, you may correct orally, according to the formules given, some or all of the various examples of False Punctuation, which are arranged under the rules for the Colon in Section Third.]

LESSON VI.—OF THE PERIOD.

1. What is the general use of the Period? 2. How many rules are there for the Period? 3. What are their heads? 4. What says Rule 1st of Distinct Sentences? 5. What says Rule 2d of Allied Sentences? 6. What says Rule 3d of Abbreviations?

[Now, if you please, you may correct orally, according to the formules given, some or all of the various examples of False Punctuation, which are arranged under the rules for the Period in Section Fourth.]

LESSON VII.—OF THE DASH.

1. What is the general use of the Dash? 2. How many rules are there for the Dash? 3. What are their heads? 4. What says Rule 1st of Abrupt Pauses? 5. What says Rule 2d of Emphatic Pauses? 6. What says Rule 3d of Faulty Dashes?

[Now, if you please, you may correct orally, according to the formules given, some or all of the various examples of False Punctuation, which are arranged under the rules for the Dash in Section Fifth.]

LESSON VIII.—OF THE EROTEME.

1. What is the use of the Erotème, or Note of Interrogation? 2. How many rules are there for this mark? 3. What are their heads? 4. What says Rule 1st of Questions Direct? 5. What says Rule 2d of Questions United? 6. What says Rule 3d of Questions Indirect?

[Now, if you please, you may correct orally, according to the formules given, some or all of the various examples of False Punctuation, which are arranged under the rules for the Eroteme in Section Sixth.]

LESSON IX—OF THE ECPHONEME.

1. What is the use of the Ecphoneme, or Note of Exclamation? 2. How many rules are there for this mark? 2. What are their heads? 4. What says Rule 1st of Interjections? 5. What says Rule 2d of Invocations? 6. What says Rule 3d of Exclamatory Questions?

[Now, if you please, you may correct orally, according to the formules given, some or all of the various examples of False Punctuation, which are arranged under the rules for the Ecphoneme in Section Seventh.]

Page 1620

LESSON X.—OF THE CURVES.

1. What is the use of the Curves, or Marks of Parenthesis? 2. How many rules are there for the Curves? 3. What are their titles, or heads? 4. What says Rule 1st of the Parenthesis? 5. What says Rule 2d of Included Points?

[Now, if you please, you may correct orally, according to the formulæ given, some or all of the various examples of False Punctuation, which are arranged under the rules for the Curves in Section Eighth.]

LESSON XI.—OF THE OTHER MARKS.

1. What is the use of the Apostrophe? 2. What is the use of the Hyphen? 3. What is the use of the Diaeresis, or Dialysis? 4. What is the use of the Acute Accent? 5. What is the use of the Grave Accent? 6. What is the use of the Circumflex? 7. What is the use of the Breve, or Stenotone? 8. What is the use of the Macron, or Macrotone? 9. What is the use of the Ellipsis, or Suppression? 10. What is the use of the Caret? 11. What is the use of the Brace? 12. What is the use of the Section? 13. What is the use of the Paragraph? 14. What is the use of the Guillemets, or Quotation Points? 15. How do we mark a quotation within a quotation? 16. What is the use of the Crotchets, or Brackets? 17. What is the use of the Index, or Hand? 18. What are the six Marks of Reference in their usual order? 19. How can references be otherwise made? 20. What is the use of the Asterism, or the Three Stars? 21. What is the use of the Cedilla?

[Having correctly answered the foregoing questions, the pupil should be taught to apply the principles of punctuation; and, for this purpose, he may be required to read a portion of some accurately pointed book, or may be directed to turn to the Fourteenth Praxis, beginning on p. 821,—and to assign a reason for every mark he finds.]

LESSON XII.—OF UTTERANCE.

1. What is Utterance? 2. What does it include? 3. What is articulation? 4. How does articulation differ from pronunciation? 5. How does Comstock define it? 6. What, in his view, is a good articulation? 7. How does Bolles define articulation? 8. Is a good articulation important? 9. What are the faults opposite to it? 10. What says Sheridan, of a good articulation? 11. Upon what does distinctness depend? 12. Why is just articulation better than mere loudness? 13. Do we learn to articulate in learning to speak or read?

LESSON XIII.—OF PRONUNCIATION.

Page 1621

1. What is pronunciation? 2. What is it that is called Orthoepy? 3. What knowledge does pronunciation require? 4. What are the just powers of the letters? 5. How are these learned? 6. Are the just powers of the letters in any degree variable? 7. What is quantity? 8. Are all long syllables equally long, and all short ones equally short? 9. What has stress of voice to do with quantity? 10. What is accent? 11. Is every word accented? 12. Do we ever lay two equal accents on one word? 13. Have we more than one sort of accent? 14. Can any word have the secondary accent, and not the primary? 15. Can monosyllables have either? 16. What regulates accent? 17. What four things distinguish the elegant speaker?

LESSON XIV.—OF ELOCUTION.

1. What is elocution? 2. What does elocution require? 3. What is emphasis? 4. What comparative view is taken of accent and emphasis? 5. How does L. Murray connect emphasis with quantity? 6. Does emphasis ever affect accent? 7. What is the guide to a right emphasis? 8. Can one read with too many emphases? 9. What are pauses? 10. How many and what kinds of pauses are there? 11. What is said of the duration of pauses, and the taking of breath? 12. After what manner should pauses be made? 13. What pauses are particularly ungraceful? 14. What is said of rhetorical pauses? 15. How are the harmonic pauses divided? 16. Are such pauses essential to verse?

LESSON XV.—OF ELOCUTION.

17. What are inflections? 18. What is called the rising or upward inflection? 19. What is called the falling or downward inflection? 20. How are these inflections exemplified? 21. How are they used in asking questions? 22. What is said of the notation of them? 23. What constitutes a circumflex? 24. What constitutes the rising, and what the falling, circumflex? 25. Can you give examples? 26. What constitutes a monotone, in elocution? 27. Which kind of inflection is said to be most common? 28. Which is the best adapted to strong emphasis? 29. What says Comstock of rules for inflections? 30. Is the voice to be varied for variety's sake? 31. What should regulate the inflections? 32. What is cadence? 33. What says Ripplingham about it? 34. What says Murray? 35. What are tones? 36. Why do they deserve particular attention? 37. What says Blair about tones? 38. What says Hiley?

LESSON XVI.—OF FIGURES.

1. What is a Figure in grammar? 2. How many kinds of figures are there? 3. What is a figure of orthography? 4. What are the principal figures of orthography? 5. What is Mimesis? 6. What is an Archaism? 7. What is a figure of etymology? 8. How many and what are the figures of etymology? 9. What is Aphaeresis? 10. What is Prosthesis? 11. What is Syncope? 12. What is Apocope? 13. What is Paragoge? 14. What is Diaeresis?

Page 1622

15. What is Synaeresis? 16. What is Tmesis? 17. What is a figure of syntax? 18. How many and what are the figures of syntax? 19. What is Ellipsis, in grammar? 20. Are sentences often elliptical? 21. What parts of speech can be omitted, by ellipsis? 22. What is Pleonasm? 23. When is this figure allowable? 24. What is Syllepsis? 25. What is Enallage? 26. What is Hyperbaton? 27. What is said of this figure?

LESSON XVII.—OF FIGURES.

28. What is a figure of rhetoric? 29. What peculiar name have some of these? 30. Do figures of rhetoric often occur? 31. On what are they founded? 32. How many and what are the principal figures of rhetoric? 33. What is a Simile? 34. What is a Metaphor? 35. What is an Allegory? 36. What is a Metonymy? 37. What is Synecdoche? 38. What is Hyperbole? 39. What is Vision? 40. What is Apostrophe? 41. What is Personification? 42. What is Erotesis? 43. What is Ecphonesis? 44. What is Antithesis? 45. What is Climax? 46. What is Irony? 47. What is Apophasis, or Paralipsis? 48. What is Onomatopoeia?

[Now, if you please, you may examine the quotations adopted for the Fourteenth Praxis, and may name and define the various figures of grammar which are contained therein.]

LESSON XVIII.—OF VERSIFICATION.

1. What is Versification? 2. What is verse, as distinguished from prose? 3. What is the rhythm of verse? 4. What is the quantity of a syllable? 5. How are poetic quantities denominated? 6. How are they proportioned? 7. What quantity coincides with accent or emphasis? 8. On what but the vowel sound does quantity depend? 9. Does syllabic quantity always follow the quality of the vowels? 10. Where is quantity variable, and where fixed, in English? 11. What is rhyme? 12. What is blank verse? 13. What is remarked concerning the rhyming syllables? 14. What is a stanza? 15. What uniformity have stanzas? 16. What variety have they?

LESSON XIX.—OF VERSIFICATION.

17. Of what does a verse consist? 18. Of what does a poetic foot consist? 19. How many feet do prosodists recognize? 20. What are the principal feet in English? 21. What is an Iambus? 22. What is a Trochee? 23. What is an Anapest? 24. What is a Dactyl? 25. Why are these feet principal? 26. What orders of verse arise from these? 27. Are these kinds to be kept separate? 28. What is said of the secondary feet? 29. How many and what secondary feet are explained in this code? 30. What is a Spondee? 31. What is a Pyrrhic? 32. What is a Moloss? 33. What is a Tribrach? 34.

What is an Amphibrach? 35. What is an Amphimac? 36. What is a Bacchy? 37. What is an Antibachy? 38. What is a Caesura?

LESSON XX.—OF VERSIFICATION.

Page 1623

39. What are the principal kinds, or orders, of verse? 40. What other orders are there? 41. Does the composite order demand any uniformity? 42. Do the simple orders admit any diversity? 43. What is meant by scanning or scansion? 44. What mean the technical words, catalectic, acatalectic, and hypermeter? 45. In scansion, why are the principal feet to be preferred to the secondary? 46. Can a single foot be a line? 47. What are the several combinations that form dimeter, trimeter, tetrameter, pentameter, hexameter, heptameter, and octometer? 48. What syllables have stress in a pure iambic line? 49. What are the several measures of iambic verse? 50. What syllables have stress in a pure trochaic line? 51. Can it be right, to regard as hypermeter the long rhyming syllables of a line? 52. Is the number of feet in a line to be generally counted by that of the long syllables? 53. What are the several measures of trochaic verse?

LESSON XXI.—OF VERSIFICATION.

54. What syllables have stress in a pure anapestic line? 55. What variation may occur in the first foot? 56. Is this frequent? 57. Is it ever uniform? 58. What is the result of a uniform mixture? 59. Is the anapest adapted to single rhyme? 60. May a surplus ever make up for a deficiency? 61. Why are the anapestic measures few? 62. How many syllables are found in the longest? 63. What are the several measures of anapestic verse? 64. What syllables have stress in a pure dactylic line? 65. With what does single-rhymed dactylic end? 66. Is dactylic verse very common? 67. What are the several measures of dactylic verse? 68. What is composite verse? 69. Must composites have rhythm? 70. Are the kinds of composite verse numerous? 71. Why have we no exact enumeration of the measures of this order? 72. Does this work contain specimens of different kinds of composite verse?

[It may now be required of the pupil to determine, by reading and scansion, the metrical elements of any good English poetry which may be selected for the purpose—the feet being marked by pauses, and the long syllables by stress of voice. He may also correct orally the few Errors of Metre which are given in the Fifth Section of Chapter IV.]

CHAPTER VI.—FOR WRITING.

EXERCISES IN PROSODY.

[Fist] [When the pupil can readily answer all the questions on Prosody, and apply the rules of punctuation to any composition in which the points are rightly inserted, he should write out the following exercises, supplying what is required, and correcting what is amiss. Or, if any teacher choose to exercise his classes orally, by means of these examples, he can very well do it; because, to read words, is always easier than to write them, and even points or poetic feet may be quite as readily named as written.]

Page 1624

EXERCISE I.—PUNCTUATION.

Copy the following sentences, and insert the COMMA where it is requisite.

EXAMPLES UNDER RULE I.—OF SIMPLE SENTENCES.

“The dogmatist’s assurance is paramount to argument.” “The whole course of his argumentation comes to nothing.” “The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground.”

EXC.—“The first principles of almost all sciences are few.” “What he gave me to publish was but a small part.” “To remain insensible to such provocation is apathy.” “Minds ashamed of poverty would be proud of affluence.” “To be totally indifferent to praise or censure is a real defect in character.”—Wilson’s Punctuation, p. 38.

UNDER RULE II.—OF SIMPLE MEMBERS.

“I was eyes to the blind and feet was I to the lame.” “They are gone but the remembrance of them is sweet.” “He has passed it is likely through varieties of fortune.” “The mind though free has a governor within itself.” “They I doubt not oppose the bill on public principles.” “Be silent be grateful and adore.” “He is an adept in language who always speaks the truth.” “The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong.”

EXC. I.—“He that has far to go should not hurry.” “Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed.” “Feeble are all pleasures in which the heart has no share.” “The love which survives the tomb is one of the noblest attributes of the soul.”—Wilson’s Punctuation, p. 38.

EXC. II.—“A good name is better than precious ointment.” “Thinkst thou that duty shall have dread to speak?” “The spleen is seldom felt where Flora reigns.”

UNDER RULE III.—OF MORE THAN TWO WORDS.

“The city army court espouse my cause.” “Wars pestilences and diseases are terrible instructors.” “Walk daily in a pleasant airy and umbrageous garden.” “Wit spirits faculties but make it worse.” “Men wives and children stare cry out and run.” “Industry, honesty, and temperance are essential to happiness.”—Wilson’s Punctuation, p. 29.
“Honor, affluence, and pleasure seduce the heart.”—ib., p. 31.

UNDER RULE IV.—OF TWO TERMS CONNECTED.

“Hope and fear are essentials in religion.” “Praise and adoration are perfective of our souls.” “We know bodies and their properties most perfectly.” “Satisfy yourselves with what is rational and attainable.” “Slowly and sadly we laid him down.”

EXC. I.—“God will rather look to the inward motions of the mind than to the outward form of the body.” “Gentleness is unassuming in opinion and temperate in zeal.”

EXC. II.—“He has experienced prosperity and adversity.” “All sin essentially is and must be mortal.” “Reprove vice but pity the offender.”

Page 1625

EXC. III.—“One person is chosen chairman or moderator.” “Duration or time is measured by motion.” “The governor or viceroy is chosen annually.”

EXC. IV.—“Reflection reason still the ties improve.” “His neat plain parlour wants our modern style.” “We are fearfully wonderfully made.”

UNDER RULE V.—OF WORDS IN PAIRS.

“I inquired and rejected consulted and deliberated.” “Seed-time and harvest cold and heat summer and winter day and night shall not cease.”

EXERCISE II.—PUNCTUATION.

Copy the following sentences, and insert the COMMA where it is requisite.

EXAMPLES UNDER RULE VI.—OF WORDS PUT ABSOLUTE.

“The night being dark they did not proceed.” “There being no other coach we had no alternative.” “Remember my son that human life is the journey of a day.” “All circumstances considered it seems right.” “He that overcometh to him will I give power.” “Your land strangers devour it in your presence.” “Ah sinful nation a people laden with iniquity!”

“With heads declin’d ye cedars homage pay;
Be smooth ye rocks ye rapid floods give way!”

UNDER RULE VII.—OF WORDS IN APPOSITION.

“Now Philomel sweet songstress charms the night.” “’Tis chanticleer the shepherd’s clock announcing day.” “The evening star love’s harbinger appears.” “The queen of night fair Dian smiles serene.” “There is yet one man Micaiah the son of Imlah.” “Our whole company man by man ventured down.” “As a work of wit the Dunciad has few equals.”

“In the same temple the resounding wood
All vocal beings hymned their equal God.”

EXC. I.—“The last king of Rome was Tarquinius Superbus.” “Bossuet highly eulogizes Maria Theresa of Austria.” “No emperor has been more praised than Marcus Aurelius, Antoninus.”

EXC. II.—“For he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith.” “Remember the example of the patriarch Joseph.” “The poet, Milton, excelled in prose as well as in verse.”

EXC. III.—“I wisdom dwell with prudence.” “Ye fools be ye of an understanding heart.” “I tell you that which you yourselves do know.”

EXC. IV.—“I crown thee king of intimate delights” “I count the world a stranger for thy sake.” “And this makes friends such miracles below.” “God has pronounced it death to taste that tree.” “Grace makes the slave a freeman.”

UNDER RULE VIII.—OF ADJECTIVES.

“Deaf with the noise I took my hasty flight.” “Him piteous of his youth soft disengage.” “I played a while obedient to the fair.” “Love free as air spreads his light wings and flies.” “Physical science separate from morals parts with its chief dignity.”

Page 1626

"Then active still and unconfined his mind
Explores the vast extent of ages past."

"But there is yet a liberty unsung
By poets and by senators unpraised."

EXC.—"I will marry a wife beautiful as the Houries." "He was a man able to speak upon doubtful questions." "These are the persons, anxious for the change." "Are they men worthy of confidence and support?" "A man, charitable beyond his means, is scarcely honest."

UNDER RULE IX.—OF FINITE VERBS.

"Poverty wants some things—avarice all things." "Honesty has one face—flattery two."
"One king is too soft and easy—an other too fiery."

"Mankind's esteem they court—and he his own:
Theirs the wild chase of false felicities;
His the compos'd possession of the true."

EXERCISE III.—PUNCTUATION.

Copy the following sentences, and insert the COMMA where it is requisite.

EXAMPLES UNDER RULE X.—OF INFINITIVES.

"My desire is to live in peace." "The great difficulty was to compel them to pay their debts." "To strengthen our virtue God bids us trust in him." "I made no bargain with you to live always drudging." "To sum up all her tongue confessed the shrew." "To proceed my own adventure was still more laughable."

"We come not with design of wasteful prey
To drive the country force the swains away."

UNDER RULE XI.—OF PARTICIPLES.

"Having given this answer he departed." "Some sunk to beasts find pleasure end in pain." "Eased of her load subjection grows more light." "Death still draws nearer never seeming near." "He lies full low gored with wounds and weltering in his blood." "Kind is fell Lucifer compared to thee." "Man considered in himself is helpless and wretched." "Like scattered down by howling Eurus blown." "He with wide nostrils snorting skims the wave." "Youth is properly speaking introductory to manhood."

EXC.—“He kept his eye fixed on the country before him.” “They have their part assigned them to act.” “Years will not repair the injuries done by him.”

UNDER RULE XII.—OF ADVERBS.

“Yes we both were philosophers.” “However Providence saw fit to cross our design.” “Besides I know that the eye of the public is upon me.” “The fact certainly is much otherwise.” “For nothing surely can be more inconsistent.”

UNDER RULE XIII.—OF CONJUNCTIONS.

“For in such retirement the soul is strengthened.” “It engages our desires; and in some degree satisfies them also.” “But of every Christian virtue piety is an essential part.” “The English verb is variable—as love loveth loves.”

Page 1627

UNDER RULE XIV.—OF PREPOSITIONS.

“In a word charity is the soul of social life.” “By the bowstring I can repress violence and fraud.” “Some by being too artful forfeit the reputation of probity.” “With regard to morality I was not indifferent.” “Of all our senses sight is the most perfect and delightful.”

UNDER RULE XV.—OF INTERJECTIONS.

“Behold I am against thee O inhabitant of the valley!” “O it is more like a dream than a reality,” “Some wine ho!” “Ha ha ha; some wine eh?”

“When lo the dying breeze begins to fail,
And flutters on the mast the flagging sail.”

UNDER RULE XVI.—OF WORDS REPEATED.

“I would never consent never never never.” “His teeth did chatter chatter chatter still.” “Come come come—to bed to bed to bed.”

UNDER RULE XVII.—OF DEPENDENT QUOTATIONS.

“He cried ‘Cause every man to go out from me.’” “‘Almet’ said he ‘remember what thou hast seen.’” “I answered ‘Mock not thy servant who is but a worm before thee.’”

EXERCISE IV.—PUNCTUATION.

I. THE SEMICOLON.—Copy the following sentences, and insert the Comma and the SEMICOLON where they are requisite.

EXAMPLES UNDER RULE I.—OF COMPOUND MEMBERS.

“‘Man is weak’ answered his companion ‘knowledge is more than equivalent to force.’” “To judge rightly of the present we must oppose it to the past for all judgement is compative [sic—KTH] and of the future nothing can be known.” “‘Contentment is natural wealth’ says Socrates to which I shall add ‘luxury is artificial poverty.’”

“Converse and love mankind might strongly draw
When love was liberty and nature law.”

UNDER RULE II.—OF SIMPLE MEMBERS.

“Be wise to-day ’tis madness to defer.” “The present all their care the future his.” “Wit makes an enterpriser sense a man.” “Ask thought for joy grow rich and hoard within.” “Song soothes our pains and age has pains to soothe.” “Here an enemy encounters there a rival supplants him.” “Our answer to their reasons is; ‘No’ to their scoffs nothing.”

“Here subterranean works and cities see
There towns aerial on the waving tree.”

UNDER RULE III.—OF APPOSITION.

“In Latin there are six cases namely the nominative the genitive the dative the accusative the vocative and the ablative.” “Most English nouns form the plural by taking s; as boy boys nation nations king kings bay bays.” “Bodies are such as are endued with a vegetable soul as plants a sensitive soul as animals or a rational soul as the body of man.”

Page 1628

II. THE COLON.—Copy the following sentences, and insert the Comma, the Semicolon, and the COLON, where they are requisite.

UNDER RULE I.—OF ADDITIONAL REMARKS.

“Indulge not desires at the expense of the slightest article of virtue pass once its limits and you fall headlong into vice.” “Death wounds to cure we fall we rise we reign.”
“Beware of usurpation God is the judge of all.”

“Bliss!—there is none but unprecarious bliss
That is the gem sell all and purchase that.”

UNDER RULE II.—OF GREATER PAUSES.

“I have the world here before me I will review it at leisure surely happiness is somewhere to be found.” “A melancholy enthusiast courts persecution and when he cannot obtain it afflicts himself with absurd penances but the holiness of St. Paul consisted in the simplicity of a pious life.”

“Observe his awful portrait and admire
Nor stop at wonder imitate and live.”

UNDER RULE III.—OF INDEPENDENT QUOTATIONS.

“Such is our Lord’s injunction ‘Watch and pray.’” “He died praying for his persecutors ‘Father forgive them they know not what they do.’” “On the old gentleman’s cane was inscribed this motto ‘Festina lente.’”

III.—THE PERIOD.—Copy the following sentences, and insert the Comma, the Semicolon, the Colon, and the PERIOD, where they are requisite.

UNDER RULE I.—OF DISTINCT SENTENCES.

“Then appeared the sea and the dry land the mountains rose and the rivers flowed the sun and moon began their course in the skies herbs and plants clothed the ground the air the earth and the waters were stored with their respective inhabitants at last man was made in the image of God”

“In general those parents have most reverence who most deserve it for he that lives well cannot be despised”

UNDER RULE II.—OF ALLIED SENTENCES.

“Civil accomplishments frequently give rise to fame but a distinction is to be made between fame and true honour the statesman the orator or the poet may be famous while yet the man himself is far from being honoured”

UNDER RULE III.—OF ABBREVIATIONS.

“Glass was invented in England by Benalt a monk A D 664” “The Roman era U C commenced A C 1753 years” “Here is the Literary Life of S T Coleridge Esq” “PLATO a most illustrious philosopher of antiquity died at Athens 348 B C aged 81 his writings are very valuable his language beautiful and correct and his philosophy sublime”—See Univ. Biog. Dict.

EXERCISE V.—PUNCTUATION.

I. THE DASH.—Copy the following sentences, and insert, in their proper places, the DASH, and such other points as are necessary.

Page 1629

EXAMPLES UNDER RULE I.—OF ABRUPT PAUSES.

"You say famous very often and I don't know exactly what it means a famous uniform famous doings What does famous mean"

"O why famous means Now don't you know what famous means It means It is a word that people say It is the fashion to say it It means it means famous."

UNDER RULE II.—OF EMPHATIC PAUSES.

"But this life is not all there is there is full surely another state abiding us And if there is what is thy prospect O remorseless obdurate Thou shalt hear it would be thy wisdom to think thou now nearest the sound of that trumpet which shall awake the dead Return O yet return to the Father of mercies and live"

"The future pleases Why The present pains
But that's a secret yes which all men know"

II. THE EROTEME.—Copy the following sentences, and insert rightly the EROTEME, or NOTE OF INTERROGATION, and such other points as are necessary.

UNDER RULE I.—OF QUESTIONS DIRECT.

"Does Nature bear a tyrant's breast
Is she the friend of stern control
Wears she the despot's purple vest
Or fetters she the freeborn soul"

"Why should a man whose blood is warm within Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster"

"Who art thou courteous stranger and from whence Why roam thy steps to this abandon'd dale"

UNDER RULE II.—OF QUESTIONS UNITED.

"Who bid the stork Columbus-like explore
Heav'ns not his own and worlds unknown before
Who calls the council states the certain day
Who forms the phalanx and who points the way"

UNDER RULE III.—OF QUESTIONS INDIRECT.

“They asked me who I was and whither I was going.” “St. Paul asked king Agrippa if he believed the prophets? But he did not wait for an answer.”

“Ask of thy mother Earth why oaks are made Taller and stronger than the weeds they shade”

III. THE ECPHONEME.—Copy the following sentences, and insert rightly the ECPHONEME, or NOTE OF EXCLAMATION, and such other points as are necessary.

UNDER RULE I.—OF INTERJECTIONS.

“Oh talk of hypocrisy after this Most consummate of all hypocrites After instructing your chosen official advocate to stand forward with such a defence such an exposition of your motives to dare utter the word hypocrisy and complain of those who charged you with it” Brougham

“Alas how is that rugged heart forlorn”

“Behold the victor vanquish’d by the worm”

“Bliss sublunary Bliss proud words and vain”

Page 1630

UNDER RULE II.—OF INVOCATIONS.

“O Popular Applause what heart of man
Is proof against thy sweet seducing charms”

“More than thy balm O Gilead heals the wound”

UNDER RULE III.—OF EXCLAMATORY QUESTIONS.

With what transports of joy shall I be received In what honour in what delightful repose shall I pass the remainder of my life What immortal glory shall I have acquired” Hooke’s Roman History.

“How often have I loiter’d o’er thy green
Where humble happiness endear’d each scene”

IV.—THE CURVES.—Copy the following sentences, and insert rightly the CURVES, or MARKS OF PARENTHESIS, and such other points as are necessary.

UNDER RULE I.—OF THE PARENTHESIS.

“And all the question wrangle e’er so long
Is only this If God has plac’d him wrong”

“And who what God foretells who speaks in things
Still louder than in words shall dare deny”

UNDER RULE II.—OF INCLUDED POINTS.

“Say was it virtue more though Heav’n ne’er gave Lamented Digby sunk thee to the grave”

“Where is that thrift that avarice of time
O glorious avarice thought of death inspires”

“And oh the last last what can words express Thought reach the last last silence of a friend”

EXERCISE VI.—PUNCTUATION.

Copy the following MIXED EXAMPLES, and insert the points which they require.

"As one of them opened his sack he espied his money" "They cried out the more exceedingly Crucify him" "The soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners" "Great injury these vermin mice and rats do in the field" "It is my son's coat an evil beast hath devoured him" "Peace of all worldly blessings is the most valuable" "By this time the very foundation was removed" "The only words he uttered were I am a Roman citizen" "Some distress either felt or feared gnaws like a worm" "How then must I determine Have I no interest If I have not I am stationed here to no purpose" Harris "In the fire the destruction was so swift sudden vast and miserable as to have no parallel in story" "Dionysius the tyrant of Sicily was far from being happy" "I ask now Verres what thou hast to advance" "Excess began and sloth sustains the trade" "Fame can never reconcile a man to a death bed" "They that sail on the sea tell of the danger" "Be doers of the word and not hearers only" "The storms of wintry time will quickly pass" "Here Hope that smiling angel stands" "Disguise I see thou art a wickedness" "There are no tricks in plain and simple faith" "True love strikes root in reason passion's foe" "Two gods divide them all Pleasure and Gain" "I am satisfied My son has done his duty" "Remember Almet the vision which thou hast seen"

Page 1631

"I beheld an enclosure beautiful as the gardens of paradise" "The knowledge which I have received I will communicate" "But I am not yet happy and therefore I despair" "Wretched mortals said I to what purpose are you busy" "Bad as the world is respect is always paid to virtue" "In a word he views men as the clear sunshine of charity" "This being the case I am astonished and amazed" "These men approached him and saluted him king" "Excellent and obliging sages these undoubtedly" "Yet at the same time the man himself undergoes a change" "One constant effect of idleness is to nourish the passions" "You heroes regard nothing but glory" "Take care lest while you strive to reach the top you fall" "Proud and presumptuous they can brook no opposition" "Nay some awe of religion may still subsist" "Then said he Lo I come to do thy will O God" Bible "As for me behold I am in your hand" Ib. "Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him saith the Lord" Jer xxiii 24 "Now I Paul myself beseech you" "Now for a recompense in the same I speak as unto my children be ye also enlarged" 2 Cor vi 13 "He who lives always in public cannot live to his own soul whereas he who retires remains calm" "Therefore behold I even I will utterly forget you" "This text speaks only of those to whom it speaks" "Yea he warmeth himself and saith Aha I am warm" "King Agrippa believest thou the prophets"

EXERCISE VII.—PUNCTUATION.

Copy the following MIXED EXAMPLES, and insert the points which they require.

To whom can riches give repute or trust
Content or pleasure but the good and just Pope

To him no high no low no great no small
He fills he bounds connects and equals all Id

Reasons whole pleasure all the joys of sense
Lie in three words health peace and competence Id

Not so for once indulged they sweep the main
Deaf to the call or hearing hear in vain Anon

Say will the falcon stooping from above
Smit with her varying plumage spare the dove Pope

Throw Egypts by and offer in its stead
Offer the crown on Berenices head Id

Falsely luxurious will not man awake
And springing from the bed of sloth enjoy
The cool the fragrant and the silent hour Thomson

Yet thus it is nor otherwise can be
So far from aught romantic what I sing Young

Thyself first know then love a self there is
Of virtue fond that kindles at her charms Id

How far that little candle throws his beams
So shines a good deed in a naughty world Shakspeare

You have too much respect upon the world
They lose it that do buy it with much care Id

How many things by season seasoned are
To their right praise and true perfection Id

Page 1632

Canst thou descend from converse with the skies
And seize thy brothers throat For what a clod Young

In two short precepts all your business lies
Would you be great—be virtuous and be wise Denham

But sometimes virtue starves while vice is fed
What then is the reward of virtue bread Pope

A life all turbulence and noise may seem
To him that leads it wise and to be praised
But wisdom is a pearl with most success
Sought in still waters and beneath clear skies Cowper

All but the swellings of the softened heart
That waken not disturb the tranquil mind Thomson

Inspiring God who boundless spirit all
And unremitting energy pervades
Adjusts sustains and agitates the whole Id

Ye ladies for indifferent in your cause
I should deserve to forfeit all applause
Whatever shocks or gives the least offence
To virtue delicacy truth or sense
Try the criterion tis a faithful guide
Nor has nor can have Scripture on its side. Cowper

EXERCISE VIII.—SCANNING.

Divide the following VERSES into the feet which compose them, and distinguish by marks the long and the short syllables.

Example I.—“Our Daily Paths”—By F. Hemans.

“There’s Beauty all around our paths, if but our watchful eyes
Can trace it ’midst familiar things, and through their lowly guise;
We may find it where a hedgerow showers its blossoms o’er our way,
Or a cottage-window sparkles forth in the last red light of day.”

Example II.—“Fetching Water”—Anonymous.

“Early on a sunny morning, while the lark was singing sweet,
Came, beyond the ancient farmhouse, sounds of lightly-tripping feet.

'Twas a lowly cottage maiden, going,—why, let young hearts tell,—
With her homely pitcher laden, fetching water from the well."

Example III.—Deity.

Alone thou sitst above the everlasting hills
And all immensity of space thy presence fills:
For thou alone art God;—as God thy saints adore thee;
Jehovah is thy name;—they have no gods before thee.—G. Brown.

Example IV.—Impenitence.

The impenitent sinner whom mercy empowers,
Dishonours that goodness which seeks to restore;
As the sands of the desert are water'd by showers.
Yet barren and fruitless remain as before.—G. Brown.

Example V.—Piety.

Holy and pure are the pleasures of piety,
Drawn from the fountain of mercy and love;
Endless, exhaustless, exempt from satiety,
Rising unearthly, and soaring above.—G. Brown.

Page 1633

Example VI.—A Simile.

The bolt that strikes the tow'ring cedar dead,
Oft passes harmless o'er the hazel's head.—G. Brown.

Example VII.—A Simile.

"Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd
Innumerable. As when the potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
Like night, and darken'd all the land of Nile."—Milton.

Example VIII.—Elegiac Stanza.

Thy name is dear—'tis virtue balm'd in love;
Yet e'en thy name a pensive sadness brings.
Ah! wo the day, our hearts were doom'd to prove,
That fondest love but points affliction's stings!—G. Brown.

Example IX.—Cupid.

Zephyrs, moving bland, and breathing fragrant
With the sweetest odours of the spring,
O'er the winged boy, a thoughtless vagrant,
Slumb'ring in the grove, their perfumes fling.—G. Brown.

Example X.—Divine Power.

When the winds o'er Gennesaret roar'd,
And the billows tremendously rose,
The Saviour but utter'd the word,
They were hush'd to the calmest repose.—G. Brown.

Example XI.—Invitation.

Come from the mount of the leopard, spouse,
Come from the den of the lion;
Come to the tent of thy shepherd, spouse,
Come to the mountain of Zion.—G. Brown.

Example XII.—Admonition.

In the days of thy youth,
Remember thy God:
O! forsake not his truth,
Incur not his rod.—G. Brown.

Example XIII.—Commendation.

Constant and duteous,
Meek as the dove,
How art thou beauteous,
Daughter of love!—G. Brown.

EXERCISE IX.—SCANNING.

Mark the feet and syllables which compose the following lines—or mark a sample of each metre.

Edwin, an Ode.

I. STROPHE.

Led by the pow'r of song, and nature's love,
Which raise the soul all vulgar themes above,
The mountain grove
Would Edwin rove,
In pensive mood, alone;
And seek the woody dell,
Where noontide shadows fell,
Cheering,
Veering,
Mov'd by the zephyr's swell.
Here nurs'd he thoughts to genius only known,
When nought was heard around
But sooth'd the rest profound
Of rural beauty on her mountain throne.
Nor less he lov'd (rude nature's child)
The elemental conflict wild;
When, fold on fold, above was pil'd
The watery swathe, careering on the wind.
Such scenes he saw
With solemn awe,
As in the presence of the Eternal Mind.
Fix'd he gaz'd,
Tranc'd and rais'd,
Sublimely rapt in awful pleasure undefin'd.

Page 1634

II. ANTISTROPHE

Reckless of dainty joys, he finds delight
Where feeble souls but tremble with affright.
Lo! now, within the deep ravine,
A black impending cloud
Infolds him in its shroud,
And dark and darker glooms the scene.
Through the thicket streaming,
Lightnings now are gleaming;
Thunders rolling dread,
Shake the mountain's head;
Nature's war
Echoes far,
O'er ether borne,
That flash
The ash
Has scath'd and torn!
Now it rages;
Oaks of ages,
Writhing in the furious blast,
Wide their leafy honours cast;
Their gnarled arms do force to force oppose
Deep rooted in the crevic'd rock,
The sturdy trunk sustains the shock,
Like dauntless hero firm against assailing foes.

III. EPODE.

'O Thou who sitst above these vapours dense,
And rul'st the storm by thine omnipotence!
Making the collied cloud thy ear,
Coursing the winds, thou rid'st afar,
Thy blessings to dispense.
The early and the latter rain,
Which fertilize the dusty plain,
Thy bounteous goodness pours.
Dumb be the atheist tongue abhorr'd!
All nature owns thee, sovereign Lord!
And works thy gracious will;
At thy command the tempest roars,
At thy command is still.
Thy mercy o'er this scene sublime presides;
'Tis mercy forms the veil that hides

The ardent solar beam;
While, from the volley'd breast of heaven,
Transient gleams of dazzling light,
Flashing on the balls of sight,
Make darkness darker seem.
Thou mov'st the quick and sulphurous leven—
The tempest-driven
Cloud is riven;
And the thirsty mountain-side
Drinks gladly of the gushing tide.'
So breath'd young Edwin, when the summer shower,
From out that dark o'erchamb'ring cloud,
With lightning flash and thunder loud,
Burst in wild grandeur o'er his solitary bower.—G. Brown.

THE END OF PART FOURTH.

KEY TO THE IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION, CONTAINED IN THE GRAMMAR OF ENGLISH GRAMMARS, AND DESIGNED FOR ORAL EXERCISES UNDER ALL THE RULES AND NOTES OF THE WORK.

[Fist][The various examples of error which are exhibited for oral correction, in the Grammar of English Grammars, are all here explained, in their order, by full amended readings, sometimes with authorities specified, and generally with references of some sort. They are intended to be corrected orally by the pupil, according to the formules given under corresponding heads in the Grammar. Some portion, at least, under each rule or note, should be used in this way; and the rest, perhaps, may be read and compared more simply.]

THE KEY.—PART I.—ORTHOGRAPHY.

CHAPTER I.—OF LETTERS. CORRECTIONS RESPECTING CAPITALS.

UNDER RULE I.—OF BOOKS.

Page 1635

"Many a reader of the Bible knows not who wrote the Acts of the Apostles"—G. B. "The sons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in the book of the Chronicles."—ALGER'S BIBLE: Neh., xii, 23. "Are they not written in the book of the Acts of Solomon?"—FRIENDS' BIBLE: I Kings, xi, 41. "Are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel?"—ALGER CORRECTED: I Kings, xxii, 39. "Are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah."—See ALGER: ib., ver. 45. "Which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms."—ALGER, ET AL.: Luke, xxiv, 44. "The narrative of which maybe seen in Josephus's History of the Jewish War"—Dr. Scott cor. [Obs.—The word in Josephus is "War," not "Wars."—G. Brown.] "This History of the Jewish War was Josephus's first work, and published about A. D. 75."—Whiston cor. "'I have read,' says Photius, 'the Chronology of Justus of Tiberias.'"—Id. "A Philosophical Grammar, written by James Harris, Esquire."—Murray cor. "The reader is referred to Stroud's Sketch of the Slave Laws"—A. S. Mag. cor. "But God has so made the Bible that it interprets itself."—Idem. "In 1562, with the help of Hopkins, he completed the Psalter."—Gardiner cor. "Gardiner says this of Sternhold; of whom the Universal Biographical Dictionary and the American Encyclopedia affirm, that he died in 1549."—G. B. "The title of a book, to wit: 'English Grammar in Familiar Lectures,'" &c.—Kirkham cor. "We had not, at that time, seen Mr. Kirkham's 'Grammar in Familiar Lectures.'"—Id. "When you parse, you may spread the Compendium before you."—Id. right. [516] "Whenever you parse, you may spread the Compendium before you."—Id. cor. "Adelung was the author of a Grammatical and Critical Dictionary of the German Language, and other works." Biog. Dict. cor. "Alley, William, author of 'The Poor Man's Library,' and a translation of the Pentateuch, died in 1570."—Id.

UNDER RULE II.—OF FIRST WORDS.

"Depart instantly;"—"Improve your time;"—"Forgive us our sins."—Murray corrected. EXAMPLES:—"Gold is corrupting;"—"The sea is green;"—"A lion is bold."—Mur. et al. cor. Again: "It may rain;"—"He may go or stay;"—"He would walk;"—"They should learn."—Idem. Again: "Oh! I have alienated my friend;"—"Alas! I fear for life."—Idem. See Alger's Gram., p. 50. Again: "He went from London to York;"—"She is above disguise;"—"They are supported by industry."—Idem.

Page 1636

“On the foregoing examples, I have a word to say. They are better than a fair specimen of their kind. Our grammars abound with worse illustrations. Their models of English are generally spurious quotations. Few of their proof-texts have any just parentage. Goose-eyes are abundant, but names scarce. Who fathers the foundlings? Nobody. Then let their merit be nobody’s, and their defects his who could write no better.”—Author.

“Goose-eyes!” says a bright boy; “pray, what are they? Does this Mr. Author make new words when he pleases? Dead-eyes are in a ship. They are blocks, with holes in them. But what are goose-eyes in grammar?” ANSWER: “Goose-eyes are quotation points. Some of the Germans gave them this name, making a jest of their form. The French call them guillemets, from the name of their inventor.”—Author. “It is a personal pronoun, of the third person singular.”—Comly cor. “Ourselves is a personal pronoun, of the first person plural.”—Id. “Thee is a personal pronoun, of the second person singular.”—Id. “Contentment is a common noun, of the third person singular.”—Id. “Were is a neuter verb, of the indicative mood, imperfect tense.”—Id.

UNDER RULE III.—OF DEITY.

“O thou Dispenser of life! thy mercies are boundless.”—Allen cor. “Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?”—ALGER, FRIENDS, ET AL.: Gen., xviii, 25. “And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.”—SCOTT, ALGER, FRIENDS, ET AL.: Gen., i, 2. “It is the gift of Him, who is the great Author of good, and the Father of mercies.”—Murray cor. “This is thy God that brought thee up out of Egypt.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Neh., ix, 18. “For the LORD is our defence; and the Holy One of Israel is our King.”—Psal. lxxxix, 18. “By making him the responsible steward of Heaven’s bounties.”—A. S. Mag. cor. “Which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day.”—ALGER: 2 Tim., iv, 8. “The cries of them ... entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth.”—ALGER, FRIENDS: James, v, 4. “In Horeb, the Deity revealed himself to Moses, as the Eternal ‘I AM,’ the Self-existent One; and, after the first discouraging interview of his messengers with Pharaoh, he renewed his promise to them, by the awful name, JEHOVAH—a name till then unknown, and one which the Jews always held it a fearful profanation to pronounce.”—G. Brown. “And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, I am the LORD: and I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty; but by my name JEHOVAH was I not known to them.”—SCOTT, ALGER, FRIENDS: Exod., vi, 2. “Thus saith the LORD[517] the King of Israel, and his Redeemer the LORD of hosts; I am the First, and I am the Last; and besides me there is no God.”—See Isa., xlv, 6.

Page 1637

"His impious race their blasphemy renew'd,
And nature's King, through nature's optics view'd."—Dryden cor.

UNDER RULE IV.—OF PROPER NAMES.

"Islamism prescribes fasting during the month Ramadan."—Balbi cor. "Near Mecca, in Arabia, is Jebel Nor, or the Mountain of Light, on the top of which the Mussulmans erected a mosque, that they might perform their devotions where, according to their belief, Mohammed received from the angel Gabriel the first chapter of the Koran."—G. Brown. "In the Kaaba at Mecca there is a celebrated block of volcanic basalt, which the Mohammedans venerate as the gift of Gabriel to Abraham, but their ancestors once held it to be an image of Remphan, or Saturn; so 'the image which fell down from Jupiter,' to share with Diana the homage of the Ephesians, was probably nothing more than a meteoric stone."—Id. "When the Lycaonians at Lystra took Paul and Barnabas to be gods, they called the former Mercury, on account of his eloquence, and the latter Jupiter, for the greater dignity of his appearance."—Id. "Of the writings of the apostolic fathers of the first century, but few have come down to us; yet we have in those of Barnabas, Clement of Rome, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, very certain evidence of the authenticity of the New Testament, and the New Testament is a voucher for the Old."—Id. "It is said by Tatian, that Theagenes of Rhegium, in the time of Cambyses, Stesimbrotus the Thracian, Antimachus the Colophonian, Herodotus of Halicarnassus, Dionysius the Olynthian, Ephorus of Cumae, Philochorus the Athenian, Metaclides and Chamaeleon the Peripatetics, and Zenodotus, Aristophanes, Callimachus, Crates, Eratosthenes, Aristarchus, and Apollodorus, the grammarians, all wrote concerning the poetry, the birth, and the age of Homer."—See Coleridge's Introd., p. 57. "Yet, for aught that now appears, the life of Homer is as fabulous as that of Hercules; and some have even suspected, that, as the son of Jupiter and Alcmene has fathered the deeds of forty other Herculeses, so this unfathered son of Critheis, Themisto, or whatever dame—this Melesigenes, Maeonides, Homer—the blind schoolmaster, and poet, of Smyrna, Chios, Colophon, Salamis, Rhodes, Argos, Athens, or whatever place—has, by the help of Lycurgus, Solon, Pisistratus, and other learned ancients, been made up of many poets or Homers, and set so far aloft and aloof on old Parnassus, as to become a god in the eyes of all Greece, a wonder in those of all Christendom."—G. Brown.

Page 1638

"Why so sagacious in your guesses?
Your Effs, and Tees, and Ars, and Esses?"—Swift corrected.

UNDER RULE V.—OF TITLES.

"The king has conferred on him the title of Duke."—Murray cor. "At the court of Queen Elizabeth."—Priestley's E. Gram., p. 99; see Bullions's, p. 24. "The laws of nature are, truly, what Lord Bacon styles his aphorisms, laws of laws."—Murray cor. "Sixtus the Fourth was, if I mistake not, a great collector of books."—Id. "Who at that time made up the court of King Charles the Second"—Id. "In case of his Majesty's dying without issue."—Kirkham cor. "King Charles the First was beheaded in 1649."—W. Allen cor. "He can no more impart, or (to use Lord Bacon's word) transmit convictions."—Kirkham cor. "I reside at Lord Stormont's, my old patron and benefactor." Better: "I reside with Lord Stormont, my old patron and benefactor."—Murray cor. "We staid a month at Lord Lyttelton's, the ornament of his country." Much better: "We stayed a month at the seat of Lord Lyttelton, who is the ornament of his country."—Id. "Whose prerogative is it? It is the King-of-Great-Britain's;" [518]—"That is the Duke-of-Bridgewater's canal;"—"The Bishop-of-Landaff's excellent book;"—"The Lord Mayor-of-London's authority."—Id. (See Murray's Note 4th on his Rule 10th.) "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—Luke, vi, 46. "And of them he chose twelve, whom also he named Apostles."—ALGER, FRIENDS, ET AL.: Luke, vi, 13. "And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed him."—Matt., xxvi, 49. "And he said, Nay, Father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they would repent."—Bible cor.

UNDER RULE VI.—OF ONE CAPITAL.

"Fallriver, a village in Massachusetts, population (in 1830) 3,431."—Williams cor. "Dr. Anderson died at Westham, in Essex, in 1808."—Biog. Dict. cor. "Madriver, the name of two towns in Clark and Champaign counties, Ohio."—Williams cor. "Whitcreek, a town of Washington county, New York."—Id. "Saltcreek, the name of four towns in different parts of Ohio."—Id. "Saltlick, a town of Fayette county, Pennsylvania."—Id. "Yellowcreek, a town of Columbiana county, Ohio."—Id. "Whiteclay, a hundred of Newcastle county, Delaware."—Id. "Newcastle, a town and half-shire of Newcastle county, Delaware."—Id. "Singsing, a village of Westchester county, New York, situated in the town of Mountpleasant."—Id.

Page 1639

"Westchester, a county of New York: East Chester and West Chester are towns in Westchester county."—Id. "Westtown, a village of Orange county, New York."—Id. "Whitewater, a town of Hamilton county, Ohio."—Worcester's Gaz. "Whitewater River, a considerable stream that rises in Indiana, and flowing southeasterly unites with the Miami in Ohio."—See ib. "Blackwater, a village of Hampshire, in England, and a town in Ireland."—See ib. "Blackwater, the name of seven different rivers, in England, Ireland, and the United States."—See ib. "Redhook, a town of Dutchess county, New York, on the Hudson."—Williams cor. "Kinderhook, a town of Columbia county, New York, on the Hudson."—Williams right. "Newfane, a town of Niagara county, New York."—Williams cor. "Lakeport, a town of Chicot county, Arkansas."—Id. "Moosehead Lake, the chief source of the Kennebeck, in Maine."—Id. (See Worcester's Gaz.) "Macdonough, a county of Illinois, population (in 1830) 2,959."—Williams's Univ. Gaz., p 408. "Macdonough, a county of Illinois, with a court-house at Macomb."—Williams cor. "Halfmoon, the name of two towns in New York and Pennsylvania; also of two bays in the West Indies."—S. Williams's Univ. Gaz. "Leboeuf, a town of Erie county, Pennsylvania, near a small lake of the same name."—See ib. "Charlescitiy, Jamescitiy, Eiizabethcitiy, names of counties in Virginia, not cities, nor towns."—See Univ. Gaz., p. 404.[519] "The superior qualities of the waters of the Frome, here called Stroudwater."—Balbi cor.

UNDER RULE VII.—OF TWO CAPITALS.

"The Forth rises on the north side of Ben Lomond, and runs easterly."—Glasgow Geog., 8vo, corrected. "The red granite of Ben Nevis is said to be the finest in the world."—Id. "Ben More, in Perthshire, is 3,915 feet above the level of the sea."—Id. "The height of Ben Cleagh is 2,420 feet."—Id. "In Sutherland and Caithness, are Ben Ormod, Ben Clibeg, Ben Grin, Ben Hope, and Ben Lugal."—Glas. Geog. right. "Ben Vracky is 2,756 feet high; Ben Ledi, 3,009; and Ben Voirloich, 3,300."—Glas. Geog. cor. "The river Dochart gives the name of Glen Dochart to the vale through which it runs."—Id. "About ten miles from its source, it [the Tay] diffuses itself into Loch Dochart."—Glasgow Geog., Vol. ii, p. 314. LAKES:—"Loch Ard, Loch Achray, Loch Con, Loch Doine, Loch Katrine, Loch Lomond, Loch Voil."—Scott corrected. GLENS:—"Glen Finlas, Glen Fruin, Glen Luss, Ross Dhu, Leven Glen, Strath Endrick, Strath Gartney. Strath Ire."—Id. MOUNTAINS:—"Ben

Page 1640

An, Ben Harrow, Ben Ledi, Ben Lomond, Ben Voirlich, Ben Venue, or, (as some spell it,) Ben Ivenew.—Id.[520] “Fenelon died in 1715, deeply lamented by all the inhabitants of the Low Countries.”—Murray cor. “And Pharaoh Necho[521] made Eliakim, the son of Josiah, king.”—See ALGER: 2 Kings, xiii, 34. “Those who seem so merry and well pleased, call her Good Fortune; but the others, who weep and wring their hands, Bad Fortune.”—Collier cor.

UNDER RULE VIII.—OF COMPOUNDS.

“When Joab returned, and smote Edom in the Valley of Salt”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Ps. ix, title. “Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars Hill, and said,” &c.—Scott cor. “And at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives.”—Bible cor. “Abgillus, son of the king of the Frisii, surnamed Prester John, was in the Holy Land with Charlemagne.”—U. Biog. Dict. cor. “Cape Palmas, in Africa, divides the Grain Coast from the Ivory Coast.”—Dict. of Geog. cor. “The North Esk, flowing from Loch Lee, falls into the sea three miles north of Montrose.”—Id. “At Queen’s Ferry, the channel of the Forth is contracted by promontories on both coasts.”—Id. “The Chestnut Ridge is about twenty-five miles west of the Alleghanies, and Laurel Ridge, ten miles further west.”—Balbi cor. “Washington City, the metropolis of the United States of America.”—Williams, U. Caz., p. 380. “Washington City, in the District of Columbia, population (in 1830) 18,826.”—Williams cor. “The loftiest peak of the White Mountains, in New Hampshire, is called Mount Washington.”—G. Brown. “Mount’s Bay, in the west of England, lies between the Land’s End and Lizard Point.”—Id. “Salamis, an island of the Egean Sea, off the southern coast of the ancient Attica.”—Dict. of Geog. “Rhodes, an island of the Egean Sea, the largest and most easterly of the Cyclades.”—Id. cor. “But he overthrew Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea.”—SCOTT: Ps. cxxxvi, 15. “But they provoked him at the sea, even at the Red Sea.”—ALGER, FRIENDS: Ps. cvi, 7.

UNDER RULE IX.—OF APPPOSITION.

“At that time, Herod the tetrarch heard of the fame of Jesus.”—SCOTT, FRIENDS, ET AL.: Matt., xiv, 1. “Who has been more detested than Judas the traitor?”—G. Brown. “St. Luke the evangelist was a physician of Antioch, and one of the converts of St. Paul.”—Id. “Luther, the reformer, began his bold career by preaching against papal indulgences.”—Id. “The poet Lydgate was a disciple and admirer of Chaucer: he died in 1440.”—Id. “The grammarian Varro, ‘the most learned of the Romans,’[522] wrote three books when he was eighty years old.”—Id. “John Despauter, the great grammarian of Flanders, whose works are still valued, died in 1520.”—Id. “Nero, the emperor and tyrant of Rome, slew himself to avoid a worse death.”—Id. “Cicero the orator, ‘the Father of his Country,’ was assassinated at the age of 64.”—Id. “Euripides, the Greek tragedian, was born in the island of Salamis, B. C. 476.”—Id. “I will say unto God my rock, Why hast thou forgotten me?”—ALGER, ET AL.: Ps. xlii, 9. “Staten Island, an island of New York, nine miles below New York city.”—Williams cor. “When the son of Atreus, king of men, and the noble Achilles first separated.”—Coleridge cor.

Page 1641

“Hermes, his patron-god, those gifts bestow’d, Whose shrine with weanling lambs he wont to load.”—Pope cor.

UNDER RULE X.—OF PERSONIFICATIONS.

“But Wisdom is justified of all her children.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Luke, vii, 35. “Fortune and the Church are generally put in the feminine gender: that is, when personified.” “Go to your Natural Religion; lay before her Mahomet and his disciples.”—Bp. Sherlock. “O Death! where is thy sting? O Grave! where is thy victory.”—Pope: 1 Cor., xv, 55; Merchant’s Gram., p. 172. “Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.”—Matt., vi, 24. “Ye cannot serve God and Mammon”—See Luke, xvi, 13. “This house was built as if Suspicion herself had dictated the plan.”—Rasselas. “Poetry distinguishes herself from Prose, by yielding to a musical law.”—Music of Nature, p. 501. “My beauteous deliverer thus uttered her divine instructions: ‘My name is Religion. I am the offspring of Truth and Love, and the parent of Benevolence, Hope, and Joy. That monster, from whose power I have freed you, is called Superstition: she is called the child of Discontent, and her followers are Fear and Sorrow.’”—E. Carter. “Neither Hope nor Fear could enter the retreats; and Habit had so absolute a power, that even Conscience, if Religion had employed her in their favour, would not have been able to force an entrance.”—Dr. Johnson.

“In colleges and halls in ancient days,
There dwelt a sage called Discipline.”—Cowper.

UNDER RULE XI.—OF DERIVATIVES.

Page 1642

"In English, I would have Gallicisms avoided."—Felton. "Sallust was born in Italy, 85 years before the Christian era."—Murray cor.; "Dr. Doddridge was not only a great man, but one of the most excellent and useful Christians, and Christian ministers."—Id. "They corrupt their style with untutored Anglicisms"—Milton. "Albert of Stade, author of a chronicle from the creation to 1286, a Benedictine of the 13th century."—Biog. Dict. cor. "Graffio, a Jesuit of Capua in the 16th century, author of two volumes on moral subjects."—Id. "They Frenchify and Italianize words whenever they can."—Bucke's Gram., p. 86. "He who sells a Christian, sells the grace of God."—Mag. cor. "The first persecution against the Christians, under Nero, began A. D. 64."—Gregory cor. "P. Rapin, the Jesuit, uniformly decides in favour of the Roman writers."—Blair's Rhet., p. 248. "The Roman poet and Epicurean philosopher Lucretius has said," &c.—Cohen cor. Spell "Calvinistic, Atticism, Gothicism, Epicurism, Jesuitism, Sabianism, Socinianism, Anglican, Anglicism, Anglicize, Vandalism, Gallicism, and Romanize."—Webster cor. "The large Ternate bat."—Id. and Bolles cor.

"Church-ladders are not always mounted best
By learned clerks, and Latinists profess'd"—Cowper cor.

UNDER RULE XII.—OF I AND O.

"Fall back, fall back; I have not room:—O! methinks I see a couple whom I should know."—Lucian. "Nay, I live as I did, I think as I did, I love you as I did; but all these are to no purpose; the world will not live, think, or love, as I do."—Swift to Pope. "Whither, O! whither shall I fly? O wretched prince! O cruel reverse of fortune! O father Micipsa! is this the consequence of thy generosity?"—Tr. of Sallust. "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things."—1 Cor., xiii, 11. "And I heard, but I understood not; then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?"—Dan., xii, 8. "Here am I; I think I am very good, and I am quite sure I am very happy, yet I never wrote a treatise in my life."—Few Days in Athens, p. 127. "Singular, Vocative, O master! Plural, Vocative, O masters!"—Bicknell cor.

"I, I am he; O father! rise, behold Thy son, with twenty winters now grown old!"
—Pope's Odyssey, B. 24, l. 375.

UNDER RULE XIII.—OF POETRY.

Page 1643

“Reason’s whole pleasure, all the joys of sense, Lie in three words—health, peace, and competence; But health consists with temperance alone, And peace, O Virtue! peace is all thy own.”—Pope. “Observe the language well in all you write, And swerve not from it in your loftiest flight. The smoothest verse and the exactest sense Displease us, if ill English give offence: A barbarous phrase no reader can approve; Nor bombast, noise, or affectation love. In short, without pure language, what you write Can never yield us profit or delight. Take time for thinking; never work in haste; And value not yourself for writing fast.”—Dryden.

UNDER RULE XIV.—OF EXAMPLES.

“The word rather is very properly used to express a small degree or excess of a quality; as, ‘She is rather profuse in her expenses.’”—Murray cor. “Neither imports not either; that is, not one nor the other: as, ‘Neither of my friends was there.’”—Id. “When we say, ‘He is a tall man,’—‘This is a fair day,’ we make some reference to the ordinary size of men, and to different weather.”—Id. “We more readily say, ‘A million of men,’ than, ‘A thousand of men.’”—Id. “So in the instances, ‘Two and two are four,’—‘The fifth and sixth volumes will complete the set of books.’”—Id. “The adjective may frequently either precede or follow the verb: as, ‘The man is happy,’ or, ‘Happy is the man,’—‘The interview was delightful,’ or, ‘Delightful was the interview.’”—Id. “If we say, ‘He writes a pen,’—‘They ran the river,’—‘The tower fell the Greeks,’—‘Lambeth is Westminster Abbey,’—[we speak absurdly;] and, it is evident, there is a vacancy which must be filled up by some connecting word: as thus, ‘He writes with a pen,’—‘They ran towards the river,’—‘The tower fell upon the Greeks,’—‘Lambeth is over against Westminster Abbey.’”—Id. “Let me repeat it;—He only is great, who has the habits of greatness.”—Id. “I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven.”—Matt., xviii, 22.

“The Panther smil’d at this; and, ‘When,’ said she,
‘Were those first councils disallow’d by me?’”—Dryd. cor.

UNDER RULE XV.—OF CHIEF WORDS.

“The supreme council of the nation is called the Divan.”—Balbi cor. “The British Parliament is composed of King, Lords, and Commons.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 129; and Jaudon’s, 127. “A popular orator in the House of Commons has a sort of patent for coining as many new terms as he pleases.”—See Campbell’s

Page 1644

Rhet., p. 169; Murray's Gram., 364. "They may all be taken together, as one name; as, 'The House of Commons.'"—Merchant cor. "Intrusted to persons in whom the Parliament could confide."—Murray cor. "For 'The Lords' House,' it were certainly better to say, 'The House of Lords;,' and, in stead of 'The Commons' vote,' to say. 'The vote of the Commons.'"—Id. and Priestley cor. "The House of Lords were so much influenced by these reasons."—Idem. "Rhetoricians commonly divide them into two great classes; Figures of Words, and Figures of Thought. The former, Figures of Words, are commonly called Tropes."—Murray's Gram., p. 337. "Perhaps, Figures of Imagination, and Figures of Passion, might be a more useful distribution."—Id. "Hitherto we have considered sentences, under the heads of Perspicuity, Unity, and Strength."—See Murray's Gram., p. 356.

"The word is then depos'd; and, in this view,
You rule the Scripture, not the Scripture you."—Dryd. cor.

UNDER RULE XVI.—OF NEEDLESS CAPITALS.

"Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid."—FRIENDS' BIBLE, AND SCOTT'S: Matt., xiv, 27. "Between passion and lying, there is not a finger's breadth."—Mur. cor. "Can our solicitude alter the course, or unravel the intricacy, of human events?" "The last edition was carefully compared with the original manuscript."—Id. "And the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the king of the Jews?"—SCOTT: Matt., xxvii, 11. "Let them be turned back for a reward of their shame, that say, Aha, aha!"—SCOTT ET AL.: Ps., lxx, 3. "Let them be desolate for a reward of their shame, that say unto me, Aha, aha!"—IDEM: Ps., xl, 15. "What think ye of Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The son of David. He saith unto them, How then doth David in spirit call him Lord?"—ALGER: Matt., xxii, 42, 43. "Among all things in the universe, direct your worship to the greatest. And which is that? It is that Being who manages and governs all the rest."—Collier's Antoninus cor. "As for modesty and good faith, truth and justice, they have left this wicked world and retired to heaven; and now what is it that can keep you here?"—Idem.

"If pulse of verse a nation's temper shows,
In keen iambics English metre flows."—Brightland cor.

PROMISCUOUS CORRECTIONS RESPECTING CAPITALS.

LESSON I.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

Page 1645

"Come, gentle Spring, ethereal mildness, come."—Thomson's Seasons, p. 29. As, "He is the Cicero of his age;"—"He is reading the Lives of the Twelve Caesars;"—or, if no particular book is meant,—"the lives of the twelve Caesars;" (as it is in Fisk's Grammar, p. 57;) for the sentence, as it stands in Murray, is ambiguous. "In the History of Henry the Fourth, by Father Daniel, we are surprised at not finding him the great man."—Smollett's Voltaire, Vol. v, p. 82. "Do not those same poor peasants use the lever, and the wedge, and many other instruments?"—Harris and Mur. cor. "Arithmetic is excellent for the gauging of liquors; geometry, for the measuring of estates; astronomy, for the making of almanacs; and grammar, perhaps, for the drawing of bonds and conveyances."—See Murray's Gram., p. 288. "The [History of the] Wars of Flanders, written in Latin by Famianus Strada, is a book of some note."—Blair cor. "William is a noun. Why? Was is a verb. Why? A is an article. Why? Very is an adverb. Why?" &c.—Merchant cor. "In the beginning was the Word, and that Word was with God, and God was that Word."—See Gospel of John, i, 1. "The Greeks are numerous in Thessaly, Macedonia, Romelia, and Albania."—Balbi's Geog., p. 360. "He [the Grand Seignior] is styled by the Turks, Sultan, Mighty, or Padishah, Lord."—Balbi cor. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death. O Death! I will be thy plague; O Grave! I will be thy destruction."—Bible cor. "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have, give I [unto] thee."—See Acts, iii, 6. "Return, we beseech thee, O God of hosts! look down from heaven, and behold, and visit this vine."—See Psalms lxxx, 14. "In the Attic commonwealth, it was the privilege of every citizen to rail in public."—Murray's Gram., Vol. i, p. 316. "They assert, that in the phrases, 'GIVE me that,'—'This is John's,' and, 'Such were some of you,'—the words in Italics are pronouns; but that, in the following phrases, they are not pronouns: 'This book is instructive;'—'Some boys are ingenious;'—'My health is declining;'—'Our hearts are deceitful.'"—Murray partly corrected. [523] "And the coast bends again to the northwest, as far as Farout Head."—Geog. cor. "Dr. Webster, and other makers of spelling-books, very improperly write Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, without capitals."—G. Brown. "The commander in chief of the Turkish navy is styled the Capitan Pacha."—Balbi

Page 1646

cor. "Shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?"—ALGER'S BIBLE: Heb., xii, 9. "He [Dr. Beattie] was more anxious to attain the character of a Christian hero."—Murray cor. "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion."—W. Allen's Gram., p. 393. "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."—ALGER, FRIENDS, ET AL.: Heb., xiii, 6. "Make haste to help me, O LORD my salvation."—IIDEM: Psalms, xxxviii, 22.

"The city which thou seest, no other deem Than great and glorious Rome, queen of the earth."
—Paradise Regained, B. iv.

LESSON II.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"That range of hills, known under the general name of Mount Jura."—Account of Geneva. "He rebuked the Red Sea also, and it was dried up."—FRIENDS' BIBLE: Ps. cvi, 9. "Jesus went unto the Mount of Olives."—Bible cor. "Milton's book in reply to the Defence of the King, by Salmasius, gained him a thousand pounds from the Parliament, and killed his antagonist with vexation."—G. B. "Mandeville, Sir John, an Englishman famous for his travels, born about 1300, died in 1372."—B. Dict. cor. "Ettrick Pen, a mountain in Selkirkshire, Scotland, height 2,200 feet."—G. Geog. cor. "The coast bends from Dungsby Head, in a northwest direction, to the promontory of Dunnet Head."—Id. "General Gaines ordered a detachment of nearly 300 men, under the command of Major Twiggs, to surround and take an Indian village, called Fowltown, about fourteen miles from Fort Scott."—Cohen Cor. "And he took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, 'Talitha, cumi.'"—Bible Editors cor. "On religious subjects, a frequent adoption of Scripture language is attended with peculiar force."—Murray cor. "Contemplated with gratitude to their Author, the Giver of all good."—Id. "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all [the] truth,"—SCOTT, ALGER, ET AL.: John, xvi, 13. "See the Lecture on Verbs, Rule XV, Note 4th."—Fisk cor. "At the commencement of Lecture 2d, I informed you that Etymology treats, thirdly, of derivation."—Kirkham cor. "This 8th Lecture is a very important one."—Id. "Now read the 11th and 12th lectures, four or five times over."—Id. "In 1752, he [Henry Home] was advanced to the bench, under the title of Lord Kames."—Murray cor. "One of his maxims was, 'Know thyself.'"—Lempriere cor. "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?"—FRIENDS' BIBLE: Matt., xix, 16. "His best known works, however, [John Almon's] are, 'Anecdotes of the Life of the Earl of Chatham,' 2 vols. 4to, 3 vols. 8vo; and 'Biographical, Literary, and Political Anecdotes of several of the Most Eminent Persons of the Present Age; never before printed,' 3 vols. 8vo, 1797."—Biog. Dict. cor. "O gentle Sleep, Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee?"—SHAK.: Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. ii, p. 175. "And peace, O Virtue! peace is all thy own."—Pope et al. cor.

Page 1647

LESSON III.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"Fenelon united the characters of a nobleman and a Christian pastor. His book entitled, 'An Explication of the Maxims of the Saints, concerning the Interior Life,' gave considerable offence to the guardians of orthodoxy."—Murray cor. "When Natural Religion, who before was only a spectator, is introduced as speaking by the Centurion's voice."—Murray's Gram., Vol. i, p. 347. "You cannot deny, that the great Mover and Author of nature constantly explaineth himself to the eyes of men, by the sensible intervention of arbitrary signs, which have no similitude to, or connexion with, the things signified."—Berkley cor. "The name of this letter is Double-u, its form, that of a double V."—Dr. Wilson cor. "Murray, in his Spelling-Book, wrote Charlestown with a hyphen and two capitals."—G. Brown. "He also wrote European without a capital."—Id. "They profess themselves to be Pharisees, who are to be heard and not imitated."—Calvin cor. "Dr. Webster wrote both Newhaven and New York with single capitals."—G. Brown. "Gay Head, the west point of Martha's Vineyard."—Williams cor. "Write Crab Orchard, Egg Harbour, Long Island, Perth Amboy, West Hampton, Little Compton, New Paltz, Crown Point, Fell's Point, Sandy Hook, Port Penn, Port Royal, Porto Bello, and Porto Rico."—G. Brown. "Write the names of the months: January, February, March, April, May, June, July, August, September, October, November, December."—Id. "Write the following names and words properly: Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Saturn;—Christ, Christian, Christmas, Christendom, Michaelmas, Indian, Bacchanals;—East Hampton, Omega, Johannes, Aonian, Levitical, Deuteronomy, European."—Id.

"Eight letters in some syllables we find,
And no more syllables in words are join'd."—Brightland cor.

CHAPTER II.—OF SYLLABLES.

CORRECTIONS OF FALSE SYLLABICATION.

LESSON I.—CONSONANTS.

1. Correction of Murray, in words of two syllables: civ-il, col-our, cop-y, dam-ask, dozen, ev-er, feath-er, gath-er, heav-en, heav-y, hon-ey, lem-on, lin-en, mead-ow, mon-ey, nev-er, ol-ive, or-ange, oth-er, pheas-ant, pleas-ant, pun-ish, rath-er, read-y, riv-er, rob-in, schol-ar, shov-el, stom-ach, tim-id, whith-er.

Page 1648

2. Correction of Murray, in words of three syllables: ben-e-fit, cab-i-net, can-is-ter, cat-a-logue, char-ac-ter, char-i-ty, cov-et-ous, dil-i-gence, dim-i-ty, el-e-phant, ev-i-dent, ever-green, friv-o-lous, gath-er-ing, gen-er-ous, gov-ern-ess, gov-ern-or, hon-est-y, kal-en-dar, lav-en-der, lev-er-et, lib-er-al, mem-or-y, min-is-ter, mod-est-ly, nov-el-ty, no-bod-y, par-a-dise, pov-er-ty, pres-ent-ly, prov-i-dence, prop-er-ly, pris-on-er, rav-en-ous, sat-is-fy, sev-er-al, sep-ar-ate, trav-el-ler, vag-a-bond;—con-sid-er, con-tin-ue, de-liv-er, dis-cov-er, dis-fig-ure, dis-hon-est, dis-trib-ute, in-hab-it, me-chan-ic, what-ev-er;—rec-om-mend, ref-u-gee, rep-ri-mand.

3. Correction of Murray, in words of four syllables: cat-er-pil-lar, char-i-ta-ble, dil-i-gent-ly, mis-er-a-ble, prof-it-a-ble, tol-er-a-ble;—be-nev-o-lent, con-sid-er-ate, di-min-u-tive, ex-per-i-ment, ex-trav-a-gant, in-hab-i-tant, no-bil-i-ty, par-tic-u-lar, pros-per-i-ty, ri-dic-u-lous, sin-cer-i-ty;—dem-on-stration, ed-u-ca-tion, em-u-la-tion, ep-i-dem-ic, mal-e-fac-tor, man-u-fac-ture, mem-o-ran-dum, mod-er-a-tor, par-a-lyt-ic, pen-i-ten-tial, res-ig-na-tion, sat-is-fac-tion, sem-i-co-lon.

4. Correction of Murray, in words of five syllables: a-bom-i-na-ble, a-poth-e-ca-ry, con-sid-er-a-ble, ex-plan-a-to-ry, pre-par-a-to-ry;—ac-a-dem-i-cal, cu-ri-os-i-ty, ge-o-graph-i-cal, man-u-fac-tor-y, sat-is-fac-tor-y, mer-i-to-ri-ous;—char-ac-ter-is-tic, ep-i-gram-mat-ic, ex-per-i-ment-al, pol-y-syl-la-ble, con-sid-er-a-tion.

5. Correction of Murray, in the division of proper names: Hel-en, Leon-ard, Phil-ip, Rob-ert, Hor-ace, Thom-as;—Car-o-line, Cath-a-rine, Dan-i-el, Deb-o-rah, Dor-o-thy, Fred-er-ick, Is-a-bel, Jon-a-than, Lyd-i-a, Nich-o-las, Ol-i-ver, Sam-u-el, Sim-e-on, Sol-o-mon, Tim-o-thy, Val-en-tine;—A-mer-i-ca, Bar-thol-o-mew, E-liz-a-beth, Na-than-i-el, Pen-el-o-pe, The-oph-i-lus.

LESSON II.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

1. Correction of Webster, by Rule 1st:—ca-price, e-steem, dis-e-steem, o-blige;—a-zure, ma-tron, pa-tron, pha-lanx, si-ren, trai-tor, tren-cher, bar-ber, bur-nish, gar-nish, tar-nish, var-nish, mar-ket, mus-ket, pam-phlet;—bra-ver-y, kna-ver-y, sla-ver-y, e-ven-ing, sce-ner-y, bri-ber-y, ni-ce-ty, chi-ca-ner-y, ma-chin-er-y, im-a-ger-y;—a-sy-lum, ho-ri-zon,—fin-an-cier, her-o-ism, sar-do-nyx, scur-ri-lous,—co-me-di-an, pos-te-ri-or.

2. Correction of Webster, by Rule 2d: o-yer, fo-li-o, ge-ni-al, ge-ni-us, ju-ni-or, sa-ti-ate, vi-ti-ate;—am-bro-si-a, cha-me-le-on, par-he-li-on, con-ve-ni-ent, in-ge-ni-ous, om-nis-ci-ence, pe-cu-li-ar, so-ci-a-ble, par-ti-al-i-ty, pe-cu-ni-a-ry;—an-nun-ci-ate, e-nun-ci-ate, ap-pre-ci-ate, as-so-ci-ate, ex-pa-ti-ate, in-gra-ti-ate, in-i-ti-ate, li-cen-ti-ate, ne-go-ti-ate, no-vi-ti-ate, of-fi-ci-ate, pro-pi-ti-ate, sub-stan-ti-ate.

3. Correction of Cobb and Webster, by each other, under Rule 3d: “dress-er, hast-y, past-ry, seiz-ure, roll-er, jest-er, weav-er, vamp-er, hand-y, dross-y, gloss-y, mov-er, mov-ing, ooz-y, full-er, trust-y, weight-y, nois-y, drows-y, swarth-y.”—Webster. Again:

“east-ern, ful-ly, pul-let, ril-let, scant-y, need-y.”—Cobb.

Page 1649

4. Correction of Webster and Cobb, under Rule 4th: a-wry, a-thwart, pros-pect-ive, pa-ren-the-sis, re-sist-i-bil-i-ty, hem-i-spher-ic, mon-o-stich, hem-i-stich, to-wards.
5. Correction of the words under Rule 5th; Eng-land, an oth-er,[524] Beth-es-da, Beth-ab-a-ra.

LESSON III.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

1. Correction of Cobb, by Rule 3d: bend-er, bless-ing, brass-y, chaff-y, chant-er, clasp-er, craft-y, curd-y, fend-er, film-y, fust-y, glass-y, graft-er, grass-y, gust-y, hand-ed, mass-y, musk-y, rust-y, swell-ing, tell-er, test-ed, thrift-y, vest-ure.
2. Corrections of Webster, mostly by Rule 1st: bar-ber, bur-nish, bris-ket, can-ker, char-ter, cuc-koo, fur-nish, gar-nish, guilt-y, han-ker, lus-ty, por-tal, tar-nish, tes-tate, tes-ty, trai-tor, trea-ty, var-nish, ves-tal, di-ur-nal, e-ter-nal, in-fer-nal, in-ter-nal, ma-ter-nal, noc-tur-nal, pa-ter-nal.
3. Corrections of Webster, mostly by Rule 1st: ar-mor-y, ar-ter-y, butch-er-y, cook-er-y, eb-on-y, em-er-y, ev-er-y, fel-on-y, fop-per-y, frip-per-y, gal-ler-y, his-tor-y, liv-er-y, lot-ter-y, mock-er-y, mys-ter-y,[525] nun-ner-y, or-rer-y, pil-lor-y, quack-er-y, sor-cer-y, witch-er-y.
4. Corrections of Cobb, mostly by Rule 1st: an-kle, bas-ket, blan-ket, buc-kle, cac-kle, cran-kle, crin-kle, Eas-ter, fic-kle, frec-kle, knuc-kle, mar-ket, mon-key, por-tress, pic-kle, poul-tice, pun-cheon, quad-rant, quad-rate, squad-ron, ran-kle, shac-kle, sprin-kle, tin-kle, twin-kle, wrin-kle.
5. Corrections of Emerson, by Rules 1st and 3d: as-cribe, blan-dish, branch-y, cloud-y, dust-y, drear-y, e-ven-ing, fault-y, filth-y, frost-y, gaud-y, gloom-y, health-y, heark-en, heart-y, hoar-y, leak-y, loun-ger, marsh-y, might-y, milk-y, naught-y, pass-ing, pitch-er, read-y, rock-y, speed-y, stead-y, storm-y, thirst-y, thorn-y, trust-y, vest-ry, west-ern, wealth-y.

CHAPTER III.—OF WORDS.

CORRECTIONS RESPECTING THE FIGURE, OR FORM, OF WORDS.

RULE I.—COMPOUNDS.

“Professing to imitate Timon, the manhater.”—Goldsmith corrected. “Men load hay with a pitchfork.”—Webster cor. “A peartree grows from the seed of a pear.”—Id. “A toothbrush is good to brush your teeth.”—Id. “The mail is opened at the post-office.”—Id. “The error seems to me twofold.”—Sanborn cor. “To preengage means to engage beforehand.—Webster cor. “It is a mean act to deface the figures on a milestone.”—Id. “A grange is a farm, with its farm- house.”—Id. “It is no more right to steal apples or watermelons, than [to steal] money.”—Id. “The awl is a tool used by shoemakers and harness-makers.”—Id. “Twenty-five cents are equal to one quarter of a dollar.”—Id. “The blowing-up of the Fulton at New York, was a terrible disaster.”—Id. “The elders also, and the bringers-up of the children, sent to Jehu.”—ALGER, FRIENDS, ET AL.: 2 Kings, x, 5. “Not with eyeservice as menpleasers.”—Col., iii, 22. “A good-natured and equitable construction of cases.”—Ash cor. “And purify your hearts, ye double-minded.”—James, iv, 8. “It is a mean-spirited action to steal; i.e., To steal is a mean-spirited action.”—A. Murray cor. “There is, indeed, one form of orthography which is akin to the subjunctive mood of the Latin tongue.”—Booth cor. “To bring him into nearer connexion with real and everyday life.”—Philological Museum, Vol. i, p. 459. “The commonplace, stale declamation of its revilers would be silenced.”—Id. cor. “She [Cleopatra] formed a very singular and unheard-of project.”—Goldsmith cor. “He [William Tell] had many vigilant, though feeble-talented and mean-spirited enemies.”—R. Vaux cor. “These old-fashioned people would level our psalmody,” &c. —Gardiner cor. “This slow-shifting scenery in the theatre of harmony.”—Id. “So we are assured from Scripture itself.”—Harris cor. “The mind, being disheartened, then betakes itself to trifling.”—R. Johnson cor. “Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them.”—Bible cor. “Tarry we ourselves how we will.”—W. Walker cor. “Manage your credit so, that you need neither swear yourself, nor seek a voucher.”—Collier cor. “Whereas song never conveys any of the abovenamed sentiments.”—Dr. Rush cor. “I go on horseback.”—Guy cor. “This requires purity, in opposition to barbarous, obsolete, or new-coined words.”—Adam cor. “May the ploughshare shine.”—White cor. “Whichever way we consider it.”—Locke cor.

Page 1650

“Where’er the silent e a place obtains,
The voice foregoing, length and softness gains.”—Brightland cor.

RULE II.—SIMPLES.

“It qualifies any of the four parts of speech above named.”—Kirkham cor. “After a while they put us out among the rude multitude.”—Fox cor. “It would be a shame, if your mind should falter and give in.”—Collier cor. “They stared a while in silence one upon an other.”—Johnson cor. “After passion has for a while exercised its tyrannical sway.”—Murray cor. “Though set within the same general frame of intonation.”—Rush cor. “Which do not carry any of the natural vocal signs of expression.”—Id. “The measurable constructive powers of a few associable constituents.”—Id. “Before each accented syllable or emphatic monosyllabic word.”—Id. “One should not think too favourably of one’s self.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 154. “Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you?”—2 Cor., xiii, 5. “I judge not my own self, for I know nothing of my own self.”—See 1 Cor., iv, 3. “Though they were in such a rage, I desired them to tarry a while.”—Josephus cor. “A, in stead of an, is now used before words beginning with u long.”—Murray cor. “John will have earned his wages by next new year’s day.”—Id. “A new year’s gift is a present made on the first day of the year.”—Johnson et al. cor. “When he sat on the throne, distributing new year’s gifts.”—Id. “St. Paul admonishes Timothy to refuse old wives’ fables.”—See 1 Tim., iv, 7. “The world, take it all together, is but one.”—Collier cor. “In writings of this stamp, we must accept of sound in stead of sense.”—Murray cor. “A male child, a female child; male descendants, female descendants.”—Goldsbury et al. cor. “Male servants, female servants; male relations, female relations.”—Felton cor.

Page 1651

“Reserved and cautious, with no partial aim,
My muse e’er sought to blast an other’s fame.”—Lloyd cor.

RULE III.—THE SENSE.

“Our discriminations of this matter have been but four-footed instincts.”—Rush cor. “He is in the right, (says Clytus,) not to bear free-born men at his table.”—Goldsmith cor. “To the short-seeing eye of man, the progress may appear little.”—The Friend cor. “Knowledge and virtue are, emphatically, the stepping-stones to individual distinction.”—Town cor. “A tin-peddler will sell tin vessels as he travels.”—Webster cor. “The beams of a wooden house are held up by the posts and joists.”—Id. “What you mean by future-tense adjective, I can easily understand.”—Tooke cor. “The town has been for several days very well-behaved.”—Spectator cor. “A rounce is the handle of a printing-press.”—Webster cor. “The phraseology [which] we call thee-and-thouing [or, better, thoutheeing,] is not in so common use with us, as the tutoyant among the French.”—Walker cor. “Hunting and other outdoor sports, are generally pursued.”—Balbi cor. “Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden.”—Scott et al. cor. “God so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son to save it.”—See ALGER’S BIBLE, and FRIENDS’: John, iii, 16. “Jehovah is a prayer-hearing

Page 1652

God: Nineveh repented, and was spared.”—Observer cor. “These are well-pleasing to God, in all ranks and relations.”—Barclay cor. “Whosoever cometh anything near unto the tabernacle.”—Bible cor. “The words coalesce, when they have a long-established association.”—Mur. cor. “Open to me the gates of righteousness: I will go into them.”—MODERN BIBLE: Ps. cxviii, 19. “He saw an angel of God coming in to him.”—Acts, x, 3. “The consequences of any action are to be considered in a twofold light.”—Wayland cor. “We commonly write twofold, threefold, fourfold, and so on up to tenfold, without a hyphen; and, after that, we use one.”—G. Brown. “When the first mark is going off, he cries, Turn! the glassholder answers, Done!”—Bowditch cor. “It is a kind of familiar shaking-hands (or shaking of hands) with all the vices.”—Maturin cor. “She is a good-natured woman;”—“James is self-opinionated;”—“He is broken-hearted.”—Wright cor. “These three examples apply to the present-tense construction only.”—Id. “So that it was like a game of hide-and-go-seek.”—Gram. cor.

“That lowliness is young ambition’s ladder,
Whereto the climber-upward turns his face.”—Shak.

RULE IV.—ELLIPSES.

“This building serves yet for a schoolhouse and a meeting-house.”—G. Brown. “Schoolmasters and schoolmistresses, if honest friends, are to be encouraged.”—Discip. cor. “We never assumed to ourselves a faith-making or a worship-making power.”—Barclay cor. “Potash and pearlash are made from common ashes.”—Webster cor. “Both the ten-syllable and the eight-syllable verses are iambics.”—Blair cor. “I say to myself, thou say’st to thyself, he says to himself, &c.”—Dr. Murray cor. “Or those who have esteemed themselves skillful, have tried for the mastery in two-horse or four-horse chariots.”—Ware cor. “I remember him barefooted and bareheaded, running through the streets.”—Edgeworth cor. “Friends have the entire control of the schoolhouse and dwelling-house.” Or:—“of the schoolhouses and dwelling-houses” Or:—“of the schoolhouse and the dwelling-houses” Or:—“of the schoolhouses and the dwelling-house.” Or:—“of the school, and of the dwelling-houses.” [For the sentence here to be corrected is so ambiguous, that any of these may have been the meaning intended by it.]—The Friend cor. “The meeting is held at the first-mentioned place in Firstmonth; at the last-mentioned, in Secondmonth; and so on.”—Id.

Page 1653

“Meetings for worship are held, at the same hour, on Firstday and Fourthday.” Or:—“on Firstdays and Fourthdays.”—Id. “Every part of it, inside and outside, is covered with gold leaf.”—Id. “The Eastern Quarterly Meeting is held on the last Seventhday in Secondmonth, Fifthmonth, Eighthmonth, and Eleventhmonth.”—Id. “Trenton Preparative Meeting is held on the third Fifthday in each month, at ten o’clock; meetings for worship [are held,] at the same hour, on Firstdays and Fifthdays.”—Id. “Ketch, a vessel with two masts, a mainmast and a mizzenmast.”—Webster cor. “I only mean to suggest a doubt, whether nature has enlisted herself [either] as a Cis-Atlantic or [as a] Trans-Atlantic partisan.”—Jefferson cor. “By large hammers, like those used for paper-mills and fulling-mills, they beat their hemp.”—Johnson cor. “ANT-HILL, or ANT-HILLOCK, n. A small protuberance of earth, formed by ants, for their habitation.”—Id. “It became necessary to substitute simple indicative terms called pronames or pronouns.”

“Obscur’d, where highest woods, impenetrable
To light of star or sun, their umbrage spread.”—Milton cor.

RULE V.—THE HYPHEN.

“Evil-thinking; a noun, compounded of the noun evil and the imperfect participle thinking; singular number;” &c.—Churchill cor. “Evil-speaking; a noun, compounded of the noun evil and the imperfect participle speaking.”—Id. “I am a tall, broad-shouldered, impudent, black fellow.”—Spect, or Joh. cor. “Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend.”—Shak. or Joh. cor. “A popular license is indeed the many-headed tyranny.”—Sydney or Joh. cor. “He from the many-peopled city flies.”—Sandys or Joh. cor. “He many-languaged nations has surveyed.”—Pope or Joh. cor. “The horse-cucumber is the large green cucumber, and the best for the table.”—Mort. or Joh. cor. “The bird of night did sit, even at noon-day, upon the market-place.”—Shak. or Joh. cor. “These make a general gaol-delivery of souls not for punishment.”—South or Joh. cor. “Thy air, thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first.”—Shak. or Joh. cor. “His person was deformed to the highest degree; flat-nosed and blobber-lipped.”—L’Estr. or Joh. cor. “He that defraudeth the labourer of his hire, is a blood-shedder.”—Ecclus., xxxiv, 22. “Bloody-minded, adj., from bloody and mind; Cruel, inclined to bloodshed.”—Johnson cor. “Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour.”—Shak.

Page 1654

or Joh. cor. "A young fellow, with a bob-wig and a black silken bag tied to it."—Spect. or Joh. cor. "I have seen enough to confute all the bold-faced atheists of this age."—Bramhall or Joh. cor. "Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound."—Joh. Dict., w. Bolt. "For what else is a red-hot iron than fire? and what else is a burning coal than red-hot wood?"—Newton or Joh. cor. "Poll-evil is a large swelling, inflammation, or imposthume, in the horse's poll, or nape of the neck, just between the ears."—Far. or Joh. cor.

"Quick-witted, brazen-fac'd, with fluent tongues, Patient of labours, and dissembling wrongs."—Dryden cor.

RULE VI.—NO HYPHEN.

"From his fond parent's eye a teardrop fell."—Snelling cor. "How great, poor jackdaw, would thy sufferings be!"—Id. "Placed, like a scarecrow in a field of corn."—Id. "Soup for the almshouse at a cent a quart."—Id. "Up into the watchtower get, and see all things despoiled of fallacies."—Donne or Joh. cor. "In the daytime she [Fame] sitteth in a watchtower, and flieth most by night."—Bacon or Joh. cor. "The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction."—Dryd. or Joh. cor. "Madam's own hand the mousetrap baited."—Prior or Joh. cor. "By the sinking of the airshaft, the air has liberty to circulate."—Ray or Joh. cor. "The multiform and amazing operations of the airpump and the loadstone."—Watts or Joh. cor. "Many of the firearms are named from animals."—Johnson cor. "You might have trussed him and all his apparel into an eelskin"—Shak. or Joh. cor. "They may serve as landmarks, to show what lies in the direct way of truth."—Locke or Joh. cor. "A packhorse is driven constantly in a narrow lane and dirty road."—Locke or Joh. cor. "A millhorse, still bound to go in one circle."—Sidney or Joh. cor. "Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, Canary birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others."—Carew or Joh. cor. "Cartridge, a case of paper or parchment filled with gunpowder; [or, rather, containing the entire charge of a gun]."—Joh. cor.

"Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screechows cry, and bandogs howl."
SHAKSPEARE: in Johnson's Dict., w. Screechowl.

PROMISCUOUS CORRECTIONS IN THE FIGURE OF WORDS.

Page 1655

LESSON I.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"They that live in glass houses, should not throw stones."—Adage. "If a man profess Christianity in any manner or form whatsoever."—Watts cor. "For Cassius is awearry of the world." Better: "For Cassius is weary of the world."—Shak. cor. "By the coming-together of more, the chains were fastened on."—W. Walker cor. "Unto the carrying-away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month."—Bible cor. "And the goings-forth of the border shall be to Zedad."—Id. "And the goings-out of it shall be at Hazar Enan."—See Walker's Key "For the taking-place of effects, in a certain particular series."—West cor. "The letting-go of which was the occasion of all that corruption."—Owen cor. "A falling-off at the end, is always injurious."—Jamieson cor. "As all holdings-forth were courteously supposed to be trains of reasoning."—Dr. Murray cor. "Whose goings-forth have been from of old, from everlasting."—Bible cor. "Sometimes the adjective becomes a substantive."—Bradley cor. "It is very plain, that I consider man as visited anew."—Barclay cor. "Nor do I anywhere say, as he falsely insinuates."—Id. "Everywhere, anywhere, elsewhere, somewhere, nowhere"—L. Murray's Gram., Vol. i, p. 115. "The world hurries off apace, and time is like a rapid river."—Collier cor. "But to new-model the paradoxes of ancient skepticism."—Dr. Brown cor. "The southeast winds from the ocean invariably produce rain."—Webster cor. "Northwest winds from the highlands produce cold clear weather."—Id. "The greatest part of such tables would be of little use to Englishmen."—Priestley cor. "The ground-floor of the east wing of Mulberry-street meeting-house was filled."—The Friend cor. "Prince Rupert's Drop. This singular production is made at the glasshouses."—Barnes cor.

"The lights and shades, whose well-accorded strife Gives all the strength and colour of our life."—Pope.

LESSON II.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"In the twenty-seventh year of Asa king of Judah, did Zimri reign seven days in Tirzah."—Bible cor. "In the thirty-first year of Asa king of Judah, began Omri to reign over Israel."—Id. "He cannot so deceive himself as to fancy that he is able to do a rule-of-three sum." Better—"a sum in the rule of three."—Qr. Rev. cor. "The best cod are those known under the name of Isle-of-Shoals dun-fish."—Balbi cor. "The soldiers, with downcast eyes, seemed to beg for mercy."—Goldsmith cor. "His head was covered with a coarse, wornout piece of cloth.”—Id. “Though they had lately received a reinforcement of a thousand heavy-armed Spartans.”—Id. “But he laid them by unopened; and, with a smile, said, ‘Business to-morrow.’”—Id. “Chester Monthly Meeting is held at Moorestown, on the Thirdday following the second Secondday”—The Friend cor. “Eggharbour Monthly Meeting is held on the first Secondday.”—Id. “Little-Eggharbour Monthly Meeting is held at Tuckerton on the second Fifthday in each month.”—Id. “At three o’clock, on Firstday morning, the 24th of Eleventhmonth, 1834,” &c.—Id. “In less than one fourth part of the time usually devoted.”—Kirkham cor. “The pupil will not have occasion to use it one tenth part so much.”—Id. “The painter dips his paintbrush in paint, to paint the carriage.”—Id. “In an ancient English version of the New Testament.”—Id. “The little boy was bareheaded.”—Red Book cor. “The man, being a little short-sighted, did not immediately know him.”—Id. “Picture-frames are gilt with gold.”—Id. “The parkkeeper killed one of the deer.”—Id. “The fox was killed near the brickkiln.”—Id. “Here comes Esther, with her milkpail”—Id. “The cabinet-maker would not tell us.”—Id. “A fine thorn-hedge extended along the edge of the hill.”—Id. “If their private interests should be everso little affected.”—Id. “Unios are fresh-water shells, vulgarly called fresh-water clams.”—Id.

Page 1656

“Did not each poet mourn his luckless doom, Jostled by pedants out of elbow-room.”—Lloyd cor.

LESSON III.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

“The captive hovers a while upon the sad remains.”—Johnson cor. “Constantia saw that the hand-writing agreed with the contents of the letter.”—Id. “They have put me in a silk night-gown, and a gaudy foolscap”—Id. “Have you no more manners than to rail at Hocus, that has saved that clod-pated, numb-skulled ninny-hammer of yours from ruin, and all his family?”—Id. “A noble, (that is, six shillings and eight pence.) is [paid], and usually hath been paid.”—Id. “The king of birds, thick-feathered, and with full-summed wings, fastened his talons east and west.”—Id. “To-morrow. This—supposing morrow to mean morning, as it did originally—is an idiom of the same kind as to-night, to-day.”—Johnson cor. “To-day goes away, and to-morrow comes.”—Id. “Young children, who are tried in Gocarts, to keep their steps from sliding.”—Id. “Which, followed well, would demonstrate them but goers-backward”—Id. “Heaven’s golden-winged herald late he saw, to a poor Galilean virgin sent.”—Id. “My pent-house eyebrows and my shaggy beard offend your sight.”—Id. “The hungry lion would fain have been dealing with good horseflesh.”—Id. “A broad-brimmed hat ensconced each careful head.”—Snelling cor. “With harsh vibrations of his three-stringed lute.”—Id. “They magnify a hundred-fold an author’s merit.”—Id. “I’ll nail them fast to some oft-opened door.”—Id. “Glossed over only with saintlike show, still thou art bound to vice.”—Johnson’s Dict., w. Saintlike. “Take of aqua-fortis two ounces, of quicksilver two drachms.”—Id. cor. “This rainbow never appears but when it rains in the sunshine.”—Id. cor.

Page 1657

“Not but there are, who merit other palms;
Hopkins and Sternhold glad the heart with psalms.”—Pope.

CHAPTER IV.—OF SPELLING.

CORRECTIONS OF FALSE SPELLING.

RULE I.—FINAL F, L, OR S.

“He will observe the moral law, in his conduct.”—Webster corrected. “A cliff is a steep bank, or a precipitous rock.”—Walker cor. “A needy man’s budget is full of schemes.”—Maxim cor. “Few large publications, in this country, will pay a printer.”—N. Webster cor. “I shall, with cheerfulness, resign my other papers to oblivion.”—Id. “The proposition was suspended till the next session of the legislature.”—Id. “Tenants for life will make the most of lands for themselves.”—Id. “While every thing is left to lazy negroes, a state will never be well cultivated.”—Id. “The heirs of the original proprietors still hold the soil.”—Id. “Say my annual profit on money loaned shall be six per cent.”—Id. “No man would submit to the drudgery of business, if he could make money as fast by lying still.”—Id. “A man may as well feed himself with a bodkin, as with a knife of the present fashion.”—Id. “The clothes will be ill washed, the food will be badly cooked; you will be ashamed of your wife, if she is not ashamed of herself.”—Id. “He will submit to the laws of the state while he is a member of it.”—Id. “But will our sage writers on law forever think by tradition?”—Id. “Some still retain a sovereign power in their territories.”—Id. “They sell images, prayers, the sound of bells, remission of sins, &c.”—Perkins cor. “And the law had sacrifices offered every day, for the sins of all the people.”—Id. “Then it may please the Lord, they shall find it to be a restorative.”—Id. “Perdition is repentance put off till a future day.”—Maxim cor. “The angels of God, who will good and cannot will evil, have nevertheless perfect liberty of will.”—Perkins cor. “Secondly, this doctrine cuts off the excuse of all sin.”—Id. “Knell, the sound of a bell rung at a funeral.”—Dict. cor.

Page 1658

“If gold with dross or grain with chaff you find,
Select—and leave the chaff and dross behind.”—G. Brown.

RULE II.—OTHER FINALS.

“The mob hath many heads, but no brains.”—Maxim cor. “Clam; to clog with any glutinous or viscous matter.”—See Webster’s Dict. “Whur; to pronounce the letter r with too much force.” “Flip; a mixed liquor, consisting of beer and spirit sweetened.” “Glyn; a hollow between two mountains, a glen.”—See Walker’s Dict. “Lam, or belam; to beat soundly with a cudgel or bludgeon.”—See Red Book. “Bun; a small cake, a simnel, a kind of sweet bread.”—See Webster’s Dict. “Brunet, or Brunette; a woman with a brown complexion.”—See ib., and Scott’s Dict. “Wadset; an ancient tenure or lease of land in the Highlands of Scotland.”—Webster cor. “To dod sheep, is to cut the wool away about their tails.”—Id. “In aliquem arietare. Cic. To run full butt at one.”—W. Walker cor. “Neither your policy nor your temper would permit you to kill me.”—Phil. Mu. cor. “And admit none but his own offspring to fulfill them.”—Id. “The sum of all this dispute is, that some make them Participles.”—R. Johnson cor. “As the whistling winds, the buzz and hum of insects, the hiss of serpents, the crash of falling timber.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 331. “Van; to winnow, or a fan for winnowing.”—See Scott. “Creatures that buzz, are very commonly such as will sting.”—G. Brown. “Beg, buy, or borrow; but beware how yon find.”—Id. “It is better to have a house to let, than a house to get.” “Let not your tongue cut your throat.”—Precept cor. “A little wit will save a fortunate man.”—Adage cor. “There is many a slip ‘twixt the cup and the lip.”—Id. “Mothers’ darlings make but milksop heroes.”—Id. “One eye-witness is worth ten hearsays.”—Id.

“The judge shall job, the bishop bite the town,
And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown.”
POPE: in Johnson’s Dict., w. Job.

RULE III.—DOUBLING.

Page 1659

“Friz, to curl; frizzed, curled; frizzing, curling.”—Webster cor. “The commercial interests served to foster the principles of Whiggism.”—Payne cor. “Their extreme indolence shunned every species of labour.”—Robertson cor. “In poverty and strippedness, they attend their little meetings.”—The Friend cor. “In guiding and controlling the power you have thus obtained.”—Abbott cor. “I began, Thou begannest or beganst, He began, &c.”—A. Murray cor. “Why does began change its ending; as, I began, Thou begannest or beganst?”—Id. “Truth and conscience cannot be controlled by any methods of coercion.”—Hints cor. “Dr. Webster nodded, when he wrote knit, knitter, and knitting-needle, without doubling the t.”—G. Brown. “A wag should have wit enough to know when other wags are quizzing him.” “Bonny; handsome, beautiful, merry.”—Walker cor. “Coquettish; practising coquetry; after the manner of a jilt.”—See Worcester. “Pottage; a species of food made of meat and vegetables boiled to softness in water.”—See Johnson’s Dict. “Pottager; (from pottage;) a porringer, a small vessel for children’s food.” “Compromit, compromitted, compromitting; manumit, manumitted, manumitting.”—Webster cor. “Inferrible; that may be inferred or deduced from premises.”—Walker. “Acids are either solid, liquid, or gasseous.”—Gregory cor. “The spark will pass through the interrupted space between the two wires, and explode the gasses.”—Id. “Do we sound gasses and gasseous like cases and caseous? No: they are more like glasses and osseous.”—G. Brown. “I shall not need here to mention Swimming, when he is of an age able to learn.”—Locke cor. “Why do lexicographers spell thinnish and mannish with two Ens, and dimmish and rammish with one Em, each?”—G. Brown. “Gas forms the plural regularly, gasses.”—Peirce cor. “Singular, gas; Plural, gasses.”—Clark cor. “These are contractions from shedded, *burst*ed.”—Hiley cor. “The Present Tense denotes what is occurring at the present time.”—Day cor. “The verb ending in eth is of the solemn or antiquated style; as, He loveth, He walketh, He runneth.”—Davis cor.

“Thro’ Freedom’s sons no more remonstrance rings, Degrading nobles and controlling kings.”—Johnson.

RULE IV—NO DOUBLING.

Page 1660

"A bigoted and tyrannical clergy will be feared."—See Johnson, Walker, &c. "Jacob worshiped his Creator, leaning on the top of his staff."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 165. "For it is all marvellously destitute of interest."—See Johnson, Walker, and Worcester. "As, box, boxes; church, churches; lash, lashes; kiss, kisses; rebus, rebuses."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 40. "Gossiping and lying go hand in hand."—See Webster's Dict., and Worcester's, w. Gossiping. "The substance of the Criticisms on the Diversions of Purley was, with singular industry, gossiped by the present precious Secretary at [of] war, in Payne the bookseller's shop."—Tooke's Diversions, Vol. i, p. 187. "Worship makes worshiped, worshiper, worshiping; gossip, gossiped, gossipier, gossiping; fillip, filliped, filliper, filliping."—Web. Dict. "I became as fidgety as a fly in a milk-jug."—See ib. "That enormous error seems to be riveted in popular opinion." "Whose mind is not biased by personal attachments to a sovereign."—See ib. "Laws against usury originated in a bigoted prejudice against the Jews."—Webster cor. "The most critical period of life is usually between thirteen and seventeen."—Id. "Generalissimo, the chief commander of an army or military force."—Every Dict. "Tranquilize, to quiet, to make calm and peaceful."—Webster's Dict. "Pommelled, beaten, bruised; having pommels, as a sword-hilt."—Webster et al. cor. "From what a height does a jeweller look down upon his shoemaker!"—Red Book cor. "You will have a verbal account from my friend and fellow traveller."—Id. "I observe that you have written the word counselled with one l only."—Id. "They were offended at such as combated these notions."—Robertson cor. "From libel, come libelled, libeller, libelling, libellous; from grovel, grovelled, groveller, grovelling; from gravel, gravelled, and gravelling."—Webster cor. "Woolliness, the state of being woolly."—Worcester's Dict. "Yet he has spelled chapelling, bordeller, medalist, metaline, metalist, metalize, clavellated, etc, with ll, contrary to his rule."—Webster cor. "Again, he has spelled cancellation and snivelly with single l, and cupellation, pannellation wittolly, with ll."—Id. "Oily, fatty, greasy, containing oil, glib."—Walker cor. "Medalist, one curious in medals; Metalist, one skilled in metals."—Walker's Rhym. Dict. "He is benefited."—Webster. "They travelled for pleasure."—Clark cor.

"Without you, what were man? A grovelling herd,
In darkness, wretchedness, and want enchain'd."—Beattle cor.

Page 1661

RULE V.—FINAL CK.

“He hopes, therefore, to be pardoned by the critic.”—Kirkham corrected. “The leading object of every public speaker should be, to persuade.”—Id. “May not four feet be as poetic as five; or fifteen feet as poetic as fifty?”—Id. “Avoid all theatrical trick and mimicry, and especially all scholastic stiffness.”—Id. “No one thinks of becoming skilled in dancing, or in music, or in mathematics, or in logic, without long and close application to the subject.”—Id. “Caspar’s sense of feeling, and susceptibility of metallic and magnetic excitement, were also very extraordinary.”—Id. “Authorship has become a mania, or, perhaps I should say, an epidemic.”—Id. “What can prevent this republic from soon raising a literary standard?”—Id. “Courteous reader, you may think me garrulous upon topics quite foreign to the subject before me.”—Id. “Of the Tonic, Subtonic, and Atonic elements.”—Id. “The subtonic elements are inferior to the tonics, in all the emphatic and elegant purposes of speech.”—Id. “The nine atonics and the three abrupt subtonics cause an interruption to the continuity of the syllabic impulse.” [526]—Id. “On scientific principles, conjunctions and prepositions are [not] one [and the same] part of speech.”—Id. “That some inferior animals should be able to mimick human articulation, will not seem wonderful.”—L. Murray cor.

“When young, you led a life monastic,
And wore a vest ecclesiastic;
Now, in your age, you grow fantastic.”—Denham’s Poems, p. 235.

RULE VI.—RETAINING.

“Fearlessness; exemption from fear, intrepidity.”—Johnson cor. “Dreadlessness; fearlessness, intrepidity, undauntedness.”—Id. “Regardlessly, without heed; Regardlessness, heedlessness.”—Id. “Blamelessly, innocently; Blamelessness, innocence.”—Id. “That is better than to be flattered into pride and carelessness.”—Id. “Good fortunes began to breed a proud recklessness in them.”—Id. “See whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time.”—Id. “It maybe, the palate of the soul is indisposed by listlessness or sorrow.”—Id. “Pitilessly, without mercy; Pitilessness, unmercifulness.”—Id. “What say you to such as these? abominable, accordable, agreeable, etc.”—Tooke cor. “Artlessly; naturally, sincerely, without craft.”—Johnson cor. “A chillness, or shivering of the body, generally precedes a fever.”—See

Page 1662

Webster. “Smallness; littleness, minuteness, weakness.”—Walker’s Dict., et al.
“Galless, adj. Free from gall or bitterness.”—Webster cor. “Tallness; height of stature, upright length with comparative slenderness.”—Webster’s Dict. “Willful; stubborn, contumacious, perverse, inflexible.”—See ib. “He guided them by the skillfulness of his hands.”—See ib. “The earth is the Lord’s, and the fullness thereof.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Ps. xxiv, 1. “What is now, is but an amassment of imaginary conceptions.”—Glanville cor. “Embarrassment; perplexity, entanglement.”—Walker. “The second is slothfulness, whereby they are performed slackly and carelessly.”—Perkins cor. “Installment; induction into office, part of a large sum of money, to be paid at a particular time.”—See Webster’s Dict. “Inthrallment; servitude, slavery, bondage.”—ib.

“I, who at some times spend, at others spare,
Divided between carelessness and care.”—Pope cor.

RULE VII.—RETAINING.

“Shall, on the contrary, in the first person, simply foretells.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 41; Comly’s, 38; Cooper’s, 51; Lennie’s, 26. “There are a few compound irregular verbs, as befall, bespeak, &c.”—Ash cor. “That we might frequently recall it to our memory.”—Calvin cor. “The angels exercise a constant solicitude that no evil befall us.”—Id. “Inthrall; to enslave, to shackle, to reduce to servitude.”—Johnson. “He makes resolutions, and fulfills them by new ones.”—See Webster. “To enroll my humble name upon the list of authors on Elocution.”—See Webster. “Forestall; to anticipate, to take up beforehand.”—Johnson. “Miscall; to call wrong, to name improperly.”—Webster. “Bethrall; to enslave, to reduce to bondage.”—Id. “Befall; to happen to, to come to pass.”—Walkers Dict. “Unroll; to open what is rolled or convolved.”—Webster’s Dict. “Counterroll; to keep copies of accounts to prevent frauds.”—See ib. “As Sisyphus uprolls a rock, which constantly overpowers him at the summit.”—G. Brown. “Unwell; not well, indisposed, not in good health.”—Webster. “Undersell; to defeat by selling for less, to sell cheaper than an other.”—Johnson. “Inwall; to enclose or fortify with a wall.”—Id. “Twibill; an instrument with two bills, or with a point and a blade; a pickaxe, a mattock, a halberd, a battleaxe.”—Dict. cor. “What you miscall their folly, is their care.”—Dryden cor. “My heart will sigh when I miscall it so.”—Shak. cor. “But if the arrangement recalls one set of ideas more readily than an other.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 334.

Page 1663

"'Tis done; and since 'tis done, 'tis past recall
And since 'tis past recall, must be forgotten."—Dryden cor.

RULE VIII.—FINAL LL.

"The righteous is taken away from the evil to come."—Isaiah, lvii, 1. "Patrol; to go the rounds in a camp or garrison, to march about and observe what passes."—See Joh. Dic. "Marshal; the chief officer of arms, one who regulates rank and order."—See ib. "Weevil; a destructive grub that gets among corn."—See ib. "It much excels all other studies and arts."—W. Walker cor. "It is essential to all magnitudes, to be in one place."—Perkins cor. "By nature I was thy vassal, but Christ hath redeemed me."—Id. "Some being in want, pray for temporal blessings."—Id. "And this the Lord doth, either in temporal or in spiritual benefits."—Id. "He makes an idol of them, by setting his heart on them." "This trial by desertion serveth for two purposes."—Id. "Moreover, this destruction is both perpetual and terrible."—Id. "Giving to several men several gifts, according to his good pleasure." "Until; to some time, place, or degree, mentioned."—See Dict. "Annul; to make void, to nullify, to abrogate, to abolish."—See Dict. "Nitric acid combined with argil, forms the nitrate of argil."—Gregory cor.

"Let modest Foster, if he will, excel
Ten metropolitans in preaching well."—Pope cor.

RULE IX.—FINAL E.

"Adjectives ending in able signify capacity; as, comfortable, tenable, improvable."—Priestly cor. "Their mildness and hospitality are ascribable to a general administration of religious ordinances."—Webster cor. "Retrench as much as possible without obscuring the sense."—J. Brown cor. "Changeable, subject to change; Unchangeable, immutable."—Walker cor. "Tamable, susceptible of taming; Untamable, not to be tamed."—Id. "Reconcilable, Unreconcilable, Reconcilableness; Irreconcilable, Irreconcilably, Irreconcilableness."—Johnson cor. "We have thought it most advisable to pay him some little attention."—Merchant cor. "Provable, that may be proved; Reprovable, blamable, worthy of reprehension."—Walker cor. "Movable and Immovable, Movably and Immovably, Movables and Removal, Movableness and Improvableness, Unremovable and Unimprovable, Unremovably and Removable, Provable and Approvable, Irreprovable and Reprovable, Unreprovable and Improvable, Unimprovableness and Improvably."—Johnson

Page 1664

cor. "And with this cruelty you are chargeable in some measure yourself."—Collier cor. "Mothers would certainly resent it, as judging it proceeded from a low opinion of the genius of their sex."—Brit. Gram. cor. "Tithable, subject to the payment of tithes; Salable, vendible, fit for sale; Losable, possible to be lost; Sizable, of reasonable bulk or size."—See Webster's Dict. "When he began this custom, he was puting and very tender."—Locke cor.

"The plate, coin, revenues, and movables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd."—Shak. cor.

RULE X.—FINAL E.

"Diversely; in different ways, differently, variously."—See Walker's Dict. "The event thereof contains a wholesome instruction."—Bacon cor. "Whence Scaliger falsely concluded that Articles were useless."—Brightland cor. "The child that we have just seen is wholesomely fed."—Murray cor. "Indeed, falsehood and legerdemain sink the character of a prince."—Collier cor. "In earnest, at this rate of management, thou usest thyself very coarsely."—Id. "To give them an arrangement and a diversity, as agreeable as the nature of the subject would admit."—Murray cor. "Alger's Grammar is only a trifling enlargement of Murray's little Abridgement."—G. Brown. "You ask whether you are to retain or to omit the mute e in the words, judgement, abridgement, acknowledgement, lodgement, adjudgement, and prejudgement."—Red Book cor. "Fertileness, fruitfulness; fertilely, fruitfully, abundantly."—Johnson cor. "Chastely, purely, without contamination; Chasteness, chastity, purity."—Id. "Rhymester, n. One who makes rhymes; a versifier; a mean poet."—Walker, Chalmers, Maunder, Worcester. "It is therefore a heroical achievement to disposess [sic—KTH] this imaginary monarch."—Berkley cor. "Whereby is not meant the present time, as he imagines, but the time past."—R. Johnson cor. "So far is this word from affecting the noun, in regard to its definiteness, that its own character of definiteness or indefiniteness, depends upon the name to which it is prefixed."—Webster cor.

"Satire, by wholesome lessons, would reclaim,
And heal their vices to secure their fame "—Brightland cor.

RULE XI.—FINAL Y.

Page 1665

"Solon's the veriest fool in all the play."—Dryden cor. "Our author prides himself upon his great sliness and shrewdness."—Merchant cor. "This tense, then, implies also the signification of debeo."—R. Johnson cor. "That may be applied to a subject, with respect to something accidental."—Id. "This latter author accompanies his note with a distinction."—Id. "This rule is defective, and none of the annotators have sufficiently supplied its deficiencies."—Id. "Though the fancied supplement of Sanctius, Scioppius, Vossius, and Mariangelus, may take place."—Ib. "Yet, as to the commutableness of these two tenses, which is denied likewise, they [the foregoing examples] are all one [; i.e., exactly equivalent]"—Id. "Both these tenses may represent a futurity, implied by the dependence of the clause."—Id. "Cry, cries, crying, cried, crier, decial; Shy, shier, shiest, shily, shiness; Fly, flies, flying, flier, high-flier; Sly, slier, sliest, slily, sliness; Spy, spies, spying, spied, espial; Dry, drier, driest, drily, driness."—Cobb, Webster, and Chalmers cor. "I would sooner listen to the thrumming of a dandizette at her piano."—Kirkham cor. "Send her away; for she crieth after us."—Matt., v, 23. "IVIED, a. overgrown with ivy."—Cobb's Dict., and Maunders.

"Some drily plain, without invention's aid, Write dull receipts how poems may be made."—Pope cor.

RULE XII.—FINAL Y.

"The gayety of youth should be tempered by the precepts of age."—Murray cor. "In the storm of 1703, two thousand stacks of chimneys were blown down in and about London."—Red Book cor. "And the vexation was not abated by the hackneyed plea of haste."—Id. "The fourth sin of our days is lukewarmness."—Perkins cor. "God hates the workers of iniquity, and destroys them that speak lies."—Id. "For, when he lays his hand upon us, we may not fret."—Id. "Care not for it; but if thou mayst be free, choose it rather."—Id. "Alexander Severus saith, 'He that buyeth, must sell; I will not suffer buyers and sellers of offices.'"—Id. "With these measures, fell in all moneyed men."—See Johnson's Dict. "But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks."—Murray's Reader, q. Pope. "Valleys are the intervals betwixt mountains."—Woodward cor. "The Hebrews had fifty-two journeys or marches."—Wood cor. "It was not possible to manage or steer the galleys thus fastened together."—Goldsmith cor. "Turkeys were not known to naturalists till after the discovery of America."—Gregory cor. "I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys."—SHAK.: in Johnson's Dict. "Men worked at embroidery, especially in abbeys."—Constable cor. "By which all purchasers or mortgagees may be secured of all moneys they lay out."—Temple cor. "He would fly to the mines or the galleys, for his recreation."—South cor. "Here pulleys make the pond'rous oak ascend."—Gay cor.

Page 1666

-----"You need my help, and you say,
Shylock, we would have moneys."—Shak. cor.

RULE XIII.—IZE AND ISE.

"Will any able writer authorize other men to revise his works?"—G. B. "It can be made as strong and expressive as this Latinized English."—Murray cor. "Governed by the success or failure of an enterprise."—Id. "Who have patronized the cause of justice against powerful oppressors."—Id., et al. "Yet custom authorizes this use of it."—Priestley cor. "They surprise myself, ; and I even think the writers themselves will be surprised."—Id. "Let the interest rise to any sum which can be obtained."—Webster cor. "To determine what interest shall arise on the use of money."—Id. "To direct the popular councils and check any rising opposition,"—Id. "Five were appointed to the immediate exercise of the office."—Id. "No man ever offers himself as a candidate by advertising."—Id. "They are honest and economical, but indolent, and destitute of enterprise."—Id. "I would, however, advise you to be cautious."—Id. "We are accountable for what we patronize in others."—Murray cor. "After he was baptized, and was solemnly admitted into the office."—Perkins cor. "He will find all, or most, of them, comprised in the exercises."—Brit. Gram. cor. "A quick and ready habit of methodizing and regulating their thoughts."—Id. "To tyrannize over the time and patience of his readers."—Kirkham cor. "Writers of dull books, however, if patronized at all, are rewarded beyond their deserts."—Id. "A little reflection will show the reader the reason for emphasizing the words marked."—Id. "The English Chronicle contains an account of a surprising cure."—Red Book cor. "Dogmatize, to assert positively; Dogmatizer, an assertor, a magisterial teacher."—Chalmers cor. "And their inflections might now have been easily analyzed."—Murray cor. "Authorize, disauthorize, and unauthorized; Temporize, contemporize, and extemporize."—Walker cor. "Legalize, equalize, methodize, sluggardize, womanize, humanize, patronize, cantonize, gluttonize, epitomize, anatomize, phlebotomize, sanctuarize, characterize, synonymize, recognize, detonize, colonize."—Id. cor.

Page 1667

"This beauty sweetness always must comprise,
Which from the subject, well express'd, will rise."—Brightland cor.

RULE XIV.—COMPOUNDS.

"The glory of the Lord shall be thy rear-ward."—SCOTT, ALGER: Isa., lviii, 8. "A mere van-courier to announce the coming of his master."—Tooke cor. "The party-coloured shutter appeared to come close up before him."—Kirkham cor. "When the day broke upon this handful of forlorn but dauntless spirits."—Id. "If, upon a plumtree, peaches and apricots are engrafted, nobody will say they are the natural growth of the plumtree."—Berkley cor. "The channel between Newfoundland and Labrador is called the Straits of Belleisle."—Worcester cor. "There being nothing that more exposes to the headache."—or, (perhaps more accurately,) "headake."—Locke cor. "And, by a sleep, to say we end the heartache."—or, "heartake."—Shak. cor. "He that sleeps, feels not the toothache."—or, "toothake."—Id. "That the shoe must fit him, because it fitted his father and grandfather."—Phil. Museum cor. "A single word misspelled [or misspelt] in a letter is sufficient to show that you have received a defective education."—C. Bucke cor. "Which misstatement the committee attributed to a failure of memory."—Professors cor. "Then he went through the Banqueting-House to the scaffold."—Smollet cor. "For the purpose of maintaining a clergyman and a schoolmaster."—Webster cor. "They however knew that the lands were claimed by Pennsylvania."—Id. "But if you ask a reason, they immediately bid farewell to argument."—Barnes cor. "Whom resist, steadfast in the faith."—Alger's Bible. "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine."—Id. "Beware lest ye also fall from your own steadfastness."—Id. "Galiot, or Galliot, a Dutch vessel carrying a main-mast and a mizzen-mast."—Webster cor. "Infinitive, to overflow; Preterit, overflowed; Participle, overflowed."—Cobbett cor. "After they have misspent so much precious time."—Brit. Gram. cor. "Some say, 'two handsful;' some, 'two handfuls;' and others, 'two handful.' The second expression is right."—G. Brown. "Lapful, as much as the lap can contain."—Webster cor. "Dareful, full of defiance."—Walker cor. "The road to the blissful regions is as open to the peasant as to the king."—Mur. cor. "Misspell is misspelled [or misspelt] in every dictionary which I have seen."—Barnes cor. "Downfall; ruin, calamity, fall from rank or state."—Johnson

Page 1668

cor. "The whole legislature likewise acts as a court."—Webster cor. "It were better a millstone were hanged about his neck."—Perkins cor. "Plumtree, a tree that produces plums; Hogplumtree, a tree."—Webster cor. "Trissyllables ending in re or le, accent the first syllable."—Murray cor.

"It happened on a summer's holyday,
That to the greenwood shade he took his way."—Dryden.

RULE XV.—USAGE.

"Nor are the moods of the Greek tongue more uniform."—Murray cor. "If we analyze a conjunctive preterit, the rule will not appear to hold."—Priestley cor. "No landholder would have been at that expense."—Id. "I went to see the child whilst they were putting on its clothes."—Id. "This style is ostentatious, and does not suit grave writing."—Id. "The king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, sat each on his throne."—1 Kings, xxii, 10; 2 Chron., xviii, 9. "Lysias, speaking of his friends, promised to his father never to abandon them."—Murray cor. "Some, to avoid this error, run into its opposite."—Churchill cor. "Hope, the balm of life soothes us under every misfortune."—Jaudon's Gram., p. 182. "Any judgement or decree might be heard and reversed by the legislature."—N. Webster cor. "A pathetic harangue will screen from punishment any knave."—Id. "For the same reason the women would be improper judges."—Id. "Every person is indulged in worshiping as he pleases."—Id. "Most or all teachers are excluded from genteel company."—Id. "The Christian religion, in its purity, is the best institution on earth."—Id. "Neither clergymen nor human laws have the least authority over the conscience."—Id. "A guild is a society, fraternity, or corporation."—Barnes cor. "Phillis was not able to untie the knot, and so she cut it."—Id. "An acre of land is the quantity of one hundred and sixty perches."—Id. "Ochre is a fossil earth combined with the oxyd of some metal."—Id. "Genii, when denoting aerial spirits; geniuses, when signifying persons of genius."—Murray cor.; also Frost; also Nutting. "Acrisius, king of Argos, had a beautiful daughter, whose name was Danaee."—Classic Tales cor. "Phaeeton was the son of Apollo and Clymene."—Id.—"But, after all, I may not have reached the intended goal."—Buchanan cor. "'Pittacus was offered a large sum.' Better: 'To Pittacus was offered a large sum.'"—Kirkham cor. "King Micipsa charged his sons to respect the senate and people of Rome."—Id. "For example: 'Galileo greatly improved the telescope.'"—Id. "Cathmor's warriors sleep in death."—Macpherson's Ossian. "For parsing will enable you to detect and correct errors in composition."—Kirkham cor.

Page 1669

"O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain, Extends thy uncontrolled and boundless reign."—Dryden cor.

PROMISCUOUS CORRECTIONS OF FALSE SPELLING.

LESSON I.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic."—Pope (or Johnson) cor.
"Produce a single passage, superior to the speech of Logan, a Mingo chief, to Lord Dunmore, governor of this state."—Jefferson's Notes, p. 94. "We have none synonymous to supply its place."—Jamieson cor. "There is a probability that the effect will be accelerated."—Id. "Nay, a regard to sound has controlled the public choice."—Id. "Though learnt [better, learned] from the uninterrupted use of guttural sounds."—Id. "It is by carefully filing off all roughness and all inequalities, that languages, like metals, must be polished."—Id. "That I have not misspent my time in the service of the community."—Buchanan cor. "The leaves of maize are also called blades."—Webster cor. "Who boast that they know what is past, and can foretell what is to come."—Robertson cor. "Its tasteless dullness is interrupted by nothing but its perplexities."—Abbott, right. "Sentences constructed with the Johnsonian fullness and swell."—Jamieson, right. "The privilege of escaping from his prefatory dullness and prolixity."—Kirkham, right. "But, in poetry, this characteristic of dullness attains its full growth."—Id. corrected. "The leading characteristic consists in an increase of the force and fullness."—Id. cor. "The character of this opening fullness and feebler vanish."—Id. cor. "Who, in the fullness of unequalled power, would not believe himself the favourite of Heaven?"—Id. right. "They mar one an other, and distract him."—Philol. Mus. cor. "Let a deaf worshiper of antiquity and an English prosodist settle this."—Rush cor. "This Philippic gave rise to my satirical reply in self-defence."—Merchant cor. "We here saw no innuendoes, no new sophistry, no falsehoods."—Id. "A witty and humorous vein has often produced enemies."—Murray cor. "Cry hollo! to thy tongue, I pray thee:[527] it curvets unseasonably."—Shak. cor. "I said, in my sliest manner, 'Your health, sir.'"—Blackwood cor. "And attorneys also travel the circuit in pursuit of business."—Barnes cor. "Some whole counties in Virginia would hardly sell for the value of the debts due from the inhabitants."—Webster cor. "They were called the Court of Assistants, and exercised all powers, legislative and judicial."—Id. "Arithmetic is excellent for the gauging of liquors."—Harris's Hermes, p. 295. "Most of the inflections may be analyzed in a way somewhat similar."—Murray cor.

Page 1670

"To epithets allots emphatic state,
While principals, ungrac'd, like lackeys wait."
—T. O. Churchill's Gram., p. 326.

LESSON II.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"Hence less is a privative suffix, denoting destitution; as in fatherless, faithless, penniless."—Webster cor. "Bay; red, or reddish, inclining to a chestnut colour."—Id. "To mimick, to imitate or ape for sport; a mimic, one who imitates or mimicks."—Id. "Counterroll, a counterpart or copy of the rolls; Counterrollment, a counter account."—Id. "Millennium, [from mille and annus,] the thousand years during which Satan shall be bound."—See Johnson's Dict. "Millennial, [like septennial, decennial, &c.,] pertaining to the millennium, or to a thousand years."—See Worcester's Dict. "Thralldom; slavery, bondage, a state of servitude."—Webster's Dict. "Brier, a prickly bush; Briery, rough, prickly, full of briers; Sweetbrier, a fragrant shrub."—See Ainsworth's Dict., Scott's, Gobb's, and others. "Will, in the second and third persons, barely foretells."—Brit. Gram. cor. "And therefore there is no word false, but what is distinguished by Italics."—Id. "What should be repeated, is left to their discretion."—Id. "Because they are abstracted or separated from material substances."—Id. "All motion is in time, and therefore, wherever it exists, implies time as its concomitant."—Harris's Hermes, p. 95. "And illiterate grown persons are guilty of blamable spelling."—Brit. Gram. cor. "They will always be ignorant, and of rough, uncivil manners."—Webster cor. "This fact will hardly be believed in the northern states."—Id. "The province, however, was harassed with disputes."—Id. "So little concern has the legislature for the interest of learning."—Id. "The gentlemen will not admit that a schoolmaster can be a gentleman."—Id. "Such absurd *quid-pro-quo*es cannot be too strenuously avoided."—Churchill cor. "When we say of a man, 'He looks slily;' we signify, that he takes a sly glance or peep at something."—Id. "Peep; to look through a crevice; to look narrowly, closely, or slily"—Webster cor. "Hence the confession has become a hackneyed proverb."—Wayland cor. "Not to mention the more ornamental parts of gilding, varnish, &c."—Tooke cor. "After this system of self-interest had been riveted."—Dr. Brown cor. "Prejudice might have prevented the cordial approbation of a bigoted Jew."—Dr. Scott cor.

"All twinkling with the dewdrop sheen,
The brier-rose fell in streamers green."—Sir W. Scott cor.

Page 1671

LESSON III.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"The infinitive mood has, commonly, the sign to before it."—Harrison cor. "Thus, it is advisable to write singeing, from the verb to singe, by way of distinction from singing, the participle of the verb to sing."—Id. "Many verbs form both the preterit tense and the preterit participle irregularly."—Id. "Much must be left to every one's taste and judgement."—Id. "Verses of different lengths, intermixed, form a Pindaric poem."—Priestley cor. "He'll surprise you."—Frost cor. "Unequalled archer! why was this concealed?"—Knowles. "So gayly curl the waves before each dashing prow."—Byron cor. "When is a diphthong called a proper diphthong?"—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "How many Esses would the word then end with? Three; for it would be goodness's."—Id. "Qu. What is a triphthong? Ans. A triphthong is a coalition of three vowels in one syllable."—Bacon cor. "The verb, noun, or pronoun, is referred to the preceding terms taken separately."—Murray. "The cubic foot of matter which occupies the centre of the globe."—Cardell cor. "The wine imbibes oxygen, or the acidifying principle, from the air."—Id. "Charcoal, sulphur, and nitre, make gunpowder."—Id. "It would be readily understood, that the thing so labelled was a bottle of Madeira wine."—Id. "They went their ways, one to his farm, an other to his merchandise."—Matt., xxii, 5. "A diphthong is the union of two vowels, both in one syllable."—Russell cor. "The professors of the Mohammedan religion are called Mussulmans."—Maltby cor. "This shows that let is not a mere sign of the imperative mood, but a real verb."—Id. "Those preterits and participles which are first mentioned in the list, seem to be the most eligible."—Murray's Gram., p. 107; Fisk's, 81; Ingersoll's, 103. "Monosyllables, for the most part, are compared by er and est, and dissyllables, by more and most."—Murray's Gram., p. 47. "This termination, added to a noun or an adjective, changes it into a verb: as, modern, to modernize; a symbol, to symbolize."—Churchill cor. "An Abridgement of Murray's Grammar, with additions from Webster, Ash, Tooke, and others."—Maltby's Gram., p. 2. "For the sake of occupying the room more advantageously, the subject of Orthography is merely glanced at."—Nutting cor. "So contended the accusers of Galileo."—O. B. Peirce cor. Murray says, "They were travelling post when he met them.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 69. “They fulfill the only purposes for which they were designed.”—Peirce cor.—See Webster’s Dict. “On the fulfillment of the event.”—Peirce, right. “Fullness consists in expressing every idea.”—Id. “Consistently with fullness and perspicuity.”—Peirce cor. “The word veriest is a regular adjective; as, ‘He is the veriest fool on earth.’”—Wright cor. “The sound will recall the idea of the object.”—Hiley cor. “Formed for great enterprises.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 113. “The most important rules and definitions are printed in large type, Italicized.”—Hart cor. “HAMLETED, a., accustomed to a hamlet, countrified.”—Webster, and Worcester. “Singular, spoonful, cupful, coachful, handful; plural, spoonfuls, cupfuls, coachfuls, handfuls.”—Worcester’s Universal and Critical Dictionary.

Page 1672

“Between superlatives and following names,
Of, by grammatic right, a station claims.”—Brightland cor.

THE KEY.—PART II.—ETYMOLOGY.

CHAPTER I.—PARTS OF SPEECH.

The first chapter of Etymology, as it exhibits only the distribution of words into the ten Parts of Speech, contains no false grammar for correction. And it may be here observed, that as mistakes concerning the forms, classes, or modifications of words, are chiefly to be found in sentences, rather than in any separate exhibition of the terms; the quotations of this kind, with which I have illustrated the principles of etymology, are many of them such as might perhaps with more propriety be denominated false syntax. But, having examples enough at hand to show the ignorance and carelessness of authors in every part of grammar, I have thought it most advisable, so to distribute them as to leave no part destitute of this most impressive kind of illustration. The examples exhibited as false etymology, are as distinct from those which are called false syntax, as the nature of the case will admit.

CHAPTER II.—ARTICLES.

CORRECTIONS RESPECTING A, AN, AND THE.

LESSON I.—ARTICLES ADAPTED.

“Honour is a useful distinction in life.”—Milnes cor. “No writer, therefore, ought to foment a humour of innovation.”—Jamieson cor. “Conjunctions [generally] require a situation between the things of which they form a union.”—Id. “Nothing is more easy than to mistake a u for an a.”—Tooke cor. “From making so ill a use of our innocent expressions.”—Penn cor. “To grant thee a heavenly and incorruptible crown of glory.”—Sewel

Page 1673

cor. "It in no wise follows, that such a one was able to predict."—Id. "With a harmless patience, they have borne most heavy oppressions."—Id. "My attendance was to make me a happier man."—Spect. cor. "On the wonderful nature of a human mind."—Id. "I have got a hussy of a maid, who is most craftily given to this."—Id. "Argus is said to have had a hundred eyes, some of which were always awake."—Stories cor. "Centiped, having a hundred feet; centennial, consisting of a hundred years."—Town cor. "No good man, he thought, could be a heretic."—Gilpin cor. "As, a Christian, an infidel, a heathen."—Ash cor. "Of two or more words, usually joined by a hyphen."—Blair cor. "We may consider the whole space of a hundred years as time present."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 138. "In guarding against such a use of meats and drinks."—Ash cor. "Worship is a homage due from man to his Creator."—Monitor cor. "Then a eulogium on the deceased was pronounced."—Grimshaw cor. "But for Adam there was not found a help meet for him."—Bible cor. "My days are consumed like smoke, and my bones are burned as a hearth."—Id. "A foreigner and a hired servant shall not eat thereof."—Id. "The hill of God is as the hill of Bashan; a high hill, as the hill of Bashan."—Id. "But I do declare it to have been a holy offering, and such a one too as was to be once for all."—Penn cor. "A hope that does not make ashamed those that have it."—Barclay cor. "Where there is not a unity, we may exercise true charity."—Id. "Tell me, if in any of these such a union can be found?"—Dr. Brown cor.

"Such holy drops her tresses steeped, Though 'twas a hero's eye that weeped."—Sir W. Scott cor.

LESSON II.—ARTICLES INSERTED.

"This veil of flesh parts the visible and the invisible world."—Sherlock cor. "The copulative and the disjunctive conjunctions operate differently on the verb."—L. Murray cor. "Every combination of a preposition and an article with the noun."—Id. "Either signifies, 'the one or the other:' neither imports, 'not either;' that is, 'not the one nor the other.'"—Id. "A noun of multitude may have a pronoun or a verb agreeing with it, either of the singular number or of the plural."—Bucke cor. "The principal copulative conjunctions are, and, as, both, because, for, if, that, then, since."—Id. "The two real genders are the masculine and the feminine."—Id. "In which a mute and a liquid are represented by the same character, th."—Gardiner cor. "They said, John the Baptist hath sent us unto thee."—Bible cor. "They indeed remember the names of an abundance of places."—Spect. cor. "Which created a great dispute between the young and the old men."—Goldsmith cor. "Then shall be read the Apostles' or the Nicene Creed."—Com. Prayer cor. "The rules concerning the perfect tenses and the supines of verbs are Lily's."—K. Henry's Gr. cor. "It was read by the high and the low, the learned and the illiterate."—Dr. Johnson cor. "Most commonly, both the pronoun and the verb are understood."—Buchanan cor. "To signify the thick and the slender enunciation of tone."—Knight cor. "The difference between a palatial and a guttural aspirate is very small."—Id. "Leaving it to waver between the figurative and the literal sense."—Jamieson cor. "Whatever verb will not admit of both an active and a passive signification."—Alex. Murray cor. "The is often set before adverbs in the comparative or the superlative degree."—Id. and Kirkham cor. "Lest any should fear the effect of such a change, upon the present or the succeeding age of writers."—Fowle cor. "In all these measures, the accents are to be placed on the even syllables; and every line is, in general, the more melodious, as this rule is the more strictly observed."—L. Murray et al. cor. "How many numbers do nouns appear to have? Two: the singular and the plural."—R. C. Smith cor. "How many persons? Three; the first, the second, and the third."—Id. "How many cases? Three; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective."—Id.

Page 1674

"Ah! what avails it me, the flocks to keep,
Who lost my heart while I preserv'd the sheep:"—or, "my sheep."

LESSON III.—ARTICLES OMITTED.

"The negroes are all descendants of Africans."—Morse cor. "Sybarite was applied as a term of reproach to a man of dissolute manners."—Id. "The original signification of knave was boy."—Webster cor. "The meaning of these will be explained, for greater clearness and precision."—Bucke cor. "What sort of noun is man? A noun substantive, common."—Buchanan cor. "Is what ever used as three kinds of pronoun?"—Kirkham's Question cor. [Answer: "No; as a pronoun, it is either relative or interrogative."—G. Brown.] "They delighted in having done it, as well as in the doing of it."—R. Johnson cor. "Both parts of this rule are exemplified in the following sentences."—Murray cor. "He has taught them to hope for an other and better world."—Knapp cor. "It was itself only preparatory to a future, better, and perfect revelation.”—Keith cor. “Es then makes an other and distinct syllable.”—Brightland cor. “The eternal clamours of a selfish and factious people.”—Dr. Brown cor. “To those whose taste in elocution is but little cultivated.”—Kirkham cor. “They considered they had but a sort of gourd to rejoice in.”—Bennet cor. “Now there was but one such bough, in a spacious and shady grove.”—Bacon cor. “Now the absurdity of this latter supposition will go a great way towards making a man easy.”—Collier cor. “This is true of mathematics, with which taste has but little to do.”—Todd cor. “To stand prompter to a pausing yet ready comprehension.”—Rush cor. “Such an obedience as the yoked and tortured negro is compelled to yield to the whip of the overseer.”—Chalmers cor. “For the gratification of a momentary and unholy desire.”—Wayland cor. “The body is slenderly put together; the mind, a rambling sort of thing.”—Collier cor. “The only nominative to the verb, is officer.”—Murray cor. “And though in general it ought to be admitted, &c.”—Blair cor. “Philosophical writing admits of a polished, neat, and elegant style.”—Id. “But notwithstanding this defect, Thomson is a strong and beautiful describer.”—Id. “So should he be sure to be ransomed, and many poor men’s lives should be saved.”—Shak. cor.

Page 1675

“Who felt the wrong, or feared it, took alarm, Appealed to law, and Justice lent her arm.”—Pope cor.

LESSON IV.—ARTICLES CHANGED.

“To enable us to avoid too frequent a repetition of the same word.”—Bucke cor. “The former is commonly acquired in a third part of the time.”—Burn cor. “Sometimes an adjective becomes a substantive; and, like other substantives, it may have an adjective relating to it: as, ‘The chief good.’”—L. Murray cor. “An articulate sound is a sound of the human voice, formed by the organs of speech.”—Id. “A tense is a distinction of time: there are six tenses.”—Maunder cor. “In this case, an ellipsis of the last article would be improper.”—L. Hurray cor. “Contrast always has the effect to make each of the contrasted objects appear in a stronger light.”—Id. et al. “These remarks may serve to show the great importance of a proper use of the articles.”—Lowth et al. cor. “‘Archbishop Tillotson,’ says the author of a history of England, ‘died in this year.’”—Dr. Blair cor. “Pronouns are used in stead of substantives, to prevent too frequent a repetition of them.”—A. Murray cor.

Page 1676

“THAT, as a relative, seems to be introduced to prevent too frequent a repetition of WHO and WHICH.”—Id. “A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun, to prevent too frequent a repetition of it.”—L. Murray cor. “THAT is often used as a relative, to prevent too frequent a repetition of WHO and WHICH.”—Id. et al. cor. “His knees smote one against the other.”—Logan cor. “They stand now on one foot, then on the other.”—W. Walker cor. “The Lord watch between thee and me, when we are absent one from the other.”—Bible cor. “Some have enumerated ten parts of speech, making the participle a distinct part.”—L. Murray cor. “Nemesis rides upon a hart because the hart is a most lively creature.”—Bacon cor. “The transition of the voice from one vowel of the diphthong to the other.”—Dr. Wilson cor. “So difficult it is, to separate these two things one from the other.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Without a material breach of any rule.”—Id. “The great source of looseness of style, in opposition to precision, is an injudicious use of what are termed synonymous words.”—Blair cor.; also Murray. “Sometimes one article is improperly used for the other.”—Sanborn cor.

“Satire of sense, alas! can Sporus feel?
Who breaks a butterfly upon the wheel?”—Pope cor.

LESSON V.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

“He hath no delight in the strength of a horse.”—Maturin cor. “The head of it would be a universal monarch.”—Butler cor. “Here they confound the material and the formal object of faith.”—Barclay cor. “The Irish [Celtic] and the Scottish Celtic are one language; the Welsh, the Cornish, and the Armorican, are an other.”—Dr. Murray cor. “In a uniform and perspicuous manner.”—Id. “SCRIPTURE, n. Appropriately, and by way of distinction, the books of the Old and the New Testament; the Bible.”—Webster cor. “In two separate volumes, entitled, ‘The Old and New Testaments.’”—Wayland cor. “The Scriptures of the Old and the New Testament, contain a revelation from God.”—Id. “Q has always a u after it; which, in words of French origin, is not sounded.”—Wilson cor. “What should we say of such a one? that he is regenerate? No.”—Hopkins cor. “Some grammarians subdivide the vowels into simple and compound.”—L. Murray cor. “Emphasis has been divided into the weaker and the stronger emphasis.”—Id. “Emphasis has also been divided into the superior and the inferior emphasis.”—Id. “Pronouns must agree with their antecedents, or the nouns which they represent, in gender, number, and person.”—Merchant cor. “The adverb where is often used improperly, for a relative pronoun and a preposition”: as, “Words where [in which] the h is not silent.”—Murray, p. 31. “The termination ish imports diminution, or a lessening of the quality.”—Merchant cor. “In this train, all their verses proceed: one half of a line always answering to the other.”—Dr. Blair cor. “To a height of prosperity and glory, unknown to any former age.”—L. Murray cor. “Hwilc, who, which, such as, such a one, is declined as follows.”—Gwilt cor. “When a vowel precedes the y, s only is required to form the plural; as, day, days.”—Bucke cor. “He is asked what sort of word each is; whether a primitive, a derivative, or a compound.”—British Gram. cor. “It is obvious, that neither the second, the third, nor the fourth chapter of Matthew, is the first; consequently, there are not ‘four first chapters.’”—Churchill cor. “Some thought, which a writer wants the art to introduce in its proper place.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Groves and meadows are the most pleasing in the spring.”—Id. “The conflict between the carnal and the spiritual mind, is often long.”—Gurney cor. “A Philosophical Inquiry into the Origin of our Ideas of the Sublime and the Beautiful”—Burke cor.

Page 1677

“Silence, my muse! make not these jewels cheap, Exposing to the world too large a heap.”—Waller cor.

CHAPTER III.—NOUNS.

CORRECTIONS IN THE MODIFICATIONS OF NOUNS.

LESSON I.—NUMBERS.

“All the ablest of the Jewish rabbies acknowledge it.”—Wilson cor. “Who has thoroughly imbibed the system of one or other of our Christian rabbies.”—Campbell cor. “The seeming singularities of reason soon wear off.”—Collier cor. “The chiefs and arikies, or priests, have the power of declaring a place or object taboo.”—Balbi cor. “Among the various tribes of this family, are the Pottawatomies, the Sauks and Foxes, or Saukies and Ottogamies.”—Id. “The Shawnees, Kickapoos, Menom’onies, Miamies, and Delawares, are of the same region.”—Id. “The Mohegans and Abenaguies belonged also to this family.”—Id. “One tribe of this family, the Winnebagoes, formerly resided near lake Michigan.”—Id. “The other tribes are the Ioways, the Otoes, the Missouries, the Quapaws.”—Id. “The great Mexican family comprises the Aztecs, the Toltecs, and the Tarascoes.”—Id. “The Mulattoes are born of negro and white parents; the Zamboes, of Indians and Negroes.”—Id. “To have a place among the Alexanders, the Caesars, the Louises, or the Charleses,—the scourges and butchers of their fellow-creatures.”—Burgh cor.” Which was the notion of the Platonic philosophers and the Jewish rabbies.”—Id. “That they should relate to the whole body of *virtuoso*es.”—Cobbeti cor. “What thanks have ye? for sinners also love those that love them.”—Bible cor. “There are five ranks of nobility; dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons.”—Balbi cor. “Acts which were so well known to the two Charleses.”—Payne cor. “Courts-martial are held in all parts, for the trial of the blacks.”—Observer cor. “It becomes a common noun, and may have the plural number; as, the two Davids, the two Scipios, the two Pompeys.”—Staniford cor. “The food of the rattlesnake is birds, squirrels, hares, rats, and reptiles.”—Balbi cor. “And let fowls multiply in the earth.”—Bible cor. “Then we reached the hillside, where eight buffaloes were grazing.”—Martineau cor. “CORSET, n. a bodice for a woman.”—Worcester cor. “As, the Bees, the Cees, the Double-ues.”—Peirce cor. “Simplicity is the mean between ostentation and rusticity.”—Pope cor. “You have disguised yourselves like tipstuffs.”—Gil Bias cor. “But who, that has any taste, can endure the incessant quick returns of the alsoes, and the likewises, and the moreovers, and the howevers, and the notwithstandings?”—Campbell cor.

Page 1678

“Sometimes, in mutual sly disguise,
Let ays seem noes, and noes seem ays.”—Gay cor.

LESSON II.—CASES.

“For whose name’s sake, I have been made willing.”—Penn cor. “Be governed by your conscience, and never ask any body’s leave to be honest.”—Collier cor. “To overlook nobody’s merit or misbehaviour.”—Id. “And Hector at last fights his way to the stern of Ajax’s ship.”—Coleridge cor. “Nothing is lazier, than to keep one’s eye upon words without heeding their meaning.”—Museum cor. “Sir William Jones’s division of the day.”—Id. “I need only refer here to Voss’s excellent account of it.”—Id. “The beginning of Stesichorus’s palinode has been preserved.”—Id. “Though we have Tibullus’s elegies, there is not a word in them about Glyc~era.”—Id. “That Horace was at Thaliarchus’s country-house.”—Id. “That Sisyphus’s foot-tub should have been still in existence.”—Id. “How everything went on in Horace’s closet, and Mecenas’s antechamber.”—Id. “Who, for elegant brevity’s sake, put a participle for a verb.”—W. Walker cor.

Page 1679

"The country's liberty being oppressed, we have no more to hope."—Id. "A brief but true account of this people's principles."—Barclay cor. "As, The Church's peace, or, The peace of the Church; Virgil's AEneid, or, The AEneid of Virgil."—Brit. Gram. cor. "As, Virgil's AEneid, for, The AEneid of Virgil; The Church's peace, for, The peace of the Church."—Buchanan cor. "Which, with Hubner's Compend, and Well's Geographia Classica, will be sufficient."—Burgh cor. "Witness Homer's speaking horses, scolding goddesses, and Jupiter enchanted with Venus's girdle."—Id. "Dr. Watts's Logic may with success be read to them and commented on."—Id. "Potter's Greek, and Kennet's Roman Antiquities, Strauchius's and Helvicus's Chronology."—Id. "SING. Alice's friends, Felix's property; PLUR. The Alices's friends, the Felices's property."—Peirce cor. "Such as Bacchus's company—at Bacchus's festivals."—Ainsworth cor. "Burns's inimitable Tam o' Shanter turns entirely upon such a circumstance."—Scott cor. "Nominative, men; Genitive, [or Possessive,] men's; Objective, men."—Cutler cor. "Men's happiness or misery is mostly of their own making."—Locke cor. "That your son's clothes be never made strait, especially about the breast."—Id. "Children's minds are narrow and weak."—Id. "I would not have little children much tormented about punctilios, or niceties of breeding."—Id. "To fill his head with suitable ideas."—Id. "The Burgusdisciuses and the Scheiblers did not swarm in those days, as they do now."—Id. "To see the various ways of dressing—a calf's head!"—Shenstone cor.

"He puts it on, and for decorum's sake
Can wear it e'en as gracefully as she."—Cowper cor.

LESSON III.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"Simon the wizard was of this religion too"—Bunyan cor. "MAMMODIES, n. Coarse, plain, India muslins."—Webster cor. "Go on from single persons to families, that of the Pompeys for instance."—Collier cor. "By which the ancients were not able to account for phenomena."—Bailey cor. "After this I married a woman who had lived at Crete, but a Jewess by birth."—Josephus cor. "The very heathens are inexcusable for not worshiping him."—Todd cor. "Such poems as Camoens's Lusiad, Voltaire's Henrinde, &c."—Dr. Blair cor. "My learned correspondent writes a word in defence of large scarfs."—Sped. cor. "The forerunners of an apoplexy are dullness, vertigoes, tremblings."—Arbuthnot cor. "Vertigo, [in Latin,] changes the o into _~in=es_, making the plural vertig~in=es:” [not so, in English.]—Churchill cor. “Noctambulo, [in Latin,] changes the o into _=on=es_, making the plural noctambul=on=es:” [not so in English.]—Id. “What shall we say of noctambuloes? It is the regular English plural.”—G. Brown. “In the curious fretwork of rocks and grottoes.”—Blair cor. “Wharf makes the plural wharfs, according to the best usage.”—G. Brown. “A few cents’ worth of macaroni supplies all their wants.”—Balbi cor. “C sounds hard, like k, at the end of a word or syllable.”—Blair cor. “By which the *virtuoso*es try The magnitude of every lie.”—Butler cor. “*Quarto*es, *octavo*es, shape the lessening pyre.”—Pope cor. “Perching within square royal roofs”—Sidney cor. “Similes should, even in poetry, be used with moderation.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Similes should never be taken from low or mean objects.”—Id. “It were certainly better to say, ‘The House of Lords,’ than, ‘The Lords’ House.’”—Murray cor. “Read your answers. Units’ figure? ‘Five.’ Tens’? ‘Six.’ Hundreds’? ‘Seven.’”—Abbott cor. “Alexander conquered Darius’s army.”—Kirkham cor. “Three days’ time was requisite, to prepare matters.”—Dr. Brown cor. “So we say, that Cicero’s style and Sallust’s were not one; nor Caesar’s and Livy’s; nor Homer’s and Hesiod’s; nor Herodotus’s and Thucydides’s; nor Euripides’s and Aristophanes’s; nor Erasmus’s and Budaeus’s.”—Puttenham cor. “LEX (i.e., legs, a law.) is no other than our ancestors’ past participle loeg, laid down”—Tooke cor. “Achaia’s sons at Ilium slain for the Atridae’s sake.”—Cowper cor. “The corpses of her senate manure the fields of Thessaly.”—Addison cor.

Page 1680

“Poisoning, without regard of fame or fear;
And spotted corpses load the frequent bier.”—Dryden cor.

CHAPTER IV.—ADJECTIVES.

CORRECTIONS IN THE FORMS OF COMPARISON, &c.

LESSON I.—DEGREES.

“I have the real excuse of the most honest sort of bankrupts.”—Cowley corrected. “The most honourable part of talk, is, to give the occasion.”—Bacon cor. “To give him one of the most modest of his own proverbs.”—Barclay cor. “Our language is now, certainly, more proper and more natural, than it was formerly.”—Burnet cor. “Which will be of the greatest and most frequent use to him in the world.”—Locke cor. “The same is notified in the most considerable places in the diocese.”—Whitgift cor. "But it was the most dreadful sight that ever I saw."—Bunyan cor. "Four of the oldest, soberest, and discreetest of the brethren, chosen for the occasion, shall regulate it."—Locke cor. "Nor can there be any clear understanding of any Roman author, especially of more ancient time, without this skill."—W. Walker cor. "Far the most learned of the Greeks."—Id. "The more learned thou art, the humbler be thou."—Id. "He is none of the best, or most honest."—Id. "The most proper methods of communicating it to others."—Burn cor. "What heaven's great King hath mightiest to send against us."—Milton cor. "Benedict is not the most unhopeful husband that I know."—Shakspeare cor. "That he should immediately do all the meanest and most trifling things himself."—Ray cor. "I shall be named among the most renowned of women."—Milton cor. "Those have the most inventive heads for all purposes."—Ascham cor. "The more wretched are the contemnners of all helps."—B. Johnson cor. "I will now deliver a few of the most proper and most natural considerations that belong to this piece."—Wotton cor. "The most mortal poisons practised by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man."—Bacon cor. "He so won upon him, that he rendered him one of the most faithful and most affectionate allies the Medes ever had."—Rollin cor. "'You see before you,' says he to him, 'the most devoted servant, and the most faithful ally, you ever had.'"—Id. "I chose the most flourishing tree in all the park."—Cowley cor. "Which he placed, I think, some centuries earlier than did Julius Africanus afterwards."—Bolingbroke cor. "The Tiber, the most noted river of Italy."—Littleton cor.

Page 1681

"To farthest shores th' ambrosial spirit flies."—Pope.

—"That what she wills to do or say,
Seems wisest, worthiest, discreetest, best."—Milton cor.

LESSON II.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"During the first three or four years of its existence."—Taylor cor. "To the first of these divisions, my last ten lectures have been devoted."—Adams cor. "There are, in the twenty-four states, not fewer than sixty thousand common schools."—J. O. Taylor cor. "I know of nothing which gives teachers more trouble, than this want of firmness."—Id. "I know of nothing else that throws such darkness over the line which separates right from wrong."—Id. "None need this purity and this simplicity of language and thought, more than does the instructor of a common school."—Id.

Page 1682

"I know of no other periodical that is so valuable to the teacher, as the Annals of Education."—Id. "Are not these schools of the highest importance? Should not every individual feel a deep interest in their character and condition?"—Id. "If instruction were made a liberal profession, teachers would feel more sympathy for one an other."—Id. "Nothing is more interesting to children, than novelty, or change."—Id. "I know of no other labour which affords so much happiness as the teacher's."—Id. "Their school exercises are the most pleasant and agreeable duties, that they engage in."—Id. "I know of no exercise more beneficial to the pupil than that of drawing maps."—Id. "I know of nothing in which our district schools are more defective, than they are in the art of teaching grammar."—Id. "I know of no other branch of knowledge, so easily acquired as history."—Id. "I know of no other school exercise for which pupils usually have such an abhorrence, as for composition."—Id. "There is nothing belonging to our fellow-men, which we should respect more sacredly than their good name."—Id. "Surely, never any other creature was so unbred as that odious man."—Congreve cor. "In the dialogue between the mariner and the shade of the deceased."—Phil. Museum cor. "These master-works would still be less excellent and finished."—Id. "Every attempt to staylace the language of polished conversation, renders our phraseology inelegant and clumsy."—Id. "Here are a few of the most unpleasant words that ever blotted paper."—Shakespeare cor. "With the most easy and obliging transitions."—Broome cor. "Fear is, of all affections, the least apt to admit any conference with reason."—Hooker cor. "Most chymists think glass a body less destructible than gold itself."—Boyle cor. "To part with unhacked edges, and bear back our barge undinted."—Shak. cor. "Erasmus, who was an unbigoted Roman Catholic, was transported with this passage."—Addison cor. "There are no fewer than five words, with any of which the sentence might have terminated."—Campbell cor. "The ones preach Christ of contention; but the others, of love." Or, "The one party preach," &c.—Bible cor. "Hence we find less discontent and fewer heart-burnings, than where the subjects are unequally burdened."—H. Home, Ld. Kames, cor.

"The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field."

—Milton, P. L., B. ix, l. 86.

"Thee, Serpent, subtlest beast of all the field,
I knew, but not with human voice indued."

—Id., P. L., B. ix, l. 560.

Page 1683

"How much more grievous would our lives appear.
To reach th' eight-hundredth, than the eightieth year!"
—Denham cor.

LESSON III.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"Brutus engaged with Aruns; and so fierce was the attack, that they pierced each other at the same time."—Lempriere cor. "Her two brothers were, one after the other, turned into stone."—Kames cor. "Nouns are often used as adjectives; as, A gold ring, a silver cup."—Lennie cor. "Fire and water destroy each other"—Wanostrocht cor. "Two negatives, in English, destroy each other, or are equivalent to an affirmative."—Lowth, Murray, et al. cor. "Two negatives destroy each other, and are generally equivalent to an affirmative."—Kirkham and Felton cor. "Two negatives destroy each other, and make an affirmative."—Flint cor. "Two negatives destroy each other, being equivalent to an affirmative."—Frost cor. "Two objects, resembling each other, are presented to the imagination."—Parker cor. "Mankind, in order to hold converse with one an other, found it necessary to give names to objects."—Kirkham cor. "Derivative words are formed from their primitives in various ways."—Cooper cor. "There are many different ways of deriving words one from an other."—Murray cor. "When several verbs have a joint construction in a sentence, the auxiliary is usually expressed with the first only."—Frost cor. "Two or more verbs, having the same nominative case, and coming in immediate succession, are also separated by the comma."—Murray et al. cor. "Two or more adverbs, coming in immediate succession, must be separated by the comma."—lidem. "If, however, the two members are very closely connected, the comma is unnecessary."—lidem. "Gratitude, when exerted towards others, naturally produces a very pleasing sensation in the mind of a generous man."—L. Murray cor. "Several verbs in the infinitive mood, coming in succession, and having a common dependence, are also divided by commas."—Comly cor. "The several words of which it consists, have so near a relation one to an other."—Murray et al. cor. "When two or more verbs, or two or more adverbs,[528] occur in immediate succession, and have a common dependence, they must be separated by the comma."—Comly cor. "One noun frequently follows an other, both meaning the same thing."—Sanborn cor. "And these two tenses may thus answer each other."—R. Johnson cor. "Or some other relation which two objects bear to each other."—Jamieson cor. "That the heathens tolerated one an other is allowed.”—A. Fuller cor. “And yet these two persons love each other tenderly.”—E. Reader cor. “In the six hundred and first year.”—Bible cor. “Nor is this arguing of his, any thing but a reiterated clamour.”—Barclay cor. “In several of them the inward life of Christianity is to be found.”—Id. “Though Alvarez, Despauter, and others, do not allow it to be plural.”—R. Johnson cor. “Even the most dissipated and shameless blushed at the sight.”—Lempriere cor. “We feel a higher satisfaction in surveying the life of animals, than [in contemplating] that of vegetables.”—Jamieson cor. “But this man is so full-fraught with malice.”—Barclay cor. “That I suggest some things concerning the most proper means.”—Dr. Blair cor.

Page 1684

“So, hand in hand, they passed, the loveliest pair
That ever yet in love’s embraces met.”—Milton cor.

“Aim at supremacy; without such height,
Will be for thee no sitting, or not long.”—Id. cor.

CHAPTER V.—PRONOUNS.

CORRECTIONS IN THE FORMS AND USES OF PRONOUNS.

LESSON I.—RELATIVES.

“While we attend to this pause, every appearance of singsong must be carefully avoided.”—Murray cor. “For thou shalt go to all to whom I shall send thee.”—Bible cor. “Ah! how happy would it have been for me, had I spent in retirement these twenty-three years during which I have possessed my kingdom.”—Sanborn cor. “In the same manner in which relative pronouns and their antecedents are usually parsed.”—Id. “Parse or explain all the other nouns contained in the examples, after the very manner of the word which is parsed for you.”—Id. “The passive verb will always have the person and number that belong to the verb be, of which it is in part composed.”—Id. “You have been taught that a verb must always agree in person and number with its subject or nominative.”—Id. “A relative pronoun, also, must always agree in person, in number, and even in gender, with its antecedent.”—Id. “The answer always agrees in case with the pronoun which asks the question.”—Id. “One sometimes represents an antecedent noun, in the definite manner of a personal pronoun.” [529]—Id. “The mind, being carried forward to the time at which the event is to happen, easily conceives it to be present.” “SAVE and SAVING are [seldom to be] parsed in the manner in which EXCEPT and EXCEPTING are [commonly explained].”—Id. “Adverbs qualify verbs, or modify their meaning, as adjectives qualify nouns [and describe things.]”—Id. “The third person singular of verbs, terminates in s or es, like the plural number of nouns.”—Id. “He saith further: that, ‘The apostles did not baptize anew such persons as had been baptized with the baptism of John.’”—Barclay cor. “For we who live,”—or, “For we that are alive, are always delivered unto death for Jesus’ sake.”—Bible cor. “For they who believe in God, must be careful to maintain good works.”—Barclay cor. “Nor yet of those who teach things that they ought not, for filthy lucre’s sake.”—Id. “So as to hold such bound in heaven as they bind on earth, and such loosed in heaven as they loose on earth.”—Id. “Now, if it be an evil, to do any thing out of strife; then such things as are seen so to be done, are they not to be avoided and forsaken?”—Id. “All such as do not satisfy themselves with the superfices of religion.”—Id. “And he is the same in substance, that he was upon earth,—the same in spirit, soul, and body.”—Id. “And those that do not thus, are such, as the Church of Rome can have no charity for.” Or: “And those that do not thus, are persons toward whom the Church of Rome can have no charity.”—Id. “Before his book, he places a great list of what he accounts the blasphemous assertions of the Quakers.”—Id. “And this is what he should have proved.”—Id. “Three of whom were at that time actual students of philosophy in the university.”—Id. “Therefore it is not lawful for any whomsoever * * * to force the consciences of others.”—Id. “Why were the former days better than these?”—Bible cor. “In the same manner in which”—or, better, “Just as—the term my depends on the name books.”—Peirce cor. “Just as the term HOUSE depends on the [preposition to, understood after the adjective] NEAR.”—Id. “James died on the day on which Henry returned.”—Id.

Page 1685

LESSON II.—DECLENSIONS.

“OTHER makes the plural OTHERS, when it is found without its substantive.”—Priestley cor. “But his, hers, ours, yours, and theirs, have evidently the form of the possessive case.”—Lowth cor. “To the Saxon possessive cases, hire, ure, eower, hira, (that is, hers, ours, yours, theirs,) we have added the s, the characteristic of the possessive case of nouns.”—Id. “Upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours.”—Friends cor. “In this place, His is clearly preferable either to Her or to Its.”—Harris cor. “That roguish leer of yours makes a pretty woman's heart ache."—Addison cor. "Lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block."—Bible cor. "First person: Sing. I, my or mine, me; Plur. we, our or ours, us."—Wilbur and Livingston cor. "Second person: Sing, thou, thy or thine, thee; Plur. ye or you, your or yours, you."—Id. "Third person: Sing, she, her or hers, her; Plur. they, their or theirs, them."—Id. "So shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours."—ALGER, BRUCE, ET AL.; Jer., v, 19. "Second person, Singular: Nom. thou, Poss. thy or thine, Obj. thee."—Frost cor. "Second person, Dual; Nom. Gyt, ye two; Gen. Incer, of you two; Dat. Inc, incrum, to you two; Acc. Inc, you two; Voc. Eala inc, O ye two; Abl. Inc, incrum, from you two."—Gwilt cor. "Second person, Plural: Nom. Ge, ye; Gen. Eower, of you; Dat. Eow, to you; Acc. Eow, you; Voc Eala ge, O ye; Abl. Eow, from you."—Id. "These words are, mine, thine, his, hers, ours, yours, theirs, and whose."—Cardell cor. "This house is ours, and that is yours. Theirs is very commodious."—Murray's Gram., p. 55. "And they shall eat up thy harvest, and thy bread; they shall eat up thy flocks and thy herds."—Bible cor. "Whoever and Whichever are thus declined: Sing. Nom. whoever, Poss. whosever, Obj. whomever; Plur. Nom. whoever, Poss. whosever, Obj. whomever. Sing. Nom. whichever, Poss. (wanting,) Obj. whichever; Plur. Nom. whichever, Poss. (wanting,) Obj. whichever."—Cooper cor. "The compound personal pronouns are thus declined: Sing. Nom. myself, Poss. (wanting,) Obj. myself; Plur. Nom. ourselves, Poss. (wanting,) Obj. ourselves. Sing. Nom. thyself or yourself, Poss. (wanting,) Obj. thyself, &c."—Perley cor. "Every one of us, each for himself, laboured to recover him."—Sidney cor. "Unless when ideas of their opposites manifestly suggest themselves."—Wright cor. "It not only exists in time, but is itself time." "A position which the action itself will palpably confute."—Id. "A difficulty sometimes presents itself."—Id. "They are sometimes explanations in themselves."—Id. "Ours, Yours, Theirs, Hers, Its."—Barrett cor.

Page 1686

"Theirs, the wild chase of false felicities;
His, the composed possession of the true."
—Young, N. Th., N. viii, l. 1100.

LESSON III.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

Page 1687

"It is the boast of Americans, without distinction of parties, that their government is the most free and perfect that exists on the earth."—Dr. Allen cor. "Children that are dutiful to their parents, enjoy great prosperity."—Sanborn cor. "The scholar that improves his time, sets an example worthy of imitation."—Id. "Nouns and pronouns that signify the same person, place, or thing, agree in case."—Cooper cor. "An interrogative sentence is one that asks a question."—Id. "In the use of words and phrases that in point of time relate to each other, the order of time should be duly regarded."—Id. "The same observations that show the effect of the article upon the participle, appear to be applicable [also] to the pronoun and participle."—Murray cor. "The reason why they have not the same use of them in reading, may be traced to the very defective and erroneous method in which the art of reading is taught."—Id. "Ever since reason began to exert her powers, thought, during our waking hours, has been active in every breast, without a moment's suspension or pause."—Id. et al. cor. "In speaking of such as greatly delight in the same."—Pope cor. "Except him to whom the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live."—Bible cor. "But the same day on which Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all."—Bible cor. "In the next place, I will explain several constructions of nouns and pronouns, that have not yet come under our notice."—Kirkham cor. "Three natural distinctions of time are all that can exist."—Hall cor. "We have exhibited such only as are obviously distinct; and these seem to be sufficient, and not more than sufficient."—Murray et al. cor. "The parenthesis encloses a phrase or clause that may be omitted without materially injuring the connexion of the other members."—Hall cor. "Consonants are letters that cannot be sounded without the aid of a vowel."—Bucke cor. "Words are not mere sounds, but sounds that convey a meaning to the mind."—Id. "Nature's postures are always easy; and, what is more, nothing but your own will can put you out of them."—Collier cor. "Therefore ought we to examine our own selves, and prove our own selves."—Barclay cor. "Certainly, it had been much more natural, to have divided Active verbs into Immanent, or those whose action is terminated within itself, and Transient, or those whose action is terminated in something without itself."—R. Johnson cor. "This is such an advantage as no other lexicon will afford."—Dr. Taylor cor. "For these reasons, such liberties are taken in the Hebrew tongue, with those words which are of the most general and frequent use."—Pike cor. "While we object to the laws which the antiquarian in language would impose on us, we must also enter our protest against those authors who are too fond of innovations."—L. Murray cor.

Page 1688

CHAPTER VI.—VERBS.

CORRECTIONS IN THE FORMS OF VERBS.

LESSON I.—PRETERITS.

"In speaking on a matter which touched their hearts."—Phil. Museum cor. "Though Horace published it some time after."—Id. "The best subjects with which the Greek models furnished him."—Id. "Since he attached no thought to it."—Id. "By what slow steps the Greek alphabet reached its perfection."—Id. "Because Goethe wished to erect an affectionate memorial."—Id. "But the Saxon forms soon dropped away."—Id. "It speaks of all the towns that perished in the age of Philip."—Id. "This enriched the written language with new words."—Id. "He merely furnished his friend with matter for laughter."—Id. "A cloud arose, and stopped the light."—Swift cor. "She slipped spadillo in her breast."—Id. "I guessed the hand."—Id. "The tyrant stripped me to the skin; My skin he flayed, my hair he cropped; At head and foot my body lopped."—Id. "I see the greatest owls in you, That ever screeched or ever flew."—Id. "I sat with delight, From morning till night."—Id. "Dick nimbly skipped the gutter."—Id. "In at the pantry door this morn I slipped."—Id. "Nobody living ever touched me, but you."—W. Walker cor. "Present, I ship; Preterit, I shipped; Perf. Participle, shipped."—A. Murray cor. "Then the king arose, and tore his garments."—Bible cor. "When he lifted up his foot, he knew not where he should set it next."—Bunyan cor. "He lifted up his spear against eight hundred, whom he slew at one time."—Bible cor. "Upon this chaos rode the distressed ark."—Burnet cor. "On whose foolish honesty, my practices rode easy."—Shakspeare cor. "That form of the first or primogenial Earth, which rose immediately out of chaos."—Burnet cor. "Sir, how came it, you have helped to make this rescue?"—Shak. cor. "He swore he would rather lose all his father's images, than that table."—Peacham cor. "When our language dropped its ancient terminations."—Dr. Murray cor. "When themselves they vilified."—Milton cor. "But I chose rather to do thus."—Barclay cor. "When he pleaded (or pled) against the parsons."—Hist. cor. "And he that saw it, bore record." Or: "And he that saw it, bare record."—John, xix, 35. "An irregular verb has one more variation; as, drive, drivest, [driveth,] drives, drove, drovest, driving, driven."—Matt. Harrison cor. "Beside that village, Hannibal pitched his camp."—W. Walker cor. "He fetched it from Tmolus."—Id. "He supped with his morning-gown on."—Id. "There stamped her sacred name."—Barlow cor.

Page 1689

"Fix'd[530] on the view the great discoverer stood;
And thus address'd the messenger of good."—Barlow cor.

LESSON II.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"Three freemen were on trial"—or, "were receiving their trial"—at the date of our last information."—Editor cor. "While the house was building, many of the tribe arrived."—Cox cor. "But a foundation has been laid in Zion, and the church is built—(or, continues to be built—) upon it."—The Friend cor. "And one fourth of the people are receiving education."—E. I. Mag. cor. "The present [tense,] or that [form of the verb] which [expresses what] is now doing."—Beck cor. "A new church, called the Pantheon, is about being completed, in an expensive style."—Thompson cor. "When I last saw him, he had grown considerably."—Murray cor. "I know what a rugged and dangerous path I have got into."—Duncan cor. "You might as well preach ease to one on the rack."—Locke cor. "Thou hast heard me, and hast become my salvation."—Bible cor. "While the Elementary Spelling-Book was preparing (or, was in progress of preparation) for the press."—Cobb cor. "Language has become, in modern times, more correct."—Jamieson cor. "If the plan has been executed in any measure answerable to the author's wishes."—Robbins cor. "The vial of wrath is still pouring out on the seat of the beast."—Christian Ex. cor. "Christianity had become the generally-adopted and established religion of the whole Roman Empire."—Gurney cor. "Who wrote before the first century had elapsed."—Id. "The original and analogical form has grown quite obsolete."—Lowth cor. "Their love, and their hatred, and their envy, have perished."—Murray cor. "The poems had got abroad, and were in a great many hands."—Waller cor. "It is more harmonious, as well as more correct, to say, 'The bubble is ready to burst.'"—Cobbett cor. "I drove my suitor from his mad humour of love."—Shak. cor. "Se viriliter expedit."—Cic. "He has played the man."—Walker cor. "Wilt thou kill me, as thou didst the Egyptian yesterday?"—Bible cor. "And we, methought, [or thought I] looked up to him from our hill"—Cowley cor. "I fear thou dost not think so much of the best things as thou ought."—Memoir cor. "When this work was commenced."—Wright cor. "Exercises and a Key to this work are about being prepared."—Id. "James is loved by John."—Id. "Or that which is exhibited."—Id. "He was smitten."—Id.

Page 1690

"In the passive voice we say, 'I am loved.'"—Id. "Subjunctive Mood: If I be smitten, If thou be smitten, If he be smitten."—Id. "I shall not be able to convince you how superficial the reformation is."—Chalmers cor. "I said to myself, I shall be obliged to expose the folly."—Chazotte cor. "When Clodius, had he meant to return that day to Rome, must have arrived."—J. Q. Adams cor. "That the fact has been done, is doing, or will be done."—Peirce cor. "Am I to be instructed?"—Wright cor. "I choose him."—Id. "John, who respected his father, was obedient to his commands."—Barrett cor.

"The region echoes to the clash of arms."—Beattie cor.

"And sitst on high, and mak'st creation's top Thy footstool; and beholdst below thee—all."—Pollok cor.

"And see if thou canst punish sin and let Mankind go free. Thou failest—be not surprised."—Idem.

LESSON III—MIXED EXAMPLES.

"What follows, might better have been wanting altogether."—Dr. Blair cor. "This member of the sentence might much better have been omitted altogether."—Id. "One or the other of them, therefore, might better have been omitted."—Id. "The whole of this last member of the sentence might better have been dropped."—Id. "In this case, they might much better be omitted."—Id. "He might better have said 'the productions.'"—Id. "The Greeks ascribed the origin of poetry to Orpheus, Linus, and Musaeus."—Id. "It was noticed long ago, that all these fictitious names have the same number of syllables."—Phil. Museum cor. "When I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, I determined to send him."—Bible cor. "I would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God."—Id. "As for such, I wish the Lord would open their eyes." Or, better: "May the Lord open (or, I pray the Lord to open) their eyes."—Barclay cor. "It would have made our passage over the river very difficult."—Walley cor. "We should not have been able to carry our great guns."—Id. "Others would have questioned our prudence, if we had."—Id. "Beware thou be not BECAESARED; i.e., Beware that thou do not dwindle—or, lest thou dwindle—into a mere Caesar."—Harris cor. "Thou raisedst (or, familiarly, thou raised) thy voice to record the stratagems of needy heroes."—Arbuthnot cor. "Life hurries off apace; thine is almost gone already."—Collier cor. "How unfortunate has this accident made me!' cries such a one."—Id. "The muse that soft and sickly woos the ear."—Pollok cor. "A man might better relate himself to a statue."—Bacon cor. "I heard thee say but now, thou liked not that."—Shak. cor. "In my whole course of wooing, thou criedst, (or, familiarly, thou cried,) Indeed!"—Id. "But our ears have grown familiar with 'I have wrote, 'I have drank,' &c., which are altogether as ungrammatical."—Lowth et al. cor. "The court was in session before Sir Roger came"—Addison cor. "She needs—(or, if you please, need,—) be no more with the jaundice possessed"—Swift cor. "Besides, you found fault with our victuals one day when you were here."—Id. "If spirit of other sort, So minded, hath (or has) o'erleaped these earthy bounds."—Milton cor. "It would have been more rational to have forborne this."—Barclay cor. "A student is not master of it till he has seen all these."—Dr. Murray cor. "The said justice shall summon the party."—Brevard cor. "Now what has become of thy former wit and humour?"—Spect. cor. "Young stranger, whither wanderst thou?"—Burns cor. "SUBJ. Pres. If I love, If thou love, If he love. Imp. If I loved, If thou loved, If he loved."—Merchant cor. "SUBJ. If I do not love, If thou do not love, If he do not love."—Id. "If he has committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."—Bible cor. "Subjunctive Mood of the verb to call, second person singular: If thou call, (rarely, If thou do call,) If thou called."—Hiley cor. "Subjunctive Mood of the verb to love, second person singular: If thou love, (rarely, If thou do love,) If thou loved."—Bullions cor. "I was; thou wast; he, she, or it, was: We, you or ye, they, were."—White cor. "I taught, thou taughtest, (familiarly, thou taught,) he taught."—Coar cor. "We say, 'If it rain,' 'Suppose it rain?' 'Lest it rain,' 'Unless it rain.' This manner of speaking is called the SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD."—Weld cor. "He has arrived at what is deemed the age of manhood."—Priestley cor. "He might much better have let it alone."—Tooke cor. "He were better without it. Or: He would be better without it."—Locke cor. "Hadst thou not been by. Or: If thou hadst not been by. Or, in the familiar style: Had not thou been by,"—Shak. cor. "I learned geography. Thou learned arithmetic. He learned grammar."—Fuller cor. "Till the sound has ceased."—Sheridan cor. "Present, die; Preterit, died; Perf. Participle, died."—Six English Grammars corrected.

Page 1691

Page 1692

"Thou bow'dst thy glorious head to none, fear'dst none." Or:—

"Thou bowed thy glorious head to none, feared none."

—Pollok cor.

"Thou lookst upon thy boy as though thou guess'd it."

—Knowles cor.

"As once thou slept, while she to life was formed."

—Milton cor.

"Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was killed?"

—Shak. cor.

"Which might have well become the best of men."

—Idem cor.

CHAPTER VII.—PARTICIPLES.

CORRECTIONS IN THE FORMS OF PARTICIPLES.

LESSON I.—IRREGULARS.

"Many of your readers have mistaken that passage."—Steele cor. "Had not my dog of a steward run away."—Addison cor. "None should be admitted, except he had broken his collarbone thrice."—Id. "We could not know what was written at twenty."—Waller cor. "I have written, thou hast written, he has written; we have written, you have written, they have written."—Ash cor. "As if God had spoken his last words there to his people."—Barclay cor. "I had like to have come in that ship myself."—Observer cor. "Our ships and vessels being driven out of the harbour by a storm."—Hutchinson cor. "He will endeavour to write as the ancient author would have written, had he written in the same language."—Bolingbroke cor. "When his doctrines grew too strong to be shaken by his enemies."—Atterbury cor. "The immortal mind that hath forsaken her mansion."—Milton cor. "Grease that's sweated (or sweat) from the murderer's gibbet, throw into the flame."—Shak. cor. "The court also was chidden (or chid) for allowing such questions to be put."—Stone cor. "He would have spoken."—Milton cor. "Words interwoven (or interweaved) with sighs found out their way."—Id. "Those kings and potentates who have strived (or striven)."—Id. "That even Silence was taken."—Id. "And envious Darkness, ere they could return, had stolen them from me."—Id. "I have chosen this perfect man."—Id. "I shall scarcely think you have swum in a gondola."—Shak. cor. "The fragrant brier was woven (or weaved) between."—Dryden cor. "Then finish what you have begun."—Id. "But now the years a numerous train have run."—Pope cor. "Repeats your verses written (or writ) on glasses.”—Prior cor. “Who by turns have risen.”—Id.

“Which from great authors I have taken.”—Id. “Even there he should have fallen.”—Id.

Page 1693

"The sun has ris'n, and gone to bed.
Just as if Partridge were not dead."—Swift cor.

"And, though no marriage words are spoken,
They part not till the ring is broken."—Swift cor.

LESSON II.—REGULARS.

"When the word is stripped of all the terminations."—Dr. Murray cor. "Forgive him, Tom; his head is cracked."—Swift cor. "For 'tis the sport, to have the engineer hoisted (or hoisted) with his own petar."—Shak. cor. "As great as they are, I was nursed by their mother."—Swift cor. "If he should now be cried down since his change."—Id. "Dipped over head and ears—in debt."—Id. "We see the nation's credit cracked."—Id. "Because they find their pockets picked."—Id. "O what a pleasure mixed with pain!"—Id. "And only with her brother linked."—Id. "Because he ne'er a thought allowed, That might not be confessed."—Id. "My love to Sheelah is more firmly fixed."—Id. "The observations annexed to them will be intelligible."—Phil. Mus. cor. "Those eyes are always fixed on the general principles."—Id. "Laborious conjectures will be banished from our commentaries."—Id. "Tiridates was dethroned, and Phraates was reestablished, in his stead."—Id. "A Roman who was attached to Augustus."—Id. "Nor should I have spoken of it, unless Baxter had talked about two such."—Id. "And the reformers of language have generally rushed on."—Id. "Three centuries and a half had then elapsed since the date,"—Id. "Of such criteria, as has been remarked already, there is an abundance."—Id. "The English have surpassed every other nation in their services."—Id. "The party addressed is next in dignity to the speaker."—Harris cor. "To which we are many times helped."—W. Walker cor. "But for him, I should have looked well enough to myself."—Id. "Why are you vexed, Lady? why do frown?"—Milton cor. "Obtruding false rules pranked in reason's garb."—Id. "But, like David equipped in Saul's armour, it is encumbered and oppressed."—Campbell cor.

"And when their merchants are blown up, and cracked, Whole towns are cast away in storms, and wrecked."—Butler cor.

LESSON III.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

Page 1694

"The lands are held in free and common soccage."—Trumbull cor. "A stroke is drawn under such words."—Cobbett's Gr., 1st Ed. "It is struck even, with a strickle."—W. Walker cor. "Whilst I was wandering, without any care, beyond my bounds."—Id. "When one would do something, unless hindered by something present."—B. Johnson cor. "It is used potentially, but not so as to be rendered by these signs."—Id. "Now who would dote upon things hurried down the stream thus fast?"—Collier cor. "Heaven hath timely tried their growth."—Milton cor. "O! ye mistook, ye should have snatched his wand."—Id. "Of true virgin here distressed."—Id. "So that they have at last come to be substituted in the stead of it."—Barclay cor. "Though ye have lain among the pots."—Bible cor. "And, lo! in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off."—Scott's Bible, and Alger's. "Brutus and Cassius Have ridden, (or rode,) like madmen, through the gates of Rome."—Shak. cor. "He shall be spit upon."—Bible cor. "And are not the countries so overflowed still situated between the tropics?"—Bentley. "Not tricked and frowned as she was wont, But kerchiefed in a comely cloud."—Milton cor. "To satisfy his rigour, Satisfied never."—Id. "With him there crucified."—Id. "Th' earth cumbered, and the wing'd air darked with plumes."—Id. "And now their way to Earth they had descried."—Id. "Not so thick swarmed once the soil Bedropped with blood of Gorgon."—Id. "And in a troubled sea of passion tossed."—Id. "The cause, alas! is quickly guessed."—Swift cor. "The kettle to the top was hoised, or hoisted."—Id. "In chains thy syllables are linked."—Id. "Rather than thus be overtopped, Would you not wish their laurels cropped."—Id. "The HYPHEN, or CONJOINER, is a little line drawn to connect words, or parts of words."—Cobbett cor. "In the other manners of dependence, this general rule is sometimes broken."—R. Johnson cor. "Some intransitive verbs may be rendered transitive by means of a preposition prefixed to them."—Grant cor. "Whoever now should place the accent on the first syllable of Valerius, would set every body a laughing."—J. Walker cor. "Being mocked, scourged, spit upon, and crucified."—Gurney cor.

"For rhyme in Greece or Rome was never known, Till barb'rous hordes those states had overthrown."—Roscommon cor.

"In my own Thames may I be drowned,
If e'er I stoop beneath the crowned." Or thus:—
"In my own Thames may I be drown'd dead,
If e'er I stoop beneath a crown'd head."—Swift cor.

Page 1695

CHAPTER VIII.—ADVERBS.

CORRECTIONS RESPECTING THE FORMS OF ADVERBS.

"We can much more easily form the conception of a fierce combat."—Blair corrected.
"When he was restored agreeably to the treaty, he was a perfect savage."—Webster cor. "How I shall acquit myself suitably to the importance of the trial."—Duncan cor.
"Can any thing show your Holiness how unworthily you treat mankind?"—Spect. cor. "In what other, consistently with reason and common sense, can you go about to explain it to him?"—Lowth cor. "Agreeably to this rule, the short vowel Sheva has two characters."—Wilson cor. "We shall give a remarkably fine example of this figure."—See Blair's Rhet., p. 156. "All of which is most abominably false."—Barclay cor. "He heaped up great riches, but passed his time miserably."—Murray cor. "He is never satisfied with expressing any thing clearly and simply."—Dr. Blair cor. "Attentive only to exhibit his ideas clearly and exactly, he appears dry."—Id. "Such words as have the most liquids and vowels, glide the most softly." Or: "Where liquids and vowels most abound, the utterance is softest."—Id. "The simplest points, such as are most easily apprehended."—Id. "Too historical to be accounted a perfectly regular epic poem."—Id. "Putting after them the oblique case, agreeably to the French construction."—Priestley cor. "Where the train proceeds with an extremely slow pace."—Kames cor. "So as scarcely to give an appearance of succession."—Id. "That concord between sound and sense, which is perceived in some expressions, independently of artful pronunciation."—Id. "Cornaro had become very corpulent, previously to the adoption of his temperate habits."—Hitchcock cor. "Bread, which is a solid, and tolerably hard, substance."—Day cor. "To command every body that was not dressed as finely as himself."—Id. "Many of them have scarcely outlived their authors."—J. Ward cor. "Their labour, indeed, did not penetrate very deeply."—Wilson cor. "The people are miserably poor, and subsist on fish."—Hume cor. "A scale, which I took great pains, some years ago, to make."—Bucke cor. "There is no truth on earth better established than the truth of the Bible."—Taylor cor. "I know of no work more wanted than the one which Mr. Taylor has now furnished."—Dr. Nott cor. "And therefore their requests are unfrequent and reasonable."—Taylor cor. "Questions are more easily proposed, than answered rightly."—Dillwyn cor. "Often reflect on the advantages you possess, and on the source from which they are all derived."—Murray cor. "If there be no special rule which requires it to be put further forward."—Milnes cor. "The masculine and the neuter have the same dialect in all the numbers, especially when they end alike."—Id.

Page 1696

"And children are more busy in their play
Than those that wiseliest pass their time away."—Butler cor.

CHAPTER IX.—CONJUNCTIONS.

CORRECTIONS IN THE USE OF CONJUNCTIONS.

"A Verb is so called from the Latin verbum, a word."—Bucke cor. "References are often marked by letters or figures."—Adam and Gould cor. (1.) "A Conjunction is a word which joins words or sentences together."—Lennie, Bullions and Brace, cor. (2.) "A Conjunction is used to connect words or sentences together."—R. C. Smith cor. (3.) "A Conjunction is used to connect words or sentences."—Maunder cor. (4.) "Conjunctions are words used to join words or sentences."—Wilcox cor. (5.) "A Conjunction is a word used to connect words or sentences."—M'Culloch, Hart, and Day, cor. (6.) "A Conjunction joins words or sentences together."—Macintosh and Hiley cor. (7.) "The Conjunction joins words or sentences together."—L. Murray cor. (8.) "Conjunctions connect words or sentences to each other."—Wright cor. (9.) "Conjunctions connect words or sentences."—Wells and Wilcox cor. (10.) "The conjunction is a part of speech, used to connect words or sentences."—Weld cor. (11.) "A conjunction is a word used to connect words or sentences together."—Fowler cor. (12.) "Connectives are particles that unite words or sentences in construction."—Webster cor. "English Grammar is miserably taught in our district schools; the teachers know little or nothing about it."—J. O. Taylor cor. "Lest, instead of preventing diseases, you draw them on."—Locke cor. "The definite article the is frequently applied to adverbs in the comparative or the superlative degree."—Murray et al. cor. "When nouns naturally neuter are assumed to be masculine or feminine."—Murray cor. "This form of the perfect tense represents an action as completely past, though often as done at no great distance of time, or at a time not specified."—Id. "The Copulative Conjunction serves to connect words or clauses, so as to continue a sentence, by expressing an addition, a supposition, a cause, or a consequence."—Id. "The Disjunctive Conjunction serves, not only to continue a sentence by connecting its parts, but also to express opposition of meaning, either real or nominal."—Id. "If we open the volumes of our divines, philosophers, historians, or artists, we shall find that they abound with all the terms necessary to communicate the observations and discoveries of their authors."—Id. "When a disjunctive conjunction occurs between a singular noun or pronoun and a plural one, the verb is made to agree with the plural noun or pronoun.”—Murray et al. cor. “Pronouns must always agree with their antecedents, or the nouns for which they stand, in gender and number.”—Murray cor. “Neuter verbs do not express action, and consequently do not govern nouns or pronouns.”—Id. “And the auxiliary of the past imperfect as well as of the present tense.”—Id. “If this rule should not appear to apply to every example that has been produced, or to others which might be cited.”—Id. “An emphatical pause is made, after something of peculiar moment has been said, on which we desire to fix the hearer’s attention.”—Murray and Hart cor. “An imperfect[531] phrase contains no assertion, and does not amount to a proposition, or sentence.”—Murray cor. “The word was in the mouth of every one, yet its meaning may still be a secret.”—Id. “This word was in the mouth of every one, and yet, as to its precise and definite idea, this may still be a secret,”—Harris cor. “It cannot be otherwise, because the French prosody differs from that of every other European language.”—Smollet cor. “So gradually that it may be engrafted on a subtonic.”—Rush cor. “Where the Chelsea and Malden bridges now are.” Or better: “Where the Chelsea or the Malden bridge now is.”—Judge Parker cor. “Adverbs are words added to verbs, to participles, to adjectives, or to other adverbs.”—R. C. Smith cor. “I could not have told you who the hermit was, or on what mountain he lived.”—Bucke cor. “AM and BE (for they are the same verb) naturally, or in themselves, signify being.”—Brightland cor. “Words are signs, either oral or written, by which we express our thoughts, or ideas.”—Mrs. Bethune cor. “His fears will detect him, that he shall not escape.”—Comly cor. “Whose is equally applicable to persons and to things”—Webster cor. “One negative destroys an other, so that two are equivalent to an affirmative.”—Bullions cor.

Page 1697

“No sooner does he peep into the world,
Than he has done his do.”—Hudibras cor.

CHAPTER X.—PREPOSITIONS.

CORRECTIONS IN THE USE OF PREPOSITIONS.

“Nouns are often formed from participles.”—L. Murray corrected. “What tenses are formed from the perfect participle?”—Ingersoll cor. “Which tense is formed from the present, or root of the verb?”—Id. “When a noun or a pronoun is placed before a participle, independently of the rest of the sentence.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 348. “If the addition consists of two or more words.”—Mur. et al. cor. “The infinitive mood is often made absolute, or used independently of the rest of the sentence.”—Lowth’s Gram., 80; Churchill’s, 143; Bucke’s, 96; Merchant’s, 92. “For the great satisfaction of the reader, we shall present a variety of false constructions.”—Murray cor. “For your satisfaction, I shall present you a variety of false constructions.”—Ingersoll cor. “I shall here present [to] you a scale of derivation.”—Bucke cor. “These two manners of representation in respect to number.”—Lowth and Churchill cor. “There are certain adjectives which seem to be derived from verbs, without any variation.”—Lowth cor. “Or disqualify us for receiving instruction or reproof from others.”—Murray cor. “For being more studious than any other pupil in the school.”—Id. “Misunderstanding the directions, we lost our way.”—Id. “These people reduced the greater part of the island under their own power.”—Id. “The principal accent distinguishes one syllable of a word from the rest.”—Id. “Just numbers are in unison with the human mind.”—Id. “We must accept of sound in stead of sense.”—Id. “Also, in stead of consultation, he uses consult.”—Priestley cor. “This ablative seems to be governed by a preposition understood.”—W. Walker cor. “Lest my father hear of it, by some means or other.”—Id. “And, besides, my wife would hear of it by some means.”—Id. “For insisting on a requisition so odious to them.”—Robertson cor. “Based on the great self-evident truths of liberty and equality.”—Manual cor. “Very little knowledge of their nature is acquired from the spelling-book.”—Murray cor. “They do not cut it off: except from a few words; as, due, duly, &c.”—Id. “Whether passing at such time, or then finished.”—Lowth cor. “It hath disgusted hundreds with that confession.”—Barclay cor. “But they have egregiously fallen into that inconveniency.”—Id. “For is not this, to set nature at work?”—Id. “And, surely, that which should set all its springs at work, is God.”—Atterbury cor. “He could not end his treatise without a panegyrie on modern learning.”—Temple cor. “These are entirely independent of the modulation of the voice.”—J. Walker cor. “It is dear at a penny. It is cheap at twenty pounds.”—W. Walker cor. “It will be despatched, on most occasions, without resting.”—Locke cor. “Oh the pain, the bliss of dying!”—Pope. “When the objects or the facts are presented to him.”—R. C. Smith cor. “I will now present you a synopsis.”—Id.

Page 1698

Page 1699

"The disjunctive conjunction connects words or sentences, and suggests an opposition of meaning, more or less direct."—Id. "I shall now present to you a few lines."—Bucke cor. "Common names, or substantives, are those which stand for things assorted."—Id. "Adjectives, in the English language, are not varied by genders, numbers, or cases; their only inflection is for the degrees of comparison."—Id. "Participles are [little more than] adjectives formed from verbs."—Id. "I do love to walk out on a fine summer evening."—Id. "Ellipsis, when applied to grammar, is the elegant omission of one or more words of a sentence."—Merchant cor. "The preposition to is generally required before verbs in the infinitive mood, but after the following verbs it is properly omitted; namely, bid, dare, feel, need, let, make, hear, see: as, 'He bid me do it;' not, 'He bid me to do it.'"—Id. "The infinitive sometimes follows than, for the latter term of a comparison; as, ['Murray should have known better than to write, and Merchant, better than to copy, the text here corrected, or the ambiguous example they appended to it.]"—Id. "Or, by prefixing the adverb more or less, for the comparative, and most or least, for the superlative."—Id. "A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun."—Id. "From monosyllables, the comparative is regularly formed by adding r or er."—Perley cor. "He has particularly named these, in distinction from others."—Harris cor. "To revive the decaying taste for ancient literature."—Id. "He found the greatest difficulty in writing."—Hume cor.

"And the tear, that is wiped with a little address,
May be followed perhaps by a smile."—Cowper, i, 216.

CHAPTER XI.—INTERJECTIONS.

CORRECTIONS IN THE USE OF INTERJECTIONS.

"Of chance or change, O let not man complain."—Beattie's Minstrel, B. ii, l. 1. "O thou persecutor! O ye hypocrites!"—Russell's Gram., p. 92. "O thou my voice inspire, Who touch'd Isaiah's hallow'd lips with fire!"—Pope's Messiah. "O happy we! surrounded by so many blessings!"—Merchant cor. "O thou who art so unmindful of thy duty!"—Id. "If I am wrong, O teach my heart To find that better way."—Murray's Reader, p. 248. "Heus! evocate huc Davum."—Ter. "Ho! call Davus out hither."—W. Walker cor. "It was represented by an analogy (O how inadequate!) which was borrowed from the ceremonies of paganism."—Murray cor. "O that Ishmael might live before thee!"—Friends' Bible, and Scott's. "And he said unto him, O let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak."—Alger's Bible, and Scott's. "And he said, O let not the Lord be angry."—Alger; Gen., xviii. 32. "O my Lord, let thy servant, I pray thee, speak a word."—Scott's Bible. "O Virtue! how amiable thou art!"—Murray's Gram., p. 128. "Alas! I fear for life."—See Ib. "Ah me! they little know How dearly I abide that boast so vain!"—See Bucke's Gram., p. 87. "O that I had digged myself a cave!"—Fletcher cor. "Oh, my good lord! thy comfort comes too late."—Shak. cor. "The vocative takes no article: it is distinguished thus: O Pedro! O Peter! O Dios! O God!"—Bucke cor. "Oho! But, the relative is always the same."—Cobbett cor. "All-hail, ye happy men!"—Jaudon cor. "O that I had wings like a dove!"—Scott's Bible. "O glorious hope! O bless'd abode!"—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 304. "Welcome friends! how joyous is your presence!"—T. Smith cor. "O blissful days!—but, ah! how soon ye pass!"—Parker and Fox cor.

Page 1700

"O golden days! O bright unvalued hours!—
What bliss, did ye but know that bliss, were yours!"—Barbauld cor.

"Ah me! what perils do environ
The man that meddles with cold iron!"—Hudibras cor.

THE KEY.—PART III.—SYNTAX.

CHAPTER I.—SENTENCES.

The first chapter of Syntax, being appropriated to general views of this part of grammar, to an exhibition of its leading doctrines, and to the several forms of sentential analysis, with an application of its principal rules in parsing, contains no false grammar for correction; and has, of course, nothing to correspond to it, in this Key, except the title, which is here inserted for form's sake.

CHAPTER II.—ARTICLES.

CORRECTIONS UNDER THE NOTES TO RULE I.

UNDER NOTE I.—AN OR A.

"I have seen a horrible thing in the house of Israel."—Bible cor. "There is a harshness in the following sentences."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 152. "Indeed, such a one is not to be looked for."—Dr. Blair cor. "If each of you will be disposed to approve himself a useful citizen."—Id. "Land with them had acquired almost a European value."—Webster cor. "He endeavoured to find out a wholesome remedy."—Neef cor. "At no time have we attended a yearly meeting more to our own satisfaction.”—The Friend cor. “Addison was not a humorist in character.”—Kames cor. “Ah me! what a one was he!"—Lily cor. "He was such a one as I never saw before"—Id. "No man can be a good preacher, who is not a useful one."—Dr. Blair cor. "A usage which is too frequent with Mr. Addison."—Id. "Nobody joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse."—Locke cor. "A universality seems to be aimed at by the omission of the article."—Priestley cor. "Architecture is as useful as well as a fine art."—Kames cor. "Because the same individual conjunctions do not preserve a uniform signification."—Nutting cor. "Such a work required the patience and assiduity of a hermit."—Johnson cor. "Resentment is a union of sorrow with malignity."—Id. "His bravery, we know, was a high courage of blasphemy."—Pope cor. "HYSSOP; an herb of bitter taste."—Pike cor.

Page 1701

"On each enervate string they taught the note
To pant, or tremble through a eunuch's throat."—Pope cor.

UNDER NOTE II.—AN OR A WITH PLURALS.

"At a session of the court, in March, it was moved," &c.—Hutchinson cor. "I shall relate my conversations, of which I kept memoranda."—D. D'Ab. cor. "I took an other dictionary, and with a pair of scissors cut out, for instance, the word ABACUS."—A. B. Johnson cor. "A person very meet seemed he for the purpose, and about forty-five years old."—Gardiner cor. "And it came to pass, about eight days after these sayings."—Bible cor. "There were slain of them about three thousand men."—1 Macc. cor. "Until I had gained the top of these white mountains, which seemed other Alps of snow."—Addison cor. "To make them satisfactory amends for all the losses they had sustained."—Goldsmith cor. "As a first-fruit of many that shall be gathered."—Barclay cor. "It makes indeed a little amend, (or some amends,) by inciting us to oblige people."—Sheffield cor. "A large and lightsome back stairway (or flight of backstairs) leads up to an entry above."—Id. "Peace of mind is an abundant recompense for any sacrifices of interest."—Murray et al. cor. "With such a spirit, and such sentiments, were hostilities carried on."—Robertson cor. "In the midst of a thick wood, he had long lived a voluntary recluse."—G. B. "The flats look almost like a young forest."—Chronicle cor. "As we went on, the country for a little way improved, but scantily."—Freeman cor. "Whereby the Jews were permitted to return into their own country, after a captivity of seventy years at Babylon."—Rollin cor. "He did not go a great way into the country."—Gilbert cor.

Page 1702

"A large amend by fortune's hand is made,
And the lost Punic blood is well repay'd."—Rowe cor.

UNDER NOTE III.—NOUNS CONNECTED.

"As where a landscape is conjoined with the music of birds, and the odour of flowers."—Kames cor. "The last order resembles the second in the mildness of its accent, and the softness of its pause."—Id. "Before the use of the loadstone, or the knowledge of the compass."—Dryden cor. "The perfect participle and the imperfect tense ought not to be confounded."—Murray cor. "In proportion as the taste of a poet or an orator becomes more refined."—Blair cor. "A situation can never be more intricate, so long as there is an angel, a devil, or a musician, to lend a helping hand."—Kames cor. "Avoid rude sports: an eye is soon lost, or a bone broken."—Inst., p. 262. "Not a word was uttered, nor a sign given."—Ib. "I despise not the doer, but the deed."—Ib. "For the sake of an easier pronunciation and a more agreeable sound."—Lowth cor. "The levity as well as the loquacity of the Greeks made them incapable of keeping up the true standard of history."—Bolingbroke cor.

UNDER NOTE IV.—ADJECTIVES CONNECTED.

"It is proper that the vowels be a long and a short one."—Murray cor. "Whether the person mentioned was seen by the speaker a long or a short time before."—Id. et al. "There are three genders; the masculine, the feminine, and the neuter."—Adam cor. "The numbers are two; the singular and the plural."—Id. et al. "The persons are three; the first, the second, and the third."—Idem. "Nouns and pronouns have three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective."—Comly and Ing. cor. "Verbs have five moods; namely, the infinitive, the indicative, the potential, the subjunctive, and the imperative."—Bullions et al. cor. "How many numbers have pronouns? Two, the singular and the plural."—Bradley cor. "To distinguish between an interrogative and an exclamatory sentence."—Murray et al. cor. "The first and the last of which are compound members."—Lowth cor. "In the last lecture, I treated of the concise and the diffuse, the nervous and the feeble manner."—Blair cor. "The passive and the neuter verbs I shall reserve for some future conversation."—Ingersoll cor. "There are two voices; the active and the passive."—Adam et al. cor. "WHOSE is rather the poetical than the regular genitive of WHICH."—Johnson

Page 1703

cor. "To feel the force of a compound or a derivative word."—Town cor. "To preserve the distinctive uses of the copulative and the disjunctive conjunctions."—Murray et al. cor. "E has a long and a short sound in most languages."—Bicknell cor. "When the figurative and the literal sense are mixed and jumbled together."—Dr. Blair cor. "The Hebrew, with which the Canaanitish and the Phoenician stand in connexion."—Conant and Fowler cor. "The languages of Scandinavia proper, the Norwegian and the Swedish."—Fowler cor.

UNDER NOTE V.—ADJECTIVES CONNECTED.

"The path of truth is a plain and safe path."—Murray cor. "Directions for acquiring a just and happy elocution."—Kirkham cor. "Its leading object is, to adopt a correct and easy method."—Id. "How can it choose but wither in a long and sharp winter?"—Cowley cor. "Into a dark and distant unknown."—Dr. Chalmers cor. "When the bold and strong enslaved his fellow man."—Chazotte cor. "We now proceed to consider the things most essential to an accurate and perfect sentence."—Murray cor. "And hence arises a second and very considerable source of the improvement of taste."—Dr. Blair cor. "Novelty produces in the mind a vivid and agreeable emotion."—Id. "The deepest and bitterest feeling still is that of the separation."—Dr. M'Rie cor. "A great and good man looks beyond time."—See Brown's Inst., p. 263. "They made but a weak and ineffectual resistance."—Ib. "The light and worthless kernels will float."—Ib. "I rejoice that there is an other and better world."—Ib. "For he is determined to revise his work, and present to the public an other and better edition."—Kirkham cor. "He hoped that this title would secure to him an ample and independent authority."—L. Murray cor. et al. "There is, however, an other and more limited sense."—J. Q. Adams cor.

UNDER NOTE VI.—ARTICLES OR PLURALS.

"This distinction forms what are called the diffuse style and the concise."—Dr. Blair cor. "Two different modes of speaking, distinguished at first by the denominations of the Attic manner and the Asiatic."—Adams cor. "But the great design of uniting the Spanish and French monarchies under the former, was laid."—Bolingbroke cor. "In the solemn and poetic styles, it [do or did] is often rejected."—Allen cor. "They cannot be, at the same time, in both the objective case and the nominative." Or: "They cannot be, at the same time, in both the objective and the nominative case." Or: "They cannot be, at the same time, in the nominative case, and also in the objective.” Or: “They cannot be, at the same time, in the nominative and objective cases.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 148. Or, better: “They cannot be, at the same time, in both cases, the nominative and the objective.”—Murray et al. cor. “They are named the positive, comparative, and superlative degrees.”—Smart cor. “Certain adverbs are capable of taking an inflection; namely, that of the comparative and superlative degrees.”—Fowler cor. “In the subjunctive mood, the present and imperfect tenses often carry with them a future sense.”—Murray et al. cor. “The imperfect, the perfect, the pluperfect, and the first-future tense, of this mood, are conjugated like the same tenses of the indicative.”—Kirkham bettered. “What rules apply in parsing personal pronouns of the second and third persons?”—Id. “Nouns are sometimes in the nominative or the objective case after the neuter verb be, or after an active-intransitive or a passive verb.” “The verb varies its ending in the singular, in order to agree with its nominative, in the first, second, and third persons.”—Id. “They are identical in effect with the radical and the vanishing stress.”—Rush cor. “In a sonnet, the first, the fourth, the fifth, and the eighth line, usually rhyme to one an other: so do the second, third, sixth, and seventh lines; the ninth, eleventh, and thirteenth lines; and the tenth, twelfth, and fourteenth lines.”—Churchill cor. “The iron and golden ages are run; youth and manhood are departed.”—Wright cor. “If, as you say, the iron and the golden age are past, the youth and the manhood of the world.”—Id. “An Exposition of the Old and New Testaments.”—Henry cor. “The names and order of the books of the Old and the New Testament.”—Bible cor. “In the second and third persons of that tense.”—Murray cor. “And who still unites in himself the human and the divine nature.”—Gurney cor. “Among whom arose the Italian, Spanish, French, and English languages.”—Murray cor. “Whence arise these two numbers, the singular and the plural.”—Burn cor.

Page 1704

UNDER NOTE VII.—CORRESPONDENT TERMS.

“Neither the definitions nor the examples are entirely the same as his.”—Ward cor. “Because it makes a discordance between the thought and the expression.”—Kames cor. “Between the adjective and the following substantive.”—Id. “Thus Athens became both the repository and the nursery of learning.”—Chazotte cor. “But the French pilfered from both the Greek and the Latin.”—Id. “He shows that Christ is both the power and the wisdom of God.”—The Friend cor. “That he might be Lord both of the dead and of the living.”—Bible cor. “This is neither the obvious nor the grammatical meaning of his words.”—Blair cor. “Sometimes both the accusative and the infinitive are understood.”—Adam and Gould cor. “In some cases, we can use either the nominative or the accusative, promiscuously.”—idem. “Both the former and the latter substantive are sometimes to be understood.”—idem. “Many of which have escaped both the commentator and the poet himself.”—Pope cor. “The verbs MUST and OUGHT, have both a present and a past signification.”—L. Murray cor. “How shall we distinguish between the friends and the enemies of the government?”—Dr. Webster cor. “Both the ecclesiastical and the secular powers concurred in those measures.”—Dr. Campbell cor. “As the period has a beginning and an end within itself, it implies an inflection.”—J. Q. Adams cor. “Such as ought to subsist between a principal and an accessory.”—Ld. Kames cor.

Page 1705

UNDER NOTE VIII.—CORRESPONDENCE PECULIAR.

“When both the upward and the downward slide occur in the sound of one syllable, they are called a CIRCUMFLEX, or WAVE.”—Kirkham cor. “The word THAT is used both in the nominative and in the objective case.”—Sanborn cor. “But in all the other moods and tenses, both of the active and of the passive voice [the verbs] are conjugated at large.”—Murray cor. “Some writers on grammar, admitting the second-future tense into the indicative mood, reject it from the subjunctive.”—Id. “After the same conjunction, to use both the indicative and the subjunctive mood in the same sentence, and under the same circumstances, seems to be a great impropriety.”—Id. “The true distinction between the subjunctive and the indicative mood in this tense.”—Id. “I doubt of his capacity to teach either the French or the English language.”—Chazotte cor. “It is as necessary to make a distinction between the active-transitive and the active-intransitive verb, as between the active and the passive.”—Nixon cor.

UNDER NOTE IX.—A SERIES OF TERMS.

“As comprehending the terms uttered by the artist, the mechanic, and the husbandman.”—Chazotte cor. “They may be divided into four classes; the Humanists, the Philanthropists, the Pestalozzians, and the Productives.”—Smith cor. “Verbs have six tenses; the present, the imperfect, the perfect, the pluperfect, the first-future, and the second-future.”—Murray et al. cor. “Is it an irregular neuter verb [from be, was, being, been; found in] the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and singular number.”—Murray cor. “SHOULD GIVE is an irregular active-transitive verb [from give, gave, given, giving; found] in the potential mood, imperfect tense, first person, and plural number.”—Id. “US is a personal pronoun, of the first person, plural number, masculine gender, and objective case.”—Id. “THEM is a personal pronoun, of the third person, plural number, masculine gender, and objective case.”—Id. “It is surprising that the Jewish critics, with all their skill in dots, points, and accents, never had the ingenuity to invent a point of interrogation, a point of admiration, or a parenthesis.”—Dr. Wilson cor. “The fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth verses.” Or: “The fifth, the sixth, the seventh, and the eighth verse.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “Substitutes have three persons; the First, the Second, and the Third.”—Id. “JOHN’S is a proper noun, of the third person, singular number, masculine gender, and possessive case: and is governed by ‘WIFE,’ according to Rule [4th, which says, &c.]—Smith cor. “Nouns, in the English language, have three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective.”—Bar. and Alex. cor. “The potential mood has four tenses; viz., the present, the imperfect, the perfect, and the pluperfect.”—Ingersoll cor.

Page 1706

“Where Science, Law, and Liberty depend,
And own the patron, patriot, and friend.”—Savage cor.

UNDER NOTE X.—SPECIES AND GENUS.

“The pronoun is a part of speech[532] put for the noun.”—Paul’s Ac. cor. “The verb is a part of speech declined with mood and tense.”—Id. “The participle is a part of speech derived from the verb.”—Id. “The adverb is a part of speech joined to verbs, [participles, adjectives, or other adverbs,] to declare their signification.”—Id. “The conjunction is a part of speech that joins words or sentences together.”—Id. “The preposition is a part of speech most commonly set before other parts.”—Id. “The interjection is a part of speech which betokens a sudden emotion or passion of the mind.”—Id. “The enigma, or riddle, is also a species of allegory.”—Blair and Murray cor. “We may take from the Scriptures a very fine example of the allegory.”—Idem. “And thus have you exhibited a sort of sketch of art.”—Harris cor. “We may ‘imagine a subtle kind of reasoning,’ as Mr. Harris acutely observes.”—Churchill cor. “But, before entering on these, I shall give one instance of metaphor, very beautiful, (or, one very beautiful instance of metaphor,) that I may show the figure to full advantage.”—Blair

Page 1707

cor. "Aristotle, in his Poetics, uses metaphor in this extended sense, for any figurative meaning imposed upon a word; as the whole put for a part, or a part for the whole; a species for the genus, or the genus for a species."—Id. "It shows what kind of apple it is of which we are speaking."—Kirkham cor. "Cleon was an other sort of man."—Goldsmith cor. "To keep off his right wing, as a kind of reserved body."—Id. "This part of speech is called the verb."—Mack cor. "What sort of thing is it?"—Hiley cor. "What sort of charm do they possess?"—Bullions cor.

"Dear Welsted, mark, in dirty hole,
That painful animal, the mole."—Dunciad cor.

UNDER NOTE XI.—ARTICLES NOT REQUISITE.

"Either thou or the boys were in fault."—Comly cor. "It may, at first view, appear to be too general."—Murray et al. cor. "When the verb has reference to future time."—Idem. "No; they are the language of imagination, rather than of passion."—Blair cor. "The dislike of English Grammar, which has so generally prevailed, can be attributed only to the intricacy of [our] syntax."—Russell cor. "Is that ornament in good taste?"—Kames cor. "There are not many fountains in good taste." Or: "Not many fountains are [ornamented] in good taste."—Id. "And I persecuted this way unto death."—Bible cor. "The sense of feeling can, indeed, give us a notion of extension."—Addison, Spect., No. 411. "The distributive adjectives, each, every, either, agree with nouns, pronouns, or verbs, of the singular number only."—Murray cor. "Expressing by one word, what might, by a circumlocution, be resolved into two or more words belonging to other parts of speech."—Blair cor. "By certain muscles which operate [in harmony, and] all at the same time."—Murray cor. "It is sufficient here to have observed thus much in general concerning them."—Campbell cor. "Nothing disgusts us sooner than empty pomp of language."—Murray cor.

UNDER NOTE XII.—TITLES AND NAMES.

"He is entitled to the appellation of gentleman."—G. Brown. "Cromwell assumed the title of Protector"—Id. "Her father is honoured with the title of Earl."—Id. "The chief magistrate is styled President."—Id. "The highest title in the state is that of Governor."—Id. "That boy is known by the name of Idler."—Murray cor. "The one styled Mufti, is the head of the ministers of law and religion."—Balbi cor. "Ranging all that possessed them under one class, he called that whole class tree."—Blair cor. "For oak, pine, and ash, were names of whole classes of objects.”—Id. “It is of little importance whether we give to some particular mode of expression the name of trope, or of figure.”—Id. “The collision of a vowel with itself is the most ungracious of all combinations, and has been doomed to peculiar reprobation under the name of hiatus.”—Adams cor. “We hesitate to determine, whether Tyrant alone is the nominative, or whether the nominative includes the word Spy.”—Cobbett cor. “Hence originated the customary abbreviation of twelve months into twelvemonth; of seven nights into sennight; of fourteen nights into fortnight.”—Webster cor.

Page 1708

UNDER NOTE XIII.—COMPARISONS AND ALTERNATIVES.

“He is a better writer than reader.”—W. Allen. “He was an abler mathematician than linguist.”—Id. “I should rather have an orange than an apple.”—G. Brown. “He was no less able as a negotiator, than courageous as a warrior.”—Smollett cor. “In an epic poem, we pardon many negligences that would not be permitted in a sonnet or an epigram.”—Kames cor. “That figure is a sphere, globe, or ball.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 357.

UNDER NOTE XIV.—ANTECEDENTS TO WHO OR WHICH.

“The carriages which were formerly in use, were very clumsy.”—Key to Inst. “The place is not mentioned by the geographers who wrote at that time.”—Id. “Those questions which a person puts to himself in contemplation, ought to be terminated with points of interrogation.”—Mur. et al. cor. “The work is designed for the use of those persons who may think it merits a place in their libraries.”—Mur. cor. “That those who think confusedly, should express themselves obscurely, is not to be wondered at.”—Id. “Those grammarians who limit the number to two, or three, do not reflect.”—Id. “The substantives which end in ian, are those that signify profession.” Or: “Those substantives which end in ian, are such as signify profession.”—Id. “To these may be added those verbs which, among the poets, usually govern the dative.”—Adam and Gould cor. “The consonants are those letters which cannot be sounded without the aid of a vowel.”—Bucke cor. “To employ the curiosity of persons skilled in grammar:”—“of those who are skilled in grammar:”—“of persons that are skilled in grammar:”—“of such persons as are skilled in grammar.” or—“of those persons who are skilled in grammar.”—L. Murray cor. “This rule refers only to those nouns and pronouns which have the same bearing, or relation.”—Id. “So that the things which are seen, were not made of things that do appear.”—Bible cor. “Man is an imitative creature; he may utter again the sounds which he has heard.”—Dr. Wilson cor. “But those men whose business is wholly domestic, have little or no use for any language but their own.”—Dr. Webster cor.

Page 1709

UNDER NOTE XV.—PARTICIPIAL NOUNS.

“Great benefit may be reaped from the reading of histories.”—Sewel cor. “And some attempts were made towards the writing of history.”—Bolingbroke cor. “It is an invading of the priest’s office, for any other to offer it”—Leslie cor. “And thus far of the forming of verbs.”—W. Walker cor. “And without the shedding of blood there is no remission.”—Bible cor. “For the making of measures, we have the best method here in England.”—Printer’s Gram. cor. “This is really both an admitting and a denying at once.”—Butler cor. “And hence the origin of the making of parliaments.”—Dr. Brown cor. “Next thou objectest, that the having of saving light and grace presupposes conversion. But that I deny: for, on the contrary, conversion presupposes the having of light and grace.”—Barclay cor. “They cried down the wearing of rings and other superfluities, as we do.”—Id. “Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning, of the plaiting of the hair, and of the wearing of gold, or of the putting-on of apparel.”—Bible cor. “In the spelling of derivative words, the primitives must be kept whole.”—Brit. Gram. and Buchanan’s cor. “And the princes offered for the dedicating of the altar.”—Numb. cor. “Boasting is not only a telling of lies, but also of many unseemly truths.”—Sheffield cor. “We freely confess that the forbearing of prayer in the wicked is sinful.”—Barclay cor. “For the revealing of a secret, there is no remedy.”—G. Brown. “He turned all his thoughts to the composing of laws for the good of the State.”—Rollin cor.

UNDER NOTE XVI.—PARTICIPLES, NOT NOUNS.

“It is salvation to be kept from falling into a pit, as truly as to be taken out of it after falling in.”—Barclay cor. “For in receiving and embracing the testimony of truth, they felt their souls eased.”—Id. “True regularity does not consist in having but a single rule, and forcing every thing to conform to it.”—Phil. Museum cor. “To the man of the world, this sound of glad tidings appears only an idle tale, and not worth attending to.”—Say cor. “To be the deliverer of the captive Jews, by ordering their temple to be rebuilt," &c.—Rollin cor. "And for preserving them from being defiled."—Discip. cor. "A wise man will forbear to show any excellence in trifles."—Kames cor. "Hirsutus had no other reason for valuing a book."—Johnson, and Wright, cor. "To being heard with satisfaction, it is necessary that the speaker should deliver himself with ease." Perhaps better: "To be heard, &c." Or: "In order to be heard, &c."—Sheridan cor. "And, to the end of being well heard and clearly understood, a good and distinct articulation contributes more, than can even the greatest power of voice."—Id.

Page 1710

"Potential purports, having power or will;
As, If you would improve, you should be still."—Tobitt cor.

UNDER NOTE XVII.—VARIOUS ERRORS.

"For the same reason, a neuter verb cannot become passive."—Lowth cor. "A period is a whole sentence complete in itself."—Id. "A colon, or member, is a chief constructive part, or the greatest division, of a sentence."—Id. "A semicolon, or half-member, is a smaller constructive part, or a subdivision, of a sentence or of a member."—Id. "A sentence or a member is again subdivided into commas, or segments."—Id. "The first error that I would mention is, too general an attention to the dead languages, with a neglect of our own tongue."—Webster cor. "One third of the importations would supply the demands of the people."—Id. "And especially in a grave style."—Murray's Gram., i, 178. "By too eager a pursuit, he ran a great risk of being disappointed."—Murray cor. "The letters are divided into vowels and consonants."—Mur. et al. cor. "The consonants are divided into mutes and semivowels."—Idem. "The first of these forms is the most agreeable to the English idiom."—Murray cor. "If they gain, it is at too dear a rate."—Barclay cor. "A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun, to prevent too frequent a repetition of it."—Maunder cor. "This vulgar error might perhaps arise from too partial a fondness for the Latin."—Ash cor. "The groans which too heavy a load extorts from her."—Hitchcock cor. "The numbers of a verb are, of course, the singular and the plural."—Bucke cor. "To brook no meanness, and to stoop to no dissimulation, are indications of a great mind."—Murray cor. "This mode of expression rather suits the familiar than the grave style."—Id. "This use of the word best suits a familiar and low style."—Priestley cor. "According to the nature of the composition, the one or the other may be predominant.”—Blair cor. “Yet the commonness of such sentences prevents in a great measure too early an expectation of the end.”—Campbell cor. “A eulogy or a philippic may be pronounced by an individual of one nation upon a subject of an other.”—J. Q. Adams cor. “A French sermon is, for the most part, a warm animated exhortation.”—Blair cor. “I do not envy those who think slavery no very pitiable lot.”—Channing cor. “The auxiliary and the principal united constitute a tense.”—Murray cor. “There are some verbs which are defective with respect to the persons.”—Id. “In youth, habits of industry are the most easily acquired.”—Id. “The apostrophe (') is used in place of a letter left out.”—Bullions cor.

Page 1711

CHAPTER III.—CASES, OR NOUNS.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE II; OF NOMINATIVES.

“The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.”—Bunyan cor. “He will in no wise cast out whosoever cometh unto him.” Better: “He will in no wise cast out any that come unto him.”—Hall cor. “He feared the enemy might fall upon his men, who, he saw, were off their guard.”—Hutchinson cor. “Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.”—Matt., v, 41. “The ideas of the author have been conversant with the faults of other writers.”—Swift cor. “You are a much greater loser than I, by his death.” Or: “Thou art a much greater loser by his death than I.”—Id. “Such peccadilloes pass with him for pious frauds.”—Barclay cor. “In whom I am nearly concerned, and who, I know, would be very apt to justify my whole procedure.”—Id. “Do not think such a man as I contemptible for my garb.”—Addison cor. “His wealth and he bid adieu to each other.”—Priestley cor. “So that, ‘He is greater than I,’ will be more grammatical than, ‘He is greater than me.’”—Id. “The Jesuits had more interests at court than he.”—Id. and Smollett cor. “Tell the Cardinal that I understand poetry better than he.”—Id. “An inhabitant of Crim Tartary was far more happy than he.”—Id. “My father and he have been very intimate since.”—Fair Am. cor. “Who was the agent, and who, the object struck or kissed?”—Mrs. Bethune cor. “To find the person who, he imagined, was concealed there.”—Kirkham cor. “He offered a great recompense to whosoever would help him.” Better: “He offered a great recompense to any one who would help him.”—Hume and Pr. cor. “They would be under the dominion, absolute and unlimited, of whosoever (or any one who) might exercise the right of judgement.”—Haynes cor. "They had promised to accept whosoever (or any one who) should be born in Wales."—Croker cor. "We sorrow not as they that have no hope."—Maturin cor. "If he suffers, he suffers as they that have no hope."—Id. "We acknowledge that he, and he only, hath been our peacemaker."—Gratton cor. "And what can be better than he that made it?"—Jenks cor. "None of his school-fellows is more beloved than he."—Cooper cor. "Solomon, who was wiser than they all."—Watson cor. "Those who the Jews thought were the last to be saved, first entered the kingdom of God."—Tract cor. "A stone is heavy, and the sand weighty; but a fool's wrath is heavier than both."—Bible cor. "A man of business, in good company, is hardly more insupportable, than she whom they call a notable woman."—Steele cor. "The king of the Sarmatians, who we may imagine was no small prince, restored to him a hundred thousand Roman prisoners."—Life of Anton. cor. "Such notions would be avowed at this time by none but rosicrucians, and fanatics as mad as they."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 203. "Unless, as I said, Messieurs, you are the masters, and not I."—Hall cor. "We had drawn up against peaceable travellers, who must have been as glad as we to escape."—Burnes cor. "Stimulated, in turn, by their approbation and that of better judges than they, she turned to their literature with redoubled energy."—Quarterly Rev. cor. "I know not who else are expected."—Scott cor. "He is great, but truth is greater than we all." Or: "He is great, but truth is greater than any of us."—H. Mann cor. "He I accuse has entered." Or, by ellipsis of the antecedent, thus: "Whom I accuse has entered."—Fowler cor.; also Shakspeare.

Page 1712

"Scotland and thou did each in other live."—Dryden cor.

"We are alone; here's none but thou and I."—Shak. cor.

"I rather would, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy."—Shak. cor.

"Tell me, in sadness, who is she you love?"—Shak. cor.

"Better leave undone, than by our deeds acquire Too high a fame, when he we serve's away."—Shak. cor.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE III; OF APPOSITION.

"Now, therefore, come thou, let us make a covenant, thee and me."—Bible cor. "Now, therefore, come thou, we will make a covenant, thou and I."—Variation corrected. "The word came not to Esau, the hunter, that stayed not at home; but to Jacob, the plain man, him that dwelt in tents."—Penn cor. "Not to every man, but to the man of God, (i.e.) him that is led by the spirit of God.”—Barclay cor. “For, admitting God to be a creditor, or him to whom the debt should be paid, and Christ him that satisfies or pays it on behalf of man the debtor, this question will arise, whether he paid that debt as God, or man, or both?”—Penn cor. “This Lord Jesus Christ, the heavenly Man, the Emmanuel, God with us, we own and believe in: him whom the high priests raged against,” &c.—Fox cor. “Christ, and He crucified, was the Alpha and Omega of all his addresses, the fountain and foundation of his hope and trust.”—Exp. cor. “Christ, and He crucified, is the head, and the only head, of the church.”—Denison cor. “But if Christ, and He crucified, is the burden of the ministry, such disastrous results are all avoided.”—Id. “He never let fall the least intimation, that himself, or any other person whosoever, was the object of worship.”—View cor. “Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honour, especially them who labour in the word and doctrine.”—Bible cor. “Our Shepherd, he who is styled King of saints, will assuredly give his saints the victory.”—Sermon cor. “It may seem odd, to talk of us subscribers.”—Fowle cor. “And they shall have none to bury them: they, their wives, nor their sons, nor[533] their daughters; for I will pour their wickedness upon them.”—Bible cor. “Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you Epaphroditus, my brother, and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier, but your messenger, and him that ministered to my wants.”—Bible cor. “Amidst the tumult of the routed train, The sons of false Antimachus were slain; Him who for bribes his faithless counsels sold, And voted Helen’s stay for Paris’ gold.”—Pope cor. “See the vile King his iron sceptre bear— His only praise attends the pious heir; Him in whose soul the virtues all conspire, The best good son, from the worst wicked sire.”—Lowth cor.

Page 1713

“Then from thy lips poured forth a joyful song
To thy Redeemer!—yea, it poured along
In most melodious energy of praise,
To God, the Saviour, him of ancient days.”—Arm Chair cor.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE IV; OF POSSESSIVES.

UNDER NOTE I.—THE POSSESSIVE FORM.

“Man’s chief good is an upright mind.”—Key to Inst. “The translator of Mallet’s History has the following note.”—Webster cor. “The act, while it gave five years’ full pay to the officers, allowed but one year’s pay to the privates.”—Id. “For the study of English is preceded by several years’ attention to Latin and Greek.”—Id. “The first, the Court-Baron, is the freeholders’” or freemen's court."—Coke cor. "I affirm that Vaugelas's definition labours under an essential defect."—Campbell cor.; and also Murray. "There is a chorus in Aristophanes's plays."—Blair cor. "It denotes the same perception in my mind as in theirs."—Duncan cor. "This afterwards enabled him to read Hickes's Saxon Grammar."—Life of Dr. Mur. cor. "I will not do it for ten's sake."—Ash cor. Or: "I will not destroy it for ten's sake."—Gen., xviii, 32. "I arose, and asked if those charming infants were hers."—Werter cor. "They divide their time between milliners's shops and the taverns."—Dr. Brown cor. "The angels's adoring of Adam is also mentioned in the Talmud."—Sale cor. "Quarrels arose from the winners's insulting of those who lost."—Id. "The vacancy occasioned by Mr. Adams's resignation."—Adv. to Adams's Rhet. cor. "Read, for instance, Junius's address, commonly called his Letter to the King."—Adams cor. "A perpetual struggle against the tide of Hortensius's influence."—Id. "Which, for distinction's sake, I shall put down severally."—R. Johnson cor. "The fifth case is in a clause signifying the matter of one's fear."—Id. "And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field."—Alger cor. "Arise for thy servants's help, and redeem them for thy mercy's sake."—Jenks cor. "Shall not their cattle, their substance, and every beast of theirs, be ours's?"—COM. BIBLE: Gen., xxxiv, 23. "Its regular plural, bullaces, is used by Bacon."—Churchill cor. "Mordecai walked every day before the court of the women's house."—Scott cor. "Behold, they that wear soft clothing, are in kings's houses."—Alger's Bible. "Then Jethro, Moses's father-in-law, took Zipporah, Moses's wife, and her two sons; and Jethro, Moses's father-in-law, came, with his sons and his wife, unto Moses."—Scott's Bible. "King James's translators merely revised former translations."—Frazee cor. "May they be like corn on houses's tops."—White cor.

Page 1714

"And for his Maker's image's sake exempt."—Milton cor.

"By all the fame acquired in ten years's war."—Rowe cor.

"Nor glad vile poets with true critics's gore."—Pope cor.

"Man only of a softer mold is made,
Not for his fellows's ruin, but their aid."—Dryden cor.

UNDER NOTE II.—POSSESSIVES CONNECTED.

Page 1715

"It was necessary to have both the physician's and the surgeon's advice."—L. Murray's False Syntax, Rule 10. "This outside fashionableness of the tailor's or the tirewoman's making."—Locke cor. "Some pretending to be of Paul's party, others of Apollos's, others of Cephas's, and others, (pretending yet higher,) to be of Christ's."—Wood cor. "Nor is it less certain, that Spenser and Milton's spelling agrees better with our pronunciation."—Phil. Museum cor. "Law's, Edwards's, and Watts's Survey of the Divine Dispensations." Or thus: "Law, Edwards, and Watts's, Surveys of the Divine Dispensations."—Burgh cor. "And who was Enoch's Saviour, and the prophets?"—Bayly cor. "Without any impediment but his own, his parents', or his guardian's will."—Journal corrected. "James relieves neither the boy's nor the girl's distress."—Nixon cor. "John regards neither the master's nor the pupil's advantage."—Id. "You reward neither the man's nor the woman's labours."—Id. "She examines neither James's nor John's conduct."—Id. "Thou pitiest neither the servant's nor the master's injuries."—Id. "We promote England's or Ireland's happiness."—Id. "Were Cain's and Abel's occupation the same?"—G. Brown. "Were Cain and Abel's occupations the same?"—Id. "What was Simon and Andrew's employment?"—Id. "Till he can read for himself Sanctius's Minerva with Scioppius's and Perizonius's Notes."—Locke cor.

"And love and friendship's finely-pointed dart Falls blunted from each indurated heart." Or:—

"And love's and friendship's finely-pointed dart Fall blunted from each indurated heart."—Goldsmith cor.

UNDER NOTE III.—CHOICE OF FORMS.

"But some degree of trouble is the portion of all men."—L. Murray et al. cor. "With the names of his father and mother upon the blank leaf."—Abbott cor. "The general, in the name of the army, published a declaration."—Hume cor. "The vote of the Commons."—Id. "The House of Lords."—Id. "A collection of the faults of writers;"—or, "A collection of literary faults."—Swift cor. "After ten years of wars."—Id. "Professing his detestation of such practices as those of his predecessors."—Pope cor. "By that time I shall have ended my year of office."—W. Walker cor. "For the sake of Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip."—Bible and Mur. cor. "I endure all things for the sake of the elect, that they may also obtain salvation."—Bibles

Page 1716

cor. "He was heir to the son of Louis the Sixteenth."—W. Allen. "The throne we honour is the people's choice."—Rolla. "An account of the proceedings of Alexander's court."—Inst. "An excellent tutor for the child of a person of fashion!"—Gil Blas cor. "It is curious enough, that this sentence of the Bishop's is, itself, ungrammatical."—Cobbett cor. "The troops broke into the palace of the Emperor Leopold."—Nixon cor. "The meeting was called by desire of Eldon the Judge."—Id. "The occupation of Peter, John, and Andrew, was that of fishermen."—Murray's Key, R. 10. "The debility of the venerable president of the Royal Academy, has lately increased."—Maunder cor.

UNDER NOTE IV.—NOUNS WITH POSSESSIVES PLURAL.

"God hath not given us our reason to no purpose."—Barclay cor. "For our sake, no doubt, this is written."—Bible cor. "Are not health and strength of body desirable for their own sake?"—Harris and Murray cor. "Some sailors who were boiling their dinner upon the shore."—Day cor. "And they, in their turn, were subdued by others."—Pinnock cor. "Industry on our part is not superseded by God's grace."—Arrowsmith cor. "Their health perhaps may be pretty well secured."—Locke cor. "Though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor."—See 2 Cor., viii, 9. "It were to be wished, his correctors had been as wise on their part."—Harris cor. "The Arabs are commended by the ancients for being most exact to their word, and respectful to their kindred."—Sale cor. "That is, as a reward of some exertion on our part."—Gurney cor. "So that it went ill with Moses for their sake."—Ps. cor. "All liars shall have their part in the burning lake."—Watts cor. "For our own sake as well as for thine."—Pref. to Waller cor. "By discovering their ability to detect and amend errors."—L. Murray cor.

"This world I do renounce; and, in your sight, Shake patiently my great affliction off."—Shak. cor.

"If your relenting anger yield to treat,
Pompey and thou, in safety, here may meet."—Rowe cor.

UNDER NOTE V.—POSSESSIVES WITH PARTICIPLES.

"This will encourage him to proceed without acquiring the prejudice."—Smith cor. "And the notice which they give of an action as being completed or not completed."—L. Mur. et al. cor. "Some obstacle, or impediment, that prevents it from taking place."—Priestley and A. Mur. cor. "They have apostolical authority for so frequently urging the seeking of the Spirit.”—The Friend cor. “Here then is a wide field for reason to exert its powers in relation to the objects of taste.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Now this they derive altogether from their greater capacity of imitation and description.”—Id. “This is one clear reason why they paid a greater attention to that construction.”—Id. “The dialogue part had also a modulation of its own, which was capable of being set to notes.”—Id. “Why are we so often frigid and unpersuasive in public discourse?”—Id. “Which is only a preparation for leading his forces directly upon us.”—Id. “The nonsense about which, as relating to things only, and having no declension, needs no refutation.”—Fowle cor. “Who, upon breaking it open, found nothing but the following inscription.”—Rollin cor. “A prince will quickly have reason to repent of having exalted one person so high.”—Id. “Notwithstanding it is the immediate subject of his discourse.”—Churchill cor. “With our definition of it, as being synonymous with time.”—Booth cor. “It will considerably increase our danger of being deceived.”—Campbell cor. “His beauties can never be mentioned without suggesting his blemishes also.”—Dr. Blair cor. “No example has ever been adduced, of a man conscientiously approving an action, because of its badness.” Or:—“of a man who conscientiously approved of an action because of its badness.”—Gurney cor. “The last episode, of the angel showing to Adam the fate of his posterity, is happily imagined.”—Dr. Blair cor. “And the news came to my son, that he and the bride were in Dublin.”—M. Edgeworth cor. “There is no room for the mind to exert any great effort.”—Dr. Blair cor. “One would imagine, that these critics never so much as heard that Homer wrote first.”—Pope cor. “Condemn the book, for not being a geography;” or, —“because it is not a geography.”—Peirce cor. “There will be in many words a transition from being the figurative to being the proper signs of certain ideas.”—Campbell cor. “The doctrine that the Pope is the only source of ecclesiastical power.”—Rel. World cor. “This was the more expedient, because the work was designed for the benefit of private learners.”—L. Murray cor. “This was done, because the Grammar, being already in type, did not admit of enlargement.”—Id.

Page 1717

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE V; OF OBJECTIVES.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—THE OBJECTIVE FORM.

Page 1718

"Whom should I meet the other day but my old friend!"—Spect. cor. "Let not him boast that puts on his armour, but him that takes it off."—Barclay cor. "Let none touch it, but them who are clean."—Sale cor. "Let the sea roar, and the fullness thereof; the world, and them that dwell therein."—Ps. cor. "Pray be private, and careful whom you trust."—Mrs. Goffe cor. "How shall the people know whom to entrust with their property and their liberties?"—J. O. Taylor cor. "The chaplain entreated my comrade and me to dress as well as possible."—World cor. "And him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out."—John, vi, 37. "Whom, during this preparation, they constantly and solemnly invoke."—Hope of Is. cor. "Whoever or whatever owes us, is Debtor; and whomever or whatever we owe, is Creditor."—Marsh cor. "Declaring the curricule was his, and he should have in it whom he chose."—A. Ross cor. "The fact is, Burke is the only one of all the host of brilliant contemporaries, whom we can rank as a first-rate orator."—Knickerb. cor. "Thus you see, how naturally the Fribbles and the Daffodils have produced the Messalinas of our time."—Dr. Brown cor. "They would find in the Roman list both the Scipios."—Id. "He found his wife's clothes on fire, and her just expiring."—Observer cor. "To present you holy, and unblamable, and unreprovable in his sight."—Colossians, i, 22. "Let the distributor do his duty with simplicity; the superintendent, with diligence; him who performs offices of compassion, with cheerfulness."—Stuart cor. "If the crew rail at the master of the vessel, whom will they mind?"—Collier cor. "He having none but them, they having none but him"—Drayton cor.

"Thee, Nature, partial Nature, I arraign;
Of thy caprice maternal I complain."—Burns cor.

"*Nor weens he who it is, whose charms consume
His longing soul, but loves he knows not whom*"—Addison cor.

UNDER NOTE I.—OF VERBS TRANSITIVE.

"When it gives that sense, and also connects sentences, it is a conjunction."—L. Murray cor. "Though thou wilt not acknowledge thyself to—be guilty, thou canst not deny the fact stated."—Id. "They specify some object, like many other adjectives, and also connect sentences."—Kirkham cor. "A violation of this rule tends so much to perplex the reader and obscure the sense, that it is safer to err by using too many short sentences."—L. Murray cor. "A few exercises are subjoined to each important definition, for him [the pupil] to practise upon as he proceeds in committing the grammar to memory.”—Nutting cor. “A verb signifying an action directly transitive, governs the accusative.”—Adam et al. cor. “Or, any word that can be conjugated, is a verb.”—Kirkham cor. “In these two concluding sentences, the author, hastening to a close, appears to write rather carelessly.”—Dr. Blair cor. “He simply reasons on one side of the question, and then leaves it.”—Id. “Praise to God teaches us to be humble and lowly ourselves.”—Atterbury cor. “This author has endeavoured to surpass his rivals.”—R. W. Green cor. “Idleness and pleasure fatigue a man as soon as business.”—Webster cor. “And, in conjugating any verb,”—or, “And in learning conjugations, you must pay particular attention to the manner in which these signs are applied.”—Kirkham cor. “He said Virginia would have emancipated her slaves long ago.”—Lib. cor. “And having a readiness”—or, “And holding ourselves in readiness”—or, “And being in readiness—to revenge all disobedience.”—Bible cor. “However, in these cases, custom generally determines what is right.”—Wright cor. “In proof, let the following cases be taken.”—Id. “We must marvel that he should so speedily have forgotten his first principles.”—Id. “How should we wonder at the expression, ‘This is a soft question!’”—Id. “And such as prefer this course, can parse it as a possessive adjective.”—Goodenow cor. “To assign all the reasons that induced the author to deviate from other grammarians, would lead to a needless prolixity.”—Alexander cor. “The Indicative Mood simply indicates or declares a thing.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 63.

Page 1719

UNDER NOTE II.—OF VERBS INTRANSITIVE.

“In his seventh chapter he expatiates at great length.”—Barclay cor. “He quarrels with me for adducing some ancient testimonies agreeing with what I say.”—Id. “Repenting of his design.”—Hume cor. “Henry knew, that an excommunication could not fail to produce the most dangerous effects.”—Id. “The popular lords did not fail to enlarge on the subject,”—Mrs. Macaulay cor. “He is always master of his subject, and seems to play with it:” or,—“seems to sport himself with it.”—Blair cor. “But as soon as it amounts to real disease, all his secret infirmities show themselves.”—Id. “No man repented of his wickedness.”—Bible cor. “Go one way or other, either on the right hand, or on the left,”—Id. “He lies down by the river’s edge.” Or: “He lays himself down on the river’s brink”—W. Walker cor. “For some years past, I have had an ardent wish to retire to some of our American plantations.”—Cowley cor. “I fear thou wilt shrink from the payment of it.”—Ware cor. “We never retain an idea, without acquiring some combination.”—Ripplingham cor.

Page 1720

"Yet more; the stroke of death he must abide,
Then lies he meekly down, fast by his brethren's side."
—Milton cor.

UNDER NOTE III.—OF VERBS MISAPPLIED.

"The parliament confiscated the property of all those who had borne arms against the king."—Hume cor. "The practice of confiscating ships that had been wrecked"—Id. "The nearer his military successes brought him to the throne." Or: "The nearer, through his military successes, he approached the throne."—Id. "In the next example, 'you' represents 'ladies;' therefore it is plural."—Kirkham cor. "The first 'its' stands for 'vale;' the second 'its' represents 'stream.'"—Id. "Pronouns do not always prevent the repetition of nouns."—Id. "Very is an adverb of degree; it relates to the adjective good"—Id. "You will please to commit to memory the following paragraph."—Id. "Even the Greek and Latin passive verbs form some of their tenses by means of auxiliaries."—L. Mur. cor. "The deponent verbs in Latin also employ auxiliaries to form several of their tenses."—Id. "I have no doubt he made as wise and true proverbs, as any body has made since."—Id. "Monotonous delivery assumes as many set forms, as ever Proteus did of fleeting shapes."—Kirkham cor. "When words in apposition are uttered in quick succession."—Nixon cor. "Where many such sentences occur in succession."—L. Mur. cor. "Wisdom leads us to speak and do what is most proper."—Blair and L. Murray cor.

"Jul. Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?
Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee displease." Or:—
"Neither, fair saint, if either thou dislike."—Shak. cor.

UNDER NOTE IV.—OF PASSIVE VERBS.

"To us, too, must be allowed the privilege of forming our own laws." Or: "We too must have the privilege," &c.—L. Murray cor. "For not only is the use of all the ancient poetic feet allowed [to] us," &c.—Id. et al. cor. "By what code of morals is the right or privilege denied me?"—Bartlett cor. "To the children of Israel alone, has the possession of it been denied."—Keith cor. "At York, all quarter was refused to fifteen hundred Jews."—Id. "He would teach the French language in three lessons, provided there were paid him fifty-five dollars in advance."—Prof. Chazotte cor. "And when it was demanded of him by the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come." Or: "And when the Pharisees demanded of him," &c.—Bible cor. "A book has been shown me."—Dr. Campbell cor. "To John Horne Tooke admission was refused, only because he had been in holy orders."—W. Duane cor. "Mr. Horne Tooke having taken orders, admission to the bar was refused him."—Churchill cor. "Its reference to place is disregarded."—Dr. Bullions cor. "What striking lesson is taught by the tenor of this history?"—Bush cor. "No less a sum than eighty thousand pounds had been left him by a friend."—Dr. Priestley cor. "Where there are many things to be done, there must be allowed to each its share of time and labour."—Dr. Johnson cor. "Presenting the subject in a far more practical form, than has heretofore been given it."—Kirkham cor. "If to a being of entire impartiality should be shown the two companies."—Dr. Scott cor. "The command of the British army was offered to him."—Grimshaw cor. "To whom a considerable sum had been unexpectedly left."—Johnson cor. "Whether such a privilege may be granted to a maid or a widow."—Spect. cor. "Happily, to all these affected terms, the public suffrage has been denied."—Campbell cor. "Let the parsing table next be shown him."—Nutting cor. "Then the use of the analyzing table may be explained to him."—Id. "To Pittacus there was offered a great sum of money."—Sanborn cor. "More time for study had been allowed him."—Id. "If a little care were bestowed on the walks that lie between them."—Blair's Rhet., p. 222. "Suppose an office or a bribe be offered me."—Pierpont cor.

Page 1721

"Is then one chaste, one last embrace denied?
Shall I not lay me by his clay-cold side?"—Rowe cor.

UNDER NOTE V.—OF PASSIVE VERBS TRANSITIVE.

"The preposition TO is used before nouns of place, when they follow verbs or participles of motion."—Murray et al. cor. "They were not allowed to enter the house."—Mur. cor. "Their separate signification has been overlooked."—Tooke cor. "But, whenever YE is used, it must be in the nominative case, and not in the objective."—Cobbett cor. "It is said, that more persons than one receive handsome salaries, to see that acts of parliament are properly worded."—Churchill cor. "The following Rudiments of English Grammar have been used in the University of Pennsylvania."—Dr. Rogers cor. "It never should be forgotten."—Newman cor. "A very curious fact has been noticed by those expert metaphysicians."—Campbell cor. "The archbishop interfered that Michelet's lectures might be stopped.”—The Friend cor. “The disturbances in Gottengen have been entirely quelled.”—Daily Adv. cor. “Besides those which are noticed in these exceptions.”—Priestley cor. “As one, two, or three auxiliary verbs are employed.”—Id. “The arguments which have been used.”—Addison cor. “The circumstance is properly noticed by the author.”—Blair cor. “Patagonia has never been taken into possession by any European nation.”—Cumming cor. “He will be censured no more.”—Walker cor. “The thing was to be terminated somehow.”—Hunt cor. “In 1798, the Papal Territory was seized by the French.”—Pinnock cor. “The idea has not for a moment escaped the attention of the Board.”—C. S. Journal cor. “I shall easily be excused from the labour of more transcription.”—Johnson cor. “If I may be allowed to use that expression.”—Campbell cor. “If without offence I may make the observation.”—Id. “There are other characters, which are frequently used in composition.”—Mur. et al. cor. “Such unaccountable infirmities might be overcome, in many cases, and perhaps in most.”—Beattie cor. “Which ought never to be employed, or resorted to.”—Id. “That care may be taken of the widows.” Or: “That the widows may be provided for.”—Barclay cor. “Other cavils will yet be noticed.”—Pope cor. “Which implies, that to all Christians is eternal salvation offered.”—West cor. “Yet even the dogs are allowed to eat the crumbs which fall from their master’s table.”—Campbell cor. “For we say, the light within must be heeded.”—Barclay cor. “This sound of a is noticed in Steele’s Grammar.”—J. Walker cor. “One came to receive ten guineas for a pair of silver buckles.”—M. Edgeworth cor. “Let therefore the application of the several questions in the table be carefully shown [to] him.”—Nutting cor. “After a few times, it is no longer noticed by the hearers.”—Sheridan cor. “It will not admit of the same excuse, nor receive the same indulgence, from people of any discernment.”—Id. “Of inanimate things, property may be made.” Or: “Inanimate things may be made property;” i.e., “may become property.”—Beattie cor.

Page 1722

“And, when some rival bids a higher price,
Will not be sluggish in the work, or nice.”—Butler cor.

UNDER NOTE VI.—OF PERFECT PARTICIPLES.

Page 1723

"All the words employed to denote spiritual or intellectual things, are in their origin metaphors."—Dr. Campbell cor. "A reply to an argument commonly brought forward by unbelievers."—Dr. Blair cor. "It was once the only form used in the past tenses."—Dr. Ash cor. "Of the points and other characters used in writing."—Id. "If THY be the personal pronoun adopted."—Walker cor. "The Conjunction is a word used to connect [words or] sentences."—Burn cor. "The points which answer these purposes, are the four following."—Harrison cor. "INCENSE signifies perfume exhaled by fire, and used in religious ceremonies."—L. Mur. cor. "In most of his orations, there is too much art; he carries it even to ostentation."—Blair cor. "To illustrate the great truth, so often overlooked in our times."—C. S. Journal cor. "The principal figures calculated to affect the heart, are Exclamation, Confession, Deprecation, Commination, and Imprecation."—Formey cor. "Disgusted at the odious artifices employed by the judge."—Junius cor. "All the reasons for which there was allotted to us a condition out of which so much wickedness and misery would in fact arise."—Bp. Butler cor. "Some characteristical circumstance being generally invented or seized upon."—Ld. Kames cor.

"And BY is likewise used with names that shew
The method or the means of what we do."—Ward cor.

UNDER NOTE VII.—OF CONSTRUCTIONS AMBIGUOUS.

"Many adverbs admit of degrees of comparison, as do adjectives."—Priestley cor. "But the author who, by the number and reputation of his works, did more than any one else, to bring our language into its present state, was Dryden."—Blair cor. "In some states, courts of admiralty have no juries, nor do courts of chancery employ any at all."—Webster cor. "I feel grateful to my friend."—Murray cor. "This requires a writer to have in his own mind a very clear apprehension of the object which he means to present to us."—Blair cor. "Sense has its own harmony, which naturally contributes something to the harmony of sound."—Id. "The apostrophe denotes the omission of an i, which was formerly inserted, and which gave to the word an additional syllable."—Priestley cor. "There are few to whom I can refer with more advantage than to Mr. Addison."—Blair cor. "DEATH, (in theology,) is a perpetual separation from God, a state of eternal torments."—Webster cor. "That could inform the traveller as well as could the old man himself!"—O. B. Peirce cor.

Page 1724

UNDER NOTE VIII.—OF YE AND YOU IN SCRIPTURE.

“Ye daughters of Rabbah, gird you with sackcloth.”—SCOTT, FRIENDS, and the COMPREHENSIVE BIBLE: Jer., xlix, 3. “Wash you, make you clean.”—SCOTT, ALGER, FRIENDS, ET AL.: Isaiah, i, 16. “Strip you, and make you bare, and gird sackcloth upon your loins.”—SCOTT, FRIENDS, ET AL.: Isaiah, xxxii, 11. “Ye are not ashamed that ye make yourselves strange to me.”—SCOTT, BRUCE, and BLAYNEY: Job, xix, 3. “If ye knew the gift of God.” Or: “If thou knew the gift of God.”—See John, iv, 10. “Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity; I know you not.”—Penington cor.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE VI; OF SAME CASES.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—OF PROPER IDENTITY.

“Who would not say, ‘If it be I,’ rather than, ‘If it be me?’”—Priestley cor. “Who is there? It is I.”—Id. “It is he.”—Id. “Are these the houses you were speaking of? Yes; they are the same.”—Id. “It is not I, that you are in love with.”—Addison cor. “It cannot be I.”—Swift cor. “To that which once was thou.”—Prior cor. “There is but one man that she can have, and that man is myself.”—Priestley cor. “We enter, as it were, into his body, and become in some measure he.” Or, better:—“and become in some measure identified with him.”—A. Smith and Priestley cor. “Art thou proud yet? Ay, that I am not thou.”—Shak. cor. “He knew not who they were.”—Milnes cor. “Whom do you think me to be?”—Dr. Lowth’s Gram., p. 17. “Who do men say that I, the Son of man, am?”—Bible cor. “But who say ye that I am?”—Id. “Who think ye that I am? I am not he.”—Id. “No; I am in error; I perceive it is not the person that I supposed it was.”—Winter in London cor. “And while it is He that I serve, life is not without value.”—Ware cor. “Without ever dreaming it was he.”—Charles XII cor. “Or he was not the illiterate personage that he affected to be.”—Montgom. cor. “Yet was he the man who was to be the greatest apostle of the Gentiles.”—Barclay cor. “Sweet was the thrilling ecstasy; I know not if ’twas love, or thou.”—J. Hogg cor. “Time was, when none would cry, that oaf was I.”—Dryden cor. “No matter where the vanquished be, or who.”—Rowe cor. “No; I little thought it had been he.”—Gratton cor. “That reverence, that godly fear, which is ever due to ’Him who can destroy both body and soul in hell.”—Maturin cor. “It is we that they seek to please, or rather to astonish.”—J. West cor. “Let the same be her that thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac.”—Bible cor. “Although I knew it to be him.”—Dickens cor. “Dear gentle youth, is’t none but thou?”—Dorset cor. “Who do they say it is?”—Fowler cor.

Page 1725

"These are her garb, not she; they but express
Her form, her semblance, her appropriate dress."—More cor.

UNDER NOTE I.—OF THE CASE DOUBTFUL.

"I had no knowledge of any connexion between them."—Col. Stone cor. "To promote iniquity in others, is nearly the same thing, as to be the actors of it ourselves." (That is, "For us to promote iniquity in others, is nearly the same thing as for us to be the actors of it ourselves.")—Murray cor. "It must arise from a delicate feeling in ourselves."—Blair and Murray cor. "Because there has not been exercised a competent physical power for their enforcement."—Mass. Legisl. cor. "PUPILAGE, n. The state of a pupil, or scholar."—Dictionaries cor. "Then the other part, being the definition, would include all verbs, of every description."—Peirce cor. "John's friendship for me saved me from inconvenience."—Id. "William's judgeship"—or, "William's appointment to the office of judge,—changed his whole demeanour."—Id. "William's practical acquaintance with teaching, was the cause of the interest he felt."—Id. "To be but one among many, stifled the chidings of conscience."—Tupper cor. "As for the opinion that it is a close translation, I doubt not that many have been led into that error by the shortness of it."—Pope cor. "All presumption that death is the destruction of living beings, must go upon the supposition that they are compounded, and therefore discernible."—Bp. Butler cor. "This argues rather that they are proper names."—Churchill cor. "But may it not be retorted, that this gratification itself, is that which excites our resentment?"—Campbell cor. "Under the common notion, that it is a system of the whole poetical art."—Blair cor. "Whose want of time, or whose other circumstances, forbid them to become classical scholars."—Lit. Jour. cor. "It would prove him not to have been a mere fictitious personage." Or: "It would preclude the notion that he was merely a fictitious personage."—Phil. Mu. cor. "For heresy, or under pretence that they are heretics or infidels."—Oath cor. "We may here add Dr. Horne's sermon on Christ, as being the Object of religious adoration."—Rel. World cor. "To say nothing of Dr. Priestley, as being a strenuous advocate," &c.—Id. "Through the agency of Adam, as being their public head." Or: "Because Adam was their public head."—Id. "Objections against the existence of any such moral plan as this."—Butler cor. "A greater instance of a man being a blockhead.”—Spect. cor. “We may insure or promote what will make it a happy state of existence to ourselves.”—Gurney cor. “Since it often undergoes the same kind of unnatural treatment.”—Kirkham cor. “Their apparent foolishness”—“Their appearance of foolishness”—or, “That they appear foolishness,—is no presumption against this.”—Butler cor. “But what arises from them as being offences; i.e., from their liability to be perverted.”—Id. “And he went into the house of a certain man named Justus, one that worshiped God.”—Acts cor.

Page 1726

UNDER NOTE II.—OF FALSE IDENTIFICATION.

“But popular, he observes, is an ambiguous word.”—Blair cor. “The infinitive mood, a phrase, or a sentence, is often made the subject of a verb.”—Murray cor. “When any person, in speaking, introduces his name after the pronoun I, it is of the first person; as, ‘I, James, of the city of Boston.’”—R. C. Smith cor. “The name of the person spoken to, is of the second person; as, ‘James, come to me.’”—Id. “The name of the person or thing merely spoken of, or about, is of the third person; as, ‘James has come.’”—Id. “The passive verb has no object, because its subject or nominative always represents what is acted upon, and the object of a verb must needs be in the objective case.”—Id. “When a noun is in the nominative to an active verb, it denotes the actor.”—Kirkham cor. “And the pronoun THOU or YE, standing for the name of the person or persons commanded, is its nominative.”—Ingersoll cor. “The first person is that which denotes the speaker.”—Brown’s Institutes, p. 32. “The conjugation of a verb is a regular arrangement of its different variations or inflections throughout the moods and tenses.”—Wright cor. “The first person is that which denotes the speaker or writer.”—G. BROWN: for the correction of Parker and Fox, Hiley, and Sanborn. “The second person is that which denotes the hearer, or the person addressed.”—Id.: for the same. “The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of.”—Id.: for the same, “I is of the first person, singular; WE, of the first person, plural.”—Mur. et al. cor. “THOU is of the second person, singular; YE or You, of the second person, plural.”—Id. “HE, SHE, or IT, is of the third person, singular; THEY, of the third person, plural.”—Id. “The nominative case denotes the actor, and is the subject of the verb.”—Kirkham cor. “John is the actor, therefore the noun JOHN is in the nominative case.”—Id. “The actor is always expressed by the nominative case, unless the verb be passive.”—R. C. Smith cor. “The nominative case does not always denote an agent or actor.”—Mack cor. “In mentioning each name, tell the part of speech.”—John Flint cor. “Of what number is boy? Why?”—Id. “Of what number is pens? Why?”—Id. “The speaker is denoted by the first person; the person spoken to is denoted by the second person; and the person or thing spoken of is denoted by the third person.”—Id. “What nouns are of the masculine gender? The names of all males are of the masculine gender.”—Id. “An interjection is a word that is uttered merely to indicate some strong or sudden emotion of the mind.”—G. Brown’s Grammars.

Page 1727

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE VII; OF OBJECTIVES.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—OF THE OBJECTIVE IN FORM.

“But I do not remember whom they were for.”—Abbott cor. “But if you can’t help it, whom do you complain of?”—Collier cor. “Whom was it from? and what was it about?”—M. Edgeworth cor. “I have plenty of victuals, and, between you and me, something in a corner.”—Day cor. “The upper one, whom I am now about to speak of.”—Leigh Hunt cor. “And to poor us, thy enmity is most capital.”—Shak. cor. “Which, thou dost confess, ’twere fit for thee to use, as them to claim.” That is,—“as for them to claim.”—Id. “To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour, than thee of them.” That is,—“than for thee to beg of them.”—Id. “There are still a few, who, like thee and me, drink nothing but water.”—Gil Bias cor. “Thus, ‘I shall fall,’—‘Thou shalt love thy neighbour,’—‘He shall be rewarded,’—express no resolution on the part of me, thee, or him.” Or better: —“on the part of the persons signified by the nominatives, I, Thou, He.”—Lennie and Bullions cor. “So saucy with the hand of her here—what’s her name?”—Shak. cor. “All debts are cleared between you and me.”—Id. “Her price is paid, and she is sold like thee.”—HARRISON’S E. Lang., p. 172. “Search through all the most flourishing eras of Greece.”—Dr. Brown cor. “The family of the Rudolphs has been long distinguished.”—The Friend cor. “It will do well enough for you and me.”—Edgeworth cor. “The public will soon discriminate between him who is the sycophant, and him who is the teacher.”—Chazotte cor. “We are still much at a loss to determine whom civil power belongs to.”—Locke cor. “What do you call it? and to whom does it belong?"—Collier cor. "He had received no lessons from the Socrateses, the Platoes, and the Confuciuses of the age."—Haller cor. "I cannot tell whom to compare them to."—Bunyan cor. "I see there was some resemblance betwixt this good man and me."—Id. "They, by those means, have brought themselves into the hands and house of I do not know whom."—Id. "But at length she said, there was a great deal of difference between Mr. Cotton and us."—Hutch. Hist. cor. "So you must ride on horseback after us."—Mrs. Gilpin cor. "A separation must soon take place between our minister and me,"—Werter cor. "When she exclaimed on Hastings, you, and me."—Shak. cor. "To whom? to thee? What art thou?"—Id. "That they should always bear the certain marks of him from whom they came."—Bp. Butler cor.

Page 1728

"This life has joys for you and me,
And joys that riches ne'er could buy."—Burns cor.

UNDER THE NOTE.—OF TIME OR MEASURE.

"Such as almost every child, ten years old, knows."—Town cor. "Four months' schooling will carry any industrious scholar, of ten or twelve years of age, completely through this book."—Id. "A boy of six years of age may be taught to speak as correctly, as Cicero did before the Roman senate."—Webster cor. "A lad about twelve years old, who was taken captive by the Indians."—Id. "Of nothing else than that individual white figure of five inches in length, which is before him."—Campbell cor. "Where lies the fault, that boys of eight or ten years of age are with great difficulty made to understand any of its principles?"—Guy cor. "Where language three centuries old is employed."—Booth cor. "Let a gallows be made, of fifty cubits in height." Or: "Let a gallows fifty cubits high be made."—Bible cor. "I say to this child, nine years old, 'Bring me that hat.' He hastens, and brings it me."—Osborn cor. "'He laid a floor, twelve feet long, and nine feet wide:' that is, the floor was long to the extent of twelve feet, and wide to the extent of nine feet."—Merchant cor. "The Goulah people are a tribe of about fifty thousand in strength." Or: "The Goulah people are a tribe about fifty thousand strong."—Examiner cor.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE VIII; NOM. ABSOLUTE.

"He having ended his discourse, the assembly dispersed."—Inst. of E. G., p. 190. "I being young, they deceived me."—Ib., p. 279. "They refusing to comply, I withdrew."—Ib. "Thou being present, he would not tell what he knew."—Ib. "The child is lost; and I, whither shall I go?"—Ib. "O happy we! surrounded with so many blessings."—Ib. "'Thou too! Brutus, my son!' cried Caesar, overcome."—Ib. "Thou! Maria! and so late! and who is thy companion?"—Mirror cor. "How swiftly our time passes away! and ah! we, how little concerned to improve it!"—Greenleaf's False Syntax, Gram., p. 47.

Page 1729

"There all thy gifts and graces we display,
Thou, only thou, directing all our way."—Pope, Dunciad.

CHAPTER IV.—ADJECTIVES.

CORRECTIONS UNDER THE NOTES TO RULE IX.

UNDER NOTE I.—OF AGREEMENT.

"I am not recommending this kind of sufferings to your liking."—Sherlock cor. "I have not been to London these five years."—Webster cor. "Verbs of this kind are more expressive than their radicals."—Dr. Murray cor. "Few of us would be less corrupted than kings are, were we, like them, beset with flatterers, and poisoned with those vermin."—Kames cor. "But it seems these literati had been very ill rewarded for their ingenious labours."—R. Random cor. "If I had not left off troubling myself about things of that kind."—Swift cor. "For things of this sort are usually joined to the most noted fortune."—Bacon cor. "The nature of those riches and that long-suffering, is, to lead to repentance."—Barclay cor. "I fancy it is this kind of gods, that Horace mentions."—Addison cor. "During those eight days, they are prohibited from touching the skin."—Hope of Is. cor. "Besides, he had but a small quantity of provisions left for his army."—Goldsmith cor. "Are you not ashamed to have no other thoughts than those of amassing wealth, and of acquiring glory, credit, and dignities?"—Murray's Sequel, p. 115. "It distinguishes still more remarkably the feelings of the former from those of the latter."—Kames cor. "And these good tidings of the reign shall be published through all the world."—Campbell cor. "These twenty years have I been with thee."—Gen. cor. "In this kind of expressions, some words seem to be understood."—W. Walker cor. "He thought this kind of excesses indicative of greatness."—Hunt cor. "This sort of fellows is very numerous." Or thus: "Fellows of this sort are very numerous."—Spect. cor. "Whereas men of this sort cannot give account of their faith." Or: "Whereas these men cannot give account of their faith."—Barclay cor. "But the question is, whether those are the words."—Id. "So that expressions of this sort are not properly optative."—R. Johnson cor. "Many things are not such as they appear to be."—Sanborn cor. "So that all possible means are used."—Formey cor.

"We have strict statutes, and most biting laws,
Which for these nineteen years we have let sleep."—Shak. cor.

"They could not speak, and so I left them both,
To bear these tidings to the bloody king."—Shak. cor.

Page 1730

UNDER NOTE II.—OF FIXED NUMBERS.

"Why, I think she cannot be above six feet two inches high."—Spect. cor. "The world is pretty regular for about forty rods east and ten west."—Id. "The standard being more than two feet above it."—Bacon cor. "Supposing, among other things, that he saw two suns, and two Thebeses."—Id. "On the right hand we go into a parlour thirty-three feet by thirty-nine."—Sheffield cor. "Three pounds of gold went to one shield."—1 Kings cor. "Such an assemblage of men as there appears to have been at that session."—The Friend cor. "And, truly, he has saved me from this labour."—Barclay cor. "Within these three miles may you see it coming."—Shak. cor. "Most of the churches, not all, had one ruling elder or more."—Hutch. cor. "While a Minute Philosopher, not six feet high, attempts to dethrone the Monarch of the universe."—Berkley cor. "The wall is ten feet high."—Harrison cor. "The stalls must be ten feet broad."—Walker cor. "A close prisoner in a room twenty feet square, being at the north side of his chamber, is at liberty to walk twenty feet southward, not to walk twenty feet northward."—Locke cor. "Nor, after all this care and industry, did they think themselves qualified."—C. Orator cor. "No fewer than thirteen Gypsies were condemned at one Suffolk assize, and executed."—Webster cor. "The king was petitioned to appoint one person or more."—Mrs. Macaulay cor. "He carries weight! he rides a race! 'Tis for a thousand pounds."—Cowper cor. "They carry three tiers of guns at the head, and at the stern, two tiers"—Joh. Dict. cor. "The verses consist of two sorts of rhymes."—Formey cor. "A present of forty camel-loads of the most precious things of Syria."—Wood's Dict. cor. "A large grammar, that shall extend to every minutia"—S. Barrett cor.

"So many spots, like naeves on Venus' soil,
One gem set off with many a glitt'ring foil."—Dryden cor.

"For, off the end, a double handful
It had devour'd, it was so manful."—Butler cor.

UNDER NOTE III.—OF RECIPROCALs.

"That shall and will might be substituted one for the other."—Priestley cor. "We use not shall and will promiscuously the one for the other."—Brightland cor. "But I wish to distinguish the three high ones from one an other also."—Fowle cor. "Or on some other relation which two objects bear to each other."—Blair

Page 1731

cor. "Yet the two words lie so near to each other in meaning, that, in the present case, perhaps either of them would have been sufficient."—Id. "Both orators use great liberties in their treatment of each other."—Id. "That greater separation of the two sexes from each other."—Id. "Most of whom live remote from one an other."—Webster cor. "Teachers like to see their pupils polite to one an other"—Id. "In a little time, he and I must keep company with each other only."—Spect. cor. "Thoughts and circumstances crowd upon one an other."—Kames cor. "They cannot perceive how the ancient Greeks could understand one an other."—Lit. Conv. cor. "The poet, the patriot, and the prophet, vied with one an other in his breast."—Hazlitt cor. "Athamas and Ino loved each other."—C. Tales cor. "Where two things are compared or contrasted one with the other." Or: "Where two things, are compared or contrasted with each other."—Blair and Mur. cor. "In the classification of words, almost all writers differ from one an other."—Bullions cor.

"I will not trouble thee, my child. Farewell; We'll no more meet; we'll no more see each other."—Shak. cor.

UNDER NOTE IV.—OF COMPARATIVES.

"Errors in education should be less indulged than any others."—Locke cor. "This was less his case than any other man's that ever wrote."—Pref. to Waller cor. "This trade enriched some other people more than it enriched them."—Mur. cor. "The Chaldee alphabet, in which the Old Testament has reached us, is more beautiful than any other ancient character known."—Wilson cor. "The Christian religion gives a more lovely character of God, than any other religion ever did."—Murray cor. "The temple of Cholula was deemed more holy than any other in New Spain."—Robertson cor. "Cibber grants it to be a better poem of its kind than any other that ever was written"—Pope cor. "Shakspeare is more faithful to the true language of nature, than any other writer."—Blair cor. "One son I had—one, more than all my other sons, the strength of Troy." Or: "One son I had—one, the most of all my sons, the strength of Troy."—Cowper cor. "Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his other children, because he was the son of his old age."—Bible cor.

UNDER NOTE V.—OF SUPERLATIVES.

Page 1732

"Of all simpletons, he was the greatest"—Nutting cor. "Of all beings, man has certainly the greatest reason for gratitude."—Id. "This lady is prettier than any of her sisters."—Peyton cor. "The relation which, of all the class, is by far the most fruitful of tropes, I have not yet mentioned."—Blair cor. "He studied Greek the most of all noblemen."—W. Walker cor. "And indeed that was the qualification which was most wanted at that time."—Goldsmith cor. "Yet we deny that the knowledge of him as outwardly crucified, is the best of all knowledge of him."—Barclay cor. "Our ideas of numbers are, of all our conceptions, the most accurate and distinct"—Duncan cor. "This indeed is, of all cases, the one in which it is least necessary to name the agent"—J. Q. Adams cor. "The period to which you have arrived, is perhaps the most critical and important moment of your lives."—Id. "Perry's royal octavo is esteemed the best of all the pronouncing dictionaries yet known."—D. H. Barnes cor. "This is the tenth persecution, and, of all the ten the most bloody."—Sammes cor. "The English tongue is the most susceptible of sublime imagery, of all the languages in the world."—Bucke cor. "Of all writers whatever, Homer is universally allowed to have had the greatest Invention."—Pope cor. "In a version of this particular work, which, more than any other, seems to require a venerable, antique cast."—Id. "Because I think him the best-informed naturalist that has ever written."—Jefferson cor. "Man is capable of being the most social of all animals."—Sheridan cor. "It is, of all signs (or expressions) that which most moves us."—Id. "Which, of all articles, is the most necessary."—Id.

"Quoth he, 'This gambol thou advisest,
Is, of all projects, the unwisest.'"—S. Butler cor.

UNDER NOTE VI.—OF INCLUSIVE TERMS.

"Noah and his family were the only antediluvians who survived the flood."—Webster cor. "I think it superior to any other grammar that we have yet had."—Blair cor. "We have had no other grammarian who has employed so much labour and judgement upon our native language, as has the author of these volumes."—British Critic cor. "Those persons feel most for the distresses of others, who have experienced distresses themselves."—L. Murray cor. "Never was any other people so much infatuated as the Jewish nation."—Id. et al. cor. "No other tongue is so full of connective particles as the Greek."—Blair cor. "Never was sovereign so much beloved by the people." Or: "Never was any other sovereign so much beloved by his people.”—L. Murray cor. “Nothing else ever affected her so much as this misconduct of her child.”—Id. et al. cor. “Of all the figures of speech, no other comes so near to painting as does metaphor.”—Blair et al. cor. “I know no other writer so happy in his metaphors as is Mr. Addison.”—Blair cor. “Of all the English authors, none is more happy in his metaphors than Addison.”—Jamieson cor. “Perhaps no other writer in the world was ever so frugal of his words as Aristotle.”—Blair and Jamieson cor. “Never was any other writer so happy in that concise and spirited style, as Mr. Pope.”—Blair cor. “In the harmonious structure and disposition of his periods, no other writer whatever, ancient or modern, equals Cicero.”—Blair and Jamieson cor. “Nothing else delights me so much as the works of nature.”—L. Mur. cor. “No person was ever more perplexed than he has been to-day.”—Id. “In no other case are writers so apt to err, as in the position of the word only.”—Maunder cor. “For nothing is more tiresome than perpetual uniformity.”—Blair cor.

Page 1733

“Naught else sublimes the spirit, sets it free,
Like sacred and soul-moving poesy.”—Sheffield cor.

UNDER NOTE VII.—EXTRA COMPARISONS.

“How much better are ye than the fowls!”—Bible cor. “Do not thou hasten above the Most High.”—Esdras cor. “This word, PEER, is principally used for the nobility of the realm.”—Cowell cor. “Because the same is not only most generally received, &c.”—Barclay cor. “This is, I say, not the best and most important evidence.”—Id. “Offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay thy vows unto the Most High.”—The Psalter cor. “The holy place of the tabernacle of the Most High.”—Id. “As boys should be educated with temperance, so the first great lesson that should be taught them, is, to admire frugality.”—Goldsmith cor. “More general terms are put for such as are more restricted.”—Rev. J. Brown cor. “This, this was the unkindest cut of all.”—Enfield’s Speaker, p. 353. “To take the basest and most squalid shape.”—Shak. cor. “I’ll forbear: I have fallen out with my more heady will.”—Id. “The power of the Most High guard thee from sin.”—Percival cor. “Which title had been more true, if the dictionary had been in Latin and Welsh.”—Verstegan cor. “The waters are frozen sooner and harder, than further upward, within the inlands.”—Id. “At every descent, the worst may become more depraved.”—Mann cor.

Page 1734

"Or as a moat defensive to a house Against the envy of less happy lands."—Shak. cor.

"A dreadful quiet felt, and worse by far
Than arms, a sullen interval of war."—Dryden cor.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—ADJECTIVES CONNECTED.

"It breaks forth in its highest, most energetic, and most impassioned strain."—Kirkham cor. "He has fallen into the vilest and grossest sort of railing."—Barclay cor. "To receive that higher and more general instruction which the public affords."—J. O. Taylor cor. "If the best things have the best and most perfect operations."—Hooker cor. "It became the plainest and most elegant, the richest and most splendid, of all languages."—Bucke cor. "But the principal and most frequent use of pauses, is, to mark the divisions of the sense."—Blair cor. "That every thing belonging to ourselves is the best and the most perfect."—Clarkson cor. "And to instruct their pupils in the best and most thorough manner."—School Committee cor.

UNDER NOTE IX.—ADJECTIVES SUPERADDED.

"The Father is figured out as a venerable old man."—Brownlee cor. "There never was exhibited an other such masterpiece of ghostly assurance."—Id. "After the first three sentences, the question is entirely lost."—Spect. cor. "The last four parts of speech are commonly called particles."—Al. Murray cor. "The last two chapters will not be found deficient in this respect."—Todd cor. "Write upon your slates a list of the first ten nouns."—J. Abbott cor. "We have a few remains of two other Greek poets in the pastoral style, Moschus and Bion."—Blair cor. "The first nine chapters of the book of Proverbs are highly poetical."—Id. "For, of these five heads, only the first two have any particular relation to the sublime."—Id. "The resembling sounds of the last two syllables give a ludicrous air to the whole."—Kames cor. "The last three are arbitrary."—Id. "But in the sentence, 'She hangs the curtains,' hangs is an active-transitive verb."—Comly cor. "If our definition of a verb, and the arrangement of active-transitive, active-intransitive, passive, and neuter verbs, are properly understood."—Id. "These last two lines have an embarrassing construction."—Rush cor. "God was provoked to drown them all, but Noah and seven other persons."—Wood cor. "The first six books of the Aeneid are extremely beautiful."—Formey cor. "Only a few instances more can here be given."—Murray cor. "A few years more will obliterate every vestige of a subjunctive form."—Nutting

Page 1735

cor. "Some define them to be verbs devoid of the first two persons."—Crombie cor. "In an other such Essay-tract as this."—White cor. "But we fear that not an other such man is to be found."—Edward Irving cor. "O for an other such sleep, that I might see an other such man!" Or, to preserve poetic measure, say:—

"O for such sleep again, that I might see
An other such man, though but in a dream!"—Shak. cor.

UNDER NOTE X.—ADJECTIVES FOR ADVERBS.

"The is an article, relating to the noun balm, agreeably to Rule 11th."—Comly cor. "Wise is an adjective, relating to the noun man's, agreeably to Rule 11th."—Id. "To whom I observed, that the beer was extremely good."—Goldsmith cor. "He writes very elegantly." Or: "He writes with remarkable elegance."—O. B. Peirce cor. "John behaves very civilly (or, with true civility) to all men."—Id. "All the sorts of words hitherto considered, have each of them some meaning, even when taken separately."—Beattie cor. "He behaved himself conformably to that blessed example."—Sprat cor. "Marvellously graceful."—Clarendon cor. "The Queen having changed her ministry, suitably to her wisdom."—Swift cor. "The assertions of this author are more easily detected."—Id. "The characteristic of his sect allowed him to affirm no more strongly than that."—Bentley cor. "If one author had spoken more nobly and loftily than an other."—Id. "Xenophon says expressly."—Id. "I can never think so very meanly of him."—Id. "To convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have impiously committed."—Bible cor. "I think it very ably written." Or: "I think it written in a very masterly manner."—Swift cor. "The whole design must refer to the golden age, which it represents in a lively manner."—Addison cor. "Agreeably to this, we read of names being blotted out of God's book."—Burder et al. cor. "Agreeably to the law of nature, children are bound to support their indigent parents."—Paley. "Words taken independently of their meaning, are parsed as nouns of the neuter gender."—Maltby cor.

"Conceit in weakest bodies strongliest works."—Shak. cor.

UNDER NOTE XI.—THEM FOR THOSE.

Page 1736

"Though he was not known by those letters, or the name CHRIST."—Bayly cor. "In a gig, or some of those things." Better: "In a gig, or some such vehicle."—M. Edgeworth cor. "When cross-examined by those lawyers."—Same. "As the custom in those cases is."—Same. "If you had listened to those slanders."—Same. "The old people were telling stories about those fairies; but, to the best of my judgement, there is nothing in them."—Same. "And is it not a pity that the Quakers have no better authority to substantiate their principles, than the testimony of those old Pharisees?"—Hibbard cor.

UNDER NOTE XII.—THIS AND THAT.

"Hope is as strong an incentive to action, as fear: that is the anticipation of good, this of evil."—Inst., p. 265. "The poor want some advantages which the rich enjoy; but we should not therefore account these happy, and those miserable."—Inst., p. 266.

"Ellen and Margaret, fearfully,
Sought comfort in each other's eye;

Then turned their ghastly look each one,
That to her sire, this to her son."—Scott cor.

"Six youthful sons, as many blooming maids, In one sad day beheld the Stygian shades;
Those by Apollo's silver bow were slain, These Cynthia's arrows stretch'd upon the plain."—Pope cor.

"Memory and forecast just returns engage,
That pointing back to youth, this on to age."—Pope, on Man.

UNDER NOTE XIII.—EITHER AND NEITHER.

"These make the three great subjects of discussion among mankind; namely, truth, duty, and interest: but the arguments directed towards any of them are generically distinct."—Dr. Blair cor. "A thousand other deviations may be made, and still any of the accounts may be correct in principle; for all these divisions, and their technical terms, are arbitrary."—R. W. Green cor. "Thus it appears, that our alphabet is deficient; as it has but seven vowels to represent thirteen different sounds; and has no letter to represent any of five simple consonant sounds."—Churchill cor. "Then none of these five verbs can be neuter."—O. B. Peirce cor. "And the assertor[534] is in none of the four already mentioned."—Id. "As it is not in any of these four."—Id. "See whether or not the word comes within the definition of any of the other three simple cases."—Id. "No one of the ten was there."—Frazee cor. "Here are ten oranges, take any one of them."—Id. "There are three modes, by any of which recollection will generally be supplied; inclination, practice, and association."—Ripplingham cor. "Words not reducible to any of the three preceding heads.”—Fowler cor. “Now a sentence may be analyzed in reference to any of these four classes.”—Id.

Page 1737

UNDER NOTE XIV.—WHOLE, LESS, MORE, AND MOST.

"Does not all proceed from the law, which regulates all the departments of the state?"—Blair cor. "A messenger relates to Theseus all the particulars."—Ld. Kames cor. "There are no fewer than twenty-nine diphthongs in the English language."—Ash cor. "The Redcross Knight runs through all the steps of the Christian life."—Spect. cor. "There were not fewer than fifty or sixty persons present."—Mills and Merchant cor. "Greater experience, and a more cultivated state of society, abate the warmth of imagination, and chasten the manner of expression."—Blair and Murray cor. "By which means, knowledge, rather than oratory, has become the principal requisite."—Blair cor. "No fewer than seven illustrious cities disputed the right of having given birth to the greatest of poets."—Lempriere cor. "Temperance, rather than medicines, is the proper means of curing many diseases."—Murray cor. "I do not suppose, that we Britons are more deficient in genius than our neighbours."—Id. "In which, he says, he has found no fewer than twelve untruths."—Barclay cor. "The several places of rendezvous were concerted, and all the operations were fixed."—Hume cor. "In these rigid opinions, all the sectaries concurred."—Id. "Out of whose modifications have been made nearly all complex modes."—Locke cor. "The Chinese vary each of their words on no fewer than five different tones."—Blair cor. "These people, though they possess brighter qualities, are not so proud as he is, nor so vain as she."—Murray cor. "It is certain, that we believe our own judgements more firmly, after we have made a thorough inquiry into the things."—Brightland cor. "As well as the whole course and all the reasons of the operation."—Id. "Those rules and principles which are of the greatest practical advantage."—Newman cor. "And all curse shall be no more."—Rev. cor.—(See the Greek.) "And death shall be no more."—Id. "But, in recompense, we have pleasanter pictures of ancient manners."—Blair cor. "Our language has suffered a greater number of injurious changes in America, since the British army landed on our shores, than it had suffered before, in the period of three centuries."—Webster cor. "All the conveniences of life are derived from mutual aid and support in society."—Ld. Kames cor.

UNDER NOTE XV.—PARTICIPIAL ADJECTIVES.

Page 1738

"To such as think the nature of it deserving of their attention."—Bp. Butler cor. "In all points, more deserving of the approbation of their readers."—Keepsake cor. "But to give way to childish sensations, was unbecoming to our nature."—Lempriere cor. "The following extracts are deserving of the serious perusal of all."—The Friend cor. "No inquiry into wisdom, however superficial, is undeserving of attention."—Bulwer cor. "The opinions of illustrious men are deserving of great consideration."—Porter cor. "And resolutely keep its laws. Uncaring for consequences." Or:—"Not heeding consequences."—Burns cor. "This is an item that is deserving of more attention."—Goodell cor.

"Leave then thy joys, unsuited to such age:"—Or,

"Leave then thy joys not suiting such an age,
To a fresh comer, and resign the stage."—Dryden cor.

UNDER NOTE XVI.—FIGURE OF ADJECTIVES.

"The tall dark mountains and the deep-toned seas."—Dana. "O! learn from him To station quick-eyed Prudence at the helm."—Frost cor. "He went in a one-horse chaise."—David Blair cor. "It ought to be, 'in a one-horse chaise.'"—Crombie cor. "These are marked with the above-mentioned letters."—Folker cor. "A many-headed faction."—Ware cor. "Lest there should be no authority in any popular grammar, for the perhaps heaven-inspired effort."—Fowle cor. "Common-metre stanzas consist of four iambic lines; one of eight, and the next of six syllables. They were formerly written in two fourteen-syllable lines."—Goodenow cor. "Short-metre stanzas consist of four iambic lines; the third of eight, the rest of six syllables."—Id. "Particular-metre stanzas consist of six iambic lines; the third and sixth of six syllables, the rest of eight."—Id. "Hallelujah-metre stanzas consist of six iambic lines; the last two of eight syllables, and the rest of six."—Id. "Long-metre stanzas are merely the union of four iambic lines, of ten syllables each."—Id. "A majesty more commanding than is to be found among the rest of the Old-Testament poets."—Blair cor.

"You, sulphurous and thought-executed fires, Vaunt-couriers to oak-cleaving thunderbolts, Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder, Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world!"—Lear, Act iii, Sc. 2.

CHAPTER V.—PRONOUNS.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE X AND ITS NOTES.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—OF AGREEMENT.

Page 1739

"The subject is to be joined with its predicate."—Wilkins cor. "Every one must judge of his own feelings."—Byron cor. "Every one in the family should know his or her duty."—Penn cor. "To introduce its possessor into that way in which he should go."—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "Do not they say, that every true believer has the Spirit of God in him?"—Barclay cor. "There is none in his natural state righteous; no, not one."—Wood cor. "If ye were of the world, the world would love its own."—Bible cor. "His form had not yet lost all its original brightness."—Milton cor. "No one will answer as if I were his friend or companion."—Steele cor. "But, in lowliness of mind, let each esteem others better than himself."—Bible cor. "And let none of you imagine evil in his heart against his neighbour."—Id. "For every tree is known by its own fruit."—Id. "But she fell to laughing, like one out of his right mind."—M. Edgeworth cor. "Now these systems, so far from having any tendency to make men better, have a manifest tendency to make them worse."—Wayland cor. "And nobody else would make that city his refuge any more."—Josephus cor. "What is quantity, as it respects syllables or words? It is the time which a speaker occupies in pronouncing them."—Bradley cor. "In such expressions, the adjective so much resembles an adverb in its meaning, that it is usually parsed as such."—Bullions cor. "The tongue is like a racehorse; which runs the faster, the less weight he carries." Or thus: "The tongue is like a racehorse; the less weight it carries, the faster it runs."—Addison, Murray, et al. cor. "As two thoughtless boys were trying to see which could lift the greatest weight with his jaws, one of them had several of his firm-set teeth wrenched from their sockets."—Newspaper cor. "Every body nowadays publishes memoirs; every body has recollections which he thinks worthy of recording."—Duchess D'Ab. cor. "Every body trembled, for himself, or for his friends."—Goldsmith cor.

"A steed comes at morning: no rider is there;
But his bridle is red with the sign of despair."—Campbell cor.

UNDER NOTE I.—PRONOUNS WRONG—OR NEEDLESS.

"Charles loves to study; but John, alas! is very idle."—Merchant cor. "Or what man is there of you, who, if his son ask bread, will give him a stone?"—Bible cor. "Who, in stead of going about doing good, are perpetually intent upon doing mischief."—Tillotson cor. "Whom ye delivered up, and denied in the presence of Pontius Pilate."—Bible cor. "Whom, when they had washed her, they laid in an upper chamber.”—Id. “Then Manasseh knew that the Lord was God.”—Id. “Whatever a man conceives clearly, he may, if he will be at the trouble, put into distinct propositions, and express clearly to others.”—See Blair’s Rhet., p. 93. “But the painter, being entirely confined to that part of time which he has chosen, cannot exhibit various stages of the same action.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 195. “What he subjoins, is without any proof at all.”—Barclay cor. “George Fox’s Testimony concerning Robert Barclay.”—Title cor. “According to the advice of the author of the Postscript [sic—KTH].”—Barclay cor. “These things seem as ugly to the eye of their meditations, as those Ethiopians that were pictured on Nemesis’s pitcher.”—Bacon cor. “Moreover, there is always a twofold condition propounded with the Sphinx’s enigmas.”—Id. “Whoever believeth not therein, shall perish.”—Koran cor. “When, at Sestius’s entreaty, I had been at his house.”—W. Walker cor.

Page 1740

“There high on Sipylos’s shaggy brow,
She stands, her own sad monument of wo.”—Pope cor.

UNDER NOTE II.—CHANGE OF NUMBER.

“So will I send upon you famine, and evil beasts, and they shall bereave you.”—Bible cor. “Why do you plead so much for it? why do you preach it up?” Or: “Why do ye plead so much for it? why do ye preach it up?”—Barclay cor. “Since thou hast decreed that I shall bear man, thy darling.”—Edward’s Gram. cor. “You have my book, and I have yours; i.e., your book.” Or thus: “Thou hast my book, and I have thine; i.e., thy book.”—Chandler cor. “Neither art thou such a one as to be ignorant of what thou art.”—Bullions cor. “Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon thee.”—Bible cor. “The Almighty, unwilling to cut thee off in the fullness of iniquity, has sent me to give thee warning.”—Ld. Kames cor. “Wast thou born only for pleasure? wast thou never to do any thing?”—Collier cor. “Thou shalt be required to go to God, to die, and to give up thy account.”—Barnes cor. “And canst thou expect to behold the resplendent glow of the Creator? would not such a sight annihilate thee?”—Milton cor. “If the prophet had commanded thee to do some great thing, wouldst thou have refused?”—C. S. Journal cor. “Art thou a penitent? evince thy sincerity, by bringing forth fruits meet for repentance.”—Vade-Mecum cor. “I will call thee my dear son: I remember all thy tenderness.”—C. Tales cor. “So do thou, my son: open thy ears, and thy eyes.”—Wright cor. "I promise you, this was enough to discourage you."—Bunyan cor. "Ere you remark an other's sin, Bid your own conscience look within."—Gay cor. "Permit that I share in thy wo, The privilege canst thou refuse?"—Perfect cor. "Ah! Strephon, how canst thou despise Her who, without thy pity, dies?"—Swift cor.

Page 1741

"Thy verses, friend, are Kidderminster stuff;
And I must own, thou'st measured out enough."—Shenst. cor.

"This day, dear Bee, is thy nativity;
Had Fate a luckier one, she'd give it thee."—Swift cor.

UNDER NOTE III.—WHO AND WHICH.

"Exactly like so many puppets, which are moved by wires."—Blair cor. "They are my servants, whom I brought forth[535] out of the land of Egypt."—Leviticus, xxv, 55. "Behold, I and the children whom God hath given me."—See Isaiah, viii, 18. "And he sent Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe."—Isaiah, xxxvii, 2. "In a short time the streets were cleared of the corpses which filled them."—M'Ilvaine cor. "They are not of those who teach things that they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake."—Barclay cor. "As a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep; which, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces."—Bible cor. "Frequented by every fowl which nature has taught to dip the wing in water."—Johnson cor. "He had two sons, one of whom was adopted by the family of Maximus."—Lempriere cor. "And the ants, which are collected by the smell, are burned with fire."—The Friend cor. "They being the agents to whom this thing was trusted."—Nixon cor. "A packhorse which is driven constantly one way and the other, to and from market."—Locke cor. "By instructing children, whose affection will be increased."—Nixon cor. "He had a comely young woman, who travelled with him."—Hutchinson cor. "A butterfly, who thought himself an accomplished traveller, happened to light upon a beehive."—Inst., p. 267. "It is an enormous elephant of stone, which disgorges from his uplifted trunk a vast but graceful shower."—Ware cor. "He was met by a dolphin, which sometimes swam before him, and sometimes behind him."—Edward's Gram. cor.

"That Caesar's horse, which, as fame goes,
Had corns upon his feet and toes,
Was not by half so tender-hoof'd,
Nor trod upon the ground so soft."—Butler cor.

UNDER NOTE IV.—NOUNS OF MULTITUDE.

Page 1742

"He instructed and fed the crowds that surrounded him."—Murray's Key. "The court, which gives currency to manners, ought to be exemplary." p. 187. "Nor does he describe classes of sinners that do not exist."—Mag. cor. "Because the nations among which they took their rise, were not savage."—Murray cor. "Among nations that are in the first and rude periods of society."—Blair cor. "The martial spirit of those nations among which the feudal government prevailed."—Id. "France, which was in alliance with Sweden."—Priestley's Gram., p. 97. "That faction, in England, which most powerfully opposed his arbitrary pretensions."—Ib. "We may say, 'the crowd which was going up the street.'"—Cobbett's E. Gram., 204. "Such members of the Convention which formed this Lyceum, as have subscribed this Constitution."—N. Y. Lyceum cor.

UNDER NOTE V.—CONFUSION OF SENSES.

"The name of the possessor shall take a particular form to show its case."—Kirkham cor. "Of which reasons, the principal one is, that no noun, properly so called, implies the presence of the thing named."—Harris cor. "Boston is a proper noun, which distinguishes the city of Boston from other cities."—Sanborn cor. "The word CONJUNCTION means union, or the act of joining together. Conjunctions are used to join or connect either words or sentences."—Id. "The word INTERJECTION means the act of throwing between. Interjections are interspersed among other words, to express strong or sudden emotion."—Id. "Indeed is composed of in and deed. The words may better be written separately, as they formerly were."—Cardell cor. "Alexander, on the contrary, is a particular name; and is employed to distinguish an individual only."—Jamieson cor. "As an indication that nature itself had changed its course." Or:—"that Nature herself had changed her course."—History cor. "Of removing from the United States and their territories the free people of colour."—Jenifer cor. "So that gh may be said not to have its proper sound." Or thus: "So that the letters, g and h, may be said not to have their proper sounds."—Webster cor. "Are we to welcome the loathsome harlot, and introduce her to our children?"—Maturin cor. "The first question is this: 'Is reputable, national, and present use, which, for brevity's sake, I shall hereafter simply denominate good use, always uniform, [i. e., undivided, and unequivocal,] in its decisions?"—Campbell cor. "In personifications, Time is always masculine, on account of his mighty efficacy; Virtue, feminine, by reason of her beauty and loveliness.—Murray, Blair, et al. cor. "When you speak to a person or thing, the noun or pronoun is in the second person."—Bartlett cor. "You now know the noun; for noun means name."—Id. "T. What do you see? P. A book. T. Spell book."—R. W. Green cor. "T. What do you see now? P. Two books. T. Spell books."—Id. "If the United States lose their rights as a nation."—Liberator cor. "When a person or thing is addressed or spoken to, the noun or pronoun is in the second person."—Frost cor. "When a person or thing is merely spoken of, the noun or pronoun is in the third person."—Id. "The word OX also, taking the same plural termination, makes OXEN."—Bucke cor.

Page 1743

"Hail, happy States! yours is the blissful seat
Where nature's gifts and art's improvements meet."—Everett cor.

UNDER NOTE VI.—THE RELATIVE THAT.

(1.) "This is the most useful art that men possess."—L. Murray cor. "The earliest accounts that history gives us, concerning all nations, bear testimony to these facts."—Blair et al. cor. "Mr. Addison was the first that attempted a regular inquiry into the pleasures of taste."—Blair cor. "One of the first that introduced it, was Montesquieu."—Murray cor. "Massillon is perhaps the most eloquent sermonizer that modern times have produced."—Blair cor. "The greatest barber that ever lived, is our guiding star and prototype."—Hart cor.

(2.) "When prepositions are subjoined to nouns, they are generally the same that are subjoined to the verbs from which the nouns are derived."—Murray's Gram., p. 200. Better thus: "The prepositions which are subjoined to nouns, are generally the same that," &c.—Priestley cor. "The same proportions that are agreeable in a model, are not agreeable in a large building."—Kames cor. "The same ornaments that we admire in a private apartment, are unseemly in a temple."—Murray cor. "The same that John saw also in the sun."—Milton cor.

(3.) "Who can ever be easy, that is reproached with his own ill conduct?"—T. a Kempis cor. "Who is she that comes clothed in a robe of green?"—Inst., p. 267. "Who that has either sense or civility, does not perceive the vileness of profanity?"—G. Brown.

(4.) "The second person denotes the person or thing that is spoken to."—Kirkham cor. "The third person denotes the person or thing that is spoken of."—Id. "A passive verb denotes action received, or endured by the person or thing that is signified by its nominative."—Id. "The princes and states that had neglected or favoured the growth of this power."—Bolingbroke cor. "The nominative expresses the name of the person or thing that acts, or that is the subject of discourse."—Hiley cor.

Page 1744

(5.) “Authors that deal in long sentences, are very apt to be faulty.”—Blair cor. “Writers that deal,” &c.—Murray cor. “The neuter gender denotes objects that are neither male nor female.”—Merchant cor. “The neuter gender denotes things that have no sex.”—Kirkham cor. “Nouns that denote objects neither male nor female, are of the neuter gender.”—Wells’s Gram. of late, p. 55. Better thus: “Those nouns which denote objects that are neither male nor female, are of the neuter gender.”—Wells cor. “Objects and ideas that have been long familiar, make too faint an impression to give an agreeable exercise to our faculties.”—Blair cor. “Cases that custom has left dubious, are certainly within the grammarian’s province.”—L. Murray cor. “Substantives that end in ery, signify action or habit.”—Id. “After all that can be done to render the definitions and rules of grammar accurate.”—Id. “Possibly, all that I have said, is known and taught.”—A. B. Johnson cor.

(6.) “It is a strong and manly style that should chiefly be studied.”—Blair cor. “It is this [viz., precision] that chiefly makes a division appear neat and elegant.”—Id. “I hope it is not I that he is displeased with.”—L. Murray cor. “When it is this alone that renders the sentence obscure.”—Campbell cor. “This sort of full and ample assertion, ‘It is this that,’ is fit to be used when a proposition of importance is laid down.”—Blair cor. “She is not the person that I understood it to have been.”—L. Murray cor. “Was it thou, or the wind, that shut the door?”—Inst., p. 267. “It was not I that shut it.”—Id.

(7.) “He is not the person that he seemed to be.”—Murray and Ingersoll cor. “He is really the person that he appeared to be.”—Id. “She is not now the woman that they represented her to have been.”—Id. “An only child is one that has neither brother nor sister; a child alone is one that is left by itself, or unaccompanied.”—Blair, Jam., and Mur., cor.

UNDER NOTE VII.—RELATIVE CLAUSES CONNECTED.

(1.) “A Substantive, or Noun, is the name of a thing; (i. e.,) of whatever we conceive to subsist, or of whatever we merely imagine.”—Lowth cor. (2.) “A Substantive, or Noun, is the name of any thing which exists, or of which we have any notion.”—Murray et al. cor. (3.) “A Substantive, or Noun, is the name of any person, place, or thing, that exists, or that we can have an idea of.”—Frost cor. (4.) “A noun is the name of any thing which exists, or of which we form an idea.”—Hallock cor. (5.) "A Noun is the name of any person, place, object, or thing, that exists, or that we may conceive to exist."—D. C. Allen cor. (6.) "The name of every thing which exists, or of which we can form a notion, is a noun."—Fisk cor. (7.) "An allegory is the representation of some one thing by an other that resembles it, and that is made to stand for it."—Blair's Rhet., p. 150. (8.) "Had he exhibited such sentences as contained ideas inapplicable to young minds, or such as were of a trivial or injurious nature."—L. Murray cor. (9.) "Man would have others obey him, even his own kind; but he will not obey God, who is so much above him, and who made him."—Penn cor. (10.) "But what we may consider here, and what few persons have noticed, is," &c.—Brightland cor. (11.) "The compiler has not inserted those verbs which are irregular only in familiar writing or discourse, and which are improperly terminated by t in stead of ed."—Murray, Fisk, Hart, Ingersoll et al., cor. (12.) "The remaining parts of speech, which are called the indeclinable parts, and which admit of no variations, (or, being words that admit of no variations,) will not detain us long."—Dr. Blair cor.

Page 1745

UNDER NOTE VIII.—THE RELATIVE AND PREPOSITION.

"In the temper of mind in which he was then."—Lowth's Gram., p. 102. "To bring them into the condition in which I am at present."—Add. cor. "In the posture in which I lay."—Lowth's Gram., p. 102. "In the sense in which it is sometimes taken."—Barclay cor. "Tools and utensils are said to be right, when they answer well the uses for which they were made."—Collier cor. "If, in the extreme danger in which I now am," &c. Or: "If, in my present extreme danger," &c.—Murray's Sequel, p. 116. "News was brought, that Dairus [sic—KTH] was but twenty miles from the place in which they then were."—Goldsmith cor. "Alexander, upon hearing this news, continued four days where he then was:" or—"in the place in which he then was."—Id. "To read in the best manner in which reading is now taught."—L. Murray cor. "It may be expedient to give a few directions as to the manner in which it should be studied."—Hallock cor. "Participles are words derived from verbs, and convey an idea of the acting of an agent, or the suffering of an object, with the time at which it happens." [536]—A. Murray cor.

"Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
With which I serv'd my king, he would not thus,
In age, have left me naked to my foes."—Shak. cor.

Page 1746

UNDER NOTE IX.—ADVERBS FOR RELATIVES. “In compositions that are not designed to be delivered in public.”—Blair cor. “They framed a protestation in which they repeated their claims.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 133; Murray’s, 197. “Which have reference to inanimate substances, in which sex has no existence.”—Harris cor. “Which denote substances in which sex never had existence.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 26. “There is no rule given by which the truth may be found out.”—W. Walker cor. “The nature of the objects from which they are taken.”—Blair cor. “That darkness of character, through which we can see no heart:” [i. e., generous emotion.]—L. Murray cor. “The states with which [or between which] they negotiated.”—Formey cor. “Till the motives from which men act, be known.”—Beattie cor. “He assigns the principles from which their power of pleasing flows.”—Blair cor. “But I went on, and so finished this History, in that form in which it now appears.”—Sewel cor. “By prepositions we express the cause for which, the instrument by which, and the manner in which, a thing is done.”—A. Murray cor. “They are not such in the language from which they are derived.”—Town cor. “I find it very hard to persuade several, that their passions are affected by words from which they have no ideas.”—Burke cor. “The known end, then, for which we are placed in a state of so much affliction, hazard, and difficulty, is our improvement in virtue and piety.”—Bp. Butler cor.

“Yet such his acts as Greeks unborn shall tell,
And curse the strife in which their fathers fell.”—Pope cor.

UNDER NOTE X.—REPEAT THE NOUN.

“Youth may be thoughtful, but thoughtfulness in the young is not very common.”—Webster cor. “A proper name is a name given to one person or thing.”—Bartlett cor. “A common name is a name given to many things of the same sort.”—Id. “This rule is often violated; some instances of its violation are annexed.”—L. Murray et al. cor. “This is altogether careless writing. Such negligence respecting the pronouns, renders style often obscure, and always inelegant.”—Blair cor. “Every inversion which is not governed by this rule, will be disrelished by every person of taste.”—Kames cor. “A proper diphthong, is a diphthong in which both the vowels are sounded.”—Brown’s Institutes, p. 18. “An improper diphthong, is a diphthong in which only one of the vowels is sounded.”—Ib. “Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the descendants of Jacob, are called Hebrews.”—Wood cor. “In our language, every word of more than one syllable, has one of its syllables distinguished from the rest in this manner.”—L. Murray cor. “Two consonants proper to begin a word, must not be separated; as, fable, sti-fle. But when two consonants come between two vowels, and are such as cannot begin a word, they must be divided, as, ut-most, un-der.”—Id. “Shall the intellect alone feel no pleasures in its energy, when we allow pleasures to the grossest energies of appetite and sense?”—Harris and Murray cor. “No man has a propensity to vice as such: on the contrary, a wicked deed disgusts every one, and makes him abhor the author.”—Ld. Kames cor. “The same grammatical properties that belong to nouns, belong also to pronouns.”—Greenleaf cor. “What is language? It is the means of communicating thoughts from one person to an other.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “A simple word is a word which is not made up of other words.”—Adam and Gould cor. “A compound word is a word which is made up of two or more words.”—Id. “When a conjunction is to be supplied, the ellipsis is called Asyndeton.”—Adam cor.

Page 1747

UNDER NOTE XI.—PLACE OF THE RELATIVE.

“It gives to words a meaning which they would not have.”—L. Murray cor. “There are in the English language many words, that are sometimes used as adjectives, and sometimes as adverbs.”—Id. “Which do not more effectually show the varied intentions of the mind, than do the auxiliaries which are used to form the potential mood.”—Id. “These accents, which will be the subject of a following speculation, make different impressions on the mind.”—Ld. Kames cor. “And others differed very much from the words of the writers to whom they were ascribed.”—John Ward cor. “Where there is in the sense nothing which requires the last sound to be elevated, an easy fall will be proper.”—Murray and Bullions cor. “In the last clause there is an ellipsis of the verb; and, when you supply it, you find it necessary to use the adverb not, in lieu of no.”—Campbell and Murray cor. “Study is of the singular number, because the nominative I, with which it agrees, is singular.”—R. C. Smith cor. “John is the person who is in error, or thou art.”—Wright cor. “For he hath made him, who knew no sin, to be sin for us.”—Harrison’s E. Lang., p. 197.

“My friend, take that of me, who have the power
To seal th’ accuser’s lips.”—Shakspeare cor.

UNDER NOTE XII.—WHAT FOR THAT.

Page 1748

"I had no idea but that the story was true."—Brown's Inst., p. 268. "The postboy is not so weary but that he can whistle."—lb. "He had no intimation but that the men were honest."—lb. "Neither Lady Haversham nor Miss Mildmay will ever believe but that I have been entirely to blame."—Priestley cor. "I am not satisfied but that the integrity of our friends is more essential to our welfare than their knowledge of the world."—Id. "Indeed, there is in poetry nothing so entertaining or descriptive, but that an ingenious didactic writer may introduce it in some part of his work."—Blair cor. "Brasidas, being bit by a mouse he had caught, let it slip out of his fingers: 'No creature,' says he, 'is so contemptible but that it may provide for its own safety, if it have courage.'"—Ld. Kames cor.

UNDER NOTE XIII.—ADJECTIVES FOR ANTECEDENTS.

"In narration, Homer is, at all times, remarkably concise, and therefore lively and agreeable."—Blair cor. "It is usual to talk of a nervous, a feeble, or a spirited style; which epithets plainly indicate the writer's manner of thinking."—Id. "It is too violent an alteration, if any alteration were necessary, whereas none is."—Knight cor. "Some men are too ignorant to be humble; and without humility there can be no docility."—Berkley cor. "Judas declared him innocent; but innocent he could not be, had he in any respect deceived the disciples."—Porteus cor. "They supposed him to be innocent, but he certainly was not so."—Murray et al. cor. "They accounted him honest, but he certainly was not so."—Felch cor. "Be accurate in all you say or do; for accuracy is important in all the concerns of life."—Brown's Inst., p. 268. "Every law supposes the transgressor to be wicked; and indeed he is so, if the law is just."—lb. "To be pure in heart, pious, and benevolent, (and all may be so,) constitutes human happiness."—Murray cor. "To be dexterous in danger, is a virtue; but to court danger to show our dexterity, is a weakness."—Penn cor.

UNDER NOTE XIV.—SENTENCES FOR ANTECEDENTS.

"This seems not so allowable in prose; which fact the following erroneous examples will demonstrate."—L. Murray cor. "The accent is laid upon the last syllable of a word; which circumstance is favourable to the melody."—Kames cor. "Every line consists of ten syllables, five short and five long; from which rule there are but two exceptions, both of them rare."—Id. "The soldiers refused obedience, as has been explained."—Nixon cor. "Caesar overcame Pompey—a circumstance which was lamented.”—Id. “The crowd hailed William, agreeably to the expectations of his friends.”—Id. “The tribunes resisted Scipio, who knew their malevolence towards him.”—Id. “The censors reproved vice, and were held in great honour.”—Id. “The generals neglected discipline, which fact has been proved.”—Id. “There would be two nominatives to the verb was, and such a construction is improper.”—Adam and Gould cor. “His friend bore the abuse very patiently; whose forbearance, however, served only to increase his rudeness; it produced, at length, contempt and insolence.”—Murray and Emmons cor. “Almost all compound sentences are more or less elliptical; and some examples of ellipsis may be found, under nearly all the different parts of speech.”—Murray, Guy, Smith, Ingersoll, Fisk, et al. cor.

Page 1749

UNDER NOTE XV.—REPEAT THE PRONOUN.

“In things of Nature’s workmanship, whether we regard their internal or their external structure, beauty and design are equally conspicuous.”—Kames cor. “It puzzles the reader, by making him doubt whether the word ought to be taken in its proper, or in its figurative sense.”—Id. “Neither my obligations to the muses, nor my expectations from them, are so great.”—Cowley cor. “The Fifth Annual Report of the Antislavery Society of Ferrisburgh and its vicinity.”—Title cor. “Meaning taste in its figurative as well as its proper sense.”—Kames cor. “Every measure in which either your personal or your political character is concerned.”—Junius cor. “A jealous and righteous God has often punished such in themselves or in their offspring.”—Extracts cor. “Hence their civil and their religious history are inseparable.”—Milman cor. “Esau thus carelessly threw away both his civil and his religious inheritance.”—Id. “This intelligence excited not only our hopes, but our fears likewise.”—Jaudon cor. “In what way our defect of principle, and our ruling manners, have completed the ruin of the national spirit of union.”—Dr. Brown cor. “Considering her descent, her connexion, and her present intercourse.”—Webster cor. “His own and his wife’s wardrobe are packed up in a firkin.”—Parker and Fox cor.

UNDER NOTE XVI.—CHANGE THE ANTECEDENT.

“The sounds of e and o long, in their due degrees, will be preserved, and clearly distinguished.”—L. Murray cor. “If any persons should be inclined to think,” &c., “the author takes the liberty to suggest to them,” &c.—Id. “And he walked in all the way of Asa his father; he turned not aside from it.”—Bible cor. “If ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brethren their trespasses.”—Id. “None ever fancied they were slighted by him, or had the courage to think themselves his betters.”—Collier cor. “And Rebecca took some very good clothes of her eldest son Esau’s, which were with her in the house, and put them upon Jacob her younger son.”—Gen. cor. “Where all the attention of men is given to their own indulgence.”—Maturin cor. “The idea of a father is a notion superinduced to that of the substance, or man—let one’s idea of man be what it will.”—Locke cor. “Leaving all to do as they list.”—Barclay cor. “Each person performed his part handsomely.”—J. Flint cor. “This block of marble rests on two layers of stones, bound together with lead, which, however, has not prevented the Arabs from forcing out several of them.”—Parker and Fox cor. “Love gives to all our powers a double power, Above their functions and their offices.” Or:— “Love gives to every power a double power, Exalts all functions and all offices.”—Shak. cor.

Page 1750

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE XI; OF PRONOUNS.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—THE IDEA OF PLURALITY.

“The jury will be confined till they agree on a verdict.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 145. “And mankind directed their first cares towards the needful.”—Formey cor. “It is difficult to deceive a free people respecting their true interest.”—Life of Charles XII cor. “All the virtues of mankind are to be counted upon a few fingers, but their follies and vices are innumerable.”—Swift cor. “Every sect saith, ‘Give us liberty:’ but give it them, and to their power, and they will not yield it to any body else.”—Cromwell cor. “Behold, the people shall rise up as a great lion, and lift up themselves as a young lion.”—Bible cor. “For all flesh had corrupted their way upon the earth.”—Id. “There happened to the army a very strange accident, which put them in great consternation.”—Goldsmith cor.

UNDER NOTE I.—THE IDEA OF UNITY.

“The meeting went on with its business as a united body.”—Foster cor. “Every religious association has an undoubted right to adopt a creed for itself.”—Gould cor. “It would therefore be extremely difficult to raise an insurrection in that state against its own government.”—Dr. Webster cor. “The mode in which a lyceum can apply itself in effecting a reform in common schools.”—N. Y. Lyc. cor. “Hath a nation changed its gods, which yet are no gods?”—Jer. cor. “In the holy Scriptures, each of the twelve tribes of Israel is often called by the name of the patriarch from whom it descended.” Or better:—“from whom the tribe descended.”—Adams cor.

Page 1751

UNDER NOTE II.—UNIFORMITY OF NUMBER.

“A nation, by the reparation of the wrongs which it has done, achieves a triumph more glorious than any field of blood can ever give.”—Adams cor. “The English nation, from whom we descended, have been gaining their liberties inch by inch.”—Webster cor. “If a Yearly Meeting should undertake to alter its fundamental doctrines, is there any power in the society to prevent it from doing so?”—Foster’s Rep. cor. “There is[537] a generation that curse their father, and do not bless their mother.”—Bible cor. “There is[537] a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet are not washed from their filthiness.”—Id. “He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel: the Lord their God is with them, and the shout of a king is among them.”—Id. “My people have forgotten me, they have burnt incense to vanity.”—Id. “When a quarterly meeting has come to a judgement respecting any difference, relative to any monthly meeting belonging to it” &c.—Discip. cor. “The number of such compositions is every day increasing, and it appears to be limited only by the pleasure or the convenience of writers.”—Booth cor. “The Church of Christ has the same power now as ever, and is led by the same spirit into the same practices.”—Barclay cor. “The army, whom their chief had thus abandoned, pursued meanwhile their miserable march.” Or thus: “The army, which its chief had thus abandoned, pursued meanwhile its miserable march.”—Lockhart cor.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE XII; OF PRONOUNS.

ANTECEDENTS CONNECTED BY AND.

“Discontent and sorrow manifested themselves in his countenance.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 146. “Both conversation and public speaking became more simple and plain, such as we now find them.”—Blair cor. “Idleness and ignorance, if they be suffered to proceed, &c.”—Johnson and Priestley cor. “Avoid questions and strife: they show a busy and contentious disposition.”—Penn cor. “To receive the gifts and benefits of God with thanksgiving, and witness them blessed and sanctified to us by the word and prayer, is owned by us.”—Barclay cor. “Both minister and magistrate are compelled to choose between their duty and their reputation.”—Junius cor. “All the sincerity, truth, and faithfulness, or disposition of heart or conscience to approve them, found among rational creatures, necessarily originate from God.”—Rev. J. Brown cor. “Your levity and heedlessness, if they continue, will prevent all substantial improvement.”—Brown’s

Page 1752

Inst., p. 269. "Poverty and obscurity will oppress him only who esteems them oppressive."—Ib. "Good sense and refined policy are obvious to few, because they cannot be discovered but by a train of reflection."—Ib. "Avoid haughtiness of behaviour, and affectation of manners: they imply a want of solid merit."—Ib. "If love and unity continue, they will make you partakers of one another's joy."—Ib. "Suffer not jealousy and distrust to enter: they will destroy, like a canker, every germ of friendship."—Ib. "Hatred and animosity are inconsistent with Christian charity: guard, therefore, against the slightest indulgence of them."—Ib. "Every man is entitled to liberty of conscience, and freedom of opinion, if he does not pervert them to the injury of others."—Ib.

"With the azure and vermilion
Which are mix'd for my pavilion."—Byron cor.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE XIII; OF PRONOUNS.

ANTECEDENTS CONNECTED BY OR OR NOR.

"Neither prelate nor priest can give his [flock or] flocks any decisive evidence that you are lawful pastors."—Brownlee cor. "And is there a heart of parent or of child, that does not beat and burn within him?"—Maturin cor. "This is just as if an eye or a foot should demand a salary for its service to the body."—Collier cor. "If thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee."—Bible cor. "The same might as well be said of Virgil, or any great author; whose general character will infallibly raise many casual additions to his reputation."—Pope cor. "Either James or John,—one or the other,—will come."—Smith cor. "Even a rugged rock or a barren heath, though in itself disagreeable, contributes, by contrast, to the beauty of the whole."—Kames cor. "That neither Count Rechteren nor Monsieur Mesnager had behaved himself right in this affair."—Spect. cor. "If an Aristotle, a Pythagoras, or a Galileo, suffers for his opinions, he is a 'martyr.'"—Fuller cor. "If an ox gore a man or a woman, that he or she die; then the ox shall surely be stoned."—Exod. cor. "She was calling out to one or an other, at every step, that a Habit was ensnaring him."—Johnson cor. "Here is a task put upon children, which neither this author himself, nor any other, has yet undergone."—R. Johnson cor. "Hence, if an adjective or a participle be subjoined to the verb when the construction is singular, it will agree both in gender and in number with the collective noun."—Adam and Gould cor. "And if you can find a diphthong or a triphthong, be pleased to point that out too."—Bucke cor. "And if you can find a trissyllable or a polysyllable, point it out."—Id. "The false refuges in which the atheist or the sceptic has intrenched himself."—Chr. Spect. cor. "While the man or woman thus assisted by art, expects his charms or hers will be imputed to nature alone."—Opie cor. "When you press a watch, or pull a clock, it answers your question with precision; for it repeats exactly the hour of the day, and tells you neither more nor less than you desire to know."—Bolingbroke cor.

Page 1753

"Not the Mogul, or Czar of Muscovy,
Not Prester John, or Cham of Tartary,
Is in his mansion monarch more than I."—King cor.

CHAPTER VI.—VERBS.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE XIV AND ITS NOTES.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—VERB AFTER THE NOMINATIVE.

"Before you left Sicily, you were reconciled to Verres."—Duncan cor. "Knowing that you were my old master's good friend."—Spect. cor. "When the judge dares not act, where is the loser's remedy?"—Webster cor. "Which extends it no farther than the variation of the verb extends."—Mur. cor. "They presently dry without hurt, as myself have often proved."—R. Williams cor. "Whose goings-forth have been from of old, from everlasting."—Micah, v, 2. "You were paid to fight against Alexander, not to rail at him."—Porter cor. "Where more than one part of speech are almost always concerned."—Churchill cor. "Nothing less than murders, rapines, and conflagrations, employs their thoughts." Or: "No less things than murders, rapines, and conflagrations, employ their thoughts."—Duncan cor. "I wondered where you were, my dear."—Lloyd cor. "When thou most sweetly singst."—Drummond cor. "Who dares, at the present day, avow himself equal to the task?"—Gardiner cor. "Every body is very kind to her, and not discourteous to me."—Byron cor. "As to what thou sayst respecting the diversity of opinions."—M. B. cor. "Thy nature, Immortality, who knows?"—Everest cor. "The natural distinction of sex in animals, gives rise to what, in grammar, are called genders."—Id. "Some pains have likewise been taken."—Scott cor. "And many a steed in his stables was seen."—Penwarne cor. "They were forced to eat what never was esteemed food."—Josephus cor. "This that you yourself have spoken, I desire that they may take their oaths upon."—Hutchinson cor. "By men whose experience best qualifies them to judge."—Committee cor. "He dares venture to kill and destroy several other kinds of fish."—Walton cor. "If a gudgeon meet a roach, He ne'er will venture to approach." Or thus: "If a gudgeon meets a roach, He dares not venture to approach."—Swift cor. "Which thou endeavourst to establish to thyself."—Barclay cor. "But they pray together much oftener than thou insinuat'st."—Id. "Of people of all denominations, over whom thou presidest."—N. Waln cor. "I can produce ladies and gentlemen whose progress has been astonishing."—Chazotte cor. "Which of these two kinds of vice is the more criminal?"—Dr. Brown cor. "Every twenty-four hours afford to us the vicissitudes of day and night."—Smith's False Syntax, New Gram., p. 103. Or thus: "Every period of twenty-four hours affords to us the vicissitudes of day and night."—Smith cor. "Every four years add an other day."—Smith's False Syntax, Gram., p. 103. Better thus: "Every fourth year adds an other day."—Smith cor. "Every error I could find, Has my busy muse employed."—Swift cor. "A studious scholar deserves the approbation of his teacher."—Sanborn cor. "Perfect submission to the rules of a school indicates good breeding."—Id. "A comparison in which more than two are concerned."—Lennie's Gram., p. 78. "By the facilities which artificial language affords them."—O. B. Peirce cor. "Now thyself hast lost both lop and top."—Spencer cor. "Glad tidings are brought to the poor."—Campbell cor. "Upon which, all that is pleasurable or affecting in elocution, chiefly depends."—Sher. cor. "No pains have been spared to render this work complete."—Bullions cor. "The United States contain more than a twentieth part of the land of this globe."—Clinton cor. "I am mindful that myself am strong."—Fowler cor. "Myself am (not is) weak;"—"Thyself art (not is) weak."—Id.

Page 1754

"How pale each worshipful and reverend guest Rises from clerical or city feast!"—Pope cor.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—VERB BEFORE THE NOMINATIVE.

"Where were you born? In London."—Buchanan cor. "There are frequent occasions for commas."—Ingersoll cor. "There necessarily follow from thence these plain and unquestionable consequences."—Priestley cor. "And to this impression contributes the redoubled effort."—Kames cor. "Or, if he was, were there no spiritual men then?"—Barclay cor. "So, by these two also, are signified their contrary principles."—Id. "In the motions made with the hands, consists the chief part of gesture in speaking."—Blair cor. "Dares he assume the name of a popular magistrate?"—Duncan cor. "There were no damages as in England, and so Scott lost his wager.”—Byron cor. “In fact, there exist such resemblances.”—Kames cor. “To him give all the prophets witness.”—Acts, x, 43. “That there were so many witnesses and actors.”—Addison cor. “How do this man’s definitions stand affected?”—Collier cor. “Whence come all the powers and prerogatives of rational beings?”—Id. “Nor do the scriptures cited by thee prove thy intent.”—Barclay cor. “Nor does the scripture cited by thee prove the contrary.”—Id. “Why then citest thou a scripture which is so plain and clear for it?”—Id. “But what say the Scriptures as to respect of persons among Christians?”—Id. “But in the mind of man, while in the savage state, there seem to be hardly any ideas but what enter by the senses;”—Robertson cor. “What sounds has each of the vowels?”—Griscom cor. “Out of this have grown up aristocracies, monarchies, despotisms, tyrannies.”—Brownson cor. “And there were taken up, of fragments that remained to them, twelve baskets.”—Bible cor. “There seem to be but two general classes.”—Day cor. “Hence arise the six forms of expressing time.”—Id. “There seem to be no other words required.”—Chandler cor. “If there are two, the second increment is the syllable next to the last.”—Bullions cor. “Hence arise the following advantages.”—Id. “There are no data by which it can be estimated.”—Calhoun cor. “To this class, belongs the Chinese language, in which we have nothing but naked primitives.”—Fowler cor. [[Fist] “Nothing but naked roots” is faulty; because no word is a root, except some derivative spring from it.”—G. B.] “There were several other grotesque figures that presented themselves.”—Spect. cor. “In these consists that sovereign good which ancient sages so much extol.”—Percival cor. “Here come those I have done good to against my will.”—Shak. cor. “Where there are more than one auxiliary.” Or: “Where there are more auxiliaries than one.”—O. B. Peirce cor.

Page 1755

“On me to cast those eyes where shines nobility.”
—Sidney cor.

“Here are half-pence in plenty, for one you’ll have twenty.”
—Swift cor.

“Ah, Jockey, ill advisest thou. I wis,
To think of songs at such a time as this.”
—Churchill cor.

UNDER NOTE I.—THE RELATIVE AND VERB.

Page 1756

"Thou, who lovest us, wilt protect us still."—A. Murray cor. "To use that endearing language, 'Our Father, who art in heaven.'"—Bates cor. "Resembling the passions that produce these actions."—Kames cor. "Except dwarf, grief, hoof, muff, &c., which take s to make the plural."—Ash cor. "As the cattle that go before me, and the children, be able to endure."—Gen. cor. "Where is the man who dares affirm that such an action is mad?"—Dr. Pratt cor. "The ninth book of Livy affords one of the most beautiful exemplifications of historical painting, that are anywhere to be met with."—Dr. Blair cor. "In some studies, too, that relate to taste and fine writing, which are our object," &c.—Id. "Of those affecting situations which make man's heart feel for man."—Id. "We see very plainly, that it is neither Osmyn nor Jane Shore that speaks."—Id. "It should assume that briskness and ease which are suited to the freedom of dialogue."—Id. "Yet they grant, that none ought to be admitted into the ministry, but such as are truly pious."—Barclay cor. "This letter is one of the best that have been written about Lord Byron."—Hunt cor. "Thus, besides what were sunk, the Athenians took above two hundred ships."—Goldsmith cor. "To have made and declared such orders as were necessary."—Hutchinson cor. "The idea of such a collection of men as makes an army."—Locke cor. "I'm not the first that has been wretched."—Southern cor. "And the faint sparks of it which are in the angels, are concealed from our view."—Calvin cor. "The subjects are of such a nature, as allows room (or, as to allow room) for much diversity of taste and sentiment."—Dr. Blair cor. "It is in order to propose examples of such perfection, as is not to be found in the real examples of society."—Formey cor. "I do not believe that he would amuse himself with such fooleries as have been attributed to him."—Id. "That shepherd, who first taught the chosen seed."—Milton, P. L., B. i, l. 8. "With respect to the vehemence and warmth which are allowed in popular eloquence."—Dr. Blair cor. "Ambition is one of those passions that are never to be satisfied."—Home cor. "Thou wast he that led out and brought in Israel."—Bible cor. "Art thou the man of God, that came from Judah?"—Id.

"How beauty is excell'd by manly grace
And wisdom, which alone are truly fair."—Milton cor.

"What art thou, speak, that on designs unknown,
While others sleep, thus roamst the camp alone?"—Pope cor.

UNDER NOTE II.—NOMINATIVE WITH ADJUNCTS.

Page 1757

"The literal sense of the words is, that the action had been done."—Dr. Murray cor. "The rapidity of his movements was beyond example."—Wells cor. "Murray's Grammar, together with his Exercises and Key, has nearly superseded every thing else of the kind."—Murray's Rec. cor. "The mechanism of clocks and watches was totally unknown."—Hume cor. "The it, together with the verb to be, expresses a state of being."—Cobbett cor. "Hence it is, that the profuse variety of objects in some natural landscapes, occasions neither confusion nor fatigue."—Kames cor. "Such a clatter of sounds indicates rage and ferocity."—Gardiner cor. "One of the fields makes threescore square yards, and the other, only fifty-five."—Duncan cor. "The happy effects of this fable are worth attending to."—Bailey cor. "Yet the glorious serenity of its parting rays, still lingers with us."—Gould cor. "Enough of its form and force is retained to render them uneasy."—Maturin cor. "The works of nature, in this respect, are extremely regular."—Pratt cor. "No small addition of exotic and foreign words and phrases, has been made by commerce."—Bicknell cor. "The dialect of some nouns is noticed in the notes."—Milnes cor. "It has been said, that a discovery of the full resources of the arts, affords the means of debasement, or of perversion."—Rush cor. "By which means, the order of the words is disturbed."—Holmes cor. "The two-fold influence of these and the others, requires the verb to be in the plural form."—Peirce cor. "And each of these affords employment."—Percival cor. "The pronunciation of the vowels is best explained under the rules relative to the consonants."—Coar cor. "The judicial power of these courts extends to all cases in law and equity."—Hall and Baker cor. "One of you has stolen my money."—Humorist cor. "Such redundancy of epithets, in stead of pleasing, produces satiety and disgust."—Kames cor. "It has been alleged, that a compliance with the rules of Rhetoric, tends to cramp the mind."—Hiley cor. "Each of these is presented to us in different relations."—Hendrick cor. "The past tense of these verbs, (should, would, might, could,) is very indefinite with respect to time."—Bullions cor. "The power of the words which are said to govern this mood, is distinctly understood."—Chandler cor.

"And now, at length, the fated term of years
The world's desire hath brought, and lo! the God appears."
—Lowth cor.

"Variety of numbers still belongs
To the soft melody of odes, or songs."
—Brightland cor.

Page 1758

UNDER NOTE III.—COMPOSITE OR CONVERTED SUBJECTS.

"Many are the works of human industry, which to begin and finish, is hardly granted to the same man."—Johnson cor. "To lay down rules for these, is as ineffectual."—Pratt cor. "To profess regard and act injuriously, discovers a base mind."—L. Murray et al. cor. "To magnify to the height of wonder things great, new, and admirable, extremely pleases the mind of man."—Fisher cor. "In this passage, 'according as' is used in a manner which is very common."—Webster cor. "A CAUSE DE, is called a preposition; A CAUSE QUE, a conjunction."—Webster cor. "To these it is given to speak in the name of the Lord."—The Friend cor. "While wheat has no plural, oats has seldom any singular."—Cobbett cor. "He cannot assert that ll (i.e., double Ell) is inserted in fullness to denote the sound of u"—Cobb cor. "Ch, in Latin, has the power of k."—Gould cor. "Ti, before a vowel, and unaccented, has the sound of si or ci."—Id. "In words derived from French, as chagrin, chicanery, and chaise, ch is sounded like sh."—Bucke cor. "But, in the words schism, schismatic, &c., the ch is silent."—Id. "Ph, at the beginning of words, is always sounded like f."—Bucke cor. "Ph has the sound of f as in philosophy."—Webster cor. "Sh has one sound only, as in shall."—Id. "Th has two sounds."—Id. "Sc, before a, o, u, or r, has the sound of sk."—Id. "Aw has the sound of a in hall."—Bolles cor. "Ew sounds like u"—Id. "Ow, when both vowels are sounded, has the power of ou in thou."—Id. "Ui, when both vowels are pronounced in one syllable, sounds like wi short, as in languid."—Id.

"Ui three other sounds at least expresses,
As who hears GUILLE, REBUILD, and BRUISE, confesses."
—Brightland cor.

UNDER NOTE IV.—EACH, ONE, EITHER, AND NEITHER.

"When each of the letters which compose this word, has been learned."—Dr. Weeks cor. "As neither of us denies that both Homer and Virgil have great beauties."—Dr. Blair cor. "Yet neither of them is remarkable for precision."—Id. "How far each of the three great epic poets has distinguished himself."—Id. "Each of these produces a separate, agreeable sensation."—Id. "On the Lord's day, every one of us Christians keeps the sabbath.”—Tr. of Iren. cor. “And each of them bears the image of purity and holiness.”—Hope of Is. cor. “Was either of these meetings ever acknowledged or recognized?”—Foster cor. “Whilst neither of these letters exists in the Eugubian inscription.”—Knight cor. “And neither of them is properly termed indefinite.”—Dr. Wilson cor. “As likewise of the several subjects, which have in effect their several verbs:” or,—“each of which has in effect its own verb.”—Lowth cor. “Sometimes, when the word ends in s, neither of the signs is used.”—A. Mur. cor. “And as neither of these manners offends the ear.”—J. Walker cor. “Neither of these two tenses is confined to this signification only.”—R. Johnson cor. “But neither of these circumstances is intended here.”—Tooke cor. “So that all are indebted to each, and each is dependent upon all.”—Bible Rep. cor. “And yet neither of them expresses any more action in this case, than it did in the other.”—Bullions cor. “Each of these expressions denotes action.”—Hallock cor. “Neither of these moods seems to be defined by distinct boundaries.”—Butler cor. “Neither of these solutions is correct.”—Bullions cor. “Neither bears any sign of case at all.”—Fowler cor.

Page 1759

“Each in his turn, like Banquo’s monarchs, stalks.” Or:—
“All in their turn, like Banquo’s monarchs, stalk.”—Byron cor.

“And tell what each doth by the other lose.”—Shak. cor.

UNDER NOTE V.—VERB BETWEEN TWO NOMINATIVES.

“The quarrels of lovers are but a renewal of love.”—Adam et al. cor. “Two dots, one placed above the other, are called a Sheva.”—Wilson cor. “A few centuries more or less are a matter of small consequence.”—Id. “Pictures were the first step towards the art of writing; hieroglyphics were the second step.”—Parker cor. “The comeliness of youth is modesty and frankness; of age, condescension and dignity.” Or, much better: “The great ornaments of youth are,” &c.—Murray cor. “Merit and good works are the end of man’s motion.”—Bacon cor. “Divers philosophers hold, that the lips are parcel of the mind.”—Shak. cor. “The clothing of the natives was the skins of wild beasts.” Or thus: “The clothes of the natives were skins of wild beasts.”—Hist. cor. “Prepossessions in favour of our native town, are not a matter of surprise.”—Webster cor. “Two shillings and sixpence are half a crown, but not a half crown.”—Priestley and Bicknell cor. “Two vowels, pronounced by a single impulse of the voice, and uniting in one sound, are called a diphthong.”—Cooper cor. “Two or more sentences united together are called a Compound Sentence.”—Day cor. “Two or more words rightly put together, but not completing an entire proposition, are called a Phrase.”—Id. “But the common number of times is five.” Or, to state the matter truly: “But the common number of tenses is six.”—Brit. Gram. cor. “Technical terms, injudiciously introduced, are an other source of darkness in composition.”—Jamieson cor. “The United States are the great middle division of North America.”—Morse cor. “A great cause of the low state of industry, was the restraints put upon it.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 199; Churchill’s, 414. “Here two tall ships become the victor’s prey.”—Rowe cor. “The expenses incident to an outfit are surely no object.”—The Friend cor.

Page 1760

“Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep,
Were all that did their silly thoughts so busy keep.”—Milt. cor.

UNDER NOTE VI.—CHANGE OF THE NOMINATIVE.

“Much care has been taken, to explain all the kinds of words.”—Inf. S. Gr. cor. “Not fewer [years] than three years, are spent in attaining this faculty.” Or, perhaps better: “Not less than three years’ time, is spent in attaining this faculty.” Or thus: “Not less time than three years, is spent,” &c.—Gardiner cor. “Where this night are met in state Many friends to gratulate His wish’d presence.”—Milton cor. “Peace! my darling, here’s no danger, Here’s no ox anear thy bed.”—Watts cor. “But all of these are mere conjectures, and some of them very unhappy ones.”—Coleridge cor. “The old theorists’ practice of calling the Interrogatives and Repliers ADVERBS, is only a part of their regular system of naming words.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “Where several sentences occur, place them in the order of the facts.”—Id. “And that all the events in conjunction make a regular chain of causes and effects.”—Kames cor. “In regard to their origin, the Grecian and Roman republics, though equally involved in the obscurities and uncertainties of fabulous events, present one remarkable distinction.”—Adams cor. “In these respects, man is left by nature an unformed, unfinished creature.”—Bp. Butler cor. “The Scriptures are the oracles of God himself.”—Hooker cor. “And at our gates are all kinds of pleasant fruits.”—S. Song cor. “The preterits of pluck, look, and toss, are, in speech, pronounced pluckt, lookt, tosst.”—Fowler corrected.

“Severe the doom that days prolonged impose,
To stand sad witness of unnumbered woes!”—Melmoth cor.

Page 1761

UNDER NOTE VII.—FORMS ADAPTED TO DIFFERENT STYLES.

1. Forms adapted to the Common or Familiar Style. “Was it thou[538] that built that house?”—Brown’s Institutes, Key, p. 270. “That boy writes very elegantly.”—Ib. “Could not thou write without blotting thy book?”—Ib. “Dost not thou think—or, Don’t thou think, it will rain to-day?”—Ib. “Does not—or, Don’t your cousin intend to visit you?”—Ib. “That boy has torn my book.”—Ib. “Was it thou that spread the hay?”—Ib. “Was it James, or thou, that let him in?”—Ib. “He dares not say a word.”—Ib. “Thou stood in my way and hindered me.”—Ib.

“Whom do I see?—Whom dost thou see now?—Whom does he see?—Whom dost thou love most?—What art thou doing to-day?—What person dost thou see teaching that boy?—He has two new knives.—Which road dost thou take?—What child is he teaching?”—Ingersoll cor. “Thou, who mak’st my shoes, sellst many more.” Or thus: “You, who make my shoes, sell many more.”—Id.

“The English language has been much cultivated during the last two hundred years. It has been considerably polished and refined.”—Lowth cor. “This style is ostentatious, and does not suit grave writing.”—Priestley cor. “But custom has now appropriated who to persons, and which to things” [and brute animals].—Id. “The indicative mood shows or declares something; as, Ego amo, I love; or else asks a question; as, Amas tu? Dost thou love?”—Paul’s Ac. cor. “Though thou cannot do much for the cause, thou may and should do something.”—Murray cor. “The support of so many of his relations, was a heavy tax: but thou knowst (or, you know) he paid it cheerfully.”—Id. “It may, and often does, come short of it.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 359.

“‘Twas thou, who, while thou seem’d to chide,
To give me all thy pittance tried.”—Mitford cor.

2. Forms adapted to the Solemn or Biblical Style. “The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all.”—Psalms, ciii, 19. “Thou answeredst them, O Lord our God; thou wast a God that forgave[539] them, though thou tookest vengeance of their inventions.”—See Psalms, xcix, 8. “Then thou spakest in vision to thy Holy One, and saidst, I have laid help upon one that is mighty.”—Ib., lxxxix, 19. “‘So then, it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy;’ who dispenseth his blessings, whether temporal or spiritual, as seemeth good in his sight.”—Christian Experience of St. Paul, p. 344; see Rom., ix, 16.

Page 1762

"Thou, the mean while, wast blending with my thought;
Yea, with my life, and life's own secret joy."—Coleridge cor.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—EXPRESS THE NOMINATIVE.

"Who is here so base, that he would be a bondman?"—Shak. cor. "Who is here so rude, he would not be a Roman?"—Id. "There is not a sparrow which falls to the ground without his notice." Or better: "Not a sparrow falls to the ground, without his notice."—Murray cor. "In order to adjust them in such a manner as shall consist equally with the perspicuity and the strength of the period."—Id. and Blair cor. "But sometimes there is a verb which comes in." Better: "But sometimes there is a verb introduced."—Cobbett cor. "Mr. Prince has a genius which would prompt him to better things."—Spect. cor. "It is this that removes that impenetrable mist."—Harris cor. "By the praise which is given him for his courage."—Locke cor. "There is no man who would be more welcome here."—Steele cor. "Between an antecedent and a consequent, or what goes before, and what immediately follows."—Blair cor. "And as connected with what goes before and what follows."—Id. "No man doth a wrong for the wrong's sake."—Bacon cor. "All the various miseries of life, which people bring upon themselves by negligence or folly, and which might have been avoided by proper care, are instances of this."—Bp. Butler cor. "Ancient philosophers have taught many things in favour of morality, so far at least as it respects justice and goodness towards our fellow-creatures."—Fuller cor. "Indeed, if there be any such, who have been, or who appear to be of us, as suppose there is not a wise man among us all, nor an honest man, that is able to judge betwixt his brethren; we shall not covet to meddle in their matters."—Barclay cor. "There were some that drew back; there were some that made shipwreck of faith; yea, there were some that brought in damnable heresies."—Id. "The nature of the cause rendered this plan altogether proper; and, under similar circumstances, the orator's method is fit to be imitated."—Blair cor. "This is an idiom to which our language is strongly inclined, and which was formerly very prevalent."—Churchill cor. "His roots are wrapped about the heap, and he seeth the place of stones."—Bible cor.

"New York, Fifthmonth 3d, 1823.

Dear friend,

I am sorry to hear of thy loss; but I hope it may be retrieved. I should be happy to render thee any assistance in my power. I shall call to see thee to-morrow morning. Accept assurances of my regard. A. B."

Page 1763

"New York, May 3d, P. M., 1823.

Dear sir,

I have just received the kind note you favoured me with this morning; and I cannot forbear to express my gratitude to you. On further information, I find I have not lost so much as I at first supposed; and I believe I shall still be able to meet all my engagements. I should, however, be happy to see you. Accept, dear sir, my most cordial thanks. C. D."

See Brown's Institutes, p. 271.

"Will martial flames forever fire thy mind,
And wilt thou never be to Heaven resign'd?"—Pope cor.

UNDER NOTE IX.—APPLICATION OF MOODS.

First Clause of the Note.—The Subjunctive Present.

"He will not be pardoned unless he repent."—Inst., p. 191. "If thou find any kernelwort in this marshy meadow, bring it to me."—Neef cor. "If thou leave the room, do not forget to shut that drawer."—Id. "If thou grasp it stoutly, thou wilt not be hurt:" or, (familiarily,)—"thou will not be hurt."—Id. "On condition that he come, I will consent to stay."—Murray's Key, p. 208. "If he be but discreet, he will succeed."—Inst., p. 280. "Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob."—Gen., xxxi, 24. "If thou cast me off, I shall be miserable."—Inst., p. 280. "Send them to me, if thou please."—Ib. "Watch the door of thy lips, lest thou utter folly."—Ib. "Though a liar speak the truth, he will hardly be believed."—Bartlett cor. "I will go, unless I be ill."—L. Murray cor. "If the word or words understood be supplied, the true construction will be apparent."—Id. "Unless thou see the propriety of the measure, we shall not desire thy support."—Id. "Unless thou make a timely retreat, the danger will be unavoidable."—Id. "We may live happily, though our possessions be small."—Id. "If they be carefully studied, they will enable the student to parse all the exercises."—Id. "If the accent be fairly preserved on the proper syllable, this drawling sound will never be heard."—Id. "One phrase may, in point of sense, be equivalent to an other, though its grammatical nature be essentially different."—Id. "If any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man."—2 Thess., iii, 14. "Thy skill will be the greater, if thou hit it."—Putnam, Cobb, or Knowles, cor. "We shall overtake him, though he run."—Priestley et al. cor. "We shall be disgusted, if he give us too much."—Blair cor.

"What is't to thee, if he neglect thy urn,
Or without spices let thy body burn?"—Dryden cor.

Page 1764

Second Clause of Note IX.—The Subjunctive Imperfect.[540]

"And so would I, if I were he."—Inst., p. 191. "If I were a Greek, I should resist Turkish despotism."—Cardell cor. "If he were to go, he would attend to your business."—Id. "If thou felt as I do, we should soon decide."—Inst., p. 280. "Though thou shed thy blood in the cause, it would but prove thee sincerely a fool."—Ib. "If thou loved him, there would be more evidence of it."—Ib. "If thou convinced him, he would not act accordingly."—Murray cor. "If there were no liberty, there would be no real crime."—Formey cor. "If the house were burnt down, the case would be the same."—Foster cor. "As if the mind were not always in action, when it prefers any thing."—West cor. "Suppose I were to say, 'Light is a body.'"—Harris cor. "If either oxygen or azote were omitted, life would be destroyed."—Gurney cor. "The verb dare is sometimes used as if it were an auxiliary."—Priestley cor. "A certain lady, whom I could name, if it were necessary."—Spect. cor. "If the e were dropped, c and g would assume their hard sounds."—Buchanan cor. "He would no more comprehend it, than if it were the speech of a Hottentot."—Neef cor. "If thou knew the gift of God," &c.—Bible cor. "I wish I were at home."—O. B. Peirce cor. "Fact alone does not constitute right: if it did, general warrants were lawful."—Junius cor. "Thou lookst upon thy boy, as though thou guessed it."—Putnam, Cobb, or Knowles, cor. "He fought as if he contended for life."—Hiley cor. "He fought as if he were contending for his life."—Id.

"The dewdrop glistens on thy leaf, As if thou shed for me a tear; As if thou knew my tale of grief, Felt all my sufferings severe."—Letham cor.

Last Clause of Note IX.—The Indicative Mood.

"If he knows the way, he does not need a guide."—Inst., p. 191. "And if there is no difference, one of them must be superfluous, and ought to be rejected."—Murray cor. "I cannot say that I admire this construction though it is much used."—Priestley cor. "We are disappointed, if the verb does not immediately follow it."—Id. "If it was they, that acted so ungratefully, they are doubly in fault."—Murray cor. "If art becomes apparent, it disgusts the reader."—Jamieson cor. "Though perspicuity is more properly a rhetorical than a grammatical quality, I thought it better to include it in this book."—Campbell cor. "Although the efficient cause is obscure, the final cause of those sensations lies open.”—Blair cor. “Although the barrenness of language, or the want of words, is doubtless one cause of the invention of tropes.”—Id. “Though it enforces not its instructions, yet it furnishes a greater variety.”—Id. “In other cases, though the idea is one, the words remain quite separate.”—Priestley cor. “Though the form of our language is more simple, and has that peculiar beauty.”—Buchanan cor. “Human works are of no significancy till they are completed.”—Kames cor. “Our disgust lessens gradually till it vanishes altogether.”—Id. “And our relish improves by use, till it arrives at perfection.”—Id. “So long as he keeps himself in his own proper element.”—Coke cor. “Whether this translation was ever published or not, I am wholly ignorant.”—Sale cor. “It is false to affirm, ‘As it is day, it is light,’ unless it actually is day.”—Harris cor. “But we may at midnight affirm, ‘If it is day, it is light.’”—Id. “If the Bible is true, it is a volume of unspeakable interest.”—Dickinson cor. “Though he was a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered.”—Bible cor. “If David then calleth (or calls) him Lord, how is he his son?”—Id.

Page 1765

“’Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill Appears in writing, or in judging, ill.”—Pope cor.

UNDER NOTE X.—FALSE SUBJUNCTIVES.

“If a man has built a house, the house is his.”—Wayland cor. “If God has required them of him, as is the fact, he has time.”—Id. “Unless a previous understanding to the contrary has been had with the principal.”—Berrian cor. “O! if thou hast hid them in some flowery cave.”—Milton cor. “O! if Jove’s will has linked that amorous power to thy soft lay.”—Id. “SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD: If thou love, If thou loved.”—Dr. Priestley, Dr. Murray, John Burn, David Blair, Harrison, and others. “Till Religion, the pilot of the soul, hath lent thee her unfathomable coil.”—Tupper cor. “Whether nature or art contributes most to form an orator, is a trifling inquiry.”—Blair cor. “Year after year steals something from us, till the decaying fabric totters of itself, and at length crumbles into dust.”—Murray cor. “If spiritual pride has not entirely vanquished humility.”—West cor. “Whether he has gored a son, or has gored a daughter.”—Bible cor. “It is doubtful whether the object introduced by way of simile, relates to what goes before or to what follows.”—Kames cor.

“And bridle in thy headlong wave,
Till thou our summons answer’d hast.” Or:—
“And bridle in thy headlong wave,
Till thou hast granted what we crave.”—Milt. cor.

Page 1766

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE XV AND ITS NOTE.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—THE IDEA OF PLURALITY.

"The gentry are punctilious in their etiquette."—G. B. "In France, the peasantry go barefoot, and the middle sort make use of wooden shoes."—Harvey cor. "The people rejoice in that which should cause sorrow."—Murray varied. "My people are foolish, they have not known me."—Bible and Lowth cor. "For the people speak, but do not write."—Phil. Mu. cor. "So that all the people that were in the camp, trembled."—Bible cor. "No company like to confess that they are ignorant."—Todd cor. "Far the greater part of their captives were anciently sacrificed."—Robertson cor. "More than one half of them were cut off before the return of spring."—Id. "The other class, termed Figures of Thought, suppose the words to be used in their proper and literal meaning."—Blair and Mur. cor. "A multitude of words in their dialect approach to the Teutonic form, and therefore afford excellent assistance."—Dr. Murray cor. "A great majority of our authors are defective in manner."—J. Brown cor. "The greater part of these new-coined words have been rejected."—Tooke cor. "The greater part of the words it contains, are subject to certain modifications or inflections."—The Friend cor. "While all our youth prefer her to the rest."—Waller cor. "Mankind are appointed to live in a future state."—Bp. Butler cor. "The greater part of human kind speak and act wholly by imitation."—Rambler, No. 146. "The greatest part of human gratifications approach so nearly to vice."—Id., No. 160.

"While still the busy world are treading o'er
The paths they trod five thousand years before."—Young cor.

UNDER THE NOTE.—THE IDEA OF UNITY.

"In old English, this species of words was numerous."—Dr. Murray cor. "And a series of exercises in false grammar is introduced towards the end."—Frost cor. "And a jury, in conformity with the same idea, was anciently called homagium, the homage, or manhood."—Webster cor. "With respect to the former, there is indeed a plenty of means."—Kames cor. "The number of school districts has increased since the last year."—Throop cor. "The Yearly Meeting has purchased with its funds these publications."—Foster cor. "Has the legislature power to prohibit assemblies?"—Sullivan cor. "So that the whole number of the streets was fifty."—Rollin cor. "The number of inhabitants was not more than four millions.”—Smollett cor. “The house of Commons was of small weight.”—Hume cor. “The assembly of the wicked hath (or has) inclosed me.”—Psal. cor. “Every kind of convenience and comfort is provided.”—C. S. Journal cor. “Amidst the great decrease of the inhabitants in Spain, the body of the clergy has suffered no diminution; but it has rather been gradually increasing.”—Payne cor. “Small as the number of inhabitants is, yet their poverty is extreme.”—Id. “The number of the names was about one hundred and twenty.”—Ware and Acts cor.

Page 1767

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE XVI AND ITS NOTES.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF—THE VERB AFTER JOINT NOMINATIVES.

“So much ability and [so much] merit are seldom found.”—Mur. et al. cor. “The etymology and syntax of the language are thus spread before the learner.”—Bullions cor. “Dr. Johnson tells us, that, in English poetry, the accent and the quantity of syllables are the same thing.”—Adams cor. “Their general scope and tendency, having never been clearly apprehended, are not remembered at all.”—L. Murray cor. “The soil and sovereignty were not purchased of the natives.”—Knapp cor. “The boldness, freedom, and variety, of our blank verse, are infinitely more favourable to sublimity of style, than [are the constraint and uniformity of] rhyme.”—Blair cor. “The vivacity and sensibility of the Greeks seem to have been much greater than ours.”—Id. “For sometimes the mood and tense are signified by the verb, sometimes they are signified of the verb by something else.”—R. Johnson cor. “The verb and the noun making a complete sense, whereas the participle and the noun do not.”—Id. “The growth and decay of passions and emotions, traced through all their mazes, are a subject too extensive for an undertaking like the present.”—Kames cor. “The true meaning and etymology of some of his words were lost.”—Knight cor. “When the force and direction of personal satire are no longer understood.”—Junius cor. “The frame and condition of man admit of no other principle.”—Dr. Brown cor. “Some considerable time and care were necessary.”—Id. “In consequence of this idea, much ridicule and censure have been thrown upon Milton.”—Blair cor. “With rational beings, nature and reason are the same thing.”—Collier cor. “And the flax and the barley were smitten.”—Bible cor. “The colon and semicolon divide a period; this with, and that without, a connective.”—Ware cor. “Consequently, wherever space and time are found, there God must also be.”—Newton cor. “As the past tense and perfect participle of LOVE end in ED, it is regular.”—Chandler cor. “But the usual arrangement and nomenclature prevent this from being readily seen.”—N. Butler cor. “Do and did simply imply opposition or emphasis.”—A. Murray cor. “I and an other make the plural WE; thou and an other are equivalent to YE; he, she, or it, and an other, make THEY.”—Id. “I and an other or others are the same as WE, the first person plural; thou and an other or others are the same as YE, the second person plural; he, she, or it, and an other or others, are the same as THEY, the third person plural.”—Buchanan and Brit. Gram. cor. “God and thou are two, and thou and thy neighbour are two.”—Love Conquest cor. “Just as AN and A have arisen out of the numeral ONE.”—Fowler cor. “The tone and style of all of them, particularly of the first and the last, are very different.”—Blair cor. “Even as the roebuck and the hart are eaten.”—Bible cor. “Then I may conclude that two and three do not make five.”—Barclay cor. “Which, at sundry times, thou and thy brethren have received from us.”—Id. “Two and two are four, and one is five:” i, e., “and one, added to four, is five.”—Pope cor. “Humility and knowledge with poor apparel, excel pride and ignorance under costly array.”—See Murray’s Key, Rule 2d. “A page and a half have been added to the section on composition.”—Bullions cor. “Accuracy and expertness in this exercise are an important acquisition.”—Id.

Page 1768

“Woods and groves are of thy dressing,
Hill and dale proclaim thy blessing.” Or thus:—
“Hill and valley boast thy blessing.”—Milton cor.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—THE VERB BEFORE JOINT NOMINATIVES.

“There are a good and a bad, a right and a wrong, in taste, as in other things.”—Blair cor. “Whence have arisen much stiffness and affectation.”—Id. “To this error, are owing, in a great measure, that intricacy and [that] harshness, in his figurative language, which I before noticed.”—Blair and Jamieson cor. “Hence, in his Night Thoughts, there prevail an obscurity and a hardness of style.”—Blair cor. See Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 167. “There are, however, in that work, much good sense and excellent criticism.”—Blair cor. “There are too much low wit and scurrility in Plautus.” Or: “There is, in Plautus, too much of low wit and scurrility.”—Id. “There are too much reasoning and refinement, too much pomp and studied beauty, in them.” Or: “There is too much of reasoning and refinement, too much of pomp and studied beauty, in them.”—Id. “Hence arise the structure and characteristic expression of exclamation.”—Rush cor. “And such pilots are he and his brethren, according to their own confession.”—Barclay cor. “Of whom are Hymeneus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred.”—Bible cor. “Of whom are Hymeneus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan.”—Id. “And so were James and John, the sons of Zebedee.”—Id. “Out of the same mouth, proceed blessing and cursing.”—Id. “Out of the mouth of the Most High, proceed not evil and good.”—Id. “In which there are most plainly a right and a wrong.”—Bp. Butler cor. “In this sentence, there are both an actor and an object.”—R. C. Smith cor. “In the breastplate, were placed the mysterious Urim and Thummim.”—Milman cor. “What are the gender, number, and person, of the pronoun[541] in the first example?”—R. C. Smith cor. “There seem to be a familiarity and a want of dignity in it.”—Priestley cor. “It has been often asked, what are Latin and Greek?”—Lit. Journal cor. “For where do beauty and high wit, But in your constellation, meet?”—Sam. Butler cor. “Thence to the land where flow Ganges and Indus.”—Milton cor. “On these foundations, seem to rest the midnight riot and dissipation of modern assemblies.”—Dr. Brown cor. “But what have disease, deformity, and filth, upon which the thoughts can be allured to dwell?”—Dr. Johnson cor. “How are the gender and number of the relative known?”—Bullions cor.

Page 1769

“High rides the sun, thick rolls the dust,
And feebler speed the blow and thrust.”—Scott cor.

UNDER NOTE I.—CHANGE THE CONNECTIVE.

“In every language, there prevails a certain structure, or analogy of parts, which is understood to give foundation to the most reputable usage.”—Dr. Blair cor. “There runs through his whole manner a stiffness, an affectation, which renders him [Shaftsbury] very unfit to be considered a general model.”—Id. “But where declamation for improvement in speech is the sole aim.”—Id. “For it is by these, chiefly, that the train of thought, the course of reasoning, the whole progress of the mind, in continued discourse of any kind, is laid open.”—Lowth cor. “In all writing and discourse, the proper composition or structure of sentences is of the highest importance.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Here the wishful and expectant look of the beggar naturally leads to a vivid conception of that which was the object of his thoughts.”—Campbell cor. “Who say, that the outward naming of Christ, with the sign of the cross, puts away devils.”—Barclay cor. “By which an oath with a penalty was to be imposed on the members.”—Junius cor. “Light, or knowledge, in what manner soever afforded us, is equally from God.”—Bp. Butler cor. “For instance, sickness or untimely death is the consequence of intemperance.”—Id. “When grief or blood ill-tempered vexeth him.” Or: “When grief, with blood ill-tempered, vexes him”—Shak. cor. “Does continuity, or connexion, create sympathy and relation in the parts of the body?”—Collier cor. “His greatest concern, his highest enjoyment, was, to be approved in the sight of his Creator.”—L. Murray cor. “Know ye not that there is[542] a prince, a great man, fallen this day in Israel?”—Bible cor. “What is vice, or wickedness? No rarity, you may depend on it.”—Collier cor. “There is also the fear or apprehension of it.”—Bp. Butler cor. “The apostrophe with s (’s) is an abbreviation for is, the termination of the old English genitive.”—Bullions cor. “Ti, ce, OR ci, when followed by a vowel, usually has the sound of sh; as in partial, ocean, special.”—Weld cor.

Page 1770

“Bitter constraint of sad occasion dear
Compels me to disturb your season due.”—Milton cor.

“Debauch’ry, or excess, though with less noise,
As great a portion of mankind destroys.”—Waller cor.

UNDER NOTE II.—AFFIRMATION WITH NEGATION.

“Wisdom, and not wealth, procures esteem.”—Inst., Key, p. 272. “Prudence, and not pomp, is the basis of his fame.”—Ib. “Not fear, but labour has overcome him.”—Ib. “The decency, and not the abstinence, makes the difference.”—Ib. “Not her beauty, but her talents attract attention.”—Ib. “It is her talents, and not her beauty, that attract attention.”—Ib. “It is her beauty, and not her talents, that attracts attention.”—Ib.

“His belly, not his brains, this impulse gives:
He’ll grow immortal; for he cannot live.” Or thus:—
“His bowels, not his brains, this impulse give:
He’ll grow immortal; for he cannot live.”—Young cor.

UNDER NOTE III.—AS WELL AS, BUT, OR SAVE.

Page 1771

"Common sense, as well as piety, tells us these are proper."—Fam. Com. cor. "For without it the critic, as well as the undertaker, ignorant of any rule, has nothing left but to abandon himself to chance."—Kames cor. "And accordingly hatred, as well as love, is extinguished by long absence'."—Id. "But at every turn the richest melody, as well as the sublimest sentiments, is conspicuous."—Id. "But it, as well as the lines immediately subsequent, defies all translation."—Coleridge cor. "But their religion, as well as their customs and manners, was strangely misrepresented."—Bolingbroke, on History, Paris Edition of 1808, p. 93. "But his jealous policy, as well as the fatal antipathy of Fonseca, was conspicuous."—Robertson cor. "When their extent, as well as their value, was unknown."—Id. "The etymology, as well as the syntax, of the more difficult parts of speech, is reserved for his attention at a later period."—Parker and Fox cor. "What I myself owe to him, no one but myself knows."—Wright cor. "None, but thou, O mighty prince! can avert the blow."—Inst., Key, p. 272. "Nothing, but frivolous amusements, pleases the indolent."—Id.

"Nought, save the gurglings of the rill, was heard."—G. B.

"All songsters, save the hooting owl, were mute."—G. B.

UNDER NOTE IV.—EACH, EVERY, OR NO.

"Give every word, and every member, its due weight and force."—Murray's Gram., Vol. i, p. 316. "And to one of these belongs every noun, and every third person of every verb."—Dr. Wilson cor. "No law, no restraint, no regulation, is required to keep him within bounds."—Lit. Journal cor. "By that time, every window and every door in the street was full of heads."—Observer cor. "Every system of religion, and every school of philosophy, stands back from this field, and leaves Jesus Christ alone, the solitary example." Or: "All systems of religion, and all schools of philosophy, stand back from this field, and leave Jesus Christ alone, the solitary example."—Abbott cor. "Each day, and each hour, brings its portion of duty."—Inst., Key, p. 272. "And every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented, resorted unto him."—Bible cor. "Every private Christian, every member of the church, ought to read and peruse the Scriptures, that he may know his faith and belief to be founded upon them."—Barclay cor. "And every mountain and every island was moved out of its place."—Bible cor.

"No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,
No cavern'd hermit rests self-satisfied."—Pope.

Page 1772

UNDER NOTE V.—WITH, OR, &c., FOR AND.

“The sides, A, B, and C, compose the triangle.”—Tobitt, Felch, and Ware cor. “The stream, the rock, and the tree, must each of them stand forth, so as to make a figure in the imagination.”—Dr. Blair cor. “While this, with euphony, constitutes, finally, the whole.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “The bag, with the guineas and dollars in it, was stolen.”—Cobbett cor. “Sobriety, with great industry and talent, enables a man to perform great deeds.” Or: “Sobriety, industry, and talent, enable a man to perform great deeds.”—Id. “The it, together with the verb, expresses a state of being.”—Id. “Where Leonidas the Spartan king, and his chosen band, fighting for their country, were cut off to the last man.”—Kames cor. “And Leah also, and her children, came near and bowed themselves.”—Bible cor. “The First and the Second will either of them, by itself, coalesce with the Third, but they do not coalesce with each other.”—Harris cor. “The whole must centre in the query, whether Tragedy and Comedy are hurtful and dangerous representations.”—Formey cor. “Both grief and joy are infectious: the emotions which they raise in the spectator, resemble them perfectly.”—Kames cor. “But, in all other words, the q and u are both sounded.”—Ensell cor. “Q and u (which are always together) have the sound of kw, as in queen; or of k only, as in opaque.” Or, better: “Q has always the sound of k; and the u which follows it, that of w; except in French words, in which the u is silent.”—Goodenow cor. “In this selection, the a and i form distinct syllables.”—Walker cor. “And a considerable village, with gardens, fields, &c., extends around on each side of the square.”—Lib. cor. “Affection and interest guide our notions and behaviour in the affairs of life; imagination and passion affect the sentiments that we entertain in matters of taste.”—Jamieson cor. “She heard none of those intimations of her defects, which envy, petulance, and anger, produce among children.”—Johnson cor. “The King, Lords, and Commons, constitute an excellent form of government.”—Crombie et al. cor. “If we say, ‘I am the man who commands you,’ the relative clause, with the antecedent man, forms the predicate.”—Crombie cor.

“The spacious firmament on high,
The blue ethereal vault of sky,
And spangled heav’ns, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim.”—Addison cor.

UNDER NOTE VI.—ELLIPTICAL CONSTRUCTIONS.

Page 1773

"There are a reputable and a disreputable practice." Or: "There is a reputable, and there is a disreputable practice."—Adams cor. "This man and this were born in her."—Milton cor. "This man and that were born in her."—Bible cor. "This and that man were born there."—Hendrick cor. "Thus le in l~ego, and le in l=egi, seem to be sounded equally long."—Adam and Gould cor. "A distinct and an accurate articulation form the groundwork of good delivery." Or: "A distinct and accurate articulation forms the groundwork of good delivery."—Kirkham cor. "How are vocal and written language understood?"—Sanders cor. "The good, the wise, and the learned man, are ornaments to human society." Or: "The good, wise, and learned man is an ornament to human society."—Bartlett cor. "In some points, the expression of song and that of speech are identical."—Rush cor. "To every room, there were an open and a secret passage."—Johnson cor. "There are such things as a true and a false taste; and the latter as often directs fashion, as the former."—Webster cor. "There are such things as a prudent and an imprudent institution of life, with regard to our health and our affairs."—Bp. Butler cor. "The lot of the outcasts of Israel, and that of the dispersed of Judah, however different in one respect, have in an other corresponded with wonderful exactness."—Hope of Israel cor. "On these final syllables, the radical and the vanishing movement are performed."—Rush cor. "To be young or old, and to be good, just, or the contrary, are physical or moral events."—Spurzheim cor., and Felch. "The eloquence of George Whitfield and that of John Wesley were very different in character each from the other."—Dr. Sharp cor. "The affinity of m for the series beginning with b, and that of n for the series beginning with t, give occasion for other euphonic changes."—Fowler cor.

"Pylades' soul, and mad Orestes', were In these, if right the Greek philosopher." Or thus:—
"Pylades' and Orestes' soul did pass
To these, if we believe Pythagoras." Or, without ellipsis:—
"Pylades and Orestes' souls did pass
To these, if we believe Pythagoras."—Cowley corrected.

UNDER NOTE VII.—DISTINCT SUBJECT PHRASES.

Page 1774

"To be moderate in our views, and to proceed temperately in the pursuit of them, are the best ways to ensure success."—L. Murray cor. "To be of any species, and to have a right to the name of that species, are both one."—Locke cor. "With whom, to will, and to do, are the same."—Dr. Jamieson cor. "To profess, and to possess, are very different things."—Inst., Key, p. 272. "To do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God, are duties of universal obligation."—Ib. "To be round or square, to be solid or fluid, to be large or small, and to be moved swiftly or slowly, are all equally alien from the nature of thought."—Dr. Johnson. "The resolving of a sentence into its elements, or parts of speech, and [a] stating [of] the accidents which belong to these, are called PARSING." Or, according to Note 1st above: "The resolving of a sentence into its elements, or parts of speech, with [a] stating [of] the accidents which belong to these, is called PARSING."—Bullions cor. "To spin and to weave, to knit and to sew, were once a girl's employments; but now, to dress, and to catch a beau, are all she calls enjoyments."—Kimball cor.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE XVII AND ITS NOTES.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—NOMINATIVES CONNECTED BY OR.

"We do not know in what either reason or instinct consists."—Johnson corrected. "A noun or a pronoun joined with a participle, constitutes a nominative case absolute."—Bicknell cor. "The relative will be of that case which the verb or noun following, or the preposition going before, uses to govern:" or,—"usually governs."—Adam, Gould, et al., cor. "In the different modes of pronunciation, which habit or caprice gives rise to."—Knight cor. "By which he, or his deputy, was authorized to cut down any trees in Whittlebury forest."—Junius cor. "Wherever objects were named, in which sound, noise, or motion, was concerned, the imitation by words was abundantly obvious."—Dr. Blair cor. "The pleasure or pain resulting from a train of perceptions in different circumstances, is a beautiful contrivance of nature for valuable purposes."—Kames cor. "Because their foolish vanity, or their criminal ambition, represents the principles by which they are influenced, as absolutely perfect."—D. Boileau cor. "Hence naturally arises indifference or aversion between the parties."—Dr. Brown cor. "A penitent unbeliever, or an impenitent believer, is a character nowhere to be found."—Tract cor. "Copying whatever is peculiar in the talk of all those whose birth or fortune entitles them to imitation."—Johnson cor. "Where love, hatred, fear, or contempt, is often of decisive influence.—Duncan cor. “A lucky anecdote, or an enlivening tale, relieves the folio page.”—D’Israeli cor. “For outward matter or event fashions not the character within.” Or: (according to the antique style of this modern book of proverbs:) —“fashioneth not the character within.”—Tupper cor. “Yet sometimes we have seen that wine, or chance, has warmed cold brains.”—Dryden cor. “Motion is a genus; flight, a species; this flight or that flight is an individual.”—Harris cor. “When et, aut, vel, sive, or nec, is repeated before different members of the same sentence.”—Adam, Gould, and Grant, cor. “Wisdom or folly governs us.”—Fisk cor. “A or an is styled the indefinite article”—Folker cor. “A rusty nail, or a crooked pin, shoots up into a prodigy.”—Spect. cor. “Is either the subject or the predicate in the second sentence modified?”—Prof. Fowler cor.

Page 1775

“Praise from a friend, or censure from a foe,
Is lost on hearers that our merits know.”—Pope cor.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—NOMINATIVES CONNECTED BY NOR.

“Neither he nor she has spoken to him.”—Perrin cor. “For want of a process of events, neither knowledge nor elegance preserves the reader from weariness.”—Johnson cor. “Neither history nor tradition furnishes such information.”—Robertson cor. “Neither the form nor the power of the liquids has varied materially.”—Knight cor. “Where neither noise nor motion is concerned.”—Blair cor. “Neither Charles nor his brother was qualified to support such a system.”—Junius cor. “When, therefore, neither the liveliness of representation, nor the warmth of passion serves, as it were, to cover the trespass, it is not safe to leave the beaten track.”—Campbell cor. “In many countries called Christian, neither Christianity, nor its evidence, is fairly laid before men.”—Bp. Butler cor. “Neither the intellect nor the heart is capable of being driven.”—Abbott cor. “Throughout this hymn, neither Apollo nor Diana is in any way connected with the Sun or Moon.”—Coleridge cor. “Of which, neither he, nor this grammar, takes any notice.”—R. Johnson cor. “Neither their solicitude nor their foresight extends so far.”—Robertson cor. “Neither Gomara, nor Oviedo, nor Herrera, considers Ojeda, or his companion Vespucci, as the first discoverer of the continent of America.”—Id. “Neither the general situation of our colonies, nor that particular distress which forced the inhabitants of Boston to take up arms, has been thought worthy of a moment’s consideration.”—Junius cor.

Page 1776

"Nor war nor wisdom yields our Jews delight,
They will not study, and they dare not fight."—Crabbe cor.

"Nor time nor chance breeds such confusions yet,
Nor are the mean so rais'd, nor sunk the great."—Rowe cor.

UNDER NOTE I.—NOMINATIVES THAT DISAGREE.

"The definite article, the, designates what particular thing or things are meant."—Merchant cor. "Sometimes a word, or several words, necessary to complete the grammatical construction of a sentence, are not expressed, but are omitted by ellipsis."—Burr cor. "Ellipsis, (better, Ellipses,) or abbreviations, are the wheels of language."—Maunder cor. "The conditions or tenor of none of them appears at this day." Or: "The tenor or conditions of none of them appear at this day."—Hutchinson cor. "Neither men nor money was wanting for the service." Or: "Neither money nor men were wanting for the service."—Id. "Either our own feelings, or the representation of those of others, requires emphatic distinction to be frequent."—Dr. Barber cor. "Either Atoms and Chance, or Nature, is uppermost: now I am for the latter part of the disjunction."—Collier cor. "Their riches or poverty is generally proportioned to their activity or indolence."—Cox cor. "Concerning the other part of him, neither he nor you seem to have entertained an idea."—Horne cor. "Whose earnings or income is so small."—Discip. cor. "Neither riches nor fame renders a man happy."—Day cor. "The references to the pages always point to the first volume, unless the Exercises or Key is mentioned." Or, better:—"unless mention is made of the Exercises or Key." Or: "unless the Exercises or Key be named."—L. Murray cor.

UNDER NOTE II.—COMPLETE THE CONCORD.

"My lord, you wrong my father; neither is he, nor am I, capable of harbouring a thought against your peace."—Walpole cor. "There was no division of acts; there were no pauses, or intervals, in the performance; but the stage was continually full; occupied either by the actors, or by the chorus."—Dr. Blair cor. "Every word ending in b, p, or f, is of this order, as also are many that end in v."—Dr. Murray cor. "Proud as we are of human reason, nothing can be more absurd than is the general system of human life and human knowledge."—Bolingbroke cor. "By which the body of sin and death is done away, and we are cleansed."—Barclay cor. "And those were already converted, and regeneration was begun in them."—Id.

Page 1777

"For I am an old man, and my wife is well advanced in years."—Bible cor. "Who is my mother? or who are my brethren?"—See Matt., xii, 48. "Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor are the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt-offering."—Bible cor. "Information has been obtained, and some trials have been made."—Martineau cor. "It is as obvious, and its causes are more easily understood."—Webster cor. "All languages furnish examples of this kind, and the English contains as many as any other."—Priestley cor. "The winters are long, and the cold is intense."—Morse cor. "How have I hated instruction, and how hath my heart despised reproof!"—Prov. cor. "The vestals were abolished by Theodosius the Great, and the fire of Vesta was extinguished."—Lempriere cor. "Riches beget pride; pride begets impatience."—Bullions cor. "Grammar is not reasoning, any more than organization is thought, or letters are sounds."—Enclytica cor. "Words are implements, and grammar is a machine."—Id.

UNDER NOTE III.—PLACE OF THE FIRST PERSON.

"Thou or I must undertake the business."—L. Murray cor. "He and I were there."—Ash cor. "And we dreamed a dream in one night, he and I."—Bible cor. "If my views remain the same as his and mine were in 1833."—Goodell cor. "My father and I were riding out."—Inst., Key, p. 273. "The premiums were given to George and me."—Ib. "Jane and I are invited."—Ib. "They ought to invite my sister and me."—Ib. "You and I intend to go."—Guy cor. "John and I are going to town."—Brit. Gram. cor. "He and I are sick."—James Brown cor. "Thou and I are well."—Id. "He and I are."—Id. "Thou and I are."—Id. "He, and I write."—Id. "They and I are well."—Id. "She, and thou, and I, were walking."—Id.

UNDER NOTE IV.—DISTINCT SUBJECT PHRASES.

"To practise tale-bearing, or even to countenance it, is great injustice."—Inst., Key, p. 273. "To reveal secrets, or to betray one's friends, is contemptible perfidy."—Id. "To write all substantives with capital letters, or to exclude capitals from adjectives derived from proper names, may perhaps be thought an offence too small for animadversion; but the evil of innovation is always something."—Dr. Barrow cor. "To live in such families, or to have such servants, is a blessing from God."—Fam. Com. cor. "How they portioned out the country, what revolutions they experienced, or what wars they maintained, is utterly unknown.” Or: “How they portioned out the country, what revolutions they experienced, and what wars they maintained, are things utterly unknown.”—Goldsmith cor. “To speak or to write perspicuously and agreeably, is an attainment of the utmost consequence to all who purpose, either by speech or by writing, to address the public.”—Dr. Blair cor.

Page 1778

UNDER NOTE V.—MAKE THE VERBS AGREE.

“Doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and go into the mountains, and seek that which is gone astray?”—Bible cor. “Did he not fear the Lord, and beseech the Lord, and did not the Lord repent of the evil which he had pronounced?”—Id. “And dost thou open thine eyes upon such a one, and bring me into judgement with thee?”—Id. “If any man among you seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man’s religion is vain.”—Id. “If thou sell aught unto thy neighbour, or buy aught of thy neighbour’s hand, ye shall not oppress one an other.”—Id. “And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee, become poor, and be sold to thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant.”—Id. “If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there remember that thy brother hath aught against thee,” &c.—Id. “Anthea was content to call a coach, and so to cross the brook.” Or:—“and in that she crossed the brook.”—Johnson cor. “It is either totally suppressed, or manifested only in its lowest and most imperfect form.”—Blair cor. “But if any man is a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth.” Or: “If any man be a worshiper of God, and do his will, him will he hear.”—Bible cor. “Whereby his righteousness and obedience, death and sufferings without, become profitable unto us, and are made ours.”—Barclay cor. “Who ought to have been here before thee, and to have objected, if they had any thing against me.”—Bible cor.

“Yes! thy proud lords, unpitied land, shall see,
That man has yet a soul, and dares be free.”—Campbell cor.

UNDER NOTE VI.—USE SEPARATE NOMINATIVES.

“H is only an aspiration, or breathing; and sometimes, at the beginning of a word, it is not sounded at all.”—Lowth cor. “Man was made for society, and he ought to extend his good will to all men.”—Id. “There is, and must be, a Supreme Being, of infinite goodness, power, and wisdom, who created, and who supports them.”—Beattie cor. “Were you not affrighted, and did you not mistake a spirit for a body?”—Bp. Watson cor. “The latter noun or pronoun is not governed by the conjunction than or as, but it either agrees with the verb, or is governed by the verb or the preposition, expressed or understood.”—Mur. et al. cor. “He had mistaken his true interest, and he found himself forsaken.”—Murray cor. “The amputation was exceedingly well performed, and it saved the patient’s life.”—Id. “The intentions of some of these philosophers, nay, of many, might have been, and probably they were, good.”—Id. “This may be true, and yet it will not justify the practice.”—Webster cor. “From the practice of those who have had a liberal education, and who are therefore presumed to be best acquainted with men and things.”—Campbell cor. “For those energies and bounties which created, and which preserve, the universe.”—J. Q. Adams cor. “I shall make it once for all, and I hope it will be remembered.”—Blair cor. “This consequence is drawn too abruptly. The argument needed more explanation.” Or: “This consequence is drawn too abruptly, and without sufficient explanation.”—Id. “They must be used with more caution, and they require more preparation.”—Id. “The apostrophe denotes the omission of an i, which was formerly inserted, and which made an addition of a syllable to the word.”—Priestley cor. “The succession may be rendered more various or more uniform, but, in one shape or an other, it is unavoidable.”—Kames cor. “It excites neither terror nor compassion; nor is it agreeable in any respect.”—Id.

Page 1779

“Cheap vulgar arts, whose narrowness affords
No flight for thoughts,—they poorly stick at words.”—Denham cor.

UNDER NOTE VII.—MIXTURE OF DIFFERENT STYLES.

“Let us read the living page, whose every character delights and instructs us.”—Maunder cor. “For if it is in any degree obscure, it puzzles, and does not please.”—Kames cor. “When a speaker addresses himself to the understanding, he proposes the instruction of his hearers.”—Campbell cor. “As the wine which strengthens and refreshes the heart.”—H. Adams cor. “This truth he wraps in an allegory, and feigns that one of the goddesses had taken up her abode with the other.”—Pope cor. “God searcheth and understandeth the heart.” Or: “God searches and understands the heart.”—T. a. Kempis cor. “The grace of God, that bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men.”—Titus, ii, 11. “Which things also we speak, not in the words which man’s wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth.”—1 Cor., ii, 13. “But he has an objection, which he urges, and by which he thinks to overturn all.”—Barclay cor.

Page 1780

"In that it gives them not that comfort and joy which it gives to them who love it."—Id.
"Thou here misunderstood the place and misapplied it." Or: "Thou here misunderstoodst the place and misappliedst it."—Id. Or: (as many of our grammarians will have it:) "Thou here misunderstoodest the place and misappliedst it."—Id. "Like the barren heath in the desert, which knoweth not when good cometh."—See Jer., xvii, 6.
"It speaks of the time past, and shows that something was then doing, but not quite finished."—Devis cor. "It subsists in spite of them; it advances unobserved."—Pascal cor.

"But where is he, the pilgrim of my song?—
Methinks he lingers late and tarries long."—Byron cor.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—CONFUSION OF MOODS.

"If a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them go (or be gone) astray," &c.—Matt., xviii, 12. Or: "If a man has a hundred sheep, and one of them goes (or is gone) astray," &c. Or: "If a man hath a hundred sheep, and one of them goeth (or is gone) astray," &c.—Kirkham cor. "As a speaker advances in his discourse, and increases in energy and earnestness, a higher and a louder tone will naturally steal upon him."—Id. "If one man esteem one day above an other, and an other esteem every day alike; let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."—Barclay cor. See Rom., xiv, 5. "If there be but one body of legislators, it will be no better than a tyranny; if there be only two, there will want a casting voice."—Addison cor. "Should you come up this way, and I be still here, you need not be assured how glad I should be to see you."—Byron cor. "If he repent and become holy, let him enjoy God and heaven."—Brownson cor. "If thy fellow approach thee, naked and destitute, and thou say unto him, 'Depart in peace, be warmed and filled,' and yet thou give him not those things which are needful to him, what benevolence is there in thy conduct?"—Kirkham cor.

"Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers."—Singer's Shakspeare.

"But if it climb, with your assisting hand,
The Trojan walls, and in the city stand."—Dryden cor.

-----"Though Heaven's King
Ride on thy wings, and thou with thy compeers,
Used to the yoke, draw his triumphant wheels."—Milton cor.

UNDER NOTE IX.—IMPROPER ELLIPSES.

Page 1781

"Indeed we have seriously wondered that Murray should leave some things as he has left them."—Reporter cor. "Which they neither have done nor can do."—Barclay cor. "The Lord hath revealed, and doth and will reveal, his will to his people; and hath raised up, and doth raise up, members of his body," &c.—Id. "We see, then, that the Lord hath given, and doth give, such."—Id. "Towards those that have declared, or do declare, themselves members."—Id. "For which we can give, and have given, our sufficient reasons."—Id. "When we mention the several properties of the different words in sentences, as we have mentioned those of the word William's above, what is the exercise called?"—R. C. Smith cor. "It is however to be doubted, whether this Greek idiom ever has obtained, or ever will obtain, extensively, in English."—Nutting cor. "Why did not the Greeks and Romans abound in auxiliary words as much as we do?"—Murray cor. "Who delivers his sentiments in earnest, as they ought to be delivered in order to move and persuade."—Kirkham cor.

UNDER NOTE X.—DO, USED AS A SUBSTITUTE.

"And I would avoid it altogether, if it could be avoided." Or: "I would avoid it altogether, if to avoid it were practicable."—Kames cor. "Such a sentiment from a man expiring of his wounds, is truly heroic; and it must elevate the mind to the greatest height to which it can be raised by a single expression."—Id. "Successive images, thus making deeper and deeper impressions, must elevate the mind more than any single image can."—Id. "Besides making a deeper impression than can be made by cool reasoning."—Id. "Yet a poet, by the force of genius alone, may rise higher than a public speaker can." Or:—"than can a public speaker."—Blair cor. "And the very same reason that has induced several grammarians to go so far as they have gone, should have induced them to go farther."—Priestley cor. "The pupil should commit the first section to memory perfectly, before he attempts (or enters upon) the second part of grammar."—Bradley cor. "The Greek ch was pronounced hard, as we now pronounce it in chord."—Booth cor. "They pronounce the syllables in a different manner from what they adopt (or, in a manner different from that which they are accustomed to use) at other times."—L. Murray cor. "And give him the cool and formal reception that Simon had given."—Scott cor. "I do not say, as some have said."—Bolingbroke cor. "If he suppose the first, he may the last."—Barclay cor. "Who are now despising Christ in his inward appearance, as the Jews of old despised him in his outward [advent].”—Id. “That text of Revelations must not be understood as he understands it.”—Id. “Till the mode of parsing the noun is so familiar to him that he can parse it readily.”—R. C. Smith cor. “Perhaps it is running the same course that Rome had run before.”—Middleton cor. “It ought even on this ground to be avoided; and it easily may be, by a different construction.”—Churchill cor. “These two languages are now pronounced in England as no other nation in Europe pronounces them.”—Creighton cor. “Germany ran the same risk that Italy had run.”—Bolingbroke, Murray, et al., cor.

Page 1782

UNDER NOTE XI.—PRETERITS AND PARTICIPLES.

“The beggars themselves will be broken in a trice.”—Swift cor. “The hoop is hoisted above his nose.”—Id. “And his heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord.”—2 Chron., xvii, 6. “Who sin so oft have mourned, Yet to temptation run.”—Burns cor. “Who would not have let them appear.”—Steele cor. “He would have had you seek for ease at the hands of Mr. Legality.”—Bunyan cor. “From me his madding mind is turned: He woos the widow’s daughter, of the glen.”—Spenser cor. “The man has spoken, and he still speaks.”—Ash cor. “For you have but mistaken me all this while.”—Shak. cor. “And will you rend our ancient love asunder?”—Id. “Mr. Birney has pled (or pleaded) the inexpediency of passing such resolutions.”—Liberator cor. “Who have worn out their years in such most painful labours.”—Littleton cor. “And in the conclusion you were chosen probationer.”—Spectator cor.

“How she was lost, ta’en captive, made a slave;
And how against him set that should her save.”—Bunyan cor.

UNDER NOTE XII.—OF VERBS CONFOUNDED.

“But Moses preferred to while away his time.”—Parker cor. “His face shone with the rays of the sun.”—John Allen cor. “Whom they had set at defiance so lately.”—Bolingbroke cor. “And when he had sat down, his disciples came unto him.”—Bible cor. “When he had sat down on the judgement-seat.” Or: “While he was sitting on the judgement-seat.”—Id. “And, they having kindled a fire in the midst of the hall and sat down together, Peter sat down among them.”—Id. “So, after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and had sat down again,[or, literally, ‘sitting down again,’] he said to them, Do ye know what I have done to you?”—Id. “Even as I also overcame, and sat down with my Father in his throne.”—Id. Or: (rather less literally:) “Even as I have overcome, and am sitting with my Father on his throne.”—Id. “We have such a high priest, who sitteth on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens.”—Id. “And is now sitting at the right hand of the throne of God.”—Id. “He set on foot a furious persecution.”—Payne cor. “There lieth (or lies) an obligation upon the saints to help such.”—Barclay cor. “There let him lie.”—Byron cor. “Nothing but moss, and shrubs, and stunted trees, can grow upon it.”—Morse cor. “Who had laid out considerable sums purely to distinguish themselves.”—Goldsmith cor. “Whereunto the righteous flee and are safe.”—Barclay cor. “He rose from supper, and laid aside his garments.”—Id. “Whither—oh! whither—shall I flee?”—L. Murray cor. “Fleeing from an adopted murderer.”—Id. “To you I flee for refuge.”—Id. “The sign that should warn his disciples to flee from the approaching ruin.”—Keith cor. “In one she sits as a prototype for exact imitation.”—Rush cor. “In which some only bleat, bark, mew, whinny, and bray, a little better than others.”—Id. “Who represented to him the unreasonableness of being affected with such unmanly fears.”—Rollin cor. “Thou sawest every action.” Or, familiarly: “Thou saw every action.”—Guy cor. “I taught, thou taughtest, or taught, he or she taught.”—Coar cor. “Valerian was taken by Sapor and flayed alive, A. D. 260.”—Lempriere cor. “What a fine vehicle has it now become, for all conceptions of the mind!”—Blair cor. “What has become of so many productions?”—Volney cor. “What has become of those ages of abundance and of life?”—Keith cor. “The Spartan admiral had sailed to the Hellespont.”—Goldsmith cor. “As soon as he landed, the multitude thronged about him.”—Id. “Cyrus had arrived at Sardis.”—Id. “Whose year had expired.”—Id. “It might better have been, ‘that faction which,’” Or; “‘That faction which,’ would have been better.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 157. “This people has become a great nation.”—Murray and Ingersoll cor. “And here we enter the region of ornament.”—Dr. Blair cor. “The ungraceful parenthesis which follows, might far better have been avoided.” “Who forced him under water, and there held him until he was drowned.”—Hist. cor.

Page 1783

“I would much rather be myself the slave,
And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.”—Cowper cor.

UNDER NOTE XIII.—WORDS THAT EXPRESS TIME.

Page 1784

"I finished my letter before my brother arrived." Or: "I had finished my letter when my brother arrived."—Kirkham cor. "I wrote before I received his letter."—Dr. Blair cor. "From what was formerly delivered."—Id. "Arts were at length introduced among them." Or: "Arts have been of late introduced among them."—Id. [But the latter reading suits not the Doctor's context.] "I am not of opinion that such rules can be of much use, unless persons see them exemplified." Or:—"could be," and "saw."—Id. "If we use the noun itself, we say, (or must say,) 'This composition is John's.'" Or: "If we used the noun itself, we should say," &c.—L. Murray cor. "But if the assertion refer to something that was transient, or to something that is not supposed to be always the same, the past tense must be preferred:" [as,] "They told him that Jesus of Nazareth was passing by."—Luke and L. Murray cor. "There is no particular intimation but that I have continued to work, even to the present moment."—R. W. Green cor. "Generally, as has been observed already, it is but hinted in a single word or phrase."—Campbell cor. "The wittiness of the passage has been already illustrated."—Id. "As was observed before."—Id. Or: "As has been observed already"—Id. "It has been said already in general terms."—Id. "As I hinted before."—Id. Or: "As I have hinted already."—Id. "What, I believe, was hinted once before."—Id. "It is obvious, as was hinted formerly, that this is but an artificial and arbitrary connexion."—Id. "They did anciently a great deal of hurt."—Bolingbroke cor. "Then said Paul, I knew not, brethren, that he was the high priest."—See Acts, xxiii, 5; Webster cor. "Most prepositions originally denoted the relations of place; and from these they were transferred, to denote, by similitude, other relations."—Lowth and Churchill cor. "His gift was but a poor offering, in comparison with his great estate."—L. Murray cor. "If he should succeed, and obtain his end, he would not be the happier for it." Or, better: "If he succeed, and fully attain his end, he will not be the happier for it."—Id. "These are torrents that swell to-day, and that will have spent themselves by to-morrow."—Dr. Blair cor. "Who have called that wheat on one day, which they have called tares on the next."—Barclay cor. "He thought it was one of his tenants."—Id. "But if one went unto them from the dead, they would repent."—Bible cor. "Neither would they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."—Id. "But it is while men sleep, that the arch-enemy always sows his tares."—The Friend cor. "Crescens would not have failed to expose him."—Addison cor.

Page 1785

"Bent is his bow, the Grecian hearts to wound; Fierce as he moves, his silver shafts resound."—Pope cor.

UNDER NOTE XIV.—VERBS OF COMMANDING, &C.

"Had I commanded you to do this, you would have thought hard of it."—G. B. "I found him better than I expected to find him."—L Murray's Gram., i, 187. "There are several smaller faults which I at first intended to enumerate."—Webster cor. "Antithesis, therefore, may, on many occasions, be employed to advantage, in order to strengthen the impression which we intend that any object shall make."—Dr. Blair cor. "The girl said, if her master would but have let her have money, she might have been well long ago."—Priestley et al. cor. "Nor is there the least ground to fear that we shall here be cramped within too narrow limits."—Campbell cor. "The Romans, flushed with success, expected to retake it."—Hooke cor. "I would not have let fall an unseasonable pleasantry in the venerable presence of Misery, to be entitled to all the wit that ever Rabelais scattered."—Sterne cor. "We expected that he would arrive last night."—Brown's Inst., p. 282. "Our friends intended to meet us."—Ib. "We hoped to see you."—Ib. "He would not have been allowed to enter."—Ib.

UNDER NOTE XV.—PERMANENT PROPOSITIONS.

"Cicero maintained, that whatsoever is useful is good."—G. B. "I observed that love constitutes the whole moral character of God."—Dwight cor. "Thinking that one gains nothing by being a good man."—Voltaire cor. "I have already told you, that I am a gentleman."—Fontaine cor. "If I should ask, whether ice and water are two distinct species of things."—Locke cor. "A stranger to the poem would not easily discover that this is verse."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, i, 260. "The doctor affirmed that fever always produces thirst."—Brown's Inst., p. 282. "The ancients asserted, that virtue is its own reward."—Ib. "They should not have repeated the error, of insisting that the infinitive is a mere noun."—Tooke cor. "It was observed in Chap. III, that the distinctive OR has a double use."—Churchill cor. "Two young gentlemen, who have made a discovery that there is no God."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 206.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE XVIII; INFINITIVES.

INSTANCES DEMANDING THE PARTICLE TO.

Page 1786

"William, please to hand me that pencil."—Smith cor. "Please to insert points so as to make sense."—P. Davis cor. "I have known lords to abbreviate almost half of their words."—Cobbett cor. "We shall find the practice perfectly to accord with the theory."—Knight cor. "But it would tend to obscure, rather than to elucidate, the subject."—L. Murray cor. "Please to divide it for them, as it should be divided"—J. Willetts cor. "So as neither to embarrass nor to weaken the sentence."—Blair and Mur. cor. "Carry her to his table, to view his poor fare, and to hear his heavenly discourse."—Same. "That we need not be surprised to find this to hold [i.e., to find the same to be true, or to find it so] in eloquence."—Blair cor. "Where he has no occasion either to divide or to explain" [the topic in debate.].—Id. "And they will find their pupils to improve by hasty and pleasant steps."—Russell cor. "The teacher, however, will please to observe," &c.—Inf. S. Gr. cor. "Please to attend to a few rules in what is called syntax."—Id. "They may dispense with the laws, to favour their friends, or to secure their office."—Webster cor. "To take back a gift, or to break a contract, is a wanton abuse."—Id. "The legislature has nothing to do, but to let it bear its own price."—Id. "He is not to form, but to copy characters."—Rambler cor. "I have known a woman to make use of a shoeing-horn."—Spect. cor. "Finding this experiment to answer, in every respect, their wishes."—Day cor. "In fine, let him cause his arrangement to conclude in the term of the question."—Barclay cor.

"That he permitted not the winds of heaven
To visit her too roughly."
 [Omit "face," to keep the measure: or say,
 "That he did never let the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly."—Shak. cor.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE XIX.—OF INFINITIVES.

Instances after Bid, Dare, Feel, Hear, Let, Make, Need, See.

"I dare not proceed so hastily, lest I give offence."—See Murray's Key, Rule xii. "Their character is formed, and made to appear."—Butler cor. "Let there be but matter and opportunity offered, and you shall see them quickly revive again."—Bacon cor. "It has been made to appear, that there is no presumption against a revelation."—Bp. Butler cor. "MANIFEST, v. t. To reveal; to make appear; to show plainly."—Webster cor. "Let him reign, like good Aurelius, or let him bleed like Seneca." [Socrates did not bleed, he was poisoned.]—Kirkham's transposition of Pope cor. "Sing

Page 1787

I could not; complain I durst not.”—Fothergill cor. “If T. M. be not so frequently heard to pray by them.”—Barclay cor. “How many of your own church members were never heard to pray?”—Id. “Yea, we are bidden to pray one for an other.”—Id. “He was made to believe that neither the king’s death nor his imprisonment would help him.”—Sheffield cor. “I felt a chilling sensation creep over me.”—Inst., p. 279. “I dare say he has not got home yet.”—Id. “We sometimes see bad men honoured.”—Id. “I saw him move”—Felch cor. “For see thou, ah! see thou, a hostile world its terrors raise.”—Kirkham cor. “But that he make him rehearse so.”—Lily cor. “Let us rise.”—Fowle cor.

“Scripture, you know, exhorts us to it;
It bids us ‘seek peace, and ensue it.’”—Swift cor.

“Who bade the mud from Dives’ wheel Bedash the rags of Lazarus? Come, brother, in that dust we’ll kneel, Confessing heaven that ruled it thus.”—Christmas Book cor.

CHAPTER VII.—PARTICIPLES.

CORRECTIONS UNDER THE NOTES TO RULE XX.

UNDER NOTE I.—EXPUNGE OF.

“In forming his sentences, he was very exact.”—L. Murray. “For not believing which, I condemn them.”—Barclay cor. “To prohibit his hearers from reading that book.”—Id. “You will please them exceedingly in crying down ordinances.”—Mitchell cor. “The warwolf subsequently became an engine for casting stones.” Or:—“for the casting of stones.”—Cons. Misc. cor. “The art of dressing hides and working in leather was practised.”—Id. “In the choice they had made of him for restoring order.”—Rollin cor. “The Arabians exercised themselves by composing orations and poems.”—Sale cor. “Behold, the widow-woman was there, gathering sticks.”—Bible cor. “The priests were busied in offering burnt-offerings.”—Id. “But Asahel would not turn aside from following him.”—Id. “He left off building Ramah, and dwelt in Tirzah.”—Id. “Those who accuse us of denying it, belie us.”—Barclay cor. “And breaking bread from house to house.”—Acts, iv, 46. “Those that set about repairing the walls.”—Barclay cor. “And secretly begetting divisions.”—Id. “Whom he has made use of in gathering his church.”—Id. “In defining and distinguishing the acceptations and uses of those particles.”—W. Walker cor.

“In making this a crime, we overthrow
The laws of nations and of nature too.”—Dryden cor.

UNDER NOTE II.—ARTICLES REQUIRE OF.

Page 1788

"The mixing of them makes a miserable jumble of truth and fiction."—Kames cor. "The same objection lies against the employing of statues."—Id. "More efficacious than the venting of opulence upon the fine arts."—Id. "It is the giving of different names to the same object."—Id. "When we have in view the erecting of a column."—Id. "The straining of an elevated subject beyond due bounds, is a vice not so frequent."—Id. "The cutting of evergreens in the shape of animals, is very ancient."—Id. "The keeping of juries without meat, drink, or fire, can be accounted for only on the same idea."—Webster cor. "The writing of the verbs at length on his slate, will be a very useful exercise."—Beck cor. "The avoiding of them is not an object of any moment."—Sheridan cor. "Comparison is the increasing or decreasing of the signification of a word by degrees."—Brit. Gram. cor. "Comparison is the increasing or decreasing of the quality by degrees."—Buchanan cor. "The placing of a circumstance before the word with which it is connected is the easiest of all inversion."—Id. "What is emphasis? It is the emitting of a stronger and fuller sound of voice," &c.—Bradley cor. "Besides, the varying of the terms will render the use of them more familiar."—A. Mur. cor. "And yet the confining of themselves to this true principle, has misled them."—Tooke cor. "What is here commanded, is merely the relieving of his misery."—Wayland cor. "The accumulating of too great a quantity of knowledge at random, overloads the mind in stead of adorning it."—Formey cor. "For the compassing of his point."—Rollin cor. "To the introducing of such an inverted order of things."—Bp. Butler cor. "Which require only the doing of an external action."—Id. "The imprisoning of my body is to satisfy your wills."—Fox cor. "Who oppose the conferring of such extensive command on one person."—Duncan cor. "Luxury contributed not a little to the enervating of their forces."—Sale cor. "The keeping of one day of the week for a sabbath."—Barclay cor. "The doing of a thing is contrary to the forbearing of it."—Id. "The doubling of the Sigma is, however, sometimes regular."—Knight cor. "The inserting of the common aspirate too, is improper."—Id. "But in Spenser's time the pronouncing of the ed [as a separate syllable,] seems already to have been something of an archaism."—Phil. Mu. cor. "And to the reconciling of the effect of their verses on the eye."—Id. "When it was not in their power to hinder the taking of the whole."—Dr. Brown cor. "He had indeed given the orders himself for the shutting of the gates.”—Id. “So his whole life was a doing of the will of the Father.”—Penington cor. “It signifies the suffering or receiving of the action expressed.”—Priestley cor. “The pretended crime therefore was the declaring of himself to be the Son of God.”—West cor. “Parsing is the resolving of a sentence into its different parts of speech.”—Beck cor.

Page 1789

UNDER NOTE II.—ADJECTIVES REQUIRE OF.

“There is no expecting of the admiration of beholders.”—Baxter cor. “There is no hiding of you in the house.”—Shak. cor. “For the better regulating of government in the province of Massachusetts.”—Brit. Parl. cor. “The precise marking of the shadowy boundaries of a complex government.”—Adams cor. “This state of discipline requires the voluntary foregoing of many things which we desire, and the setting of ourselves to what we have no inclination to.”—Bp. Butler cor. “This amounts to an active setting of themselves against religion.”—Id. “Which engaged our ancient friends to the orderly establishing of our Christian discipline.”—Friends cor. “Some men are so unjust that there is no securing of our own property or life, but by opposing force to force.”—Rev. John Brown cor. “An Act for the better securing of the Rights and Liberties of the Subject.”—Geo. III cor. “Miraculous curing of the sick is discontinued.”—Barclay cor. “It would have been no transgressing of the apostle’s rule.”—Id. “As far as consistent with the proper conducting of the business of the House.”—Elmore cor. “Because he would have no quarrelling at the just condemning of them at that day.” Or:—“at their just condemnation at that day.”—Bunyan cor. “That transferring of this natural manner will insure propriety.”—Rush cor. “If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old [i.e., frequent] turning of the key.”—Singer’s Shakspeare cor.

UNDER NOTE II.—POSSESSIVES REQUIRE OF.

“So very simple a thing as a man’s wounding of himself.”—Dr. Blair cor., and Murray. “Or with that man’s avowing of his designs.”—Blair, Mur., et al. cor. “On his putting of the question.”—Adams cor. “The importance of teachers’ requiring of their pupils to read each section many times over.”—Kirkham cor. “Politeness is a kind of forgetting of one’s self, in order to be agreeable to others.”—Ramsay cor. “Much, therefore, of the merit and the agreeableness of epistolary writing, will depend on its introducing of us into some acquaintance with the writer.”—Blair and Mack cor. "Richard's restoration to respectability depends on his paying of his debts."—O. B. Peirce cor. "Their supplying of ellipses where none ever existed; their parsing of the words of sentences already full and perfect, as though depending on words understood."—Id. "Her veiling of herself, and shedding of tears, &c., her upbraiding of Paris for his cowardice," &c.—Blair cor. "A preposition may be made known by its admitting of a personal pronoun after it, in the objective case."—Murray et al. cor. "But this forms no just objection to its denoting of time."—L. Mur. cor. "Of men's violating or disregarding of the relations in which God has here placed them."—Bp. Butler cor. "Success, indeed, no more decides for the right, than a man's killing of his antagonist in a duel."—Campbell cor. "His reminding of them."—Kirkham cor. "This mistake was corrected by his preceptor's causing of him to plant some beans."—Id. "Their neglecting of this was ruinous."—Frost cor. "That he was serious, appears from his distinguishing of the others as 'finite.'"—Felch cor. "His hearers are not at all sensible of his doing of it." Or:—"that he does it."—Sheridan cor.

Page 1790

UNDER NOTE III.—CHANGE THE EXPRESSION.

"An allegory is a fictitious story the meaning of which is figurative, not literal; a double meaning, or dilogy, is the saying of only one thing, when we have two in view."—Phil. Mu. cor. "A verb may generally be distinguished by the sense which it makes with any of the personal pronouns, or with the word TO, before it."—Murray et al. cor. "A noun may in general be distinguished by the article which comes before it, or by the sense which it makes of itself."—Merchant et al. cor. "An adjective may usually be known by the sense which it makes with the word thing; as, a good thing, a bad thing."—Id. "It is seen to be in the objective case, because it denotes the object affected by the act of leaving."—O. B. Peirce cor. "It is seen to be in the possessive case, because it denotes the possessor of something."—Id. "The noun MAN is caused by the adjective WHATEVER to seem like a twofold nominative, as if it denoted, of itself, one person as the subject of the two remarks."—Id. "WHEN, as used in the last line, is a connective, because it joins that line to the other part of the sentence."—Id. "Because they denote reciprocation."—Id. "To allow them to make use of that liberty;"—"To allow them to use that liberty;"—or, "To allow them that liberty."—Sale

Page 1791

cor. "The worst effect of it is, that it fixes on your mind a habit of indecision."—Todd cor. "And you groan the more deeply, as you reflect that you have not power to shake it off."—Id. "I know of nothing that can justify the student in having recourse to a Latin translation of a Greek writer."—Coleridge cor. "Humour is the conceit of making others act or talk absurdly."—Hazlitt cor. "There are remarkable instances in which they do not affect each other."—Bp. Butler cor. "That Caesar was left out of the commission, was not from any slight."—Life cor. "Of the thankful reception of this toleration, I shall say no more," Or: "Of the propriety of receiving this toleration thankfully, I shall say no more."—Dryden cor. "Henrietta was delighted with Julia's skill in working lace."—O. B. Peirce cor. "And it is because each of them represents two different words, that the confusion has arisen."—Booth cor. "Aeschylus died of a fracture of his skull, caused by an eagle's dropping of a tortoise on his head." Or:—"caused by a tortoise which an eagle let fall on his head."—Biog. Dict. cor. "He doubted whether they had it."—Felch cor. "To make ourselves clearly understood, is the chief end of speech."—Sheridan cor. "One cannot discover in their countenances any signs which are the natural concomitants of the feelings of the heart."—Id. "Nothing can be more common or less proper, than to speak of a river as emptying itself."—Campbell cor. "Our non-use of the former expression, is owing to this."—Bullions cor.

UNDER NOTE IV.—DISPOSAL OF ADVERBS.

"To this generally succeeds the division, or the laying-down of the method of the discourse."—Dr. Blair cor. "To the pulling-down of strong holds."—Bible cor. "Can a mere buckling-on of a military weapon infuse courage?"—Dr. Brown cor. "Expensive and luxurious living destroys health."—L. Murray cor. "By frugal and temperate living, health is preserved." Or: "By living frugally and temperately, we preserve our health."—Id. "By the doing-away of the necessity."—The Friend cor. "He recommended to them, however, the immediate calling of—(or, immediately to call—) the whole community to the church."—Gregory cor. "The separation of large numbers in this manner, certainly facilitates the right reading of them."—Churchill cor. "From their mere admitting of a twofold grammatical construction."—Phil. Mu. cor. "His grave lecturing of his friend about it."—Id. "For the blotting-out of sin."—Gurney cor. "From the not-using of water."—

Page 1792

Barclay cor. "By the gentle dropping-in of a pebble."—Sheridan cor. "To the carrying-on of a great part of that general course of nature."—Bp. Butler cor. "Then the not-interposing is so far from being a ground of complaint."—Id. "The bare omission, (or rather, the not-employing,) of what is used."—Campbell and Jamieson cor. "The bringing-together of incongruous adverbs is a very common fault."—Churchill cor. "This is a presumptive proof that it does not proceed from them."—Bp. Butler cor. "It represents him in a character to which any injustice is peculiarly unsuitable."—Campbell cor. "They will aim at something higher than a mere dealing-out of harmonious sounds."—Kirkham cor. "This is intelligible and sufficient; and any further account of the matter seems beyond the reach of our faculties."—Bp. Butler cor. "Apostrophe is a turning-off from the regular course of the subject."—Mur. et al. cor. "Even Isabella was finally prevailed upon to assent to the sending-out of a commission to investigate his conduct."—Life of Columbus cor. "For the turning-away of the simple shall slay them."—Bible cor.

"Thick fingers always should command Without extension of the hand."—King cor.

UNDER NOTE V.—OF PARTICIPLES WITH ADJECTIVES.

"Is there any Scripture which speaks of the light as being inward?"—Barclay cor. "For I believe not positiveness therein essential to salvation."—Id. "Our inability to act a uniformly right part without some thought and care."—Bp. Butler cor. "On the supposition that it is reconcilable with the constitution of nature."—Id. "On the ground that it is not discoverable by reason or experience."—Id. "On the ground that they are unlike the known course of nature."—Id. "Our power to discern reasons for them, gives a positive credibility to the history of them."—Id. "From its lack of universality."—Id. "That they may be turned into passive participles in dus, is no decisive argument to prove them passive."—Grant cor. "With the implied idea that St. Paul was then absent from the Corinthians."—Kirkham cor. "Because it becomes gradually weaker, until it finally dies away into silence."—Id. "Not without the author's full knowledge."—Id. "Wit out of season is one sort of folly."—Sheffield cor. "Its general susceptibility of a much stronger evidence."—Campbell cor. "At least, that they are such, rarely enhances our opinion, either of their abilities or of their virtues."—Id. "Which were the ground of our unity."—Barclay cor. "But they may be distinguished from it by their intransitiveness."—L. Murray cor. "To distinguish the higher degree of our persuasion of a thing's possibility."—Churchill cor.

Page 1793

"That he was idle, and dishonest too,
Was that which caused his utter overthrow."—Tobitt cor.

UNDER NOTE VI.—OF COMPOUND VERBAL NOUNS.

"When it denotes subjection to the exertion of an other."—Booth cor. "In the passive sense, it signifies a subjection to the influence of the action."—Felch cor. "To be abandoned by our friends, is very deplorable."—Goldsmith cor. "Without waiting to be attacked by the Macedonians."—Id. "In progress of time, words were wanted to express men's connexion with certain conditions of fortune."—Dr. Blair cor. "Our acquaintance with pain and sorrow has a tendency to bring us to a settled moderation."—Bp. Butler cor. "The chancellor's attachment to the king, secured to the monarch his crown."—L. Murray et al. cor. "The general's failure in this enterprise occasioned his disgrace."—Id. "John's long application to writing had wearied him."—Id. "The sentence may be, 'John's long application to writing has wearied him.'"—Wright cor. "Much depends on the observance of this rule."—L. Murray cor. "He mentioned that a boy had been corrected for his faults."—Alger and Merchant cor. "The boy's punishment is shameful to him."—Id. "The greater the difficulty of remembrance is, and the more important the being-remembered is to the attainment of the ultimate end."—Campbell cor. "If the parts in the composition of similar objects were always in equal quantity, their being-compounded (or their compounding) would make no odds."—Id. "Circumstances, not of such importance as that the scope of the relation is affected by their being-known"—or, "by the mention of them."—Id. "A passive verb expresses the receiving of an action, or represents its subject as being acted upon; as, 'John is beaten.'"—Frost cor. "So our language has an other great advantage; namely, that it is little diversified by genders."—Buchanan cor. "The slander concerning Peter is no fault of his."—Frost cor. "Without faith in Christ, there is no justification."—Penn cor. "Habituation to danger begets intrepidity; i.e., lessens fear."—Bp. Butler cor. "It is not affection of any kind, but action that forms those habits."—Id. "In order that we may be satisfied of the truth of the apparent paradox."—Campbell cor. "A trope consists in the employing of a word to signify something that is different from its original or usual meaning."—Blair, Jamieson, Murray, and Kirkham cor.; also Hiley. "The scriptural view of our salvation from punishment."—Gurney cor. "To submit and obey, is not a renouncing of the Spirit's leading."—Barclay cor.

Page 1794

UNDER NOTE VII.—PARTICIPLES FOR INFINITIVES, &c.

"To teach little children is a pleasant employment." Or: "The teaching of little children," &c.—Bartlett cor. "To deny or compromise the principles of truth, is virtually to deny their divine Author."—Reformer cor. "A severe critic might point out some expressions that would bear retrenching"—"retrenchment"—or, "to be retrenched."—Dr. Blair cor. "Never attempt to prolong the pathetic too much."—Id. "I now recollect to have mentioned—(or, that I mentioned—) a report of that nature."—Whiting cor. "Nor of the necessity which there is, for their restraint—(or, for them to be restrained—) in them."—Bp. Butler cor. "But, to do what God commands because he commands it, is obedience, though it proceeds from hope or fear."—Id. "Simply to close the nostrils, does not so entirely prevent resonance."—Gardiner cor. "Yet they absolutely refuse to do so."—Harris cor. "But Artaxerxes could not refuse to pardon him."—Goldsmith cor. "The doing of them in the best manner, is signified by the names of these arts."—Rush cor. "To behave well for the time to come, may be insufficient."—Bp. Butler cor. "The compiler proposed to publish that part by itself."—Adam cor. "To smile on those whom we should censure, is, to bring guilt upon ourselves."—Kirkham cor. "But it would be great injustice to that illustrious orator, to bring his genius down to the same level."—Id. "The doubt that things go ill, often hurts more, than to be sure they do."—Shak. cor. "This is called the straining of a metaphor."—Blair and Murray cor. "This is what Aristotle calls the giving of manners to the poem."—Dr. Blair cor. "The painter's entire confinement to that part of time which he has chosen, deprives him of the power of exhibiting various stages of the same action."—L. Mur. cor. "It imports the retrenchment of all superfluities, and a pruning of the expression."—Blair et al. cor. "The necessity for us to be thus exempted is further apparent."—Jane West cor. "Her situation in life does not allow her to be genteel in every thing."—Same. "Provided you do not dislike to be dirty when you are invisible."—Same. "There is now an imperious necessity for her to be acquainted with her title to eternity."—Same. "Disregard to the restraints of virtue, is misnamed ingenuousness."—Same. "The legislature prohibits the opening of shops on Sunday."—Same. "To attempt to prove that any thing is right."—O. B. Peirce cor. "The comma directs us to make a pause of a second in duration, or less.”—Id. “The rule which directs us to put other words into the place of it, is wrong.”—Id. “They direct us to call the specifying adjectives, or adnames, adjective pronouns.”—Id. “William dislikes to attend court.”—Frost cor. “It may perhaps be worth while to remark, that Milton makes a distinction.”—Phil. Mu. cor. “To profess regard and act injuriously, discovers a base mind.”—Murray et al. cor. “To profess regard and act indifferently, discovers a base mind.”—Weld cor. “You have proved beyond contradiction, that this course of action is the sure way to procure such an object.”—Campbell cor.

Page 1795

UNDER NOTE VIII.—PARTICIPLES AFTER BE, IS, &c.

“Irony is a figure in which the speaker sneeringly utters the direct reverse of what he intends shall be understood.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 235. [Correct by this the four false definitions of “Irony” cited from Murray, Peirce, Fisher, and Sanborn.] “This is, in a great measure, a delivering of their own compositions.”—Buchanan cor. “But purity is a right use of the words of the language.”—Jamieson cor. “But the most important object is the settling of the English quantity.”—Walker cor. “When there is no affinity, the transition from one meaning to an other is a very wide step taken.”—Campbell cor. “It will be a loss of time, to attempt further to illustrate it.”—Id. “This leaves the sentence too bare, and makes it to be, if not nonsense, hardly sense.”—Cobbett cor. “This is a requiring of more labours from every private member.”—J. West cor. “Is not this, to use one measure for our neighbours and an other for ourselves?”—Same. “Do we not charge God foolishly, when we give these dark colourings to human nature?”—Same. “This is not, to endure the cross, as a disciple of Jesus Christ; but, to snatch at it, like a partisan of Swift’s Jack.”—Same. “What is spelling? It is the combining of letters to form syllables and words.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “It is the choosing of such letters to compose words,” &c.—Id. “What is parsing? (1.) It is a describing of the nature, use, and powers of words.”—Id. (2.) “For Parsing is a describing of the words of a sentence as they are used.”—Id. (3.) “Parsing is only a describing of the nature and relations of words as they are used.”—Id. (4.) “Parsing, let the pupil understand and remember, is a statement of facts concerning words; or a describing of words in their offices and relations as they are.”—Id. (5.) “Parsing is the resolving and explaining of words according to the rules of grammar.”—Id. Better: “Parsing is the resolving or explaining of a sentence according to the definitions and rules of grammar.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 28. (6.) “The parsing of a word, remember, is an enumerating and describing of its various qualities, and its grammatical relations to other words in the sentence.”—Peirce cor. (7.) “For the parsing of a word is an enumerating and describing of its various properties, and [its] relations to [other words in] the sentence.”—Id. (8.) “The parsing of a noun is an explanation of its person, number, gender, and case; and also of its grammatical relation in a sentence, with respect to some other word or words.”—Ingersoll cor. (9.) “The parsing of any part of speech is an explanation of all its properties and relations.”—Id. (10.)” Parsing is the resolving of a sentence into its elements.”—Fowler cor. “The highway of the upright is, to depart from evil.”—Prov., xvi, 17. “Besides, the first step towards exhibiting the truth, should be, to remove the veil of error.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “Punctuation is the dividing of sentences, and the words of sentences, by points for pauses.”—Id. “An other fault is the using of the imperfect tense SHOOK in stead of the participle SHAKEN.”—Churchill cor. “Her employment is the drawing of maps.”—Alger cor. “To go to the play, according to his notion, is, to lead a sensual life, and to expose one’s self to the strongest temptations. This is a begging of the question, and therefore requires no answer.”—Formey cor. “It is an overvaluing of ourselves, to reduce every thing to the narrow measure of our capacities.”—Comly’s Key, in his Gram., p. 188; Fisk’s Gram., p. 135. “What is vocal language? It is speech, or the expressing of ideas by the human voice.”—C. W. Sanders cor.

Page 1796

UNDER NOTE IX.—VERBS OF PREVENTING.

“The annulling power of the constitution prevented that enactment from becoming a law.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “Which prevents the manner from being brief.”—Id. “This close prevents them from bearing forward as nominatives.”—Rush cor. “Because this prevents it from growing drowsy.”—Formey cor. “Yet this does not prevent him from being great.”—Id. “To prevent it from being insipid.”—Id. “Or whose interruptions did not prevent its continuance.” Or thus: “Whose interruptions did not prevent it from being continued.”—Id. “This by no means prevents them from being also punishments.”—Wayland cor. “This hinders them not from being also, in the strictest sense, punishments.”—Id. “The noise made by the rain and wind, prevented them from being heard.”—Goldsmith cor. “He endeavoured to prevent it from taking effect.”—Id. “So sequestered as to prevent them from being explored.”—Jane West cor. “Who prevented her from making a more pleasant party.”—Same. “To prevent us from being tossed about by every wind of doctrine.”—Same. “After the infirmities of age prevented him from bearing his part of official duty.”—R. Adam cor. “To prevent splendid trifles from passing for matters of importance.”—Kames cor. “Which prevents him from exerting himself to any good purpose.”—Beattie cor. “The nonobservance of this rule very frequently prevents us from being punctual in the performance of our duties.”—Todd cor. “Nothing will prevent him from being a student, and possessing the means of study.”—Id. “Does the present accident hinder you from being honest and brave?”—Collier cor. “The e is omitted to prevent two Ees from coming together.”—Fowle cor. “A pronoun is used for, or in place of, a noun,—to prevent a repetition of the noun.”—Sanborn cor. “Diversity in the style relieves the ear, and prevents it from being tired with the frequent recurrence of the rhymes.”—Campbell cor.; also Murray. “Timidity and false shame prevent us from opposing vicious customs.”—Mur. et al. cor. “To prevent them from being moved by such.”—Campbell cor. “Some obstacle, or impediment, that prevents it from taking place.”—Priestley cor. “Which prevents us from making a progress towards perfection.”—Sheridan cor. “This method of distinguishing words, must prevent any regular proportion of time from being settled.”—Id. “That nothing but affectation can prevent it from always taking place.”—Id. “This did not prevent John from being acknowledged and solemnly inaugurated Duke of Normandy.” Or: “Notwithstanding this, John was acknowledged and solemnly inaugurated Duke of Normandy.”—Henry, Webster, Sanborn, and Fowler cor.

Page 1797

UNDER NOTE X.—THE LEADING WORD IN SENSE.

“This would make it impossible for a noun, or any other word, ever to be in the possessive case.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “A great part of our pleasure arises from finding the plan or story well conducted.”—Dr. Blair cor. “And we have no reason to wonder that this was the case.”—Id. “She objected only, (as Cicero says,) to Oppianicus as having two sons by his present wife.”—Id. “The subjugation of the Britons by the Saxons, was a necessary consequence of their calling of these Saxons to their assistance.”—Id. “What he had there said concerning the Saxons, that they expelled the Britons, and changed the customs, the religion, and the language of the country, is a clear and a good reason why our present language is Saxon, rather than British.”—Id. “The only material difference between them, except that the one is short and the other more prolonged, is, that a metaphor is always explained by the words that are connected with it.”—Id. et Mur. cor. “The description of Death, advancing to meet Satan on his arrival.”—Rush cor. “Is not the bare fact, that God is the witness of it, sufficient ground for its credibility to rest upon?”—Chalmers cor. “As in the case of one who is entering upon a new study.”—Beattie cor. “The manner in which these affect the copula, is called the imperative mood.”—Wilkins cor. “We are freed from the trouble, because our nouns have scarcely any diversity of endings.”—Buchanan cor. “The verb is rather indicative of the action as being doing, or done, than of the time of the event; but indeed the ideas are undistinguishable.”—Booth cor. “Nobody would doubt that this is a sufficient proof.”—Campbell cor. “Against the doctrine here maintained, that conscience as well as reason, is a natural faculty.”—Beattie cor. “It is one cause why the Greek and English languages are much more easy to learn, than the Latin.”—Bucke cor. “I have not been able to make out a solitary instance in which such has been the fact.”—Lib. cor. “An angel, forming the appearance of a hand, and writing the king’s condemnation on the wall, checked their mirth, and filled them with terror.”—Wood cor. “The prisoners, in attempting to escape, aroused the keepers.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “I doubt not, in the least, that this has been one cause of the multiplication of divinities in the heathen world.”—Dr. Blair cor. “From the general rule he lays down, that the verb is the parent word of all language.”—Tooke cor. “He was accused of being idle.” Or: “He was accused of idleness.”—Felch cor. “Our meeting is generally dissatisfied with him for so removing.” Or: “with the circumstances of his removal.”—Edmondson cor. “The spectacle is too rare, of men deserving solid fame while not seeking it.”—Bush cor. “What further need was there that an other priest should rise?”—Heb., vii, 11.

Page 1798

UNDER NOTE XI.—REFERENCE OF PARTICIPLES.

Page 1799

"Viewing them separately, we experience different emotions." Or: "Viewed separately, they produce different emotions."—Kames cor. "But, this being left doubtful, an other objection occurs."—Id. "As he proceeded from one particular to an other, the subject grew under his hand."—Id. "But this is still an interruption, and a link of the chain is broken."—Id. "After some days' hunting,—(or, After some days spent in hunting.)—Cyrus communicated his design to his officers."—Rollin cor. "But it is made, without the appearance of being made in form."—Dr. Blair cor. "These would have had a better effect, had they been disjoined, thus."—Blair and Murray cor. "In an improper diphthong, but one of the vowels is sounded."—Murray, Alger, et al. cor. "And I being led to think of both together, my view is rendered unsteady."—Blair, Mur., and Jam. cor. "By often doing the same thing, we make the action habitual." Or: "What is often done, becomes habitual."—L. Murray cor. "They remain with us in our dark and solitary hours, no less than when we are surrounded with friends and cheerful society."—Id. "Besides showing what is right, one may further explain the matter by pointing out what is wrong."—Lowth cor. "The former teaches the true pronunciation of words, and comprises accent, quantity, emphasis, pauses, and tones."—L. Murray cor. "A person may reprove others for their negligence, by saying, 'You have taken great care indeed.'"—Id. "The word preceding and the word following it, are in apposition to each other."—Id. "He having finished his speech, the assembly dispersed."—Cooper cor. "Were the voice to fall at the close of the last line, as many a reader is in the habit of allowing it to do."—Kirkham cor. "The misfortunes of his countrymen were but negatively the effects of his wrath, which only deprived them of his assistance."—Kames cor. "Taking them as nouns, we may explain this construction thus."—Grant cor. "These have an active signification, except those which come from neuter verbs."—Id. "From its evidence not being universal." Or: "From the fact that its evidence is not universal."—Bp. Butler cor. "And this faith will continually grow, as we acquaint ourselves with our own nature."—Channing cor. "Monosyllables ending with any consonant but f, l, or s, never double the final consonant, when it is preceded by a single vowel; except add, ebb," &c.—Kirkham's Gram., p. 23. Or: "Words ending with any consonant except f, l, or s, do not double the final letter. Exceptions. Add, ebb, &c."—Bullions's

Page 1800

E. Gram., p. 3. (See my 2d Rule for Spelling, of which this is a partial copy.) "The relation of Maria as being the object of the action, is expressed by the change of the noun Maria to Mariam;" [i. e., in the Latin language.]—Booth cor. "In analyzing a proposition, one must first divide it into its logical subject and predicate."—Andrews and Stoddard cor. "In analyzing a simple sentence, one should first resolve it into its logical subject and logical predicate."—Wells cor.

UNDER NOTE XII.—OF PARTICIPLES AND NOUNS.

"The instant discovery of passions at their birth, is essential to our well-being."—Kames cor. "I am now to enter on a consideration of the sources of the pleasures of taste."—Blair cor. "The varieties in the use of them are indeed many."—Murray cor. "The changing of times and seasons, the removing and the setting-up of kings, belong to Providence alone."—Id. "Adherence to the partitions, seemed the cause of France; acceptance of the will, that of the house of Bourbon."—Bolingbroke cor. "An other source of darkness in composition, is the injudicious introduction of technical words and phrases."—Campbell cor. "These are the rules of grammar; by observing which, you may avoid mistakes."—L. Murray et al. cor. "By observing the rules, you may avoid mistakes."—Alger cor. "By observing these rules, he succeeded."—Frost cor. "The praise bestowed on him was his ruin."—Id. "Deception is not convincement."—Id. "He never feared the loss of a friend."—Id. "The making of books is his amusement."—Alger cor. "We call it the declining—(or, the declension—) of a noun."—Ingersoll cor. "Washington, however, pursued the same policy of neutrality, and opposed firmly the taking of any part in the wars of Europe."—Hall and Baker cor. "The following is a note of Interrogation, or of a question: (?)."—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "The following is a note of Admiration, or of wonder: (!)."—Id. "The use or omission of the article A forms a nice distinction in the sense."—Murray cor. "The placing of the preposition before the word, which it governs, is more graceful."—Churchill cor. (See Lowth's Gram., p. 96; Murray's, i, 200; Fisk's, 141; Smith's, 167.) "Assistance is absolutely necessary to their recovery, and the retrieving of their affairs."—Bp. Butler cor. "Which termination, [ish,] when added to adjectives, imports diminution, or a lessening of the quality."—Mur. and Kirkham cor. "After what has been said, will it be thought an excess of refinement, to suggest that the different orders are qualified for different purposes?"—Kames cor. "Who has nothing to think of, but the killing of time."—West cor. "It requires no nicety of ear, as in the distinguishing of tones, or the measuring of time."—Sheridan cor. "The possessive case [is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which] denotes possession, or the relation of property."—S. R. Hall cor.

Page 1801

UNDER NOTE XIII.—PERFECT PARTICIPLES.

"Garcilasso was master of the language spoken by the Incas."—Robertson cor. "When an interesting story is broken off in the middle."—Kames cor. "Speaking of Hannibal's elephants driven back by the enemy."—Id. "If Du Ryer had not written for bread, he would have equalled them."—Formey cor. "Pope describes a rock broken off from a mountain, and hurling to the plain."—Kames cor. "I have written, Thou hast written, He hath or has written; &c."—Ash and Maltby cor. "This was spoken by a pagan."—Webster cor. "But I have chosen to follow the common arrangement."—Id. "The language spoken in Bengal."—Id. "And sound sleep thus broken off with sudden alarms, is apt enough to discompose any one."—Locke cor. "This is not only the case of those open sinners before spoken of."—Leslie cor. "Some grammarians have written a very perplexed and difficult doctrine on Punctuation."—Ensell cor. "There hath a pity arisen in me towards thee."—G. Fox Jun. cor. "Abel is the only man that has undergone the awful change of death."—De Genlis, Death of Adam.

"Meantime, on Afric's glowing sands,
Smit with keen heat, the traveller stands."—Ode cor.

CHAPTER VIII.—ADVERBS.

CORRECTIONS UNDER THE NOTES TO RULE XXI.

UNDER NOTE I.—THE PLACING OF ADVERBS.

"Not all that is favoured by good use, is proper to be retained."—L. Murray corrected. "Not everything favoured by good use, is on that account worthy to be retained."—Campbell cor. "Most men dream, but not all."—Beattie cor. "By hasty composition, we shall certainly acquire a very bad style."—Dr. Blair cor. "The comparisons are short, touching on only one point of resemblance."—Id. "Having once had some considerable object set before us."—Id. "The positive seems to be improperly called a degree." [543]—Adam and Gould cor. "In some phrases, the genitive only is used."—Id. "This blunder is said to have actually occurred."—Smith cor. "But not every man is called James, nor every woman, Mary.”—Buchanan cor. “Crotchets are employed for nearly the same purpose as the parenthesis.”—Churchill cor. “There is a still greater impropriety in a double comparative.”—Priestley cor. “We often have occasion to speak of time.”—Lowth cor. “The following sentence cannot possibly be understood.”—Id. “The words must generally be separated from the context.”—Comly cor. “Words ending in ator, generally have the accent on the penultimate.”—L. Mur. cor. “The learned languages, with respect to voices, moods, and tenses, are, in general, constructed differently from the English tongue.”—Id. “Adverbs seem to have been originally contrived to express compendiously, in one word, what must otherwise have required two or more.”—Id. “But it is so, only when the expression can be converted into the regular form of the possessive case.”—Id. “‘Enter boldly,’ says he, ‘for here too there are gods.’”—Harris cor. “For none ever work for so little a pittance that some cannot be found to work for less.”—Sedgwick cor. “For sinners also lend to sinners, to receive again as much.”—Bible cor. Or, as Campbell has it in his version:—“that they may receive as much in return.”—Luke, vi, 34. “They must be viewed in exactly the same light.”—L. Murray cor. “If he speaks but to display his abilities, he is unworthy of attention.”—Id.

Page 1802

UNDER NOTE II.—ADVERBS FOR ADJECTIVES.

“Upward motion is commonly more agreeable than motion downward.”—Dr. Blair cor. “There are but two possible ways of justification before God.”—Cox cor. “This construction sounds rather harsh.”—Mur. and Ing. cor. “A clear conception, in the mind of the learner, of regular and well-formed letters.”—C. S. Jour. cor. “He was a great hearer of * * * Attalus, Sotion, Papirius, Fabianus, of whom he makes frequent mention.”—L’Estrange cor. “It is only the frequent doing of a thing, that makes it a custom.”—Leslie cor. “Because W. R. takes frequent occasion to insinuate his jealousies of persons and things.”—Barclay cor. “Yet frequent touching will wear gold.”—Shak. cor. “Uneducated persons frequently use an adverb when they ought to use an adjective: as, ‘The country looks beautifully,’ in stead of beautiful.” [544]—Bucke cor. “The adjective is put absolute, or without its substantive.”—Ash cor. “A noun or a pronoun in the second person, may be put absolute in the nominative case.”—Harrison cor. “A noun or a pronoun, when put absolute with a participle,” &c.—Id. and

Page 1803

Jaudon cor. "A verb in the infinitive mood absolute, stands independent of the remaining part of the sentence."—Wilbur and Liv. cor. "At my late return into England, I met a book entitled, 'The Iron Age.'"—Cowley cor. "But he can discover no better foundation for any of them, than the mere practice of Homer and Virgil."—Kames cor.

UNDER NOTE III.—HERE FOR HITHER, &C.

"It is reported, that the governor will come hither to-morrow."—Kirkham cor. "It has been reported that the governor will come hither to-morrow."—Id. "To catch a prospect of that lovely land whither his steps are tending."—Maturin cor. "Plautus makes one of his characters ask an other, whither he is going with that Vulcan shut up in a horn; that is, with a lantern in his hand."—Adams cor. "When we left Cambridge we intended to return thither in a few days."—Anon. cor. "Duncan comes hither to-night."—Churchill's Gram., p. 323. "They talked of returning hither last week."—See J. M. Putnam's Gram., p. 129.

UNDER NOTE IV.—FROM HENCE, &C.

"Hence he concludes, that no inference can be drawn from the meaning of the word, that a constitution has a higher authority than a law or statute,"—Webster cor. "Whence we may likewise date the period of this event."—L. Murray cor. "Hence it becomes evident that LANGUAGE, taken in the most comprehensive view, implies certain sounds, [or certain written signs,] having certain meanings."—Harris cor. "They returned to the city whence they came out."—A. Murray cor. "Respecting ellipses, some grammarians differ strangely in their ideas; and thence has arisen a very whimsical diversity in their systems of grammar."—G. Brown. "What am I, and whence? That is, What am I, and whence am I?"—Jaudon cor.

UNDER NOTE V.—THE ADVERB HOW.

"It is strange, that a writer so accurate as Dean Swift, should have stumbled on so improper an application of this particle."—Dr. Blair cor. "Ye know, that a good while ago God made choice among us," &c.—Bible cor. "Let us take care lest we sin; i.e.,—that we do not sin."—Priestley cor. "We see by these instances, that prepositions may be necessary, to connect such words as are not naturally connected by their own signification."—L. Murray cor. "Know ye not your own selves, that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?"—Bible cor. "That thou mayst know that the earth is the Lord's."—Id.

UNDER NOTE VI.—WHEN, WHILE, OR WHERE.

Page 1804

"ELLIPSIS is the omission of some word or words which are necessary to complete the construction, but not requisite to complete the sense."—Adam, Gould, and Fisk, cor.

"PLEONASM is the insertion of some word or words more than are absolutely necessary either to complete the construction, or to express the sense."—lid. cor.

"HYSTERON-PROTERON is a figure in which that is put in the former part of the sentence, which, according to the sense, should be in the latter."—Adam and Gould cor.

"HYSTERON-PROTERON is a rhetorical figure in which that is said last, which was done first."—Webster cor. "A BARBARISM is a foreign or strange word, an expression contrary to the pure idiom of the language."—Adam and Gould cor. "A SOLECISM is an impropriety in respect to syntax, an absurdity or incongruity in speech."—lid. cor. "An

IDIOTISM is a manner of expression peculiar to one language childishly transferred to an other."—lid. cor. "TAUTOLOGY is a disagreeable repetition, either of the same words, or of the same sense in different words."—lid. cor. "BOMBAST, or FUSTIAN, is an inflated or ambitious style, in which high-sounding words are used, with little or no meaning, or upon a trifling occasion."—lid. cor. "AMPHIBOLOGY is ambiguity of construction, phraseology which may be taken in two different senses."—lid. cor.

"IRONY is a figure in which one means the contrary of what is said."—Adam and Gould

cor. "PERIPHRAISIS, or CIRCUMLOCUTION, is the use of several words, to express what might be said in fewer."—lid. cor. "HYPERBOLE is a figure in which a thing is magnified above the truth."—lid. cor. "PERSONIFICATION is a figure which ascribes human life, sentiments, or actions, to inanimate beings, or to abstract qualities."—lid.

cor. "APOSTROPHE is a turning from the tenor of one's discourse, into an animated address to some person, present or absent, living or dead, or to some object personified."—lid. cor. "A SIMILE is a simple and express comparison; and is generally introduced by LIKE, AS, or so."—G. B., Inst., p. 233; Kirkham cor.; also Adam and

Gould. "ANTITHESIS is a placing of things in opposition, to heighten their effect by contrast."—Inst., p. 234; Adam and Gould corrected. "VISION, or IMAGERY, is a figure in which what is present only to the mind, is represented as actually before one's eyes, and present to the senses."—G. B.; Adam cor. "EMPHASIS is a particular stress of voice laid on some word in a sentence."—Gould's Adam's Gram., p. 241.

"EPANORTHOSIS, or CORRECTION, is the recalling or correcting by the speaker, of what he last said."—Ibid. "PARALIPSIS, or OMISSION, is the pretending to omit or pass by, what one at the same time declares.”—Ibid. “INCREMENTUM, or CLIMAX in sense, is the rising of one member above an other to the highest.”—Ibid. “METONYMY is a change of names: as when the cause is mentioned for the effect, or the effect for the cause; the container for the thing contained, or the sign for the thing signified.”—Kirkham cor. “The Agreement of words is their similarity in person, number, gender, case, mood, tense, or form.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 104. “The Government of words is that power which one word has over an other, to cause it to assume some particular modification.”—Ib. “Fusion is the converting of some solid substance into a fluid by heat.”—G. B. “A proper diphthong is a diphthong in which both the vowels are sounded together; as, oi in voice, ou in house.”—Fisher cor. “An improper diphthong is a diphthong in which the sound of but one of the two vowels is heard; as, eo in people.”—Id.

Page 1805

UNDER NOTE VII.—THE ADVERB NO FOR NOT.

“An adverb is added to a verb to show how, or when, or where, or whether or not, one is, does, or suffers.”—Buchanan cor. “We must be immortal, whether we will or not.”—Maturin cor. “He cares not whether the world was made for Caesar or not.”—A. Q. Rev. cor. “I do not know whether they are out or not.”—Byron cor. “Whether it can be proved or not, is not the thing.”—Bp. Butler cor. “Whether he makes use of the means commanded by God, or not.”—Id. “Whether it pleases the world or not, the care is taken.”—L’Estrange cor. “How comes this to be never heard of, nor in the least questioned, whether the Law was undoubtedly of Moses’s writing or not?”—Tomline cor. “Whether he be a sinner or not, I do not know.” Or, as the text is more literally translated by Campbell: “Whether he be a sinner, I know not.”—Bible cor. “Can I make men live, whether they will or not?”—Shak. cor.

“Can hearts not free, be tried whether they serve Willing or not, who will but what they must?”—Milton cor.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—OF DOUBLE NEGATIVES.

“We need not, nor do we, confine the purposes of God.” Or: “We need not, and do not, confine,” &c.—Bentley cor. “I cannot by any means allow him that.”—Id. “We must try whether or not we can increase the attention by the help of the senses.”—Brightland cor. “There is nothing more admirable or more useful.”—Tooke cor. “And what in time to come he can never be said to have done, he can never be supposed to do.”—R. Johnson cor. “No skill could obviate, no remedy dispel, the terrible infection.”—Goldsmith cor. “Prudery cannot be an indication either of sense or of taste.”—Spurzheim cor. “But neither that scripture, nor any other, speaks of imperfect faith.”—Barclay cor. “But neither this scripture, nor any other, proves that faith was or is always accompanied with doubting.”—Id. “The light of Christ is not, and cannot be, darkness.”—Id. “Doth not the Scripture, which cannot lie, give some of the saints this testimony?”—Id. “Which do not continue, and are not binding.”—Id. “It not being perceived directly, any more than the air.”—Campbell cor. “Let us be no Stoics, and no stocks, I pray.”—Shak. cor. “Where there is no marked or peculiar character in the style.”—Dr. Blair cor. “There can be no rules laid down, nor any manner recommended.”—Sheridan cor.

Page 1806

“Bates. ‘He hath not told his thought to the king?’

K. Henry. ‘No; and it is not meet he should.’”

Or thus: “No; nor is it meet he should.”—Shak. cor.

UNDER NOTE IX.—EVER AND NEVER.

“The prayer of Christ is more than sufficient both to strengthen us, be we everso weak; and to overthrow all adversary power, be it everso strong.”—Hooker cor. “He is like to have no share in it, or to be never the better for it.” Or: “He is not likely to have any share in it, or to be ever the better for it.”—Bunyan cor. “In some parts of Chili it seldom or never rains.”—Willetts cor. “If Pompey shall but everso little seem to like it.”—W. Walker cor. “Though everso great a posse of dogs and hunters pursue him.”—Id. “Though you be everso excellent.”—Id. “If you do amiss everso little.”—Id. “If we cast our eyes everso little down.”—Id. “A wise man scorneth nothing, be it everso small or homely.”—M. F. Tupper cor. “Because they have seldom if ever an opportunity of learning them at all.”—Clarkson cor. “We seldom or never see those forsaken who trust in God.”—Atterbury cor.

“Where, playing with him at bo-peep,

He solved all problems, e’erso deep.”—S. Butler cor.

UNDER NOTE X.—OF THE FORM OF ADVERBS.

Page 1807

"One can scarcely think that Pope was capable of epic or tragic poetry; but, within a certain limited region, he has been outdone by no poet."—Dr. Blair cor. "I who now read, have nearly finished this chapter."—Harris cor. "And yet, to refine our taste with respect to beauties of art or of nature, is scarcely endeavoured in any seminary of learning."—Kames cor. "The numbers being confounded, and the possessives wrongly applied, the passage is neither English nor grammar."—Buchanan cor. "The letter G is wrongly named Jee."—Creighton cor. "Lastly, remember that in science, as in morals, authority cannot make right what in itself is wrong."—O. B. Peirce cor. "They regulate our taste even where we are scarcely sensible of them."—Kames cor. "Slow action, for example, is imitated by words pronounced slowly."—Id. "Surely, if it be to profit withal, it must be in order to save."—Barclay cor. "Which is scarcely possible at best."—Sheridan cor. "Our wealth being nearly finished."—Harris cor.

CHAPTER IX.—CONJUNCTIONS.

CORRECTIONS UNDER THE NOTES TO RULE XXII.

UNDER NOTE I.—OF TWO TERMS WITH ONE.

"The first proposal was essentially different from the second, and inferior to it."—Inst. "A neuter verb expresses the state which a subject is in, without acting upon any other thing, or being acted upon by an other."—A. Murray cor. "I answer, You may use stories and anecdotes, and ought to do so."—Todd cor. "ORACLE, n. Any person from whom, or place at which, certain decisions are obtained."—Webster cor. "Forms of government may, and occasionally must, be changed."—Lyttelton cor. "I have been, and I still pretend to be, a tolerable judge."—Sped. cor. "Are we not lazy in our duties, or do we not make a Christ of them?"—Baxter cor. "They may not express that idea which the author intends, but some other which only resembles it, or is akin to it."—Dr. Blair cor. "We may therefore read them, we ought to read them, with a distinguishing eye."—Id. "Compare their poverty with what they might possess, and ought to possess."—Sedgwick cor. "He is much better acquainted with grammar than they are."—L. Murray cor. "He was more beloved than Cinthio, but [he was] not so much admired."—L. Murray's Gram., i, 222. "Will it be urged, that the four gospels are as old as tradition, and even older?"—Campbell's Rhet., p. 207. "The court of chancery frequently mitigates and disarms the common law."—Spect. and Ware cor. "Antony, coming along side of her ship, entered it without seeing her, or being seen by her.”—Goldsmith cor. “Into candid minds, truth enters as a welcome guest.”—L. Murray cor. “There are many designs in which we may succeed, to our ultimate ruin.”—Id. “From many pursuits in which we embark with pleasure, we are destined to land sorrowfully.”—Id. “They gain much more than I, by this unexpected event.”—Id.

Page 1808

UNDER NOTE II.—OF HETEROGENEOUS TERMS.

“Athens saw them entering her gates and filling her academies.”—Chazotte cor. “Neither have we forgot his past achievements, nor do we despair of his future success.”—Duncan cor. “Her monuments and temples had long been shattered, or had crumbled into dust.”—Journal cor. “Competition is excellent; it is the vital principle in all these things.”—Id. “Whether provision should, or should not, be made, in order to meet this exigency.”—Id. “That our Saviour was divinely inspired, and that he was endued with supernatural powers, are positions that are here taken for granted.”—L. Mur. cor. “It would be much more eligible, to contract or enlarge their extent by explanatory notes and observations, than to sweep away our ancient landmarks and set up others.”—Id. “It is certainly much better to supply defects and abridge superfluities by occasional notes and observations, than to disorganize or greatly alter a system which has been so long established.”—Id. “To have only one tune, or measure, is not much better than to have none at all.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Facts too well known and too obvious to be insisted on.”—Id. “In proportion as all these circumstances are happily chosen, and are of a sublime kind.”—Id. “If the description be too general, and be divested of circumstances.”—Id. “He gained nothing but commendation.”—L. Mur. cor. “I cannot but think its application somewhat strained and misplaced.”—Vethake cor. “Two negatives standing in the same clause, or referring to the same thing, destroy each other, and leave the sense affirmative.”—Maunder cor. “Slates are thin plates of stone, and are often used to cover the roofs of houses.”—Webster cor. “Every man of taste, and of an elevated mind, ought to feel almost the necessity of apologizing for the power he possesses.”—Translator of De Stael cor. “They very seldom trouble themselves with inquiries, or make any useful observations of their own.”—Locke cor.

“We’ve both the field and honour won;
Our foes are profligate, and run.”—S. Butler cor.

UNDER NOTE III.—IMPORT OF CONJUNCTIONS.

Page 1809

"THE is sometimes used before adverbs in the comparative or the superlative degree."—Lennie, Bullions, and Brace cor. "The definite article THE is frequently applied to adverbs in the comparative or the superlative degree."—Lowth. Murray, et al, cor. "Conjunctions usually connect verbs in the same mood and tense." Or, more truly: "Verbs connected by a conjunction, are usually in the same mood and tense."—Sanborn cor. "Conjunctions connect verbs in the same style, and usually in the same mood, tense, and form." Or better: "Verbs connected by a conjunction, are usually of the same mood, tense, and form, as well as style."—Id. "The ruins of Greece or Rome are but the monuments of her former greatness."—P. E. Day cor. "It is not improbably, that in many of these cases the articles were used originally."—Priestley cor. "I cannot doubt that these objects are really what they appear to be."—Kames cor. "I question not that my reader will be as much pleased with it."—Spect. cor. "It is ten to one that my friend Peter is among them."—Id. "I doubt not that such objections as these will be made"—Locke cor. "I doubt not that it will appear in the perusal of the following sheets."—Buchanan cor. "It is not improbable, that in time these different constructions maybe appropriated to different uses."—Priestley cor. "But to forget and to remember at pleasure, are equally beyond the power of man."—Idler cor. "The nominative case follows the verb, in interrogative or imperative sentences."—L. Mur. cor. "Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? or a vine, figs?"—Bible cor. "Whose characters are too profligate for the managing of them to be of any consequence."—Swift cor. "You, that are a step higher than a philosopher, a divine, yet have too much grace and wit to be a bishop."—Pope cor. "The terms rich and poor enter not into their language."—Robertson cor. "This pause is but seldom, if ever, sufficiently dwelt upon." Or: "This pause is seldom or never sufficiently dwelt upon."—Gardiner cor. "There would be no possibility of any such thing as human life or human happiness."—Bp. Butler cor. "The multitude rebuked them, that they should hold their peace."—Bible cor.

UNDER NOTE IV.—THE CONJUNCTION THAN.

"A metaphor is nothing else than a short comparison." Or: "A metaphor is nothing but a short comparison."—Adam and Gould cor. "There being no other dictator here than use."—Murray's Gram., i, 364. "This construction is no otherwise known in English, than by supplying the first or the second person plural."—Buchanan cor. "Cyaxares was no sooner on the throne, than he was engaged in a terrible war."—Rollin cor. "Those classics contain little else than histories of murders."—Am. Mu. cor. "Ye shall not worship any other than God."—Sale cor. "Their relation, therefore, is not otherwise to be ascertained, than by their place."—Campbell cor. "For he no sooner accosted her, than he gained his point."—Burder cor. "And all the modern writers on this subject, have done little else than translate them."—Dr. Blair cor. "One who had no other aim than to talk copiously and plausibly."—Id. "We can refer it to no other cause than the structure of the eye."—Id. "No more is required than singly an act of vision."—Kames cor. "We find no more in its composition, than the particulars now mentioned."—Id. "He does not pretend to say, that it has any other effect than to raise surprise."—Id. "No sooner was the princess dead, than he freed himself."—Dr. S. Johnson cor. "OUGHT is an imperfect verb, for it has no modification besides this one."—Priestley cor. "The verb is palpably nothing else than the tie."—Neef cor. "Does he mean that theism is capable of nothing else than of being opposed to polytheism or atheism?"—Dr. Blair cor. "Is it meant that theism is capable of nothing else than of being opposed to polytheism or atheism?"—L. Murray cor. "There is no other method of teaching that of which any one is ignorant, than by means of something already known."—Ingersoll's Grammar, Titlepage: Dr. Johnson cor. "O fairest flower, no sooner blown than blasted!"—Milton cor. "Architecture and gardening cannot otherwise entertain the mind, than by raising certain agreeable emotions or feelings."—Kames cor. "Or, rather, they are nothing else than nouns."—Brit. Gram. cor.

Page 1810

"As if religion were intended

For nothing else than to be mended."—S. Butler cor.

UNDER NOTE V.—RELATIVES EXCLUDE CONJUNCTIONS.

"To prepare the Jews for the reception of a prophet mightier than himself, a teacher whose shoes he was not worthy to bear."—Anon, or Mur. cor. "Has this word, which represents an action, an object after it, on which the action terminates?"—Osborne cor. "The stores of literature lie before him, from which he may collect for use many lessons of wisdom."—Knapp cor. "Many and various great advantages of this grammar over others, might be enumerated."—Greenleaf cor. "The custom which still prevails, of writing in lines from left to right, is said to have been introduced about the time of Solon, the Athenian legislator."—Jamieson cor.

Page 1811

"The fundamental rule for the construction of sentences, the rule into which all others might be resolved, undoubtedly is, to communicate, in the clearest and most natural order, the ideas which we mean to express."—Blair and Jamieson cor. "He left a son of a singular character, who behaved so ill that he was put in prison."—L. Murray cor. "He discovered in the youth some disagreeable qualities which to him were wholly unaccountable."—Id. "An emphatical pause is made after something of peculiar moment has been said, on which we wish to fix the hearer's attention." Or: "An emphatical pause is made after something has been said which is of peculiar moment, and on which we wish to fix the hearer's attention."—Blair and Murray cor. "But we have duplicates of each, agreeing in movement, though differing in measure, and making different impressions on the ear,"—Murray cor.

UNDER NOTE VI.—OF THE WORD THAT.

"It will greatly facilitate the labours of the teacher, and, at the same time, it will relieve the pupil from many difficulties."—Frost cor. "While the pupil is engaged in the exercises just mentioned, it will be proper for him to study the whole grammar in course."—Bullions cor. "On the same ground on which a participle and an auxiliary are allowed to form a tense."—Beattie and Murray cor. "On the same ground on which the voices, moods, and tenses, are admitted into the English tongue."—L. Murray cor. "The five examples last mentioned, are corrected on the same principle that is applied to the errors preceding them."—Murray and Ingersoll cor. "The brazen age began at the death of Trajan, and lasted till Rome was taken by the Goths."—Gould cor. "The introduction to the duodecimo edition is retained in this volume, for the same reason for which the original introduction to the Grammar is retained in the first volume."—L. Murray cor. "The verb must also agree in person with its subject or nominative."—Ingersoll cor. "The personal pronoun 'THEIR' is plural for the same reason for which 'WHO' is plural."—Id. "The Sabellians could not justly be called Patripassians, in the same sense in which the Noetians were so called."—R. Adam cor. "This is one reason why we pass over such smooth language without suspecting that it contains little or no meaning."—L. Murray cor. "The first place at which the two armies came within sight of each other, was on the opposite banks of the river Apsus."—Goldsmith cor. "At the very time at which the author gave him the first book for his perusal."—Campbell cor. "Peter will sup at the time at which Paul will dine."—Fosdick cor. "Peter will be supping when Paul will enter."—Id. "These, while they may serve as models to those who may wish to imitate them, will give me an opportunity to cast more light upon the principles of this book."—Id.

Page 1812

"Time was, like thee, they life possess'd,
And time shall be, when thou shalt rest."—Parnell cor.

UNDER NOTE VII.—OF THE CORRESPONDENTS.

"Our manners should be neither gross nor excessively refined."—Murray's Key, ii, 165.
"A neuter verb expresses neither action nor passion, but being, or a state of being."—O. B. Peirce cor. "The old books are neither English grammars, nor in any sense grammars of the English language."—Id. "The author is apprehensive that his work is not yet so accurate and so much simplified as it may be."—Kirkham cor. "The writer could not treat some topics so extensively as [it] was desirable [to treat them]."—Id. "Which would be a matter of such nicety, that no degree of human wisdom could regulate it."—L. Murray cor. "No undertaking is so great or difficult, that he cannot direct it."—Duncan cor. "It is a good which depends neither on the will of others, nor on the affluence of external fortune."—Harris cor. "Not only his estate, but his reputation too, has suffered by his misconduct."—Murray and Ingersoll cor. "Neither do they extend so far as might be imagined at first view."—Dr. Blair cor. "There is no language so poor, but that it has (or, as not to have) two or three past tenses."—Id. "So far as this system is founded in truth, language appears to be not altogether arbitrary in its origin."—Id. "I have not such command of these convulsions as is necessary." Or: "I have not that command of these convulsions which is necessary."—Spect. cor. "Conversation with such as (or, those who) know no arts that polish life."—Id. "And which cannot be either very lively or very forcible."—Jamieson cor. "To such a degree as to give proper names to rivers."—Dr. Murray cor. "In the utter overthrow of such as hate to be reformed."—Barclay cor. "But still so much of it is retained, that it greatly injures the uniformity of the whole."—Priestley cor. "Some of them have gone to such a height of extravagance, as to assert," &c.—Id. "A teacher is confined, not more than a merchant, and probably not so much."—Abbott cor. "It shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come." Or: "It shall not be forgiven him, either in this world, or in the world to come."—Bible cor. "Which nobody presumes, or is so sanguine as to hope."—Swift cor. "For the torrent of the voice left neither time, nor power in the organs, to shape the words properly."—Sheridan cor. "That he may neither unnecessarily waste his voice by throwing out too much, nor diminish his power by using too little."—Id. "I have retained only such as appear most agreeable to the measures of analogy."—Littleton cor. "He is a man both prudent and industrious."—P. E. Day cor. "Conjunctions connect either words or sentences."—Brown's Inst., p. 169.

Page 1813

"Such silly girls as love to chat and play, Deserve no care; their time is thrown away."—Tobitt cor.

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
That to be hated she but needs be seen."—Pope cor.

"Justice must punish the rebellious deed;
Yet punish so that pity shall exceed."—Dryden cor.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—IMPROPER ELLIPSES.

"THAT, WHOSE, and AS, relate either to persons or to things." Or better:—"relate as well to persons as to things."—Sanborn cor. "WHICH and WHAT, as adjectives, relate either to persons or to things." Or better:—"relate to persons as well as to things."—Id. "Whether of a public or of a private nature."—J. Q. Adams cor. "Which are included among both the public and the private wrongs."—Id. "I might extract, both from the Old and from the New Testament, numberless examples of induction."—Id. "Many verbs are used both in an active and in a neuter signification." Or thus: "Many verbs are used in both an active and a neuter signification."—Lowth, Mur., et al., cor. "Its influence is likely to be considerable, both on the morals and on the taste of a nation."—Dr. Blair cor. "The subject afforded a variety of scenes, both of the awful and of the tender kind."—Id. "Restlessness of mind disqualifies us both for the enjoyment of peace, and for the performance of our duty."—Mur. and Ing. cor. "Pronominal adjectives are of a mixed nature, participating the properties both of pronouns and of adjectives."—Mur. et al. cor. "Pronominal adjectives have the nature both of the adjective and of the pronoun."—Frost cor. Or: "[Pronominal adjectives] partake of the properties of both adjectives and pronouns."—Bucke's Gram., p. 55. "Pronominal adjectives are a kind of compound part of speech, partaking the nature both of pronouns and of adjectives."—Nutting cor. "Nouns are used either in the singular or in the plural number." Or perhaps better: "Nouns are used in either the singular or the plural number."—David Blair cor. "The question is not, whether the nominative or the accusative ought to follow the particles THAN and AS; but, whether these particles are, in such particular cases, to be regarded as conjunctions or as prepositions"—Campbell cor. "In English, many verbs are used both as transitives and as intransitives."—Churchill cor. "He sendeth rain both on the just and on the unjust."—See Matt., v, 45. "A foot consists either of two or of three syllables."—David Blair cor. "Because they participate the nature both of adverbs and of conjunctions."—L.

Page 1814

Murray cor. "Surely, Romans, what I am now about to say, ought neither to be omitted, nor to pass without notice."—Duncan cor. "Their language frequently amounts, not only to bad sense, but to nonsense."—Kirkham cor. "Hence arises the necessity of a social state to man, both for the unfolding, and for the exerting, of his nobler faculties."—Sheridan cor. "Whether the subject be of the real or of the feigned kind."—Dr. H. Blair cor. "Not only was liberty entirely extinguished, but arbitrary power was felt in its heaviest and most oppressive weight."—Id. "This rule is also applicable both to verbal Critics and to Grammarians."—Hiley cor. "Both the rules and the exceptions of a language must have obtained the sanction of good usage."—Id.

CHAPTER X.—PREPOSITIONS.

CORRECTIONS UNDER THE NOTES TO RULE XXIII.

UNDER NOTE I.—CHOICE OF PREPOSITIONS.

"You have bestowed your favours upon the most deserving persons."—Swift corrected. "But, to rise above that, and overtop the crowd, is given to few."—Dr. Blair cor. "This [also is a good] sentence [, and] gives occasion for no material remark."—Blair's Rhet., p. 203. "Though Cicero endeavours to give some reputation to the elder Cato, and those who were his contemporaries." Or:—"to give some favourable account of the elder Cato," &c.—Dr. Blair cor. "The change that was produced in eloquence, is beautifully described in the dialogue."—Id. "Without carefully attending to the variation which they make in the idea."—Id. "All on a sudden, you are transported into a lofty palace."—Hazlitt cor. "Alike independent of one another." Or: "Alike independent one of another."—Campbell cor. "You will not think of them as distinct processes going on independently of each other."—Channing cor. "Though we say to depend on, dependent on, and dependence on, we say, independent of, and independently of."—Churchill cor. "Independently of the rest of the sentence."—Lowth's Gram., p. 80; Buchanan's, 83; Bullions's, 110; Churchill's, 348.[545] "Because they stand independent of the rest of the sentence."—Allen Fisk cor. "When a substantive is joined with a participle, in English, independently of the rest of the sentence."—Dr. Adam cor. "CONJUNCTION comes from the two Latin words con, together, and jungo, to join."—Merchant cor. "How different from this is the life of Fulvia!"—Addison cor. "LOVED is a participle or adjective, derived from the word love."—Ash cor. "But I would inquire of him, what an office is."—Barclay cor.

Page 1815

"For the capacity is brought into action."—Id. "In this period, language and taste arrive at purity."—Webster cor. "And, should you not aspire to (or after) distinction in the republic of letters."—Kirkham cor. "Delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons."—Luke, xxi, 12. "He that is kept from falling into a ditch, is as truly saved, as he that is taken out of one."—Barclay cor. "The best of it is, they are but a sort of French Hugonots."—Addison cor. "These last ten examples are indeed of a different nature from the former."—R. Johnson cor. "For the initiation of students into the principles of the English language."—Ann. Rev. cor. "Richelieu profited by every circumstance which the conjuncture afforded."—Bolingbroke cor. "In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake of a word may endanger life."—Merchant's Key, p. 185. Or better: "In naming drugs or plants, to mistake a word, may endanger life."—L. Murray cor. "In order to the carrying of its several parts into execution."—Bp. Butler cor. "His abhorrence of the superstitious figure."—Priestley. "Thy prejudice against my cause."—Id. "Which is found in every species of liberty."—Hume cor. "In a hilly region on the north of Jericho."—Milman cor. "Two or more singular nouns coupled by AND require a verb or pronoun in the plural."—Lennie cor.

"Books should to one of these four ends conduce,
To wisdom, piety, delight, or use."—Denham cor.

UNDER NOTE II.—TWO OBJECTS OR MORE.

"The Anglo-Saxons, however, soon quarrelled among themselves for precedence."—Const. Misc. cor. "The distinctions among the principal parts of speech are founded in nature."—Webster cor. "I think I now understand the difference between the active verbs and those which are passive or neuter."—Ingersoll cor. "Thus a figure including a space within three lines, is the real as well as nominal essence of a triangle."—Locke cor. "We must distinguish between an imperfect phrase and a simple sentence, and between a simple sentence and a compound sentence."—Lowth, Murray, et al., cor. "The Jews are strictly forbidden by their law to exercise usury towards one an other."—Sale cor. "All the writers have distinguished themselves among themselves."—Addison cor. "This expression also better secures the systematic uniformity of the three cases."—Nutting cor. "When two or more infinitives or clauses are connected disjunctively as the subjects of an affirmation, the verb must be singular."—Jaudon cor. "Several nouns or pronouns together in the same case, require a comma after each; [except the last, which must sometimes be followed by a greater point.]"—David Blair cor. "The difference between one vowel and an other is produced by opening the mouth differently, and placing the tongue in a different manner for each."—Churchill cor. "Thus feet composed of syllables, being pronounced with a sensible interval between one foot and an other, make a more lively impression than can be made by a continued sound."—Kames cor. "The superlative degree implies a comparison, sometimes between two, but generally among three or more."—R. C. Smith cor. "They are used to mark a distinction among several objects."—Levizac cor.

Page 1816

UNDER NOTE III.—OMISSION OF PREPOSITIONS.

"This would have been less worthy of notice."—Churchill cor. "But I passed it, as a thing unworthy of my notice."—Werter cor. "Which, in compliment to me, perhaps you may one day think worthy of your attention."—Bucke cor. "To think this small present worthy of an introduction to the young ladies of your very elegant establishment."—Id. "There are but a few miles of portage."—Jefferson cor. "It is worthy of notice, that our mountains are not solitary."—Id. "It is about one hundred feet in diameter." [546]—Id. "Entering a hill a quarter or half of a mile."—Id. "And herself seems passing to an awful dissolution, whose issue it is not given to human foresight to scan."—Id. "It was of a spheroidical form, about forty feet in diameter at the base, and had been about twelve feet in altitude."—Id. "Before this, it was covered with trees of twelve inches in diameter; and, round the base, there was an excavation of five feet in depth and five in width."—Id. "Then thou mayst eat grapes to thy fill, at thine own pleasure."—Bible cor. "Then he brought me back by the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary."—Id. "They will bless God, that he has peopled one half of the world with a race of freemen."—Webster cor. "Of what use can these words be, till their meaning is known?"—Town cor. "The tents of the Arabs now are black, or of a very dark colour."—The Friend cor. "They may not be unworthy of the attention of young men."—Kirkham cor. "The pronoun THAT is frequently applied to persons as well as to things."—Merchant cor. "And 'who' is in the same case that 'man' is in."—Sanborn cor. "He saw a flaming stone, apparently about four feet in diameter."—The Friend cor. "Pliny informs us, that this stone was of the size of a cart.”—Id. “Seneca was about twenty years of age in the fifth year of Tiberius, when the Jews were expelled from Rome.”—L’Estrange cor. “I was prevented from reading a letter which would have undeceived me.”—Hawkesworth cor. “If the problem can be solved, we may be pardoned for the inaccuracy of its demonstration.”—Booth cor. “The army must of necessity be the school, not of honour, but of effeminacy.”—Dr. Brown cor. “Afraid of the virtue of a nation in its opposing of bad measures:” or,—“in its opposition to bad measures.”—Id. “The uniting of them in various ways, so as to form words, would be easy.”—Gardiner cor. “I might be excused from taking any more notice of it.”—Watson cor. “Watch therefore; for ye know not at what hour your Lord will come.”—Bible cor. “Here, not even infants were spared from the sword.”—M’Ilvaine cor. “To prevent men from turning aside to false modes of worship.”—John Allen cor. “God expelled them from the garden of Eden.”—Burder cor. “Nor could he refrain from expressing to the senate the agonies of his mind.”—Hume cor. “Who now so strenuously opposes the granting to him of any new powers.”—Duncan cor. “That the laws of the censors have banished him from the forum.”—Id. “We read not that he was degraded from his office in any other way.”—Barclay cor. “To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting.”—Hutchinson cor. “On the 1st of August, 1834.”—Brit. Parl. cor.

Page 1817

“Whether you had not some time in your life
Err’d in this point on which you censure him.”—Shak. cor.

UNDER NOTE IV.—OF NEEDLESS PREPOSITIONS.

“And the apostles and elders came together to consider this matter.”—Barclay cor.; also Acts. “Adjectives, in our language, have neither case, nor gender, nor number; the only variation they have, is comparison.”—Buchanan cor. “‘It is to you that I am indebted for this privilege;’ that is, ‘To you am I indebted;’ or, ‘It is you to whom I am indebted.’”—Sanborn cor. “BOOKS is a common noun, of the third person, plural number, and neuter gender.”—Ingersoll cor. “BROTHER’S is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, masculine gender, and possessive case.”—L. Murray cor. “VIRTUE’S is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, [neuter gender,] and possessive case.”—Id. “When the authorities on one side greatly preponderate, it is vain to oppose the prevailing usage.”—Campbell and Murray cor. “A captain of a troop of banditti, had a mind to be plundering Rome.”—Collier cor. "And, notwithstanding its verbal power, we have added the TO and other signs of exertion."—Booth cor. "Some of these situations are termed CASES, and are expressed by additions to the noun, in stead of separate words:" or,—"and not by separate words."—Id. "Is it such a fast that I have chosen, that a man should afflict his soul for a day, and bow down his head like a bulrush?"—Bacon cor. Compare Isa., lviii, 5. "And this first emotion comes at last to be awakened by the accidental in stead of the necessary antecedent."—Wayland cor. "About the same time, the subjugation of the Moors was completed."—Balbi cor. "God divided between the light and the darkness."—Burder cor. "Notwithstanding this, we are not against outward significations of honour."—Barclay cor. "Whether these words and practices of Job's friends, ought to be our rule."—Id. "Such verb cannot admit an objective case after it."—Lowth cor. "For which, God is now visibly punishing these nations."—C. Leslie cor. "In this respect, Tasso yields to no poet, except Homer."—Dr. Blair cor. "Notwithstanding the numerous panegyrics on the ancient English liberty."—Hume cor. "Their efforts seemed to anticipate the spirit which became so general afterwards."—Id.

Page 1818

UNDER NOTE V.—THE PLACING OF THE WORDS.

"But how short of its excellency are my expressions!"—Baxter cor. "In his style, there is a remarkable union of harmony with ease."—Dr. H. Blair cor. "It disposes of the light and shade in the most artificial manner, that every thing may be viewed to the best advantage."—Id. "For brevity, Aristotle too holds an eminent rank among didactic writers."—Id. "In an introduction, correctness of expression should be carefully studied."—Id. "In laying down a method, one ought above all things to study precision."—Id. "Which shall make on the mind the impression of something that is one, whole, and entire."—Id. "At the same time, there are in the Odyssey some defects which must be acknowledged." Or: "At the same time, it must be acknowledged that there are some defects in the Odyssey."—Id. "In the concluding books, however, there are beauties of the tragic kind."—Id. "These forms of conversation multiplied by degrees, and grew troublesome."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 44. "When she has made her own choice, she sends, for form's sake, a conge-d'elire to her friends."—Ib., ii, 46. "Let us endeavour to establish to ourselves an interest in him who holds in his hand the reins of the whole creation."—Spectator cor.; also Kames. "Next to this, the measure most frequent in English poetry, is that of eight syllables.”—David Blair cor. “To introduce as great a variety of cadences as possible.”—Jamieson cor. “He addressed to them several exhortations, suitable to their circumstances.”—L. Murray cor. “Habits of temperance and self-denial must be acquired.”—Id. “In reducing to practice the rules prescribed.”—Id. “But these parts must be so closely bound together, as to make upon the mind the impression of one object, not of many.”—Blair and Mur. cor. “Errors with respect to the use of shall and will, are sometimes committed by the most distinguished writers.”—N. Butler cor.

Page 1819

CHAPTER XI.—PROMISCUOUS EXERCISES.

CORRECTIONS OF THE PROMISCUOUS EXAMPLES.

LESSON I.—ANY PARTS OF SPEECH.

“Such a one, I believe, yours will be proved to be.”—Peet and Farnum cor. “Of the distinction between the imperfect and the perfect tense, it may be observed,” &c.—L. Ainsworth cor. “The subject is certainly worthy of consideration.”—Id. “By this means, all ambiguity and controversy on this point are avoided.”—Bullions cor. “The perfect participle, in English, has both an active and a passive signification.” Better: “The perfect participle, in English, has sometimes an active, and sometimes a passive, signification.”—Id. “The old house has at length fallen down.”—Id. “The king, the lords, and the commons, constitute the English form of government.”—Id. “The verb in the singular agrees with the person next to it.” Better: “The singular verb agrees in person with that nominative which is next to it.”—Id. “Jane found Seth’s gloves in James’s hat.”—O. C. Felton cor. “Charles’s task is too great.”—Id. “The conjugation of a verb is the naming of its several moods, tenses, numbers, and persons, in regular order.”—Id. “The long-remembered beggar was his guest.”—Id. “Participles refer to nouns or pronouns.”—Id. “F has a uniform sound, in every position, except in OF.” Better: “F has one unvaried sound, in every position, except in OF.”—E. J. Hallock cor. “There are three genders; the masculine, the feminine, and the neuter.”—Id. “When SO and THAT occur together, sometimes the particle SO is taken as an adverb.”—Id. “The definition of the articles shows that they modify [the import of] the words to which they belong.”—Id. “The auxiliary, SHALL, WILL, or SHOULD, is implied.”—Id. “Single-rhymed trochaic omits the final short syllable.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 237. “Agreeably to this, we read of names being blotted out of God's book."—Burder, Hallock, and Webster, cor. "The first person is that which denotes the speaker."—Inst., p. 32. "Accent is the laying of a peculiar stress of the voice, on a certain letter or syllable in a word."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 235; Felton's, 134. "Thomas's horse was caught."—Felton cor. "You were loved."—Id. "The nominative and the objective end alike."—T. Smith cor. "The numbers of pronouns, like those of substantives, are two; the singular and the plural."—Id. "I is called the pronoun of the first person, because it represents the person speaking."—Frost cor. "The essential elements of the phrase are an intransitive gerundive and an adjective."—Hazen cor. "Wealth is no justification for such impudence."—Id. "That he was a soldier in the revolution, is not doubted."—Id. "Fishing is the chief employment of the inhabitants."—Id. "The chief employment of the inhabitants, is the catching of fish."—Id. "The cold weather did not prevent the work from being finished at the time specified."—Id. "The man's former viciousness caused him to be suspected of this crime."—Id. "But person and number, applied to verbs, mean certain terminations."—Barrett cor. "Robert felled a tree."—Id. "Charles raised himself up."—Id. "It might not be a useless waste of time."—Id. "Neither will you have that implicit faith in the writings and works of others, which characterizes the vulgar."—Id. "I is of the first person, because it denotes the speaker."—Id. "I would refer the student to Hedge's or Watts's Logic."—Id. "Hedge's Watts's, Kirwin's, and Collard's Logic."—Parker and Fox cor. "Letters that make a full and perfect sound of themselves, are called vowels." Or: "The letters which make," &c.—Cutler cor. "It has both a singular and a plural construction."—Id. "For he beholds (or beholdeth) thy beams no more."—Id. Carthon. "To this sentiment the Committee have the candour to incline, as it will appear by their summing-up."—Macpherson cor. "This reduces the point at issue to a narrow compass."—Id. "Since the English set foot upon the soil."—Exiles cor. "The arrangement of its different parts is easily retained by the memory."—Hiley cor. "The words employed are the most appropriate that could have been selected."—Id. "To prevent it from launching!"—Id. "Webster has been followed in preference to others, where he differs from them." Or: "Webster's Grammar has been followed in preference to others, where it differs from them."—Frazee cor. "Exclamation and interrogation are often mistaken the one for the other."—Buchanan cor. "When all nature is hushed in sleep, and neither love nor guilt keeps its vigils."—Felton cor. Or thus:—

Page 1820

Page 1821

"When all nature's hush'd asleep.
Nor love, nor guilt, doth vigils keep."

LESSON II.—ANY PARTS OF SPEECH.

"A Versifier and a Poet are two different things."—Brightland cor. "Those qualities will arise from the well-expressing of the subject."—Id. "Therefore the explanation of NETWORK is not noticed here."—Mason cor. "When emphasis or pathos is necessary to be expressed."—Humphrey cor. "Whether this mode of punctuation is correct, or whether it is proper to close the sentence with the mark of admiration, may be made a question."—Id. "But not every writer in those days was thus correct."—Id. "The sounds of A, in English orthoepy, are no fewer than four."—Id. "Our present code of rules is thought to be generally correct." Or: "The rules in our present code are thought to be generally correct."—Id. "To prevent it from running into an other"—Id. "Shakspeare, perhaps, the greatest poetical genius that England has produced."—Id. "This I will illustrate by example; but, before doing so, a few preliminary remarks may be necessary."—Id. "All such are entitled to two accents each, and some of them to two accents nearly equal."—Id. "But some cases of the kind are so plain, that no one needs to exercise (or, need exercise) his judgement therein."—Id. "I have forborne to use the word."—Id. "The propositions, 'He may study,' 'He might study,' 'He could study,' affirm an ability or power to study."—E. J. Hallock cor. "The divisions of the tenses have occasioned grammarians much trouble and perplexity."—Id. "By adopting a familiar, inductive method of presenting this subject, one may render it highly attractive to young learners."—Wells cor. "The definitions and rules of different grammarians were carefully compared with one an other:" or—"one with an other."—Id. "So as not wholly to prevent some sound from issuing."—Sheridan cor. "Letters of the Alphabet, not yet noticed."—Id. "'IT is sad,' 'IT is strange,' &c., seem to express only that the thing is sad, strange, &c."—Well-Wishers cor. "The winning is easier than the preserving of a conquest."—Same. "The United States find themselves the owners of a vast region of country at the west."—H. Mann cor. "One or more letters placed before a word are a prefix."—S. W. Clark cor. "One or more letters added to a word, are a Suffix."—Id. "Two thirds of my hair have fallen off." Or: "My hair has, two thirds of it, fallen off."—Id. "'Suspecting' describes us, the speakers, by expressing, incidentally, an act of ours.”—Id. “Daniel’s predictions are now about being fulfilled.” Or thus: “Daniel’s predictions are now receiving their fulfillment”—Id. “His scholarship entitles him to respect.”—Id. “I doubted whether he had been a soldier.”—Id. “The taking of a madman’s sword to prevent him from doing mischief, cannot be regarded as a robbery.”—Id. “I thought it to be him; but it was not he.”—Id. “It was not I that you saw.”—Id. “Not to know what happened before you were born, is always to be a boy.”—Id. “How long were you going? Three days.”—Id. “The qualifying adjective is placed next to the noun.”—Id. “All went but I.”—Id. “This is a parsing of their own language, and not of the author’s.”—Wells cor. “Those nouns which denote males, are of the masculine gender.” Or: “Nouns that denote males, are of the masculine gender.”—Wells, late Ed. “Those nouns which denote females, are of the feminine gender.” Or: “Nouns that denote females, are of the feminine gender.”—Wells, late Ed. “When a comparison among more than two objects of the same class is expressed, the superlative degree is employed.”—Wells cor. “Where d or t goes before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coalesces into one letter with the radical d or t.”—Dr. Johnson cor. “Write words which will show what kind of house you live in—what kind of book you hold in your hand—what kind of day it is.”—Weld cor. “One word or more are often joined to nouns or pronouns to modify their meaning.”—Id. “Good is an adjective; it explains the quality or character of every person to whom, or thing to which, it is applied.” Or:—“of every person or thing that it is applied to.”—Id. “A great public as well as private advantage arises from every one’s devoting of himself to that occupation which he prefers, and for which he is specially fitted.”—Wayland, Wells, and Weld, cor. “There was a chance for him to recover his senses.” Or: “There was a chance that he might recover his senses.”—Wells and Macaulay cor. “This may be known by the absence of any connecting word immediately preceding it.”—Weld cor. “There are irregular expressions occasionally to be met with, which usage, or custom, rather than analogy, sanctions.”—Id. “He added an anecdote of Quin relieving Thomson from prison.” Or: “He added an anecdote of Quin as relieving Thomson from prison.” Or: “He added an anecdote of Quin’s relieving of Thomson from prison.” Or better: “He also told how Quin relieved Thomson from prison.”—Id. “The daily labour of her hands procures for her all that is necessary.”—Id. “That it is I, should make no change in your determination.”—Hart cor. “The classification of words into what are called the Parts of Speech.”—Weld cor. “Such licenses may be explained among what are usually termed Figures.”—Id.

Page 1822

Page 1823

"Liberal, not lavish, is kind Nature's hand."—Beattie.

"They fall successive, and successive rise."—Pope.

LESSON III.—ANY PARTS OF SPEECH.

"A Figure of Etymology is an intentional deviation from the usual form of a word."—See Brown's Institutes, p. 229. "A Figure of Syntax is an intentional deviation from the usual construction of a word."—See Brown's Inst., p. 230. "Synecdoche is the naming of the whole of any thing for a part, or a part for the whole."—Weld cor. "Apostrophe is a turning-off[547] from the regular course of the subject, to address some person or thing."—Id. "Even young pupils will perform such exercises with surprising interest and facility, and will unconsciously gain, in a little time, more knowledge of the structure of language, than they can acquire by a drilling of several years in the usual routine of parsing."—Id. "A few rules of construction are employed in this part, to guide the pupil in the exercise of parsing."—Id. "The name of any person, object, or thing, that can be thought of, or spoken of, is a noun."—Id. "A dot, resembling our period, is used between every two words, as well as at the close of each verse."—W. Day cor. "The casting of types in matrices was invented by Peter Schoeffer, in 1452."—Id. "On perusing it, he said, that, so far [was it] from showing the prisoner's guilt [that] it positively established his innocence."—Id. "By printing the nominative and verb in Italic letters, we shall enable the reader to distinguish them at a glance."—Id. "It is well, no doubt, to avoid unnecessary words."—Id. "I meeting a friend the other day, he said to me, 'Where are you going?'"—Id. "To John, apples were first denied; then they were promised to him; then they were offered to him."—Lennie cor. "Admission was denied him."—Wells cor. "A pardon was offered to them."—L. Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 183. "A new potato was this day shown me."—Darwin, Webster, Frazee, and Weld, cor. "Those nouns or pronouns which denote males, are of the masculine gender."—S. S. Greene, cor. "There are three degrees of comparison; the positive, the comparative, and the superlative."—Id. "The first two refer to direction; the third refers to locality."—Id. "The following are some of the verbs which take a direct and an indirect object."—Id. "I was not aware that he was the judge of the supreme court."—Id. "An indirect question may refer to any of the five elements of a declarative sentence."—Id.

Page 1824

"I am not sure that he will be present."—Id. "We left New York on Tuesday."—Id. "He left the city, as he told me, before the arrival of the steamer."—Id. "We told him that he must leave us;"—Id. "We told him to leave us."—Id. "Because he was unable to persuade the multitude, he left the place, in disgust."—Id. "He left the company, and took his brother with him."—Id. "This stating, or declaring, or denying of any thing, is called the indicative mood, or manner of speaking."—Weld cor. "This took place at our friend Sir Joshua Reynolds's."—Id. "The manner in which a young lady may employ herself usefully in reading, will be the subject of an other paper."—Id. "Very little time is necessary for Johnson to conclude a treaty with the bookseller."—Id. "My father is not now sick; but if he were, your services would be welcome."—Chandler's Common School Gram., Ed. of 1847, p. 79. "Before we begin to write or speak, we ought to fix in our minds a clear conception of the end to be aimed at."—Dr. Blair cor. "Length of days is in her right hand; and, in her left hand, are riches and honour."—See Proverbs, iii, 16. "The active and the passive present express different ideas."—Bullions cor. "An Improper Diphthong, (sometimes called a Digraph,) is a diphthong in which only one of the vowels is sounded."—Fowler cor. (See G. Brown's definition.) "The real origin of the words is to be sought in the Latin."—Fowler cor. "What sort of alphabet the Gothic languages possess, we know; what sort of alphabet they require, we can determine."—Id. "The Runic alphabet, whether borrowed or invented by the early Goths, is of greater antiquity than either the oldest Teutonic or the Moeso-Gothic alphabet."—Id. "Common to the masculine and neuter genders."—Id. "In the Anglo-Saxon, HIS was common to both the masculine and the Neuter Gender."—Id. "When time, number, or dimension, is specified, the adjective follows the substantive."—Id. "Nor pain, nor grief nor anxious fear, Invades thy bounds."—Id. "To Brighton, the Pavilion lends a lath-and-plaster grace."—Fowler cor. "From this consideration, I have given to nouns but one person, the THIRD."—D. C. Allen cor.

"For it seems to guard and cherish E'en the wayward dreamer—me."—Anon. cor.

CHAPTER XII.—GENERAL REVIEW.

CORRECTIONS UNDER ALL THE PRECEDING RULES AND NOTES.

LESSON I.—ARTICLES.

Page 1825

"And they took stones, and made a heap."—ALGER'S BIBLE: Gen., xxxi, 46. "And I do know many fools, that stand in better place."—Shak. cor. "It is a strong antidote to the turbulence of passion, and the violence of pursuit."—Kames cor. "The word NEWS may admit of either a singular or a plural application."—Wright cor. "He has gained a fair and honourable reputation."—Id. "There are two general forms, called the solemn and the familiar style." Or:—"called the solemn and familiar styles."—Sanborn cor. "Neither the article nor the preposition can be omitted."—Wright cor. "A close union is also observable between the subjunctive and the potential mood."—Id. "Should we render service equally to a friend, a neighbour, and an enemy?"—Id. "Till a habit is obtained, of aspiring strongly."—Sheridan cor. "There is a uniform, steady use of the same signs."—Id. "A traveller remarks most of the objects which he sees."—Jamieson cor. "What is the name of the river on which London stands? Thames."—G. B. "We sometimes find the last line of a couplet or a triplet stretched out to twelve syllables."—Adam cor. "The nouns which follow active verbs, are not in the nominative case."—David Blair cor. "It is a solemn duty to speak plainly of the wrongs which good men perpetrate."—Channing cor. "The gathering of riches is a pleasant torment."—L. Cobb cor. "It is worth being quoted." Or better: "It is worth quoting."—Coleridge cor. "COUNCIL is a noun which admits of a singular and a plural form."—Wright cor. "To exhibit the connexion between the Old Testament and the New."—Keith cor. "An apostrophe discovers the omission of a letter or of letters."—Guy cor. "He is immediately ordained, or rather acknowledged, a hero."—Pope cor. "Which is the same in both the leading and the following state."—Brightland cor. "Pronouns, as will be seen hereafter, have three distinct cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective."—D. Blair cor. "A word of many syllables is called a polysyllable."—Beck cor. "Nouns have two numbers; the singular and the plural."—Id. "They have three genders; the masculine, the feminine, and the neuter."—Id. "They have three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective."—Id. "Personal pronouns have, like nouns, two numbers; the singular and the plural;—three genders; the masculine, the feminine, and the neuter;—three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective."—Id. "He must be wise enough to know the singular from the plural"—Id. "Though they may be able to meet every reproach which any one of their fellows may prefer."—Chalmers cor. "Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such a one as Paul the aged."—Bible cor.; also Webster. "A people that jeopardied their lives unto death."—Bible cor. "By preventing too great an accumulation of seed within too narrow a compass."—The Friend cor. "Who fills up the middle space between the animal and the intellectual nature, the visible and the invisible world."—Addison cor. "The Psalms abound with instances of the harmonious arrangement of words."—Murray cor. "On an other table, were a ewer and a vase, likewise of gold."—Mirror cor. "TH is said to have two sounds, a sharp and a flat."—Wilson cor. "The SECTION (Sec.) is sometimes used in the subdividing of a chapter into lesser parts."—Brightland cor. "Try it in a dog, or a horse, or any other creature."—Locke cor. "But particularly in the learning of languages, there is the least occasion to pose children."—Id. "Of what kind is the noun RIVER, and why?"—R. C. Smith cor. "Is WILLIAM'S a proper or a common noun?"—Id. "What kind of article, then, shall we call the?" Or better: "What then shall we call the article the?"—Id.

Page 1826

"Each burns alike, who can, or cannot write,
Or with a rival's, or a eunuch's spite."—Pope cor.

LESSON II.—NOUNS, OR CASES.

"And there are stamped upon their imaginations ideas that follow them with terror and affright."—Locke cor. "There's not a wretch that lives on common charity, but's happier than I."—Ven. Pres. cor. "But they overwhelm every one who is ignorant of them."—H. Mann cor. "I have received a letter from my cousin, her that was here last week."—Inst., p. 129. "Gentlemen's houses are seldom without variety of company."—Locke cor. "Because Fortune has laid them below the level of others, at their masters' feet."—Id. "We blamed neither John's nor Mary's delay."—Nixon cor. "The book was written by order of Luther the reformer."—Id. "I saw on the table of the saloon Blair's sermons, and somebody's else, (I forget whose,) and [about the room] a set of noisy children."—Byron cor. "Or saith he it altogether for our sake?"—Bible cor. "He was not aware that the Duke was his competitor."—Sanborn cor. "It is no condition of an adjective, that the word must be placed before a noun." Or: "It is no condition on which a word becomes an adjective, that it must be placed before a noun.”—Id., and Fowle cor. “Though their reason corrected the wrong ideas which they had taken in.”—Locke cor. “It was he that taught me to hate slavery.”—Morris cor. “It is he and his kindred, who live upon the labour of others.”—Id. “Payment of tribute is an acknowledgement of him as being King—(of him as King—or, that he is King—) to whom we think it due.”—C. Leslie cor. “When we comprehend what is taught us.”—Ingersoll cor. “The following words, and parts of words, must be noticed.”—Priestley cor. “Hence tears and commiseration are so often employed.”—Dr. H. Blair cor. “JOHN-A-NOKES, n. A fictitious name used in law proceedings.”—A. Chalmers cor. “The construction of words denoting matter, and the part grasped.”—B. F. Fisk cor. “And such other names as carry with them the idea of something terrible and hurtful.”—Locke cor. “Every learner then would surely be glad to be spared from the trouble and fatigue.”—Pike cor. “It is not the owning of one’s dissent from an other, that I speak against.”—Locke cor. “A man that cannot fence, will be more careful to keep out of bullies and gamesters’ company, and will not be half so apt to stand upon punctilios.”—Id. “From such persons it is, that one may learn more in one day, than in a year’s rambling from one inn to an other.”—Id. “A long syllable is generally considered to be twice as long as a short one.”—D. Blair cor. “I is of the first person, and the singular number. THOU is of the second person singular. HE, SHE, or IT, is of the third person singular. WE is of the first person plural. YE or YOU is of the second person plural. THEY is of the third person plural.”—Kirkham cor. “This actor, doer, or producer of the action, is denoted by some word in the nominative case.”—Id. “Nobody can think, that a boy of three or seven years of age should be argued with as a grown man.”—Locke cor. “This was in the house of one of the Pharisees, not in Simon the leper’s.”—Hammond cor. “Impossible! it can’t be I.”—Swift cor. “Whose grey top shall tremble, He descending.”—Milton, P. L., xii, 227. “Of what gender is woman, and why?”—R. C. Smith cor. “Of what gender, then, is man, and why?”—Id. “Who is this I; whom do you mean when you say I?”—R. W. Green cor. “It has a pleasant air, but the soil is barren.”—Locke cor. “You may, in three days’ time, go from Galilee to Jerusalem.”—W. Whiston cor. “And that which is left of the meat-offering, shall be Aaron’s and his sons’.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE.

Page 1827

Page 1828

"For none in all the world, without a lie,
Can say of this, 'Tis mine,' but Bunyan, I."—Bunyan cor.

LESSON III.—ADJECTIVES.

"When he can be their remembrancer and advocate at all assizes and sessions."—Leslie cor. "DOING denotes every manner of action; as, to dance, to play, to write, &c."—Buchanan cor. "Seven feet long,"—"eight feet long,"—"fifty feet long."—W. Walker cor. "Nearly the whole of these twenty-five millions of dollars is a dead loss to the nation."—Fowler cor. "Two negatives destroy each other."—R. W. Green cor. "We are warned against excusing sin in ourselves, or in one an other."—Friend cor. "The Russian empire is more extensive than any other government in the world."—Inst., p. 265. "You will always have the satisfaction to think it, of all your expenses, the money best laid out."—Locke cor. "There is no other passion which all mankind so naturally indulge, as pride."—Steele cor. "O, throw away the viler part of it."—Shak. cor. "He showed us an easier and more agreeable way."—Inst., p. 265. "And the last four are to point out those further improvements."—Jamieson and Campbell cor. "Where he has not clear ideas, distinct and different."—Locke cor. "Oh, when shall we have an other such Rector of Laracor!"—Hazlitt cor. "Speech must have been absolutely necessary previously to the formation of society." Or better thus: "Speech must have been absolutely necessary to the formation of society."—Jamieson cor. "Go and tell those boys to be still."—Inst., p. 265. "Wrongs are engraved on marble; benefits, on sand: those are apt to be requited; these, forgot."—G. B. "None of these several interpretations is the true one."—G. B. "My friend indulged himself in some freaks not befitting the gravity of a clergyman."—G. B. "And their pardon is all that any of their impropiators will have to plead."—Leslie cor. "But the time usually chosen to send young men abroad, is, I think, of all periods, that at which they are least capable of reaping those advantages."—Locke cor. "It is a mere figment of the human imagination, a rhapsody of the transcendently unintelligible."—Jamieson cor. "It contains a greater assemblage of sublime ideas, of bold and daring figures, than is perhaps anywhere else to be met with."—Dr. Blair cor. "The order in which the last two words are placed should have been reversed."—Dr. Blair cor.; also L. Murray. "In Demosthenes, eloquence shone forth with higher splendour, than perhaps in any other that ever bore the name of orator.”—Dr. Blair cor. “The circumstance of his poverty (or, that he is poor) is decidedly favourable.”—Todd cor. “The temptations to dissipation are greatly lessened by his poverty.”—Id. “For, with her death, those tidings came.”—Shak. cor. “The next objection is, that authors of this sort are poor.”—Cleland cor. “Presenting Emma, as Miss Castlemain, to these acquaintances.” or,—“to these persons of her acquaintance.”—Opie cor. “I doubt not that it will please more persons than the opera.” or,—“that it will be more pleasing than the opera.”—Spect. cor. “The world knows only two; these are Rome and I.”—Ben Jonson cor. “I distinguish these two things from each other.”—Dr. Blair cor. “And, in this case, mankind reciprocally claim and allow indulgence to one an other.”—Sheridan cor. “The last six books are said not to have received the finishing hand of the author.”—Dr. Blair cor. “The best-executed part of the work, is the first six books.”—Id.

Page 1829

“To reason how can we be said to rise?

So hard the task for mortals to be wise!”—Sheffield cor.

LESSON IV.—PRONOUNS.

“Once upon a time, a goose fed her young by a pond’s side.” or—“by a pondside.”—Goldsmith cor. (See OBS. 33d on Rule 4th.) “If either has a sufficient degree of merit to recommend it to the attention of the public.”—J. Walker cor. “Now W. Mitchell’s deceit is very remarkable.”—Barclay cor. “My brother, I did not put the question to thee, for that I doubted of the truth of thy belief.”—Bunyan cor. “I had two elder brothers, one of whom was a lieutenant-colonel.”—De Foe cor. “Though James is here the object of the action, yet the word James is in the nominative case.”—Wright cor. “Here John is the actor; and the word John is known to be in the nominative, by its answering to the question, ‘Who struck Richard?’”—Id. “One of the most distinguished privileges that Providence has conferred upon mankind, is the power of communicating their thoughts to one an other.”—Dr. Blair cor. “With some of the most refined feelings that belong to our frame.”—Id. “And the same instructions that assist others in composing works of elegance, will assist them in judging of, and relishing, the beauties of composition.”—Id. “To overthrow all that had been yielded in favour of the army.”—Macaulay cor. “Let your faith stand in the Lord God, who changes not, who created all, and who gives the increase of all.”—Friends cor. “For it is, in truth, the sentiment of passion which lies under the figured expression, that gives it all its merit.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Verbs are words that affirm the being, doing, or suffering of a thing, together with the time at which it happens.”—A. Murray cor. “The bias will always hang on that side on which nature first placed it.”—Locke cor. “They should be brought to do the things which are fit for them.”—Id. “The various sources from which the English language is derived.”—L. Murray cor. “This attention to the several cases in which it is proper to omit or to redouble the copulative, is of considerable importance.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Cicero, for instance, speaking of the cases in which it is lawful to kill an other in self-defence, uses the following words.”—Id. “But there is no nation, hardly are there any persons, so phlegmatic as not to accompany their words with some actions, or gesticulations, whenever they are much in earnest.”—Id. “William’s is said to be governed by coat, because coat follows William’s” Or better:—“because coat is the name of the thing possessed by William.”—R. C. Smith cor. “In life, there are many occasions on which silence and simplicity are marks of true wisdom.”—L. Murray cor. “In choosing umpires whose avarice is excited.”—Nixon cor. “The boroughs sent representatives, according to law.”—Id. “No man believes but that there is some order in the universe.”—G. B. “The moon is orderly in her changes, and she could not be so by accident.”—Id. “The riddles of the Sphynx (or, The Sphynx’s riddles) are generally of two kinds.”—Bacon cor. “They must generally find either their friends or their enemies in power.”—Dr. Brown cor. “For, of old, very many took upon them to write what happened in their own time.”—Whiston cor. “The Almighty cut off the family of Eli the high priest, for their transgressions.”—The Friend, vii, 109. “The convention then resolved itself into a committee of the whole.”—Inst., p. 269. “The severity with which persons of this denomination were treated, appeared rather to invite them to the colony, than to deter them from flocking thither.”—H. Adams cor. “Many Christians abuse the Scriptures and the traditions of the apostles, to uphold things quite contrary to them.”—Barclay cor. “Thus, a circle, a square, a triangle, or a hexagon, pleases the eye by its regularity, and is a beautiful figure.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Elba is remarkable for being the place to which Bonaparte was banished in 1814.”—Olney’s Geog. “The editor has the reputation of being a good linguist and critic.”—Rel.

Page 1830

Page 1831

Herald. "It is a pride which should be cherished in them."—Locke cor. "And to restore to us the hope of fruits, to reward our pains in their season."—Id. "The comic representation of Death's victim relating his own tale."—Wright cor. "As for Scioppius's Grammar, that wholly concerns the Latin tongue."—Wilkins cor.

"And chiefly Thou, O Spirit, that dost prefer
Before all temples th' upright heart and pure, Instruct me, for Thou knowst."—Milton, P. L., B. i, l. 17.

LESSON V.—VERBS.

"And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field."—Friends' Bible; also Bruce's, and Alger's. "Whereof every one bears [or beareth] twins."—BIBLE COR.: Song, vi, 6. "He strikes out of his nature one of the most divine principles that are planted in it."—Addison cor. "GENII [i.e., the word GENII] denotes aerial spirits."—Wright cor. "In proportion as the long and large prevalence of such corruptions has been obtained by force."—Halifax cor. "Neither of these is set before any word of a general signification, or before a proper name."—Brightland cor. "Of which, a few of the opening lines are all I shall give."—Moore cor. "The wealth we had in England, was the slow result of long industry and wisdom." Or: "The riches we had in England were," &c.—Davenant cor. "The following expression appears to be correct: 'Much public gratitude is due.'" Or this: "'Great public thanks are due.'"—Wright cor. "He has been enabled to correct many mistakes."—Lowth cor. "Which road dost thou take here?"—Ingersoll cor. "Dost thou learn thy lesson?"—Id. "Did they learn their pieces perfectly?"—Id. "Thou learned thy task well."—Id. "There are some who can't relish the town, and others can't bear with the country."—Sir Wilful cor. "If thou meet them, thou must put on an intrepid mien."—Neef cor. "Struck with terror, as if Philip were something more than human."—Dr. Blair cor. "If the personification of the form of Satan were admissible, the pronoun should certainly have been masculine."—Jamieson cor. "If only one follows, there seems to be a defect in the sentence."—Priestley cor. "Sir, if thou hast borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him."—Bible cor. "Blessed are the people that know the joyful sound."—Id. "Every auditory takes in good part those marks of respect and awe with which a modest speaker commences a public discourse."—Dr. Blair cor. "Private causes were still pleaded in the forum; but the public were no longer interested, nor was any general attention drawn to what passed there.”—Id. “Nay, what evidence can be brought to show, that the inflections of the classic tongues were not originally formed out of obsolete auxiliary words?”—L. Murray cor. “If the student observe that the principal and the auxiliary form but one verb, he will have little or no difficulty in the proper application of the present rule.”—Id. “For the sword of the enemy, and fear, are on every side.”—Bible cor. “Even the Stoics agree that nature, or certainty, is very hard to come at.”—Collier cor. “His politeness, his obliging behaviour, was changed.” Or thus: “His polite and obliging behaviour was changed.”—Priestley and Hume cor. “War and its honours were their employment and ambition.” Or thus: “War was their employment; its honours were their ambition.”—Goldsmith cor. “Do A and AN mean the same thing?”—R. W. Green cor. “When several words come in between the discordant parts, the ear does not detect the error.”—Cobbett cor. “The sentence should be, ‘When several words come in,’ &c.”—Wright cor. “The nature of our language, the accent and pronunciation of it, incline us to contract even all our regular verbs.”—Churchill’s New Gram., p. 104. Or thus: “The nature of our language,—(that is, the accent and pronunciation of it,—) inclines us to contract even all our regular verbs.”—Lowth cor. “The nature of our language, together with the accent and pronunciation of it, inclines us to contract even all our regular verbs.”—Hiley cor. “Prompt aid, and not promises, is what we ought to give.”—G. B. “The position of the several organs, therefore, as well as their functions, is ascertained.”—Med. Mag. cor. “Every private company, and almost every public assembly, affords opportunities of remarking the difference between a just and graceful, and a faulty and unnatural elocution.”—Enfield cor. “Such submission, together with the active principle of obedience, makes up in us the temper or character which answers to his sovereignty.”—Bp. Butler cor. “In happiness, as in other things, there are a false and a true, an imaginary and a real.”—A. Fuller cor. “To confound things that differ, and to make a distinction where there is no difference, are equally unphilosophical.”—G. Brown.

Page 1832

“I know a bank wheron doth wild thyme blow,
Where oxlips and the nodding violet grow.”—Shak. cor.

LESSON VI.—VERBS.

Page 1833

"Whose business or profession prevents their attendance in the morning."—Ogilby cor.
 "And no church or officer has power over an other."—Lechford cor. "While neither reason nor experience is sufficiently matured to protect them."—Woodbridge cor.
 "Among the Greeks and Romans, almost every syllable was known to have a fixed and determined quantity." Or thus: "Among the Greeks and Romans, all syllables, (or at least the far greater number,) were known to have severally a fixed and determined quantity."—Blair and Jamieson cor. "Their vanity is awakened, and their passions are exalted, by the irritation which their self-love receives from contradiction."—Tr. of Mad. De Stael cor. "He and I were neither of us any great swimmer."—Anon. "Virtue, honour—nay, even self-interest, recommends the measure."—L. Murray cor. (See Obs. 5th on Rule 16th.) "A correct plainness, an elegant simplicity, is the proper character of an introduction."—Dr. Blair cor. "In syntax, there is what grammarians call concord or agreement, and there is government."—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "People find themselves able, without much study, to write and speak English intelligibly, and thus are led to think that rules are of no utility."—Webster cor. "But the writer must be one who has studied to inform himself well, who has pondered his subject with care, and who addresses himself to our judgement, rather than to our imagination."—Dr. Blair cor. "But practice has determined it otherwise; and has, in all the languages with which we are much acquainted, supplied the place of an interrogative mood, either by particles of interrogation, or by a peculiar order of the words in the sentence."—Lowth cor. "If the Lord hath stirred thee up against me, let him accept an offering."—Bible cor. "But if the priest's daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and she return unto her father's house, as in her youth, she shall eat of her father's meat."—Id. "Since we never have studied, and never shall study, your sublime productions."—Neef cor. "Enabling us to form distincter images of objects, than can be formed, with the utmost attention, where these particulars are not found."—Kames cor. "I hope you will consider that what is spoken comes from my love."—Shak. cor. "We shall then perceive how the designs of emphasis may be marred."—Rush cor. "I knew it was Crab, and went to the fellow that whips the dogs."—Shak. cor. "The youth was consuming by a slow malady."—Murray's Gram., p. 64; Ingersoll's, 45; Fisk, 82. "If all men thought, spoke, and wrote alike, something resembling a perfect adjustment of these points might be accomplished."—Wright cor. "If you will replace what has been, for a long time expunged from the language." Or: "If you will replace what was long ago expunged from the language."—Campbell and Murray cor. "As in all those faulty instances which I have just been giving."—Dr. Blair cor. "This mood is also used improperly in the following places."—L. Murray cor. "He seems to have been well acquainted with his own genius, and to have known what it was that nature had bestowed upon him."—Johnson cor. "Of which I have already given one instance, the worst indeed that occurred in the poem."—Dr. Blair cor. "It is strange he never commanded you to do it."—Anon. "History painters would have found it difficult, to invent such a species of beings."—Addison cor. "Universal Grammar cannot be taught abstractedly; it must be explained with referenc [sic—KTH] to some language already known."—Lowth cor. "And we might imagine, that if verbs had been so contrived as simply to express these, no other tenses would have been needful."—Dr. Blair cor. "To a writer of such a genius as Dean Swift's, the plain style is most admirably fitted."—Id. "Please to excuse my son's absence."—Inst., p. 279. "Bid the boys come in immediately."—Ib.

Page 1834

"Gives us the secrets of his pagan hell,
Where restless ghosts in sad communion dwell."—Crabbe cor.

"Alas! nor faith nor valour now remains;
Sighs are but wind, and I must bear my chains."—Walpole cor.

LESSON VII.—PARTICIPLES.

"Of which the author considers himself, in compiling the present work, as merely laying the foundation-stone."—David Blair cor. "On the raising of such lively and distinct images as are here described."—Kames cor. "They are necessary to the avoiding of ambiguities."—Brightland cor. "There is no neglecting of it without falling into a dangerous error." Or better: "None can neglect it without falling," &c.—Burlamaqui cor. "The contest resembles Don Quixote's fighting of (or with) windmills."—Webster cor. "That these verbs associate with other verbs in all the tenses, is no proof that they have no particular time of their own."—L. Murray cor. "To justify myself in not following the track of the ancient rhetoricians."—Dr. H. Blair cor. "The putting-together of letters, so as to make words, is called Spelling."—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "What is the putting-together of vowels and consonants called?"—Id. "Nobody knows of their charitableness, but themselves." Or: "Nobody knows that they are charitable, but themselves."—Fuller cor. "Payment was at length made, but no reason was assigned for so long a postponement of it."—Murray et al. cor. "Which will bear to be brought into comparison with any composition of the kind."—Dr. Blair cor. "To render vice ridiculous, is to do real service to the world."—Id. "It is a direct copying from nature, a plain rehearsal of what passed, or was supposed to pass, in conversation."—Id. "Propriety of pronunciation consists in giving to every word that sound which the most polite usage of the language appropriates to it."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 200; and again, p. 219. "To occupy the mind, and prevent us from regretting the insipidity of a uniform plain."—Kames cor. "There are a hundred ways in which any thing may happen."—Steele cor. "Tell me, seignior, for what cause (or why) Antonio sent Claudio to Venice yesterday."—Bucke cor. "As you are looking about for an outlet, some rich prospect unexpectedly opens to view."—Kames cor. "A hundred volumes of modern novels may be read without communicating a new idea." Or thus: "A person may read a hundred volumes of modern novels without acquiring a new idea."—Webster cor. "Poetry admits of greater latitude than prose, with respect to the coining, or at least the new compounding, of words."—Dr. Blair cor. "When laws were written on brazen tablets, and enforced by the sword."—Pope cor. "A pronoun, which saves the naming of a person or thing a second time, ought to be placed as near as possible to the name of that person or thing."—Kames cor. "The using of a preposition in this case, is not always a matter of choice."—Id. "To save the multiplying of words, I would be understood to comprehend both circumstances."—Id. "Immoderate grief is mute: complaint is a struggle for consolation."—Id. "On the other hand, the accelerating or the retarding of the natural course, excites a pain."—Id. "Human affairs require the distributing of our attention."—Id. "By neglecting this circumstance, the author of the following example has made it defective in neatness."—Id. "And therefore the suppressing of copulatives must animate a description."—Id. "If the omission of copulatives gives force and liveliness, a redundancy of them must render the period languid."—Id. "It skills not, to ask my leave, said Richard."—Scott cor. "To redeem his credit, he proposed to be sent once more to Sparta."—Goldsmith cor. "Dumas relates that he gave drink to a dog."—Stone cor. "Both are, in a like way, instruments of our reception of such ideas from external objects."—Bp. Butler cor. "In order to your proper handling of such a subject.”—Spect. cor. “For I do not recollect it preceded by an open vowel.”—Knight cor. “Such is the setting up of the form above the power of godliness.”—Barclay cor. “I remember that I was walking once with my young acquaintance.”—Hunt cor. “He did not like to pay a debt.”—Id. “I do not remember to have seen Coleridge when I was a child.”—Id. “In consequence of the dry rot discovered in it, the mansion has undergone a thorough repair.”—Maunder cor. “I would not advise the following of the German system in all its parts.”—Lieber cor. “Would it not be to make the students judges of the professors?”—Id. “Little time should intervene between the proposing of them and the deciding upon them.”—Verthake [sic—KTH] cor. “It would be nothing less than to find fault with the Creator.”—Lit. Journal cor. “That we were once friends, is a powerful reason, both of prudence and of conscience, to restrain us from ever becoming enemies.”—Secker cor. “By using the word as a conjunction, we prevent the ambiguity.”—L. Murray cor.

Page 1835

Page 1836

“He forms his schemes the flood of vice to stem,
But faith in Jesus has no part in them.”—J Taylor cor.

LESSON VIII.—ADVERBS.

“Auxiliaries not only can be inserted, but are really understood.”—Wright cor. “He was afterwards a hired scribbler in the Daily Courant.”—Pope’s Annotator cor. “In gardening, luckily, relative beauty never need stand (or, perhaps better, never needs to stand) in opposition to intrinsic beauty.”—Kames cor. “I much doubt the propriety of the following examples.”—Lowth cor. “And [we see] how far they have spread, in this part of the world, one of the worst languages possible”—Locke cor. “And, in this manner, merely to place him on a level with the beast of the forest.”—R. C. Smith cor. “Whither, ah! whither, has my darling fled.”—Anon. “As for this fellow, we know not whence he is.”—Bible cor. “Ye see then, that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only.”—Id. “The Mixed kind is that in which the poet sometimes speaks in his own person, and sometimes makes other characters speak.”—Adam and Gould cor. “Interrogation is a rhetorical figure in which the writer or orator raises questions, and, if he pleases, returns answers.”—Fisher cor. “Prevention is a figure in which an author starts an objection which he foresees may be made, and gives an answer to it.”—Id. “Will you let me alone, or not?”—W. Walker cor. “Neither man nor woman can resist an engaging exterior.”—Chesterfield cor. "Though the cup be everso clean."—Locke cor. "Seldom, or never, did any one rise to eminence, by being a witty lawyer." Or thus: "Seldom, if ever, has any one risen to eminence, by being a witty lawyer."—Dr. Blair cor. "The second rule which I give, respects the choice of the objects from which metaphors, and other figures, are to be drawn."—Id. "In the figures which it uses, it sets mirrors before us, in which we may behold objects reflected in their likeness."—Id. "Whose business it is, to seek the true measures of right and wrong, and not the arts by which he may avoid doing the one, and secure himself in doing the other."—Locke cor. "The occasions on which you ought to personify things, and those on which you ought not, cannot be stated in any precise rule."—Cobbett cor. "They reflect that they have been much diverted, but scarcely can they say about what."—Kames cor. "The eyebrows and shoulders should seldom or never be remarked by any perceptible motion."—J. Q. Adams cor. "And the left hand or arm should seldom or never attempt any motion by itself."—Id., right. "Not every speaker purposes to please the imagination."—Jamieson cor. "And, like Gallio, they care for none of these things." Or: "And, like Gallio, they care little for any of these things."—S. cor. "They may inadvertently be used where their meaning would be obscure."—L. Murray cor. "Nor can a man make him laugh."—Shak. cor. "The Athenians, in their present distress, scarcely knew whither to turn."—Goldsmith cor. "I do not remember where God ever delivered his oracles by the multitude."—Locke cor. "The object of this government is twofold, outward and inward."—Barclay cor. "In order rightly to understand what we read"—R. Johnson cor. "That a design had been formed, to kidnap or forcibly abduct Morgan."—Col. Stone cor. "But such imposture can never long maintain its ground."—Dr. Blair cor. "But surely it is as possible to apply the principles of reason and good sense to this art, as to any other that is cultivated among men."—Id. "It would have been better for you, to have remained illiterate, and even to have been hewers of wood."—L. Murray cor. "Dissyllables that have two vowels which are separated in the pronunciation, always have the accent on the first syllable."—Id. "And they all turned their backs, almost without drawing a sword." Or: "And they all turned their backs, scarcely venturing to draw a sword."—Kames cor. "The principle of duty naturally takes precedence of every other."—Id. "Not all that glitters, is gold."—Maunder cor. "Whether now, or everso many myriads of ages hence."—Edwards cor.

Page 1837

Page 1838

"England never did, nor ever shall,
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror."—Shak. cor.

LESSON IX.—CONJUNCTIONS.

"He readily comprehends the rules of syntax, their use in the constructing of sentences, and their applicability to the examples before him."—Greenleaf cor. "The works of AEschylus have suffered more by time, than those of any other ancient tragedian."—Dr. Blair cor. "There is much more story, more bustle, and more action, than on the French theatre."—Id. (See Obs. 8th on Rule 16th.) "Such an unremitted anxiety, or such a perpetual application, as engrosses all our time and thoughts, is forbidden."—Jenyns cor. "It seems to be nothing else than the simple form of the adjective."—Wright cor. "But when I talk of reasoning, I do not intend any other than such as is suited to the child's capacity."—Locke cor. "Pronouns have no other use in language, than to represent nouns."—Jamieson cor. "The speculative relied no farther on their own judgement, than to choose a leader, whom they implicitly followed."—Kames cor. "Unaccommodated man is no more than such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art."—Shak. cor. "A Parenthesis is a suggestion which is introduced into the body of a sentence obliquely, and which may be omitted without injuring the grammatical construction."—Mur. et al. cor. "The Caret (marked thus ^) is placed where something that happened to be left out, is to be put into the line."—Id. "When I visit them, they shall be cast down."—Bible cor. "Neither our virtues nor our vices are all our own."—Johnson and Sanborn cor. "I could not give him so early an answer as he had desired."—O. B. Peirce cor. "He is not so tall as his brother."—Nixon cor. "It is difficult to judge whether Lord Byron is serious or not."—Lady Blessington cor. "Some nouns are of both the second and the third declension."—Gould cor. "He was discouraged neither by danger nor by misfortune."—Wells cor. "This is consistent neither with logic nor with history."—Dial cor. "Parts of sentences are either simple or compound."—David Blair cor. "English verse is regulated rather by the number of syllables, than by feet:" or,— "than by the number of feet."—Id. "I know not what more he can do, than pray for him."—Locke cor. "Whilst they are learning, and are applying themselves with attention, they are to be kept in good humour."—Id. "A man cannot have too much of it, nor have it too perfectly."—Id. "That you may so run, as to obtain; and so fight, as to overcome." Or thus: "That you may so run, that you may obtain; and so fight, that you may overcome."—Penn cor. "It is the artifice of some, to contrive false periods of business, that they may seem men of despatch."—Bacon cor. "'A tall man and a woman.' In this phrase, there is no ellipsis; the adjective belongs only to the former noun; the quality respects only the man."—Ash cor. "An abandonment of the policy is neither to be expected nor to be desired."—Jackson cor. "Which can be acquired by no other means than by frequent exercise in speaking."—Dr. Blair cor. "The chief or fundamental rules of syntax are common to the English and the Latin tongue." Or:—"are applicable to the English as well as to the Latin tongue."—Id. "Then I exclaim, either that my antagonist is void of all taste, or that his taste is corrupted in a miserable degree." Or thus: "Then I exclaim, that my antagonist is either void of all taste, or has a taste that is miserably corrupted."—Id. "I cannot pity any one who is under no distress either of body or of mind."—Kames cor. "There was much genius in the world, before there were learning and arts to refine it."—Dr. Blair cor. "Such a writer can have little else to do, than to new-model the paradoxes of ancient scepticism."—Dr. Brown cor. "Our ideas of them being nothing else than collections of the ordinary qualities observed in them."—Duncan cor. "A non-ens, or negative, can give neither pleasure nor pain."—Kames cor. "So that they shall not jostle and embarrass one another."—Dr. Blair cor. "He firmly refused to make use of any other voice than his own."—Murray's Sequel, p. 113. "Your marching regiments, sir, will not make the guards their example, either as soldiers or as subjects."—Junius cor. "Consequently they had neither meaning nor beauty, to any but the natives of each country."—Sheridan cor.

Page 1839

"The man of worth, who has not left his peer,
Is in his narrow house forever darkly laid."—Burns cor.

LESSON X.—PREPOSITIONS.

"These may be carried on progressively beyond any assignable limits."—Kames cor. "To crowd different subjects into a single member of a period, is still worse than to crowd them into one period."—Id. "Nor do we rigidly insist on having melodious prose."—Id. "The aversion we have to those who differ from us."—Id. "For we cannot bear his shifting of the scene at every line."—Halifax cor. "We shall find that we come by it in the same way."—Locke cor. "Against this he has no better defence than that.”—Barnes cor. “Searching the person whom he suspects of having stolen his casket.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Who, as vacancies occur, are elected by the whole Board.”—Lit. Jour. cor. “Almost the only field of ambition for a German, is science.”—Lieber cor. “The plan of education is very different from the one pursued in the sister country.”—Coley cor. “Some writers on grammar have contended, that adjectives sometimes relate to verbs, and modify their action.”—Wilcox cor. “They are therefore of a mixed nature, participating the properties both of pronouns and of adjectives.”—Ingersoll cor. “For there is no authority which can justify the inserting of the aspirate or the doubling of the vowel.”—Knight cor. “The distinction and arrangement of active, passive, and neuter verbs.”—Wright cor. “And see thou a hostile world spread its delusive snares.”—Kirkham cor. “He may be precautioned, and be made to see how those join in the contempt.”—Locke cor. “The contenting of themselves in the present want of what they wished for, is a virtue.”—Id. “If the complaint be about something really worthy of your notice.”—Id. “True fortitude I take to be the quiet possession of a man’s self, and an undisturbed doing of his duty.”—Id. “For the custom of tormenting and killing beasts, will, by degrees, harden their minds even towards men.”—Id. “Children are whipped to it, and made to spend many hours of their precious time uneasily at Latin.”—Id. “On this subject, [the Harmony of Periods,] the ancient rhetoricians have entered into a very minute and particular detail; more particular, indeed, than on any other head that regards language.”—See Blair’s Rhet., p. 122. “But the one should not be omitted, and the other retained.” Or: “But the one should not be used without the other.”—Bullions cor. “From some common forms of speech, the relative pronoun is usually omitted.”—Murray and Weld cor. “There are very many causes which disqualify a witness for being received to testify in particular cases.”—Adams cor. “Aside from all regard to interest, we should expect that,” &c.—Webster cor. “My opinion was given after a rather cursory perusal of the book.”—L. Murray cor. “And, [on] the next day, he was put on board of his ship.” Or thus: “And, the next day, he was put aboard his ship.”—Id. “Having the command of no emotions, but what are raised by sight.”—Kames cor. “Did these moral attributes exist in some other being besides himself.” Or:—“in some other being than himself.”—Wayland cor. “He did not behave in that manner from pride, or [from] contempt of the tribunal.”—Murray’s Sequel, p. 113. “These prosecutions against William seem to have been the most iniquitous measures pursued by the court.”—Murray and Priestley cor. “To restore myself to the good graces of my fair critics.”—Dryden cor. “Objects denominated beautiful, please not by virtue of any one quality common to them all.”—Dr. Blair cor. “This would have been less worthy of notice, had not a writer or two of high rank lately adopted it.”—Churchill cor.

Page 1840

Page 1841

“A Grecian youth, of talents rare,
Whom Plato’s philosophic care,” &c.—WHITEHEAD: E. R., p. 196.

LESSON XI.—PROMISCUOUS.

“To excel has become a much less considerable object.”—Dr. Blair cor. “My robe, and my integrity to Heav’n, are all I dare now call my own.”—Enfield’s Speaker, p. 347. “For thou the garland wearst successively.”—Shak. cor.; also Enfield. “If then thou art a Roman, take it forth.”—Id. “If thou prove this to be real, thou must be a smart lad indeed.”—Neef cor. “And an other bridge of four hundred feet in length.”—Brightland cor. “METONYMY is the putting of one name for an other, on account of the near relation which there is between them.”—Fisher cor. “ANTONOMASIA is the putting of an appellative or common name for a proper name.”—Id. “That it is I, should make no difference in your determination.”—Bullions cor. “The first and second pages are torn.” Or. “The first and the second page are torn.” Or: “The first page and the second are torn.”—Id. “John’s absence from home occasioned the delay.”—Id. “His neglect of opportunities for improvement, was the cause of his disgrace.”—Id. “He will regret his neglect of his opportunities for improvement, when it is too late.”—Id. “His expertness at dancing does not entitle him to our regard.”—Id. “Caesar went back to Rome, to take possession of the public treasure, which his opponent, by a most unaccountable oversight, had neglected to carry away with him.”—Goldsmith cor. “And Caesar took out of the treasury, gold to the amount of three thousand pounds’ weight, besides an immense quantity of silver.” [548]—Id. “Rules and definitions, which should always be as clear and intelligible as possible, are thus rendered obscure.”—Greenleaf cor. “So much both of ability and of merit is seldom found.” Or thus: “So much of both ability and merit is seldom found.” [549]—L. Murray cor. “If such maxims, and such practices prevail, what has become of decency and virtue?” [550]—Murray’s

Page 1842

False Syntax, ii, 62. Or: "If such maxims and practices prevail, what will become of decency and virtue?"—Murray and Bullions cor. "Especially if the subject does not require so much pomp."—Dr. Blair cor. "However, the proper mixture of light and shade in such compositions,—the exact adjustment of all the figurative circumstances with the literal sense,—has ever been found an affair of great nicety."—Blair's Rhet., p. 151. "And adding to that hissing in our language, which is so much noticed by foreigners."—Addison, Coote, and Murray, cor. "To speak impatiently to servants, or to do any thing that betrays unkindness, or ill-humour, is certainly criminal." Or better: "Impatience, unkindness, or ill-humour, is certainly criminal."—Mur. et al. cor. "Here are a fullness and grandeur of expression, well suited to the subject."—Dr. Blair cor. "I single out Strada from among the moderns, because he had the foolish presumption to censure Tacitus."—L. Murray cor. "I single him out from among the moderns, because," &c.—Bolingbroke cor. "This rule is not always observed, even by good writers, so strictly as it ought to be."—Dr. Blair cor. "But this gravity and assurance, which are beyond boyhood, being neither wisdom nor knowledge, do never reach to manhood."—Pope cor. "The regularity and polish even of a turnpike-road, have some influence upon the low people in the neighbourhood."—Kames cor. "They become fond of regularity and neatness; and this improvement of their taste is displayed, first upon their yards and little enclosures, and next within doors."—Id. "The phrase, 'it is impossible to exist,' gives us the idea, that it is impossible for men, or any body, to exist."—Priestley cor. "I'll give a thousand pounds to look upon him."—Shak. cor. "The reader's knowledge, as Dr. Campbell observes, may prevent him from mistaking it."—Crombie and Murray cor. "When two words are set in contrast, or in opposition to each other, they are both emphatic."—L. Murray cor. "The number of the persons—men, women, and children—who were lost in the sea, was very great." Or thus: "The number of persons—men, women, and children—that were lost in the sea, was very great."—Id. "Nor is the resemblance between the primary and the resembling object pointed out."—Jamieson cor. "I think it the best book of the kind, that I have met with."—Mathews cor.

"Why should not we their ancient rites restore,
And be what Rome or Athens was before?"—Roscommon cor.

LESSON XII.—TWO ERRORS.

Page 1843

"It is labour only that gives relish to pleasure."—L. Murray cor. "Groves are never more agreeable than in the opening of spring."—Id. "His Philosophical Inquiry into the Origin of our Ideas of the Sublime and the Beautiful, soon made him known to the literati."—See Blair's Lect., pp. 34 and 45. "An awful precipice or tower from which we look down on the objects which are below."—Dr. Blair cor. "This passage, though very poetical, is, however, harsh and obscure; and for no other cause than this, that three distinct metaphors are crowded together."—Id. "I purpose to make some observations."—Id. "I shall here follow the same method that I have all along pursued."—Id. "Mankind at no other time resemble one an other so much as they do in the beginnings of society."—Id. "But no ear is sensible of the termination of each foot, in the reading of a hexameter line."—Id. "The first thing, says he, that a writer either of fables or of heroic poems does, is, to choose some maxim or point of morality."—Id. "The fourth book has always been most justly admired, and indeed it abounds with beauties of the highest kind."—Id. "There is in the poem no attempt towards the painting of characters."—Id. "But the artificial contrasting of characters, and the constant introducing of them in pairs and by opposites, give too theatrical and affected an air to the piece."—Id. "Neither of them is arbitrary or local."—Kames cor. "If the crowding of figures is bad, it is still worse to graft one figure upon an other."—Id. "The crowding-together of so many objects lessens the pleasure."—Id. "This therefore lies not in the putting-off of the hat, nor in the making of compliments."—Locke cor. "But the Samaritan Vau may have been used, as the Jews used the Chaldaic, both for a vowel and for a consonant."—Wilson cor. "But if a solemn and a familiar pronunciation really exist in our language, is it not the business of a grammarian to mark both?"—J. Walker cor. "By making sounds follow one an other agreeably to certain laws."—Gardiner cor. "If there were no drinking of intoxicating draughts, there could be no drunkards."—Peirce cor. "Socrates knew his own defects, and if he was proud of any thing, it was of being thought to have none."—Goldsmith cor. "Lysander, having brought his army to Ephesus, erected an arsenal for the building of galleys."—Id. "The use of these signs is worthy of remark."—Brightland cor. "He received me in the same manner in which I would receive you." Or thus: "He received me as I would receive you."—R. C. Smith cor. "Consisting of both the direct and the collateral evidence."—Bp. Butler cor. "If any man or woman that believeth hath widows, let him or her relieve them, and let not the church be charged."—Bible cor. "For men's sake are beasts bred."—W. Walker cor. "From three o'clock, there were drinking and gaming."—Id. "Is this he that I am seeking, or not?"—Id. "And for the upholding of every one's own opinion, there is so much ado."—Sewel cor. "Some of them, however, will necessarily be noticed."—Sale cor. "The boys conducted themselves very indiscreetly."—Merchant cor. "Their example, their influence, their fortune,—every talent they possess,—dispenses blessings on all persons around them."—Id. and Murray cor. "The two Reynoldses reciprocally converted each other."—Johnson cor. "The destroying of the last two, Tacitus calls an attack upon virtue itself."—Goldsmith cor. "Moneys are your suit."—Shak. cor. "Ch is commonly sounded like tch, as in church; but in words derived from Greek, it has the sound of k."—L. Murray cor. "When one is obliged to make some utensil serve for purposes to which it was not originally destined."—Campbell cor. "But that a baptism with water is a washing-away of sin, thou canst not hence prove."—Barclay cor. "Being spoken to but one, it infers no universal command."—Id. "For if the laying-aside of copulatives gives force and liveliness, a redundancy of them must render the period languid."—Buchanan cor. "James used to compare him to a cat, which always falls upon her legs."—Adam cor.

Page 1844

"From the low earth aspiring genius springs,
And sails triumphant borne on eagle's wings."—Lloyd cor.

LESSON XIII.—TWO ERRORS

"An ostentatious, a feeble, a harsh, or an obscure style, for instance, is always faulty."—Dr. Blair cor. "Yet in this we find that the English pronounce quite agreeably to rule." Or thus: "Yet in this we find the English pronunciation perfectly agreeable to rule." Or thus: "Yet in this we find that the English pronounce in a manner perfectly agreeable to rule."—J. Walker cor. "But neither the perception of ideas, nor knowledge of any sort, is a habit, though absolutely necessary to the forming of habits."—Bp. Butler cor. "They were cast; and a heavy fine was imposed upon them."—Goldsmith cor. "Without making this reflection, he cannot enter into the spirit of the author, or relish the composition.”—Dr. Blair cor. “The scholar should be instructed in relation to the finding of his words.” Or thus: “The scholar should be told how to find his words.”—Osborn cor. “And therefore they could neither have forged, nor have reversified them.”—Knight cor. “A dispensary is a place at which medicines are dispensed to the poor.”—L. Mur. cor. “Both the connexion and the number of words are determined by general laws.”—Neef cor. “An Anapest has the first two syllables unaccented, and the last one accented; as, c~ontr~av=ene, acquiesce.”—L. Mur. cor. “An explicative sentence is one in which a thing is said, in a direct manner, to be or not to be, to do or not to do, to suffer or not to suffer.”—Lowth and Mur. cor. “BUT is a conjunction whenever it is neither an adverb nor a preposition.” [551]—R. C. Smith cor. “He wrote in the name of King Ahasuerus, and sealed the writing with the king’s ring.”—Bible cor. “Camm and Audland had departed from the town before this time.”—Sewel cor. “Before they will relinquish the practice, they must be convinced.”—Webster cor. “Which he had thrown up before he set out.”—Grimshaw cor. “He left to him the value of a hundred drachms in Persian money.”—Spect cor. “All that the mind can ever contemplate concerning them, must be divided among the three.”—Cardell cor. “Tom Puzzle is one of the most eminent immethodical disputants, of all that have fallen under my observation.”—Spect. cor. “When you have once got him to think himself compensated for his suffering, by the praise which is given him for his courage.”—Locke cor. “In all matters in which simple reason, or mere speculation is concerned.”—Sheridan cor. “And therefore he should be spared from the trouble of attending to anything else than his meaning.”—Id. “It is this kind of phraseology that is distinguished by the epithet idiomatical; a species that was originally the spawn, partly of ignorance, and partly of affectation.”—Campbell and Murray cor. “That neither the inflection nor the letters are such as could have been employed by the ancient inhabitants of Latium.”—Knight cor. “In those cases in which the verb is intended to be applied to any one of the terms.”—L. Murray cor. “But these people who know not the law, are accursed.”—Bible cor. “And the magnitude of the choruses has weight and sublimity.”—Gardiner cor. “Dares he deny that there are some of his fraternity guilty?”—Barclay cor. “Giving an account of most, if not all, of the papers which had passed betwixt them.”—Id. “In this manner, as to both parsing and correcting, should all the rules of syntax be treated, being taken up regularly according to their order.”—L. Murray cor. “To Ovando were allowed a brilliant retinue and a body-guard.”—Sketch cor. “Was it I or he, that you requested to go?”—Kirkham cor. “Let thee and me go on.”—Bunyan cor. “This I nowhere affirmed; and I do wholly deny it.”—Barclay cor. “But that I deny; and it remains for him to prove it.”—Id. “Our country sinks beneath the yoke: She weeps, she bleeds, and each new day a gash is added to her wounds.”—Shak. cor. “Thou art the Lord who chose Abraham and brought him forth out of Ur of the Chaldees.”—Bible and Mur. cor. “He is the exhaustless fountain, from which emanate all these attributes that exist throughout this wide creation.”—Wayland cor. “I am he who has communed with the son of Neocles; I am he who has entered the gardens of pleasure.”—Wright cor.

Page 1845

Page 1846

“*Such were in ancient times the tales received,
Such by our good forefathers were believed.*”—Rowe cor.

LESSON XIV.—TWO ERRORS.

“The noun or pronoun that stands before the active verb, usually represents the agent.”—A. Murray cor. “Such seem to have been the musings of our hero of the grammar-quill, when he penned the first part of his grammar.”—Merchant cor. “Two dots, the one placed above the other [:], are called Sheva, and are used to represent a very short e.”—Wilson cor. “Great have been, and are, the obscurity and difficulty, in the nature and application of them” [i.e.—of natural remedies].—Butler cor. “As two are to four, so are four to eight.”—Everest cor. “The invention and use of arithmetic, reach back to a period so remote, as to be beyond the knowledge of history.”—Robertson cor. “What it presents as objects of contemplation or enjoyment, fill and satisfy his mind.”—Id. “If he dares not say they are, as I know he dares not, how must I then distinguish?”—Barclay cor. “He had now grown so fond of solitude, that all company had become uneasy to him.”—Life of Cic. cor. “Violence and spoil are heard in her; before me continually are grief and wounds.”—Bible cor. “Bayle’s Intelligence from the Republic of Letters, which makes eleven volumes in duodecimo, is truly a model in this kind.”—Formey cor. “Pauses, to be rendered pleasing and expressive, must not only be made in the right place, but also be accompanied with a proper tone of voice.”—L. Murray cor. “To oppose the opinions and rectify the mistakes of others, is what truth and sincerity sometimes require of us.”—Locke cor. “It is very probable, that this assembly was called, to clear some doubt which the king had, whether it were lawful for the Hollanders to throw off the monarchy of Spain, and withdraw entirely their allegiance to that crown.” Or:—“About the lawfulness of the Hollanders’ rejection of the monarchy of Spain, and entire withdrawalment of their allegiance to that crown.”—L. Murray cor. “A naming of the numbers and cases of a noun in their order, is called the declining of it, or its declension.”—Frost cor. “The embodying of them is, therefore, only a collecting of such component parts of words.”—Town cor. “The one is the voice heard when Christ was baptized; the other, when he was transfigured.”—Barclay cor. “An understanding of the literal sense”—or, “To have understood the literal sense, would not have prevented them from condemning the guiltless.”—Bp. Butler cor. “As if this were, to take the execution of justice out of the hands of God, and to give it to nature.”—Id. “They will say, you must conceal this good opinion of yourself; which yet is an allowing of the thing, though not of the showing of it.” Or:—“which yet is, to allow the thing, though not the showing of it.”—Sheffield cor. “So as to signify not only the doing of an action, but the causing of it to be done.”—Pike cor. “This, certainly, was both a dividing of the unity of God, and a limiting of his immensity.”—Calvin cor. “Tones being infinite in number, and varying in almost every individual, the arranging of them under distinct heads, and the reducing of them to any fixed and permanent rules, may be considered as the last refinement in language.”—Knight cor. “The fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he hath done it, and until he hath performed the intents of his heart.”—Bible cor. “We seek for deeds more illustrious and heroic, for events more diversified and surprising.”—Dr. Blair cor. “We distinguish the genders, or the male and the female sex, in four different ways.”—Buchanan cor. “Thus, ch and g are ever hard. It is therefore proper to retain these sounds in those Hebrew names which have not been modernized, or changed by public use.”—Dr. Wilson cor. “A Substantive, or Noun, is the name of any thing which is conceived to subsist, or of which we have any notion.”—Murray and Lowth cor. “A Noun is the name of any thing which exists, or of which we have, or can form, an idea.”—Maunder cor. “A Noun is the name of any thing in existence, or of any thing of which we can form an idea.”—Id. “The next thing to be attended to, is, to keep him exactly to the speaking of truth.”—Locke cor. “The material, the vegetable, and the animal world, receive this influence according to their several capacities.”—Dial cor. “And yet it is fairly defensible on the principles of the schoolmen; if those things can be called principles, which consist merely in words.”—Campbell cor.

Page 1847

Page 1848

“Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness,
And fearst to die? Famine is in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression starve in thy sunk eyes.”—Shak. cor.

LESSON XV.—THREE ERRORS.

“The silver age is reckoned to have commenced at the death of Augustus, and to have continued till the end of Trajan’s reign.”—Gould cor. “Language has indeed become, in modern times, more correct, and more determinate.”—Dr. Blair cor. “It is evident, that those words are the most agreeable to the ear, which are composed of smooth and liquid sounds, and in which there is a proper intermixture of vowels and consonants.”—Id. “It would have had no other effect, than to add to the sentence an unnecessary word.”—Id. “But as rumours arose, that the judges had been corrupted by money in this cause, these gave occasion to much popular clamour, and threw a heavy odium on Cluentius.”—Id. “A Participle is derived from a verb, and partakes of the nature both of the verb and of an adjective.”—Ash and Devis cor. “I shall have learned my grammar before you will have learned yours.”—Wilbur and Livingston cor. “There is no other earthly object capable of making so various and so forcible impressions upon the human mind, as a complete speaker.”—Perry cor. “It was not the carrying of the bag, that made Judas a thief and a hireling.”—South cor. “As the reasonable soul and the flesh are one man, so God and man are one Christ.”—Creed cor. “And I will say to them who were not my people, Ye are my people; and they shall say, Thou art our God.”—Bible cor. “Where there is in the sense nothing that requires the last sound to be elevated or suspended, an easy fall, sufficient to show that the sense is finished, will be proper.”—L. Mur. cor. “Each party produce words in which the letter a is sounded in the manner for which they contend.”—J. Walker cor. “To countenance persons that are guilty of bad actions, is scarcely one remove from an actual commission of the same crimes.”—L. Mur. cor. “To countenance persons that are guilty of bad actions,’ is a phrase or clause which is made the subject of the verb ‘is.’”—Id. “What is called the splitting of particles,—that is, the separating of a preposition from the noun which it governs, is always to be avoided.”—Dr. Blair et al. cor. (See Obs. 15th on Rule 23d.) “There is properly but one pause, or rest, in the sentence; and this falls betwixt the two members into which the sentence is divided.”—Id. “To go barefoot, does not at all help a man on, in the way to heaven.”—Steele cor. “There is nobody who does not condemn this in others, though many overlook it in themselves.”—Locke cor. “Be careful not to use the same word in the same sentence either too frequently or in different senses.”—L. Murray cor. “Nothing could have made her more unhappy, than to have married a man of such principles.”—Id. “A warlike, various, and tragical age is the best to write of, but the worst to write in.”—Cowley cor. “When thou instancest Peter’s babtizing [sic—KTH] of Cornelius.”—Barclay cor. “To introduce two or more leading thoughts or topics, which have no natural affinity or mutual dependence.”—L. Murray cor. “Animals, again, are fitted to one an other, and to the elements or regions in which they live, and to which they are as appendices.”—Id. “This melody, however, or so frequent varying of the sound of each word, is a proof of nothing, but of the fine ear of that people.”—Jamieson cor. “They can, each in its turn, be used upon occasion.”—Duncan cor. “In this reign, lived the poets Gower and Chaucer, who are the first authors that can properly be said to have written English.”—Bucke cor. “In translating expressions of this kind, consider the [phrase] ‘it is’ as if it were they are.”—W. Walker cor. “The chin has an important office to perform; for, by the degree of its activity, we disclose either a polite or a vulgar pronunciation.”—Gardiner cor. “For no other reason, than that he was found in bad company.”—Webster cor. “It is usual to compare them after the manner of polysyllables.”—Priestley cor. “The infinitive mood is recognized more easily than any other, because the preposition TO precedes it.”—Bucke cor. “Prepositions, you recollect, connect words, and so do conjunctions: how, then, can you tell a conjunction from a preposition?” Or:—“how, then, can you distinguish the former from the latter?”—R. C. Smith cor.

Page 1849

Page 1850

"No kind of work requires a nicer touch,
And, this well finish'd, none else shines so much."
—Sheffield cor.

LESSON XVI.—THREE ERRORS.

"On many occasions, it is the final pause alone, that marks the difference between prose and verse: this will be evident from the following arrangement of a few poetical lines."—L. Murray cor. "I shall do all I can to persuade others to take for their cure the same measures that I have taken for mine."—Guardian cor.; also Murray. "It is the nature of extreme self-lovers, that they will set a house on fire, as it were, but to roast their eggs."—Bacon cor. "Did ever man struggle more earnestly in a cause in which both his honour and his life were concerned?"—Duncan cor. "So the rests, or pauses, which separate sentences or their parts, are marked by points."—Lowth cor. "Yet the case and mood are not influenced by them, but are determined by the nature of the sentence."—Id. "Through inattention to this rule, many errors have been committed: several of which are here subjoined, as a further caution and direction to the learner."—L. Murray cor. "Though thou clothe thyself with crimson, though thou deck thee with ornaments of gold, though thou polish thy face with painting, in vain shalt thou make thyself fair." [552]—Bible cor. "But that the doing of good to others, will make us happy, is not so evident; the feeding of the hungry, for example, or the clothing of the naked." Or: "But that, to do good to others, will make us happy, is not so evident; to feed the hungry, for example, or to clothe the naked."—Kames cor. "There is no other God than he, no other light than his." Or: "There is no God but he, no light but his."—Penn cor. "How little reason is there to wonder, that a powerful and accomplished orator should be one of the characters that are most rarely found."—Dr. Blair cor. "Because they express neither the doing nor the receiving of an action."—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "To find the answers, will require an effort of mind; and, when right answers are given, they will be the result of reflection, and show that the subject is understood."—Id. "'The sun rises,' is an expression trite and common; but the same idea becomes a magnificent image, when expressed in the language of Mr. Thomson."—Dr. Blair cor. "The declining of a word is the giving of its different endings." Or: "To decline a word, is to give it different endings."—Ware

Page 1851

cor. "And so much are they for allowing every one to follow his own mind."—Barclay cor. "More than one overture for peace were made, but Cleon prevented them from taking effect."—Goldsmith cor. "Neither in English, nor in any other language, is this word, or that which corresponds to it in meaning, any more an article, than TWO, THREE, or FOUR."—Webster cor. "But the most irksome conversation of all that I have met with in the neighbourhood, has been with two or three of your travellers."—Spect. cor. "Set down the first two terms of the supposition, one under the other, in the first place."—Smiley cor. "It is a useful practice too, to fix one's eye on some of the most distant persons in the assembly."—Dr. Blair cor. "He will generally please his hearers most, when to please them is not his sole or his chief aim."—Id. "At length, the consuls return to the camp, and inform the soldiers, that they could obtain for them no other terms than those of surrendering their arms and passing under the yoke."—Id. "Nor are mankind so much to blame, in their choice thus determining them."—Swift cor. "These forms are what are called the Numbers." Or: "These forms are called Numbers."—Fosdick cor. "In those languages which admit but two genders, all nouns are either masculine or feminine, even though they designate beings that are neither male nor female."—Id. "It is called Verb or Word by way of eminence, because it is the most essential word in a sentence, and one without which the other parts of speech cannot form any complete sense."—Gould cor. "The sentence will consist of two members, and these will commonly be separated from each other by a comma."—Jamieson cor. "Loud and soft in speaking are like the forte and piano in music; they only refer to the different degrees of force used in the same key: whereas high and low imply a change of key."—Sheridan cor. "They are chiefly three: the acquisition of knowledge; the assisting of the memory to treasure up this knowledge; and the communicating of it to others."—Id.

"This kind of knaves I know, who in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and hide corrupter ends,
Than twenty silly ducking observants."—Shak. cor.

LESSON XVII.—MANY ERRORS.

Page 1852

"A man will be forgiven, even for great errors, committed in a foreign language; but, in the use he makes of his own, even the least slips are justly pointed out and ridiculed."—Amer. Chesterfield cor. "LET expresses not only permission, but entreaty, exhortation, and command."—Lowth cor.; also Murray, et al. "That death which is our leaving of this world, is nothing else than the putting-off of these bodies."—Sherlock cor. "They differ from the saints recorded in either the Old or the New Testament."—Newton cor. "The nature of relation, therefore, consists in the referring or comparing of two things to each other; from which comparison, one or both come to be denominated."—Locke cor. "It is not credible, that there is any one who will say, that through the whole course of his life he has kept himself entirely undefiled, without the least spot or stain of sin."—Witsius cor. "If to act conformably to the will of our Creator,—if to promote the welfare of mankind around us,—if to secure our own happiness, is an object of the highest moment; then are we loudly called upon to cultivate and extend the great interests of religion and virtue." Or: "If, to act conformably to the will of our Creator, to promote the welfare of mankind around us, and to secure our own happiness, are objects of the highest moment; then," &c.—Murray et al. cor. "The verb being in the plural number, it is supposed, that the officer and his guard are joint agents. But this is not the case: the only nominative to the verb is 'officer.' In the expression, 'with his guard,' the noun 'guard' is in the objective case, being governed by the preposition with; and consequently it cannot form the nominative, or any part of it. The prominent subject for the agreement, the true nominative to the verb, or the term to which the verb peculiarly refers, is the word 'officer.'"—L. Murray cor. "This is an other use, that, in my opinion, contributes to make a man learned rather than wise; and is incapable of pleasing either the understanding or the imagination."—Addison cor. "The work is a dull performance; and is incapable of pleasing either the understanding or the imagination."—L. Murray cor. "I would recommend the 'Elements of English Grammar,' by Mr. Frost. The plan of this little work is similar to that of Mr. L. Murray's smallest Grammar; but, in order to meet the understanding of children, its definitions and language are simplified, so far as the nature of the subject will admit. It also embraces more examples for Parsing, than are usual in elementary treatises."—S.

Page 1853

R. Hall cor. "More rain falls in the first two summer months, than in the first two months of winter; but what falls, makes a much greater show upon the earth, in winter than in summer, because there is a much slower evaporation."—L. Murray cor. "They often contribute also to render some persons prosperous, though wicked; and, what is still worse, to reward some actions, though vicious; and punish other actions, though virtuous."—Bp. Butler cor. "Hence, to such a man, arise naturally a secret satisfaction, a sense of security, and an implicit hope of somewhat further."—Id. "So much for the third and last cause of illusion, that was noticed above; which arises from the abuse of very general and abstract terms; and which is the principal source of the abundant nonsense that has been vented by metaphysicians, mystagogues, and theologians."—Campbell cor. "As to those animals which are less common, or which, on account of the places they inhabit, fall less under our observation, as fishes and birds, or which their diminutive size removes still further from our observation, we generally, in English, employ a single noun to designate both genders, the masculine and the feminine."—Fosdick cor. "Adjectives may always be distinguished by their relation to other words: they express the quality, condition, or number, of whatever things are mentioned."—Emmons cor. "An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner."—Brown's Inst., p. 29. "The joining-together of two objects, so grand, and the representing of them both, as subject at one moment to the command of God, produce a noble effect."—Dr. Blair cor. "Twisted columns, for instance, are undoubtedly ornamental; but, as they have an appearance of weakness, they displease the eye, whenever they are used to support any massy part of a building, or what seems to require a more substantial prop."—Id. "In a vast number of inscriptions, some upon rocks, some upon stones of a defined shape, is found an Alphabet different from the Greeks', the Latins', and the Hebrews', and also unlike that of any modern nation."—W. C. Fowler cor.

LESSON XVIII.—MANY ERRORS.

Page 1854

"The empire of Blefuscu is an island situated on the northeast side of Lilliput, from which it is parted by a channel of only 800 yards in width."—Swift and Kames cor. "The nominative case usually denotes the agent or doer; and any noun or pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, is always in this case."—R. C. Smith cor. "There are, in his allegorical personages, an originality, a richness, and a variety, which almost vie with the splendours of the ancient mythology."—Hazlitt cor. "As neither the Jewish nor the Christian revelation has been universal, and as each has been afforded to a greater or a less part of the world at different times; so likewise, at different times, both revelations have had different degrees of evidence."—Bp. Butler cor. "Thus we see, that, to kill a man with a sword, and to kill one with a hatchet, are looked upon as no distinct species of action; but, if the point of the sword first enter the body, the action passes for a distinct species, called stabbing."—Locke cor. "If a soul sin, and commit a trespass against the Lord, and lie unto his neighbour concerning that which was delivered him to keep, or deceive his neighbour, or find that which was lost, and lie concerning it, and swear falsely; in any of all these that a man doeth, sinning therein, then it shall be," &c. —Bible cor. "As, to do and teach the commandments of God, is the great proof of virtue; so, to break them, and to teach others to break them, are the great proofs of vice."—Wayland cor. "The latter simile, in Pope's terrific maltreatment of it, is true neither to the mind nor to the eye."—Coleridge cor. "And the two brothers were seen, transported with rage and fury, like Eteocles and Polynices, each endeavouring to plunge his sword into the other's heart, and to assure himself of the throne by the death of his rival."—Goldsmith cor. "Is it not plain, therefore, that neither the castle, nor the planet, nor the cloud, which you here see, is that real one which you suppose to exist at a distance?"—Berkley cor. "I have often wondered, how it comes to pass, that every body should love himself best, and yet value his neighbours' opinion about himself more than his own."—Collier cor. "Virtue, ([Greek: Aretae], Virtus,) as well as most of its species, when sex is figuratively ascribed to it, is made feminine, perhaps from its beauty and amiable appearance."—Harris cor. "Virtue, with most of its species, is made feminine when personified; and so is Vice, perhaps for being Virtue's opposite.”—Brit. Gram. cor.; also Buchanan. “From this deduction, it may easily be seen, how it comes to pass, that personification makes so great a figure in all compositions in which imagination or passion has any concern.”—Dr. Blair cor. “An Article is a word placed before a noun, to point it out as such, and to show how far its signification extends.”—Folker cor. “All men have certain natural, essential, and inherent rights;—among which are the rights of enjoying and defending life and liberty; of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; and, in a word, of seeking and obtaining happiness.”—Const. of N. H. cor. “From those grammarians who form their ideas and make their decisions, respecting this part of English grammar, from the principles and construction of other languages,—of languages which do not in these points accord with our own, but which differ considerably from it,—we may naturally expect grammatical schemes that will be neither perspicuous nor consistent, and that will tend rather to perplex than to inform the learner.”—Murray and Hall cor. “Indeed there are but very few who know how to be idle and innocent, or who have a relish for any pleasures that are not criminal; every diversion which the majority take, is at the expense of some one virtue or other, and their very first step out of business is into vice or folly.”—Addison cor.

Page 1855

“Hail, holy Love! thou bliss that sumst all bliss!
Giv’st and receiv’st all bliss; fullest when most Thou giv’st; spring-head of all felicity!”—Pollok cor.

CHAPTER XIII—GENERAL RULE.

CORRECTIONS UNDER THE GENERAL RULE.

LESSON I.—ARTICLES.

(1.) “The article is a part of speech placed before nouns.” Or thus: “An article is a word placed before nouns.”—Comly cor. (2.) “The article is a part of speech used to limit nouns.”—Gilbert cor. (3.) “An article is a word set before nouns to fix their vague signification.”—Ash cor. (4.) “The adjective is a part of speech used to describe something named by a noun.”—Gilbert cor. (5.) “A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun.”—Id. and Weld cor.: Inst., p. 45. (6.) “The pronoun is a part of speech which is often used in stead of a noun.”—Brit. Gram. and Buchanan cor. (7.) “A verb is a word which signifies to be, to do, or to be acted upon.”—Merchant cor. (8.) “The verb is a part of speech which signifies to be, to act, or to receive an action.”—Comly cor. (9.) “The verb is the part of speech by which any thing is asserted.”—Weld cor. (10.) “The verb is a part of speech, which expresses action or existence in a direct manner.”—Gilbert cor. (11.) “A participle is a word derived from a verb, and expresses action or existence in an indirect manner.”—Id. (12.) “The participle is a part of speech derived from the verb, and denotes being, doing, or suffering, and implies time, as a verb does.”—Brit. Gram. and Buchanan cor. (13.) “The adverb is a part of speech used to add some modification to the meaning of verbs, adjectives, and participles.”—Gilbert cor. (14.) “An adverb is an indeclinable word added to a verb, [a participle,] an adjective, or an other adverb, to express some circumstance, accident, or manner of its signification.”—Adam and Gould cor. (15.) “An adverb is a word added to a verb, an adjective, a participle, or an other adverb, to express the circumstance of time, place, degree, or manner.”—Dr. Ash cor. (16.) “An adverb is a word added to a verb, an adjective, a participle, or, sometimes, an other adverb, to express some circumstance respecting the sense.”—Beck cor. (17.) “The adverb is a part of speech, which is added to verbs, adjectives, participles, or to other adverbs, to express some modification or circumstance, quality or manner, of their signification.”—Buchanan cor. (18.) “The adverb is a part of speech which we add to the verb, (whence the name,) to the adjective or participle likewise, and sometimes even to an other adverb.”—Bucke cor. (19.) “A conjunction is a word used to connect words or sentences.”—Gilbert and Weld cor. (20.) “The conjunction is a part of speech that joins words or sentences together.”—Ash cor. (21.) “The conjunction is that part of speech which connects sentences, or parts of sentences, or single words.”—D. Blair cor. (22.) “The conjunction is a part of speech that is used principally to connect sentences, so as, out of two, three, or more sentences, to make one.”—Bucke cor. (23.) “The conjunction is a part of speech that is used to connect words or sentences together; but, chiefly, to join simple sentences into such as are compound.”—Kirkham cor. (24.) “A conjunction is a word which joins words or sentences together, and shows the manner of their dependence, as they stand in connexion.”—Brit. Gram. et al. cor. (25.) “A preposition is a word used to show the relation between other words, and govern the subsequent term.”—Gilbert cor. (26.) “A preposition is a governing word which serves to connect other words, and to show the relation between them.”—Frost cor. (27.) “A preposition is a governing particle used to connect words and show their relation.”—Weld cor. (28.) “The preposition is that part of speech which shows the various positions of persons or things, and the consequent relations that certain words bear toward one an other.”—David Blair cor. (29.) “The preposition is a part of speech, which, being added to certain other parts of speech, serves to show their state of relation, or their reference to each other.”—Brit. Gram. and Buchanan cor. (30.) “The interjection is a part of speech used to express sudden passion or strong emotion.”—Gilbert cor. (31.) “An interjection is an unconnected word used in giving utterance to some sudden feeling or strong emotion.”—Weld cor. (32.) “The interjection is that part of speech which denotes any sudden affection or strong emotion of the mind.”—David Blair cor. (33.) “An interjection is an independent word or sound thrown into discourse, and denotes some sudden passion or strong emotion of the soul.”—Brit. Gram. and Buchanan cor.

Page 1856

Page 1857

(34.) “The scene might tempt some peaceful sage
To rear a lonely hermitage.”—Gent. of Aberdeen cor.

(35.) “Not all the storms that shake the pole,
Can e’er disturb thy halcyon soul,
And smooth unalter’d brow.”—Barbauld’s Poems, p. 42.

LESSON II.—NOUNS.

“The throne of every monarchy felt the shock.”—Frelinghuysen cor. “These principles ought to be deeply impressed upon the mind of every American.”—Dr. N. Webster cor. “The words CHURCH and SHIRE are radically the same.”—Id. “They may not, in their present form, be readily accommodated to every circumstance belonging to the possessive case of nouns.”—L. Murray cor. “Will, in the second and third persons, only foretells.”—Id.; Lowth’s Gram., p. 41. “Which seem to form the true distinction between the subjunctive and the indicative mood.”—L. Murray cor. “The very general approbation which this performance of Walker’s has received from the public.”—Id. “Lest she carry her improvements of this kind too far.” Or thus: “Lest she carry her improvements in this way too far.”—Id. and Campbell cor. “Charles was extravagant, and by his prodigality became poor and despicable.”—L. Murray cor. “We should entertain no prejudice against simple and rustic persons.”—Id. “These are indeed the foundation of all solid merit.”—Dr. Blair cor. “And his embellishment, by means of figures, musical cadences, or other ornaments of speech.”—Id. “If he is at no pains to engage us by the employment of figures, musical arrangement, or any other ornament of style.”—Id. “The most eminent of the sacred poets, are, David, Isaiah, and the author of the Book of Job.”—Id. “Nothing in any poem, is more beautifully described than the death of old Priam.”—Id. “When two vowels meet together, and are joined in one syllable, they are called a diphthong.”—Inf. S. Gram. cor. “How many Esses would goodness’ then end with? Three; as goodness’s.”—Id. “Birds is a noun; it is the common name of feathered animals.”—Kirkham cor. “Adam gave names to all living creatures.” Or thus: “Adam gave a name to every living creature.”—Bicknell cor. “The steps of a flight of stairs ought to be accommodated to the human figure.” Or thus: “Stairs ought to be accommodated to the ease of the users.”—Kames cor. “Nor ought an emblem, more than a simile, to be founded on a low or familiar object.”—Id. “Whatever the Latin has not from the Greek, it has from the Gothic.”—Tooke cor. “The mint, and the office of the secretary of state, are neat buildings.”—The Friend cor. “The scenes of dead and still existence are apt to pall upon us.”—Blair cor. “And Thomas Aquinas and Duns Scotus, the angelical doctor and the subtle, are the brightest stars in the scholastic constellation.”—Lit. Hist. cor. “The English language has three methods of distinguishing the sexes.”—Murray et al. cor.; also R. C. Smith. “In English, there are the three following methods of distinguishing the sexes.”—Jaudon cor. “There are three ways of distinguishing the sexes.”—Lennie et al. cor.; also Merchant. “The sexes are distinguished in three ways.”—Maunder cor. “Neither discourse in general, nor poetry in particular, can be called altogether an imitative art.”—Dr. Blair cor.

Page 1858

“Do we for this the gods and conscience brave,
That one may rule and all the rest enslave?”—Rowe cor.

LESSON III.—ADJECTIVES.

“There is a deal more of heads, than of either heart or horns.”—Barclay cor. “For, of all villains, I think he has the most improper name.”—Bunyan cor. “Of all the men that I met in my pilgrimage, he, I think, bears the wrongest name.”—Id. “I am surprised to see so much of the distribution, and so many of the technical terms, of the Latin grammar, retained in the grammar of our tongue.”—Priestley cor. “Nor did the Duke of Burgundy bring him any assistance.”—Hume and Priestley cor. “Else he will find it difficult to make an obstinate person believe him.”—Brightland cor. “Are there any adjectives which form the degrees of comparison in a manner peculiar to themselves?”—Inf. S. Gram. cor. “Yet all the verbs are of the indicative mood.”—Lowth cor. “The word candidate is absolute, in the nominative case.”—L. Murray cor. “An iambus has the first syllable unaccented, and the last accented.”—L. Murray, D. Blair, Jamieson, Kirkham, Bullions, Guy, Merchant, and others. “A Dactyl has the first syllable accented, and the last two [syllables] unaccented.”—Murray et al. cor. “It is proper to begin with a capital the first word of every book, chapter, letter, note, or[553] other piece of writing.”—Jaudon’s Gram., p. 195; John Flint’s, 105. “Five and seven make twelve, and one more makes thirteen.”—L. Murray cor. “I wish to cultivate a nearer acquaintance with you.”—Id. “Let us consider the means which are proper to effect our purpose.” Or thus: “Let us consider what means are proper to effect our purpose.”—Id. “Yet they are of so similar a nature as readily to mix and blend.”—Dr. Blair cor. “The Latin is formed on the same model, but is more imperfect.”—Id. “I know very well how great pains have been taken.” Or thus: “I know very well how much care has been taken.”—Temple cor. “The management of the breath requires a great deal of care.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Because the mind, during such a momentary stupefaction, is, in a great measure, if not totally, insensible.”—Kames cor. “Motives of reason and interest alone are not sufficient.”—Id. “To render the composition distinct in its parts, and on the whole impressive.”—Id. “A and an are named the Indefinite article, because they denote indifferently any one thing of a kind.”—Maunder cor. “The is named the Definite article, because it points out some particular thing or things.”—Id. “So much depends upon the proper construction of sentences, that, in any sort of composition, we cannot be too strict in our attention to it.” Or:—“that, in every sort of composition, we ought to be very strict in our attention to it.” Or:—“that, in no sort of composition, can we be too strict,” &c.—Dr. Blair cor. “Every sort of declamation and public speaking was carried on by them.” Or thus: “All sorts of declamation and public speaking, were carried on by them.”—Id. “The former has, on many occasions, a sublimity to which the latter never attains.”—Id. “When the words, therefore, consequently, accordingly, and the like, are used in connexion with conjunctions, they are adverbs.”—Kirkham cor. "Rude nations make few or no allusions to the productions of the arts."—Jamieson cor. "While two of her maids knelt on each side of her." Or, if there were only two maids kneeling, and not four: "While two of her maids knelt one on each side of her."—Mirror cor. "The personal pronouns of the third person, differ from one an other in meaning and use, as follows."—Bullions cor. "It was happy for the state, that Fabius continued in the command with Minutius: the phlegm of the former was a check on the vivacity of the latter."—L. Murray and others cor.: see Maunder's Gram., p. 4. "If it be objected, that the words must and ought, in the preceding sentences, are both in the present tense." Or thus: "If it be objected, that in all the preceding sentences the words must and ought are in the present tense."—L. Murray cor. "But it will be well, if you turn to them now and then." Or:—"if you turn to them occasionally."—Bucke cor. "That every part should have a dependence on, and mutually contribute to support, every other."—Rollin cor. "The phrase, 'Good, my lord,' is not common, and is low." Or:—"is uncommon, and low."—Priestley cor.

Page 1859

Page 1860

"That brother should not war with brother,
And one devour or vex an other."—Cowper cor.

LESSON IV.—PRONOUNS.

"If I can contribute to our country's glory." Or:—"to your glory and that of my country."—Goldsmith cor. "As likewise of the several subjects, which have in effect each its verb."—Lowth cor. "He is likewise required to make examples for himself." Or: "He himself is likewise required to make examples."—J. Flint cor. "If the emphasis be placed wrong, it will pervert and confound the meaning wholly." Or: "If the emphasis be placed wrong, the meaning will be perverted and confounded wholly." Or: "If we place the emphasis wrong, we pervert and confound the meaning wholly."—L. Murray cor.; also Dr. Blair. "It was this, that characterized the great men of antiquity; it is this, that must distinguish the moderns who would tread in their steps."—Dr. Blair cor. "I am a great enemy to implicit faith, as well the Popish as the Presbyterian; for, in that, the Papists and the Presbyterians are very much alike."—Barclay cor. "Will he thence dare to say, the apostle held an other Christ than him that died?"—Id. "Why need you be anxious about this event?" Or: "What need have you to be anxious about this event?"—Collier cor. "If a substantive can be placed after the verb, the latter is active."—A.

Page 1861

Murray cor. "To see bad men honoured and prosperous in the world, is some discouragement to virtue." Or: "It is some discouragement to virtue, to see bad men," &c.—L. Murray cor. "It is a happiness to young persons, to be preserved from the snares of the world, as in a garden enclosed."—Id. "At the court of Queen Elizabeth, where all was prudence and economy."—Bullions cor. "It is no wonder, if such a man did not shine at the court of Queen Elizabeth, who was so remarkable for her prudence and economy."—Priestley, Murray, et al cor. "A defective verb is a verb that wants some parts. The defective verbs are chiefly the auxiliaries and the impersonal verbs."—Bullions cor. "Some writers have given to the moods a much greater extent than I have assigned to them."—L. Murray cor. "The personal pronouns give such information as no other words are capable of conveying."—M'Culloch cor. "When the article a, an, or the, precedes the participle, the latter also becomes a noun."—Merchant cor. "To some of these, there is a preference to be given, which custom and judgement must determine."—L. Murray cor. "Many writers affect to subjoin to any word the preposition with which it is compounded, or that of which it literally implies the idea."—Id. and Priestley cor.

"Say, dost thou know Vectidius? Whom, the wretch Whose lands beyond the Sabines largely stretch?"—Dryden cor.

LESSON V.—VERBS.

"We should naturally expect, that the word depend would require from after it."—Priestley's Gram., p. 158. "A dish which they pretend is made of emerald."—L. Murray cor. "For the very nature of a sentence implies that one proposition is expressed."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 311. "Without a careful attention to the sense, we should be naturally led, by the rules of syntax, to refer it to the rising and setting of the sun."—Dr. Blair cor. "For any rules that can be given, on this subject, must be very general."—Id. "He would be in the right, if eloquence were what he conceives it to be."—Id. "There I should prefer a more free and diffuse manner."—Id. "Yet that they also resembled one another, and agreed in certain qualities."—Id. "But, since he must restore her, he insists on having an other in her place."—Id. "But these are far from being so frequent, or so common, as they have been supposed to be."—Id. "We are not led to assign a wrong place to the pleasant or the painful feelings."—Kames cor. "Which are of greater importance than they are commonly thought."—Id.

Page 1862

"Since these qualities are both coarse and common, let us find out the mark of a man of probity."—Collier cor. "Cicero did what no man had ever done before him; he drew up a treatise of consolation for himself."—Biographer cor. "Then there can remain no other doubt of the truth."—Brightland cor. "I have observed that some satirists use the term." Or: "I have observed some satirists to use the term."—Bullions cor. "Such men are ready to despond, or to become enemies."—Webster cor. "Common nouns are names common to many things."—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "To make ourselves heard by one to whom we address ourselves."—Dr. Blair cor. "That, in reading poetry, he may be the better able to judge of its correctness, and may relish its beauties." Or:—"and to relish its beauties."—L. Murray cor. "On the stretch to keep pace with the author, and comprehend his meaning."—Dr. Blair cor. "For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and the money have been given to the poor."—Bible cor. "He is a beam that has departed, and has left no streak of light behind."—Ossian cor. "No part of this incident ought to have been represented, but the whole should have been reserved for a narrative."—Kames cor. "The rulers and people debauching themselves, a country is brought to ruin." Or: "When the rulers and people debauch themselves, they bring ruin on a country."—Ware cor. "When a title, (as Doctor, Miss, Master, &c.) is prefixed to a name, the latter only, of the two words, is commonly varied to form the plural; as, 'The Doctor Nettletons,'—'The two Miss Hudsons.'"—A. Murray cor. "Wherefore that field has been called, 'The Field of Blood,' unto this day."—Bible cor. "To comprehend the situations of other countries, which perhaps it may be necessary for him to explore."—Dr. Brown cor. "We content ourselves now with fewer conjunctive particles than our ancestors used."—Priestley cor. "And who will be chiefly liable to make mistakes where others have erred before them."—Id. "The voice of nature and that of revelation unite." Or: "Revelation and the voice of nature unite." Or: "The voice of nature unites with revelation." Or: "The voice of nature unites with that of revelation."—Wayland cor.

"This adjective, you see, we can't admit;

But, changed to 'WORSE,' the word is just and fit."—Tobitt cor.

LESSON VI.—PARTICIPLES.

Page 1863

"Its application is not arbitrary, or dependent on the caprice of readers."—L. Murray cor.
"This is the more expedient, because the work is designed for the benefit of private learners."—Id. "A man, he tells us, ordered by his will, to have a statue erected for him."—Dr. Blair cor. "From some likeness too remote, and lying too far out of the road of ordinary thought."—Id. "In the commercial world, money is a fluid, running from hand to hand."—Dr. Webster cor. "He pays much attention to the learning and singing of songs."—Id. "I would not be understood to consider the singing of songs as criminal."—Id. "It is a case decided by Cicero, the great master of writing."—Editor of Waller cor.
"Did they ever bear a testimony against the writing of books?"—Bates's Rep. cor.
"Exclamations are sometimes mistaken for interrogations."—Hist. of Print, cor. "Which cannot fail to prove of service."—Smith cor. "Hewn into such figures as would make them incorporate easily and firmly."—Beat, or Mur. cor. "After the rule and example, there are practical inductive questions."—J. Flint cor. "I think it will be an advantage, that I have collected my examples from modern writings."—Priestley cor. "He was eager to recommend it to his fellow-citizens."—Id. and Hume cor. "The good lady was careful to serve me with every thing."—Id. "No revelation would have been given, had the light of nature been sufficient, in such a sense as to render one superfluous and useless."—Bp. Butler cor. "Description, again, is a representation which raises in the mind the conception of an object, by means of some arbitrary or instituted symbols."—Dr. Blair cor. "Disappointing the expectation of the hearers, when they look for an end." Or:—"for the termination of our discourse."—Id. "There is a distinction, which, in the use of them, is worthy of attention."—Maunder cor. "A model has been contrived, which is not very expensive, and which is easily managed."—Ed. Reporter cor. "The conspiracy was the more easily discovered, because the conspirators were many."—L. Murray cor. "Nearly ten years had that celebrated work been published, before its importance was at all understood."—Id. "That the sceptre is ostensibly grasped by a female hand, does not reverse the general order of government."—West cor. "I have hesitated about signing the Declaration of Sentiments."—Lib. cor. "The prolonging of men's lives when the world needed to be peopled, and the subsequent shortening of them when that necessity had ceased."—Rev. John Brown cor. "Before the performance commences, we see displayed the insipid formalities of the prelusive scene.”—Kirkham cor. “It forbade the lending of money, or the sending of goods, or the embarking of capital in anyway, in transactions connected with that foreign traffic.”—Brougham cor. “Even abstract ideas have sometimes the same important prerogative conferred upon them.”—Jamieson cor. “Ment, like other terminations, changes y into i, when the y is preceded by a consonant.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 25. “The term PROPER is from the French propre, own, or the Latin proprius; and a Proper noun is so called, because it is peculiar to the individual or family bearing the name. The term COMMON is from the Latin communis, pertaining equally to several or many; and a Common noun is so called, because it is common to every individual comprised in the class.”—Fowler cor.

Page 1864

“Thus oft by mariners are showed (Unless the men of Kent are liars)
Earl Godwin’s castles overflowed, And palace-roofs, and steeple-spires.”—Swift cor.

LESSON VII.—ADVERBS.

“He spoke to every man and woman who was there.”—L. Murray cor. “Thought and language act and react upon each other.”—Murray’s Key, p. 264. “Thought and expression act and react upon each other.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 356. “They have neither the leisure nor the means of attaining any knowledge, except what lies within the contracted circle of their several professions.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 160. “Before they are capable of understanding much, or indeed any thing, of most other branches of education.”—Olney cor. “There is no more beauty in one of them, than in an other.”—L. Murray cor. “Which appear to be constructed according to no certain rule.”—Dr. Blair cor. “The vehement manner of speaking became less universal.”—Or better:—“less general.”—Id. “Not all languages, however, agree in this mode of expression.” Or: “This mode of expression, however, is not common to all languages.”—Id. “The great occasion of setting apart this particular day.”—Atterbury cor. “He is much more promising now, than he was formerly.”—L. Murray cor. “They are placed before a participle, without dependence on the rest of the sentence.”—Id. “This opinion does not appear to have been well considered.” Or: “This opinion appears to have been formed without due consideration.”—Id. “Precision in language merits a full explication; and merits it the more, because distinct ideas are, perhaps, but rarely formed concerning it.”—Dr. Blair cor. “In the more sublime parts of poetry, he is less distinguished." Or:—"he is not so highly distinguished."—Id. "Whether the author was altogether happy in the choice of his subject, may be questioned."—Id. "But, with regard to this matter also, there is a great error in the common practice."—Webster cor. "This order is the very order of the human mind, which makes things we are sensible of, a means to come at those that are not known." Or:—"which makes things that are already known, its means of finding out those that are not so."—Foreman cor. "Now, who is not discouraged, and does not fear want, when he has no money?"—C. Leslie cor. "Which the authors of this work consider of little or no use."—Wilbur and Liv. cor. "And here indeed the distinction between these two classes begins to be obscure."—Dr. Blair cor. "But this is a manner which deserves to be avoided." Or:—"which does not deserve to be imitated."—Id. "And, in this department, a person effects very little, whenever he attempts too much."—Campbell and Murray cor. "The verb that signifies mere being, is neuter."—Ash cor. "I hope to tire but little those whom I shall not happen to please."—Rambler cor. "Who were utterly unable to pronounce some letters, and who pronounced others very indistinctly."—Sheridan cor. "The learner may point out the active, passive, and neuter verbs in the following examples, and state the reasons for thus distinguishing them." Or: "The learner may point out the active, the passive, and the neuter verbs in the following examples, and state the reasons for calling them so."—C. Adams cor. "These words are almost always conjunctions."—Barrett cor.

Page 1865

"How glibly nonsense trickles from his tongue!

How sweet the periods, neither said nor sung!"—Pope cor.

LESSON VIII.—CONJUNCTIONS.

"Who, at least, either knew not, or did not love to make, a distinction." Or better thus: "Who, at least, either knew no distinction, or did not like to make any."—Dr. Murray cor. "It is childish in the last degree to let this become the ground of estranged affection."—L. Murray cor. "When the regular, and when the irregular verb, is to be preferred [sic—KTH], p. 107."—Id. "The books were to have been sold this day." Or:—"on this day."—Priestley cor. "Do, an you will." Or: "Do, if you will."—Shak. cor. "If a man had a positive idea either of infinite duration or of infinite space, he could add two infinities together." Or: "If a man had a positive idea of what is infinite, either in duration or in space, he could," &c.—Murray's proof-text cor. "None shall more willingly agree to and advance the same than I."—Morton cor. "That it cannot but be hurtful to continue it."—Barclay cor. "A conjunction joins words or sentences."—Beck cor. "The copulative conjunction connects words or sentences together, and continues the sense."—Frost cor. "The copulative conjunction serves to connect [words or clauses,] and continue a sentence, by expressing an addition, a cause, or a supposition."—L. Murray cor. "All construction is either true or apparent; or, in other words, either literal or figurative."—Buchanan and Brit. Gram. cor. "But the divine character is such as none but a divine hand could draw." Or: "But the divine character is such, that none but a divine hand could draw it."—A. Keith cor. "Who is so mad, that, on inspecting the heavens, he is insensible of a God?"—Gibbons cor. "It is now submitted to an enlightened public, with little further desire on the part of the author, than for its general utility."—Town cor. "This will sufficiently explain why so many provincials have grown old in the capital without making any change in their original dialect."—Sheridan cor. "Of these, they had chiefly three in general use, which were denominated ACCENTS, the term being used in the plural number."—Id. "And this is one of the chief reasons why dramatic representations have ever held the first rank amongst the diversions of mankind."—Id. "Which is the chief reason why public reading is in general so disgusting."—Id. "At the same time in which they learn to read." Or: "While they learn to read."—Id. "He is always to pronounce his words with exactly the same accent that he uses in speaking."—Id. "In order to know what an other knows, and in the same manner in which he knows it."—Id. "For the same reason for which it is, in a more limited state, assigned to the several tribes of animals."—Id. "Were there masters to teach this, in the same manner in which other arts are taught." Or: "Were there masters to teach this, as other arts are taught."—Id.

Page 1866

"Whose own example strengthens all his laws;
Who is himself that great sublime he draws."—Pope cor.

LESSON IX.—PREPOSITIONS.

"The word so has sometimes the same meaning as ALSO, LIKEWISE, or THE SAME."—Priestley cor. "The verb use relates not to 'pleasures of the imagination;' but to the terms fancy and imagination, which he was to employ as synonymous."—Dr. Blair cor. "It never can view, clearly and distinctly, more than one object at a time."—Id.

Page 1867

"This figure [Euphemism] is often the same as the Periphrasis."—Adam and Gould cor.
"All the intermediate time between youth and old age."—W. Walker cor. "When one thing is said to act upon an other, or do something to it."—Lowth cor. "Such a composition has as much of meaning in it, as a mummy has of life." Or: "Such a composition has as much meaning in it, as a mummy has life."—Lit. Conv. cor. "That young men, from fourteen to eighteen years of age, were not the best judges."—Id.
"This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of blasphemy."—Isaiah, xxxvii, 3.
"Blank verse has the same pauses and accents that occur in rhyme."—Kames cor. "In prosody, long syllables are distinguished by the macron (-); and short ones by what is called the breve (~)."—Bucke cor. "Sometimes both articles are left out, especially from poetry."—Id. "From the following example, the pronoun and participle are omitted." Or: "In the following example, the pronoun and participle are not expressed."—L. Murray cor. [But the example was faulty. Say.] "Conscious of his weight and importance,"—or, "Being conscious of his own weight and importance, he did not solicit the aid of others."—Id. "He was an excellent person; even in his early youth, a mirror of the ancient faith."—Id. "The carrying of its several parts into execution."—Bp. Butler cor.
"Concord is the agreement which one word has with an other, in gender, number, case, or person."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 142. "It might perhaps have given me a greater taste for its antiquities."—Addison cor. "To call on a person, and to wait on him."—Priestley cor. "The great difficulty they found in fixing just sentiments."—Id. and Hume cor. "Developing the differences of the three."—James Brown cor. "When the singular ends in x, ch soft, sh, ss, or s, we add es to form the plural."—L. Murray cor. "We shall present him a list or specimen of them." "It is very common to hear of the evils of pernicious reading, how it enervates the mind, or how it depraves the principles."—Dymond cor. "In this example, the verb arises is understood before 'curiosity' and before 'knowledge.'"—L. Murray et al. cor. "The connective is frequently omitted, when several words have the same construction."—Wilcox cor. "He shall expel them from before you, and drive them out from your sight."—Bible cor. "Who makes his sun to shine and his rain to descend, upon the just and the unjust." Or thus: "Who makes his sun shine, and his rain descend, upon the just and the unjust."—M'Ilvaine cor.

LESSON X.—MIXED EXAMPLES.

Page 1868

"This sentence violates an established rule of grammar."—L. Murray cor. "The words thou and shall are again reduced to syllables of short quantity."—Id. "Have the greatest men always been the most popular? By no means."—Lieber cor. "St. Paul positively stated, that 'He that loveth an other, hath fulfilled the law.'"—Rom., xiii, 8. "More organs than one are concerned in the utterance of almost every consonant."—M'Culloch cor. "If the reader will pardon me for descending so low."—Campbell cor. "To adjust them in such a manner as shall consist equally with the perspicuity and the grace of the period." Or: "To adjust them so, that they shall consist equally," &c.—Dr. Blair and L. Mur. cor. "This class exhibits a lamentable inefficiency, and a great want of simplicity."—Gardiner cor. "Whose style, in all its course, flows like a limpid stream, through which we see to the very bottom."—Dr. Blair cor.; also L. Murray. "We admit various ellipses." Or thus: "An ellipsis, or omission, of some words, is frequently admitted."—Lennie's Gram., p. 116. "The ellipsis, of articles may occur thus."—L. Murray cor. "Sometimes the article a is improperly applied to nouns of different numbers; as, 'A magnificent house and gardens.'"—Id. "In some very emphatical expressions, no ellipsis should be allowed."—Id. "Ellipses of the adjective may happen in the following manner."—Id. "The following examples show that there may be an ellipsis of the pronoun."—Id. "Ellipses of the verb occur in the following instances."—Id. "Ellipses of the adverb may occur in the following manner."—Id. "The following brief expressions are all of them elliptical." [554]—Id. "If no emphasis be placed on any words, not only will discourse be rendered heavy and lifeless, but the meaning will often be left ambiguous."—Id.; also J. S. Hart and Dr. Blair cor. "He regards his word, but thou dost not regard thine."—Bullions, Murray, et al., cor. "I have learned my task, but you have not learned yours."—Id. "When the omission of a word would obscure the sense, weaken the expression, or be attended with impropriety, no ellipsis must be indulged."—Murray and Weld cor. "And therefore the verb is correctly put in the singular number, and refers to them all separately and individually considered."—L. Murray cor. "He was to me the most intelligible of all who spoke on the subject."—Id. "I understood him better than I did any other who spoke on the subject."—Id. "The roughness found on the entrance into the paths of virtue and learning decreases as we advance.” Or: “The roughnesses encountered in the paths of virtue and learning diminish as we advance.”—Id. “There is nothing which more promotes knowledge, than do steady application and habitual observation.”—Id. “Virtue confers on man the highest dignity of which he is capable; it should therefore be the chief object of his desire.”—Id. and Merchant cor. “The supreme Author of our being has so formed the human soul, that nothing but himself can be its last, adequate, and proper happiness.”—Addison and Blair cor. “The inhabitants of China laugh at the plantations of our Europeans: ‘Because,’ say they, ‘any one may place trees in equal rows and uniform figures.’”—Id. “The divine laws are not to be reversed by those of men.”—L. Murray cor. “In both of these examples, the relative which and the verb was are understood.”—Id. et al. cor. “The Greek and Latin languages, though for many reasons they cannot be called dialects of one and the same tongue, are nevertheless closely connected.”—Dr. Murray cor. “To ascertain and settle whether a white rose or a red breathes the sweetest fragrance.” Or thus: “To ascertain and settle which of the two breathes the sweeter fragrance, a white rose or a red one.”—J. Q. Adams cor. “To which he can afford to devote but little of his time and labour.”—Dr. Blair cor.

Page 1869

“Avoid extremes; and shun the fault of such As still are pleased too little or too much.”—Pope cor.

LESSON XI.—OF BAD PHRASES.

“He might as well leave his vessel to the direction of the winds.”—South cor. “Without good-nature and gratitude, men might as well live in a wilderness as in society.”—L’Estrange cor. “And, for this reason, such lines very seldom occur together.”—Dr. Blair cor. “His greatness did not make him happy.”—Crombie cor. “Let that which tends to cool your love, be judged in all.”—Crisp cor. “It is worth observing, that there is no passion in the mind of man so weak but it mates and masters the fear of death.”—Bacon cor. “Accent dignifies the syllable on which it is laid, and makes it more audible than the rest.”—Sheridan and Murray cor. “Before he proceeds to argue on either side.”—Dr. Blair cor. “The general change of manners, throughout Europe.”—Id. “The sweetness and beauty of Virgil’s numbers, through all his works.”—Id. “The French writers of sermons, study neatness and elegance in the division of their discourses.”—Id. “This seldom fails to prove a refrigerant to passion.”—Id. “But their fathers, brothers, and uncles, cannot, as good relations and good citizens, excuse themselves for not standing forth to demand vengeance.”—Murray’s Sequel, p. 114.

Page 1870

“Alleging, that their decree of the church of Rome, was a uniting with the Turks.”—Barclay cor. “To which is added the Catechism by the Assembly of Divines.”—N. E. Prim. cor. “This treachery was always present in the thoughts of both of them.”—Robertson cor. “Thus far their words agree.” Or: “Thus far the words of both agree.”—W. Walker cor. “Aparithmeses is an enumeration of the several parts of what, as a whole, might be expressed in few words.”—Gould cor. “Aparithmeses, or Enumeration, is a figure in which what might be expressed in a few words, is branched out into several parts.”—Dr. Adam cor. “Which may sit from time to time, where you dwell, or in the vicinity.”—J. O. Taylor cor. “Place together a large-sized animal and a small one, of the same species.” Or: “Place together a large and a small animal of the same species.”—Kames cor. “The weight of the swimming body is equal to that of the quantity of fluid displaced by it.”—Percival cor. “The Subjunctive mood, in all its tenses, is similar to the Optative.”—Gwilt cor. “No feeling of obligation remains, except that of an obligation to fidelity.”—Wayland cor. “Who asked him why whole audiences should be moved to tears at the representation of some story on the stage.”—Sheridan cor. “Are you not ashamed to affirm that the best works of the Spirit of Christ in his saints are as filthy rags?”—Barclay cor. “A neuter verb becomes active, when followed by a noun of kindred signification.”—Sanborn cor. “But he has judged better in forbearing to repeat the article the.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Many objects please us, and are thought highly beautiful, which have scarcely any variety at all.”—Id. “Yet they sometimes follow them.”—Emmons cor. “For I know of nothing more important in the whole subject, than this doctrine of mood and tense.”—R. Johnson cor. “It is by no means impossible for an error to be avoided or suppressed.”—Philol. Museum cor. “These are things of the highest importance to children and youth.”—Murray cor. “He ought to have omitted the word many.” Or: “He might better have omitted the word many.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Which might better have been separated.” Or: “Which ought rather to have been separated.”—Id. “Figures and metaphors, therefore, should never be used profusely.”—Id. and Jam. cor. “Metaphors, or other figures, should never be used in too great abundance.”—Murray and Russell cor. “Something like this has been alleged against Tacitus.”—Bolingbroke cor.

Page 1871

"O thou, whom all mankind in vain withstand,
Who with the blood of each must one day stain thy hand!"
—Sheffield cor.

LESSON XII.—OF TWO ERRORS.

"Pronouns sometimes precede the terms which they represent."—L. Murray cor. "Most prepositions originally denoted relations of place."—Lowth cor. "WHICH is applied to brute animals, and to things without life."—Bullions cor. "What thing do they describe, or of what do they tell the kind?"—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "Iron cannons, as well as brass, are now universally cast solid."—Jamieson cor. "We have philosophers, more eminent perhaps than those of any other nation."—Dr. Blair cor. "This is a question about words only, and one which common sense easily determines."—Id. "The low pitch of the voice, is that which approaches to a whisper."—Id. "Which, as to the effect, is just the same as to use no such distinctions at all."—Id. "These two systems, therefore, really differ from each other but very little."—Id. "It is needless to give many instances, as examples occur so often."—Id. "There are many occasions on which this is neither requisite nor proper."—Id. "Dramatic poetry divides itself into two forms, comedy and tragedy."—Id. "No man ever rhymed with more exactness than he." [I.e., than Roscommon.]—Editor of Waller cor. "The Doctor did not reap from his poetical labours a profit equal to that of his prose."—Johnson cor. "We will follow that which we find our fathers practised." Or: "We will follow that which we find to have been our fathers' practice."—Sale cor. "And I should deeply regret that I had published them."—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "Figures exhibit ideas with more vividness and power, than could be given them by plain language."—Kirkham cor. "The allegory is finely drawn, though the heads are various."—Spect. cor. "I should not have thought it worthy of this place." Or: "I should not have thought it worthy of being placed here."—Crombie cor. "In this style, Tacitus excels all other writers, ancient or modern."—Kames cor. "No other author, ancient or modern, possesses the art of dialogue so completely as Shakspeare."—Id. "The names of all the things we see, hear, smell, taste, or feel, are nouns."—Inf. S. Gram. cor. "Of what number are the expressions, 'these boys,' 'these pictures,' &c.?"—Id. "This sentence has faults somewhat like those of the last."—Dr. Blair cor. "Besides perspicuity, he pursues propriety, purity, and precision, in his language; which qualities form one degree, and no inconsiderable one, of beauty.”—Id. “Many critical terms have unfortunately been employed in a sense too loose and vague; none with less precision, than the word sublime.”—Id. “Hence no word in the language is used with a more vague signification, than the word beauty.”—Id. “But still, in speech, he made use of general terms only.”—Id. “These give life, body, and colouring, to the facts recited; and enable us to conceive of them as present, and passing before our eyes.”—Id. “Which carried an ideal chivalry to a still more extravagant height, than the adventurous spirit of knighthood had ever attained in fact.”—Id. “We write much more supinely, and with far less labour, than did the ancients.”—Id. “This appears indeed to form the characteristical difference between the ancient poets, orators, and historians, and the modern.”—Id. “To violate this rule, as the English too often do, shows great incorrectness.”—Id. “It is impossible, by means of any training, to prevent them from appearing stiff and forced.”—Id. “And it also gives to the speaker the disagreeable semblance of one who endeavours to compel assent.”—Id. “And whenever a light or ludicrous anecdote is proper to be recorded, it is generally better to throw it into a note, than to run the hazard of becoming too familiar.”—Id. “It is the great business of this life, to prepare and qualify ourselves for the enjoyment of a better.”—L. Murray cor. “From some dictionaries, accordingly, it was omitted; and in others it is stigmatized as a barbarism.”—Crombie cor. “You cannot see a thing, or think of one, the name of which is not a noun.”—Mack cor. “All the fleet have arrived, and are moored in safety.” Or better: “The whole fleet has arrived, and is moored in safety.”—L. Murray cor.

Page 1872

LESSON XIII.—OF TWO ERRORS.

“They have severally their distinct and exactly-limited relations to gravity.”—Hasler cor. “But where the additional s would give too much of the hissing sound, the omission takes place even in prose.”—L. Murray cor. “After o, it [the w] is sometimes not sounded at all; and sometimes it is sounded like a single u.”—Lowth cor. “It is situation chiefly, that decides the fortunes and characters of men.”—Hume cor.; also Murray. “The vice of covetousness is that [vice] which enters more deeply into the soul than any other.”—Murray et al. cor. “Of all vices, covetousness enters the most deeply into the soul.”—Id.

Page 1873

"Of all the vices, covetousness is that which enters the most deeply into the soul."—Campbell cor. "The vice of covetousness is a fault which enters more deeply into the soul than any other."—Guardian cor. "WOULD primarily denotes inclination of will; and SHOULD, obligation: but they vary their import, and are often used to express simple events." Or:—"but both of them vary their import," &c. Or:—"but both vary their import, and are used to express simple events."—Lowth, Murray, et al. cor.; also Comly and Ingersoll; likewise Abel Flint. "A double condition, in two correspondent clauses of a sentence, is sometimes made by the word HAD; as, 'Had he done this, he had escaped.'"—Murray and Ingersoll cor. "The pleasures of the understanding are preferable to those of the imagination, as well as to those of sense."—L. Murray cor. "Claudian, in a fragment upon the wars of the giants, has contrived to render this idea of their throwing of the mountains, which in itself has so much grandeur, burlesque and ridiculous."—Dr. Blair cor. "To which not only no other writings are to be preferred, but to which, even in divers respects, none are comparable."—Barclay cor. "To distinguish them in the understanding, and treat of their several natures, in the same cool manner that we use with regard to other ideas."—Sheridan cor. "For it has nothing to do with parsing, or the analyzing of language."—Kirkham cor. Or: "For it has nothing to do with the parsing, or analyzing, of language."—Id. "Neither has that language [the Latin] ever been so common in Britain."—Swift cor. "All that I purpose, is, to give some openings into the pleasures of taste."—Dr. Blair cor. "But the following sentences would have been better without it."—L. Murray cor. "But I think the following sentence would be better without it." Or: "But I think it should be expunged from the following sentence."—Priestley cor. "They appear, in this case, like ugly excrescences jutting out from the body."—Dr. Blair cor. "And therefore the fable of the Harpies, in the third book of the Aeneid, and the allegory of Sin and Death, in the second book of Paradise Lost, ought not to have been inserted in these celebrated poems."—Id. "Ellipsis is an elegant suppression, or omission, of some word or words, belonging to a sentence."—Brit. Gram. and Buchanan cor. "The article A or AN is not very proper in this construction."—D. Blair cor. "Now suppose the articles had not been dropped from these passages."—Bucke cor. "To have given a separate name to every one of those trees, would have been an endless and impracticable undertaking.”—Blair cor. “Ei, in general, has the same sound as long and slender a.” Or better: “Ei generally has the sound of long or slender a.”—L. Murray cor. “When a conjunction is used with apparent redundancy, the insertion of it is called Polysyndeton.”—Adam and Gould cor. “EACH, EVERY, EITHER, and NEITHER, denote the persons or things that make up a number, as taken separately or distributively.”—M’Culloch cor. “The principal sentence must be expressed by a verb in the indicative, imperative, or potential mood”—S. W. Clark cor. “Hence he is diffuse, where he ought to be urgent.”—Dr. Blair cor. “All sorts of subjects admit of explanatory comparisons.”—Id. et al. cor. “The present or imperfect participle denotes being, action, or passion, continued, and not perfected.”—Kirkham cor. “What are verbs? Those words which chiefly express what is said of things.”—Fowle cor.

Page 1874

“Of all those arts in which the wise excel,
The very masterpiece is writing-well.”—Sheffield cor.

“Such was that muse whose rules and practice tell,
That art’s chief masterpiece is writing-well.”—Pope cor.

LESSON XIV.—OF THREE ERRORS.

“From some words, the metaphorical sense has justled out the original sense altogether; so that, in respect to the latter, they have become obsolete.”—Campbell cor. “Surely, never any other mortal was so overwhelmed with grief, as I am at this present moment.”—Sheridan cor. “All languages differ from one an other in their modes of inflection.”—Bullions cor. “The noun and the verb are the only indispensable parts of speech: the one, to express the subject spoken of; and the other, the predicate, or what is affirmed of the subject.”—M’Culloch cor. “The words Italicized in the last three examples, perform the office of substantives.”—L. Murray cor. “A sentence so constructed is always a mark of carelessness in the writer.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Nothing is more hurtful to the grace or the vivacity of a period, than superfluous and dragging words at the conclusion.”—Id. “When its substantive is not expressed with it, but is referred to, being understood.”—Lowth cor. “Yet they always have substantives belonging to them, either expressed or understood.”—Id. “Because they define and limit the import of the common names, or general terms, to which they refer.”—Id. “Every new object surprises them, terrifies them, and makes a strong impression on their minds.”—Dr. Blair cor. “His argument required a more full development, in order to be distinctly apprehended, and to have its due force.”—Id. “Those participles which are derived from active-transitive verbs, will govern the objective case, as do the verbs from which they are derived.”—Emmons cor. “Where, in violation of the rule, the objective case whom follows the verb, while the nominative I precedes it.”—L. Murray cor. “To use, after the same conjunction, both the indicative and the subjunctive mood, in the same sentence, and under the same circumstances, seems to be a great impropriety.”—Lowth, Murray, et al. cor. “A nice discernment of the import of words, and an accurate attention to the best usage, are necessary on these occasions.”—L. Murray cor. “The Greeks and Romans, the former especially, were, in truth, much more musical than we are; their genius was more turned to take delight in the melody of speech.”—Dr. Blair cor. “In general, if the sense admits it early, the sooner a circumstance is introduced, the better; that the more important and significant words may possess the last place, and be quite disencumbered.”—Murray et al. cor.; also Blair and Jamieson. “Thus we find it in both the Greek and the Latin tongue.”—Dr. Blair cor. “Several sentences, constructed in the same manner, and having the same number of members, should never be allowed to come in succession.”—Blair et al. cor. “I proceed to lay down the rules to be observed in the conduct of metaphors; and these, with little variation, will be applicable to tropes of every kind.”—Dr. Blair cor. “By selecting words with a proper regard to their sounds, we may often imitate other sounds which we mean to describe.”—Dr. Blair and L. Mur. cor. “The disguise can scarcely be so perfect as to deceive.”—Dr. Blair cor. “The sense does not admit of any other pause, than one after the second syllable ‘sit;’ this therefore must be the only pause made in the reading.”—Id. “Not that I believe North America to have been first peopled so lately as in the twelfth century, the period of Madoc’s migration.”—Webster cor. “Money and commodities will always flow to that country in which they are most wanted, and in which they will command the most profit.”—Id. “That it contains no visible marks of certain articles which are of the utmost importance to a just delivery.”—Sheridan cor. “And Virtue, from her beauty, we call a fair and favourite maid.”—Mack cor. “The definite article may relate to nouns of either number.”—Inf. S. Gram. cor.

Page 1875

Page 1876

LESSON XV.—OF MANY ERRORS.

(1.) “Compound words are[, by L. Murray and others, improperly] included among the derivatives.”—L. Murray corrected. (2.) “The Apostrophe, placed above the line, thus ‘, is used to abbreviate or shorten words. But its chief use is, to denote the possessive case of nouns.”—Id. (3.) “The Hyphen, made thus -, connects the parts of compound words. It is also used when a word is divided.”—Id. (4.) “The Acute Accent, made thus ‘, denotes the syllable on which stress is laid, and sometimes also, that the vowel is short: as, ‘Fancy.’ The Grave Accent, made thus ` , usually denotes, (when applied to English words,) that the stress is laid where a vowel ends the syllable: as, ‘Favour.’”—Id. (5.) “The stress is laid on long vowels or syllables, and on short ones, indiscriminately. In order to distinguish the long or open vowels from the close or short ones, some writers of dictionaries have placed the grave accent on the former, and the acute on the latter.”—Id. (6.) “The Diaeresis, thus made “, is placed over one of two contiguous vowels, to show that they are not a diphthong.”—Id. (7.) “The Section, made thus Sec., is sometimes used to mark the subdivisions of a discourse or chapter.”—Id. (8.) “The Paragraph, made thus ¶, sometimes denotes the beginning of a new subject, or of a passage not connected with the text preceding. This character is now seldom used [for such a purpose], except in the Old and New Testaments.” Or better:—“except in the Bible.”—Id. (9.) “The Quotation Points, written thus “ ”, mark the beginning and the end of what is quoted or transcribed from some speaker or author, in his own words. In type, they are inverted commas at the beginning, apostrophes at the conclusion.”—Id. (10.) “The Brace was formerly used in poetry at the end of a triplet, or where three lines rhymed together in heroic verse; it also serves to connect several terms with one, when the one is common to all, and thus to prevent a repetition of the common term.”—Id. (11.) “Several asterisks put together, generally denote the omission of some letters belonging to a word, or of some bold or indelicate expression; but sometimes they imply a defect in the manuscript from which the text is copied.”—Id. (12.) “*The Ellipsis, made thus —, or thus , is used where some letters of a word, or some words of a verse, are omitted.”—Id.

Page 1877

(13.) "The Obelisk, which is made thus [Obelisk]; and the Parallels, which are made thus ||; and sometimes the letters of the alphabet; and also the Arabic figures; are used as references to notes in the margin, or at the bottom, of the page."—Id. (14.) "The note of interrogation should not be employed, where it is only said that a question has been asked, and where the words are not used as a question; as, 'The Cyprians asked me why I wept.'"—Id. et al. cor. (15.) "The note of interrogation is improper after mere expressions of admiration, or of any other emotion, though they may bear the form of questions."—Id. (16.) "The parenthesis incloses something which is thrown into the body of a sentence, in an under tone; and which affects neither the sense, nor the construction, of the main text."—Lowth cor. (17.) "Simple members connected by a relative not used restrictively, or by a conjunction that implies comparison, are for the most part divided by the comma."—Id. (18.) "Simple members, or sentences, connected as terms of comparison, are for the most part separated by the comma."—L. Murray et al. cor. (19.) "Simple sentences connected by a comparative particle, are for the most part divided by the comma."—Russell cor. (20.) "Simple sentences or clauses connected to form a comparison, should generally be parted by the comma."—Merchant cor. (21.) "The simple members of sentences that express contrast or comparison, should generally be divided by the comma."—Jaudon cor. (22.) "The simple members of a comparative sentence, when they are long, are separated by a comma."—Cooper cor. (23.) "Simple sentences connected to form a comparison, or phrases placed in opposition, or contrast, are usually separated by the comma."—Hiley and Bullions cor. (24.) "On whichever word we lay the emphasis,—whether on the first, the second, the third, or the fourth,—every change of it strikes out a different sense."—L. Murray cor. (25.) "To say to those who do not understand sea phrases, 'We tacked to the larboard, and stood off to sea,' would give them little or no information."—Murray and Hiley cor. (26.) "Of those dissyllables which are sometimes nouns and sometimes verbs, it may be observed, that the verb is commonly accented on the latter syllable, and the noun on the former."—L. Murray cor. (27.) "And this gives to our language an advantage over most others, in the poetical or rhetorical style."—Id. et al. cor. (28.) "And this gives to the English language an advantage over most others, in the poetical and the rhetorical style."—Lowth cor. (29.) "The second and the third scholar may read the same sentence; or as many may repeat the text, as are necessary to teach it perfectly to the whole class."—Osborn cor.

Page 1878

(30.) "Bliss is the same, in subject, or in king,
In who obtain defence, or who defend."

—Pope's Essay on Man, IV, 58.

LESSON XVI.—OF MANY ERRORS.

"The Japanese, the Tonquinese, and the Coreans, speak languages differing from one an other, and from that of the inhabitants of China; while all use the same written characters, and, by means of them, correspond intelligibly with one an other in writing, though ignorant of the language spoken by their correspondents: a plain proof, that the Chinese characters are like hieroglyphics, and essentially independent of language."—Jamieson cor.; also Dr. Blair. "The curved line, in stead of remaining round, is changed to a square one, for the reason before mentioned."—Knight cor. "Every reader should content himself with the use of those tones only, that he is habituated to in speech; and should give to the words no other emphasis, than what he would give to the same words, in discourse. [Or, perhaps the author meant:—and should give to the emphatic words no other intonation, than what he would give, &c.] Thus, whatever he utters, will be delivered with ease, and will appear natural."—Sheridan cor. "A stop, or pause, is a total cessation of sound, during a perceptible, and, in musical or poetical compositions, a measurable space of time."—Id. "Pauses, or rests, in speaking or reading, are total cessations of the voice, during perceptible, and, in many cases, measurable spaces of time."—L. Murray et al. cor. "Those derivative nouns which denote small things of the kind named by their primitives, are called Diminutive Nouns: as, lambkin, hillock, satchel, gosling; from lamb, hill, sack, goose."—Bullions cor. "Why is it, that nonsense so often escapes detection, its character not being perceived either by the writer or by the reader?"—Campbell cor. "An Interjection is a word used to express sudden emotion. Interjections are so called, because they are generally thrown in between the parts of discourse, and have no reference to the structure of those parts."—M'Culloch cor. "The verb OUGHT has no other inflection than OUGHTEST, and this is nearly obsolete."—Macintosh cor. "But the arrangement, government, and agreement of words, and also their dependence upon others, are referred to our reason."—Osborn cor. "ME is a personal pronoun, of the first person, singular number, and objective case."—Guy cor. "The noun SELF is usually added to a pronoun; as, herself, himself, &c. The compounds thus formed are called reciprocal pronouns.”—

Page 1879

_ Id. _ “One cannot but think, that our author would have done better, had he begun the first of these three sentences, with saying, ‘It is novelty, that bestows charms on a monster.’”—Dr. Blair cor. “The idea which they present to us, of nature resembling art, of art considered as an original, and nature as a copy, seems not very distinct, or well conceived, nor indeed very material to our author’s purpose.”—Id. “This faulty construction of the sentence, evidently arose from haste and carelessness.”—Id. “Adverbs serve to modify terms of action or quality, or to denote time, place, order, degree, or some other circumstance which we have occasion to specify.”—Id. “We may naturally expect, that the more any nation is improved by science, and the more perfect its language becomes, the more will that language abound with connective particles.”—Id. “Mr. Greenleaf’s book is far better adapted to the capacity of learners, than any other that has yet appeared, on the subject.”—Feltus and Onderdonk’s false praise Englished. “Punctuation is the art of marking, in writing or in print, the several pauses, or rests, which separate sentences, or the parts of sentences; so as to denote their proper quantity or proportion, as it is exhibited in a just and accurate delivery.”—Lowth cor. “A compound sentence must generally be resolved into simple ones, and these be separated by the comma.” Or better: “A compound sentence is generally divided, by the comma, into its simple members.”—Greenleaf and Fisk cor. “Simple sentences should in general be separated from one an other by the comma, unless a greater point is required; as, ‘Youth is passing away, age is approaching, and death is near.’”—S. R. Hall cor. “V has always one uniform sound, which is that of f flattened, as in thieve from thief: thus v bears to f the same relation that b does to p, d to t, hard g to k, or z to s.”—L. Murray and Fisk cor.; also Walker; also Greenleaf. “The author is explaining the difference between sense and imagination, as powers of the human mind.”—L. Murray cor. Or, if this was the critic’s meaning: “The author is endeavouring to explain a very abstract point, the distinction between the powers of sense and those of imagination, as two different faculties of the human mind.”—_ Id. _; also Dr. Blair cor. “HE—(from the Anglo-Saxon HE—) is a personal pronoun, of the third person, singular number, masculine gender, and nominative case. Decline HE.”—Fowler cor.

Page 1880

CORRECTIONS UNDER THE CRITICAL NOTES.

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE I.—OF THE PARTS OF SPEECH.

"The passive voice denotes an action received." Or: "The passive voice denotes the receiving of an action."—Maunder corrected. "Milton, in some of his prose works, has many very finely-turned periods."—Dr. Blair and Alex. Jam. cor. "These will be found to be wholly, or chiefly, of that class."—Dr. Blair cor. "All appearances of an author's affecting of harmony, are disagreeable."—Id. and Jam. cor. "Some nouns have a double increase; that is, they increase by more syllables than one: as iter, itin~eris."—Adam et al. cor. "The powers of man are enlarged by progressive cultivation."—Gurney cor. "It is always important to begin well; to make a favourable impression at the first setting out."—Dr. Blair cor. "For if one take a wrong method at his first setting-out, it will lead him astray in all that follows."—Id. "His mind is full of his subject, and all his words are expressive."—Id. "How exquisitely is all this performed in Greek!"—Harris cor. "How unworthy is all this to satisfy the ambition of an immortal soul!"—L. Murray cor. "So as to exhibit the object in its full grandeur, and its most striking point of view."—Dr. Blair cor. "And that the author know how to descend with propriety to the plain style, as well as how to rise to the bold and figured."—Id. "The heart alone can answer to the heart."—Id. "Upon the first perception of it." Or: "As it is first perceived."—Harris cor. "Call for Samson, that he may make sport for us."—Bible cor. "And he made sport before them."—Id. "The term 'to suffer,' in this definition, is used in a technical sense; and means simply, to receive an action, or to be acted upon."—Bullions cor. "The text only is what is meant to be taught in schools."—Brightland cor. "The perfect participle denotes action or existence perfected or finished."—Kirkham cor. "From the intricacy and confusion which are produced when they are blended together."—L. Murray cor. "This very circumstance, that the word is employed antithetically renders it important in the sentence."—Kirkham cor. "It [the pronoun that,] is applied both to persons and to things."—L. Murray cor. "Concerning us, as being everywhere traduced."—Barclay cor. "Every thing else was buried in a profound silence."—Steele cor. "They raise fuller conviction, than any reasonings produce."—Dr. Blair cor. "It appears to me nothing but a fanciful refinement." Or: "It appears to me nothing more than a fanciful refinement"—_ Id._ "The regular and thorough resolution of a complete passage."—Churchill cor. "The infinitive is distinguished by the word TO, which immediately precedes it."—Maunder cor. "It will not be a gain of much ground, to urge that the basket, or vase, is understood to be the capital."—Kames cor. "The disgust one has to drink ink in reality, is not to the purpose, where the drinking of it is merely figurative."—_ Id._ "That we run not into the extreme of pruning so very closely."—See L. Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 318. "Being obliged to rest for a little while on the preposition itself." Or: "Being obliged to rest a while on the preposition itself." Or: "Being obliged to rest [for] a moment on the preposition alone."—Blair and Jam. cor. "Our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is no abiding."—Bible cor. "There may be attempted a more particular expression of certain objects, by means of imitative sounds."—Blair, Jam., and Mur. cor. "The right disposition of the shade, makes the light and colouring the more apparent."—Dr. Blair cor. "I observe that a diffuse style is apt to run into long periods."—_ Id._ "Their poor arguments, which they only picked up in the highways."—Leslie cor. "Which must be little else than a transcribing of their writings."—Barclay cor. "That single impulse is a forcing-out of almost all the breath." Or: "That single impulse forces out almost all the breath."—Hush cor. "Picini compares modulation to the turning-off from a road."—Gardiner cor. "So much has been written on and off almost every subject."—Sophist cor. "By the reading of books written by the best authors, his mind became highly improved." Or: "By the study of the most instructive books, his mind became highly improved."—L. Mur. cor. "For I never made a rich provision a token of a spiritual ministry."—Barclay cor.

Page 1881

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE II.—OF DOUBTFUL REFERENCE.

"However disagreeable the task, we must resolutely perform our duty."—L. Murray cor. "The formation of all English verbs, whether they be regular or irregular, is derived from the Saxon tongue."—Lowth cor. "Time and chance have an influence on all things human, and nothing do they affect more remarkably than language."—Campbell cor. "Time and chance have an influence on all things human, and on nothing a more remarkable influence than on language."—Jamieson cor. "That Archytases, who was a virtuous man, happened to perish once upon a time, is with him a sufficient ground." &c. —Phil Mu. cor. "He will be the better qualified to understand the meaning of the numerous words into which they enter as material parts.”—L. Murray cor. “We should continually have the goal in view, that it may direct us in the race.”—Id. “But Addison’s figures seem to rise of their own accord from the subject and constantly to embellish it” Or:—“and they constantly embellish it.”—Blair and Jam. cor. “So far as they signify persons, animals, and things that we can see, it is very easy to distinguish nouns.”—Cobbett cor. “Dissyllables ending in y or mute e, or accented on the final syllable, may sometimes be compared like monosyllables.”—Frost cor. “If the foregoing objection be admitted, it will not overrule the design.”—Rush cor. “These philosophical innovators forget, that objects, like men, are known only by their actions.”—Dr. Murray cor. “The connexion between words and ideas, is arbitrary and conventional; it has arisen mainly from the agreement of men among themselves.”—Jamieson cor. “The connexion between words and ideas, may in general be considered as arbitrary and conventional, or as arising from the agreement of men among themselves.”—Dr. Blair cor. “A man whose inclinations led him to be corrupt, and who had great abilities to manage and multiply and defend his corruptions.”—Swift cor. “They have no more control over him than have any other men.”—Wayland cor. “All his old words are true English, and his numbers are exquisite.”—Spect. cor. “It has been said, that not Jesuits only can equivocate.”—Mur. in Ex. and Key, cor. “In Latin, the nominative of the first or second person, is seldom expressed.”—Adam and Gould cor. “Some words have the same form in both numbers.”—Murray et al. cor. “Some nouns have the same form in both numbers.”—Merchant et al. cor. “Others have the same form in both numbers; as, deer, sheep, swine.”—Frost cor. “The following list denotes the consonant sounds, of which there are twenty-two.” Or: “The following list denotes the twenty-two simple sounds of the consonants.”—Mur. et al. cor. “And is the ignorance of these peasants a reason for other persons to remain ignorant; or does it render the subject the less worthy of our inquiry?”—Harris and Mur. cor. “He is one of the most correct, and perhaps he is the best, of our prose writers.”—Lowth cor. “The motions of a vortex and of a whirlwind are perfectly similar.” Or: “The motion of a vortex and that of a whirlwind are perfectly similar.”—Jamieson cor. “What I have been saying, throws light upon one important verse in the Bible; which verse I should like to hear some one read.”—Abbott cor. "When there are any circumstances of time, place, and the like, by which the principal terms of our sentence must be limited or qualified."—Blair, Jam. and Mur. cor. "Interjections are words that express emotion, affection, or passion, and that imply suddenness." Or: "Interjections express emotion, affection, or passion, and imply suddenness."—Bucke cor. "But the genitive expressing the measure of things, is used in the plural number only."—Adam and Gould cor. "The buildings of the institution have been enlarged; and an expense has been incurred, which, with the increased price of provisions, renders it necessary to advance the terms of admission."—L. Murray cor. "These sentences are far less difficult than complex ones."—S. S. Greene cor.

Page 1882

Page 1883

"Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife
They sober lived, nor ever wished to stray."—Gray cor.

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE III.—OF DEFINITIONS.

(1.) "A definition is a short and lucid description of a thing, or species, according to its nature and properties."—G. BROWN: Rev. David Blair cor. (2.) "Language, in general, signifies the expression of our ideas by certain articulate sounds, or written words, which are used as the signs of those ideas."—Dr. Hugh Blair cor. (3.) "A word is one or more syllables used by common consent as the sign of an idea."—Bullions cor. (4.) "A word is one or more syllables used as the sign of an idea, or of some manner of thought."—Hazen cor. (5.) "Words are articulate sounds, or their written signs, used to convey ideas."—Hiley cor. (6.) "A word is one or more syllables used orally or in writing, to represent some idea."—Hart cor. (7.) "A word is one or more syllables used as the sign of an idea."—S. W. Clark cor. (8.) "A word is a letter or a combination of letters, a sound or a combination of sounds, used as the sign of an idea."—Wells cor. (9.) "Words are articulate sounds, or their written signs, by which ideas are communicated."—Wright cor. (10.) "Words are certain articulate sounds, or their written representatives, used by common consent as signs of our ideas."—Bullions, Lowth, Murray, et al. cor. (11.) "Words are sounds or written symbols used as signs of our ideas."—W. Allen cor. (12.) "Orthography literally means correct writing"—Kirkham and Smith cor. [The word orthography stands for different things: as, 1. The art or practice of writing words with their proper letters; 2. That part of grammar which treats of letters, syllables, separate words, and spelling.] (13.) "A vowel is a letter which forms a perfect sound when uttered alone.”—Inst., p. 16; Hazen, Lennie, and Brace, cor. (14-18.) “Spelling is the art of expressing words by their proper letters.”—G. BROWN: Lowth and Churchill cor.; also Murray, Ing. et al.; also Comly; also Bullions; also Kirkham and Sanborn. (19.) “A syllable is one or more letters, pronounced by a single impulse of the voice, and constituting a word, or part of a word.”—Lowth, Mur., et al., cor. (20.) “A syllable is a letter or a combination of letters, uttered in one complete sound.”—Brit. Gram. and Buch. cor. (21.) “A syllable is one or more letters representing a distinct sound, or what is uttered by a single impulse of the voice.”—Kirkham cor. (22.) “A syllable is so much of a word as is sounded at once, whether it be the whole or a part.”—Bullions cor. (23.) “A syllable is so many letters as are sounded at once; and is either a word, or a part of a word.”—Picket cor. (24.) “A diphthong is a union of two vowels in one syllable, as in bear and beat.”—Bucke cor. Or: “A diphthong is the meeting of two vowels in one syllable.”—Brit. Gram., p. 15; Buchanan’s, 3. (25.) “A diphthong consists of two vowels put together in one syllable; as ea in beat, oi in voice.”—Guy cor. (26.) “A triphthong consists of three vowels put together in one syllable; as, eau in beauty.”—Id. (27.) “But a triphthong is the union of three vowels in one syllable.”—Bucke cor. Or: “A triphthong is the meeting of three vowels in one syllable.”—British Gram., p. 21; Buchanan’s, 3. (28.) “What is a noun? A noun is the name of something; as, a man, a boy.”—Brit. Gram. and Buchanan cor. (29.) “An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, to describe the object named or referred to.”—Maunder cor. (30.) “An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, to describe or define the object mentioned.”—R. C. Smith cor. (31.) “An adjective is a word which, without assertion or time, serves to describe or define something; as, a good man, every boy.”—Wilcox cor. (32.) “An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, and generally expresses a quality.”—Mur. and Lowth cor. (33.) “An adjective expresses the quality, not of the noun or pronoun to which it is applied, but of the person or thing spoken of; and it may generally be known by the sense which it thus makes in connexion with its noun; as, ‘A good man,’ ‘A genteel woman.’”—Wright cor. (34.) “An adverb is a word used to modify the sense of a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb.”—Wilcox cor. (35.) "An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb, to modify the sense, or denote some circumstance."—Bullions cor. (36.) "A substantive, or noun, is a name given to some object which the senses can perceive, the understanding comprehend, or the imagination entertain."—Wright cor. (37-54.) "Genders are modifications that distinguish objects in regard to sex."—Brown's Inst., p. 35: Bullions cor.: also Frost; also Perley; also Cooper; also L. Murray et al.; also Alden et al.; also Brit. Gram., with Buchanan; also Fowle; also Burn; also Webster; also Coar; also Hall; also Wright; also Fisher; also W. Allen; also Parker and Fox; also Weld; also Weld again. (55 and 56.) "A case, in grammar, is the state or condition of a noun or pronoun, with respect to some other word in the sentence."—Bullions cor.; also Kirkham. (57.) "Cases are modifications that distinguish the relations of nouns and pronouns to other words."—Brown's Inst., p. 36. (58.) "Government is the power which one word has over an other, to cause it to assume some particular modification."—Sanborn et al. cor. See Inst., p. 104. (59.) "A simple sentence is a sentence which contains only one assertion, command, or question."—Sanborn et al. cor. (60.) "Declension means the putting of a noun or pronoun through the different cases and numbers."—Kirkham cor. Or better: "The declension of a word is a regular arrangement of its numbers and cases."—See Inst., p. 37. (61.) "Zeugma is a figure in which two or more words refer in common to an other which literally agrees with only one of them."—B. F. Fish cor. (62.) "An irregular verb is a verb that does not form the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed; as, smite, smote, smitten."—Inst., p. 75. (63.) "A personal pronoun is a pronoun that shows, by its form, of what person it is."—Inst., p. 46.

Page 1884

Page 1885

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE IV.—OF COMPARISONS.

"Our language abounds more in vowel and diphthong sounds, than most other tongues." Or: "We abound more in vowel and diphthongal sounds, than most nations."—Dr. Blair cor. "A line thus accented has a more spirited air, than one which takes the accent on any other syllable."—Kames cor. "Homer introduces his deities with no greater ceremony, that [what] he uses towards mortals; and Virgil has still less moderation than he."—Id. "Which the more refined taste of later writers, whose genius was far inferior to theirs, would have taught them to avoid.”—Dr. Blair cor. “As a poetical composition, however, the Book of Job is not only equal to any other of the sacred writings, but is superior to them all, except those of Isaiah alone.”—Id. “On the whole, Paradise Lost is a poem which abounds with beauties of every kind, and which justly entitles its author to be equalled in fame with any poet.”—Id. “Most of the French writers compose in short sentences; though their style, in general, is not concise; commonly less so than that of most English writers, whose sentences are much longer.”—Id. “The principles of the Reformation were too deeply fixed in the prince’s mind, to be easily eradicated.”—Hume cor. “Whether they do not create jealousy and animosity, more than sufficient to counterbalance the benefit derived from them.”—Leo Wolf cor. “The Scotch have preserved the ancient character of their music more entire, than have the inhabitants of any other country.”—Gardiner cor. “When the time or quantity of one syllable exceeds that of the rest, that syllable readily receives the accent.”—Rush cor. “What then can be more obviously true, than that it should be made as just as we can make it.”—Dymond cor. “It was not likely that they would criminate themselves more than, they could not avoid.”—Clarkson cor. “In their understandings they were the most acute people that have ever lived.”—Knapp cor. “The patentees have printed it with neat types, and upon better paper than was used formerly.”—John Ward cor. “In reality, its relative use is not exactly like that of any other word.”—Felch cor. “Thus, in stead of having to purchase two books,—the Grammar and the Exercises,—the learner finds both in one, for a price at most not greater than that of the others.”—Alb. Argus cor. “They are not improperly regarded as pronouns, though they are less strictly such than the others.”—Bullions cor. “We have had, as will readily be believed, a much better opportunity of becoming conversant with the case, than the generality of our readers can be supposed to have had.”—Brit. Friend cor.

Page 1886

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE V.—OF FALSITIES.

“The long sound of i is like a very quick union of the sound of a, as heard in bar, and that of e, as heard in be.”—Churchill cor. “The omission of a word necessary to grammatical propriety, is of course an impropriety, and not a true ellipsis.”—Priestley cor. “Not every substantive, or noun, is necessarily of the third person.”—A. Murray cor. “A noun is in the third person, when the subject is merely spoken of; and in the second person, when the subject is spoken to; and in the first person, when it names the speaker as such.”—Nutting cor. “With us, no nouns are literally of the masculine or the feminine gender, except the names of male and female creatures.”—Dr. Blair cor. “The apostrophe is a little mark, either denoting the possessive case of nouns, or signifying that something is shortened: as, ‘William’s hat’;—‘the learn’d,’ for ‘the learned.’”—Inf. S. Gram. cor. “When a word beginning with a vowel coupled with one beginning with a consonant, the indefinite article must not be repeated, if the two words be adjectives belonging to one and the same noun; thus, ‘Sir Matthew Hale was a noble and impartial judge’;—‘Pope was an elegant and nervous writer.’”—Maunder cor.[555] “W and y are consonants, when they precede a vowel heard in the same syllable: in every other situation, they are vowels.”—L. Mur. et al. cor. See Inst., p. 16. “The is not varied before adjectives and substantives, let them begin as they will.”—Bucke cor. “A few English prepositions, and many which we have borrowed from other languages, are often prefixed to words, in such a manner as to coalesce with them, and to become parts of the compounds or derivatives thus formed.”—Lowth cor. “H, at the beginning of syllables not accented, is weaker, but not entirely silent; as in historian, widowhood.”—Rev. D. Blair cor. “Not every word that will make sense with to before it, is a verb; for to may govern nouns, pronouns, or participles.”—Kirkham cor. “Most verbs do, in reality, express actions; but they are not intrinsically the mere names of actions: these must of course be nouns.”—Id. “The nominative denotes the actor or subject; and the verb, the action which is performed or received by this actor or subject.”—Id. “But if only one creature or thing acts, more than one action may, at the same instant, be done; as, ‘The girl not only holds her pen badly, but scowls and distorts her features, while she writes’.”—Id. “Nor is each of these verbs of the singular number because it denotes but one action which the girl performs, but because the subject or nominative is of the singular number, and the words must agree.”—Id. “And when I say, ‘Two men walk,’ is it not equally apparent, that walk is plural because it agrees with men?”—Id. “The subjunctive mood is formed by using the simple verb in a suppositive sense, and without personal inflection.”—Beck cor. “The possessive case of nouns, except in instances of apposition or close connexion, should always be distinguished by the apostrophe.—Frost cor. “‘At these proceedings of the Commons:’ Here of is a sign of the objective case; and ‘Commons’ is of that case, being governed by this preposition.”—A. Murray cor. “Here let it be observed again, that, strictly speaking, all finite verbs have numbers and persons; and so have nearly all nouns and pronouns, even when they refer to irrational creatures and inanimate things.”—Barrett cor. “The noun denoting the person or persons addressed or spoken to, is in the nominative case independent: except it be put in apposition with a pronoun of the second person; as, ‘Woe to you lawyers;’—‘You political men are constantly manoeuvring.’”—Frost cor. “Every noun, when used in a direct address and set off by a comma, becomes of the second person, and is in the nominative case absolute; as, ‘Paul, thou art beside thyself.’”—Jaudon cor. “Does the conjunction ever join words together? Yes; the conjunction sometimes joins words together, and sometimes sentences, or certain parts of sentences.”—Brit. Gram. cor.; also Buchanan. “Every noun of the possessive form has a governing noun, expressed or understood: as, St. James’s. Here Palace is understood. But one possessive may govern an other; as, ‘William’s father’s house.’”—Buchanan cor. “Every adjective (with the exceptions noted under Rule 9th) belongs to a noun or pronoun expressed or understood.”—L. Murray et al. cor. “Not every adjective qualifies a substantive, expressed or understood.”—Bullions cor. “Not every adjective belongs to a noun expressed or understood.”—Ingersoll cor. “Adjectives belong to nouns or pronouns, and serve to describe things.”—R. C. Smith cor. “English adjectives, in general, have no modifications in which they can agree with the nouns to which they relate.”—Allen Fisk cor. “The adjective, if it denote unity or plurality, must agree with its substantive in number.”—Buchanan cor. “Not every adjective and participle, by a vast many, belongs to some noun or pronoun, expressed or understood.”—Frost cor. “Not every verb of the infinitive mood, supposes a verb before it, expressed or understood.”—Buchanan cor. “Nor has every adverb its verb, expressed or understood; for some adverbs relate to participles, to adjectives, or to other adverbs.”—Id. “A conjunction that connects one sentence to an other, is not always placed betwixt the two propositions or sentences which it unites.”—Id.

Page 1887

Page 1888

Page 1889

"The words for all that, are by no means 'low;' but the putting of this phrase for yet or still, is neither necessary nor elegant."—L. Murray cor.; also Dr. Priestley. "The reader or hearer then understands from AND, that the author adds one proposition, number, or thing, to an other. Thus AND often, very often, connects one thing with an other thing, or one word with an other word."—James Brown cor. "'Six AND six are twelve.' Here it is affirmed, that the two sixes added together are twelve."—Id. "'John AND his wife have six children.' This is an instance in which AND connects two nominatives in a simple sentence. It is not here affirmed that John has six children, and that his wife has six other children."—Id. "That 'Nothing can be great which is not right,' is itself a great falsity: there are great blunders, great evils, great sins."—L. Murray cor. "The highest degree of reverence should be paid to the most exalted virtue or goodness."—Id. "There is in all minds some knowledge, or understanding."—L. Murray et al. cor. "Formerly, the nominative and objective cases of our pronouns, were more generally distinguished in practice, than they now are."—Kirkham cor. "As it respects a choice of words and expressions, the just rules of grammar may materially aid the learner."—S. S. Greene cor. "The name of whatever exists, or is conceived to exist, is a noun."—Fowler cor. "As not all men are brave, brave is itself distinctive."—Id.

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE VI.—OF ABSURDITIES.

(1.) "And sometimes two unaccented syllables come together."—Dr. Blair cor. (2.) "What nouns frequently stand together?" Or: "What nouns are frequently used one after an other?"—Sanborn cor. (3.) "Words are derived from other words in various ways."—Idem et al. cor. (4.) "The name PREPOSITION is derived from the two Latin words prae and pono, which signify before and place."—Mack cor. (5.) "He was much laughed at for such conduct."—Bullions cor. (6.) "Every pronominal adjective belongs to some noun, expressed or understood."—Ingersoll cor. (7.) "If he [Addison] fails in any thing, it is in strength and precision; the want of which renders his manner not altogether a proper model."—Dr. Blair cor. (8.) "Indeed, if Horace is deficient in any thing his fault is this, of not being sufficiently attentive to juncture, or the connexion of parts."—Id. (9.) "The pupil is now supposed to be acquainted with the ten parts of speech, and their most usual modifications."—Taylor cor.

Page 1890

(10.) "I could see, feel, taste, and smell the rose."—Sanborn cor. (11.) "The vowels iou are sometimes pronounced distinctly in two syllables; as in various, abstemious; but not in bilious."—Murray and Walker cor. (12.) "The diphthong aa generally sounds like a short; as in Balaam, Canaan, Isaac; in Baael and Gaael, we make no diphthong."—L. Mur. cor. (13.) "Participles cannot be said to be 'governed by the article;' for any participle, with an article before it, becomes a substantive, or an adjective used substantively: as, the learning, the learned."—Id. (14.) "From words ending with y preceded by a consonant, we form the plurals of nouns, the persons of verbs, agent nouns, perfect participles, comparatives, and superlatives, by changing the y into i, and adding es, ed, er, eth, or est."—Walker, Murray, et al. cor. (15.) "But y preceded by a vowel, remains unchanged, in the derivatives above named; as, boy, boys."—L. Murray et al. cor. (16.) "But when the final y is preceded by a vowel, it remains unchanged before an additional syllable; as, coy, coyly."—Id. (17.) "But y preceded by a vowel, remains unchanged, in almost all instances; as, coy, coyly."—Kirkham cor. (18.) "Sentences are of two kinds, simple and compound."—Wright cor. (19.) "The neuter pronoun it may be employed to introduce a nominative of any person, number, or gender: as, 'It is he;'—'It is she;'—'It is they;'—'It is the land.'"—Bucke cor. (20 and 21.) "It is and it was, are always singular; but they may introduce words of a plural construction: as, 'It was the heretics that first began to rail.' SMOLLETT."—Merchant cor.; also Priestley et al. (22.) "W and y, as consonants, have each of them one sound."—Town cor. (23.) "The word as is frequently a relative pronoun."—Bucke cor. (24.) "From a series of clauses, the conjunction may sometimes be omitted with propriety."—Merchant cor. (25.) "If, however, the two members are very closely connected, the comma is unnecessary; as, 'Revelation tells us how we may attain happiness.'"—L. Murray et al. cor. (26-27.) "The mind has difficulty in taking effectually, in quick succession, so many different views of the same object."—Dr. Blair cor.; also L. Mur. (28.) "Pronominal adjectives are a kind of definitives, which may either accompany their nouns, or represent them understood."—Kirkham cor. (29.) "When the nominative or antecedent is a collective noun conveying the idea of plurality, the verb or pronoun must agree with it in the plural number.—Id. et al. cor. (30-34.) “A noun or a pronoun in the possessive case, is governed by the name of the thing possessed.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 176; Greenleaf cor.; also Wilbur and Livingston; also Goldsbury; also P. E. Day; also Kirkham, Frazee, and Miller. (35.) “Here the boy is represented as acting: the word boy is therefore in the nominative case.”—Kirkham cor. (36.) “Do, be, have, and will, are sometimes auxiliaries, and sometimes principal verbs.”—Cooper cor. (37.) “Names of males are masculine. Names of females are feminine.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 10; Beck cor. (38.) “‘To-day’s lesson is longer than yesterday’s.’ Here to-day’s and yesterday’s are substantives.”—L. Murray et al. cor. (39.) “In this example, to-day’s and yesterday’s are nouns in the possessive case.”—Kirkham cor. (40.) “An Indian in Britain would be much surprised to find by chance an elephant feeding at large in the open fields.”—Kames cor. (41.) “If we were to contrive a new language, we might make any articulate sound the sign of any idea: apart from previous usage, there would be no impropriety in calling oxen men, or rational beings oxen.”—L. Murray cor. (42.) “All the parts of a sentence should form a consistent whole.”—Id et al. cor.

Page 1891

(43.) “Full through his neck the weighty falchion sped, Along the pavement rolled the culprit’s head.”—Pope cor.

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE VII.—OF SELF-CONTRADICTION.

(1.) “Though ‘The king, with the lords and commons,’ must have a singular rather than a plural verb, the sentence would certainly stand better thus: ‘The king, the lords, and the commons, form an excellent constitution.’”—Mur. and Ing. cor. (2-3.) “L has a soft liquid sound; as in love, billow, quarrel. This letter is sometimes silent; as in half, task [sic for ‘talk’—KTH], psalm.”—Mur. and Fisk cor.; also Kirkham. (4.) “The words means and amends, though regularly derived from the singulars mean and amend, are not now, even by polite writers, restricted to the plural number. Our most distinguished modern authors often say, ‘by this means,’ as well as, ‘by these means.’”—Wright cor. (5.) “A friend exaggerates a man’s virtues; an enemy, his crimes.”—Mur. cor. (6.) “The auxiliary have, or any form of the perfect tense, belongs not properly to the subjunctive mood. We suppose past facts by the indicative: as, If I have loved, If thou hast loved, &c.”—Merchant cor. (7.) "There is also an impropriety in using both the indicative and the subjunctive mood with the same conjunction; as, 'If a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them is gone astray,' &c. [This is Merchant's perversion of the text. It should be, 'and one of them go astray:' or, 'be gone astray,' as in Matt., xviii. 12.]"—Id. (8.) "The rising series of contrasts conveys transcendent dignity and energy to the conclusion."—Jamieson cor. (9.) "A groan or a shriek is instantly understood, as a language extorted by distress, a natural language which conveys a meaning that words are not adequate to express. A groan or a shriek speaks to the ear with a far more thrilling effect than words: yet even this natural language of distress may be counterfeited by art."—Dr. Porter cor. (10.) "If these words [book and pen] cannot be put together in such a way as will constitute plurality, then they cannot be 'these words;' and then, also, one and one cannot be two."—James Brown cor. (11.) "Nor can the real pen and the real book be added or counted together in words, in such a manner as will not constitute plurality in grammar."—Id. (12.) "Our is a personal pronoun, of the possessive case. Murray does not decline it."—Mur. cor. (13.) "This and that, and their plurals these and those, are often opposed to each other in a sentence. When this or that is used alone, i.e., without contrast, this is applied to what is present or near; that, to what is absent or distant."—Buchanan cor. (14.) "Active and neuter verbs may be conjugated by adding their imperfect participle to the auxiliary verb be, through all its variations."—"Be is an auxiliary whenever it is placed before either the perfect or the imperfect participle of an other verb; but, in every other situation, it is a principal verb."—Kirkham cor. (15.) "A verb in the imperative mood is almost always of the second person."—"The verbs, according to a foreign idiom, or the poet's license, are used in the imperative, agreeing with a nominative of the first or third person."—Id. (16.) "A personal pronoun, is a pronoun that shows, by its form, of what person it is."—"Pronouns of the first person do not disagree in person with the nouns they represent."—Id. (17.) "Nouns have three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective."—"Personal pronouns have, like nouns, three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective."—Beck cor. (18.) "In many instances the preposition suffers a change and becomes an adverb by its mere application."—L.

Page 1892

Page 1893

Murray cor. (19.) "Some nouns are used only in the plural; as, ashes, literati, minutiae. Some nouns have the same form in both numbers; as, sheep, deer, series, species. Among the inferior parts of speech, there are some pairs or couples."—Rev. D. Blair cor. (20.) "Concerning the pronominal adjectives, that may, or may not, represent their nouns."—O. B. Peirce cor. (21.) "The word a is in a few instances employed in the sense of a preposition; as, 'Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing;' i. e., I go to fishing."—Weld cor. (22.) "So, too, verbs that are commonly transitive, are used intransitively, when they have no object."—Bullions cor.

(23.) "When first young Maro, in his boundless mind,
A work t' outlast imperial Rome design'd."—Pope cor.

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE VIII.—OF SENSELESS JUMBLING.

"There are two numbers, called the singular and the plural, which distinguish nouns as signifying either one thing, or many of the same kind."—Dr. H. Blair cor. "Here James Monroe is addressed, he is spoken to; the name is therefore a noun of the second person."—Mack cor. "The number and person of an English verb can seldom be ascertained until its nominative is known."—Emmons cor. "A noun of multitude, or a singular noun signifying many, may have a verb or a pronoun agreeing with it in either number; yet not without regard to the import of the noun, as conveying the idea of unity or plurality."—Lowth et al. cor. "To form the present tense and the past imperfect of our active or neuter verbs, the auxiliary do, and its preterit did, are sometimes used: as, I do now love; I did then love."—Lowth cor. "If these be perfectly committed to memory, the learner will be able to take twenty lines for his second lesson, and the task may be increased each day."—Osborn cor. "Ch is generally sounded in the same manner as if it were tch: as in Charles, church, cheerfulness, and cheese. But, in Latin or Greek words, ch is pronounced like k: as in Chaos, character, chorus, and chimera. And, in words derived from the French, ch is sounded like sh: as in Chagrin, chicanery, and chaise."—Bucke cor. "Some nouns literally neuter, are made masculine or feminine by a figure of speech."—L. Murray et al. cor. "In the English language, words may be classified under ten general heads: the sorts, or chief classes, of words, are usually termed the ten parts of speech.”—Nutting cor. “‘Mercy is the true badge of nobility.’ Nobility is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case; and is governed by of.”—Kirkham cor. “Gh is either silent, as in plough, or has the sound of f, as in laugh.”—Town cor. “Many nations were destroyed, and as many languages or dialects were lost and blotted out from the general catalogue.”—Chazotte cor. “Some languages contain a greater number of moods than others, and each exhibits its own as forms peculiar to itself.”—L. Murray cor. “A SIMILE is a simple and express comparison; and is generally introduced by like, as, or so.”—Id. See Inst., p. 233. “The word what is sometimes improperly used for the conjunction that.”—Priestley, Murray, et al., cor. “Brown makes no ado in condemning the absurd principles of preceding works, in relation to the gender of pronouns.”—O. B. Peirce cor. “The nominative usually precedes the verb, and denotes the agent of the action.”—Wm. Beck cor. “Primitive words are those which are not formed from other words more simple.”—Wright cor. “In monosyllables, the single vowel i always preserves its long sound before a single consonant with e final; as in thine, strive: except in give and live, which are short; and in shire, which has the sound of long e.”—L. Murray, et al. cor. “But the person or thing that is merely spoken of, being frequently absent, and perhaps in many respects unknown to the hearer, it is thought more necessary, that the third person should be marked by a distinction of gender.”—Lowth, Mur., et al., cor. “Both vowels of every diphthong were, doubtless, originally vocal. Though in many instances they are not so at present, the combinations in which one only is heard, still retain the name of diphthongs, being distinguished from others by the term improper.”—L. Mur., et al. cor. “Moods are different forms of the verb, each of which expresses the being, action, or passion, in some particular manner.”—Inst., p. 33; A. Mur. cor. “The word THAT is a demonstrative adjective, whenever it is followed by a noun to which it refers.”—L. Mur. cor.

Page 1894

“The guilty soul by Jesus wash’d,
Is future glory’s deathless heir.”—Fairfield cor.

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE IX.—OF WORDS NEEDLESS.

Page 1895

"A knowledge of grammar enables us to express ourselves better in conversation and in writing."—Sanborn cor. "And hence we infer, that there is no dictator here but use."—Jamieson cor. "Whence little is gained, except correct spelling and pronunciation."—Town cor. "The man who is faithfully attached to religion, may be relied on with confidence."—Merchant cor. "Shalt thou build me a house to dwell in?" Or: "Shalt thou build a house for me to dwell in?"—Bible cor. "The house was deemed polluted which was entered by so abandoned a woman."—Dr. Blair cor. "The farther he searches, the firmer will be his belief."—Keith cor. "I deny not that religion consists in these things."—Barclay cor. "Except the king delighted in her, and she were called by name."—Bible cor. "The proper method of reading these lines, is, to read them as the sense dictates."—Dr. Blair cor. "When any words become obsolete, or are used only in particular phrases, it is better to dispense with their service entirely, and give up the phrases."—Campbell and Mur cor. "Those savage people seemed to have no element but war."—L. Mur. cor. "Man is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, masculine gender, and nominative case."—J. Flint cor. "The orator, as circumstances require, will employ them all."—Dr. Blair cor. "By deferring repentance [sic—KTH], we accumulate our sorrows."—L. Murray cor. "There is no doubt that public speaking became early an engine of government."—Dr. Blair cor. "The different meanings of these two words, may not at first occur."—Id. "The sentiment is well expressed by Plato, but much better by Solomon."—L. Murray et al. cor. "They have had a greater privilege than we."—L. Mur. cor. "Every thing should be so arranged, that what goes before, may give light and force to what follows."—Dr. Blair cor. "So that his doctrines were embraced by great numbers."—Hist. cor. "They have taken an other and shorter cut."—South cor. "The imperfect tense of a regular verb is formed from the present by adding d or ed; as, love, loved."—Frost cor. "The pronoun their does not agree in number with the noun 'man', for which it stands."—Kirkham cor. "This mark [!] denotes wonder, surprise, joy, grief, or sudden emotion."—Bucke cor. "We all are accountable, each for himself."—L. Mur. et al. cor. "If he has commanded it, I must obey."—R. C. Smith cor. "I now present him a form of the diatonic scale."—Barber cor. "One after an other, their favourite rivers have been reluctantly abandoned." Or: "One after an other of their favourite rivers have they reluctantly abandoned."—Hodgson cor. "Particular and peculiar are words of different import."—Dr.

Page 1896

Blair cor. "Some adverbs admit of comparison; as, soon, sooner, soonest."—Bucke cor. "Having exposed himself too freely in different climates, he entirely lost his health."—L. Mur. cor. "The verb must agree with its nominative in number and person."—Buchanan cor. "Write twenty short sentences containing adjectives."—Abbott cor. "This general tendency of the language seems to have given occasion to a very great corruption."—Churchill's Gram., p. 113. "The second requisite of a perfect sentence is unity."—L. Murray cor. "It is scarcely necessary to apologize for omitting their names."—Id. "The letters of the English alphabet are twenty-six."—Id. et al. cor. "He who employs antiquated or novel phraseology, must do it with design; he cannot err from inadvertence, as he may with respect to provincial or vulgar expressions."—Jamieson cor. "The vocative case, in some grammars, is wholly omitted; why, if we must have cases, I could never understand."—Bucke cor. "Active verbs are conjugated with the auxiliary verb have; passive verbs, with the auxiliary am or be."—Id. "What then may AND be called? A conjunction."—Smith cor. "Have they ascertained who gave the information?"—Bullions cor.

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE X.—OF IMPROPER OMISSIONS.

"All words signifying concrete qualities of things, are called adnouns, or adjectives."—Rev. D. Blair cor. "The macron [=] signifies a long or accented syllable, and the breve [~] indicates a short or unaccented syllable."—Id. "Whose duty it is, to help young ministers."—Friends cor. "The passage is closely connected with what precedes and what follows."—Phil. Mu. cor. "The work is not completed, but it soon will be."—R. C. Smith cor. "Of whom hast thou been afraid, or whom hast thou feared?"—Bible cor. "There is a God who made, and who governs, the world."—Bp. Butler cor. "It was this that made them so haughty."—Goldsmith cor. "How far the whole charge affected him, it is not easy to determine."—Id. "They saw these wonders of nature, and worshiped the God that made them."—Bucke cor. "The errors frequent in the use of hyperboles, arise either from overstraining them, or from introducing them on unsuitable occasions."—L. Mur. cor. "The preposition in is set before the names of countries, cities, and large towns; as, 'He lives in France, in London, or in Birmingham.' But, before the names of villages, single houses, or foreign cities, at is used; as, 'He lives at Hackney.'"—Id. et al. cor. "And, in such recollection, the thing is not figured as in our view, nor is any image formed.”—Kames cor. “Intrinsic beauty and relative beauty must be handled separately.”—Id. “He should be on his guard not to do them injustice by disguising them or placing them in a false light.”—Dr. Blair cor. “In perusing that work, we are frequently interrupted by the author’s unnatural thoughts.”—L. Murray cor. “To this point have tended all the rules which I have just given.”—Dr. Blair cor. “To this point have tended all the rules which have just been given.”—L. Murray cor. “Language, as written, or as oral, is addressed to the eye, or to the ear.”—Journal cor. “He will learn, Sir, that to accuse and to prove are very different.”—Walpole cor. “They crowded around the door so as to prevent others from going out.”—Abbott cor. “A word denoting one person or thing, is of the singular number; a word denoting more than one person or thing: is of the plural number.”—J. Flint cor. “Nouns, according to the sense or relation in which they are used, are in the nominative, the possessive, or the objective case: thus, Nom. man. Poss. man’s, Obj. man.”—Rev. D. Blair cor. “Nouns or pronouns in the possessive case are placed before the nouns which govern them, and to which they belong.”—Sanborn cor. “A teacher is explaining the difference between a noun and a verb.”—Abbott cor. “And therefore the two ends, or extremities, must directly answer to the north and the south pole.”—Harris cor. “WALKS or WALKETH, RIDES or RIDETH, and STANDS or STANDETH, are of the third person singular.”—Kirkham cor. “I grew immediately roguish and pleasant, to a high degree, in the same strain.”—Swift cor. “An Anapest has the first two syllables unaccented, and the last one accented.”—Rev. D. Blair cor.; also Kirkham et al.; also L. Mur. et al. “But hearing and vision differ not more than words spoken and words written.” Or: “But hearing and vision do not differ more than spoken words and written.”—Wilson cor. “They are considered by some authors to be prepositions.”—Cooper cor. “When those powers have been deluded and have gone astray.”—Phil Mu. cor. “They will understand this, and will like it.”—Abbott cor. “They had been expelled from their native country Romagna.”—Hunt cor. “Future time is expressed in two different ways.”—Adam and Gould cor. “Such as the borrowing of some noted event from history.”—Kames cor. “Every finite verb must agree with its nominative in number and person.”—Bucke cor. “We are struck, we know not how, with the symmetry of any handsome thing we see.”—L. Murray cor. “Under this head, I shall consider every thing that is necessary to a good delivery.”—Sheridan cor. “A good ear is the gift of nature; it may be much improved, but it cannot be acquired by art.”—L. Murray cor. “‘Truth’ is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case.”—Bullions cor. by Brown’s Form. “‘Possess’ is a regular active-transitive verb, found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and plural number.”—Id. “‘Fear’ is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case: and is the subject of is: according to the Rule which says, ‘A noun or a pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, must be in the nominative case.’ Because the meaning is—‘fear is.’”—Id. “‘Is’ is an irregular neuter verb, from be, was, being, been; found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and singular number: and agrees with its nominative fear; according to the Rule which says, ‘Every finite verb must agree with its subject, or nominative, in person and number’ Because the meaning is—‘fear is.’”—Id. “Ae in the word Gaelic, has the sound of long a.”—Wells cor.

Page 1897

Page 1898

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE XI.—OF LITERARY BLUNDERS.

“Repeat some adverbs that are composed of the prefix or preposition a and nouns.”—Kirkham cor. “Participles are so called, because they participate or partake the properties of verbs and of adjectives or nouns. The Latin word participium, which signifies a participle, is derived from participo, to partake.”—Merchant cor. “The possessive precedes an other noun, and is known by the sign ‘s, or by this ‘, the apostrophe only.”—Beck cor. “Reciprocal pronouns, or compound personal pronouns, are formed by adding self or selves to the simple possessives of the first and second persons, and to the objectives of the third person; as, myself, yourselves, himself, themselves.”—Id. “The word SELF, and its plural SELVES, when used separately as names, must be considered as nouns; but when joined to the simple pronouns, they are not nouns, but parts of the compound personal pronouns.”—Wright cor. “The Spondee ‘rolls round,’ expresses beautifully the majesty of the sun in his course.”—Webster and Frazee cor. “Active-transitive verbs govern the objective case; as, ‘John learned his lesson.’”—Frazee cor. “Prosody primarily signified accent, or the modulation of the voice; and, as the name implies, related to poetry, or song.”—Hendrick

Page 1899

cor. "On such a principle of forming them, there would be as many moods as verbs; and, in stead of four moods, we should have four thousand three hundred, which is the number of verbs in the English language, according to Lowth." [556]—Hallock cor. "The phrases, 'To let out blood,'—'To go a hunting,' are not elliptical; for out is needless, and a is a preposition, governing hunting."—Bullions cor. "In Rhyme, the last syllable of every line corresponds in sound with that of some other line or lines."—Id. "The possessive case plural, where the nominative ends in s, has the apostrophe only; as, 'Eagles' wings,'—'lions' whelps,'—'bears' claws.'"—Weld cor. "'Horses-manes,' plural, should be written possessively, 'horses' manes:'" [one "mane" is never possessed by many "horses."]—Id. "W takes its usual form from the union of two Vees, V being the figure of the Roman capital letter which was anciently called U."—Fowler cor. "In the sentence, 'I saw the lady who sings,' what word is nominative to SINGS?"—J. Flint cor. "In the sentence, 'This is the pen which John made,' what word expresses the object of MADE?"—Id. "'That we fall into no sin:' no is a definitive or pronominal adjective, not compared, and relates to sin."—Rev. D. Blair cor. "'That all our doings may be ordered by thy governance:' all is a pronominal adjective, not compared, and relates to doings."—Id. "'Let him be made to study.' Why is the sign to expressed before study? Because be made is passive; and passive verbs do not take the infinitive after them without the preposition to."—Sanborn cor. "The following verbs have both the preterit tense and the perfect participle like the present: viz., Cast, cut, cost, shut, let, bid, shed, hurt, hit, put, &c."—Buchanan cor. "The agreement which any word has with an other in person, number, gender, or case, is called CONCORD; and the power which one word has over an other, in respect to ruling its case, mood, or form, is called GOVERNMENT."—Bucke cor. "The word ticks tells what the watch is doing."—Sanborn cor. "The Breve ([~]) marks a short vowel or syllable, and the Macron ([=]), a long one."—Bullions and Lennie cor. "'Charles, you, by your diligence, make easy work of the task given you by your preceptor.' The first you is in the nominative case, being the subject of the verb make."—Kirkham cor. "Uoy in buoy is a proper triphthong; eau in flambeau is an improper triphthong."—Sanborn cor.

Page 1900

“While I of things to come, As past rehearsing, sing.’—POLLOCK. That is, ‘While I sing of things to come, as if I were rehearsing things that are past.’”—Kirkham cor. “A simple sentence usually has in it but one nominative, and but one finite verb.”—Folker cor. “An irregular verb is a verb that does not form the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 75. “But, when the antecedent is used in a restricted sense, a comma is sometimes inserted before the relative; as, ‘There is no charm in the female sex, which can supply the place of virtue.’”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 273. Or: “But, when the antecedent is used in a restricted sense, no comma is usually inserted before the relative; as, ‘There is in the female sex no charm which can supply the place of virtue.’”—Kirkham cor. “Two capitals used in this way, denote different words; but one repeated, marks the plural number: as, L. D. Legis Doctor; LL. D. Legum Doctor.”—Gould cor. “Was any person present besides the mercer? Yes; his clerk.”—L. Murray cor. “The word adjective comes from the Latin adjectivum; and this, from ad, to, and jacio, I cast.”—Kirkham cor. “Vision, or Imagery, is a figure by which the speaker represents the objects of his imagination, as actually before his eyes, and present to his senses. Thus Cicero, in his fourth oration against Cataline: ‘I seem to myself to behold this city, the ornament of the earth, and the capital of all nations, suddenly involved in one conflagration. I see before me the slaughtered heaps of citizens lying unburied in the midst of their ruined country. The furious countenance of Ceth[=e]’gus rises to my view, while with savage joy he is triumphing in your miseries.’”—Dr. Blair cor.; also L. Murray. “When two or more verbs follow the same nominative, an auxiliary that is common to them both or all, is usually expressed to the first, and understood to the rest: as, ‘He has gone and left me;’ that is, ‘He has gone and has left me.’”—Comly cor. “When I use the word pillar to denote a column that supports an edifice, I employ it literally.”—Hiley cor. “In poetry, the conjunction nor is often used for neither; as

‘A stately superstructure, that nor wind,
Nor wave, nor shock of falling years, could move.’—POLLOCK.”—Id.

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE XII—OF PERVERSIONS.

Page 1901

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."—Genesis, i, 1. "Canst thou by searching find out God?"—Job, xi, 7. "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints."—Rev., xv, 3. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matt., vii, 21. "Though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor."—2 Cor., viii, 9. "Whose foundation was overthrown with a flood."—SCOTT'S BIBLE: Job, xxii, 16. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me;" &c.—Matt., xi, 29. "I go to prepare a place for you."—John, xiv, 2. "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins."—Ephesians, ii, 1. "Go, flee thee away into the land of Judah."—Amos, vii, 12; Lowth's Gram., p. 44. Or: "Go, flee away into the land of Judah."—Hart cor. "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further."—Job, xxxviii, 11. "The day is thine, the night also is thine."—Psal., lxxiv, 16. "Tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope."—Romans, v, 4. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes, xii, 7. "At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder. Thine eyes shall behold strange women, and thine heart shall utter perverse things: Yea, thou shalt be as he that lieth down in the midst of the sea."—Prov., xxiii, 32, 33, 34. "The memory of the just is blessed; but the name of the wicked shall rot."—Prov., x, 7. "He that is slow to anger, is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city."—Prov., xvi, 32. "For whom the Lord loveth, he correcteth; even as a father the son in whom he delighteth."—Prov., iii, 12. "The first-future tense is that which expresses what will take place hereafter."—Brown's Inst. of E. Gram., p. 54. "Teach me to feel another's woe, To hide the fault I see."—Pope's Univ. Prayer. "Surely thou art one of them; for thou art a Galilean."—Mark, xiv, 70. "Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee."—Matt., xxvi, 73. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life."—Matt., vii, 14. "Thou buildest the wall, that thou mayest be their king."—Nehemiah, vi, 6. "There is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared."—Psalms, cxxx, 4. "But yesterday, the word of Caesar might Have stood against the world."—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 250. "The North-East spends his rage.”—Thomson’s Seasons, p. 34. “Tells how the drudging goblin swet.”—Milton’s Allegro, l. 105. “And to his faithful champion hath in place Borne witness gloriously.”—Milton’s Sam. Agon., l. 1752. “Then, if thou fall’st, O Cromwell, Thou fall’st a blessed martyr.”—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 173. Better: “Then, if thou fall, O Cromwell! thou fallst a blessed martyr.”—Shak. and Kirk. cor. “I see the dagger-crest of Mar, I see the Moray’s silver star, Wave o’er the cloud of Saxon war, That up the lake comes winding far!”—Scott’s Lady of the Lake, p. 162. “Each beast, each insect, happy in its own.”—Pope, on Man, Ep. i, l. 185. “And he that is learning to arrange his sentences with accuracy and order, is learning, at the same time, to think with accuracy and order.”—Blair’s Lect., p. 120. “We, then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain.”—2 Cor., vi, 1. “And on the boundless of thy goodness calls.”—Young’s Last Day, B. ii, l. 320. “Knowledge dwells In heads replete with thoughts of other men; Wisdom, in minds attentive to their own.”—Cowper’s Task, B. vi, l. 90. “O! let me listen to the words of life!”—Thomson’s Paraphrase on Matt. vi. “Save that, from yonder ivy-mantled tower.” &c.—Gray’s Elegy, l. 9. “Weighs the men’s wits against the Lady’s hair.”—Pope’s Rape of the Lock, Canto v, l. 72. “Till the publication of Dr. Lowth’s small Introduction, the grammatical study of our language formed no part of the ordinary method of instruction.”—Hiley’s Preface, p. vi. “Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee.”—Gen., xiii, 8.

Page 1902

“What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?”—Shakspeare.

“Till then who knew the force of those dire arms?”—Milton.

“In words, as fashions, the same rule will hold;
Alike fantastic, if too new or old:
Be not the first by whom the new are tried
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.”—Pope, on Criticism, l. 333.

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE XIII.—OF AWKWARDNESS.

“They slew Varus, whom I mentioned before.”—L. Murray cor. “Maria rejected Valerius, whom she had rejected before.” Or: “Maria rejected Valerius a second time.”—Id. “In the English language, nouns have but two different terminations for cases.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 64. “Socrates and Plato were the wisest men, and the most eminent philosophers in Greece.”—Buchanan’s Gram., Pref., p. viii. “Whether more than one were concerned in the business, does not yet appear." Or: "How many were concerned in the business, does not yet appear."—L. Murray cor. "And that, consequently, the verb or pronoun agreeing with it, can never with propriety be used in the plural number."—Id. et al. cor. "A second help may be, frequent and free converse with others of your own sex who are like minded."—Wesley cor. "Four of the semivowels, namely, l, m, n, and r, are termed LIQUIDS, on account of the fluency of their sounds."—See Brown's Inst., p. 16. "Some conjunctions are used in pairs, so that one answers to an other, as its regular correspondent."—Lowth et al. cor. "The mutes are those consonants whose sounds cannot be protracted; the semivowels have imperfect sounds of their own, which can be continued at pleasure."—Murray et al. cor. "HE and SHE are sometimes used as nouns, and, as such, are regularly declined: as, 'The hes in birds.'—BACON. 'The shes of Italy.'—SHAK."—Churchill cor. "The separation of a preposition from the word which it governs, is [censured by some writers, as being improper."—C. Adams cor. "The word WHOSE, according to some critics, should be restricted to persons; but good writers still occasionally use it with reference to things."—Priestley et al. cor. "New and surpassing wonders present themselves to our view."—Sherlock cor. "The degrees of comparison are often inaccurately applied and construed."—Alger's Murray. Or: "Passages are often found in which the degrees of comparison have not an accurate construction."—Campbell cor.; also Murray et al. "The sign of possession is placed too far from the name, to form a construction that is either perspicuous or agreeable."—L. Murray cor. "The simple tenses are those which are formed by the principal verb without an auxiliary."—Id. "The more intimate men are, the more they affect one another's happiness."—Id. "This is the machine that he invented."—Nixon cor. "To give this sentence the interrogative form, we must express it thus." Or: "This sentence, to have the interrogative form, should be expressed thus."—L. Murray cor. "Never employ words that are susceptible of a sense different from that which you intend to convey."—Hiley cor. "Sixty pages are occupied in explaining what, according to the ordinary method, would not require more than ten or twelve."—Id. "The participle in ing always expresses action, suffering, or being, as continuing, or in progress."—Bullions cor. "The first participle of all active verbs, has usually an active signification; as, 'James is building the house.' Often, however, it takes a passive meaning; as, 'The house is building.'"—Id. "Previously to parsing this sentence, the young pupil may be taught to analyze it, by such questions as the following: viz."—Id. "Since that period, however, attention has been paid to this important subject."—Id. and Hiley cor. "A definition of a word is a brief explanation of what it means."—G. BROWN: Hiley cor.

Page 1903

Page 1904

UNDER CRITICAL NOTE XIV.—OF IGNORANCE.

"What is a verb? It is a word which signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon." Or thus: "What is an assertor? Ans. 'One who affirms positively; an affirmer, supporter, or vindicator.'"—WEBSTER'S DICT.—Peirce cor. "Virgil wrote the AEneid."—Kirkham cor. "Which, to a supercilious or inconsiderate native of Japan, would seem very idle and impertinent."—Locke cor. "Will not a look of disdain cast upon you throw you into a ferment?"—Say cor. "Though only the conjunction if is here set before the verb, there are several others, (as that, though, lest, unless, except,) which may be used with the subjunctive mood."—L. Murray cor. "When proper names have an article before them, they are used as common names."—Id. et al. cor. "When a proper noun has an article before it, it is used as a common noun."—Merchant cor. "Seeming to rob the death-field of its terrors."—Id. "For the same reason, we might, without any detriment to the language, dispense with the terminations of our verbs in the singular."—Kirkham cor. "It removes all possibility of being misunderstood."—Abbott cor. "Approximation to perfection is all that we can expect."—Id. "I have often joined in singing with musicians at Norwich."—Gardiner cor. "When not standing in regular prosaic order." Or:—"in the regular order of prose."—O. B. Peirce cor. "Regardless of the dogmas and edicts of the philosophical umpire."—Kirkham cor. "Others begin to talk before their mouths are open, prefixing the mouth-closing M to most of their words; as, 'M-yes,' for 'Yes.'"—Gardiner cor. "That noted close of his 'esse videatur,' exposed him to censure among his contemporaries."—Dr. Blair cor. "A man's own is what he has, or possesses by right; the word own being a past participle of the verb to owe, which formerly signified to have or possess."—Kirkham cor. "As requires so; expressing a comparison of manner; as, 'As the one dieth, so dieth the other.'"—L.

Page 1905

Mur. et al. cor. "To obey our parents, is an obvious duty."—Parker and Fox cor. "Almost all the political papers of the kingdom have touched upon these things."—H. C. Wright cor. "I shall take the liberty to make a few observations on the subject."—Hiley cor. "His loss I have endeavoured to supply, so far as by additional vigilance and industry I could."—Id. "That they should make vegetation so exuberant as to anticipate every want."—Frazee cor. "The guillemets, or quotation points, ["""] denote that one or more words are extracted from an other author."—P. E. Day cor. "Nineveh, the capital of Assyria, was one of the most noted cities of ancient times."—Id. "It may, however, be rendered definite by the mention of some particular time; as, yesterday, last week, &c."—Bullions cor. "The last is called heroic measure, and is the same that is used by Milton, Young, Thomson, Pollok. &c."—Id. "Perennial ones must be sought in the delightful regions above."—Hallock cor. "Intransitive verbs are those which are inseparable from the effect produced." Or better: "Intransitive verbs are those which express action without governing an object."—Cutler cor. "The Feminine gender belongs to women, and animals of the female kind."—Id. "Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!"—ALGER'S BIBLE: Luke, xi, 44. "A pyrrhic, which has both its syllables short."—Day cor. "What kind of jessamine? A jessamine in flower, or a flowery jessamine."—Barrett cor. "LANGUAGE, a word derived from LINGUA, the tongue, now signifies any series of sounds or letters formed into words, and used for the expression of thought."—Id. See this Gram. of E. Grammars, p. 145. "Say 'none,' not 'ne'er a one.'"—Staniford cor. "'E'er a one,' [is sometimes used for 'any' or 'either.'"—Pond cor.

"Earth loses thy pattern for ever and aye;
O sailor-boy! sailor-boy! peace to thy soul."
—Dymond.

"His brow was sad; his eye beneath Flashed like a falchion from its sheath."
—Longfellow's Ballads, p. 129.

[Fist] [The examples exhibited for exercises under Critical Notes 15th and 16th, being judged either incapable of correction, or unworthy of the endeavour, are submitted to the criticism of the reader, without any attempt to amend them, or to offer substitutes in this place.]

PROMISCUOUS CORRECTIONS OF FALSE SYNTAX.

LESSON I.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

Page 1906

"Why is our language less refined than that of Italy, Spain, or France?"—L. Murray cor.
"Why is our language less refined than the French?"—Ingersoll cor. "I believe your Lordship will agree with me, in the reason why our language is less refined than that of Italy, Spain, or France."—Swift cor. "Even in this short sentence, 'why our language is less refined than those of Italy, Spain, or France,' we may discern an inaccuracy; the pronominal adjective 'those' is made plural, when the substantive to which it refers, or the thing for which it stands, 'the language of Italy, Spain, or France,' is singular."—Dr. H. Blair cor. "The sentence would have run much better in this way:—'why our language is less refined than the Italian, the Spanish, or the French.'"—Id. "But when arranged in an entire sentence, as they must be to make a complete sense, they show it still more evidently."—L. Murray cor. "This is a more artificial and refined construction, than that in which the common connective is simply used."—Id. "I shall present to the reader a list of certain prepositions or prefixes, which are derived from the Latin and Greek languages."—Id. "A relative sometimes comprehends the meaning of a personal pronoun and a copulative conjunction."—Id. "Personal pronouns, being used to supply the places of nouns, are not often employed in the same clauses with the nouns which they represent."—Id. and Smith cor. "There is very seldom any occasion for a substitute where the principal word is present."—L. Mur. cor. "We hardly consider little children as persons, because the term person gives us the idea of reason, or intelligence."—Priestley et al. cor. "The occasions for exerting these two qualities are different."—Dr. Blair et al. cor. "I'll tell you with whom time ambles withal, with whom time trots withal, with whom time gallops withal, and with whom he stands still withal. I pray thee, with whom doth he trot withal?"—Buchanan's Gram., p. 122. "By greatness, I mean, not the bulk of any single object only but the largeness of a whole view."—Addison cor. "The question may then be put, What more does he than mean?"—Dr. Blair cor. "The question might be put, What more does he than mean?"—Id. "He is surprised to find himself at so great a distance from the object with which he set out."—Id.; also Murray cor. "Few rules can be given which will hold good in all cases."—Lowth and Mur. cor. "Versification is the arrangement of words into metrical lines, according to the laws of verse."—Johnson cor. "Versification is the arrangement of words into rhythmical lines of some particular length, so as to produce harmony by the regular alternation of syllables differing in quantity.—L. Murray et al. cor. “Amelia’s friend Charlotte, to whom no one imputed blame, was too prompt in her own vindication.”—L. Murray cor. “Mr. Pitt’s joining of the war party in 1793, the most striking and the most fatal instance of this offence, is the one which at once presents itself.”—Brougham cor. “To the framing of such a sound constitution of mind.”—Lady cor. “‘I beseech you,’ said St. Paul to his Ephesian converts, ‘that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called.’”—See Eph., iv, 1. “So as to prevent it from being equal to that.”—Booth cor. “When speaking of an action as being performed.” Or: “When speaking of the performance of an action.”—Id. “And, in all questions of actions being so performed, est is added for the second person.”—Id. “No account can be given of this, but that custom has blinded their eyes.” Or: “No other account can be given of this, than that custom has blinded their eyes.”—Dymond cor.

Page 1907

“Design, or chance, makes others wive;
But nature did this match contrive.”—Waller cor.

LESSON II.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

“I suppose each of you thinks it is his own nail.”—Abbott cor. “They are useless, because they are apparently based upon this supposition.”—Id. “The form, or manner, in which this plan may be adopted is various.”—Id. “The making of intellectual effort, and the acquiring of knowledge, are always pleasant to the human mind.”—Id. “This will do more than the best lecture that ever was delivered.”—Id. “The doing of easy things is generally dull work.”—Id. “Such are the tone and manner of some teachers.”—Id. “Well, the fault is, that some one was disorderly at prayer time.”—Id. “Do you remember to have spoken on this subject in school?”—Id. “The course above recommended, is not the trying of lax and inefficient measures”—Id. “Our community agree that there is a God.”—Id. “It prevents them from being interested in what is said.”—Id. “We will also suppose that I call an other boy to me, whom I have reason to believe to be a sincere Christian.”—Id. “Five minutes’ notice is given by the bell.”—Id. “The Annals of Education give notice of it.” Or: “The work entitled ‘Annals of Education’ gives notice of it.”—Id. “Teachers’ meetings will be interesting and useful.”—Id. “She thought a half hour’s study would conquer all the difficulties.”—Id.

Page 1908

"The difference between an honest and a hypocritical confession."—Id. "There is no point of attainment at which we must stop."—Id. "Now six hours' service is as much as is expected of teachers."—Id. "How many are seven times nine?"—Id. "Then the reckoning proceeds till it comes to ten hundred."—Frost cor. "Your success will depend on your own exertions; see, then, that you be diligent."—Id. "Subjunctive Mood, Present Tense: If I be known, If thou be known, If he be known;" &c.—Id. "If I be loved, If thou be loved, If he be loved;" &c.—Frost right. "An Interjection is a word used to express sudden emotion. Interjections are so called because they are generally thrown in between the parts of discourse, without any reference to the structure of those parts."—Frost cor. "The Cardinal numbers are those which simply tell how many; as, one, two, three."—Id. "More than one organ are concerned in the utterance of almost every consonant." Or thus: "More organs than one are concerned in the utterance of almost any consonant."—Id. "To extract from them all the terms which we use in our divisions and subdivisions of the art."—Holmes cor. "And there were written therein lamentations, and mourning, and woe."—Bible cor. "If I were to be judged as to my behaviour, compared with that of John."—Whiston's Jos. cor. "The preposition to, signifying in order to, was anciently preceded by for; as, 'What went ye out for to see?'"—L. Murray's Gram., p. 184. "This makes the proper perfect tense, which in English is always expressed by the auxiliary verb have; as, 'I have written.'"—Dr. Blair cor. "Indeed, in the formation of character, personal exertion is the first, the second, and the third virtue."—Sanders cor. "The reducing of them to the condition of the beasts that perish."—Dymond cor. "Yet this affords no reason to deny that the nature of the gift is the same, or that both are divine." Or: "Yet this affords no reason to aver that the nature of the gift is not the same, or that both are not divine."—Id. "If God has made known his will."—Id. "If Christ has prohibited them, nothing else can prove them right."—Id. "That the taking of them is wrong, every man who simply consults his own heart, will know."—Id. "From these evils the world would be spared, if one did not write."—Id. "It is in a great degree our own fault."—Id. "It is worthy of observation, that lesson-learning is nearly excluded."—Id. "Who spares the aggressor's life, even to the endangering of his own."—Id. "Who advocates the taking of the life of an aggressor."—Id.

Page 1909

"And thence up to the intentionally and voluntarily fraudulent."—Id. "And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other."—SCOTT'S, FRIENDS', ALGER'S, BRUCE'S BIBLE, AND OTHERS: Acts, xv, 39. "Here the man is John, and John is the man; so the words are imagination and fancy; but THE imagination and THE fancy are not words: they are intellectual powers."—Rev. M. Harrison cor. "The article, which is here so emphatic in the Greek, is quite forgotten in our translation."—Id. "We have no fewer than twenty-four pronouns."—Id. "It will admit of a pronoun joined to it."—Id. "From intercourse and from conquest, all the languages of Europe participate one with an other."—Id. "It is not always necessity, therefore, that has been the cause of our introducing of terms derived from the classical languages."—Id. "The man of genius stamps upon it any impression that pleases him." Or: "any impression that he chooses."—Id. "The proportion of names ending in SON preponderates greatly among the Dano-Saxon population of the North."—Id. "As a proof of the strong similarity between the English language and the Danish."—Id. "A century from the time when (or at which) Hengist and Horsa landed on the Isle of Thanet."—Id.

"I saw the colours waving in the wind,
And them within, to mischief how combin'd."—Bunyan cor.

LESSON III.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

"A ship excepted: of which we say, 'She sails well.'"—Jonson cor. "Honesty is reckoned of little worth."—Lily cor. "Learn to esteem life as you ought."—Dodsley cor. "As the soundest health is less perceived than the lightest malady, so the highest joy toucheth us less sensibly than the smallest sorrow."—Id. "Youth is no apology for frivolousness."—Whiting cor. "The porch was of the same width as the temple."—Milman cor. "The other tribes contributed neither to his rise nor to his downfall."—Id. "His whole religion, with all its laws, would have been shaken to its foundation."—Id. "The English has most commonly been neglected, and children have been taught only in the Latin syntax."—J. Ward cor. "They are not noticed in the notes."—Id. "He walks in righteousness, doing what he would have others do to him."—Fisher cor. "They stand independent of the rest of the sentence."—Ingersoll cor. "My uncle and his son were in town yesterday."—Lennie cor. "She and her sisters are well."—Id. "His purse, with its contents, was abstracted from his pocket.”—Id. “The great constitutional feature of this institution being, that directly after the acrimony of the last election is over, the acrimony of the next begins.”—Dickens cor. “His disregarding of his parents’ advice has brought him into disgrace.”—Farnum cor. “Can you tell me why his father made that remark?”—Id. “Why does our teacher detain us so long?”—Id. “I am certain that the boy said so.”—Id. “WHICH means any thing or things before named; and THAT may represent any person or persons, thing or things, that have been speaking, spoken to, or spoken of.”—Perley cor. “A certain number of syllables occurring in a particular order, form a foot. Poetic feet are so called because it is by their aid that the voice, as it were, steps along.”—L. Murray et al. cor. “Questions asked by a principal verb only—as, ‘Teach I?’ ‘Burns he?’ &c.,—are archaisms, and now peculiar to the poets.”—A. Murray cor. “Tell whether the 18th, the 19th, the 20th, the 21st, the 22d, or the 23d rule is to be used, and repeat the rule.”—Parker and Fox cor. “The resolution was adopted without much deliberation, and consequently caused great dissatisfaction.” Or: “The resolution, which caused great dissatisfaction, was adopted without much deliberation.”—Id. “The man is now much noticed by the people thereabouts.”—Webb’s Edward’s Gram. cor. “The sand prevents them from sticking to one another.”—Id. “Defective verbs are those which are used only in some of the moods and tenses.”—Greenleaf’s Gram., p. 29; Ingersoll’s, 121; Smith’s, 90; Merchant’s, 64; Nutting’s, 68; L. Murray, Guy, Russell, Bacon, Frost, Alger, S. Putnam, Goldsbury, Felton, et al. cor. “Defective verbs are those which want some of the moods or tenses.”—Lennie et al. cor. “Defective verbs want some of the parts common to other verbs.”—Bullions cor. “A Defective verb is one that wants some of the parts common to verbs.”—Id. “To the irregular verbs may be added the defective; which are not only irregular, but also wanting in some parts.”—Lowth cor. “To the irregular verbs may be added the defective; which are not only wanting in some parts, but are, when inflected, irregular.”—Churchill cor. “When two or more nouns occur together in the possessive case.”—Farnum cor. “When several short sentences come together”—Id. “Words are divided into ten classes, called Parts of Speech.”—L. Ainsworth cor. “A passive verb has its agent or doer always in the objective case, governed by a preposition.”—Id. “I am surprised at your inattention.”—Id. “SINGULAR: Thou lovest, not You love.

Page 1910

Page 1911

You has always a plural verb.”—Bullions cor. “How do you know that love is of the first person? Ans. Because we, the pronoun, is of the first person.”—Id. and Lennie cor. “The lowing herd winds slowly o’er the lea.”—Gray’s Elegy, l. 2: Bullions cor. “Iambic verses have their second, fourth, and other even syllables accented.”—Bullions cor. “Contractions that are not allowable in prose, are often made in poetry.”—Id. “Yet to their general’s voice they soon obey’d”—Milton. “It never presents to his mind more than one new subject at the same time.”—Felton cor. “An abstract noun is the name of some particular quality considered apart from its substance.”—Brown’s Inst. of E. Gram., p. 32. “A noun is of the first person when it denotes the speaker.”—Felton cor. “Which of the two brothers is a graduate?”—Hallock cor. “I am a linen-draper bold, As all the world doth know.”—Cowper. “Oh the pain, the bliss of dying!”—Pope. “This do; take to you censers, thou, Korah, and all thy company.”—Bible cor. “There are three participles; the imperfect, the perfect, and the preperfect: as, reading, read, having read. Transitive verbs have an active and passive participle: that is, their form for the perfect is sometimes active, and sometimes passive; as, read, or loved.”—S. S. Greene cor.

“O Heav’n, in my connubial hour decree
My spouse this man, or such a man as he.”—Pope cor.

LESSON IV.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

“The past tenses (of Hiley’s subjunctive mood) represent conditional past facts or events, of which the speaker is uncertain.”—Hiley cor. “Care also should be taken that they be not introduced too abundantly.”—Id. “Till they have become familiar to the mind.” Or: “Till they become familiar to the mind.”—Id. “When once a particular arrangement and phraseology have become familiar to the mind.”—Id. “I have furnished the student with the plainest and most practical directions that I could devise.”—Id. “When you are conversant with the Rules of Grammar, you will be qualified to commence the study of Style.”—Id. “C before e, i, or y, always has a soft sound, like s.”—L. Murray cor. “G before e, i, or y, is generally soft; as in genius, ginger, Egypt.”—Id. “C before e, i, or y, always sounds soft, like s.”—Hiley cor. “G is generally soft before e, i, or y; as in genius, ginger, Egypt.”—Id. “A perfect alphabet must always contain just as many letters as there are elementary sounds in the language: the English alphabet, having fewer letters than sounds, and sometimes more than one letter for the same sound, is both defective and redundant.”—Id. “A common noun is a name, given to a whole class or species, and is applicable to every individual of that class.”—Id. “Thus an adjective has usually a noun either expressed or understood.”—Id. “Emphasis is extraordinary force used in the enunciation of such words as we wish to make prominent in discourse.” Or: “Emphasis is a peculiar stress of voice, used in the utterance of words specially significant.”—Dr. H. Blair cor.; also L. Murray. “So simple a question as. ‘Do you ride to town to-day?’ is capable of as many as four different acceptations, the sense varying as the emphasis is differently placed.”—Id. “Thus, bravely, for ‘in a brave manner.’ is derived from brave-like.”—Hiley cor. “In this manner, several different parts of speech are often formed from one root by means of different affixes.”—Id. “Words derived from the same root, are always more or less allied in signification.”—Id. “When a noun of multitude conveys the idea of unity, the verb and pronoun should be singular; but when it conveys the idea of plurality, the verb and pronoun must be plural.”—Id. “They have spent their whole time to make the sacred chronology agree with the profane.”—Id. “I have studied my lesson, but you have not looked at yours.”—Id. “When words are connected in pairs, there is usually a comma after each pair.”—Hiley, Bullions, and Lennie, cor. “When words are connected in pairs, the pairs should be marked by the comma.”—Farnum cor. “His book entitled, ‘Studies of Nature,’ is deservedly a popular work.”—Biog. Dict. cor.

Page 1912

“Here rests his head upon the lap of earth,
A youth to Fortune and to Fame unknown.”—GRAY.

“‘Youth,’ here, is in the nominative case, (the verb ‘rests’ being, in this instance, transitive,) and is the subject of the sentence. The meaning is, ‘A youth here rests his head,’ &c.”—Hart cor. “The pronoun I, as well as the interjection O, should be written with a capital.” Or: “The pronoun I, and the interjection O, should be written with capitals”—Weld cor. “The pronoun I should always be written with a capital.”—Id. “He went from London to York.”—Id. “An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb, to modify its meaning.”—Id. (See Lesson 1st under the General Rule.) “SINGULAR signifies, ‘expressing only one;’ denoting but one person or thing. PLURAL, (Latin pluralis, from plus, more,) signifies, 'expressing more than one.'"—Weld cor. "When the present ends in e, d only is added to form the imperfect tense and the perfect participle of regular verbs."—Id. "Synaeresis is the contraction of two syllables into one; as, seest for seest, drowned for drown-ed."—Id. (See Brown's Inst. p. 230.) "Words ending in ee are often inflected by mere consonants, and without receiving an additional syllable beginning with e: as, see, seest, sees; agree, agreed, agrees."—Weld cor. "In monosyllables, final f, l, or s, preceded by a single vowel, is doubled; as in staff, mill, grass."—Id. "Before ing, words ending in ie drop the e, and change the i into y; as, die, dying."—Id. "One number may be used for the other—or, rather, the plural may be used for the singular; as, we for I, you for thou."—S. S. Greene cor. "STR~OB'ILE, n. A pericarp made up of scales that lie one over an other."—Worcester cor.

Page 1913

"Yet ever, from the clearest source, hath run
Some gross alloy, some tincture of the man."—Lowth cor.

LESSON V.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

"The possessive case is usually followed by a noun, expressed or understood, which is the name of the thing possessed."—Felton cor. "Hadmer of Aggstein was as pious, devout, and praying a Christian, as was Nelson, Washington, or Jefferson; or as is Wellington, Tyler, Clay, or Polk."—H. C. Wright cor. "A word in the possessive case is not an independent noun, and cannot stand by itself."—J. W. Wright cor. "Mary is not handsome, but she is good-natured; and good-nature is better than beauty."—St. Quentin cor. "After the practice of joining all words together had ceased, a note of distinction was placed at the end of every word."—L. Murray et al. cor. "Neither Henry nor Charles dissipates his time."—Hallock cor. "'He had taken from the Christians above thirty small castles.' KNOLLES:"—Brown's Institutes, p. 200; Johnson's Quarto Dict., w. What. "In what character Butler was admitted, is unknown." Or: "In whatever character Butler was admitted, that character is unknown."—Hallock cor. "How are the agent of a passive and the object of an active verb often left?"—Id. "By SUBJECT, is meant the word of whose object something is declared." Or: "By SUBJECT, is meant the word which has something declared of the thing signified."—Chandler cor. "Care should also be taken that a transitive verb be not used in stead of a neuter or intransitive; as, lay for lie, raise for rise, set for sit, &c.—Id. “On them depends the duration of our Constitution and our country.”—Calhoun cor. “In the present sentence, neither the sense nor the measure requires WHAT.”—Chandler cor. “The Irish thought themselves oppressed by the law that forbid them to draw with their horses’ tails.”—Brightland cor. “So and willingly are adverbs. So is an adverb of degree, and qualifies willingly. Willingly is an adverb of manner, and qualifies deceives.”—Cutler cor. “Epicurus, for experiment’s sake, confined himself to a narrower diet than that of the severest prisons.”—Id. “Derivative words are such as are formed from other words by prefixes or suffixes; as, injustice, goodness, falsehood.”—Id. “The distinction here insisted on is as old as Aristotle, and should not be lost from sight.” Or: “and it should still be kept in view.”—Hart cor. “The Tenses of the Subjunctive and Potential Moods.” Or: “The Tenses of the Subjunctive and the Potential Mood.”—Id. “A triphthong is a union of three vowels, uttered by a single impulse of the voice; as, uoy in buoy”—Pardon Davis cor. “A common noun is the name of a species or kind.”—Id. “The superlative degree implies a comparison either between two or among more.”—Id. “An adverb is a word serving to give an additional idea to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb.”—Id. “When several nouns in the possessive case occur in succession, each showing possession of things of the same sort, it is generally necessary to add the sign of the possessive case to each of them: as, ‘He sells men’s, women’s, and children’s shoes.’—‘Dogs’, cats’, and tigers’ feet are digitated.”—Id. “‘A rail-road is being made,’ should be, ‘A railroad is making;’ ‘A school-house is being built,’ should be, ‘A schoolhouse is building.’”—Id. “Auxiliaries are of themselves verbs; yet they resemble, in their character and use, those terminational or other inflections which, in other languages, serve to express the action in the mood, tense, person, and number desired.”—Id. “Please to hold my horse while I speak to my friend.”—Id. “If I say, ‘Give me the book,’ I demand some particular book.”—Noble Butler cor. “Here are five men.”—Id. “After the active verb, the object may be omitted; after the passive, the name of the agent may be omitted.”—Id. “The Progressive and Emphatic forms give, in each case, a different shade of meaning to the verb.”—Hart cor. “THAT may be called a Redditive Conjunction, when it answers to so or SUCH.”—Ward cor. “He attributes to negligence your want of success in that business.”—Smart cor. “Do WILL and GO express but one action?” Or: “Does ‘will go’ express but one action?”—Barrett cor. “Language is the principal vehicle of thought.”—G. Brown’s Inst., Pref., p. iii. “Much is applied to things weighed or measured; many, to those that are numbered. Elder and eldest are applied to persons only; older and oldest, to either persons or things.”—Bullions cor. “If there are any old maids still extant, while misogynists are so rare, the fault must be attributable to themselves.”—Kirkham cor. “The second method, used by the Greeks, has never been the practice of any other people of Europe.”—Sheridan cor. “Neither consonant nor vowel is to be dwelt upon beyond its common quantity, when it closes a sentence.” Or: “Neither consonants nor vowels are to be dwelt upon beyond their common quantity, when they close a sentence.” Or, better thus: “Neither a consonant nor a vowel, when it closes a sentence, is to be protracted beyond its usual length.”—Id. “Irony is a mode of speech, in which what is said, is the opposite of what is meant.”—McElligott’s Manual, p. 103. “The person speaking, and the person or persons spoken to, are supposed to be present.”—Wells cor.; also Murray. “A Noun is a name, a word used to express the idea of an object.”—Wells cor. “A syllable is such a word, or part of a word, as is uttered by one articulation.”—Weld cor.

Page 1914

Page 1915

“Thus wond’rous fair; thyself how wond’rous then!
Unspeakable, who sitst above these heavens.”—Milton, B. v, l. 156.

“And feel thy sovrán vital lamp; but thou
Revisitst not these eyes, that roll in vain.”—Id., iii, 22.

“Before all temples th’ upright heart and pure.”—Id., i, 18.

“In forest wild, in thicket, brake, or den.”—Id., vii, 458.

“The rogue and fool by fits are fair and wise;
And e’en the best, by fits, what they despise.”—Pope cor.

THE KEY.—PART IV.—PROSODY.

CHAPTER I.—PUNCTUATION.

SECTION I.—THE COMMA.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE I.—OF SIMPLE SENTENCES.

Page 1916

"A short simple sentence should rarely be divided by the comma."—Felton cor. "A regular and virtuous education is an inestimable blessing."—L. Mur. cor. "Such equivocal expressions mark an intention to deceive."—Id. "They are this and that, with their plurals these and those."—Bullions cor. "A nominative and a verb sometimes make a complete sentence; as, He sleeps."—Felton cor. "TENSE expresses the action as connected with certain relations of time; MOOD represents it as further modified by circumstances of contingency, conditionality, &c."—Bullions cor. "The word noun means name."—Ingersoll cor. "The present or active participle I explained then."—Id. "Are some verbs used both transitively and intransitively?"—Cooper cor. "Blank verse is verse without rhyme."—Brown's Institutes, p. 235. "A distributive adjective denotes each one of a number considered separately."—Hallock cor.

"And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage."
—MILTON: Ward's Gr., 158; Hiley's, 124.

UNDER THE EXCEPTION CONCERNING SIMPLE SENTENCES.

"A noun without an article to limit it, is taken in its widest sense."—Lennie, p. 6. "To maintain a steady course amid all the adversities of life, marks a great mind."—Day cor. "To love our Maker supremely and our neighbour as ourselves, comprehends the whole moral law."—Id. "To be afraid to do wrong, is true courage."—Id. "A great fortune in the hands of a fool, is a great misfortune."—Bullions cor. "That he should make such a remark, is indeed strange."—Farnum cor. "To walk in the fields and groves, is delightful."—Id. "That he committed the fault, is most certain."—Id. "Names common to all things of the same sort or class, are called Common nouns; as, man, woman, day."—Bullions cor. "That it is our duty to be pious, admits not of any doubt."—Id. "To endure misfortune with resignation, is the characteristic of a great mind."—Id. "The assisting of a friend in such circumstances, was certainly a duty."—Id. "That a life of virtue is the safest, is certain."—Hallock cor. "A collective noun denoting the idea of unity, should be represented by a pronoun of the singular number."—Id.

UNDER RULE II.—OF SIMPLE MEMBERS.

"When the sun had arisen, the enemy retreated."—Day cor. "If he become rich, he may be less industrious."—Bullions cor. "The more I study grammar, the better I like it."—Id. "There is much truth in the old adage, that fire is a better servant than master."—Id. "The verb do, when used as an auxiliary, gives force or emphasis to the expression.”—P. E. Day cor. “Whatsoever is incumbent upon a man to do, it is surely expedient to do well.”—Adams cor. “The soul, which our philosophy divides into various capacities, is still one essence.”—Channing cor. “Put the following words in the plural, and give the rule for forming it.”—Bullions cor. “We will do it, if you wish.”—Id. “He who does well, will be rewarded.”—Id. “That which is always true, is expressed in the present tense.”—Id. “An observation which is always true, must be expressed in the present tense.”—Id. “That part of orthography which treats of combining letters to form syllables and words, is called SPELLING.”—Day cor. “A noun can never be of the first person, except it is in apposition with a pronoun of that person.”—Id. “When two or more singular nouns or pronouns refer to the same object, they require a singular verb and pronoun.”—Id. “James has gone, but he will return in a few days.”—Id. “A pronoun should have the same person, number, and gender, as the noun for which it stands.”—Id. “Though he is out of danger, he is still afraid.”—Bullions cor. “She is his inferior in sense, but his equal in prudence.”—Murray’s Exercises, p. 6. “The man who has no sense of religion, is little to be trusted.”—Bullions cor. “He who does the most good, has the most pleasure.”—Id. “They were not in the most prosperous circumstances, when we last saw them.”—Id. “If the day continue pleasant, I shall return.”—Felton cor. “The days that are past, are gone forever.”—Id. “As many as are friendly to the cause, will sustain it.”—Id. “Such as desire aid, will receive it.”—Id. “Who gave you that book, which you prize so much?”—Bullions cor. “He who made it, now preserves and governs it.”—Id.

Page 1917

“Shall he alone, whom rational we call,
Be pleas’d with nothing, if not blest with all?”—Pope.

UNDER THE EXCEPTIONS CONCERNING SIMPLE MEMBERS.

“Newcastle is the town in which Akenside was born.”—Bucke cor. “The remorse which issues in reformation, is true repentance.”—Campbell cor. “Men who are intemperate, are destructive members of community.”—Alexander cor. “An active-transitive verb expresses an action which extends to an object.”—Felton cor. “They to whom much is given, will have much, to answer for.”—L. Murray cor. “The prospect which we have, is charming.”—Cooper cor. “He is the person who informed me of the matter.”—Id. “These are the trees that produce no fruit.”—Id. “This is the book which treats of the subject.”—Id. “The proposal was such as pleased me.”—Id. “Those that sow in tears, shall reap in joy.”—Id. “The pen with which I write, makes too large a mark.”—Ingersoll cor. “Modesty makes large amends for the pain it gives the persons who labour under it, by the prejudice it affords every worthy person, in their favour.”—Id. “Irony is a figure whereby we plainly intend something very different from what our words express.”—Bucke cor. “Catachresis is a figure whereby an improper word is used in stead of a proper one.”—Id. “The man whom you met at the party, is a Frenchman.”—Frost cor.

Page 1918

UNDER RULE III.—OF MORE THAN TWO WORDS.

“John, James, and Thomas, are here: that is, John, and James, and Thomas, are here.”—Cooper cor. “Adverbs modify verbs, adjectives, and other adverbs.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 116. “To Nouns belong Person, Gender, Number, and Case.”—Id., ib., p. 9. “Wheat, corn, rye, and oats, are extensively cultivated.”—Bullions cor. “In many, the definitions, rules, and leading facts, are prolix, inaccurate, and confused.”—Finch cor. “Most people consider it mysterious, difficult, and useless.”—Id. “His father, and mother, and uncle, reside at Rome.”—Farnum cor. “The relative pronouns are who, which, and that.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 23. “That is sometimes a demonstrative, sometimes a relative, and sometimes a conjunction.”—Bullions cor. “Our reputation, virtue, and happiness, greatly depend on the choice of our companions.”—Day cor. “The spirit of true religion is social, kind, and cheerful.”—Felton cor. “Do, be, have, and will, are sometimes principal verbs.”—Id. “John, and Thomas, and Peter, reside at Oxford.”—Webster cor. “The most innocent pleasures are the most rational, the most delightful, and the most durable.”—Id. “Love, joy, peace, and blessedness, are reserved for the good.”—Id. “The husband, wife, and children, suffered extremely.”—L. Murray cor. “The husband, wife, and children, suffer extremely.”—Sanborn cor. “He, you, and I, have our parts assigned us.”—Id.

“He moaned, lamented, tugged, and tried,
Repented, promised, wept, and sighed.”—Cowper.

UNDER RULE IV.—OF ONLY TWO WORDS.

“Disappointments derange and overcome vulgar minds.”—L. Murray cor. “The hive of a city or kingdom, is in the best condition, when there is the least noise or buzz in it.”—Id. “When a direct address is made, the noun or pronoun is in the nominative case, independent.”—Ingersoll cor. “The verbs love and teach, make loved and taught, in the imperfect and participle.”—Id. “Neither poverty nor riches were injurious to him.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 152. “Thou or I am in fault.”—Id., p. 152. “A verb is a word that expresses action or being.”—P.

Page 1919

E. Day cor. "The Objective Case denotes the object of a verb or a preposition."—Id. "Verbs of the second conjugation may be either transitive or intransitive."—Id. "Verbs of the fourth conjugation may be either transitive or intransitive."—Id. "If a verb does not form its past indicative by adding d or ed to the indicative present, it is said to be irregular."—Id. "The young lady is studying rhetoric and logic."—Cooper cor. "He writes and speaks the language very correctly."—Id. "Man's happiness or misery is, in a great measure, put into his own hands."—Mur. cor. "This accident or characteristic of nouns, is called their Gender."—Bullions cor.

"Grant that the powerful still the weak control;
Be man the wit and tyrant of the whole."—Pope cor.

UNDER EXCEPTION I.—TWO WORDS WITH ADJUNCTS.

"Franklin is justly considered the ornament of the New World, and the pride of modern philosophy."—Day cor. "Levity, and attachment to worldly pleasures, destroy the sense of gratitude to Him."—L. Mur. cor. "In the following Exercise, point out the adjectives, and the substantives which they qualify."—Bullions cor. "When a noun or pronoun is used to explain, or give emphasis to, a preceding noun or pronoun."—Day cor. "Superior talents, and brilliancy of intellect, do not always constitute a great man."—Id. "A word that makes sense after an article, or after the phrase speak of, is a noun."—Bullions cor. "All feet used in poetry, are reducible to eight kinds; four of two syllables, and four of three."—Hiley cor. "He would not do it himself, not let me do it."—Lennie's Gram., p. 64. "The old writers give examples of the subjunctive mood, and give other moods to explain what is meant by the words in the subjunctive."—O. B. Peirce cor.

UNDER EXCEPTION II.—TWO TERMS CONTRASTED.

"We often commend, as well as censure, imprudently."—L. Mur. cor. "It is as truly a violation of the right of property, to take a little, as to take much; to purloin a book or a penknife, as to steal money; to steal fruit, as to steal a horse; to defraud the revenue, as to rob my neighbour; to overcharge the public, as to overcharge my brother; to cheat the post-office, as to cheat my friend."—Wayland cor. "The classification of verbs has been, and still is, a vexed question."—Bullions cor. "Names applied only to individuals of a sort or class, and not common to all, are called Proper nouns."—Id. "A hero would desire to be loved, as well as to be revered."—Day cor. "Death, or some worse misfortune, now divides them." Better: "Death, or some other misfortune, soon divides them."—Murray's Gram., p. 151. "Alexander replied, 'The world will not permit two suns, nor two sovereigns.'"—Goldsmith cor.

Page 1920

"From nature's chain, whatever link you strike,
Tenth, or ten-thousandth, breaks the chain alike."—Pope.

UNDER EXCEPTION III.—OF AN ALTERNATIVE OF WORDS.

"Metre, or Measure, is the number of poetical feet which a verse contains."—Hiley cor.
 "The Caesura, or division, is the pause which takes place in a verse, and which divides it into two parts."—Id. "It is six feet, or one fathom, deep."—Bullions cor. "A Brace is used in poetry, at the end of a triplet, or three lines which rhyme together."—Felton cor.
 "There are four principal kinds of English verse, or poetical feet."—Id. "The period, or full stop, denotes the end of a complete sentence."—Sanborn cor. "The scholar is to receive as many jetons, or counters, as there are words in the sentence."—St. Quentin cor.
 "That [thing], or the thing, which purifies, fortifies also the heart."—O. B. Peirce cor.
 "That thing, or the thing, which would induce a laxity in public or private morals, or indifference to guilt and wretchedness, should be regarded as the deadly Sirocco."—Id.
 "What is, elliptically, what thing, or that thing which."—Sanborn cor. "Demonstrate means show, or point out precisely."—Id. "The man, or that man, who endures to the end, shall be saved."—Hiley cor.

UNDER EXCEPTION IV.—OF A SECOND COMMA.

"That reason, passion, answer one great aim."—POPE: Bullions and Hiley cor.
 "Reason, virtue, answer one great aim."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 269; Cooper's Murray, 182; Comly, 145; Ingersoll, 282; Sanborn, 268; Kirkham, 212; et al. "Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above."—James, i, 17. "Every plant, and every tree, produces others after its kind."—Day cor. "James, and not John, was paid for his services."—Id. "The single dagger, or obelisk [Dagger], is the second."—Id. "It was I, not he, that did it."—St. Quentin cor. "Each aunt, each cousin, hath her speculation."—Byron. "'I shall see you when you come,' is equivalent to, 'I shall see you then, or at that time, when you come.'"—N. Butler cor.

"Let wealth, let honour, wait the wedded dame;
August her deed, and sacred be her fame."—Pope cor.

UNDER RULE V.—OF WORDS IN PAIRS.

Page 1921

"My hopes and fears, joys and sorrows, centre in you."—Greenleaf or Sanborn cor.
"This mood implies possibility or liberty, will or obligation."—Ingersoll cor. "Substance is divided into body and spirit, into extended and thinking."—Brightland cor. "These consonants, [d and t,] like p and b, f and v, k and hard g, and s and z, are letters of the same organ."—J. Walker cor. "Neither fig nor twist, pigtail nor Cavendish, has passed my lips since; nor ever shall again."—Cultivator cor. "The words whoever or whosoever, whichever or whichsoever, and whatever or whatsoever, are called Compound Relative Pronouns."—Day cor. "Adjectives signifying profit or disprofit, likeness or unlikeness, govern the dative."—Bullions cor.

UNDER RULE VI.—OF WORDS ABSOLUTE.

"Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me."—Psalms xxiii 4. "Depart, ye wicked."—J. W. Wright cor. "He saith unto his mother. Woman, behold thy son!"—John, xix, 26. "Thou, God, seest me."—Bullions cor. "John, write me a letter. Henry, go home."—O. B. Peirce cor., twice. "Now, G. Brown, let us reason together."—Id. "Mr. Smith, you say, on page 11th, 'The objective case denotes the object'"—Id. "Gentlemen, will you always speak as you mean?"—Id. "John, I sold my books to William, for his brothers."—Id. "Walter, and Seth, I will take my things, and leave yours."—Id. "Henry, Julia and Jane left their umbrella, and took yours."—Id. "John, harness the horses, and go to the mine for some coal."—Id. "William, run to the store, for a few pounds of tea."—Id. "The king being dead, the parliament was dissolved."—Chandler cor.

"Cease, fond Nature, cease thy strife,
And let me languish into life."
—Pope, Brit. Poets, vi, 317.

"Forbear, great man, in arms renown'd, forbear."
—Hiley's Gram., p. 127.

"Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind!
Each prayer accepted, and each wish resign'd."
—Pope, Brit. Poets, vi, 335.

UNDER RULE VII.—OF WORDS IN APPOSITION.

"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice," &c.—Constit. of U. S. "The Lord, the covenant God of his people, requires it."—A. S. Mag. cor. "He, as a patriot, deserves praise."—Hallock cor. "Thomson, the watchmaker and jeweller from London, was of the party."—Bullions cor. "Every body knows that the person here spoken of by the name of 'the Conqueror,' is William, duke of Normandy."—L. Mur. cor. "The words myself, thysself, himself, herself, itself, and their plurals, ourselves, yourselves, and themselves, are called Compound Personal Pronouns.”—Day cor.

Page 1922

"For who, to dumb forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing, anxious being e'er resign'd,
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day
Nor cast one longing, ling'ring look behind?"—GRAY: Mur. Seq.

UNDER THE EXCEPTIONS CONCERNING APPOSITION.

"Smith & Williams's store; Nicholas the emperor's army."—Day cor. "He was named William the Conqueror."—Id. "John the Baptist was beheaded."—Id. "Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil."—2 Tim., iv, 14. "A nominative in immediate apposition: as, 'The boy Henry speaks.'"—Smart cor. "A noun objective can be in apposition with some other; as, 'I teach the boy Henry.'"—Id.

UNDER RULE VIII.—OF ADJECTIVES.

"But he found me, not singing at my work, ruddy with health, vivid with cheerfulness; but pale," &c.—DR. JOHNSON: Murray's Sequel, p. 4. "I looked up, and beheld an inclosure, beautiful as the gardens of paradise, but of a small extent."—HAWKESWORTH: ib., p. 20. "A is an article, indefinite, and belongs to 'book.'"—Bullions cor. "The first expresses the rapid movement of a troop of horse over the plain, eager for the combat."—Id. "He [, the Indian chieftain, King Philip,] was a patriot, attached to his native soil; a prince, true to his subjects, and indignant of their wrongs; a soldier, daring in battle, firm in adversity, patient of fatigue, of hunger, of every variety of bodily suffering, and ready to perish in the cause he had espoused."—W. Irving.

"For thee, who, mindful of th' unhonour'd dead,
Dost in these lines their artless tale relate."
—GRAY: Mur. Seq., p. 258.

"Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest;
Some Cromwell, guiltless of his country's blood."
—GRAY: Enf. Sp., p. 245.

"Idle after dinner [,] in his chair,
Sat a farmer, ruddy, fat, and fair."
—Murray's Gram., p. 257.

UNDER THE EXCEPTION CONCERNING ADJECTIVES.

“When an attribute becomes a title, or is emphatically applied to a name, it follows it: as, Charles the Great; Henry the First; Lewis the Gross.”—Webster cor. “Feed me with food convenient for me.”—Prov., xxx, 8. “The words and phrases necessary to exemplify every principle progressively laid down, will be found strictly and exclusively adapted to the illustration of the principles to which they are referred.”—Ingersoll cor. “The Infinitive Mood is that form of the verb which expresses being or action unlimited by person or number.”—Day cor. “A man diligent in his business, prospers.”—Frost cor.

Page 1923

"Oh wretched state! oh bosom black as death!"
—SHAK.: Enfield, p. 368.

UNDER RULE IX.—OF FINITE VERBS.

"The Singular denotes one; the Plural, more than one."—Bullions and Lennie cor. "The Comma represents the shortest pause; the Semicolon, a pause longer than the comma; the Colon, longer than the semicolon; and the Period, longer than the colon."—Hiley cor. "The Comma represents the shortest pause; the Semicolon, a pause double that of the Comma; the Colon, double that of the semicolon; and the Period, double that of the colon."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 266. "WHO is applied only to persons; WHICH, to animals and things; WHAT, to things only; and THAT, to persons, animals, and things."—Day cor. "A or an is used before the singular number only; the, before either singular or plural."—Bullions cor. "Homer was the greater genius; Virgil, the better artist."—Day cor.; also Pope. "Words are formed of syllables; syllables, of letters."—St. Quentin cor. "The conjugation of an active verb is styled the ACTIVE VOICE; and that of a passive verb, the PASSIVE VOICE."—Frost cor.; also Smith: L. Murray's Gram., p. 77. "The possessive is sometimes called the genitive case; and the objective, the accusative."—L. Murray cor. "Benevolence is allied to few vices; selfishness, to fewer virtues."—Kames cor. "Orthography treats of Letters; Etymology, of words; Syntax, of Sentences; and Prosody, of Versification."—Hart cor.

"Earth praises conquerors for shedding blood;
Heaven, those that love their foes, and do them good."—Waller.

UNDER RULE X.—OF INFINITIVES.

"His business is, to observe the agreement or disagreement of words."—Bullions cor. "It is a mark of distinction, to be made a member of this society."—Farnum cor. "To distinguish the conjugations, let the pupil observe the following rules."—Day cor. "He was now sent for, to preach before the Parliament."—E. Williams cor. "It is incumbent on the young, to love and honour their parents."—Bullions cor. "It is the business of every man, to prepare for death."—Id. "It argued the sincerest candor, to make such an acknowledgement."—Id. "The proper way is, to complete the construction of the first member, and leave that of the second elliptical."—Id. "ENEMY is a name. It is a term of distinction, given to a certain person, to show the character in which he is represented."—Peirce cor. "The object of this is, to preserve the soft sounds of c and g."—Hart cor. "The design of grammar is, to facilitate the reading, writing, and speaking of a language."—Barrett cor. "Four kinds of type are used in the following pages, to indicate the portions that are considered more or less elementary."—Hart cor.

Page 1924

UNDER RULE XI.—OF PARTICIPLES.

“The chancellor, being attached to the king, secured his crown.”—Murray’s Grammar, p. 66. “The officer, having received his orders, proceeded to execute them.”—Day cor. “Thus used, it is in the present tense.”—Bullions, E. Gr., 2d Ed., p. 35. “The imperfect tense has three distinct forms, corresponding to those of the present tense.”—Bullions cor. “Every possessive case is governed by some noun, denoting the thing possessed.”—Id. “The word that, used as a conjunction, is [generally] preceded by a comma.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 114. “His narrative, being composed upon so good authority, deserves credit.”—Cooper cor. “The hen, being in her nest, was killed and eaten there by the eagle.”—Murray cor. “Pronouns, being used in stead of nouns, are subject to the same modifications.”—Sanborn cor. “When placed at the beginning of words, they are consonants.”—Hallock cor. “Man, starting from his couch, shall sleep no more.”—Young. “His and her, followed by a noun, are possessive pronouns; not followed by a noun, they are personal pronouns.”—Bullions cor.

“He, with viny crown advancing,
First to the lively pipe his hand address’d.”—Collins.

UNDER THE EXCEPTION CONCERNING PARTICIPLES.

“But when they convey the idea of many acting individually, or separately, they are of the plural number.”—Day cor. “Two or more singular antecedents connected by and, [when they happen to introduce more than one verb and more than one pronoun,] require verbs and pronouns of the plural number.”—Id. “Words ending in y preceded by a consonant change y into i, when a termination is added.”—N. Butler cor. “A noun used without an article to limit it, is generally taken in its widest sense.”—Ingersoll cor. “Two nouns meaning the same person or thing, frequently come together.”—Bucke cor. “Each one must give an account to God for the use, or abuse, of the talents committed to him.”—Cooper cor. “Two vowels united in one sound, form a diphthong.”—Frost cor. “Three vowels united in one sound, form a triphthong.”—Id. “Any word joined to an adverb, is a secondary adverb.”—Barrett cor. “The person spoken to, is put in the Second person; the person spoken of, in the Third person.”—Cutler cor. “A man devoted to his business, prospers.”—Frost cor.

UNDER RULE XII.—OF ADVERBS.

Page 1925

"So, in indirect questions; as, 'Tell me when he will come.'"—Butler cor. "Now, when the verb tells what one person or thing does to an other, it is transitive."—Bullions cor. "Agreeably to your request, I send this letter."—Id. "There seems, therefore, to be no good reason for giving them a different classification."—Id. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant-man seeking good pearls."—Scott's Bible, Smith's, and Bruce's. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea."—Same. "Cease, however, is used as a transitive verb by our best writers."—Webster cor. "Time admits of three natural divisions; namely, Present, Past, and Future."—Day cor. "There are three kinds of comparison; namely, Regular, Irregular, and Adverbial"—Id. "There are five personal pronouns; namely, I, thou, he, she, and it."—Id. "Nouns have three cases: viz., the Nominative, the Possessive, and the Objective."—Bullions cor. "Hence, in studying Grammar, we have to study words."—Frazer cor. "Participles, like verbs, relate to nouns and pronouns."—Miller cor. "The time of the participle, like that of the infinitive, is estimated from the time of the leading verb."—Bullions cor.

"The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
And leap exulting, like the bounding roe."—Pope.

UNDER RULE XIII.—OF CONJUNCTIONS.

"But he said, Nay; lest, while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them."—Scott's Bible et al. "Their intentions were good: but, wanting prudence, they missed the mark at which they aimed."—L. Mur. cor. "The verb be often separates the name from its attribute; as, 'War is expensive.'"—Webster cor. "Either and or denote an alternative; as, 'I will take either road at your pleasure.'"—Id. "Either is also a substitute for a name; as, 'Either of the roads is good.'"—Id. "But, alas! I fear the consequence."—Day cor. "Or, if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?"—Luke, xi, 11. "Or, if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion?"—ALGER'S BIBLE: Luke, xi, 12. "The infinitive sometimes performs the office of a nominative case; as, 'To enjoy is to obey.'"—POPE."—Cutler cor. "The plural is commonly formed by adding s to the singular; as, book, books."—Bullions, P. Lessons, p. 16. "As, 'I were to blame, if I did it.'"—Smart cor.

"Or, if it be thy will and pleasure,
Direct my plough to find a treasure."

UNDER RULE XIV.—OF PREPOSITIONS.

Page 1926

"Pronouns agree with the nouns for which they stand, in gender, number, and person."—Butler and Bullions cor. "In the first two examples, the antecedent is person, or something equivalent; in the last [one], it is thing."—N. Butler cor. "In what character he was admitted, is unknown."—Id. "To what place he was going, is not known."—Id. "In the preceding examples, John, Caesar, and James, are the subjects."—Id. "Yes is generally used to denote assent, in answer to a question."—Id. "That, in its origin, is the passive participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb thean, [thegan, thicgan, thicgean, or thigan,] to take."—Id. "But, in all these sentences, as and so are adverbs."—Id. "After an interjection or an exclamatory sentence, is usually placed the mark of exclamation."—D. Blair cor. "Intransitive verbs, from their nature, can have no distinction of voice."—Bullions cor. "To the inflection of verbs, belong Voices, Moods, Tenses, Numbers, and Persons."—Id. "As and so, in the antecedent member of a comparison, are properly Adverbs." Better: "As OR so, in the antecedent member of a comparison, is properly an adverb."—Id. "In the following Exercise, point out the words in apposition."—Id. "In the following Exercise, point out the noun or pronoun denoting the possessor."—Id. "Its is not found in the Bible, except by misprint."—Brown's Institutes, p. 49. "No one's interest is concerned, except mine."—Hallock cor. "In most of the modern languages, there are four concords."—St. Quentin cor. "In illustration of these remarks, let us suppose a case."—Hart cor. "On the right management of the emphasis, depends the life of pronunciation."—J. S. Hart and L. Murray cor. See Blair's Rhet., p. 330.

UNDER RULE XV.—OF INTERJECTIONS.

"Behold, he is in the desert."—Friend's Bible. "And Lot said unto them, Oh, not so, my Lord."—Alger's Bible. "Oh, let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live."—Friend's Bible, and Alger's. "Behold, I come quickly."—Rev., xxii, 7. "Lo, I am with you always."—Day cor. "And, lo, I am with you alway."—Alger's Bible: Day cor.; also Scott and Bruce. "Ha, ha, ha; how laughable that is!"—Bullions cor. "Interjections of laughter; ha, ha, Ha."—Wright cor.

UNDER RULE XVI.—OF WORDS REPEATED.

"Lend, lend your wings!" &c.—Pope. "To bed, to bed, to bed. There is a knocking at the gate. Come, come, come. What is done, cannot be undone. To bed, to bed, to bed."—SHAKESPEARE: Burghs Speaker, p. 130. "I will roar, that the duke shall cry, Encore, encore, let him roar, let him roar, once more, once more."—Id., ib., p. 136.

Page 1927

"Vital spark of heavenly flame!
Quit, oh quit this mortal frame!"—Pope.

"O the pleasing, pleasing anguish,
When we love, and when we languish."—Addison.

"Praise to God, immortal praise,
For the love that crowns our days!"—Barbault.

UNDER RULE XVII.—OF DEPENDENT QUOTATIONS.

"Thus, of an infant, we say, 'It is a lovely creature.'"—Bullions cor. "No being can state a falsehood in saying, 'I am;' for no one can utter this, if it is not true."—Cardell cor. "I know they will cry out against this, and say, 'Should he pay,' means, 'If he should pay.'"—O. B. Peirce cor. "For instance, when we say, 'The house is building,' the advocates of the new theory ask,—'building what?' We might ask in turn, When you say, 'The field ploughs well,'—'ploughs what?' 'Wheat sells well,'—'sells what?' If usage allows us to say, 'Wheat sells at a dollar,' in a sense that is not active; why may it not also allow us to say, 'Wheat is selling at a dollar' in a sense that is not active?"—Hart cor. "Man is accountable,' equals, 'Mankind are accountable.'"—Barrett cor. "Thus, when we say, 'He may be reading,' may is the real verb; the other parts are verbs by name only."—Smart cor. "Thus we say, an apple, an hour, that two vowel sounds may not come together."—Id. "It would be as improper to say, an unit, as to say, an youth; to say, an one, as to say, an wonder."—Id. "When we say, 'He died for the truth,' for is a preposition."—Id. "We do not say, 'I might go yesterday;' but, 'I might have gone yesterday.'"—Id. "By student, we understand, one who has by matriculation acquired the rights of academical citizenship; but, by bursche, we understand, one who has already spent a certain time at the university."—Howitt cor.

SECTION II.—THE SEMICOLON.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE I.—OF COMPLEX MEMBERS.

"The buds spread into leaves, and the blossoms swell to fruit; but they know not how they grow, nor who causes them to spring up from the bosom of the earth."—Day cor. "But he used his eloquence chiefly against Philip, king of Macedon; and, in several orations, he stirred up the Athenians to make war against him."—Bullions cor. "For the sake of euphony, the n is dropped before a consonant; and, because most words begin with a consonant, this of course is its more common form."—Id. "But if I say, 'Will a man be able to carry this burden?' it is manifest the idea is entirely changed; the reference is not to number, but to the species; and the answer might be, 'No; but a horse will.'"—Id. "In direct discourse, a noun used by the speaker or writer to designate himself [in the special relation of speaker or writer], is said to be of the first person; used to designate the person addressed, it is said to be of the second person; and, when used to designate a person or thing [merely] spoken of, it is said to be of the third person.”—Id. “Vice stings us, even in our pleasures; but virtue consoles us, even in our pains.”—Day cor. “Vice is infamous, though in a prince; and virtue, honourable, though in a peasant.”—Id. “Every word that is the name of a person or thing, is a noun; because, ‘A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing.’”—Bullions cor.

Page 1928

“This is the sword with which he did the deed;
And that, the shield by which he was defended.”—Bucke cor.

UNDER RULE II.—OF SIMPLE MEMBERS. “A deathlike paleness was diffused over his countenance; a chilling terror convulsed his frame; his voice burst out at intervals into broken accents.”—Jerningham cor. “The Lacedemonians never traded; they knew no luxury; they lived in houses built of rough materials; they ate at public tables; fed on black broth; and despised every thing effeminate or luxurious.”—Whelpley cor. “Government is the agent; society is the principal.”—Wayland cor. “The essentials of speech were anciently supposed to be sufficiently designated by the Noun and the Verb; to which was subsequently added the Conjunction.”—Bullions cor. “The first faint gleamings of thought in its mind, are but reflections from the parents’ own intellect; the first manifestations of temperament, are from the contagious parental fountain; the first aspirations of soul, are but the warmings and promptings of the parental spirit.”—Jocelyn cor. “Older and oldest refer to maturity of age; elder and eldest, to priority of right by birth. Farther and farthest denote place or distance; further and furthest, quantity or addition.”—Bullions cor. “Let the divisions be natural; such as obviously suggest themselves to the mind; such as may aid your main design; and such as may be easily remembered.”—Goldsbury cor.

“Gently make haste, of labour not afraid;
A hundred times consider what you’ve said.”—Dryden cor.

UNDER RULE III.—OF APPOSITION, &C.

(1.) “Adjectives are divided [, in Frost’s Practical Grammar,] into two classes; adjectives denoting quality, and adjectives denoting number.”—Frost cor. (2.) “There are [, according to some authors,] two classes of adjectives; qualifying adjectives, and limiting adjectives.”—N. Butler cor. (3-5.) “There are three genders; the masculine, the feminine, and the neuter.—Frost et al. cor.; also L. Mur. et al.; also Hendrick: Inst., p. 35. (6.) “The Singular denotes one; the Plural, more than one.”—Hart cor. (7.) “There are three cases; viz., the Nominative, the Possessive, and the Objective.”—Hendrick cor. (8.) “Nouns have three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective.”—Kirkham cor. (9.) “In English, nouns have three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and the objective.”—Smith cor. (10.) “Grammar is divided into four parts; namely, Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, Prosody.”—Hazen. (11.) “It is divided into four parts; viz., Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, Prosody.”—Mur. et al. cor. (12.) “It is divided into four parts; viz., Orthography. Etymology, Syntax, Prosody.”—Bucke cor. (13.) “It is divided into four parts; namely, Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.”—Lennie, Bullions, et al. (14.) “It is divided into four parts; viz., Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.”—Hendrick cor. (15.) “Grammar is divided into four parts; viz., Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.”—Chandler cor. (16.) “It is divided into four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.”—Cooper and Frost cor. (17.) “English Grammar has been usually divided into four parts; viz., Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.”—Nutting cor. (18.) “Temperance leads to happiness; intemperance, to misery.”—Hiley and Hart cor. (19, 20.) “A friend exaggerates a man’s virtues; an enemy, his crimes.”—Hiley cor.; also Murray. (21.) “Many writers use a plural noun after the second of two numeral adjectives; thus, ‘The first and second pages are torn.’”—Bullions cor. (22.) “Of these, [i. e., of Cases,] the Latin has six; the Greek, five; the German, four; the Saxon, six; the French, three; &c.”—Id.

Page 1929

“In ing it ends, when doing is expressed;
In d, t, n, when suffering’s confessed.”—Brightland cor.

MIXED EXAMPLES CORRECTED.

“In old books, i is often used for j; v, for u; vv, for w; and ii or ij, for y.”—Hart cor. “The forming of letters into words and syllables, is also called Spelling.”—Id. “Labials are formed chiefly by the lips; dentals, by the teeth; palatals, by the palate; gutturals, by the throat; nasals, by the nose; and linguals, by the tongue.”—Id. “The labials are p, b, f, v; the dentals, t, d, s, z; the palatals, g soft and j; the gutturals, k, q, and c and g hard; the nasals, m and n; and the linguals, l and r.”—Id.

Page 1930

"Thus, 'The man, having finished his letter, will carry it to the post-office.'"—Id. "Thus, in the sentence, 'He had a dagger concealed under his cloak,' concealed is passive, signifying being concealed; but, in the former combination, it goes to make up a form the force of which is active."—Id. "Thus, in Latin, 'He had concealed the dagger,' would be, 'Pugionem abdiderat;' but, 'He had the dagger concealed,' would be, 'Pugionem abditum habebat.'"—Id. "Here, for instance, means, 'in this place;' now, 'at this time;' &c."—Id. "Here when both declares the time of the action, and so is an adverb; and also connects the two verbs, and so resembles a conjunction."—Id. "These words were all, no doubt, originally other parts of speech; viz., verbs, nouns, and adjectives."—Id. "The principal parts of a sentence, are the subject, the attribute, and the object; in other words, the nominative, the verb, and the objective."—Id. "Thus, the adjective is connected with the noun; the adverb, with the verb or adjective; the pronoun, with its antecedent; &c." "Between refers to two; among, to more than two."—Id. "At is used after a verb of rest; to, after a verb of motion."—Id. "Verbs are of three kinds; Active, Passive, and Neuter."—L. Murray. [Active] "Verbs are divided into two classes; Transitive and Intransitive."—Hendrick cor. "The Parts of Speech, in the English language, are nine; viz., the Article, Noun, Adjective, Pronoun, Verb, Adverb, Preposition, Interjection, and Conjunction."—Bullions cor. See Lennie. "Of these, the Noun, Pronoun, and Verb, are declined; the rest are indeclinable."—Bullions, Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 18. "The first expression is called 'the Active form;' the second, 'the Passive form.'"—Weld cor.

"O, 'tis a godlike privilege to save;
And he that scorns it, is himself a slave."—Cowper cor.

SECTION III.—THE COLON.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE I.—OF ADDITIONAL REMARKS.

"Of is a preposition: it expresses the relation between fear and Lord."—Bullions cor. "Wealth and poverty are both temptations to man: that tends to excite pride; this, discontentment."—Id. et al cor. "Religion raises men above themselves; irreligion sinks them beneath the brutes: this binds them down to a poor pitiable speck of perishable earth; that opens for them a prospect to the skies."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 189. "Love not idleness: it destroys many."—Ingersoll cor. "Children, obey your parents: 'Honour thy father and mother,' is the first commandment with promise."—Bullions cor.

Page 1931

"Thou art my hiding-place and my shield; I hope in thy word."—Psalm cxix, 114. "The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul."—Psalm cxxi, 6. "Here to Greece is assigned the highest place in the class of objects among which she is numbered—the nations of antiquity: she is one of them."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 114.

"From short (as usual) and disturb'd repose,
I wake: how happy they who wake no more!"—Young, N. T., p. 3.

UNDER RULE II.—OF GREATER PAUSES.

"A taste of a thing, implies actual enjoyment of it; but a tase [sic—KTH] for it, implies only capacity for enjoyment: as, 'When we have had a true taste of the pleasures of virtue, we can have no relish for those of vice.'"—Bullions cor. "The Indicative mood simply declares a thing: as, 'He loves;' 'He is loved:' or it asks a question; as, 'Lovest thou me?'"—Id. and Lennie cor.; also Murray. "The Imperfect (or Past) tense represents an action or event indefinitely as past; as, 'Caesar came, and saw, and conquered:' or it represents the action definitely as unfinished and continuing at a certain time now entirely past; as, 'My father was coming home when I met him.'"—Bullions cor. "Some nouns have no plural; as, gold, silver, wisdom: others have no singular: as, ashes, shears, tongs: others are alike in both numbers; as, sheep, deer, means, news."—Day cor. "The same verb may be transitive in one sense, and intransitive in an other: thus, in the sentence, 'He believes my story,' believes is transitive; but, in this phrase, 'He believes in God,' it is intransitive."—Butler cor. "Let the divisions be distinct: one part should not include an other, but each should have its proper place, and be of importance in that place; and all the parts, well fitted together and united, should present a perfect whole."—Goldsbury cor. "In the use of the transitive verb, there are always three things implied; the actor, the act, and the object acted upon: in the use of the intransitive, there are only two; the subject, or the thing spoken of, and the state or action attributed to it."—Bullions cor.

"Why labours reason? instinct were as well;
Instinct, far better: what can choose, can err."—Young, vii, 622.

UNDER RULE III.—OF INDEPENDENT QUOTATIONS.

Page 1932

"The sentence may run thus: 'He is related to the same person, and is governed by him.'"—Hart cor. "Always remember this ancient proverb: 'Know thyself.'"—Hallock cor. "Consider this sentence: 'The boy runs swiftly.'"—Frazee cor. "The comparative is used thus: 'Greece was more polished than any other nation of antiquity.' The same idea is expressed by the superlative, when the word other is left out: thus, 'Greece was the most polished nation of antiquity.'"—Bullions and Lennie cor. "Burke, in his speech on the Carnatic war, makes the following allusion to the well known fable of Cadmus sowing dragon's teeth:—'Every day you are fatigued and disgusted with this cant: 'The Carnatic is a country that will soon recover, and become instantly as prosperous as ever.' They think they are talking to innocents, who believe that by the sowing of dragon's teeth, men may come up ready grown and ready made.'"—Hiley and Hart cor.

"For sects he car'd not: 'They are not of us,
Nor need we, brethren, their concerns discuss.'"—Crabbe cor.

"Habit, with him, was all the test of truth:
'It must be right; I've done it from my youth.'
Questions he answer'd in as brief a way:
'It must be wrong; it was of yesterday.'"—Id.

MIXED EXAMPLES CORRECTED.

"This would seem to say, 'I doubt nothing, save one thing; namely, that he will fulfill his promise:' whereas that is the very thing not doubted."—Bullions cor. "The common use of language requires, that a distinction be made between morals and manners: the former depend upon internal dispositions; the latter, upon outward and visible accomplishments."—Beattie cor. "Though I detest war in each particular fibre of my heart, yet I honour the heroes among our fathers, who fought with bloody hand. Peacemakers in a savage way, they were faithful to their light: the most inspired can be no more; and we, with greater light, do, it may be, far less."—T. Parker cor. "The article the, like a, must have a substantive joined with it; whereas that, like one, may have it understood: thus, speaking of books, I may select one, and say, 'Give me that;' but not, 'Give me the;'—[so I may say,] 'Give me one;' but not, 'Give me a.'"—Bullions cor. "The Present tense has three distinct forms: the simple; as, I read: the emphatic; as, I do read: and the progressive; as, I am reading." Or thus: "The Present tense has three distinct forms;—the simple; as, 'I read;'—the emphatic; as, 'I do read;'—and the progressive; as, 'I am reading.'"—Id. "The tenses in English are usually reckoned six: the Present, the Imperfect, the Perfect, the Pluperfect, the First-future, and the Second-future.”—Id. “There are three participles; the Present or Active, the Perfect or Passive, and the Compound Perfect: as, loving, loved, having loved.” Or, better: “There are three participles from each verb; namely, the Imperfect, the Perfect, and the Preperfect; as, turning, turned, having turned.”—Murray et al. cor. “The participles are three; the Present, the Perfect, and the Compound Perfect: as, loving, loved, having loved.” Better: “The participles of each verb are three; the Imperfect, the Perfect, and the Preperfect: as, turning, turned, having turned.”—Hart cor. “Will is conjugated regularly, when it is a principal verb: as, present, I will; past, I willed; &c.”—Frazee cor. “And both sounds of x are compound: one is that of gz, and the other, that of ks.”—Id. “The man is happy; he is benevolent; he is useful.”—L. Mur., p. 28: Cooper cor. “The pronoun stands in stead of the noun: as, ‘The man is happy; he is benevolent; he is useful.’”—L. Murray cor. “A Pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun, to prevent too frequent a repetition of it: as, ‘The man is happy; he is benevolent; he is useful.’”—Id. “A Pronoun is a word used in the room of a noun, or as a substitute for one or more words: as, ‘The man is happy; he is benevolent; he is useful.’”—Cooper cor. “A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things; as, Animal, tree, insect, fish, fowl.”—Id. “Nouns have three persons; the first, the second, and the third.”—Id. “So saying, her rash hand in evil hour Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck’d, she eat: Earth felt the wound; and Nature from her seat, Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe, That all was lost.”—MILTON, P. L., Book ix, l. 780.

Page 1933

SECTION IV.—THE PERIOD.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE I.—OF DISTINCT SENTENCES.

“The third person is the position of a word by which an object is merely spoken of; as, ‘Paul and Silas were imprisoned.’—‘The earth thirsts.’—‘The sun shines.’”—Frazee cor.

“Two, and three, and four, make nine. If he were here, he would assist his father and mother; for he is a dutiful son. They live together, and are happy, because they enjoy each other’s society. They went to Roxbury, and tarried all night, and came back the next day.”—Goldsbury cor.

“We often resolve, but seldom perform. She is wiser than her sister. Though he is often advised, yet he does not reform. Reproof either softens or hardens its object. He is as old as his classmates, but not so learned. Neither prosperity, nor adversity, has improved him. Let him that standeth, take heed lest he fall. He can acquire no virtue, unless he make some sacrifices.”—Id.

Page 1934

“Down from his neck, with blazing gems array’d,
Thy image, lovely Anna! hung portray’d;
Th’ unconscious figure, smiling all serene,
Suspended in a golden chain was seen.”—Falconer.

UNDER RULE II.—OF ALLIED SENTENCES.

“This life is a mere prelude to an other which has no limits. It is a little portion of duration. As death leaves us, so the day of judgement will find us.”—Merchant cor.

“He went from Boston to New York.—He went (I say) from Boston; he went to New York. In walking across the floor, he stumbled over a chair.”—Goldsbury corrected.

“I saw him on the spot, going along the road, looking towards the house. During the heat of the day, he sat on the ground, under the shade of a tree.”—Goldsbury corrected.

“‘George came home; I saw him yesterday.’ Here the word him can extend only to the individual George.”—Barrett corrected.

“Commas are often used now, where parentheses were [adopted] formerly. I cannot, however, esteem this an improvement.”—Bucke’s Classical Grammar, p. 20.

“Thou, like a sleeping, faithless sentinel,
Didst let them pass unnotic’d, unimprov’d.
And know, for that thou slumberst on the guard,
Thou shalt be made to answer at the bar
For every fugitive.”—COTTON: Hallock and Enfield cor.

UNDER RULE III.—OF ABBREVIATIONS.

“The term pronoun (Lat. pronomen) strictly means a word used for, or in stead of, a noun.”—Bullions corrected.

“The period is also used after abbreviations; as, A. D., P. S., G. W. Johnson.”—N. Butler cor.

“On this principle of classification, the later Greek grammarians divided words into eight classes, or parts of speech: viz., the Article, Noun, Pronoun, Verb, Participle, Adverb, Preposition, and Conjunction.”—Bullions cor.

“‘Metre [Melody] is not confined to verse: there is a tune in all good prose; and Shakspeare’s was a sweet one.’—Epea Pter., ii, 61. [First American Ed., ii, 50.] Mr. H.

Tooke's idea was probably just, agreeing with Aristotle's; but [, if so, it is] not accurately expressed."— Churchill cor.

"Mr. J. H. Tooke was educated at Eton and at Cambridge, in which latter college he took the degree of A. M. Being intended for the established church of England, he entered into holy orders when young; and obtained the living of Brentford, near London, which he held ten or twelve years."—Tooke's Annotator cor.

"I, nor your plan, nor book condemn;
But why your name? and why A. M.?"—Lloyd cor.

MIXED EXAMPLES CORRECTED.

"If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath," &c.—Isaiah, lviii, 13. "He that hath eeris of hervnge, here he."—WICKLIFFE: Matt., xi, 15. "See General Rules for Spelling, iii, v, and vii."—N. Butler cor. "False witnesses did rise up."—Ps., xxxv, 11.

Page 1935

“An explicative sentence is used for explaining; an interrogative sentence, for inquiring; an imperative sentence, for commanding.”—Barrett cor. “In October, corn is gathered in the field by men, who go from hill to hill with baskets, into which they put the ears.—Susan labours with her needle for a livelihood.—Notwithstanding his poverty, he is a man of integrity.”—Golds, cor.

“A word of one syllable is called a monosyllable; a word of two syllables, a dissyllable; a word of three syllables, a trissyllable; a word of four or more syllables, a polysyllable.”—Frazee cor.

“If I say, ‘If it did not rain, I would take a walk;’ I convey the idea that it does rain at the time of speaking. ‘If it rained,’ or, ‘Did it rain,’ in [reference to] the present time, implies that it does not rain. ‘If it did not rain,’ or, ‘Did it not rain,’ in [reference to the] present time, implies that it does rain. Thus, in this peculiar application, an affirmative sentence always implies a negation; and a negative sentence, an affirmation.”—Id. “‘If I were loved’ and, ‘Were I loved,’ imply I am not loved: ‘If I were not loved,’ and, ‘Were I not loved,’ imply I am loved. A negative sentence implies an affirmation, and an affirmative sentence implies a negation, in these forms of the subjunctive.”—Id.

“What is Rule III?”—Hart cor. “How is Rule III violated?”—Id. “How do you parse letter in the sentence, ‘James writes a letter?’ Ans. Letter is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case; and is governed by the verb writes, according to Rule III, which says, ‘A transitive verb governs the objective case.’”—Id.

“Creation sleeps. ’Tis as the gen’ral pulse
Of life stood still, and nature made a pause;
An awful pause! prophetic of her end.
And let her prophecy be soon fulfill’d:
Fate, drop the curtain; I can lose no more.”—Young.

SECTION V.—THE DASH.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE I.—OF ABRUPT PAUSES.

“And there is something in your very strange story, that resembles—Does Mr. Bevil know your history particularly?”—Burgh’s Speaker, p. 149. “Sir,—Mr. Myrtle—Gentlemen—You are friends—I am but a servant—But—”—Id., p. 118.

“An other man now would have given plump into this foolish story; but I—No, no, your humble servant for that.”—GARRICK, Neck or Nothing.

“Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial; which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a hen!”—SHAKSPEARE, All’s Well.

“But ere they came,—O, let me say no more!
Gather the sequel by that went before.”—IDEM, Com. of Errors.

Page 1936

UNDER RULE II.—OF EMPHATIC PAUSES.

“M,—Malvolio;—M,—why, that begins my name.”—SINGER’S SHAK., Twelfth Night.

“Thus, by the creative influence of the Eternal Spirit, were the heavens and the earth finished in the space of six days—so admirably finished—an unformed chaos changed into a system of perfect order and beauty—that the adorable Architect himself pronounced it very good, and all the sons of God shouted for joy.”—Historical Reader, p. 10.

“If I were an American, as I am an Englishman, while a foreign troop remained in my country, I never would lay down my arms—never, never, never.”—Pitt’s Speech.

“Madam, yourself are not exempt in this,—
Nor your son Dorset;—Buckingham, nor you.”—SHAK.

UNDER RULE III.—OF FAULTY DASHES.

“‘You shall go home directly, Le Fevre,’ said my uncle Toby, ‘to my house; and we’ll send for a doctor to see what’s the matter; and we’ll have an apothecary; and the corporal shall be your nurse: and I’ll be your servant, Le Fevre.’”—Sterne cor.

“He continued: ‘Inferior artists may be at a stand, because they want materials.’”—Harris cor. “Thus, then, continued he: ‘The end, in other arts, is ever distant and removed.’”—Id.

“The nouns must be coupled with and; and when a pronoun is used, it must be plural, as in the example. When the nouns are disjoined, the pronoun must be singular.”—Lennie cor.

“Opinion is a common noun, or substantive, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case.”—Wright cor.

“The mountain, thy pall and thy prison, may keep thee;
I shall see thee no more, but till death I will weep thee.”
—See Felton’s Gram., p. 93.

MIXED EXAMPLES CORRECTED.

“If to accommodate man and beast, heaven and earth—if this be beyond me, ’tis not possible.—What consequence then follows? Or can there be any other than this?—if I seek an interest of my own, detached from that of others, I seek an interest which is chimerical, and can never have existence.”—Harris.

“Again: I must have food and clothing. Without a proper genial warmth, I instantly perish. Am I not related, in this view, to the very earth itself?—to the distant sun, from whose beams I derive vigour?”—Id.

“Nature instantly ebbed again; the film returned to its place; the pulse fluttered—stopped—went on—throbbed—stopped again—moved—stopped.— Shall I go on?—No.”—Sterne cor.

“Write ten nouns of the masculine gender;—ten of the feminine;—ten of the neuter; ten indefinite in gender.”—Davis cor.

“The infinitive mood has two tenses; the indicative, six; the potential, four; the subjunctive, two; and the imperative, one.”—Frazee cor. “Now notice the following sentences: ‘John runs.’—‘Boys run.’—‘Thou runnest.’”—Id.

Page 1937

"The Pronoun sometimes stands for a name; sometimes for an adjective, a sentence, or a part of a sentence; and, sometimes, for a whole series of propositions."—Peirce cor.

"The self-applauding bird, the peacock, see;
Mark what a sumptuous pharisee is he!"—Cowper cor.

SECTION VI.—THE EROTEME.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE I.—OF QUESTIONS DIRECT.

"When will his ear delight in the sound of arms? When shall I, like Oscar, travel in the light of my steel?"—Ossian, Vol. i, p. 357. "Will Henry call on me, while he shall be journeying south?"—Peirce cor.

"An Interrogative Pronoun is one that is used in asking a question; as, 'Who is he? and what does he want?'"—P. E. Day cor. "Who is generally used when we would inquire about some unknown person or persons; as, 'Who is that man?'"—Id. "Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever?"—Zech., i. 5.

"It is true, that some of our best writers have used than whom; but it is also true that they have used other phrases which we have rejected as ungrammatical: then why not reject this too?—The sentences in the exercises, with than who, are correct as they stand."—Lennie cor.

"When the perfect participle of an active-intransitive verb is annexed to the neuter verb to be, what does the combination form?"—Hallock cor. "Those adverbs which answer to the question where? whither? or whence? are called adverbs of place."—Id. "Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is as high as heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than hell; what canst thou know?"—SCOTT, ALGER, BRUCE, AND OTHERS: Job, xi, 7 and 8.

"Where, where, for shelter shall the wicked fly,
When consternation turns the good man pale?"—Young.

UNDER RULE II.—OF QUESTIONS UNITED.

"Who knows what resources are in store, and what the power of God may do for thee?"—STERNE: Enfield's Speaker, p. 307.

"God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?"—SCOTT'S BIBLE, ALGER'S, FRIENDS', BRUCE'S, AND OTHERS: Numb., xxiii, 19. "Hath the Lord said it, and shall he not do it? hath he spoken it, and shall he not make it good?"—Lennie and Bullions cor.

"Who calls the council, states the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?"—Pope's Essay.

UNDER RULE III.—OF QUESTIONS INDIRECT.

Page 1938

"To be, or not to be;—that is the question."—Shak. et al. cor. "If it be asked, why a pause should any more be necessary to emphasis than to an accent,—or why an emphasis alone will not sufficiently distinguish the members of sentences from each other, without pauses, as accent does words,—the answer is obvious: that we are preacquainted with the sound of words, and cannot mistake them when distinctly pronounced, however rapidly; but we are not preacquainted with the meaning of sentences, which must be pointed out to us by the reader or speaker."—Sheridan cor.

"Cry, 'By your priesthood, tell me what you are.'"—Pope cor.

MIXED EXAMPLES CORRECTED.

"Who else can he be?"—Barrett cor. "Where else can he go?"—Id. "In familiar language, here, there, and where, are used for hither, thither, and whither."—N. Butler cor. "Take, for instance, this sentence: 'Indolence undermines the foundation of virtue.'"—Hart cor. "Take, for instance, the sentence before quoted: 'Indolence undermines the foundation of virtue.'"—Id. "Under the same head, are considered such sentences as these: 'He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.'"—Gad, a troop shall overcome him.'"—Id.

"Tenses are certain modifications of the verb, which point out the distinctions of time."—Bullions cor. "Calm was the day, and the scene, delightful."—Id. See Murray's Exercises, p. 5. "The capital letters used by the Romans to denote numbers, were C, I, L, V, X; which are therefore called Numeral Letters. I denotes one; V, five; X, ten; L, fifty; and C, a hundred."—Bullions cor. "'I shall have written;' viz., at or before some future time or event."—Id. "In Latin words, the liquids are l and r only; in Greek words, l, r, m, and n."—Id. "Each legion was divided into ten cohorts; each cohort, into three maniples; and each maniple, into two centuries."—Id. "Of the Roman literature previous to A. U. 514, scarcely a vestige remains."—Id.

"And that which He delights in, must be happy.
But when? or where? This world was made for Caesar."—CATO.

"Look next on greatness. Say where greatness lies.
Where, but among the heroes and the wise?"—Pope.

SECTION VII—THE ECPHONEME.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE I.—OF INTERJECTIONS, &c.

Page 1939

(1.) "O! that he were wise!"—Bullions cor. (2.) "O! that his heart were tender!"—See Murray's Ex. or Key, under Rule xix. (3 and 4.) "Oh! what a sight is here!"—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 71; (Sec.37;) Pract. Les., p. 82; Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 111. (5-9.) "O Virtue! how amiable thou art!"—Farnum's Gram., p. 12; Bullions's Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 111. (10.) "Oh! that I had been more diligent!"—Hart cor.; and Hiley. (11.) "O! the humiliation to which vice reduces us!"—Farnum and Mur. cor. (12.) "O! that he were more prudent!"—Farnum cor. (13 and 14.) "Ah me!"—Davis cor.

(15.) "Lately, alas! I knew a gentle boy," &c.—Dial cor.

(16 and 17.) "Wo is me, Alhama!"—Byron's Poems: Wells cor.

UNDER RULE II.—OF INVOCATIONS.

"Weep on the rocks of roaring winds, O maid of Inistore!"—Ossian. "Cease a little while, O wind! stream, be thou silent a while! let my voice be heard around. Let my wanderer hear me! Salgar! it is Colma who calls. Here is the tree, and the rock. Salgar, my love! I am here. Why delayest thou thy coming? Lo! the calm moon comes forth. The flood is bright in the vale."—Id., Vol. i, p. 369.

"Ah, stay not, stay not! guardless and alone:
Hector! my lov'd, my dearest, bravest son!"—Pope, II., xxii, 61.

UNDER RULE III.—OF EXCLAMATORY QUESTIONS.

"How much better is wisdom than gold!"—See Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 272. "O Virtue! how amiable art thou!"—See Murray's Grammar, 2d Edition, p. 95. "At that hour, O how vain was all sublunary happiness!"—Brown's Institutes, p. 117; see English Reader, p. 135. "Alas! how few and transitory are the joys which this world affords to man!"—P. E. Day cor. "Oh! how vain and transitory are all things here below!"—Id.

"And O! what change of state, what change of rank,
In that assembly everywhere was seen!"—Pollok cor.; also Day.

MIXED EXAMPLES CORRECTED.

"O Shame! where is thy blush?"—Shak.[557] "John, give me my hat."—Barrett cor.
"What! is Moscow in flames?"—Id. "O! what happiness awaits the virtuous!"—Id.

"Ah, welladay! do what we can for him, said Trim, maintaining his point,—the poor soul will die."—Sterne or Enfield cor.; also Kirkham.

“Will John return to-morrow?”—Barrett cor. “Will not John return to-morrow?”—Id. “John, return to-morrow.”—Id. “Soldiers, stand firm.”—Id. “If mea, which means my, is an adjective in Latin, why may not my be so called in English? and if my is an adjective, why not Barrett’s?”—Id.

Page 1940

"O Absalom, my son!"—See 2 Sam., xix, 4. "O star-eyed Science! whither hast thou fled?"—Peirce cor. "Why do you tolerate your own inconsistency, by calling it the present tense?"—Id. "Thus the declarative mood [i.e., the indicative mood] may be used in asking a question: as, 'What man is frail?'"—Id. "What connection has motive, wish, or supposition, with the the term subjunctive?"—Id. "A grand reason, truly, for calling it a golden key!"—Id. "What 'suffering' the man who can say this, must be enduring!"—Id. "What is Brown's Rule in relation to this matter?"—Id. "Alas! how short is life!"—P. E. Day cor. "Thomas, study your book."—Id. "Who can tell us who they are?"—Sanborn cor. "Lord, have mercy on my son; for he is lunatic, and sorely vexed."—See Matt., xvii, 15. "O ye wild groves! O where is now your bloom?"—Felton cor.

"O who of man the story will unfold?"—Farnum cor.

"Methought I heard Horatio say, To-morrow.
Go to—I will not hear of it—to-morrow!"—COTTON.

"How his eyes languish! how his thoughts adore
That painted coat which Joseph never wore!"

SECTION VIII.—THE CURVES.

CORRECTIONS UNDER RULE I.—OF PARENTHESES.

"Another [, better written as a phrase, An other,] is composed of the indefinite article an, (which etymologically means one,) and other; and denotes one other."—Hallock cor.

"Each mood has its peculiar Tense, Tenses, or Times."—Bucke cor.

"In some very ancient languages, (as the Hebrew,) which have been employed chiefly for expressing plain sentiments in the plainest manner, without aiming at any elaborate length or harmony of periods, this pronoun [the relative] occurs not so often."—L. Murray cor.

"Before I shall say those things, O Conscript Fathers! about the public affairs, which are to be spoken at this time; I shall lay before you, in few words, the motives of the journey and the return."—Brightland cor.

"Of well-chose words some take not care enough,
And think they should be, like the subject, rough."—Id.

"Then, having showed his wounds, he'd sit him down."—Bullions cor.

UNDER RULE II.—OF INCLUDED POINTS.

“Then Jael smote the nail into his temples, and fastened it into the ground: (for he was fast asleep, and weary:) so he died.”—SCOTT’S BIBLE: Judges, iv, 21.

“Every thing in the Iliad has manners, (as Aristotle expresses it,) that is, every thing is acted or spoken.”—Pope cor.

“Those nouns that end in f, or fe. (except some few which I shall mention presently,) form plurals by changing those letters into ves: as, thief, thieves: wife, wives.”—Bucke cor.

Page 1941

“As requires as; (expressing equality of degree;) thus, ‘Mine is as good as yours.’ As [requires] so; (expressing equality or proportion;) thus, ‘As the stars, so shall thy seed be.’ So [requires] as; (with a negative expressing inequality;) as, ‘He is not so wise as his brother.’ So [requires] that; (expressing a consequence;) as, ‘I am so weak that I cannot walk.’” [558]—Bullions cor.

“A captious question, sir, (and yours is one,) Deserves an answer similar, or none.”—Cowper cor.

MIXED EXAMPLES CORRECTED.

“Whatever words the verb TO BE serves to unite, referring to the same thing, must be of the same case; (Sec.61;) as, ‘Alexander is a student.’”—Bullions cor. “When the objective is a relative or [an] interrogative, it comes before the verb that governs it: (Sec.40, Rule 9:) Murray’s 6th rule is unnecessary.”—Id. “It is generally improper, except in poetry, to omit the antecedent to a relative; and always, to omit a relative, when of the nominative case.”—Id. “In every sentence, there must be a verb and a nominative or subject, expressed or understood.”—Id. “Nouns and pronouns, and especially words denoting time, are often governed by prepositions understood; or are used to restrict verbs or adjectives, without a governing word: (Sec.50, Rem. 6 and Rule;) as, ‘He gave [to] me a full account of the affair.’”—Id. “When should is used in stead of ought, to express present duty, (Sec.20, 4,) it may be followed by the present; as, ‘You should study that you may become learned.’”—Id. “The indicative present is frequently used after the words when, till, before, as soon as, after, to express the relative time of a future action: (Sec.24, I, 4;) as, ‘When he comes, he will be welcome.’”—Id. “The relative is parsed, [according to Bullions,] by stating its gender, number, case, and antecedent; (the gender and number being always the same as those of the antecedent;) thus, ‘The boy who’—‘Who is a relative pronoun, masculine, singular, the nominative; and refers to ‘boy’ as its antecedent.’”—Id.

“‘Now, now, I seize, I clasp thy charms;
And now you burst, ah cruel! from my arms.’—Pope.

“Here is an unnecessary change from the second person singular to the second person plural. The text would have been better, thus:—

‘Now, now, I seize, I clasp your charms;
And now you burst, ah cruel! from my arms.’—John Burn cor.
See Lowth’s Gram., p. 35; Churchill’s, 293.

SECTION IX.—ALL POINTS.

Page 1942

MIXED EXAMPLES CORRECTED.

"The principal stops are the following: the Comma [,], the Semicolon [;], the Colon [:], the Period, or Full Stop [.] , the Note of Interrogation [?], the Note of Exclamation [!], the Parenthesis [()], and the Dash [—]."—Bullions cor. "The modern punctuation in Latin is the same as in English. The chief marks employed are the Comma [,], the Semicolon [;], the Colon [:], the Period [.] , the Note of Interrogation [?], the Note of Exclamation (!), the Parenthesis [()], and the Dash [—]."—Id.

"Plato reproving a young man for playing at some childish game, 'You chide me,' says the youth, 'for a trifling fault.' 'Custom,' replied the philosopher, 'is no trifle.' 'And,' adds Montaigne, 'he was in the right; for our vices begin in infancy.'"—Home cor.

"A merchant at sea asked the skipper what death his father died. 'My father,' says the skipper, 'my grandfather, and my great-grandfather, were all drowned.' 'Well,' replies the merchant, 'and are not you afraid of being drowned too?'"—Id.

"The use of inverted commas derives from France, where one Guillemet was the author of them; [and,] as an acknowledgement for the improvement, his countrymen call them after his name, GUILLEMETS."—Hist. cor.

"This, however, is seldom if ever done, unless the word following the possessive begins with s; thus, we do not say, 'the prince' feather;' but, 'the prince's feather.'"—Bullions cor. "And this phrase must mean, 'the feather of the prince;' but 'prince's-feather,' written as one word, [and with both apostrophe and hyphen,] is the name of a plant, a species of amaranth."—G. Brown. "Boethius soon had the satisfaction of obtaining the highest honours his country could bestow."—Ingersoll cor.; also L. Murray.

"When an example, a quotation, or a speech, is introduced, it is separated from the rest of the sentence either by a comma or by a colon; as, 'The Scriptures give us an amiable representation of the Deity, in these words: God is love.'"—Hiley cor. "Either the colon or the comma may be used, [according to the nature of the case,] when an example, a quotation, or a speech, is introduced; as, 'Always remember this ancient maxim: Know thyself.'"—'The Scriptures give us an amiable representation of the Deity, in these words: God is love.'"—Bullions cor.

"The first word of a quotation introduced after a colon, or of any sentence quoted in a direct form, must begin with a capital: as, 'Always remember this ancient maxim: Know thyself.'"—'Our great lawgiver says, Take up thy cross daily, and follow me.'"—Bullions and Lennie cor.; also L. Murray; also Weld. See Luke, ix, 23.

Page 1943

"Tell me, in whose house do you live?"—N. Butler cor. "He that acts wisely, deserves praise."—Id. "He who steals my purse, steals trash."—Id. "The antecedent is sometimes omitted; as, 'Who steals my purse, steals trash.'—[Shak.] That is, 'He who,' or, 'The person who.'"—Id. "Thus, 'Whoever steals my purse, steals trash;'—'Whoever does no good, does harm.'"—Id. "Thus, 'Whoever sins, will suffer.' This means, that any one, without exception, who sins, will suffer."—Id.

"Letters form syllables; syllables, words; words, sentences; and sentences, combined and connected, form discourse."—Cooper cor. "A letter which forms a perfect sound when uttered by itself, is called a vowel; as, a, e, i."—Id. "A proper noun is the name of an individual, [or of a particular people or place]; as, John, Boston, Hudson, America."—Id.

"Many men have been capable of doing a wise thing; more, a cunning thing; but very few, a generous thing."—Davis cor. "In the place of an ellipsis of the verb, a comma must be inserted."—Id. "A common noun unlimited by an article, is sometimes understood in its broadest acceptance: thus, 'Fishes swim,' is understood to mean all fishes; 'Man is mortal,' all men."—Id.

"Thus, those sounds formed principally by the throat, are called gutturals; those formed principally by the palate, palatals; those formed by the teeth, dentals; those by the lips, labials; and those by the nose, nasals."—Davis cor.

"Some adjectives are compared irregularly: as, Good, letter, best; Bad, worse, worst; Little, less, least."—Felton cor.

"Under the fourth head of grammar, therefore, four topics will be considered; viz., PUNCTUATION, ORTHOEPY [sic—KTH], FIGURES, and VERSIFICATION."—Hart cor.

"Direct her onward to that peaceful shore,
Where peril, pain, and death, are felt no more!"—Falconer cor.

GOOD ENGLISH RIGHTLY POINTED.

LESSON I.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

"Discoveries of such a character are sometimes made in grammar also; and such, too, are often their origin and their end."—Bullions cor.

"TRAVERSE, [literally to cross,] To deny what the opposite party has alleged. To traverse an indictment, or the like, is to deny it."—Id.

"The Ordinal numerals denote the order, or succession, in which any number of persons or things are mentioned; as, first, second, third, fourth, &c."—Hiley cor.

“Nouns have three persons; the First, the Second, and the Third. The First person is that which denotes the speaker: the Second is that which denotes the person or thing spoken to; the Third is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of.”—Hart cor.

Page 1944

"Nouns have three cases; the Nominative, the Possessive, and the Objective. The relations indicated by the cases of a noun, include three distinct ideas; viz., those of subject, object, and ownership."—Id.

"In speaking of animals that are of inferior size, or whose sex is not known or not regarded, we often treat them as without sex: thus, we say of a cat, 'It is treacherous;' of an infant, 'It is beautiful;' of a deer, 'It was killed.'"—Id.

"When THIS and THAT, or THESE and THOSE, refer to a preceding sentence; THIS or THESE represents the latter member or term, and THAT or THOSE, the former."—Churchill cor.; and Lowth.

"The rearing of them became his first care; their fruit, his first food; and the marking of their kinds, his first knowledge."—N. Butler cor.

"After the period used with abbreviations, we should employ other points, if the construction demands them; thus, after 'Esq.,' in the last example, there should be, besides the period, a comma."—Id.

"In the plural, the verb has the same form in all the persons; but still the principle in Rem. 5, under Rule iii, that the first or second person takes precedence, is applicable to verbs, in parsing."—Id.

"Rex and Tyrannus are of very different characters. The one rules his people by laws to which they consent; the other, by his absolute will and power: that government is called freedom; this, tyranny."—L. Murray cor.

"A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned: as, George, London, America, goodness, charity."—See Brown's Institutes, p. 31.

"Etymology treats of the classification of words, their various modifications, and their derivation"—P. E. Day cor.

"To punctuate correctly, implies a thorough acquaintance with the meaning of words and phrases, as well as with all their corresponding connexions."—W. Day cor.

"All objects that belong to neither the male nor the female kind, are said to be of the neuter gender, except certain things personified."—Weld cor twice.

"The Analysis of the Sounds in the English language, presented in the preceding statements, is sufficiently exact for the purpose in hand. Those who wish to pursue the subject further, can consult Dr. Rush's admirable work, 'The Philosophy of the Human Voice.'"—Fowler cor. "Nobody confounds the name of w or y with the sound of the letter, or with its phonetic import."—Id. [[Fist] This assertion is hardly true. Strange as such a blunder is, it has actually occurred. See, in Orthography, Obs. 5, on the Classes of the Letters, at p. 156.—G. B.]

Page 1945

"Order is Heav'n's first law; and, this confess'd,
Some are, and must be, greater than the rest."—Pope.

LESSON II—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

"From adjectives of one syllable, and some of two, the comparative is formed by adding r or er to the positive; and the superlative, by adding st or est: as, sweet, sweeter, sweetest; able, abler, ablest."—Bullions cor.

"From monosyllables, or from dissyllables ending with a vowel or the accent, the comparative is formed by adding er or r to the positive; and the superlative, by adding est or st: as, tall, taller, tallest; wise, wiser, wisest; holy, holier, holiest; complete, completer, completest."—Id.

"By this method, the confusion and unnecessary labour occasioned by studying grammars, in these languages, constructed on different principles, are avoided; the study of one is rendered a profitable introduction to the study of an other; and an opportunity is furnished to the inquiring student, of comparing the languages in their grammatical structure, and of seeing at once wherein they agree, and wherein they differ."—Id.

"No larger portion should be assigned for each recitation, than the class can easily master; and, till the previous lessons are well learned, a new portion should not be given out."—Id. "The acquisitions made in every new lesson, should be riveted and secured by repeated revisals."—Id.

"The personal pronouns may be parsed briefly, thus: 'I is a personal pronoun, of the first person, singular number, masculine gender, (feminine, if the speaker is a female,) and nominative case.' 'His is a personal pronoun, of the third person, singular number, masculine gender, and possessive case.'"—Id.

"When the male and the female are expressed by distinct terms, as, shepherd, shepherdess, the masculine term has also a general meaning, expressing both male and female; and is always to be used when the office, occupation, or profession, and not the sex, of the individual, is chiefly to be expressed; the feminine term being used only when the discrimination of sex is indispensably necessary. Thus, when it is said, 'The poets of this country are distinguished for correctness of taste,' the term 'poets' clearly includes both male and female writers of poetry."—Id.

"Nouns and pronouns connected by conjunctions, must be in the same case"—Ingersoll cor.

"Verbs connected by and, or, or nor, must generally be in the same mood and tense; and, when the tense has different forms, they must be in the same form."—Id.

Page 1946

"This will habituate him to reflection; exercise his judgement on the meaning of the author; and, without any great effort on his part, impress indelibly on his memory the rules which he is required to give. After the exercises under any rule have been gone through, agreeably to the direction in the note at the bottom of page 88th, they may be read over again in a corrected state, the pupil making an emphasis on the correction made; or they may be presented in writing, at the next recitation."—Bullions cor.

"Man, but for that, no action could attend;
And, but for this, were active to no end."—Pope.

LESSON III.—UNDER VARIOUS RULES.

"'Johnson, the bookseller and stationer' indicates that bookseller and stationer are terms belonging to the same person; 'the bookseller and the stationer,' would indicate that they belong to different persons."—Bullions cor.

"Past is [commonly] an adjective; passed, the past tense or perfect participle of the verb: and they ought not (as they frequently are) to be confounded with each other."—Id.

"Not only the nature of the thoughts and sentiments, but the very selection or arrangement of the words, gives English poetry a character which separates it widely from common prose."—Id.

"Men of sound, discriminating, and philosophical minds—men prepared for the work by long study, patient investigation, and extensive acquirements—have laboured for ages to improve and perfect it; and nothing is hazarded in asserting, that, should it be unwisely abandoned, it will be long before an other, equal in beauty, stability, and usefulness, will be produced in its stead."—Id., on the common "system of English Grammar."

"The article the, on the other hand, is used to restrict; and is therefore termed Definite. Its proper office is, to call the attention to a particular individual or class, or to any number of such; and accordingly it is used with nouns of either number, singular or plural."—Id.

"Hence, also, the infinitive mood, a participle with its adjuncts, a member of a sentence, or a whole proposition, forming the subject of discourse, or the object of a verb or preposition, and being the name of an act or circumstance, is, in construction, regarded as a noun; and is usually called, 'a substantive phrase:' as, 'To play, is pleasant.'—'That he is an expert dancer, is no recommendation.'—'Let your motto be, Honesty is the best policy.'"—Id.

“In accordance with his definition, Murray has divided verbs into three classes: Active, Passive, and Neuter;—and included in the first class transitive verbs only; and, in the last, all verbs used intransitively”—Id.

Page 1947

“Moreover, as the name of the speaker or that of the person spoken to is seldom expressed, (the pronoun I being used for the former, and THOU or YOU for the latter;) a noun is very rarely in the first person; not often in the second; and hardly ever in either, unless it is a proper noun, or a common noun denoting an object personified.”—Id.

“In using the parsing exercises, it will save much time, (and this saving is all-important;) if the pupil be taught to say all things belonging to the noun, in the fewest words possible; and to say them always in the same order, after the example above.”—Id.

“In any phrase or sentence, the adjectives qualifying a noun may generally be found by prefixing the phrase, ‘What kind of,’ to the noun, in the form of a question; as, ‘What kind of horse?’ ‘What kind of stone?’ ‘What kind of way?’ The word containing the answer to the question, is an adjective.”—Id.

“In the following exercise, let the pupil first point out the nouns, and then the adjectives; and tell how he knows them to be such.”—Id.

“In the following sentences, point out the improper ellipses; show why they are improper; and correct them.”—Id.

“SINGULAR. PLURAL. 1. I am smitten, 1. We are smitten, 2. Thou art smitten, 2. You are smitten, 3. He is smitten; 3. They are smitten.”—Wright cor.

CHAPTER II.—UTTERANCE.

The second chapter of Prosody, treating of articulation, pronunciation, elocution and the minor topics that come under Utterance, contains no exercises demanding correction in this Key.

CHAPTER III.—FIGURES.

In the third chapter of Prosody, the several Figures of speech are explained; and, as the illustrations embrace no errors for correction, nothing here corresponds to the chapter, but the title.

CHAPTER IV.—VERSIFICATION.

FALSE PROSODY, OR ERRORS OF METRE, CORRECTED.

LESSON I.—RHYTHM RESTORED.

"Where thy true treasure? Gold says, 'Not in me.'"
—Young.

"Canst thou grow sad, thou say'st, as earth grows bright."
—Dana.

"It must be so;—Plato, thou reason'st well"
—CATO: Enfield, p. 321.

"Slow rises worth by poverty depressed."
—Wells's Gram., Late Ed., p. 211.

"Rapt into future times, the bard begun."
—POPE.—Ib., p. 165.

"Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens
To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves mercy
But to confront the visage of offence?"
—Shak., Hamlet.

Page 1948

"Look! in this place ran Cassius' dagger through."
—Id., J. Caesar.

"And when they list, their lean and flashy songs Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw."
—Milton, Lycidas.

"Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake?"
—Dodd and Shak. cor.

"May I express thee' unblam'd? since God is light"
—Milton, B. iii, l. 3.

"Or hear'st thou rather pure ethereal stream?"
—Id., B. iii, l. 7.

"Republics, kingdoms, empires, may decay;
Great princes, heroes, sages, sink to nought."
—Peirce or La-Rue cor.

"Thou bringst, gay creature as thou art,
A solemn image to my heart."
—Hallock cor.

"Know then thyself, presume not God to scan;
The proper study of mankind is Man."
—Pope, on Man, Ep. ii, l. 1.

"Raised on pilasters high of burnished gold."
—Dr. S. Butler cor.

"Love in Adalgise' breast has fixed his sting."
—Id.

"Thirty days each have September,
April, June, and old November;
Each of the rest has thirty-one,
Bating February alone,
Which has twenty-eight in fine,
Till leap-year gives it twenty-nine."
—Dean Colet cor.

LESSON II.—RHYTHM RESTORED.

“’Twas not the fame of what he once had been,
Or tales in records old and annals seen.”
—Rowe cor.

“And Asia now and Afric are explored
For high-priced dainties and the citron board.”
—Rowe cor.

“Who knows not how the trembling judge beheld
The peaceful court with arm~ed legions fill’d?”
—Rowe cor.

“With thee the Scythian wilds we’ll wander o’er,
With thee the burning Libyan sands explore.”
—Rowe cor.

“Hasty and headlong, different paths they tread,
As impulse blind and wild distraction lead.”
—Rowe cor.

“But Fate reserv’d him to perform its doom,
And be the minister of wrath to Rome.”
—Rowe cor.

“Thus spoke the youth. When Cato thus express’d
The sacred counsels of his inmost breast.”
—Rowe cor.

“These were the rigid manners of the man,
This was the stubborn course in which they ran;
The golden mean unchanging to pursue,
Constant to keep the purpos’d end in view.”
—Rowe cor.

Page 1949

"What greater grief can on a Roman seize,
Than to be forced to live on terms like these!"
—Rowe cor.

"He views the naked town with joyful eyes,
While from his rage an arm~ed people flies."
—Rowe cor.

"For planks and beams, he ravages the wood,
And the tough oak extends across the flood."
—Rowe cor.

"A narrow pass the horn~ed mole divides.
Narrow as that where strong Euripus' tides
Beat on Euboean Chalcis' rocky sides."
—Rowe cor.

"No force, no fears their hands unarm~ed bear,"—or,
"No force, no fears their hands unarm'd now bear,
But looks of peace and gentleness they wear."
—Rowe cor.

"The ready warriors all aboard them ride,
And wait return of the retiring tide."
—Rowe cor.

"He saw those troops that long had faithful stood,
Friends to his cause, and enemies to good,
Grown weary of their chief, and satiate with blood."
—Rowe cor.

END OF THE KEY.

APPENDIX I. TO PART FIRST, OR ORTHOGRAPHY. OF THE SOUNDS OF THE LETTERS.

In the first chapter of Part I, the powers of the letters, or the elementary sounds of the English language, were duly enumerated and explained; for these, as well as the letters themselves, are few, and may be fully stated in few words: but, since we often express the same sound in many different ways, and also, in some instances, give to the same letter several different sounds,—or, it may be, no sound at all,—any adequate account of the powers of the letters considered severally according to usage,—that is, of the sound or sounds of each letter, with its mute positions, as these occur in practice,— must, it was thought, descend to a minuteness of detail not desirable in the first chapter of Orthography. For this reason, the following particulars have been reserved to be given here as an Appendix, pertaining to the First Part of this English Grammar.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—A proper discrimination of the different vowel sounds by the epithets most commonly used for this purpose,—such as long and short, broad and slender, open and close, or open and shut,—is made difficult, if not impossible, by reason of the different, and sometimes directly contradictory senses in which certain orthoepists [sic—KTH] have employed such terms. Wells says, “Vowel sounds are called open or close, according to the relative size of the opening through which the voice passes in forming them. Thus, a in father, and o in nor, are called open sounds, because they are formed by a wide opening of the organs of speech; while e in me, and u in rule, are called close sounds, because the organs are nearly closed in uttering them.”—School Grammar, 1850, p. 32. Good use should fix the import of words. How does the passage here cited comport with this hint of Pope?

Page 1950

“These equal syllables alone require,
Though oft the ear the open vowels tire.”

—Essay on Criticism, l. 344.

OBS. 2.—Walker, too, in his Principles, 64 and 65, on page 19th of his Critical Pronouncing Dictionary, mentions a similar distinction of vowels, “which arises from the different apertures of the mouth in forming them;” and says, “We accordingly find vowels denominated by the French, ouvert and ferme; by the Italians, aperto and chiuso; and by the English [,] open and shut. But whatever propriety there may be in the use of these terms in other languages, it is certain they must be used with caution in English for fear of confounding them with long and short. Dr. Johnson and other grammarians call the a in father the open a: which may, indeed, distinguish it from the slender a in paper; but not from the broad a in water, which is still more open. Each of these letters [the seven vowels] has a short sound, which may be called a shut sound; but the long sounds cannot be so properly denominated open as more or less broad; that is, the a in paper, the slender sound; the a in father, the broadish or middle sound; and the a in water, the broad sound. The same may be observed of the o. This letter has three long sounds, heard in move, note, nor; which graduate from slender to broadish, and broad [,] like [those three sounds of] the a. The i also in mine may be called the broad i, and that in machine, the slender i; though each of them is equally long; and though these vowels that are long [,] may be said to be more or less open according to the different apertures of the mouth in forming them, yet the short vowels cannot be said to be more or less shut; for as short always implies shut (except in verse,) though long does not always imply open, we must be careful not to confound long and open, and close and shut, when we speak of the quantity and quality of the vowels. The truth of it is,” continues he, “all vowels either terminate a syllable, or are united with a consonant. In the first case, if the accent be on the syllable, the vowel is long, though it may not be open: in the second case, where a syllable is terminated by a consonant, except that consonant be r, whether the accent be on the syllable or not, the vowel has its short sound, which, compared with its long one, may be called shut: but [,] as no vowel can be said to be shut that is not joined to a consonant, all vowels that end syllables may be said to be open, whether the accent be on them or not.”—Crit. Pron. Dict., New York, 1827, p. 19.

Page 1951

OBS. 3.—These suggestions of Walker's, though each in itself may seem clear and plausible, are undoubtedly, in several respects, confused and self-contradictory. Open and shut are here inconsistently referred first to one principle of distinction, and then to another;—first, (as are “open and close” by Wells,) to “the relative size of the opening,” or to “the different apertures of the mouth;” and then, in the conclusion, to the relative position of the vowels with respect to other letters. These principles improperly give to each of the contrasted epithets two very different senses: as, with respect to aperture, wide and narrow; with respect to position, closed and unclosed. Now, that open may mean unclosed, or close be put for closed, is not to be questioned; but that open is a good word for wide, or that shut (not to say close) can well mean narrow, is an assumption hardly scholarlike. According to Walker, “we must be careful not to confound” open with long, or shut with short, or close with shut; and yet, if he himself does not, in the very paragraph above quoted, confound them all,—does not identify in sense, or fail to distinguish, the two words in each of these pairs,—I know not who can need his “caution.” If there are vowel sounds which graduate through several degrees of openness or broadness, it would seem most natural to express these by regularly comparing the epithet preferred; as, open, opener, openest; or broad, broader, broadest. And again, if “all vowels that end syllables may be said to be open,” then it is not true, that “the long sounds” of a in paper, father, water, cannot be so “denominated;” or that to “call the a in father the open a, may, indeed, distinguish it from the slender a in paper.” Nor, on this principle, can it be said that “the broad a in water is still more open,” for this a no more “ends a syllable” than the others. If any vowel sound is to be called the open sound because the letter ends a syllable, or is not shut by a consonant, it is, undoubtedly, the primal and most usual sound, as found in the letter when accented, and not some other of rare occurrence.

OBS. 4.—Dr. Perley says, “It is greatly to be regretted that the different sounds of a vowel should be called by the names long, short, slender, and broad, which convey no idea of the nature of the sound, for mat and not are as long in poetry as mate and note. The first sound of a vowel[,] as [that of a in] fate[,] may be called open, because it is the sound which the vowel generally has when it ends a syllable; the second sound as [that of a in] fat, may be called close, because it is the sound which the vowel generally has when it is joined with a consonant following in the same syllable, as fat-ten; when there are more than two sounds of any vowel[,] they may be numbered onward; as 3 far, 4 fall.”—Perley's Gram., p. 73.

Page 1952

OBS. 5.—Walker thought a long or short vowel sound essential to a long or short quantity in any syllable. By this, if he was wrong in it, (as, in the chapter on Versification, I have argued that he was,) he probably disturbed more the proper distinction of quantities, than that of vowel sounds. As regards long and short, therefore, Perley's regret seems to have cause; but, in making the same objection to "slender and broad," he reasons illogically. So far as his view is right, however, it coincides with the following earlier suggestion: "The terms long and short, which are often used to denote certain vowel sounds; being also used, with a different import, to distinguish the quantity of syllables, are frequently misunderstood; for which reason, we have substituted for them the terms open and close;—the former, to denote the sound usually given to a vowel when it forms or ends an accented syllable; as, ba, be, bi, bo, bu, by;—the latter, to denote the sound which the vowel commonly takes when closed by a consonant; as, ab, eb, ib, ob, ub"—Brown's Institutes, p. 285.

I. OF THE LETTER A.

The vowel A has four sounds properly its own; they are named by various epithets: as,

1. The English, open, full, long, or slender a; as in aid, fame, favour, efficacious.
2. The French, close, curt, short, or stopped a; as in bat, banner, balance, carrying.
3. The Italian, broadish, grave, or middle a; as in far, father, aha, comma, scoria, sofa.
4. The Dutch, German, Old-Saxon, or broad a; as in wall, haul, walk, warm, water.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Concerning the number of sounds pertaining to the vowel a, or to certain other particular letters, and consequently in regard to the whole number of the sounds which constitute the oral elements of the English language, our educational literati,—the grammarians, orthoepists [sic—KTH], orthographers, elocutionists, phonographers, and lexicographers,—are found to have entertained and inculcated a great variety of opinions. In their different countings, the number of our phonical elements varies from twenty-six to more than forty. Wells says there are "about forty elementary sounds."—School Gram., Sec.64. His first edition was more positive, and stated them at "forty-one." See the last and very erroneous passage which I have cited at the foot of page 162. In Worcester's Universal and Critical Dictionary, there appear to be noted several more than forty-one, but I know not whether this author, or Walker either, has anywhere told us how many of his marked sounds he considered to be severally different from all others. Sheridan and Jones admitted twenty-eight. Churchill acknowledges, as undisputed and indisputable, only twenty-six; though he enumerates, "Of simple vowel sounds, twelve, or perhaps thirteen" (New Grammar, p. 5,) and says, "The consonant sounds in the English language, are nineteen, or rather twenty."—P. 13.

Page 1953

OBS. 2.—Thus, while Pitman, Comstock, and others, are amusing themselves with the folly of inventing new “Phonetic Alphabets,” or of overturning all orthography to furnish “a character for each of the 38 elementary sounds,” more or fewer, one of the acutest observers among our grammarians can fix on no number more definite or more considerable than thirty-one, thirty-two, or thirty-three; and the finding of these he announces with a “perhaps,” and the admission that other writers object to as many as five of the questionable number. Churchill’s vowel sounds, he says, “may be found in the following words: 1. B_a_te, 2. B_a_t, 3. B_a_ll; 4. B_e_t, 5. B_e_; 6. B_i_t; 7. B_o_t, 8. B_o_ne, 9. B_oo_n; 10. B_u_t, 11. B_u_ll; 12. Lovel_y_; 13. Wool.”—New Grammar, p. 5. To this he adds: “Many of the writers on orthoepy [sic—KTH], however, consider the first and fourth of the sounds above distinguished as actually the same, the former differing from the latter only by being lengthened in the pronunciation. They also reckon the seventh sound, to be the third shortened; the twelfth, the fifth shortened; and the eleventh, the ninth shortened. Some consider the fifth and sixth as differing only in length; and most esteem the eleventh and thirteenth as identical.”—lb.

OBS. 3.—Now, it is plain, that these six identifications, or so many of them as are admitted, must diminish by six, or by the less number allowed, the thirteen vowel sounds enumerated by this author. By the best authorities, W initial, as in “Wool,” is reckoned a consonant; and, of course, its sound is supposed to differ in some degree from that of oo in “B_oo_n,” or that of u in “B_u_ll,”—the ninth sound or the eleventh in the foregoing series. By Walker, Murray, and other popular writers, the sound of y in “Lovel_y_” is accounted to be essentially the same as that of e in “B_e_.” The twelfth and the thirteenth, then, of this list, being removed, and three others added,—namely, the a heard in far, the i in fine, and the u in fuse,—we shall have the fourteen vowel sounds which are enumerated by L. Murray and others, and adopted by the author of the present work.

OBS. 4.—Wells says, “A has six sounds:—1. Long; as in late. 2. Grave; as in father. 3. Broad; as in fall. 4. Short; as in man. 5. The sound heard in care, hare. 6. Intermediate between a in man and a in father; as in grass, pass, branch.”—School Grammar, 1850, p. 33. Besides these six, Worcester recognizes a seventh sound,—the “A obscure; as in liar, rival”—Univ. and Crit. Dict., p. ix. Such a multiplication of the oral elements of our first vowel.—or, indeed, any extension of them beyond four,—appears to me to be unadvisable; because it not only makes our alphabet the more defective, but is unnecessary, and not sustained by our best and most popular orthoepical [sic—KTH] authorities. The sound of a in liar, (and in rival too, if made “obscure”) is a borrowed one, pertaining more properly to the letter u. In grass, pass, and branch, properly uttered, the a is essentially the same as in man. In care and hare, we have the first sound of a, made as slender as the r will admit.

Page 1954

OBS. 5.—Concerning his fifth sound of a, Wells cites authorities thus: “Walker, Webster, Sheridan, Fulton and Knight, Kenrick, Jones, and Nares, give a in care the long sound of a, as in late. Page and Day give it the short sound of a, as in mat. See Page’s Normal Chart, and Day’s Art of Elocution. Worcester and Perry make the sound of a in care a separate element; and this distinction is also recognized by Russell, Mandeville, and Wright. See Russell’s Lessons in Enunciation, Mandeville’s Elements of Reading and Oratory, and Wright’s Orthography.”—Wells’s School Grammar, p. 34. Now the opinion that a in care has its long, primal sound, and is not properly “a separate element,” is maintained also by Murray, Hiley, Bullions, Scott, and Cobb; and is, undoubtedly, much more prevalent than any other. It accords, too, with the scheme of Johnson. To count this a by itself, seems too much like a distinction without a difference.

OBS. 6.—On his sixth sound of a, Wells remarks as follows: “Many persons pronounce this a incorrectly, giving it either the grave or the short sound. Perry, Jones, Nares, Webster, and Day, give to a in grass the grave sound, as in father; while Walker, Jamieson, and Russell, give it the short sound, as in man. But good speakers generally pronounce a in grass, plant, etc., as a distinct element, intermediate between the grave and the short sound.”—School Gram., p. 34. He also cites Worcester and Smart to the same effect; and thinks, with the latter, “There can be no harm in avoiding the censure of both parties by shunning the extreme that offends the taste of each.”—Ib., p. 35. But I say, that a needless multiplication of questionable vowel powers difficult to be discriminated, is “harm,” or a fault in teaching; and, where intelligent orthoepists [sic—KTH] dispute whether words have “the grave or the short sound” of a, how can others, who condemn both parties, acceptably split the difference, and form “a distinct element” in the interval? Words are often mispronounced, and the French or close a may be mistaken for the Italian or broadish a, and vice versa; but, between the two, there does not appear to be room for an other distinguishable from both. Dr. Johnson says, (inaccurately indeed,) “A has three sounds, the slender, [the] open, and [the] broad. A slender is found in most words, as face, mane. A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly resembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glass. A broad resembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call. [fist] The short a approaches to the a open, as grass.”—Johnson’s Grammar, in his Quarto Dictionary, p. 1. Thus the same word, grass, that serves Johnson for an example of “the short a” is used by Wells and Worcester to exemplify the “a intermediate,” while of the Doctor’s five instances of what he calls the “a open,” three, if not four, are evidently such as nearly all readers nowadays would call close or short!

Page 1955

OBS. 7.—There are several grammarians who agree in ascribing to our first vowel five sounds, but who nevertheless oppose one another in making up the five. Thus, according to Hart, “A has five sounds of its own, as in fate, fare, far, fall, fat,”—Hart’s E. Gram., p. 26. According to W. Allen, “A has five sounds;—the long or slender, as in cane; the short or open, as in can; the middle, as in arm; the broad, as in all; and the broad contracted, as in want.”—Allen’s E. Gram., p. 6. P. Davis has the same sounds in a different order, thus: “a [as in] mane, mar, fall, mat, what.”—Davis’s E. Gram., p. xvi. Mennye says, “A has five sounds; as, 1 fame, 2 fat, 3 false, 4 farm, 5 beggar.”—Mennye’s E. Gram., p. 55. Here the fifth sound is the seventh of Worcester,—the “A obscure.”

DIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH A.

The only proper diphthong in which a is put first, is the word ay, meaning yes: in which a has its middle sound, as in ah, and y is like open e, or ee, uttered feebly—ah-ee. Aa, when pronounced as an improper diphthong, and not as pertaining to two syllables, usually takes the sound of close a; as in Balaam, Canaan, Isaac. In many words, as in Baael, Gaael, Gaaesh, the diaeresis occurs. In baa, the cry of a sheep, we hear the Italian sound of a; and, since we hear it but once, one a or the other must be silent.

AE, a Latin improper diphthong, common also in the Anglo-Saxon, generally has, according to modern orthoepists, the sound of open e or ee; as in Caesar, aenigma, paeon;—sometimes that of close or short e; as in aphaeresis, diaeresis, et caetera. Some authors, judging the a of this diphthong to be needless, reject it, and write Cesar, enigma, &c.

Page 1956

Ai, an improper diphthong, generally has the sound of open or long a; as in sail, avail, vainly. In a final unaccented syllable, it sometimes preserves the first sound of a; as in chilblain, mortmain: but oftener takes the sound of close or short i; as in certain, curtain, mountain, villain. In said, saith, again, and against, it takes the sound of close or short e; and in the name Britain, that of close or short u.

Ao, an improper diphthong, occurs in the word gaol, now frequently written as it is pronounced, jail; also in gaoler, which may be written jailer; and in the compounds of gaol: and, again, it is found in the adjective extraordinary, and its derivatives, in which, according to nearly all orthoepists, the a is silent. The name Pharaoh, is pronounced F=a'r=o.

Au, an improper diphthong, is generally sounded like broad a; as in cause, caught, applause. Before n and an other consonant, it usually has the sound of grave or middle a; as in aunt, flaunt, gaunt, launch, laundry. So in laugh, laughter, and their derivatives. Gauge and gauger are pronounced gage and gager, and sometimes written so.

Aw, an improper diphthong, is always sounded like broad a; as in draw, drawn, drawl.

Ay, an improper diphthong, like ai, has usually the sound of open or long a; as in day, pay, delay: in sayst and says, it has the sound of close or short e.

TRIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH A.

Awe is sounded au, like broad a. Aye, an adverb signifying always, has the sound of open or long a only; being different, both in sound and in spelling, from the adverb ay, yes, with which it is often carelessly confounded. The distinction is maintained by Johnson, Walker, Todd, Chalmers, Jones, Cobb, Maunder, Bolles, and others; but Webster and Worcester give it up, and write "ay, or aye," each sounded ah-ee, for the affirmation, and "aye," sounded _a_, for the adverb of time: Ainsworth on the contrary has ay only, for either sense, and does not note the pronunciation.

II. OF THE LETTER B.

The consonant B has but one sound; as in boy, robber, cub. B is silent before t or after m in the same syllable; as in debt, debtor, doubt, dumb, lamb, climb, tomb. It is heard in subtile, fine; but not in subtle, cunning.

III. OF THE LETTER C.

Page 1957

The consonant C has two sounds, neither of them peculiar to this letter; the one hard, like that of k, and the other soft, or rather hissing, like that of s. C before a, o, u, l, r, t, or when it ends a syllable, is generally hard, like k; as in can, come curb, clay, crab, act, action, accent, flaccid. C before e, i, or y, is always soft, like s; as in cent, civil, decency, acid.

In a few words, c takes the flat sound of s, like that of z; as in discern, suffice, sacrifice, sice. C before ea, ia, ie, io, or eou, when the accent precedes, sounds like sh; as in ocean, special, species, gracious, cetaceous. C is silent in czar, czarina, vituals, indict, muscle, corpuscle, and the second syllable of Connecticut.

Ch is generally sounded like tch, or tsh, which is the same to the ear; as in church, chance, child. But in words derived from the learned languages, it has the sound of k; as in character, scheme, catechise, chorus, choir, chyle, patriarch, drachma, magna charta: except in chart, charter, charity. Ch, in words derived from the French, takes the sound of sh; as in chaise, machine. In Hebrew words or names, in general, ch sounds like k; as in Chebar, Sirach, Enoch: but in Rachel, cherub, and cherubim, we have Anglicized the sound by uttering it as tch. Loch, a Scottish word, sometimes also a medical term, is heard as lok.

“Arch, before a vowel, is pronounced ark; as in archives, archangel, archipelago: except in arched, archer, archery, archenemy. Before a consonant it is pronounced artch; as in archbishop, archduke, archfiend.”—See W. Allen’s Gram., p. 10. Ch is silent in schism, yacht, and drachm. In schedule, some utter it as k; others, as sh; and many make it mute: I like the first practice.

IV. OF THE LETTER D.

The general sound of the consonant D, is that which is heard in dog, eddy, did. D, in the termination ed, preceded by a sharp consonant, takes the sound of t, when the e is suppressed or unheard: as in faced, stuffed, cracked, tripped, passed; pronounced faste, stuft, cract, tript, past. D before ia, ie, io, or eou, when the accent precedes, generally sounds like j; as in Indian, soldier, tedious, hideous. So in verdure, arduous, education.

V. OF THE LETTER E.

The vowel E has two sounds properly its own,—and I incline to think, three:—

Page 1958

1. The open, long, full, or primal e; as in me, mere, menial, melodious.
2. The close, curt, short, or stopped e; as in men, merry, ebony, strength.
3. The obscure or faint e; as in open, garden, shovel, able. This third sound is scarcely perceptible, and barely sufficient to articulate the consonant and form a syllable.

E final is mute and belongs to the syllable formed by the preceding vowel or diphthong; as in age, eve, ice, ore. Except—1. In the words, be, he, me, we, she, in which it has the open sound; and the article the, wherein it is open before a vowel, and obscure before a consonant. 2. In Greek and Latin words, in which it has its open sound, and forms a distinct syllable, or the basis of one; as in Penelope, Pasiphae, Cyanee, Gargaphie, Arsinoe, apostrophe, catastrophe, simile, extempore, epitome. 3. In the terminations ere, gre, tre, in which it has the sound of close or curt u, heard before the r; as in acre, meagre, centre.

Mute e, after a single consonant, or after st or th, generally preserves the open or long sound of the preceding vowel; as in cane, here, pine, cone, tune, thyme, baste, waste, lathe, clothe: except in syllables unaccented; as in the last of genuine;—and in a few monosyllables; as bade, are, were, gone, shone, one, done, give, live, shove, love.

DIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH E.

E before an other vowel, in general, either forms with it an improper diphthong, or else belongs to a separate syllable. We do not hear both vowels in one syllable, except perhaps in eu or ew.

Ea, an improper diphthong, mostly sounds like open or long e; as in ear, fear, tea; frequently like close or curt e; as in head, health, leather: sometimes, like open or long a; as in steak, bear, forswear: rarely, like middle a; as in heart, hearth, hearken. Ea in an unaccented syllable, sounds like close or curt u; as in vengeance, pageant.

Ee, an improper diphthong, mostly sounds like one open or long e; as in eel, sheep, tree, trustee, referee. The contractions e'er and ne'er, are pronounced air and nair, and not like ear and near. E'en, however, preserves the sound of open e. Been is most commonly heard with the curt sound of i, bin.

Ei, an improper diphthong, mostly sounds like the primal or long a; as in reign, veil: frequently, like open or long e; as in deceit, either, neither, seize: sometimes, like open or long i; as in height, sleight, heigh-ho: often, in unaccented syllables, like close or curt i; as in foreign, forfeit, surfeit, sovereign: rarely, like close e; as in heifer, nonpareil.

Page 1959

Eo, an improper diphthong, in people, sounds like open or long e; in leopard and jeopard, like close or curt e; in yeoman, according to the best usage, like open or long o; in George, Georgia, georgic, like close o; in dungeon, puncheon, sturgeon, &c., like close u. In feoff, and its derivatives, the close or short sound of e is most fashionable; but some prefer the long sound of e; and some write the word "fief." Feod, feodal, feodary, feodatory, are now commonly written as they are pronounced, feud, feudal, feudary, feudatory.

Eu and ew are sounded alike, and almost always with the diphthongal sound of open or long u; as in feud, deuce, jewel, dew, few, new. These diphthongs, when initial, sound like yu. Nouns beginning with this sound, require the article a, and not an, before them; as, A European, a ewer. After r or rh, eu and ew are commonly sounded like oo; as in drew, grew, screw, rheumatism. In sew and Shrewsbury, ew sounds like open o: Worcester, however, prefers the sound of oo in the latter word. Shew and strew, having the same meaning as show and strow, are sometimes, by sameness of pronunciation, made to be the same words; and sometimes distinguished as different words, by taking the sounds shu and stroo.

Ey, accented, has the sound of open or long a; as in bey, prey, survey: unaccented, it has the sound of open e; as in alley, valley, money. Key and ley are pronounced kee, lee.

TRIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH E.

Eau, a French triphthong, sounds like open o; as in beau, flambeau, portmanteau, bureau: except in beauty, and its compounds, in which it is pronounced like open u, as if the word were written buty.

Eou is a combination of vowels sometimes heard in one syllable, especially after c or g; as in crus-ta-ceous, gor-geous. Walker, in his Rhyming Dictionary, gives one hundred and twenty words ending in eous, in all of which he separates these vowels; as in extra-ne-ous. And why, in his Pronouncing Dictionary, he gave us several such anomalies as fa-ba-ce-ous in four syllables and her-ba-ceous in three, it is not easy to tell. The best rule is this: after c or g, unite these vowels; after the other consonants, separate them.

Ewe is a triphthong having the sound of yu, and forming a word. The vulgar pronunciation yoe should be carefully avoided.

Eye is an improper triphthong which also forms a word, and is pronounced like open i, or the pronoun I.

Page 1960

VI. OF THE LETTER F.

The consonant F has one unvaried sound, which is heard in fan, effort, staff: except of, which, when simple, is pronounced ov.

VII. OF THE LETTER G.

The consonant G has two sounds;—the one hard, guttural, and peculiar to this letter; the other soft, like that of j. G before a, o, u, l, r, or at the end of a word, is hard; as in game, gone, gull, glory, grace, log, bog; except in gaol. G before e, i, or y, is soft; as in gem, ginger, elegy. Except—1. In get, give, gewgaw, finger, and a few other words. 2. When a syllable is added to a word ending in g: as, long, longer; fog, foggy.

G is silent before m or n in the same syllable; as in phlegm, apothegm, gnaw, design. G, when silent, usually lengthens the preceding vowel; as in resign, impregn, impugn.

Gh at the beginning of a word has the sound of g hard; as in ghastly, gherkin, Ghibelline, ghost, ghoul, ghyll: in other situations, it is generally silent; as in high, mighty, plough, bough, though, through, fight, night, bought. Gh final sometimes sounds like f; as in laugh, rough, tough; and sometimes, like g hard; as in burgh. In hough, lough, shough, it sounds like k, or ck; thus, hock, lock, shock.

VIII. OF THE LETTER H.

The sound of the consonant H, (though articulate and audible when properly uttered,) is little more than an aspirate breathing. It is heard in hat, hit, hot, hut, adhere.

H at the beginning of a word, is always sounded; except in heir, herb, honest, honour, hospital, hostler, hour, humble, humour, with their compounds and derivatives. H after r, is always silent; as in rhapsody, rhetoric, rheum, rhubarb. H final, immediately following a vowel, is always silent; as in ah, Sarah, Nineveh, Shiloh.

IX. OF THE LETTER I.

The vowel I has three sounds, each very common to it, and perhaps properly its own:—

1. The open, long, full, or primal i; as in life, fine, final, time, bind, child, sigh, pint, resign. This is a diphthongal sound, equivalent to the sounds of middle a and open e quickly united.
2. The close, curt, short, or stopped i; as in ink, limit, disfigure, mimicking.

3. The feeble, faint, or slender i, accentless; as in divest, doctrinal, diversity.

This third sound is equivalent to that of open e, or ee uttered feebly. I generally has this sound when it occurs at the end of an unaccented syllable: except at the end of Latin words, or of ancient names, where it is open or long; as in literati, Nervii, Eli, Levi.

Page 1961

In some words, (principally from other modern languages,) i has the full sound of open e, under the accent; as in Porto Rico, machine, magazine, antique, shire.

Accented i followed by a vowel, has its open or primal sound; and the vowels belong to separate syllables; as in pliant, diet, satiety, violet, pious. Unaccented i followed by a vowel, has its feeble sound; as in expatiate, obedient, various, abstemious.

DIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH I.

I, in the situation last described, readily coalesces with the vowel which follows, and is often sunk into the same syllable, forming a proper diphthong: as in fustian, quotient, question. The terminations cion, sion, and tion, are generally pronounced shun; and cious and tious are pronounced shus.

Ie is commonly an improper diphthong. Ie in die, hie, lie, pie, tie, vie, and their derivatives, has the sound of open i. Ie in words from the French, (as cap-a-pie, ecurie, grenadier, siege, bier,) has the sound of open e. So, generally, in the middle of English roots; as in chief, grief, thief; but, in sieve, it has the sound of close or short i. In friend, and its derivatives or compounds, it takes the sound of close e.

TRIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH I.

The triphthongs ieu and iew both sound like open or long u; as in lieu, adieu, view.

The three vowels iou, in the termination ious, often fall into one syllable, and form a triphthong. There are two hundred and forty-five words of this ending; and more than two hundred derivatives from them. Walker has several puzzling inconsistencies in their pronunciation; such as fas-tid-i-ous and per-fid-i-ous, con-ta-gi-ous and sac-ri-le-gious. After c, g, t, or x, these vowels should coalesce: as in gra-cious, re-li-gious, vex-a-tious, ob-nox-i-ous, and about two hundred other words. After the other consonants, let them form two syllables; (except when there is a syn-seresis in poetry;) as in dw-bi-ou-s, o-di-ous, va-ri-ous, en-vi-ous.

X. OF THE LETTER J.

The consonant J, the tenth letter of the English alphabet, has invariably the sound of soft g, like the g in giant, which some say is equivalent to the complex sound dzh; as, jade, jet, jilt, joy, justice, jewel, prejudice.

XI. OF THE LETTER K.

The consonant K, not silent, has uniformly the sound of c hard; and occurs where c would have its soft sound: as in keep, looking, kind, smoky.

Page 1962

K before n is silent; as in knave, know, knuckle. In stead of doubling c final, we write ck; as in lack, lock, luck, attack. In English words, k is never doubled, though two Kays may come together in certain compounds; as in brickkiln, jackknife. Two Kays, belonging to different syllables, also stand together in a few Scripture names; as in Akkub, Bakbakkar, Bukki, Bukkiah, Habakkuk. Hakkoz, Ikkesh, Sukkiims. C before k, though it does not always double the sound which c or k in such a situation must represent, always shuts or shortens the preceding vowel; as in rack, speck, freckle, cockle, wicked.

XII. OF THE LETTER L.

The consonant L, the plainest of the semivowels, has a soft, liquid sound; as in line, lily, roll, follow. L is sometimes silent; as in Holmes, alms, almond, calm, chalk, walk, calf, half, could, would, should. L, too, is frequently doubled where it is heard but once; as in hill, full, travelled. So any letter that is written twice, and not twice sounded, must there be once mute; as the last in baa, ebb, add, see, staff, egg, all, inn, coo, err, less, buzz.

XIII. OF THE LETTER M.

The consonant M is a semivowel and a liquid, capable of an audible, humming sound through the nose, when the mouth is closed. It is heard in map, murmur, mammon. In the old words, compt, accompt, comptroller, (for count, account, controller,) the m is sounded as n. M before n, at the beginning of a word, is silent; as in Mnason, Mnemosyne, mnemonics.

XIV. OF THE LETTER N.

The consonant N, which is also a semivowel and a liquid, has two sounds;—the first, the pure and natural sound of n; as in nun, banner, cannon;—the second, the ringing sound of ng, heard before certain gutturals; as in think, mangle, conquer, congress, singing, twinkling, Cen'chreae. The latter sound should be carefully preserved in all words ending in ing, and in such others as require it. The sounding of the syllable ing as if it were in, is a vulgarism in utterance; and the writing of it so, is, as it would seem by the usage of Burns, a Scotticism.

N final preceded by m, is silent; as in hymn, solemn, column, damn, condemn, autumn. But this n becomes audible in an additional syllable; as in autumnal, condemnable, damning.

XV. OF THE LETTER O.

The vowel O has three different sounds, which are properly its own:—

1. The open, full, primal, or long o; as in no, note, opiate, opacity, Roman.

Page 1963

2. The close, curt, short, or stopped o; as in not, nor, torrid, dollar, fondle.
3. The slender or narrow o, like oo; as in prove, move, who, to, do, tomb.

O, in many words, sounds like close or curt u; as in love, shove, son, come, nothing, dost, attorney, gallon, dragon, comfit, comfort, coloration. One is pronounced wun; and once, wunce. In the termination on immediately after the accent, o is often sunk into a sound scarcely perceptible, like that of obscure e; as in mason, person, lesson.

DIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH O.

Oa, an improper diphthong, has the sound of open or long o; as in boat, coal, roach, coast, coastwise: except in broad and groat, which have the sound of broad a.

Oe, an improper diphthong, when final, has the sound of open or long o: as in doe, foe, throe: except in canoe, shoe, pronounced canoo, shoo. OE, a Latin diphthong, generally sounds like open e; as in Antoeci, foetus: sometimes, like close or curt e; as in foetid, foeticide. But the English word f~etid is often, and perhaps generally, written without the o.

Oi is generally a proper diphthong, uniting the sound of close o or broad a, and that of open e; as in boil, coil, soil, rejoice. But the vowels, when they appear together, sometimes belong to separate syllables; as in Stoic, Stoicism. Oi unaccented, sometimes has the sound of close or curt i; as in avoirdupois, connoisseur, tortoise.

Oo, an improper diphthong, generally has the slender sound of o; as in coo, too, woo, fool, room. It has, in some words, a shorter or closer sound, (like that of u in bull,) as in foot, good, wood, stood, wool;—that of close u in blood and flood;—and that of open o in door and floor. Derivatives from any of these, sound as their primitives.

Ou is generally a proper diphthong, uniting the sound of close or curt o, and that of u as heard in bull,—or u sounded as oo; as in bound, found, sound, ounce, thou. Ou is also, in certain instances, an improper diphthong; and, as such, it has six different sounds:—(1.) That of close or curt u; as in rough, tough, young, flourish. (2.) That of broad a; as in ought, bought, thought. (3.) That of open or long o; as in court, dough, four, though. (4.) That of close or curt o; as in cough, trough, lough, shough: which are, I believe, the only examples. (5.) That of slender o, or oo; as in soup, you, through. (6.) That of u in bull, or of oo shortened; only in would, could, should.

Page 1964

Ow generally sounds like the proper diphthong ou,—or like a union of short o with oo; as in brown, dowry, now, shower: but it is often an improper diphthong, having only the sound of open or long o; as in know, show, stow.

Oy is a proper diphthong, equivalent in sound to oi; as in joy, toy, oyster.

TRIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH O.

OEu is a French triphthong, pronounced in English as oo, and occurring in the word manoeuvre, with its several derivatives. Owe is an improper triphthong, and an English word, in which the o only is heard, and heard always with its long or open sound.

XVI. OF THE LETTER P.

The consonant P, when not written before h, has commonly one peculiar sound; which is heard in pen, pine, sup, supper. The word cupboard is usually pronounced kubburd. P, written with an audible consonant, is sometimes itself silent; as in psalm, psalter, pseudography, psychology, ptarmigan, ptyalism, receipt, corps.

Ph generally sounds like f; as in philosophy. In Stephen and nephew, ph has the sound of v. The h after p, is silent in diphthong, triphthong, naphtha, ophthalmic; and both the p and the h are silent in apophthegm, phthisis, phthisical. From the last three words, ph is sometimes dropped.

XVII. OF THE LETTER Q.

The consonant Q, being never silent, never final, never doubled, and not having a sound peculiar to itself, is invariably heard, in English, with the power of k; and is always followed by the vowel u, which, in words purely English, is sounded like the narrow o, or oo,—or, perhaps, is squeezed into the consonantal sound of w;—as in queen, quaver, quiver, quarter, request. In some words of French origin, the u after q is silent; as in coquet, liquor, burlesque, etiquette.

XVIII. OF THE LETTER R.

The consonant R, called also a semivowel and a liquid, has usually, at the beginning of a word, or before a vowel, a rough or pretty strong sound; as in roll, rose, roam, proudly, prorogue. “In other positions,” it is said by many to be “smooth” or “soft,” “as in hard, ford, word.”—W. Allen.

OBSERVATIONS.

Page 1965

OBS. 1.—The letter R turns the tip of the tongue up against or towards the roof of the mouth, where the sound may be lengthened, roughened, trilled, or quavered. Consequently, this element may, at the will of the speaker, have more or less—little or nothing, or even very much—of that peculiar roughness, jar, or whur, which is commonly said to constitute the sound. The extremes should here be avoided. Some readers very improperly omit the sound of r from many words to which it pertains; pronouncing or as awe, nor as knew, for as faugh, and war as the first syllable of water. On the other hand, “The excessive trilling of the r, as practised by some speakers, is a great fault.”—D. P. Page.

OBS. 2.—Dr. Johnson, in his “Grammar of the English Tongue,” says, “R has the same rough snarling sound as in other tongues.”—P. 3. Again, in his Quarto Dictionary, under this letter, he says, “R is called the canine letter, because it is uttered with some resemblance to the growl or snarl of a cur: it has one constant sound in English, such as it has in other languages; as, red, rose, more, muriatick.” Walker, however, who has a greater reputation as an orthoepist [sic—KTH], teaches that, “There is a distinction in the sound of this letter, which is,” says he, “in my opinion, of no small importance; and that is, the [distinction of] the rough and [the] smooth r. Ben Jonson,” continues he, “in his Grammar, says, ‘It is sounded firm in the beginning of words, and more liquid in the middle and ends, as in rarer, riper; and so in the Latin.’ The rough r is formed by jarring the tip of the tongue against the roof of the mouth near the fore teeth: the smooth r is a vibration of the lower part of the tongue, near the root, against the inward region of the palate, near the entrance of the throat.”—Walker’s Principles, No. 419; Octavo Dict., p. 48.

OBS. 3.—Wells, with his characteristic indecision, forbears all recognition of this difference, and all intimation of the quality of the sound, whether smooth or rough; saying, in his own text, only this: “R has the sound heard in rare.”—School Grammar, p. 40. Then, referring the student to sundry authorities, he adds in a footnote certain “quotations,” that are said to “present a general view of the different opinions which exist among orthoepists respecting this letter.” And so admirably are these authorities or opinions balanced and offset, one class against an other, that it is hard to tell which has the odds. First, though it is not at all probable that Wells’s utterance of “rare” exhibits twice over the rough snarl of Johnson’s r, the “general view” seems intended to confirm the indefinite teaching above, thus: “‘R has one constant sound in English.’—Johnson. The same view is adopted by Webster, Perry, Kendrick, Sheridan, Jones, Jameson, Knowles, and others.”—School Grammar, p. 40. In counterpoise of these, Wells next cites about as many more—namely, Frazee, Page, Russell, Walker, Rush, Barber, Comstock, and Smart,—as maintaining or admitting that r has sometimes a rough sound, and sometimes a smoother one.

Page 1966

XIX. OF THE LETTER S.

The consonant S has a sharp, hissing, or hard sound; as in sad, sister, thus: and a flat, buzzing, or soft sound, like that of z; as in rose, dismal, bosom, husband. S, at the beginning of words, or after any of the sharp consonants, is always sharp; as in see, steps, cliffs, sits, stocks, smiths. S, after any of the flat mutes, or at the end of words when not preceded by a sharp consonant, is generally flat; as in eyes, trees, beds, bags, calves. But in the English termination ous, or in the Latin us, it is sharp; as joyous, vigorous, hiatus.

Ss is generally sharp; as in pass, kiss, harass, assuage, basset, cassock, remissness. But the first two Esses in possess, or any of its regular derivatives, as well as the two in dissolve, or its proximate kin, sound like two Zees; and the soft or flat sound is commonly given to each s in hyssop, hussy, and hussar. In scissel, scissible, and scissile, all the Esses hiss;—in scissors, the last three of the four are flat, like z;—but in the middle of scissure and scission we hear the sound of zh.

S, in the termination sion, takes the sound of sh, after a consonant; as in aspersion, session, passion, mission, compulsion: and that of zh, after a vowel; as in evasion, elision, confusion.

In the verb assure, and each of its derivatives, also in the nouns pressure and fissure, with their derivatives, we hear, according to Walker, the sound of sh for each s, or twice in each word; but, according to the orthoepy of Worcester, that sound is heard only in the accented syllable of each word, and the vowel in each unaccented syllable is obscure.

S is silent or mute in the words, isle, island, aisle, demesne, corps, and viscount.

XX. OF THE LETTER T.

The general sound of the consonant T, is heard in time, letter, set. T, immediately after the accent, takes the sound of tch, before u, and generally also before eou; as in nature, feature, virtue, righteous, courteous: when s or x precedes, it takes this sound before ia or io; as in fustian, bastion, mixtion. But the general or most usual sound of t after the accent, when followed by i and an other vowel, is that of sh; as in creation, patient, cautious.

Page 1967

In English, t is seldom, if ever, silent or powerless. In depot, however, a word borrowed from the French, we do not sound it; and in chestnut, which is a compound of our own, it is much oftener written than heard. In often and soften, some think it silent; but it seems rather to take here the sound of f. In chasten, hasten, fasten, castle, nestle, whistle, apostle, epistle, bustle, and similar words, with their sundry derivatives, the t is said by some to be mute; but here it seems to take the sound of s; for, according to the best authorities, this sound is heard twice in such words. Th, written in Greek by the character called Theta, ([Greek: th] or O capital, [Greek: th] or [Greek: th] small,) represents an elementary sound; or, rather, two distinct elementary sounds, for which the Anglo-Saxons had different characters, supposed by Dr. Bosworth to have been applied with accurate discrimination of “the hard or sharp sound of th,” from “the soft or flat sound.”—(See Bosworth’s Compendious Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, p. 268.) The English th is either sharp, as in thing, ethical, thinketh; or flat, as in this, whither, thither.

“Th initial is sharp; as in thought: except in than, that, the, thee, their, them, then, thence, there, these, they, thine, this, thither, those, thou, thus, thy, and their compounds.”—W. Allen’s Grammar, p. 22.

Th final is also sharp; as in south: except in beneath, booth, with, and several verbs formerly with th last, but now frequently (and more properly) written with final e; as loathe, mouthe, seethe, soothe, smoothe, clothe, wreathe, bequeathe, unclothe.

Th medial is sharp, too, when preceded or followed by a consonant; as in Arthur, ethnic, swarthy, athwart: except in brethren, burthen, farther, farthing, murther, northern, worthy. But “th between two vowels, is generally flat in words purely English; as in gather, neither, whither: and sharp in words from the learned languages; as in atheist, ether, method”—See W. Allen’s Gram., p. 22.

“Th, in Thames, Thomas, thyme, asthma, phthisis, and their compounds, is pronounced like t.”—ib.

XXI. OF THE LETTER U.

The vowel U has three sounds which may be considered to be properly its own:—

1. The open, long, full, primal, or diphthongal u; as in tube, cubic, juvenile.
2. The close, curt, short, or stopped u; as in tub, butter, justice, unhung.
3. The middle u, resembling a short or quick oo; as in pull, pulpit, artful.

U forming a syllable by itself or U as naming itself is nearly equivalent in sound to you, and requires the article a, and not an, before it; as, a U, a union.

Page 1968

U sometimes borrows the sound of some other vowel; for bury is pronounced berry, and busy is pronounced bizzy. So in the derivatives, burial, buried, busied, busily, and the like.

The long or diphthongal u, commonly sounded as yu, or as ew in ewer,—or any equivalent diphthong or digraph, as ue, ui, eu, or ew.—when it follows r or rh, assumes the sound of slender o or oo; as in rude, rhubarb, rue, rueful, rheum, fruit, truth, brewer.

DIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH U.

U, in the proper diphthongs, ua, ue, ui, uo, uy, has the sound of w or of oo feeble; as in persuade, query, quell, quiet, languid, quote, obloquy.

Ua, an improper diphthong, has the sound—1. Of middle a; as in guard, guardian. 2. Of close a; as in guarantee, piquant. 3. Of obscure e; as in victuals and its compounds or kindred. 4. Of open u; as in mantuamaker.

Ue, an improper diphthong, has the sound—1. Of open u; as in blue, ensue, ague. 2. Of close e; as in guest, guesser. 3. Of close u; as in leaguer. Ue final is sometimes silent; as in league, antique. Ui, an improper diphthong, has the sound—1. Of open i; as in guide, guile. 2. Of close i; as in conduit, circuit. 3. Of open u; as in juice, sluice, suit.

Uo can scarcely be called an improper diphthong, except, perhaps, after q in liquor, liquorice, liquorish, where uor is heard as ur.

Uy, an improper diphthong, has the sound—1. Of open y; as in buy, buyer. 2. Of feeble y, or of ee feeble; as in plaguy, roguy.

TRIPHTHONGS BEGINNING WITH U.

Uai is pronounced nearly, if not exactly, like way; as in guai-a-cum, quail, quaint. Uaw is sounded like wa in water; as in squaw, a female Indian. Uay has the sound of way; as in Par-a-quay: except in quay, which nearly all our orthoepists pronounce kee. Uea and uee are each sounded wee; as in queasy, queer, squeal, squeeze. Uoi and woy are each sounded woi; as in quoit, buoy. Some say, that, as u, in these combinations, sounds like w, it is a consonant; others allege, that w itself has only the sound of oo, and is therefore in all cases a vowel. U has, certainly, in these connexions, as much of the sound of oo, as has w; and perhaps a little more.

XXII. OF THE LETTER V.

Page 1969

The consonant V always has a sound like that of f flattened; as in love, vulture, vivacious. In pure English, it is never silent, never final, never doubled: but it is often doubled in the dialect of Craven; and there, too, it is sometimes final.

XXIII. OF THE LETTER W.

W, when reckoned a consonant, (as it usually is when uttered with a vowel that follows it,) has the sound heard at the beginning of wine, win, woman, woody; being a sound less vocal than that of oo, and depending more upon the lips.

W before h, is usually pronounced as if it followed the h; as in what, when, where, while: but, in who, whose, whom, whole, whoop, and words formed from these, it is silent. Before r, in the same syllable, it is also silent; as in wrath, wrench, wrong. So in a few other cases; as in sword, answer, two.

W is never used alone as a vowel; except in some Welsh or foreign names, in which it is equivalent to oo; as in "Cwm Cothy," the name of a mountain in Wales; "Wkra" the name of a small river in Poland.—See Lockhart's Napoleon, Vol. ii, p. 15. In a diphthong, when heard, it has the power of u in bull, or nearly that of oo; as in new, now, brow, frown. Aw and ow are frequently improper diphthongs, the w being silent, the a broad, and the o long; as in law, flaw,—tow, snow. W, when sounded before vowels, being reckoned a consonant, we have no diphthongs or triphthongs beginning with this letter.

XXIV. OF THE LETTER X.

The consonant "X" has a sharp sound, like ks; as in ox: and a flat one, like gz; as in example. X is sharp, when it ends an accented syllable; as in exercise, exit, excellence: or when it precedes an accented syllable beginning with a consonant; as in expand, extreme, expunge. X unaccented is generally flat, when the next syllable begins with a vowel; as in exist, exemption, exotic. X initial, in Greek proper names, has the sound of z; as in Xanthus, Xantippe, Xenophon, Xerxes—See W. Allen's Gram., p. 25.

XXV. OF THE LETTER Y.

Y, as a consonant, has the sound heard at the beginning of yarn, young, youth; being rather less vocal than the feeble sound of i, or of the vowel y, and serving merely to modify that of a succeeding vowel, with which it is quickly united. Y, as a vowel, has the same sounds as i:—

1. The open, long, full, or primal y; as in cry, crying, thyme, cycle.

Page 1970

2. The close, curt, short, or stopped y; as in system, symptom, cynic.
3. The feeble or faint y, accentless; (like open e feeble;) as in cymar, cycloidal, mercy.

The vowels i and y have, in general, exactly the same sound under similar circumstances, and, in forming derivatives, we often change one for the other: as in city, cities; tie, tying; easy, easily.

Y, before a vowel heard in the same syllable, is reckoned a consonant; we have, therefore, no diphthongs or triphthongs commencing with this letter.

XXVI. OF THE LETTER Z.

The consonant Z, the last letter of our alphabet, has usually a soft or buzzing sound, the same as that of s flat; as in Zeno, zenith, breeze, dizzy. Before u primal or i feeble, z, as well as s flat, sometimes takes the sound of zh, which, in the enumeration of consonantal sounds, is reckoned a distinct element; as in azure, seizure, glazier; osier, measure, pleasure.

END OF THE FIRST APPENDIX.

APPENDIX II.

TO PART SECOND, OR ETYMOLOGY.

OF THE DERIVATION OF WORDS.

Derivation, as a topic to be treated by the grammarian, is a species of Etymology, which explains the various methods by which those derivative words which are not formed by mere grammatical inflections, are deduced from their primitives. Most of those words which are regarded as primitives in English, may be traced to ulterior sources, and many of them are found to be compounds or derivatives in the other languages from which they have come to us. To show the composition, origin, and literal sense of these, is also a part, and a highly useful part, of this general inquiry, or theme of instruction.

This species of information, though insignificant in those whose studies reach to nothing better,—to nothing valuable and available in life,—is nevertheless essential to education and to science; because it is essential to a right understanding of the import and just application of such words. All reliable etymology, all authentic derivation of words, has ever been highly valued by the wise. The learned James Harris has a remark as follows: “How useful to ETHIC SCIENCE, and indeed to KNOWLEDGE in general, a GRAMMATICAL DISQUISITION into the Etymology and Meaning of WORDS was esteemed by the chief and ablest Philosophers, may be seen by consulting Plato in his Cratylus; Xenophon's Memorabilia, IV, 5, 6; Arrian. Epict. I, 17; II, 10; Marc. Anton. III, 11;" &c.—See Harris's Hermes, p. 407.

Page 1971

A knowledge of the Saxon, Latin, Greek, and French languages, will throw much light on this subject, the derivation of our modern English; nor is it a weak argument in favour of studying these, that our acquaintance with them, whether deep or slight, tends to a better understanding of what is borrowed, and what is vernacular, in our own tongue. But etymological analysis may extensively teach the origin of English words, their composition, and the import of their parts, without demanding of the student the power of reading foreign or ancient languages, or of discoursing at all on General Grammar. And, since many of the users of this work may be but readers of our current English, to whom an unknown letter or a foreign word is a particularly uncouth and repulsive thing, we shall here forbear the use of Saxon characters, and, in our explanations, not go beyond the precincts of our own language, except to show the origin and primitive import of some of our definitive and connecting particles, and to explain the prefixes and terminations which are frequently employed to form English derivatives.

The rude and cursory languages of barbarous nations, to whom literature is unknown, are among those transitory things which, by the hand of time, are irrecoverably buried in oblivion. The fabric of the English language is undoubtedly of Saxon origin; but what was the particular form of the language spoken by the Saxons, when about the year 450 they entered Britain, cannot now be accurately known. It was probably a dialect of the Gothic or Teutonic. This Anglo-Saxon dialect, being the nucleus, received large accessions from other tongues of the north, from the Norman French, and from the more polished languages of Rome and Greece, to form the modern English. The speech of our rude and warlike ancestors thus gradually improved, as Christianity, civilization, and knowledge, advanced the arts of life in Britain; and, as early as the tenth century, it became a language capable of expressing all the sentiments of a civilized people. From the time of Alfred, its progress may be traced by means of writings which remain; but it can scarcely be called English, as I have shown in the Introduction to this work, till about the thirteenth century. And for two or three centuries later, it was so different from the modern English, as to be scarcely intelligible at all to the mere English reader; but, gradually improving by means upon which we need not here dilate, it at length became what we now find it,—a language copious, strong, refined, impressive, and capable, if properly used, of a great degree of beauty and harmony.

SECTION I.—DERIVATION OF THE ARTICLES.

Page 1972

1. For the derivation of our article THE, which he calls "an adjective," Dr. Webster was satisfied with giving this hint: "Sax. the; Dutch, de."—Amer. Dict. According to Horne Tooke, this definite article of ours, is the Saxon verb "THE," imperative, from THEAN, to take; and is nearly equivalent in meaning to that or those, because our that is "the past participle of THEAN," and "means taken."—Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, p. 49. But this is not very satisfactory. Examining ancient works, we find the word, or something resembling it, or akin to it, written in various forms, as se, see, ye, te, de, the, tha, and others that cannot be shown by our modern letters; and, tracing it as one article, or one and the same word, through what we suppose to be the oldest of these forms, in stead of accounting the forms as signs of different roots, we should sooner regard it as originating in the imperative of SEON, to see.

2. AN, our indefinite article, is the Saxon oen, ane, an, ONE; and, by dropping n before a consonant, becomes a. Gawin Douglas, an ancient English writer, wrote ane, even before a consonant; as, "Ane book,"—"Ane lang spere,"—"Ane volume."

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—The words of Tooke, concerning the derivation of That and The, as nearly as they can be given in our letters, are these: "THAT (in the Anglo-Saxon Thaet, i.e. Thead, Theat) means taken, assumed; being merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Thean, Thegan, Thion, Thihan, Thicgan, Thigian; sumere, assumere, accipere; to THE, to get, to take, to assume.

'Ill mote he THE That caused me
To make myselfe a frere.'—Sir T. More's Workes, pag. 4.

THE (our article, as it is called) is the imperative of the same verb Thean: which may very well supply the place of the correspondent Anglo-Saxon article Se, which is the imperative of Seon, videre: for it answers the same purpose in discourse, to say.... see man, or take man."—Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, p. 49.

OBS. 2.—Now, between Thaet and Theat, there is a considerable difference of form, for ae and ea are not the same diphthong; and, in the identifying of so many infinitives, as forming but one verb, there is room for error. Nor is it half so probable that these are truly one root, as that our article The is the same, in its origin, as the old Anglo-Saxon Se. Dr. Bosworth, in his Anglo-Saxon Dictionary, gives no such word as Thean or Thegan, no such participle as Thead or Theat, which derivative is perhaps imaginary; but he has inserted together "Thicgan, thicgean, thigan, to receive, or take;" and separately, "Theon, to thrive, or flourish,”—“Thihan, to thrive,”—and “Thion, to flourish,” as well as the preterit “Theat, howled,” from “Theotan, to howl.” And is it not plain, that the old verb “THE,” as used by More, is from Theon, to thrive, rather than from Thicgan, to take? “Ill mote he THE”—“Ill might he thrive,” not, “Ill might he take.”

Page 1973

OBS. 3.—Professor Hart says, “The word the was originally thaet, or that. In course of time [,] it became abbreviated, and the short form acquired, in usage, a shade of meaning different from the original long one. That is demonstrative with emphasis; the is demonstrative without emphasis.”—Hart’s E. Grammar, p. 32. This derivation of The is quite improbable; because the shortening of a monosyllable of five letters by striking out the third and the fifth, is no usual mode of abbreviation. Bosworth’s Dictionary explains THE as “An indeclinable article, often used for all the cases of Se, seo, thaet, especially in adverbial expressions and in corrupt Anglo-Saxon, as in the Chronicle after the year 1138.”

OBS. 4—Dr. Latham, in a section which is evidently neither accurate nor self-consistent, teaches us—“that there exist in the present English two powers of the word spelled t-h-e, or of the so-called definite article;” then, out of sixteen Anglo-Saxon equivalents, he selects two for the roots of this double-powered the; saying, “Hence the the that has originated out of the Anglo-Saxon thy is one word; whilst the the that has originated out of the Anglo-Saxon the, [is] another. The latter is the common article: the former the the in expressions like all the more, all the better—more by all that, better by all that, and the Latin phrases eo majus, eo melius.”—Latham’s Hand-Book, p. 158. This double derivation is liable to many objections. The Hand-Book afterwards says, “That the, in expressions like all the more, all the better, &c., is no article, has already been shown.”—P. 196. But in fact, though the before comparatives or superlatives be no article, Dr. Latham’s etymologies prove no such thing; neither does he anywhere tell us what it is. His examples, too, with their interpretations, are all of them fictitious, ambiguous, and otherwise bad. It is uncertain whether he meant his phrases for counterparts to each other or not. If the means “by that,” or thereby, it is an adverb; and so is its equivalent “eo” denominated by the Latin grammarians. See OBS. 10, under Rule I.

SECTION II.—DERIVATION OF NOUNS.

In English, Nouns are derived from nouns, from adjectives, from verbs, or from participles.

I. Nouns are derived from Nouns in several different ways:—

Page 1974

1. By the adding of ship, dom, ric, wick, or, ate, hood, or head: as, fellow, fellowship; king, kingdom; bishop, bishopric; bailiff, or baily, bailiwick; senate, senator; tetrarch, tetrarchate; child, childhood; God, Godhead. These generally denote dominion, office, or character.
 2. By the adding of ian: as, music, musician; physic, physician; theology, theologian; grammar, grammarian; college, collegian. These generally denote profession.
 3. By the adding of r, ry, or ery: as, grocer, grocery; cutler, cutlery; slave, slavery; scene, scenery; fool, foolery. These sometimes denote state or habit; sometimes, an artificer's wares or shop.
 4. By the adding of age or ade: as, patron, patronage; porter, portorage; band, bandage; lemon, lemonade; baluster, balustrade; wharf, wharfage; vassal, vassalage.
 5. By the adding of kin, let, ling, ock, el, erel, or et: as, lamb, lambkin; ring, ringlet; cross, crosslet; duck, duckling; hill, hillock; run, runnel; cock, cockerel; pistol, pistolet; eagle, eaglet; circle, circlet. All these denote little things, and are called diminutives.
 6. By the addition of ist: as, psalm, psalmist; botany, botanist; dial, dialist; journal, journalist. These denote persons devoted to, or skilled in, the subject expressed by the primitive.
 7. By the prefixing of an adjective, or an other noun, so as to form a compound word: as, foreman, broadsword, statesman, tradesman; bedside, hillside, seaside; bear-berry, bear-fly, bear-garden; bear's-ear, bear's-foot, goat's-beard.
 8. By the adoption of a negative prefix to reverse the meaning: as, order, disorder; pleasure, displeasure; consistency, inconsistency; capacity, incapacity; observance, nonobservance; resistance, nonresistance; truth, untruth; constraint, unconstraint.
 9. By the use of the prefix counter, signifying against or opposite: as, attraction, counter-attraction; bond, counter-bond; current, counter-current; movement, counter-movement.
 10. By the addition of ess, ix, or ine, or the changing of masculines to feminines so terminating: as, heir, heiress; prophet, prophetess; abbot, abbess; governor, governess; testator, testatrix; hero, heroine.
- II. Nouns are derived from Adjectives in several different ways:—
1. By the adding of ness, ity, ship, dom, or hood: as, good, goodness; real, reality; hard, hardship; wise, wisdom; free, freedom; false, falsehood.

2. By the changing of t into ce or cy: as, radiant, radiance; consequent, consequence; flagrant, flagrancy; current, currency; discrepant, discrepance, or discrepancy.

3. By the changing of some of the letters, and the adding of t or th: as, long, length; broad, breadth; wide, width; high, height. The nouns included under these three heads, generally denote abstract qualities, and are called abstract nouns.

Page 1975

4. By the adding of ard: as, drunk, drunkard; dull, dullard. These denote ill character.

5. By the adding of ist: as, sensual, sensualist; separate, separatist; royal, royalist; fatal, fatalist. These denote persons devoted, addicted, or attached, to something.

6. By the adding of a, the Latin ending of neuter plurals, to certain proper adjectives in an: as, Miltonian, Miltoniana; Johnsonian, Johnsoniana. These literally mean, Miltonian things, sayings, or anecdotes, &c.; and are words somewhat fashionable with the journalists, and are sometimes used for titles of books that refer to table-talk.

III. Nouns are derived from Verbs in several different ways:—

1. By the adding of ment, ance, ence, ure, or age: as, punish, punishment; abate, abatement; repent, repentance; condole, condolence; forfeit, forfeiture; stow, stowage; equip, equipage; truck, truckage.

2. By a change of the termination of the verb, into se, ce, sion, tion, ation, or ition: as, expand, expanse, expansion; pretend, pretence, pretension; invent, invention; create, creation; omit, omission; provide, provision; reform, reformation; oppose, opposition. These denote either the act of doing, or the thing done.

3. By the adding of er or or: as, hunt, hunter; write, writer; collect, collector; assert, assertor; instruct, instructor, or instructor. These generally denote the doer. To denote the person to whom something is done, we sometimes form a derivative ending in ee: as, promisee, mortgagee, appellee, consignee.

4. Nouns and Verbs are sometimes alike in orthography, but different in pronunciation: as, a house, to house; a use, to use; a reb'el, to rebel; a rec'ord, to record; a cem'ent, to cement'. Of such pairs, it may often be difficult to say which word is the primitive.

5. In many instances, nouns and verbs are wholly alike as to form and sound, and are distinguished by their sense and construction only: as, love, to love; fear, to fear; sleep, to sleep;—to revise, a revise; to rebuke, a rebuke. In these, we have but the same word used differently.

IV. Nouns are often derived from Participles in ing; as, a meeting, the understanding, murmurings, disputings, sayings, and doings: and, occasionally, one is formed from such a word and an adverb or a perfect participle joined with it; as, "The turning-away,"—"His goings-forth,"—"Your having-boasted of it."

SECTION III.—DERIVATION OF ADJECTIVES.

In English, Adjectives are derived from nouns, from adjectives, from verbs, or from participles.

Page 1976

I. Adjectives are derived from Nouns in several different ways:—

1. By the adding of ous, ious, eous, y, ey, ic, al, ical or ine: (sometimes with an omission or change of some of the final letters:) as, danger, dangerous; glory, glorious; right, righteous; rock, rocky; clay, clayey; poet, poetic, or poetical; nation, national; method, methodical; vertex, vertical; clergy, clerical; adamant, adamantine. Adjectives thus formed, generally apply the properties of their primitives, to the nouns to which they relate.

2. By the adding of ful: as, fear, fearful; cheer, cheerful; grace, graceful; shame, shameful; power, powerful. These come almost entirely from personal qualities or feelings, and denote abundance.

3. By the adding of some: as, burden, burdensome; game, gamesome; toil, toilsome. These denote plenty, but do not exaggerate.

4. By the adding of en: as, oak, oaken; silk, silken; wheat, wheaten; oat, oaten; hemp, hempen. Here the derivative denotes the matter of which something is made.

5. By the adding of ly or ish: as, friend, friendly; gentleman, gentlemanly; child, childish; prude, prudish. These denote resemblance. The termination ly signifies like.

6. By the adding of able or ible: as, fashion, fashionable; access, accessible. But these terminations are generally, and more properly, added to verbs. See Obs. 17th, 18th, &c., on the Rules for Spelling.

7. By the adding of less: as, house, houseless; death, deathless; sleep, sleepless; bottom, bottomless. These denote privation or exemption—the absence of what is named by the primitive.

8. By the adding of ed: as, saint, sainted; bigot, bigoted; mast, masted; wit, witted. These have a resemblance to participles, and some of them are rarely used, except when joined with some other word to form a compound adjective: as, three-sided, bare-footed, long-eared, hundred-handed, flat-nosed, hard-hearted, marble-hearted, chicken-hearted.

9. Adjectives coming from proper names, take various terminations: as, America, American; England, English; Dane, Danish; Portugal, Portuguese; Plato, Platonic.

10. Nouns are often converted into adjectives, without change of termination: as, paper currency; a gold chain; silver knee-buckles.

II. Adjectives are derived from Adjectives in several different ways:—

1. By the adding of ish or some: as, white, whitish; green, greenish; lone, lonesome; glad, gladsome. These denote quality with some diminution.
2. By the prefixing of dis, in, or un: as, honest, dishonest; consistent, inconsistent; wise, unwise. These express a negation of the quality denoted by their primitives.

Page 1977

3. By the adding of y or ly: as, swarth, swarthy; good, goodly. Of these there are but few; for almost all the derivatives of the latter form are adverbs.

III. Adjectives are derived from Verbs in several different ways:—

1. By the adding of able or ible: (sometimes with a change of some of the final letters:) as, perish, perishable; vary, variable; convert, convertible; divide, divisible, or dividable. These, according to their analogy, have usually a passive import, and denote susceptibility of receiving action. 2. By the adding of ive or ory: (sometimes with a change of some of the final letters:) as, elect, elective; interrogate, interrogative, interrogatory; defend, defensive; defame, defamatory; explain, explanatory.

3. Words ending in ate, are mostly verbs; but some of them may be employed as adjectives, in the same form, especially in poetry; as, reprobate, complicate.

IV. Adjectives are derived from Participles, not by suffixes, but in these ways:—

1. By the prefixing of un, meaning not; as, unyielding, unregarded, unreserved, unendowed, unendeared, unendorsed, unencountered, unencumbered, undisheartened, undishonoured. Of this sort there are very many.

2. By a combining of the participle with some word which does not belong to the verb; as, way-faring, hollow-sounding, long-drawn, deep-laid, dear-purchased, down-trodden. These, too, are numerous.

3. Participles often become adjectives without change of form. Such adjectives are distinguished from participles by their construction alone: as, “A lasting ornament;”—“The starving chymist;”—“Words of learned length;”—“With counterfeited glee.”

SECTION IV.—DERIVATION OF THE PRONOUNS.

I. The English Pronouns are all of Saxon origin; but, in them, our language differs very strikingly from that of the Anglo-Saxons. The following table compares the simple personal forms:—

Eng. I, My or Me; We, Our or Us.

Mine, Ours,

Sax. Ic, Min, Me or We, Ure or Us.

Mec; User,

Eng. Thou, Thy or Thee; Ye, Your You.

Thine, or Yours,

Sax. Thu, Thin, The or Ge Eower, Eow or

Thec; Eowie.

Eng. He, His Him; They, Their or Them.

Theirs,
Sax. He, His or Him or Hi or Hira or Heom or Hys, Hine; Hig, Heora, Hi.
Eng. She, Her or Her; They, Their

Page 1978

or Them.

Hers, Theirs,
Sax. Heo, Hire or Hi; Hi or Hira or Heom or Hyre, Hig, Heora, Hi.

Eng. It, Its, It; They, Their or Them.

Theirs,
Sax. Hit, His or Hit; Hi or Hira or Heom or Hys, Hig, Heora, Hi.

Here, as in the personal pronouns of other languages, the plurals and oblique cases do not all appear to be regular derivatives from the nominative singular. Many of these pronouns, perhaps all, as well as a vast number of other words of frequent use in our language, and in that from which it chiefly comes, were very variously written by the Middle English, Old English, Semi-Saxon, and Anglo-Saxon authors. He who traces the history of our language, will meet with them under all the following forms, (or such as these would be with Saxon characters for the Saxon forms,) and perhaps in more:—

1. I, J, Y, y, i, ay, ic, che, ich, Ic;—MY, mi, min, MINE, myne, myn;—ME, mee, me, meh, mec, mech;—WE, wee, ve;—OUR or OURS, oure, ure, wer, urin, uren, urne, user, usse, usser, usses, ussum;—Us, ous, vs, uss, usic, usich, usig, usih, uz, huz.

2. THOU, thoue, thow, thowe, thu, tou, to, tu;—THY or THINE, thi, thyne, thyn, thin;—THEE, the, theh, thec;—YE, yee, yhe, ze, zee, ge, ghe;—YOUR or YOURS, youre, zour, hure, goure, yer, yower, yowyer, yorn, yourn, youre, eower;—You, youe, yow, gou, zou, ou, iu, iuh, eow, iow, geow, eowih, eowic, iowih.

3. HE, hee, hie, se;—His, hise, is, hys, ys, hyse, hus;—HIM, hine, hiene, hion, hen, hyne, hym, im;—THEY, thay, thei, the, tha, thai, thii, yai, hi, hie, heo, hig, hyg, hy;—THEIR or THEIRS, ther, theyr, theyrs, thair, thare, theora, hare, here, her, hir, hire, hira, hiora, hiera, heora, hyra;—THEM, thym, theym, thaym, thaim, thame, tham, em, hem, heom, hiom, eom, hom, him, hi, hig.

4. SHE, shee, sche, scho, sho, shoe, scae, seo, heo, hio, hiu, hoo, hue;—HER, (possessive,) hur, hir, hire, hyr, hyre, hyra, hera;—HER, (objective,) hire, hyre, hur, hir, hi. The plural forms of this feminine pronoun are like those of the masculine He; but the "Well-Wishers to Knowledge," in their small Grammar, (erroneously, as I suppose,) make hira masculine only, and heora feminine only. See their Principles of Grammar, p. 38.

5. IT, yt, itt, hit, hyt, hytt. The possessive Its is a modern derivative; His or Hys was formerly used in lieu of it. The plural forms of this neuter pronoun, It, are like those of He and She. According to Horne Tooke, who declares hoet to have been one of its ancient forms, “this pronoun was merely the past participle of the verb HAITAN, haetan, nominare,” to name, and literally signifies “the said;” (Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, p. 46; W. Allen’s Gram., p. 57;) but Dr. Alexander Murray, exhibiting it in an other form, not adapted to this opinion, makes it the neuter of a declinable adjective, or pronoun, inflected from the masculine, thus: “He, heo hita, this”—Hist. of Lang., Vol. i, p. 315.

Page 1979

II. The relatives and interrogatives are derived from the same source, the Anglo-Saxon tongue, and have passed through similar changes, or varieties in orthography; but, the common relative pronoun of the Anglo-Saxons being like their article the,—or, with the three genders, se, seo, thaet,—and not like our who, which, and what, it is probable that the interrogative use of these words was the primitive one. They have been found in all the following forms:—

1. WHO, ho, hue, wha, hwa, hua, wua, qua, quha;—WHOSE, who's, whos, whois, whoise, wheas, quhois, quhais, quhase, hwaes;—WHOM, whome, quham, quhum, quhome, hwom, hwam, hwaem, hwaene, hwone.
2. WHICH, whiche, whyche, wilch, wych, quilch, quilk, quhilk, hwilc, hwylc, hwelc, whilk, huilic, hvilc. For the Anglo-Saxon forms, Dr. Bosworth's Dictionary gives "hwilc, hwylc, and hwelc;" but Professor Fowler's E. Grammar makes them "huilic and hvilc."—See p. 240. Whilk, or quhilk, is a Scottish form.
3. WHAT, hwat, hwet, quhat, hwaet. This pronoun, whether relative or interrogative, is regarded by Bosworth and others as a neuter derivative from the masculine or feminine [sic—KTH] hwa, who. It may have been thence derived, but, in modern English, it is not always of the neuter gender. See the last note on page 312.
4. THAT, Anglo-Saxon Thaet. Tooke's notion of the derivation of this word is noticed above in the section on Articles. There is no certainty of its truth; and our lexicographers make no allusion to it. W. Allen reaffirms it. See his Gram., p. 54.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—In the Well-Wishers' Grammar, (p. 39,) as also in L. Murray's and some others, the pronoun Which is very strangely and erroneously represented as being always "of the neuter gender." (See what is said of this word in the Introduction, Chap. ix, 32.) Whereas it is the relative most generally applied to brute animals, and, in our common version of the Bible, its application to persons is peculiarly frequent. Fowler says, "In its origin it is a Compound."—E. Gram., p. 240. Taking its first Anglo-Saxon form to be "Huilic," he thinks it traceable to "hwa, who," or its ablative "hwi," and "lie, like."—lb. If this is right, the neuter sense is not its primitive import, or any part of it.

OBS. 2.—From its various uses, the word That is called sometimes a pronoun, sometimes an adjective, and sometimes a conjunction; but, in respect to derivation, it is, doubtless, one and the same. As a relative pronoun, it is of either number, and has no plural form different from the singular; as, "Blessed is the man that heareth me."—Prov., viii, 34. "Blessed are they that mourn."—Matt., v, 4. As an adjective, it is said by Tooke to have been formerly “applied indifferently to plural nouns and to singular; as, ‘Into that holy orders.’—Dr. Martin. ‘At that dayes.’—Id. ‘That euyll aungels the denilles.’—Sir Tho. More. ‘This pleasure undoubtedly farre excelleth all that pleasures that in this life maie be obtained.’—Id.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, pp. 47 and 48. The introduction of the plural form those, must have rendered this usage bad English.

Page 1980

SECTION V.—DERIVATION OF VERBS.

In English, Verbs are derived from nouns, from adjectives, or from verbs.

I. Verbs are derived from Nouns in the following different ways:—

1. By the adding of ize, ise, en, or ate: as, author, authorize; critic, criticise; length, lengthen; origin, originate. The termination ize is of Greek origin, and ise is most probably of French: the former is generally preferable in forming English derivatives; but both are sometimes to be used, and they should be applied according to Rule 13th for Spelling.
2. Some few verbs are derived from nouns by the changing of a sharp or hard consonant to a flat or soft one, or by the adding of a mute e, to soften a hard sound: as, advice, advise; price, prize; bath, bathe; cloth, clothe; breath, breathe; wreath, wreathe; sheath, sheathe; grass, graze.

II. Verbs are derived from Adjectives in the following different ways:—

1. By the adding of ize or en: as legal, legalize; immortal, immortalize; civil, civilize; human, humanize; familiar, familiarize; particular, particularize; deaf, deafen; stiff, stiffen; rough, roughen; deep, deepen; weak, weaken.
2. Many adjectives become verbs by being merely used and inflected as verbs: as, warm, to warm, he warms; dry, to dry, he dries; dull, to dull, he dulls; slack, to slack, he slacks; forward, to forward, he forwards.

III. Verbs are derived from Verbs in the following modes, or ways:—

1. By the prefixing of dis or un to reverse the meaning: as, please, displease; qualify, disqualify; organize, disorganize; fasten, unfasten; muzzle, unmuzzle; nerve, unnerve.
2. By the prefixing of a, be, for, fore, mis, over, out, under, up, or with: as, rise, arise; sprinkle, besprinkle; bid, forbid; see, foresee; take, mistake; look, overlook; run, outrun; go, undergo; hold, uphold; draw, withdraw.

SECTION VI.—DERIVATION OF PARTICIPLES.

All English Participles are derived from English verbs, in the manner explained in Chapter 7th, under the general head of Etymology; and when foreign participles are introduced into our language, they are not participles with us, but belong to some other class of words, or part of speech.

Page 1981

SECTION VII.—DERIVATION OF ADVERBS.

1. In English, many Adverbs are derived from adjectives by the addition of ly: which is an abbreviation for like, and which, though the addition of it to a noun forms an adjective, is the most distinctive as well as the most common termination of our adverbs: as, candid, candidly; sordid, sordidly; presumptuous, presumptuously. Most adverbs of manner are thus formed.

2. Many adverbs are compounds formed from two or more English words; as, herein, thereby, to-day, always, already, elsewhere, sometimes, wherewithal. The formation and the meaning of these are, in general, sufficiently obvious.

3. About seventy adverbs are formed by means of the prefix, or inseparable preposition, a; as, Abreast, abroach, abroad, across, afar, afield, ago, agog, aland, along, amiss, atilt.

4. Needs, as an adverb, is a contraction of need is; prithee, or pr'ythee, of I pray thee; alone, of all one; only, of one-like; anon, of the Saxon an on; i.e., in one [instant]; never, of ne ever; i.e., not ever. Prof. Gibbs, in Fowler's Grammar, makes needs "the Genitive case of the noun need."—P. 311.

5. Very is from the French veray, or vrai, true; and this, probably, from the Latin verus. Rather appears to be the regular comparative of the ancient rath, soon, quickly, willingly; which comes from the Anglo-Saxon "Rathe, or Hrathe, of one's own accord."—Bosworth. But the parent language had also "Hrathre, to a mind."—Id. That is, to one's mind, or, perhaps, more willingly.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Many of our most common adverbs are of Anglo-Saxon derivation, being plainly traceable to certain very old forms, of the same import, which the etymologist regards but as the same words differently spelled: as, All, eall, eal, or aell; Almost, ealmaest, or aelmaest; Also, ealswa, or aelswa; Else, elles; Elsewhere, elleshwaer; Enough, genog, or genoh; Even, euen, efen, or aefen; Ever, euer, aefer, or aefre; Downward, duneward; Forward, forweard, or foreweard; Homeward, hamweard; Homewards, hamweardes; How, hu; Little, lytel; Less, laes; Least, laest; No, na; Not, noht, or nocht; Out, ut, or ute; So, swa; Still, stille, or stulle; Then, thenne; There, ther, thar, thaer; Thither, thider, or thyder; Thus, thuss, or thus; Together, togaedere, or togaedre; Too, to; When, hwenne, or hwaenne; Where, hwaer; Whither, hwider, hwyder, or hwyther; Yea, ia, gea, or gee; Yes, gese, gise, or gyse.

Page 1982

OBS. 2.—According to Horne Tooke, “Still and Else are the imperatives Stell and Ales of their respective verbs Stellan, to put, and Alesan, to dismiss.”—Diversions, Vol. i, p. 111. He afterwards repeats the doctrine thus: “Still is only the imperative Stell or Steall, of Stellan or Steallian, ponere.”—ib., p. 146. “This word Else, formerly written alles, alys, alyse, elles, ellus, ellis, ells, els, and now else; is, as I have said, no other than Ales or Alys, the imperative of Alesan or Alysan, dimittere.”—ib., p. 148. These ulterior and remote etymologies are perhaps too conjectural.

SECTION VIII.—DERIVATION OF CONJUNCTIONS.

The English Conjunctions are mostly of Anglo-Saxon origin. The best etymological vocabularies of our language give us, for the most part, the same words in Anglo-Saxon characters; but Horne Tooke, in his Diversions of Purley, (a learned and curious work which the advanced student may peruse with advantage,) traces, or professes to trace, these and many other English particles, to Saxon verbs or participles. The following derivations, so far as they partake of such speculations, are offered principally on his authority:—

1. ALTHOUGH, signifying admit, allow, is from all and though; the latter being supposed the imperative of Thafian or Thafigan, to allow, to concede, to yield.
2. AN, an obsolete or antiquated conjunction, signifying if, or grant, is the imperative of the Anglo-Saxon verb Anan or Unan, to grant, to give.
3. AND, [Saxon, And,] add, is said by Tooke to come from “An-ad, the imperative of Ananad, Dare congeriem.”—D. of P., Vol. i, p. 111. That is, “To give the heap.” The truth of this, if unapparent, I must leave so.
4. AS, according to Dr. Johnson, is from the Teutonic als; but Tooke says that als itself is a contraction for all and the original particle es or as, meaning it, that, or which.
5. BECAUSE, from be and cause, means by cause; the be being written for by.
6. BOTH, the two, is from the pronominal adjective both; which, according to Dr. Alexander Murray, is a contraction of the Visigothic Bagoth, signifying doubled. The Anglo-Saxons wrote for it butu, butwu, buta, and batwa; i. e., ba, both, twa, two.
7. BUT,—(in Saxon, bute, butan, buton, or butun—) meaning except, yet, now, only, else than, that not, or on the contrary,—is referred by Tooke and some others, to two roots,—each of them but a conjectural etymon for it. “BUT, implying addition,” say they, “is from Bot, the imperative of Botan, to boot, to add; BUT, denoting exception, is from Be-utan, the imperative of Beon-utan, to be out.”—See D. of P., Vol. i, pp. 111 and 155.

Page 1983

8. EITHER, one of the two, like the pronominal adjective EITHER, is from the Anglo-Saxon AEther, or Egther, a word of the same uses, and the same import.
9. EKE, also, (now nearly obsolete,) is from “Eac, the imperative of Eacan, to add.”
10. EVEN, whether a noun, an adjective, an adverb, or a conjunction, appears to come from the same source, the Anglo-Saxon word Efen or AEfen.
11. EXCEPT, which, when used as a conjunction, means unless, is the imperative, or (according to Dr. Johnson) an ancient perfect participle, of the verb to except.
12. FOR, because, is from the Saxon preposition For; which, to express this meaning, our ancestors combined with something else, reducing to one word some such phrase as, For that, For this, For this that; as, “Fortha, Fortham, Forthan, Forthamthe, Forthan the.”—See Bosworth’s Dict.
13. IF, give, grant, allow, is from “Gif, the imperative of the Anglo-Saxon Gifan, to give.”—Tooke’s Diversions, Vol. i, p. 111.
14. LEST, that not, dismissed, is from “Lesed, the perfect participle of Lesan, to dismiss.”
15. NEITHER, not either, is a union and contraction of ne either: our old writers frequently used ne for not; the Anglo-Saxons likewise repeated it, using ne—ne, in lieu of our corresponsives neither—nor; and our modern lexicographers still note the word, in some of these senses.
16. NOR, not other, not else, is supposed to be a union and contraction of ne or.
17. NOTWITHSTANDING, not hindering, is an English compound of obvious formation.
18. OR, an alternative conjunction, seems to be a word of no great antiquity. It is supposed to be a contraction of other, which Johnson and his followers give, in Saxon characters, either as its source, or as its equivalent.
19. PROVIDED, the perfect participle of the verb provide, becomes occasionally a disjunctive conjunction, by being used alone or with the particle that, to introduce a condition, a saving clause, a proviso.
20. SAVE, anciently used with some frequency as a conjunction, in the sense of but, or except is from the imperative of the English verb save, and is still occasionally turned to such a use by the poets.

21. SEEING, sometimes made a copulative conjunction, is the imperfect participle of the verb see. Used at the head of a clause, and without reference to an agent, it assumes a conjunctive nature.

22. SINCE is conjectured by Tooke to be “the participle of Seon, to see,” and to mean “seeing, seeing that, seen that, or seen as.”—Diversions of P., Vol. i, pp. 111 and 220. But Johnson and others say, it has been formed “by contraction from sithence, or sith thence, from sithe, Sax.”—Joh. Dict.

Page 1984

23. THAN, which introduces the latter term of a comparison, is from the Gothic than, or the Anglo-Saxon thanne, which was used for the same purpose. 24. THAT, when called a conjunction, is said by Tooke to be etymologically the same as the adjective or pronoun THAT, the derivation of which is twice spoken of above; but, in Todd's Johnson's Dictionary, as abridged by Chalmers, THAT, the conjunction, is referred to "thatei, Gothic;" THAT, the pronoun, to "that, thata, Gothic; thaet, Saxon; dat, Dutch."

25. THEN, used as a conjunction, is doubtless the same word as the Anglo-Saxon Thenne, taken as an illative, or word of inference.

26. "THOUGH, allow, is [from] the imperative Thaf, or Thafig, of the verb Thafian or Thafigan, to allow."—Tooke's Diversions, Vol. i, pp. 111 and 150.

27. "UNLESS, except, dismiss, is [from] Onles, the imperative of Onlesan, to dismiss."—lb.

28. WHETHER, a corresponsive conjunction, which introduces the first term of an alternative, is from the Anglo-Saxon hwaether, which was used for the same purpose.

29. YET, nevertheless, is from "Get, the imperative of Getan, to get."—Tooke.

SECTION IX.—DERIVATION OF PREPOSITIONS.

The following are the principal English Prepositions, explained in the order of the list:—

1. ABOARD, meaning on board of, is from the prefix or preposition a and the noun board, which here means "the deck of a ship" or vessel. Abord, in French, is approach, arrival, or a landing.

2. ABOUT, [Sax. Abutan, or Abuton,] meaning around, at circuit, or doing, is from the prefix a, meaning at, and the noun bout, meaning a turn, a circuit, or a trial. In French, bout means end; and about, end, or but-end.

3. ABOVE, [Sax. Abufan, Abufon, A-be-ufan.] meaning over, or, literally, at-by-over, or at-by-top, is from the Saxon or Old English a, be, and ufa, or ufan, said to mean "high, upwards, or the top."

4. ACROSS, at cross, athwart, traverse, is from the prefix a and the word cross.

5. AFTER, [Sax. AEfter, or AEftan,] meaning behind, subsequent to, is, in form, the comparative of aft, a word common to seamen, and it may have been thence derived.

6. AGAINST, opposite to, is probably from the Anglo-Saxon, Ongean, or Ongegen, each of which forms means again or against. As prefixes, on and a are often equivalent.
7. ALONG, [i.e., at-long,] meaning lengthwise of, near to, is formed from a and long.

Page 1985

8. AMID, [i. e., at mid or middle,] is from a and mid; and AMIDST [, i.e., at midst,] is from a and midst, contracted from middest, the superlative of mid.
9. AMONG, mixed with, is probably an abbreviation of amongst; and AMONGST, according to Tooke, is from a and mongst, or the older “Ge-meneged,” Saxon for “mixed, mingled.”
10. AROUND, about, encircling, is from a and round, a circle, or circuit.
11. AT, gone to, is supposed by some to come from the Latin ad; but Dr. Murray says, “We have in Teutonic AT for AGT, touching or touched, joined, at.”—Hist. of Lang., i, 349.
12. ATHWART, across, is from a and thwart, cross; and this from the Saxon Thweor.
13. BATING, a preposition for except, is the imperfect participle of bate, to abate.
14. BEFORE, [i.e., by-fore,] in front of, is from the prefix be and the adjective fore.
15. BEHIND, [i.e., by-hind,] in rear of, is from the prefix be and the adjective hind.
16. BELOW, [i.e., by-low,] meaning under, or beneath, is from be and the adjective low.
17. BENEATH [, Sax. or Old Eng. Beneoth,] is from be and neath, or Sax. Neothe, low.
18. BESIDE [, i.e., by-side,] is probably from be and the noun or adjective side.
19. BESIDES [, i.e., by-sides,] is probably from be and the plural noun sides.
20. BETWEEN, [Sax. Betweonan, or Betwynan,] literally, by-twain, seems to have been formed from be, by, and twain, two—or the Saxon Twegen, which also means two, twain.
21. BETWIXT, meaning between, [Sax. Betweox, Betwux, Betwyx, Betwyxt, &c.,] is from be, by, and twyx, originally a “Gothic” word signifying “two, or twain.”—See Tooke, Vol. i, p. 329.
22. BEYOND, past, [Sax. Begeond,] is from the prefix be, by, and yond, [Sax. Geond,] past, far.
23. BY [, Sax. Be, Bi, or Big,] is affirmed by Tooke to be “the imperative Byth, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Beon, to be.”—Diversions of P., Vol. i, p. 326. This seems to be rather questionable.

24. CONCERNING, the preposition, is from the first participle of the verb concern.
25. DOWN, the preposition, is from the Anglo-Saxon Dune, down.
26. DURING, prep. of time, is from the first participle of an old verb dure, to last, formerly in use; as, "While the world may dure."—Chaucer's Knight's Tale.
27. ERE, before, prep. of time, is from the Anglo-Saxon AEr, a word of like sort.

Page 1986

28. EXCEPT, bating, is from the imperative, or (according to Dr. Johnson) the ancient perfect participle of the verb to except; and EXCEPTING, when a preposition, is from the first participle of the same verb.
29. FOR, because of, is the Anglo-Saxon preposition For, a word of like import, and supposed by Tooke to have come from a Gothic noun signifying cause, or sake.
30. FROM, in Saxon, Fram, is probably derived from the old adjective Frum, original.
31. IN, or the Saxon In, is the same as the Latin in: the Greek is [Greek: en]; and the French, en.
32. INTO, like the Saxon Into, noting entrance, is a compound of in and to.
33. MID and MIDST, as English prepositions, are poetical forms used for Amid and Amidst.
34. NOTWITHSTANDING, not hindering, is from the adverb not, and the participle withstanding, which, by itself, means hindering, or preventing. 35. OF is from the Saxon Of, or Af; which is supposed by Tooke to come from a noun signifying offspring.
36. OFF, opposed to on, Dr. Johnson derives from the “Dutch af.”
37. ON, a word very often used in Anglo-Saxon, is traced by some etymologists to the Gothic ana, the German an, the Dutch aan; but no such derivation fixes its meaning.
38. OUT, [Sax. Ut, Ute, or Utan,] when made a preposition, is probably from the adverb or adjective Out, or the earlier Ut; and OUT-OF, [Sax. Ut-of,] opposed to into, is but the adverb Out and the preposition Of—usually written separately, but better joined, in some instances.
39. OVER, above, is from the Anglo-Saxon Ofer, over; and this, probably, from Ufa, above, high, or from the comparative, Ufera, higher.
40. OVERTHWART, meaning across, is a compound of over and thwart, cross.
41. PAST, beyond, gone by, is a contraction from the perfect participle passed.
42. PENDING, during or hanging, has a participial form, but is either an adjective or a preposition: we do not use pend alone as a verb, though we have it in depend.
43. RESPECTING, concerning, is from the first participle of the verb respect.
44. ROUND, a preposition for about or around, is from the noun or adjective round.

45. SINCE is most probably a contraction of the old word Sithence; but is conjectured by Tooke to have been formed from the phrase, "Seen as."
46. THROUGH [, Sax. Thurh, or Thurch,] seems related to Thorough, Sax. Thuruh; and this again to Thuru, or Duru, a Door.
47. THROUGHOUT, quite through, is an obvious compound of through and out.

Page 1987

48. TILL, [Sax. Til or Tille,] to, until, is from the Saxon Til or Till, an end, a station.
49. TO, whether a preposition or an adverb, is from the Anglo-Saxon particle To.
50. TOUCHING, with regard to, is from the first participle of the verb touch.
51. TOWARD or TOWARDS, written by the Anglo-Saxons Toweward or Towearde, is a compound of To and Ward or Weard, a guard, a look-out; "Used in composition to express situation or direction."—Bosworth.
52. UNDER, [Gothic, Undar; Dutch, Onder,] beneath, below, is a common Anglo-Saxon word, and very frequent prefix, affirmed by Tooke to be "nothing but on-neder," a Dutch compound = on lower.—See Diversions of Purley, Vol. i, p. 331.
53. UNDERNEATH is a compound of under and neath, low; whence nether, lower.
54. UNTIL is a compound from on or un, and till, or til, the end.
55. UNTO, now somewhat antiquated, is formed, not very analogically, from un and to.
56. UP is from the Anglo-Saxon adjective, "Up or Upp, high, lofty."
57. UPON, which appears literally to mean high on, is from two words up and on.
58. WITH comes to us from the Anglo-Saxon With, a word of like sort and import; which Tooke says is an imperative verb, sometimes from "Withan, to join," and sometimes from "Wyrthan, to be."—See his Diversions, Vol. i, p. 262.
59. WITHIN [, i.e., by-in,] is from with and in: Sax. Withinnan, Binnan, or Binnon.
60. WITHOUT [, i.e., by-out,] is from with and out: Sax. Withutan, -uten, -uton; Butan, Buton, Butun.

OBSERVATION.

In regard to some of our minor or simpler prepositions, as of sundry other particles, to go beyond the forms and constructions which present or former usage has at some period given them as particles, and to ascertain their actual origin in something ulterior, if such they had, is no very easy matter; nor can there be either satisfaction or profit in studying what one suspects to be mere guesswork. "How do you account for IN, OUT, ON, OFF, and AT?" says the friend of Tooke, in an etymological dialogue at Purley. The substance of his answer is, "The explanation and etymology of these words require a degree of knowledge in all the antient northern languages, and a skill in the application of that knowledge, which I am very far from assuming; and though I am almost persuaded by some of my own conjectures concerning them, I am not willing, by an apparently forced and far-fetched derivation, to justify your imputation of etymological legerdemain."—Diversions, Vol. i, p. 370.

Page 1988

SECTION X.—DERIVATION OF INTERJECTIONS.

Those significant and constructive words which are occasionally used as Interjections, (such as Good! Strange! Indeed!;) do not require an explanation here; and those mere sounds which are in no wise expressive of thought, scarcely admit of definition or derivation. The Interjection HEY is probably a corruption of the adjective High;—ALAS is from the French Helas;—ALACK is probably a corruption of Alas;—WELAWAY or WELLAWAY, (which is now corrupted into WELLADAY,) is said by some to be from the Anglo-Saxon Wa-la-wa, i.e., Wo-lo-wo;—"FIE," says Tooke, "is the imperative of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb Fian, to hate;"—Heyday is probably from high day;—AVAUNT, perhaps from the French avant, before;—LO, from look;—BEGONE, from be and gone;—WELCOME, from well and come;—FAREWELL, from fare and well.

SECTION XI—EXPLANATION OF THE PREFIXES.

In the formation of English words, certain particles are often employed as prefixes; which, as they generally have some peculiar import, may be separately explained. A few of them are of Anglo-Saxon origin, or character; and the greater part of these are still employed as separate words in our language. The rest are Latin, Greek, or French prepositions. The roots to which they are prefixed, are not always proper English words. Those which are such, are called SEPARABLE RADICALS; those which are not such, INSEPARABLE RADICALS.

CLASS I—THE ENGLISH OR ANGLO-SAXON PREFIXES.

1. A, as an English prefix, signifies on, in, at, or to: as in a-board, a-shore, a-foot, a-bed, a-soak, a-tilt, a-slant, a-far, a-field; which are equal to the phrases, on board, on shore, on foot, in bed, in soak, at tilt, at slant, to a distance, to the fields. The French a, to, is probably the same particle. This prefix is sometimes redundant, adding little or nothing to the meaning; as in awake, arise, amend.
2. BE, as a prefix, signifies upon, over, by, to, at, or for: as in be-spatter, be-cloud, be-times, be-tide, be-howl, be-speak. It is sometimes redundant, or merely intensive; as in be-gird, be-deck, be-loved, be-dazzle, be-moisten, be-praise, be-quote.
3. COUNTER, an English prefix, allied to the French Contre, and the Latin Contra, means against, or opposite; as in counter-poise, counter-evidence, counter-natural.
4. FOR, as a prefix, unlike the common preposition For, seems generally to signify from: it is found in the irregular verbs for-bear, for-bid, for-get, for-give, for-sake, for- swear; and in for-bathe, for-do, for-pass, for-pine, for-say, for-think, for-waste, which last are now disused, the for in several being merely intensive.

Page 1989

5. FORE, prefixed to a verb, signifies before; as in fore-know, fore-tell: prefixed to a noun, it is usually an adjective, and signifies anterior; as in fore-side, fore-part.
6. HALF, signifying one of two equal parts, is much used in composition; and, often, merely to denote imperfection: as, half-sighted, seeing imperfectly.
7. MIS signifies wrong or ill; as in mis-cite, mis-print, mis-spell, mis-chance, mis-hap.
8. OVER denotes superiority or excess; as in over-power, over-strain, over-large.
9. OUT, prefixed to a verb, generally denotes excess; as in out-do, out-leap, out-poise: prefixed to a noun, it is an adjective, and signifies exterior; as in out-side, out-parish.
10. SELF generally signifies one's own person, or belonging to one's own person; but, in self-same, it means very. We have many words beginning with Self, but most of them seem to be compounds rather than derivatives; as, self-love, self-abasement, self-abuse, self-affairs, self-willed, self-accusing.
11. UN denotes negation or contrariety; as in un-kind, un-load, un-truth, un-coif.
12. UNDER denotes inferiority; as in under-value, under-clerk, under-growth.
13. UP denotes motion upwards; as in up-lift: sometimes subversion; as in up-set.
14. WITH, as a prefix, unlike the common preposition With, signifies against, from, or back; as in with-stand, with-hold, with-draw, with-stander, with-holdment, with-drawal.

CLASS II.—THE LATIN PREFIXES.

The primitives or radicals to which these are prefixed, are not many of them employed separately in English. The final letter of the prefix Ad, Con, Ex, In, Ob, or Sub, is often changed before certain consonants; not capriciously, but with uniformity, to adapt or assimilate it to the sound which follows.

1. A, AB, or ABS, means From, or Away: as, a-vert, to turn from, or away; ab-duce, to lead from; ab-duction, a carrying-away; ab-tract, to draw from, or away.
2. AD,—forming ac, af, al, an, ap, as, at,—means To, or At: as, ad-vert, to turn to; ac-cord, to yield to; af-flux, a flowing-to; al-ly, to bind to; an-nex, to link to; ap-ply, to put to; as-sume, to take to; at-test, to witness to; ad-mire, to wonder at.
3. ANTE means Fore, or Before: as, ante-past, a fore-taste; ante-cedent, foregoing, or going before; ante-mundane, before the world; ante-date, to date before.

4. CIRCUM means Round, Around, or About: as circum-volve, to roll round; circum-scribe, to write round; circum-vent, to come round; circum-spect, looking about one's self.

Page 1990

5. CON,—which forms com, co, col, cor,—means Together: as, con-tract, to draw together; compel, to drive together; co-erce, to force together; col-lect, to gather together; cor-rade, to rub or scrape together; con-junction, a joining-together.
6. CONTRA, or CONTRO, means Against, or Counter: as, contra-dict, to speak against; contra-vene, to come against; contra-mure, countermure; contro-vert, to turn against.
7. DE means Of, From, or Down: as, de-note, to be a sign of; de-tract, to draw from; de-pend, to hang down; de-press, to press down; de-crease, to grow down, to grow less.
8. DIS, or DI, means Away, or Apart: as, dis-pel, to drive away; dis-sect, to cut apart; di-vert, to turn away.
9. E, or Ex,—making also ec, ef,—means Out: as, e-ject, to cast out; e-lect, to choose out; ex-clude, to shut out; ex-cite, to summon out; ec-stacy, a raising out; ef-face, to blot out.
10. EXTRA means Beyond, or Out of: as, extra-vagant, syllabled ex-trav'a-gant, roving be-yond; extra-vasate, ex-trav'a-sate, to flow out of the vessels; extra-territorial, being out of the territory.
11. IN,—which makes also il, im, ir,—means In, Into, or Upon: as, in-spire, to breathe in; il-lude, to draw in by deceit; im-mure, to wall in; ir-ruption, a rushing in; in-spect, to look into; in-scribe, to write upon; in-sult, to jump upon. These syllables, prefixed, to English nouns or adjectives, generally reverse their meaning; as in in-justice, il-legality, im-partiality, ir-religion, ir-rational, in-secure, in-sane.
12. INTER means Between, or In between: as, inter-sperse, to scatter in between; inter-jection, something thrown in between; inter-jacent, lying between; inter-communication, communication between.
13. INTRO means In, Inwards, or Within: as, intro-duce, to lead in; intro-vert, to turn inwards; intro-spect, to look within; intro-mission, a sending-in.
14. OB,—which makes also oc, of, op,—means Against: as, ob-trude, to thrust against; oc-cur, to run against; of-fer, to bring against; op-pose, to place against; ob-ject, to cast against.
15. PER means Through or By: as, per-vade, to go through; per-chance, by chance; per-cent, by the hundred; per-plex, to tangle through, or to entangle thoroughly.
16. POST means After: as, post-pone, to place after; post-date, to date after.

17. PRAE, or PRE, means Before: as, pre-sume, to take before; pre-position, a placing-before, or thing placed before; prae-cognita, things known before.

Page 1991

18. PRO means For, Forth, or Forwards: as, pro-vide, to take care for; pro-duce, to bring forth; pro-trude, to thrust forwards; pro-ceed, to go forward; pro-noun, for a noun.
19. PRETER means By, Past, or Beyond: as, preter-it, bygone, or gone by; preter-imperfect, past imperfect; preter-natural, beyond what is natural; preter-mit, to put by, to omit.
20. RE means Again or Back: as, re-view, to view again; re-pel, to drive back.
21. RETRO means Backwards, Backward, or Back: as, retro-active, acting backwards; retro-grade, going backward; retro-cede, to cede back again.
22. SE means Aside or Apart: as, se-duce, to lead aside; se-cede, to go apart.
23. SEMI means Half: as, semi-colon, half a colon; semi-circle, half a circle.
24. SUB,—which makes suf, sug, sup, sur, and sus,—means Under, and sometimes Up: as, sub-scribe, to write under; suf-fossion, an undermining; sug-gest, to convey under; sup-ply, to put under; sur-reption, a creeping-under; sus-tain, to hold up; sub-ject, cast under.
25. SUBTER means Beneath: as, subter-fluous, flowing beneath.
26. SUPER means Over or Above: as, super-fluous, flowing over; super-natant, swimming above; super-lative, carried over, or carrying over; super-vise, to overlook, to oversee.
27. TRANS,—whence TRAN and TRA,—means Beyond, Over, To another state or place: as, trans-gress, to pass beyond or over; trans-cend, to climb over; trans-mit to send to an other place; trans-form, to change to an other shape; tra-montane, from beyond the mountains; i.e., Trans-Alpine, as opposed to Cis-Alpine.

CLASS III.—THE GREEK PREFIXES.

1. A and AN, in Greek derivatives, denote privation: as, a-nomalous, wanting rules; an-ony-mous, wanting name; an-archy, want of government; a-cephalous, headless.
2. AMPHI means Two, Both, or Double: as, amphi-bious, living in two elements; amphi-brach, both [sides] short; amphi-theatre, a double theatre.
3. ANTI means Against: as, anti-slavery, against slavery; anti-acid, against acidity; anti-febrile, against fever; anti-thesis, a placing-against.
4. APO, APH,—From: as, apo-strophe, a turning-from; aph-aeresis, a taking from.

5. DIA,—Through: as, dia-gonal, through the corners; dia-meter, measure through.
6. EPI, EPH,—Upon: as, epi-demic, upon the people; eph-mera, upon a day.
7. HEMI means Half: as, hemi-sphere, half a sphere; hemi-stich, half a verse.

Page 1992

8. HYPER means Over: as, hyper-critical, over-critical; hyper-meter, over measure. 9. HYPO means Under: as, hypo-stasis, substance, or that which stands under; hypo-thesis, supposition, or a placing-under; hypo-phyllois, under the leaf.

10. META means Beyond, Over, To an other state or place: as, meta-morphose, to change to an other shape; meta-physics, mental science, as beyond or over physics.

11. PARA means Against: as, para-dox, something contrary to common opinion.

12. PERI means Around: as, peri-phery, the circumference, or measure round.

13. SYN,—whence Sym, Syl,—means Together: as, syn-tax, a putting-together; sympathy, a suffering-together; syl-lable, what we take together; syn-thesis a placing-together.

CLASS IV.—THE FRENCH PREFIXES.

1. A is a preposition of very frequent use in French, and generally means To. I have suggested above that it is probably the same as the Anglo-Saxon prefix a. It is found in a few English compounds or derivatives that are of French, and not of Saxon origin: as, a-dieu, to God; i.e., I commend you to God; a-larm, from alarme, i.e., a l'arme, to arms.

2. DE means Of or From: as in de-mure, of manners; de-liver, to ease from or of.

3. DEMI means Half: as, demi-man, half a man; demi-god, half a god; demi-devil, half a devil; demi-deify, to half deify; demi-sized, half sized; demi-quaver, half a quaver. 4. EN,—which sometimes becomes em,—means In, Into, or Upon: as, en-chain, to hold in chains; em-brace, to clasp in the arms; en-tomb, to put into a tomb; em-boss, to stud upon. Many words are yet wavering between the French and the Latin orthography of this prefix: as, embody, or imbody; ensurance, or insurance; ensnare, or insnare; enquire, or inquire.

5. SUR, as a French prefix, means Upon, Over, or After: as, sur-name, a name upon a name; sur-vey, to look over; sur-mount, to mount over or upon; sur-render, to deliver over to others; sur-feit, to overdo in eating; sur-vive, to live after, to over-live, to outlive.

END OF THE SECOND APPENDIX

APPENDIX III TO PART THIRD, OR SYNTAX.

OF THE QUALITIES OF STYLE.

Page 1993

Style, as a topic connected with syntax, is the particular manner in which a person expresses his conceptions by means of language. It is different from mere words, different from mere grammar, in any limited sense, and is not to be regulated altogether by rules of construction. It always has some relation to the author's peculiar manner of thinking; involves, to some extent, and shows his literary, if not his moral, character; is, in general, that sort of expression which his thoughts most readily assume; and, sometimes, partakes not only of what is characteristic of the man, of his profession, sect, clan, or province, but even of national peculiarity, or some marked feature of the age. The words which an author employs, may be proper in themselves, and so constructed as to violate no rule of syntax, and yet his style may have great faults.

In reviews and critical essays, the general characters of style are usually designated by such epithets as these;—concise, diffuse,—neat, negligent,—terse, bungling,—nervous, weak,—forcible, feeble,—vehement, languid,—simple, affected,—easy, stiff,—pure, barbarous,—perspicuous, obscure,—elegant, uncouth,—florid, plain,—flowery, artless,—fluent, dry,—piquant, dull,—stately, flippant,—majestic, mean,—pompous, modest,—ancient, modern. A considerable diversity of style, may be found in compositions all equally excellent in their kind. And, indeed, different subjects, as well as the different endowments by which genius is distinguished, require this diversity. But, in forming his style, the learner should remember, that a negligent, feeble, affected, stiff, uncouth, barbarous, or obscure style is always faulty; and that perspicuity, ease, simplicity, strength, neatness, and purity, are qualities always to be aimed at.

In order to acquire a good style, the frequent practice of composing and writing something, is indispensably necessary. Without exercise and diligent attention, rules or precepts for the attainment of this object, will be of no avail. When the learner has acquired such a knowledge of grammar, as to be in some degree qualified for the undertaking, he should devote a stated portion of his time to composition. This exercise will bring the powers of his mind into requisition, in a way that is well calculated to strengthen them. And if he has opportunity for reading, he may, by a diligent perusal of the best authors, acquire both language and taste as well as sentiment;—and these three are the essential qualifications of a good writer.

In regard to the qualities which constitute a good style, we can here offer nothing more than a few brief hints. With respect to words and phrases, particular attention should be paid to three things—purity, propriety, and precision; and, with respect to sentences, to three others,—perspicuity, unity, and strength. Under each of these six heads, we shall arrange, in the form of short precepts, a few of the most important directions for the forming of a good style.

Page 1994

SECTION I.—OF PURITY.

Purity of style consists in the use of such words and phrases only, as belong to the language which we write or speak. Its opposites are the faults aimed at in the following precepts.

PRECEPT I.—Avoid the unnecessary use of foreign words or idioms: such as the French words fraicheur, hauteur, delicatesse, politesse, noblesse;—the expression, “He repented himself;”—or, “It serves to an excellent purpose.”

PRECEPT II.—Avoid obsolete or antiquated words, except there be some special reason for their use: that is, such words as acception, addressful, administrate, affamish, affrontiveness, belikely, blustorous, clergical, cruciate, rutilate, timidous.

PRECEPT III.—Avoid strange or unauthorized words: such as, flutteration, inspector, judgematical, incumberment, connexity, electerized, martyrized, reunion, marvelize, limpitude, affected, adornment, absquatulate. Of this sort is O. B. Peirce’s “assimilarity,” used on page 19th of his English Grammar; and still worse is Jocelyn’s “irradicable,” for uneradicable, used on page 5th of his Prize Essay on Education.

PRECEPT IV.—Avoid bombast, or affectation of fine writing. It is ridiculous, however serious the subject. The following is an example: “Personifications, however rich the depictions, and unconstrained their latitude; analogies, however imposing the objects of parallel, and the media of comparison; can never expose the consequences of sin to the extent of fact, or the range of demonstration.”—Anonymous.

SECTION II.—OF PROPRIETY.

Propriety of language consists in the selection and right construction of such words as the best usage has appropriated to those ideas which we intend to express by them. Impropropriety embraces all those forms of error, which, for the purpose of illustration, exercise, and special criticism, have been so methodically and so copiously posted up under the various heads, rules, and notes, of this extensive Grammar. A few suggestions, however, are here to be set down in the form of precepts.

PRECEPT I.—Avoid low and provincial expressions: such as, “Now, says I, boys;”—“Thinks I to myself;”—“To get into a scrape;”—“Stay here while I come back;”—“By jinkers;”—“By the living jingoes.”

PRECEPT II.—In writing prose, avoid words and phrases that are merely poetical: such as, morn, eve, plaint, corse, weal, drear, amid, oft, steepy;—“what time the winds arise.”

PRECEPT III.—Avoid technical terms: except where they are necessary in treating of a particular art or science. In technology, they are proper.

PRECEPT IV.—Avoid the recurrence of a word in different senses, or such a repetition of words as denotes paucity of language: as, “His own reason might have suggested better reasons.”—“Gregory favoured the undertaking, for no other reason than this; that the manager, in countenance, favoured his friend.”—“I want to go and see what he wants.”

Page 1995

PRECEPT V.—Supply words that are wanting: thus, instead of saying, “This action increased his former services,” say, “This action increased the merit of his former services.”—“How many [kinds of] substantives are there? Two; proper and common.”—See E. Devis’s Gram., p. 14. “These changes should not be left to be settled by chance or by caprice, but [should be determined] by the judicious application of the principles of Orthography.”—See Fowlers E. Gram., 1850, p. 170.

PRECEPT VI.—Avoid equivocal or ambiguous expressions: as, “His memory shall be lost on the earth.”—“I long since learned to like nothing but what you do.”

PRECEPT VII.—Avoid unintelligible, inconsistent, or inappropriate expressions: such as, “I have observed that the superiority among these coffee-house politicians proceeds from an opinion of gallantry and fashion.”—“These words do not convey even an opaque idea of the author’s meaning.”

PRECEPT VIII.—Observe the natural order of things or events, and do not put the cart before the horse: as, “The scribes taught and studied the Law of Moses.”—“They can neither return to nor leave their houses.”—“He tumbled, head over heels, into the water.”—“‘Pat, how did you carry that quarter of beef?’ ‘Why, I thrust it through a stick, and threw my shoulder over it.’”

SECTION III.—OF PRECISION.

Precision consists in avoiding all superfluous words, and adapting the expression exactly to the thought, so as to say, with no deficiency or surplus of terms, whatever is intended by the author. Its opposites are noticed in the following precepts.

PRECEPT I.—Avoid a useless tautology, either of expression or of sentiment; as, “When will you return again?”—“We returned back home again.”—“On entering into the room, I saw and discovered he had fallen down on the floor and could not rise up.”—“They have a mutual dislike to each other.”—“Whenever I go, he always meets me there.”—“Where is he at? In there.”—“His faithfulness and fidelity should be rewarded.”

PRECEPT II.—Repeat words as often as an exact exhibition of your meaning requires them; for repetition may be elegant, if it be not useless. The following example does not appear faulty: “Moral precepts are precepts the reasons of which we see; positive precepts are precepts the reasons of which we do not see.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 165.

PRECEPT III.—Observe the exact meaning of words accounted synonymous, and employ those which are the most suitable; as, “A diligent scholar may acquire knowledge, gain celebrity, obtain rewards, win prizes, and get high honour, though he earn no money.” These six verbs have nearly the same meaning, and yet no two of them can here be correctly interchanged.

Page 1996

PRECEPT IV.—Observe the proper form of each word, and do not confound such as resemble each other. “Professor J. W. Gibbs, of Yale College,” in treating of the “Peculiarities of the Cockney Dialect,” says, “The Londoner sometimes confounds two different forms; as contagious for contiguous; eminent for imminent; humorous for humorsome; ingeniously for ingenuously; luxurious for luxuriant; scrupulosity for scruple; successfully for successively.”—See Fowler’s E. Gram., p. 87; and Pref., p. vi.

PRECEPT V.—Think clearly, and avoid absurd or incompatible expressions. Example of error: “To pursue those remarks, would, probably, be of no further service to the learner than that of burdening his memory with a catalogue of dry and uninteresting peculiarities; which may gratify curiosity, without affording information adequate to the trouble of the perusal.”—Wright’s Gram., p. 122.

PRECEPT VI.—Avoid words that are useless; and, especially, a multiplication of them into sentences, members, or clauses, that may well be spared. Example: “If one could really be a spectator of what is passing in the world around us without taking part in the events, or sharing in the passions and actual performance on the stage; if we could set ourselves down, as it were, in a private box of the world’s great theatre, and quietly look on at the piece that is playing, no more moved than is absolutely implied by sympathy with our fellow-creatures, what a curious, what an amusing, what an interesting spectacle would life present.”—G. P. R. JAMES: “The Forger,” commencement of Chap. xxxi. This sentence contains eighty-seven words, “of which sixty-one are entirely unnecessary to the expression of the author’s idea, if idea it can be called.”—Holden’s Review.

OBSERVATION.

Verbosity, as well as tautology, is not so directly opposite to precision, as to conciseness, or brevity. From the manner in which lawyers usually multiply terms in order to express their facts precisely, it would seem that, with them, precision consists rather in the use of many words than of few. But the ordinary style of legal instruments no popular writer can imitate without becoming ridiculous. A terse or concise style is very apt to be elliptical: and, in some particular instances, must be so; but, at the same time, the full expression, perhaps, may have more precision, though it be less agreeable. For example: “A word of one syllable, is called a monosyllable; a word of two syllables, is called a dissyllable: a word of three syllables, is called a trisyllable: a word of four or more syllables, is called a polysyllable.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 19. Better, perhaps, thus: “A word of one syllable is called a monosyllable; a word of two syllables, a dissyllable; a word of three syllables, a trissyllable; and a word of four or more syllables, a polysyllable.”—Brown’s Institutes, p. 17.

Page 1997

SECTION IV.—OF PERSPICUITY.

Perspicuity consists in freedom from obscurity or ambiguity. It is a quality so essential to every kind of writing, that for the want of it no merit of other name can compensate. “Without this, the richest ornaments of style, only glimmer through the dark, and puzzle in stead of pleasing the reader.”—Dr. Blair. Perspicuity, being the most important property of language, and an exemption from the most embarrassing defects, seems even to rise to a degree of positive beauty. We are naturally pleased with a style that frees us from all suspense in regard to the meaning; that carries us through the subject without embarrassment or confusion; and that always flows like a limpid stream, through which we can “see to the very bottom.” Many of the errors which have heretofore been pointed out to the reader, are offences against perspicuity. Only three or four hints will here be added.

PRECEPT I.—Place adjectives, relative pronouns, participles, adverbs, and explanatory phrases near enough to the words to which they relate, and in a position which will make their reference clear. The following sentences are deficient in perspicuity: “Reverence is the veneration paid to superior sanctity, intermixed with a certain degree of awe.”—Unknown. “The Romans understood liberty, at least, as well as we.”—See Murray’s Gram., p. 307. “Taste was never made to cater for vanity.”—J. Q. Adams’s Rhet., Vol. i, p. 119.

PRECEPT II.—In prose, avoid a poetic collocation of words. For example: “Guard your weak side from being known. If it be attacked, the best way is, to join in the attack.”—KAMES: Art of Thinking, p. 75. This maxim of prudence might be expressed more poetically, but with some loss of perspicuity, thus: “Your weak side guard from being known. Attacked in this, the assailants join.”

PRECEPT III.—Avoid faulty ellipses, and repeat all words necessary to preserve the sense. The following sentences require the words which are inserted in crotchets: “Restlessness of mind disqualifies us, both for the enjoyment of peace, and [for] the performance of our duty.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 166. “Double Comparatives and [Double] Superlatives should be avoided.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 1850, p. 489.

PRECEPT IV.—Avoid the pedantic and sense-dimming style of charlatans and new theorists, which often demands either a translation or a tedious study, to make it at all intelligible to the ordinary reader. For example: “RULE XL Part 3. An intransitive or receptive asserter in the unlimited mode, depending on a word in the possessive case, may have, after it, a word in the subjective case, denoting the same thing: And, when it acts the part of an assertive name, depending on a relative, it may have after it a word in the subjective case.

Page 1998

EXAMPLES:—John's being my friend, saved me from inconvenience. Seth Hamilton was unhappy in being a slave to party prejudice."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., 1839, p. 201. The meaning of this third part of a Rule of syntax, is, in proper English, as follows: "A participle not transitive, with the possessive case before it, may have after it a nominative denoting the same thing; and also, when a preposition governs the participle, a nominative may follow, in agreement with one which precedes." In doctrine, the former clause of the sentence is erroneous: it serves only to propagate false syntax by rule. See the former example, and a note of mine, referring to it, on page 531 of this work.

SECTION V.—OF UNITY.

Unity consists in avoiding needless pauses, and keeping one object predominant throughout a sentence or paragraph. Every sentence, whether its parts be few or many, requires strict unity. The chief faults, opposite to this quality of style, are suggested in the following precepts. PRECEPT I.—Avoid brokenness, hitching, or the unnecessary separation of parts that naturally come together. Examples: "I was, soon after my arrival, taken out of my Indian habit."—Addison, Tattler, No. 249. Better: "Soon after my arrival, I was taken out of my Indian habit."—Churchill's Gram., p. 326. "Who can, either in opposition, or in the ministry, act alone?"—Ib. Better: "Who can act alone, either in opposition, or in the ministry?"—Ib. "I, like others, have, in my youth, trifled with my health, and old age now prematurely assails me."—Ib., p. 327. Better: "Like others, I have trifled with my health, and old age now prematurely assails me."

PRECEPT II.—Treat different topics in separate paragraphs, and distinct sentiments in separate sentences. Error: "The two volumes are, indeed, intimately connected, and constitute one uniform system of English Grammar."—Murray's Preface, p. iv. Better thus: "The two volumes are, indeed, intimately connected. They constitute one uniform system of English grammar."

PRECEPT III.—In the progress of a sentence, do not desert the principal subjects in favour of adjuncts, or change the scene unnecessarily. Example: "After we came to anchor, they put me on shore, where I was welcomed by all my friends, who received me with the greatest kindness, which was not then expected." Better: "The vessel having come to anchor, I was put on shore; where I was unexpectedly welcomed by all my friends, and received with the greatest kindness."—See Blair's Rhet., p. 107.

Page 1999

PRECEPT IV.—Do not introduce parentheses, except when a lively remark may be thrown in without diverting the mind too long from the principal subject. Example: “But (saith he) since I take upon me to teach the whole world, (it is strange, it should be so natural for this man to write untruths, since I direct my Theses only to the Christian world; but if it may render me odious, such Peccadillo’s pass with him, it seems, but for Piae Fraudes;) I intended never to write of those things, concerning which we do not differ from others.”—R. Barclay’s Works, Vol. iii. p. 279. The parts of this sentence are so put together, that, as a whole, it is scarcely intelligible.

SECTION VI.—OF STRENGTH.

Strength consists in giving to the several words and members of a sentence, such an arrangement as shall bring out the sense to the best advantage, and present every idea in its due importance. Perhaps it is essential to this quality of style, that there be animation, spirit, and vigour of thought, in all that is uttered. A few hints concerning the Strength of sentences, will here be given in the form of precepts.

PRECEPT I.—Avoid verbosity; a concise style is the most favourable to strength. Examples: “No human happiness is so pure as not to contain any alloy.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 270. Better: “No human happiness is unalloyed.” “He was so much skilled in the exercise of the oar, that few could equal him.”—Ib., p. 271. Better: “He was so skillful at the oar, that few could match him.” Or thus: “At the oar, he was rarely equalled.” “The reason why they [the pronouns] are considered separately is, because there is something particular in their inflections.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 81. Better: “The pronouns are considered separately, because there is something peculiar in their inflections.”

PRECEPT II.—Place the most important words in the situation in which they will make the strongest impression. Inversion of terms sometimes increases the strength and vivacity of an expression: as, “All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.”—Matt., iv, 9. “Righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy judgements.”—Psalms, cxix, 137. “Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.”—Ps., cxvi, 15.

PRECEPT III.—Have regard also to the relative position of clauses, or members; for a weaker assertion should not follow a stronger; and, when the sentence consists of two members, the longer should be the concluding one. Example: “We flatter ourselves with the belief that we have forsaken our passions, when they have forsaken us.” Better: “When our passions have forsaken us, we flatter ourselves with the belief that we have forsaken them.”—See Blair’s Rhet., p. 117; Murray’s Gram., p. 323.

Page 2000

PRECEPT IV.—When things are to be compared or contrasted, their resemblance or opposition will be rendered more striking, if a pretty near resemblance in the language and construction of the two members, be preserved. Example: “The wise man is happy, when he gains his own approbation; the fool, when he recommends himself to the applause of those about him.” Better: “The wise man is happy, when he gains his own approbation; the fool, when he gains the applause of others.”—See Murray’s Gram., p. 324.

PRECEPT V.—Remember that it is, in general, ungraceful to end a sentence with an adverb, a preposition, or any inconsiderable word or phrase, which may either be omitted or be introduced earlier. “For instance, it is a great deal better to say, ‘Avarice is a crime of which wise men are often guilty,’ than to say, ‘Avarice is a crime which wise men are often guilty of.’”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 117; Murray’s Gram., p. 323.

END OF THE THIRD APPENDIX.

APPENDIX IV.

TO PART FOURTH, OR PROSODY.

OF POETIC DICTION.

Poetry, as defined by Dr. Blair, “is the language of passion, or of enlivened imagination, formed, most commonly, into regular numbers.”—Rhet., p. 377. The style of poetry differs, in many respects, from that which is commonly adopted in prose. Poetic diction abounds in bold figures of speech, and unusual collocations of words. A great part of the figures, which have been treated of in one of the chapters of Prosody, are purely poetical. The primary aim of a poet, is, to please and to move; and, therefore, it is to the imagination, and the passions, that he speaks. He may also, and he should, have it in his view, to instruct and to reform; but it is indirectly, and by pleasing and moving, that such a writer accomplishes this end. The exterior and most obvious distinction of poetry, is versification: yet there are some forms of verse so loose and familiar, as to be hardly distinguishable from prose; and there is also a species of prose, so measured in its cadences, and so much raised in its tone, as to approach very nearly to poetic numbers.

This double approximation of some poetry to prose, and of some prose to poetry, not only makes it a matter of acknowledged difficulty to distinguish, by satisfactory definitions, the two species of composition, but, in many instances, embarrasses with like difficulty the attempt to show, by statements and examples, what usages or licenses, found in English works, are proper to be regarded as peculiarities of poetic diction. It is purposed here, to enumerate sundry deviations from the common style of prose; and perhaps all of them, or nearly all, may be justly considered as pertaining only to poetry.

POETICAL PECULIARITIES.

The following are among the chief peculiarities in which the poets indulge, and are indulged:—

Page 2001

I. They not unfrequently omit the ARTICLES, for the sake of brevity or metre; as,

“What dreadful pleasure! there to stand sublime,
Like shipwreck’d mariner on desert coast!”
—Beattie’s Minstrel, p. 12.

“Sky lour’d, and, muttering thunder, some sad drops
Wept at completing of the mortal sin.”
—Milton, P. L., B. ix, l. 1002.

II. They sometimes abbreviate common NOUNS, after a manner of their own: as, amaze, for amazement; acclaim, for acclamation; consult, for consultation; corse, for corpse; eve or even, for evening; fount, for fountain; helm, for helmet; lament, for lamentation; morn, for morning; plaint, for complaint; targe, for target; weal, for wealth.

III. By enallage, they use verbal forms substantively, or put verbs for nouns; perhaps for brevity, as above: thus,

1. “Instant, without disturb, they took alarm.”
—P. Lost: Joh. Dict., w. Aware.

2. “The gracious Judge, without revile reply’d.”
—P. Lost, B. x, l. 118.

3. “If they were known, as the suspect is great.”
—Shakspeare.

4. “Mark, and perform it: seest thou? for the fail
Of any point in’t shall be death.”
—Shakspeare.

IV. They employ several nouns that are not used in prose, or are used but rarely; as, benison, boon, emprise, fane, guerdon, guise, ire, ken, lore, meed, sire, steed, welkin, yore.

V. They introduce the noun self after an other noun of the possessive case; as,

1. “Affliction’s semblance bends not o’er thy tomb,
Affliction’s self deplores thy youthful doom.”—Byron.

2. “Thoughtless of beauty, she was beauty’s self.”—Thomson.

VI. They place before the verb nouns, or other words, that usually come after it; and, after it, those that usually come before it: as,

1. "No jealousy their dawn of love o'ercast,
Nor blasted were their wedded days with strife."
—Beattie.

2. "No hive hast thou of hoarded sweets."
—W. Allen's Gram.

3. "Thy chain a wretched weight shall prove."
—Langhorne.

4. "Follows the loosen'd aggravated roar."
—Thomson.

5. "That purple grows the primrose pale."
—Langhorne.

VII. They more frequently place ADJECTIVES after their nouns, than do prose writers;
as,

1. "Or where the gorgeous East, with richest hand, Show'rs on her kings barbaric, pearl and gold."
—Milton, P. L., B. ii, l. 2.

Page 2002

2. "Come, nymph demure, with mantle blue."
—W. Allen's Gram., p. 189.

3. "This truth sublime his simple sire had taught."
—Beattie's Minstrel, p. 14.

VIII. They ascribe qualities to things to which they do not literally belong; as,

1. "The ploughman homeward plods his weary way."
—Gray's Elegy, l. 3.
2. "Or drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds."
—Ibidem, l. 8.
3. "Imbitter'd more and more from peevish day to day."
—Thomson.
4. "All thin and naked, to the numb cold night."
—Shakspeare.

IX. They use concrete terms to express abstract qualities; (i. e., adjectives for nouns;) as,

1. "Earth's meanest son, all trembling, prostrate falls,
And on the boundless of thy goodness calls."
—Young.
2. "Meanwhile, whate'er of beautiful or new,
Sublime or dreadful, in earth, sea, or sky,
By chance or search, was offer'd to his view,
He scann'd with curious and romantic eye."
—Beattie.
3. "Won from the void and formless infinite."
—Milton.
4. "To thy large heart give utterance due; thy heart Contains of good, wise, just, the perfect shape."
—Id., P. R., B. iii, l. 10.

X. They often substitute quality for manner; (i. e., adjectives for adverbs;) as,

1. ——"The stately-sailing swan
Gives out his snowy plumage to the gale,
And, arching proud his neck, with oary feet,

Bears forward fierce, and guards his osier isle.”
—Thomson.

2. “Thither continual pilgrims crowded still.”
—Id., Cos. of Ind., i, 8.

3. “Level at beauty, and at wit;
The fairest mark is easiest hit.”
—Butler’s Hudibras.

XI. They form new compound epithets, oftener than do prose writers; as,

1. “In world-rejoicing state, it moves sublime.”
—Thomson.

2. “The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun.”
—Idem.

3. “By brooks and groves in hollow-whispering gales.”
—Idem.

4. “The violet of sky-woven vest.”
—Langhorne.

5. “A league from Epidamnum had we sail’d,
Before the always-wind-obeying deep Gave any tragic instance of our harm.”
—Shakspeare.

6. “‘Blue-eyed, strange-voiced, sharp-beaked, ill-omened fowl,
What art thou?’ ‘What I ought to be, an owl.’”
—Day’s Punctuation, p. 139.

XII. They connect the comparative degree to the positive, before a verb; as,

Page 2003

1. "Near and more near the billows rise."
—Merrick.
2. "Wide and wider spreads the vale."
—Dyer's Grongar Hill.
3. "Wide and more wide, the overflowings of the mind Take every creature in, of every kind."
—Pope.
4. "Thick and more thick the black blockade extends,
A hundred head of Aristotle's friends."
—Id., Dunciad.

XIII. They form many adjectives in y, which are not common in prose; as, The dimplly flood,—dusky veil,—a gleamy ray,—heapy harvests,—moony shield,—paly circlet,—sheety lake,—stilly lake,—spiry temples,—steely casque,—steepy hill,—towery height,—vasty deep,—writhy snake.

XIV. They employ adjectives of an abbreviated form: as, dread, for dreadful; drear, for dreary; ebon, for ebony; hoar, for hoary; lone, for lonely; scant, for scanty; slope, for sloping; submiss, for submissive; vermil, for vermilion; yon, for yonder.

XV. They employ several adjectives that are not used in prose, or are used but seldom; as, azure, blithe, boon, dank, darkling, darksome, doughty, dun, fell, rife, rapt, rueful, sear, sylvan, twain, wan.

XVI. They employ the personal PRONOUNS, and introduce their nouns afterwards; as,

1. "It curl'd not Tweed alone, that breeze."
—Sir W. Scott.
2. "What may it be, the heavy sound
That moans old Branksome's turrets round?"
—Idem, Lay, p. 21.
3. "Is it the lightning's quivering glance,
That on the thicket streams;
Or do they flash on spear and lance,
The sun's retiring beams"
—Idem, L. of L., vi, 15.

XVII. They use the forms of the second person singular oftener than do others; as,

1. "Yet I had rather, if I were to chuse,
Thy service in some graver subject use,
Such as may make thee search thy coffers round,
Before thou clothe my fancy in fit sound."
—Milton's Works, p. 133.
 2. "But thou, of temples old, or altars new, Standest alone—with nothing like to thee."
—Byron, Pilg., iv, 154.
 3. "Thou seest not all; but piecemeal thou must break,
To separate contemplation, the great whole."
—Id., ib., iv, 157.
 4. "Thou rightly deemst, fair youth, began the bard;
The form then sawst was Virtue ever fair."
—Pollok, C. of T., p. 16.
- XVIII. They sometimes omit relatives that are nominatives; (see Obs. 22, at p. 555;) as,

Page 2004

“For is there aught in sleep can charm the wise?”
—Thomson.

XIX. They omit the antecedent, or introduce it after the relative; as,

1. “Who never fasts, no banquet e’er enjoys,
Who never toils or watches, never sleeps.”
—Armstrong.
2. “Who dares think one thing and an other tell,
My soul detests him as the gates of hell.”
—Pope’s Homer.

XX. They remove relatives, or other connectives, into the body of their clauses; as,

1. “Parts the fine locks, her graceful head that deck.”
—Darwin.
2. “Not half so dreadful rises to the sight Orion’s dog, the year when autumn weighs.”
—Pope, Iliad, B. xxii, l. 37.

XXI. They make intransitive VERBS transitive, changing their class; as,

1. —“A while he stands,
Gazing the inverted landscape, half afraid
To meditate the blue profound below.”
—Thomson.
2. “Still in harmonious intercourse, they liv’d
The rural day, and talk’d the flowing heart.”
—Idem.
3. —“I saw and heard, for we sometimes
Who dwell this wild, constrain’d by want, come forth.”
—Milton, P. R., B. i, l. 330.

XXII. They make transitive verbs intransitive, giving them no regimen; as,

1. “The soldiers should have toss’d me on their pikes,
Before I would have granted to that act.”
—Shakspeare.

2. "This minstrel-god, well-pleased, amid the quire Stood proud to hymn, and tune his youthful lyre."
—Pope.

XXIII. They give to the imperative mood the first and the third person; as,

1. "Turn we a moment fancy's rapid flight."
—Thomson.
2. "Be man's peculiar work his sole delight."
—Beattie.
3. "And what is reason? Be she thus defin'd:
Reason is upright stature in the soul."
—Young.

XXIV. They employ can, could, and would, as principal verbs transitive; as,

1. "What for ourselves we can, is always ours."
—Anon.
2. "Who does the best his circumstance allows,
Does well, acts nobly; angels could no more."
—Young.
3. "What would this man? Now upward will he soar,
And, little less than angel, would be more."
—Pope.

XXV. They place the infinitive before the word on which it depends; as,

1. "When first thy sire to send on earth Virtue, his darling child, design'd" —Gray.

Page 2005

2. "As oft as I, to kiss the flood, decline;
So oft his lips ascend, to close with mine."
—Sandys.

3. "Besides, Minerva, to secure her care, Diffus'd around a veil of thicken'd air."
—Pope.

XXVI. They place the auxiliary verb after its principal, by hyperbaton; as,

1. "No longer heed the sunbeam bright
That plays on Carron's breast he can"
—Langhorne.
2. "Follow I must, I cannot go before."
—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 147.
3. "The man who suffers, loudly may complain;
And rage he may, but he shall rage in vain."
—Pope.

XXVII. Before verbs, they sometimes arbitrarily employ or omit prefixes: as, bide, or abide; dim, or bedim; gird, or begird; lure, or allure; move, or emove; reave, or bereave; vails, or avails; vanish, or evanish; wail, or bewail; weep, or bewEEP; wilder, or bewilder:
—

1. "All knees to thee shall bow, of them that bide
In heav'n, or earth, or under earth in hell."
—Milton, P. L., B. iii, l. 321.
2. "Of a horse, ware the heels; of a bull-dog, the jaws;
Of a bear, the embrace; of a lion, the paws."
—Churchills Cram., p. 215.

XXVIII. Some few verbs they abbreviate: as list, for listen; ope, for open; hark, for hearken; dark, for darken; threat, for threaten; sharp, for sharpen.

XXIX. They employ several verbs that are not used in prose, or are used but rarely; as, appal, astound, brook, cower, doff, ken, wend, ween, trow.

XXX. They sometimes imitate a Greek construction of the infinitive; as,

1. "Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme."
—Milton.

2. "For not, to have been dipp'd in Lethe lake, Could save the son of Thetis from to die."
—Spenser.

XXXI. They employ the PARTICIPLES more frequently than prose writers, and in a construction somewhat peculiar; often intensive by accumulation: as,

1. "He came, and, standing in the midst, explain'd
The peace rejected, but the truce obtain'd."
—Pope.
2. "As a poor miserable captive thrall
Comes to the place where he before had sat
Among the prime in splendor, now depos'd,
Ejected, emptied, gaz'd, unpitied, shunn'd,
A spectacle of ruin or of scorn."
—Milton, P. R., B. i, l. 411.

Page 2006

3. "Though from our birth the faculty divine
Is chain'd and tortured—cabin'd, cribb'd, confined."
—Byron, Pilg., C. iv, St. 127.

XXXII. In turning participles to adjectives, they sometimes ascribe actions, or active properties, to things to which they do not literally belong; as,

"The green leaf quivering in the gale,
The warbling hill, the lowing vale."
—MALLET: Union Poems, p. 26.

XXXIII. They employ several ADVERBS that are not used in prose, or are used but seldom; as, oft, haply, inly, blithely, cheerily, deftly, felly, rifely, starkly.

XXXIV. They give to adverbs a peculiar location in respect to other words; as,

1. "Peeping from forth their alleys green."
—Collins.
2. "Erect the standard there of ancient Night"
—Milton.
3. "The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when speaking fails."
—Shakspeare.
4. "Where Universal Love not smiles around."
—Thomson.
5. "Robs me of that which not enriches him."
—Shakspeare.

XXXV. They sometimes omit the introductory adverb there: as,

"Was nought around but images of rest."
—Thomson.

XXXVI. They briefly compare actions by a kind of compound adverbs, ending in like; as,

"Who bid the stork, Columbus-like, explore Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?"
—Pope.

XXXVII. They employ the CONJUNCTIONS, or—or, and nor—nor, as correspondents; as,

1. “Or by the lazy Scheldt or wandering Po.”
—Goldsmith.
2. “Wealth heap’d on wealth, nor truth, nor safety buys.”
—Johnson.
3. “*Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth; for these are pleas’d.*”
—Shakspeare.
4. “Toss it, or to the fowls, or to the flames.”
—Young, N. T., p. 157.
5. “*Nor shall the pow’rs of hell, nor wastes of time,
Or vanquish, or destroy.*”
—Gibbon’s Elegy on Davies.

XXXVIII. They oftener place PREPOSITIONS and their adjuncts, before the words on which they depend, than do prose writers; as,

“*Against your fame with fondness hate combines;
The rival batters, and the lover mines.*”
—Dr. Johnson.

XXXIX. They sometimes place a long or dissyllabic preposition after its object; as,

1. “*When beauty, Eden’s bowers within,
First stretched the arm to deeds of sin,
When passion burn’d and prudence slept,
The pitying angels bent and wept.*”
—James Hogg.

Page 2007

2. "The Muses fair, these peaceful shades among,
With skillful fingers sweep the trembling strings."
—Lloyd.

3. "Where Echo walks steep hills among,
List'ning to the shepherd's song."
—J. Warton, U. Poems, p. 33.

XL. They have occasionally employed certain prepositions for which, perhaps, it would not be easy to cite prosaic authority; as, adown, aloft, aloof, anear, aneath, askant, aslant, aslope, atween, atwixt, besouth, traverse, thorough, sans. (See Obs. 10th, and others, at p. 441.)

XLI. They oftener employ INTERJECTIONS than do prose writers; as,

"O let me gaze!—Of gazing there's no end.
O let me think!—Thought too is wilder'd here."
—Young.

XLII. They oftener employ ANTIQUATED WORDS and modes of expression; as,

1. "Withouten that, would come an heavier bale."
—Thomson.

2. "He was, to weet, a little roguish page,
Save sleep and play, who minded nought at all."
—Id.

3. "Not one eftsoons in view was to be found."
—Id.

4. "To number up the thousands dwelling here,
An useless were, and eke an endless task."
—Id.

5. "Of clerks good plenty here you mote espy."
—Id.

6. "But these I passen by with nameless numbers moe."
—Id.

THE END OF APPENDIX FOURTH

INDEX TO THE GRAMMAR OF ENGLISH GRAMMARS.

[Asterism] In the following Index, the page of the Grammar is directly referred to: Obs. or N. before a numeral, stands for Observation or Observations, or for Note or Notes of the text: R. after a reference, stands for RULE. The small letter n., with an asterisk or other mark affixed to it, relates to a footnote with such mark in the Grammar. Occasionally, t., m., or b., or u., or l., accompanies a reference, to indicate the top, middle, or bottom, or the upper or the lower half, of the page referred to. Few abbreviations are employed beyond those of the ordinary grammatical terms. The Index is not intended to supersede the use of the Table of Contents, which stands after the Preface. It is occupied wholly with the matter of the Grammar proper; hence there are in it no references to the Introduction Historical and Critical, which precedes the didactic portion of the work. In the Table before-mentioned must be sought the general division of English grammar, and matters pertaining to praxis, to examination, and to the writing of exercises.

Page 2008

A.

A, lett., names itself

—its plur.

—sounds properly its own

—numb. of sounds pertaining to, orthoepists differ concerning

—diphthongs beginning with,

—triphth. do.

—its true sound to be carefully preserved at end of words,

A, as prep, or prefix

—before part, in ing.

A and an, in Gr. derivatives.

A or an, art., see An, A

Abbreviations, frequent in writt. lang.

—rule of punct. for.

C, M, D, &c., as numerals, see Letters.

Needless abbreviations, to be avoided

Able, ible, class of adjectives in, numerous in Eng.; difficulty with resp. to the prop. form and signif. of; to what able most properly belongs —application of able to nouns, its propriety doubtf.

—Able or ible, prop. application of, how far determined from Lat. etymol.

—Able and ible, words of the same meaning in, how formed from different roots,

About, with infin., as substitute for Lat. fut. part, in rus

—About, with of preced., ("OF ABOUT one hundred feet")

—About, derivat. of, from Sax.

Abrupt transitions in the Bible

Absolute, when, and in what case, a noun or a pron. is put —Absol., case, defect of the common rule for —in how many ways the nom. case is put —nom. case put, with part., to what often equivalent; what part. frequently understood after nouns put

—case, its existence denied by what authors

—words put, punct. of,

Abstract numbers, synt. of the phraseology used in speaking of, ("Twice two IS four," or "Twice two ARE four")

Absurd or incompatible expressions, to be avoided

Absurdities of expression, Crit. N. concerning

Acatalectic, when a line is said to be

Accent and quantity, critical observations on

Accent, difficulty with respect to the import of the word

- various definitions of, cited
- Accent*, confounded by some with emphasis
- defined, as commonly understood
- chief or primary and secondary
- Accent*, by what regulated
- compared with emphasis
- as affected by do.
- is distinct from quantity
- as understood by DR. JOH.
- SHERID. teachings concerning; mostly adopted by MURR.
- what lett. of a word receives the mark of - stress on a monosyl. more properly emphasis than
- Accents*, more than one on a word
- DR. ADAM'S view of

Accentuation, modern, of Gr. and Lat. words, by what regulated; SANCTIUS'S rule for, new vers. of

Page 2009

According to, as to, resolved. Accordingly, whether may be said for the questionable according

Accusative before infin., in Lat. and Gr., of what reckoned the subject

- whether the construc. can in general be imitated in Eng.
- who adopt the Lat. doctrine of
- what our nearest approach to the Lat. construc. of

Active, in reference to verbs, in what sense may be used

Active-transitive verb, defined

- Act.-trans. verbs* gov. obj. case
- place of agent and object in respect to
- Act.-trans. verb*, or part., has some noun or pron. for its object
- with two words in appos. ("Proclaim THEE KING,")
- with do., neither in appos. nor connected by conjunc., ("I paid HIM the MONEY,")
- with redund. me, thee, you
- should not be used without an object
- should not assume a governm. incompatible with its signif.

Active-intransitive verb, defined

- Act.-intrans. verb*, with prep. and its object, put in the pass. form
- in pass. form with neut. signif. ("I AM COME,")
- should not be used transitively

Addison, undeservedly criticised by BLAIR, for his frequent use of that, as a relative

Addition, enumeration, of numbers, by what number of the verb to be expressed

Address, ordinary fashion of, in Eng., the plur. numb.

- has introduced the anomal. compound yourself
- Address*, direct, nom. absol. by
- terms of, your Majesty, your Highness, &c., in what construc. used
- general usage of, in Fr.; in Span., Portug., or Germ.

ADJECTIVES, Etymol. of

- Classes of, named and defined
- Modifications of
- Comparison of, reg.; by adverbs; irreg.
- Adjectives* in able and ible, (see Able, Ible.)
- Adjectives*, number of, in Eng.
- how have been otherwise called

- how distinguished from nouns
- other parts of speech may become
- MURR., on nouns assuming the nature of
- whether nouns plur. can assume the character of
- Adjectives* that cannot be compared
- that are compared by means of adverbs
- (See Comparison, Comparative Deg., and Superlative Deg.)
- Adjectives* requiring the article the
- denoting place or situation, comparison of
- become adverbs
- use of, for adv., improper
- with prep., ellipt., equivalent to adv.
- poet., for nouns
- do., for adverbs
- Adjectives*, Synt. of
- do., in what consists
- to what relate
- substituted ellipt. for their abstr. nouns
- relate to nouns or pronouns understood

Page 2010

- used with def. art., ellipt., as nouns
- two or more before a noun, order of
- two, joined by hyphens
- denoting unity or plurality, how agree with their nouns
- connected, position of
- differing in numb., connected without repetition of noun ("ONE or more letters,")
- much, little, &c.*, preceded by too, how, &c., taken substantively
- Adjectives*, punct. of
- derivation of, from nouns, from adjectives, &c.
- poet. peculiarities in respect to
- Adjective*, taken abstractly with infin. or part.
- following a finite verb, without a noun
- do. an infin. or a part.
- position of, in Eng.
- when may either precede or follow its noun
- Whether adj. or adv. is required, how determined
- Adjective*, one superadded to an other, without conjunc., position of
- when the figure of, affects the sense, what to be done
- should not be represented by a pronoun
- ellipsis of, shown

Adjectives, common, probable numb. of, in Eng.
—enumeration of, according to their endings

Adjectives, compound, analogies of their formation, traced
—nouns derived from, generally disapproved

Adjectives, numeral, kinds of, named —Cardinal numb. and its corresponding numeral, what denote
—Construction and figure of the numerals

Adjectives, participial, what words to be referred to the class of —cannot be construed to govern obj. case

Adjectives, pronominal, list of —which, sometimes used adverbially
—which, sometimes used partitively, appar. as nouns

- without nouns expressed, how parsed
- distribution of, by CHURCH See Other, &c.

Adjectives, proper, peculiarities of, considered —rule for initial capital in

Adjuncts of nominative in the agreement of a verb

Admitting, allowing, &c., appar. independent, to what may relate

ADVERBS, Etymol. of

- Adverb*, defined
- Adverbs*, serve to abbreviate expression
- other classes of words sometimes take the nature of
- appar. take the nat. of other parts of speech
- how distinguished from adjectives
- Classes of, named and defined
- proper classification of, by what indicated
- of time, place, and manner, with what connected; of degree, do.
- conjunctive* (see Conjunctive Adverb.)
- Modifications of
- number of, in Eng.
- Whether adverb or adjective required, how determined
- Adverbs*, Synt. of
- in what do. consists
- to what relate
- Adverb* before a prep. ("CONSIDERABLY beyond,")

Page 2011

- Adverbs*, whether sometimes qualify nouns
- of participles which become nouns, how managed
- above, then, &c.*, as relating directly to a noun, how parsed
- Adverbs*, of degree, to what adjectives not applicable
- direct use of, for pronouns, inelegant
- position of
- needless use of, for adjectives
- hither, &c.*, for here, &c., with verb of motion
- hence, &c.*, with from prefixed
- when, &c.*, not to follow is in a definition ("Concord is WHEN, &c.")
- ever* and never, to be carefully distinguished
- in ly, when preferable to other forms
- Adverb*, appar. made object of a prep. ("At ONCE,")
- emphatic, with verb of self-motion suppressed ("I'll HENCE,")
- Adverb* HOW, misuse of ("He said HOW," &c.)
- NO, not to be used in reference to a verb or a part.
- Adverbial* form or character, words of, how parsed
- Adverbs*, punct. of
- Adverb*, ellips. of, shown
- Adverbs*, derivation of,
- many common Eng., of Anglo-Sax. origin
- poet. peculiarities in the use of
- peculiar use of those of two syllables in ly, by MILT. and his contemporaries
- Adverbial phrase*, a needless and improper designation in analysis

Affectation of fine writing, PREC. against

Ago and since, difference between

AGREEMENT, of words, defined

- with what synonymous
- Agreement*, how many of the parts of speech in Eng., incapable of; none necessary between words unrelated
- as differing from relation
- of words in the same construc., not easy to determine
- rules of, as applied to articles, impertinent
- Agreements*, syntactical, in Eng., specified

- Agreement*, general principles of
- figurative, of pronouns with antecedents

Ah, sometimes departs from usage

Alexandrine verse, description of

Alias, for the equivocal or, use of, in judicial proceedings

All, when may be reckoned a noun

Allegory, defined

- Allegory* includes most parables of Script., and some fables

Alphabet, Eng., names and plur. numb. of the letters

- Hebrew, names and characters of, given,
- Greek, do.
- Latin, names of the letters of, scarcely known even to the learned; account of its letters
- A perfect alphabet* in Eng., what it would effect
- Letters of the alphabet, when and how used in the sciences

Alphabetic writing, its advantage over the syllabic

Ambiguous, construc., with respect to the class of a word

- do., with resp. to the case of a word
- expressions*, PREC. against

Page 2012

Amen, use and import of

Among and amongst, amid and amidst, different in sense and construc. from between and betwixt

- incompatible with the distributive one an other
- derivation of, from Sax.

Amphibrach, defined

Amphimac, amphimacer, or Cretic, defined.

An, conjunc., obsolete for if ("Nay, AN thou 'lt mouthe," &c., SHAK.)

- derivation of, from Sax.

An, a, art., one and the same

- preferable form before a particular sound
- A* or an before genus
- how commonly limits the sense
- belongs to sing. numb. only
- with adjective of numb.
- its effect upon proper and common nouns
- is without agreem.
- Whether an is from a or a from an
- An*, a, origin of
- of proportion
- with numerals
- by what definitives superseded
- implies unity; sometimes precedes collective noun conveying the idea of plurality
- present usage of, how differs from that of ancient writers
- use of, before humble, and its compounds and derivatives
- erroneous use of, as relating to a plural
- not to be used for the, to denote emphat. a whole kind

Analysis, "to analyze a sentence," what

- Analysis* of sentences shown in five different methods; which method BROWN calls "the best and most thorough"
- Analysis*, notices of the different methods of
- importance of, in teaching grammar; the truest method of, parsing

Anapest, defined

Anapestic verse, treated

- what syll. of, has stress; first foot of, how may be varied
- what variation of, produces composite verse
- whether a surplus syll. in, may compensate for a deficient one
- what number of syllables in the longest measure of
- Anapestic verse* shown in its four measures
- Anapestic*, measures, why few
- poetry*, pieces in general short
- (instance of a long piece, L. HUNT'S "Feast of the Poets,")

And, discriminated from or

- when preferable to with, or, or nor
- whether emphatic of word or phrase following it ("Part pays, AND justly;" &c., POPE,)
- derivation of, from Sax.

Anglo-Saxon dialect, and accessions thereto, as forming the modern Eng. lang.

An other, see Other

Antecedent, proper sense of the term

- sometimes placed after its pronoun
- sometimes doubly restricted
- of pron., applied figuratively
- sing., with the adj. many, and a plur. pron.
- suppressed
- Antecedents* of different persons, numbers, and genders, disjunctively connected, how represented
- joint, agreem. of pron. in ellipt. construct. of

Page 2013

Antibacchy, or hypobacchy, defined

Antiquated words and modes of expression, more frequent in poetry than in prose

Antithesis, defined

Aorist, or indefinite, may be applied to imperf. tense pot. and subjunc.

Aphaeresis, defined

Apocope, defined

Apophasis, or paralipsis, explained

Apostrophe, mark, what denotes; for what sometimes used

—at what period introduced into the poss. case Apostrophe, figure, defined

Apposition, Synt.

- agreement between words in
- Apposition*, what, and from whom received this name
- different from same cases put after verbs and participles not trans.; false teachings of MURR. et al. hereon
- the rule for, to which apposed term applied; whether words in, should be parsed separately
- common rule and definition of, wherein faulty
- which word of, the explanatory term; when explan. word placed first
- in what case of, either word may be taken as the explan. term,
- why two possessive words cannot be in
- two or more nouns in, where sign of possession put
- whether compat. with, to supply relative and verb between the apposed words
- Apposition*, appar., of noun without poss. sign, with pron. possess. ("YOUR success as an INSTRUCTOR,")
- noun or pron. emphat. repeated ("Cisterns, broken CISTERNs," &c.,)
- appar., of a noun to a sentence
- of words differing in numb. ("Go YE every MAN,")
- of proper nouns with appellatives ("The river THAMES,")
- act. verb followed by two words in
- whether requires any other agreem. than that of cases
- words in, punct. of
- of a common with a prop. name, use of capital lett.

Archaism, what

Aristotle, division of the Greek letters

—what neoterics wiser than; how considers the compounding or non-compounding of terms

Arithmetical numbers, relation of the terms in

ARRANGEMENT of words, term defined

—Arrang. of words, of what importance in synt.; whether it affects the method of parsing words

ARTICLES, Etymol. of —Article, defined

—Article, common noun without; Eng. nouns without, taken indefinitely partitive —words of mere being, used without —Articles, how often inserted

—needless, to be omitted

—Classes of, named and defined

—Modificat. (an short, to a, the only,) —Articles, the frequent use of; freq. misapplication of

—to be distinguished

Page 2014

from adjectives, and from each other

- appar. used for adverbs
- Article*, Eng., its demonstrative character
- do., compared with the Gr. def. art.; no rule for agreement of, appropriate in Eng.
- use of, before names of rivers
- Articles*, Synt. of
- to what RELATE
- Article*, with the poss. and its governing noun, only one, used
- one noun admits of one, only; before an adj., relates to a noun understood
- why not repeated, as in Fr., before every noun of a series; why the omission of, cannot constitute a proper ellipsis.
- position of, with respect to its noun; ditto, with respect to an adj. and noun
- relative position of, and adj., not a matter of indifference
- excluded by certain pronom. adjectives; what ones precede it; its position in respect to an adj. of quality, limited by too, so, as, or how
- position of, when an adj. is preceded by another adv. than too, so, as, or how
- do., when an adj. follows its noun
- whether the insertion or the omission of, can greatly affect the import of a sentence
- Article*, repetition of, with nouns connected
- do. with adjectives connected, and, oppos.
- added to each of two or more nouns sing., or a plural put ("THE nominative and THE objective CASE," or "THE nominative and objective CASES,")
- use of, in special correspondence of phrases
- do., in correspondence peculiar
- do., in a series of terms
- erroneous use of, before the species, for THE; do., when the species is said to be of the genus ("A JAY is a sort of A BIRD,")
- not used before names of the virtues, vices, &c., before limited terms, and before nouns of definite signif.
- do. before titles or names mentioned merely as such
- do. before a part. not taken as a noun
- insertion or omission of, with respect to a comparison or an alternation made with two nouns
- required in the construc. which converts a part. into a verbal noun

- Articles*, what the false synt. of, includes
- Ellips. of article, shown
- Articles*, derivation of
- frequently omitted by the poets See also Definite Article, and An,
A

Articulate or elementary sound, nature of

Articulation, as defined by COMST.; do. by BOLLES

- Articulation*, how differs from pronunciation
- the principles of, what they constitute
- a good one, what, in the view of COMST.; do., in what consists,
according to SHERID.; do. importance of; do., how delivers words

Page 2015

As, as subject or object of a verb, its CLASS

- with a clause or sentence as anteced., do. As, as relative, WEBST. absurd explanation of; CHAND. do.; BULL. denial
- to what construc. limited
- peculiarities with respect to position
- declined
- derivation of, from Teuton., DR. JOH.
- As follow*, as follows, &c., construction of; MURR., himself perplexed by TOOKE and CAMPB., delivers dubious instructions concerning
- Opinion of NIX. and CROMB. concerning. As, as a conjunc., uniting words in appos.
- between adj. or part. and its noun ("Actions AS such")
- with ellips. of latter term of comparison ("For such AS HE")
- As* and than, character and import of
- words connected by, generally put in the same case
- As*
- as*; as
- so*; so (preceded by a negative,)
- as*; so
- as* (with an infin. following;) correspondents

Asking and exclaiming, simple and appropriate names for the marks of, desirable

Aspirates, see Semivowels

Asterisk, use of. Asterism, do.

Ate, particular words ending in, peculiarities of Auxiliary, defined

- Auxiliary*, form of a verb, when preferable to the simp.
- verbs, are mostly defective
- do., are needful in the conjug. of English verbs
- do., inflection of, shown
- Auxiliaries* used as expletives
- Auxiliary*, poet. placed after verb

Averse, aversion, whether to be construed with from or to

Avoiding, verbs of, with part. in stead of infin.

Awkwardness, literary, Crit. N. censuring

Ay, I, assentive adv.

—Ay, sometimes improp. written for ah

B.

B, its name and plur. number

—its sound

—in what situations silent

Bacchy, described

BE, how varied

—CONJUGATED, affirmat.

—Use of the form be for the pres. indic.

—Be, ellips. of the infin. often needlessly supposed by ALLEN et al.

—whether it should be inserted after the verb make

—Is, contracted, giving its nom. the same form as that of the poss. case ("A WIT'S a feather," &c., POPE)

Become, &c., whether they demand the auxiliary am or have

Besides, prep., in what cases proper to be used after else or other, in lieu of than

Between, cannot refer to more than two things

—Between or betwixt, how differs in use from among or amongst —Between, betwixt, derivation of, from Sax.

Page 2016

Bible, the Holy, application of the name

- what is shown by Italics in the text of
- quotations in, how indicated
- abrupt transitions in
- its general accuracy of lang.
- in the lang. of, ye and you, in what constructions not found

Bid, as commanding, or as promising, its construction with the infin.

Blair, Dr., unjustly censures Addison's frequent use of that, as a relative

Blank verse, as distinguished from rhyme

Blunders, as readily copied, as originated, by makers of school-books

- literary*, Crit. N. concerning

Bombast, as opposed to purity, PREC. against Books, mentioned by name, rule for capitals

Both, as conjunc., corresponding to and

- as adj.
- derivation of, acc. to DR. MURR.

Brace, its purpose

Breve, or stenotone, for what used

Brevity of expression, sought in the ordinary business of life

Brokenness, or hitching, as a fault of style, PREC. censuring

But, save, as well as, construc. of two nouns connected by

- But*, how has acquired the signif. of only
- in ambiguous construc. ("There cannot be BUT one," &c., KAMES)
- as used for that, contrary to its import
- derivation of, from Sax.
- But* and save, whether they ever govern the obj. case as prepositions
- Cannot but*, construc. and signif. of
- Not but*, to what equivalent, and the class of but

C.

C, name and plur. numb. of

- sounds of
- where silent
- with cedilla placed under (c)
- written for a number
- Ch*, sounds of
- Arch*, sound of, before a vowel, and before a conson.
- Ck*, final, for double c

Cadence, explained

- faulty, precept against, by RIPP.
- MURR. direction concerning

Cadmus, carried the Phoenician alphabet into Greece

Caesura, signif. and application of

- Caesural* or divisional pause; demi-caesuras, or minor rests;
(see Pauses)

Can, verb, varied

- derivation and signif. of
- Can not* and cannot, with what distinction used
- Cannot*, with a verb of avoiding, or with BUT
- Can*, could, would, as principal verbs, by poet. use

Capital letters, capitals, for what used; how marked for the printer, in manuscript

- what things are exhibited wholly in,
- Rules for the use of,
- use of, in comp. prop, names,
- needless,
- lavish use of, its effect,
- discrepancies with respect to, abound in books.

Page 2017

Cardinal numeral, distinguished from its corresponding ordinal, —should follow the ordinal, in a specification of a part of a series, ("The first TWO").

Caret, in what used, and for what purpose.

Cases, in grammar, what,
—named and defined,
—nom. and obj., alike in form, how distinguished,
—on what founded, and to what parts of speech belong.
—(See Nominative Case, &c.)
—Cases, whether infinitives, participles, &c., can take the nature of,
—what is the proper number of, to be assigned to Eng. nouns,
—what authorities for the true doctrine of three,
—discordant doctrine of sundry grammarians concerning the numb. of,
—WEBST. and MURR. opposite instructions concerning do.
—Cases, whether personal pronouns have two, only,
—rules for the construc. of,
—whether a noun may be in two, at once,
—whether Eng. verbs govern two,
—whether in Eng., as in Lat., when a verb governs two, the pass. retains the latter case.
—Cases, same, (see Same Cases.)
—Cases, what kinds of words take different, after them.
—Case of noun or pron. after part. governed by prep., whether undetermined; err. of SANB. and BULL. hereon expos.; GREE. false teaching, do.,
—doubtful, after participles, in what kind of examples found; canon concerning do.

Case, technical term with printers, ("Letters of the lower case.")

Catachresis, how commonly explained, and what sort of fig.

Catalectic, when a measure is said to be.

Cedilla, from whom borrowed, and how applied.

Change, of numb. in the second pers., ineleg.,
—of the connective of two nominatives appar. requiring a plur. verb, canon concerning.
—Changing the scene, or deserting the principal subj., in a sent., PREC. against.

Chaucer's imperfect measures, DRYDEN'S remarks on.

Cherokee alphabet, some account of.

Cherubim and seraphim, Heb. plurals, sometimes mistaken for singulars.

Chief terms, or principal parts, of a verb, necessary to be first ascertained.

—Chief words may be distinguished by capitals.

Circumflex, inflection, (see Inflection,)

—mark, use of.

Classes under the parts of speech, what meant by.

Classification of words, explanations to assist beginners in making,

—DR. WILSON'S observations on.

Clause, see Member.

Climax, defined.

Cognomination, relation of the article, in instances of, ("Alexander the Great").

Page 2018

Collective noun, defined.

- Collective nouns*, forms of, sing. and plur.; how understood,
- gend. of, how determined,
- by what relative represented.
- Collec. noun*, represented by plur. pron.,
- in what two ways may be taken, and with what accord of pron.; the plur. construc. of, under what fig. of synt. ranked by the old grammarians,
- whether with a sing. definitive, admits a plur. verb or pronoun.
- Collec. nouns* generally admit of plur. form.
- Collect. noun*, represented by sing. pron. neut.,
- uniformity of numb. to be preserved in words constructed with,
- agreem. of verb with,
- how determined whether it conveys the idea of plurality or not,
- strictures on the rules of ADAM, LOWTH, et. al., concerning,
- NIX. notion of the construc. of verb and.
- Coll. nouns*, partitive of plur., construc. of,
- as expressing collections of persons, or coll. of things, which most often taken plurally,
- when not plur. in form, whether it admits of plur. adj. before it.

Colon, from what takes its name,

- for what used,
- in what year adopted in England,
- its utility maintained against some objectors,
- Rules for the use of,
- used by some between numb. of chap. and that of verse, in quotations from the Bible.

Comma, from what takes its name,

- what denotes,
- less common in Germ. than in Eng.,
- its ancient form,
- Rules for the use of,
- use of, in a series of words.

Commanding, desiring, expecting, &c., verbs of, to what actions or events, refer.

Commandments, the ten, how expressed as to forms of verb,

- by what points divided in books,
- example of, versified in iamb. hexameter, by DR. WATTS.

Common gender, unnecessary and improper term in Eng. gram.

Common noun, defined,

- when admits of no art.,
- with def. art. sometimes becomes proper,
- by personif. often do.
- Common nouns* include the classes, collective, abstract, and verbal.
- Common nouns*, their nature and numerical distribution, as distinguished from proper.

Comparative degree, defined.

- Compar. degree*, why BROWN presents a new definit. of, in place of his former one,
- true nature of
- whether always required in a comparison of two objects
- with what construc. proper in exclusive comparisons, canon of BROWN
- Comparatives*, certain, not construed with the conjunc. than
- double, how to be considered and treated
- Comparative* terminations, to what adjectives not to be applied
- Compar. degree* in Gr. and in Lat., construc. of
- poet. connected to the positive

Page 2019

Comparison, defined

- Comparison*, degrees of, named and defined
- what adjectives admit not of
- CHURCH. on the different, (and BROWN on CHURCH.)
- character of BROWN'S definitions of; do. of those of MURR. et al., exhibited
- MURR. definitions of, criticised
- relative nature of
- Comparison*, regular
- to what adjectives applicable
- when preferable to the comparison by adverbs
- Comparison*, HARR. on the degrees of; the positive a degree
- (in oppos. to HARR. et al.)
- Comparison of equality*, what; sometimes involves solec., ("Nothing SO uncertain AS,")
- Comparison of equality and of ineq.*, canon on
- Comparison*, adaptation of the terms of, to the deg. to be expressed
- belongs chiefly to comm. adjectives
- Comparis.*, irregular
- Comparis.*, whether to be mentioned in parsing adverbs
- inclusive, and exclusive
- Comparisons*, extra, their impropriety
- Crit. N. on, See also Comparative Degree, and Superlative Degree.

Comparison or contrast of things, the resemblance or opposition how rendered more striking

Complex prepositions, how may be formed

Composite orders of verse, what uniformity of construc. they require

- Composite verse*
- description of; why requires rhythm
- kinds of, unlimited; which preferable
- liable to doubtful scansion

Composition, the frequent practice of, necessary, in order to acquire a good style, Composition of language, two kinds of Compound or progressive form of verb, how made

- exemplified in the verb READ, conjugated, what verbs do not admit of; what it implies
- verbs of, having a pass. signif.

Compound word, defined, Compounds, permanent, consolidated; temporary, formed by hyphen

- Comp. words*, not to be needlessly broken
- two or more, not to be split
- when to be written with hyphen; when without it
- Compounding of words*, unsettled usage respecting; manner of, in Lat. and Gr.; arbitrary practice of, in Eng., its effect
- does not necessarily preclude their separate use
- propriety of, sometimes difficult to decide
- Compounds*, orthog. of
- Compounding* the words of a reg. phrase, its impropriety
- Compound adjectives*, see Adjectives, Compound.

Concord, (see Agreement.)

- Concords* and governments, examples of false ones from the grammarians
- in Lat., diversely enumerated by the Lat. grammarians

Concrete terms for abstract qualities, poet. use of

Page 2020

Confusion of senses, in use of pron., to be avoided

Conjugation of a verb, defined

- what some teachers choose to understand by
- Conjugating a verb, four ways of, named
- Conjugation* of an Eng. verb, what the simplest form of
- Conjug.* of verbs, shown in five Examples
- (See also Compound or Progressive, &c.)
- Conjugat.* negative, how made, interrogative, do.
- interrog. and negative, do.

CONJUNCTIONS, Etymol. of

- Conjunction*, defined
- Conjunctions*, how differ from other connectives
- nature and office of; R. F. MOTT quot.
- nature of the connexions made by
- how many in common use
- how parsed
- as “connecting the same moods, &c.,” strictures on the doctrine of MURR. et al., concerning
- Conjunctions*, classes of, named and defined
- (See Copulative Conjunction, Disjunc. Conj., and Corresp. Conjunc.)
- Conjunctions*, List of
- appar. used as adverbs
- peculiar phrases having the force of
- importance of, as copulative or as disjunctive, to be carefully observed
- Conjunctions*, Synt. of
- do., in what consists, (MURR. et al. teaching erron.)
- what connect
- declinable words connected by, why in the same case
- power and position of those that connect sentences or clauses
- absurd and contradictory notions concerning the office of, by LENN., BULL., et al.
- two or three coming together, how parsed
- Conjunction*, followed by a phrase, and not a whole member
- connecting two terms to one
- do. two terms the same in kind or quality
- Conjunctions*, to be used with due regard to import and idiom
- punct. of
- ellips. of, shown
- derivation of
- are mostly of Anglo-Sax. origin

- H. TOOKE'S derivations of, given
- poet. usage of or
- or*, and nor
- nor*

Conjunctive adverbs, what office perform; what classes of words embrace

- often relate equally to two verbs in different clauses
 - list of
 - whence*, whither, &c., sometimes partake of the nature of pronouns
- Connected terms*, two, limited by a third, what both must be
- should be the same in kind or quality. Connected adjectives, how should be placed. Connective words, or connectives, kinds of, named
 - do., how may be distinguished

Consonants, divisions and subdivisions of

- properties of, as sharp, flat, labial, &c.

Construing, whether differs from parsing

Continuance of action, see Compound or Progressive

Page 2021

Contractions, in the orthog. and the pronunciation of words
—ocular, in printing poetry, not important

Correlatives, combinations of, ("Father's son,") how to be regarded Corresponding, or corresponsive conjunctions, in what manner used —named and exemplified in their several pairs —nature of the terms standing in the relat. of —the former of two, how parsed

—CHURCH. canon on the use of —Or
—or, and nor
—nor, by poet. usage Crotchets, or brackets, how used —confused and inaccurate teaching of WEBST. et al., concerning

Cum with an ablative, Lat., ("Dux CUM aliquibus," &c.,) the construc. imitated in Eng.
—canon on do.

Curves, or marks of parenthesis
—have been in use for centuries
—the use of, not to be discarded
—confused teaching of WEBST. et al., respecting do.
—what used to distinguish
—clause enclosed by, how to be uttered; pause of do.
—Rules for the application of

Customary actions require to be expressed by indic. pres.

D.

D, name and plur. numb.
—sounds of
—written for a number

Dactyl, defined

Dactylic verse
—stress, on what syll. laid; what rhyme it generally forms —is not very common; seldom pure and regular —shown in its eight measures
—has been but little noticed by prosodists and grammarians
—misconceived and misrepresented Rev. D. BLAIR

Dare, construc. with infin. foll.

—Use of the form DARE for the third pers. sing.

Dash, the mark, explanation of

—LOWTH et al. make no mention of

—Rules for the application of

—Dash, needless, how to be treated

—between quotation and name of the author

—applied to side-title

—used to signify omission

Dates, ordinarily abbreviated; how best written

—objectives in, without their prepositions

Dative case, faulty relic, in Eng., of old Sax., ("It ascends ME into," &c., SHAK.)

Days of the week, names of, to be reckoned prop. names, and written with capital

Deaf and dumb

—The deaf and dumb, to whom the letters represent no sounds, learn to read and write; what inferred herefrom

Defective verb, what verb so called

—which tenses of, wanting

—Defective verbs, whether they should be reckoned a distinct class

—may, can, must, and shall, not to be referred to the class of —will, beware, &c., construc. and import of explained

—Defec. verbs, List of

Page 2022

Definite article, defined

- Definite art.*, its demonstrative character
- used before names of rivers
- do. by way of eminence
- no rule of agreem. for, in Eng.
- prefixed as an adv., to comparatives and superlatives
- repeated before every term in a series of adjectives used ellipt. as nouns
- used for a poss. pron., ("Full in THE face")
- position with respect to its noun
- required before antecedent to a restricted relative. See also The Definition, defined

- A perfect definition*, what
- Definitions*, needful qualities of certain, in gram.
- bad, peculiar vice of
- Crit. N. on

Definitives, what, in Eng., and how to be classed

- example to show what is meant by
- Definitive* word required before antecedent to restricted relative

Degrees of comparison, see Comparison

Deity, names of, use of capitals in

- in all languages, masc.; direct names of, do.. The sing. numb, universally employed in reference to the Supreme Being

Demonstratives, from the class, pronominal adjectives

Derivation, as a topic of gram., what explains

- importance of
- a knowledge of what languages will throw light on the subject of Eng.

Desiring, verbs of; see Commanding

Desisting, verbs of; with part., in stead of infin.

Despauter, (Despauterius Joannes,) grammarian, when died

- his Lat. Gram.
- his remark on the origin of using plur. pron. of second pers. for sing.
- gives the rule that the verb governs the nominative before it

Diaeresis, or dialysis, mark, place and use of —explained

Diesis, or double dagger, for what purpose used. Dimeter, line, iambic, examples of
—trochaic, do.
—anapaestic, do.
—dactylic, do.

Diphthong, defined
—Diphthongs, distinction of —enumeration and specification of the Eng.

Discourse, or narration, its nature and requirements

Disjunctive conjunction, defined
—Disjunctives, List of —Disjunctive OR, see Or

Distance, see Time, &c.

Distribution, of words into classes, a matter of some difficulty; explanations concerning, for learners
—of verbs in Lat., grammarians have disputed respecting

Distributives, of the class pronominal adjectives
—Distributive term sing. in apposit. with a plur.

Division, literary, see Literary Division

Do, verb, how varied:
—particular uses of
—in what manner may be substituted for an other term

Page 2023

Double comparatives and double superlatives, how may be regarded; canon; (LATH. and CHILD)

Double negatives, see Negation, and Negatives

Doubling of the final consonant before additional syll.; not doubling, before do.

—Double letter retained

—Doubling, certain letters incline to; others, do not

Doubtful case after a part., in what kind of examples found; the construc. to be avoided

Drink, verb, grammarians greatly at variance respecting the pret. and the perf. part. of

Dual number, found in Gr. and in Arab., what denotes

Duplication, see Doubling

Du Vivier, G., his Grammaire des Grammaires, and his Traite des Participes, a copious treatment of the Fr. participle

E.

E, (as A, O, I, and U,) self-naming:

—how spoken and written

—its plur.

—sounds properly its own

—final, mute, and to what belongs; exceptions

—effect on preced. vowel, of e mute after a sing. conson., or after st, or th

—diphthongs beginning with

—triphthongs do.

Each, pronom. adj., always of the third pers. sing.; its agreements. Each other, see Other

Ecphoneme, or note of exclamation

—occasional introduction into the classics

—diversely called by MURR. et al.

—for what used, and of what a sign

—Rules for the application of

Ecphonesis, defined

Either and neither, pronom. adjectives, relate to two only

- M. HARR. on the illegit. use of
- their numb. and pers.; what agreements they require, when they are the leading words in their clauses
- derivation of, from the Sax.

Either

- or*, neither
- nor*, correspondives:
- transposed, with repeated disjunction or negat.

Elegiac stanza, description of Elementary sound, or elements of speech, defined. See Sounds

Ellipsis, figure defined

- either not defined by grammarians in general, or absurdly defined
- frequent in comp. sentences
- to be supplied in parsing
- supposed*, may change the construc. without affecting the sense
- the principle of, as explaining several questionable but customary expressions, ("Fair and softly GOES far")
- MURR. on "THE ellipsis"
- Ellipsis supplied*, EXAMPLES of
- Needless ellipses, the supposition of, to be avoided
- Ellipses*, faulty, as opposed to perspicuity, PREC. against.
- Ellipsis*, or suppression, mark of, how figured, and what used to denote

Page 2024

Elliptical construction of nouns, ("A horse, a horse," &c., SHAK.)

Elocution, defined

Else, other, &c., with than, in exclusive comparisons
—Else or other, sometimes construed with besides
—Else, derivation of Emphasis, defined:

- comparative view of accent and
- as connected with quantity, MURR.
- as affecting accent
- what the guide to a right.
- Emphatic* words, not to be multiplied

Enallage, defined

- signif. of the Gr. word
- special application of the term
- with what other terms synonymous
- the most common forms of, in Eng.
- examples of, how differ from solecisms
- too much latitude was given to the fig. by Despauter, and by others

Enallixis, see Enallage

Ending of a sentence with an adv., a prep., or any inconsiderable word or phrase, PREC. concerning

English Grammar, see Grammar

English language, some account of its origin

- its character
- its simplicity and facility asserted by LOWTH
- its chief defect, according to DR. JOH.

Enumeration of numbers, see Addition

Epicene nouns, see Generic Names Epithets, new compound, poets frequently form

Equivalence, the argument of, has often led into errors

Equivocal, or ambiguous construc. of cases, to be avoided

- of rel. pron., by misplacement
- of prep. with converted part., how amended
- of the word but, ("There cannot be BUT one," &c.)

- of words, leaving the classification doubtful, Crit. N. concerning
- Equiv.*, or ambig. expressions, as opposed to propriety, PREC. against

Eroteme, its form in Greek

- derivation; fitness of the name
- diversely called by MURR. et al.
- its use
- Rules for do.
- its value as a sign of pause
- retained by a quoted question

Erotesis, explained

Errors, incorrigible, Crit. N. concerning

ETYMOLOGY

- Etymol.*, of what treats
- when and how should be taught
- figures of*, term defined; the principal do., named and defined
- Etymology* and meaning of words, HARRIS on the usefulness of disquisitions into

Ever, contrac., e'er; so in comp. rel. pronouns

- Ever a one*, contrac. by the comm. people into e'er a one
- Ever* and never, opposite to each other in sense, yet freq. confounded and misapplied; canon on the employment of
- Ever so*, (prop., eversso,) signif. of
- Ever so wisely*, its propriety determined, against the false phraseology never so wisely
- Ever*, derivation of, from Sax.

Page 2025

Example, as used in teaching, meaning of —Examples, use of capitals in

Exception, noun, and except, verb, whether more properly followed by from or by to

Exclamation, note of, (see Ecphoneme) —Exclamation, nom. absolute by
—the case of nouns used in

Exclusive and inclusive terms of a comparison

Exercise, in grammar, what

Expecting, &c., verbs of, see Commanding

Extended compositions, gradation of the parts in

F.

F, its name and plur. numb.
—final in monosyllables, to be doubled
—formation of the plur. of nouns in, and in ff
—its sound

Fable, how may be defined
—What the term denotes in the Scriptures

Fall short of, make bold with, &c., how the adjective in such phrases is to be explained in parsing

False identification, (under synt. of SAME CASES,) Note exposing the error of Falsities in sentences, Crit. N. directed against

Feel, its construc. with the infin.

Few and many, form and construc. of. Fewer, see Little

FIGURES, treated
—Figure, in gram., what
—Figures, distinctive names of some; frequent occurrence of those of rhetoric
—Figure of words, signif. of the term
—Figure of words, Rules for

- suggestions additional to do.
- unsettled and variable usage in that which relates to
- Figure of orthog.*, what; what the principal figures of do.
- Figure of etymol.*, what
- Figures of etymol.*, the principal, named and defined
- Figure of synt.*, what
- Figures of synt.*, the principal, named and defined
- Figure of rhet.*, what
- Figures of rhet.*, why certain are called tropes
- on what mostly founded
- the principal, named and defined
- affect the agreem. of pronouns with their antecedents
- Figures*, how many BROWN deems it needful to define and illustrate
- Figures*, definitions of sundry, in the lang. of authors, corrected, KEY. Figures, Arabic, in what cases pointed by some Final f, l, or s, in spelling; other finals than, in do.

- ck* or c, use of
- ll*, to what confined
- e* of a primitive, when omitted; when retained
- y* of a prim. word before a terminat., how managed
- ise* or ize, which termination to be taken
- Finals*, what letters may assume the position of; what may not, and why

Page 2026

Finite verbs, agreem. of, with subjects, a principle of Univ. Gram.

- Rules concerning
- Fin. verb* understood, punct. of First words, initial capital to
- faulty practice of grammarians with respect to

Foot, poetic, see Poetic Feet

Foreign words or idioms, unnecessary use of, in opposition to purity

For, with all, as equivalent to although

- For as much as*, &c., having the nature of conjunctions
- For that*
- For*, with perf. part., ("FOR lost")
- with ever
- before TO and infin.
- as introducing its object before an infin. For, conj., because, from Sax.; anc. expressed for that

Forever, or for ever, its class

Former and latter, nature and applic. of Forms of letters, in type or character

- Forms OF VERBS*, a knowledge of THE TRUE, nothing more important in gram. than Forsooth, signif. and use of Friends, the Society of; their employment, in familiar discourse, of the sing. pron. of the second pers.

- generally neglect to compound their numeral names of the months and days
- their misemployment of thee for thou
- their manner of speaking, different from the solemn style
- examples of their manner of forming the verb with the pron. thou; their simplificat. of the verb

From, derivation of, from Sax.

- From forth*, from out, construc. of, explained
- Off from*, examp. of the use of Full, in permanent compounds, how written; in temporary do., do.

- compounds in, (spoonful, handful, &c.) how pluralized

Future, contingency, how best expressed

Future tense, FIRST, how formed, and what expresses

- SECOND, do., do., and how varied

Futurity, often denoted by the infin., ("The world TO COME")

G.

G, its name and plur.

- its sounds
- when silent
- Gh*, sounds of, and silence

Gardiner, W., his new analysis of the Eng. alphab., noticed

Genders, term defined

- Genders*, the diff., named and defined
- on what founded, and to what belong
- Gender*, inconsistent views of, as given by many of the grammarians; WELLS and MURR. criticised
- confounded with sex by some writers; others otherwise confuse the matter
- Common gender*, of the old grammarians, the term objectionable with respect to Eng.
- Gender*, how in many instances determined

Page 2027

- figuratively ascribed, how indicated
- denoted by he and she prefixed to nouns
- denied by MURR. et al. to pronouns of the first and second persons
- of pron., the preference of, when joint antecedents are of different genders

General truths and customary actions, to be expressed by the indic. pres.

Generic names, sense and construc. of “Genitives, double,” discovered by our grammarians, the true explanation of all such

Gentile names, nature and construc. of German language, form of its type

- use of the comma less freq. in, than in Eng.

Gerund, Lat., explanation of

- what form of an Eng. participle corresponds to
- “Gerund in English,” how becomes “a substantive,” according to DR. ADAM et al., Gerundives, what

Giving, paying, procuring, &c., verbs of, with ellips. of to or for before the objective of the person

GOVERNMENT, of words, defined

- to what parts of speech has respect
- the rules of, whether to be applied to the governing or the governed words
- do., how many in the best Lat. grammars; usual faults in the distribution of these
- Governments* in Eng. synt. how many
- false, examples of, cited from grammarians

Grecism, literal, in Eng., (“Before Abraham was, I AM”) comp.

GRAMMAR, defined

- An English Grammar, what professes to be
- ENGLISH GRAMMAR, what in itself; what knowledge implies
- when worthy to be named a science
- Grammar*, how to be taught, and its principles how made known

- the true principles of, in whose possession
- a rule of*, what
- Grammar*, how divided; its parts, of what severally treat
- what it requires
- rightly learned, what ability it confers
- what many vain pretenders to, have shown by their works
- on questions of, the practice of authors should have more weight than the dogmatism of grammarians. Grammars of different languages, how far must needs differ; strictures on those of PROF. BULL., A grammar designed for English, the chief end of. Grammatical doctrine, the truth of, in what consists

Granting, supposing, &c., see Admitting

Grave accent, as opposed to acute
—as preserving the vocality of e

Greek alphabet, characters of, shown and named

Guillemets, or quotation points, what words they distinguish
—how applied to a quotation within a quotation
—not used in our common Bibles; the defect in what measure relieved

H.

Page 2028

H, its name and plur. numb.

- its sound
- in what words silent
- in what positions do.
- an* used formerly before all words beginning with

Hand, or index, use of

Handwriting, script letters in

Harmonical pauses, see Pauses

Have, verb, how varied

- derivation of; with perf. part., import of the tense
- Had*, with better, rather, &c., before the infin.

He and she, sometimes used as nouns

- as prefixed to nouns to denote gend.
- whether to be connected by a hyphen to the nouns to which prefixed

Hear, with objective, and an infin. without to

- with infin. alone, perhaps ellipt, ("I HAVE HEARD TELL")
- Heard*, verb, why irregular
- its pronunc.

Hebrew letters, some account of; names, characters, and significations of

- whether they are, or are not, all consonants, long a subject of dispute
- The*

Hebrew names for the months, were prop. nouns

- Hebrew*, what pointing adopted in

Hence, thence, whence, with from prefixed. "I'll HENCE," see Adverbs

Heptameter line, iambic, examples of

- trochaic*, do
- dactylic*, do.

Here, there, where, force of, when compounded with prepositions

- with verb of motion, perh. allowable for hither, thither, whither.
- Hereof*, thereof, whereof, placed after nouns, what to be called.
- Herein*, therein, &c., their class and nature

Heroic verse, see Pentameter

Heterogeneous terms, in general, two such not to be connected by a conjunc.

Hexameter line, iambic, examples of

—trochaic, do

—dactylic, do.

Hissing sounds, concurrence of, in forming the poss. case, how avoided

Hold, noun, after lay, take, &c., whether preferably construed with of, on, or upon

Hoping, &c., verbs of, see Commanding

How, after nouns of manner, its nature

—not to be used before that, or in stead of it

—derivation of, from Anglo-Sax.

Hyperbaton, explained

—its frequency in poetry; how should be used

—is diff. from synchysis

Hyperbole, defined

—Hyperboles, by what commonly expressed

Hypermeter, meaning of, in scansion

Hyphen, its uses

—present use in compound names

—Rules for the insertion of, in compounds

—signif. of the name

—Hyphen, abuse of

—CHURCH, on the use of, in comp. words

—in the figure of an adj., with a change of the synt. and sense

—necessary with a verbal noun and an adjunct

—do. with comp. participles, converted

Page 2029

Hypobacchy, or antibacchy, defined

I.

I, lett., self-naming; its plur.

—its usual sounds

—diphthongs beginning with; triphth. do., I, pron. with cap. lett.,

I, as written for a number. I, adv., see Ay

Iambic verse, treated

—lamb. verse, stress where laid in; effect of a short syll. added to a line of

—shown in its eight measures

—is seldom pure through a long succession of lines

—some of its diversifications shown. See also Dimeter, Trimeter, &c.

Iambus, or iamb, defined

Idea of unity, and of plurality, how formed

Identity of words, the principle of, considered

—Identity, proper, RULE for, ("Same Cases.") Identification, false, N. concerning

Idioms or peculiarities of expression, when to be approved or valued

If, the Biblical use of, to express an emphat. negation

—its derivation from Sax.

Ignorance, literary, Crit. N. concerning

Imagery, or Vision, explained

Imperative mood, defined

—Imperat. mood, why so called; in what manner applied

—its one tense, and the import of do

—its inflection shown in the verb LOVE, conjugated

—what nominatives only it takes

—use of, in the Gr. lang.; do., in Lat., Ital., Fr., and Span —may have all the persons and numbers

—poet.

Imperfect tense, defined

—Imperf. tense, the form, how far applicable to the Eng. tense so called

- in its simple form is the preterit
- in the pot. and subj. moods, an aorist
- of the indic. and the subj., how distinguished
- of the sub., to express a mere supposition, with indef. time

Imperfect participle, or first part., defined

- its form
- The first part., has been variously called
- why rightly termed imperfect participle
- for what forms of the Lat. gram., stands
- is applicable to time pres., past, or fut.; is not always active, even when derived from an act. verb
- may be turned to a multiplicity of uses
- appar. put absolute, (Admitting, Allowing, &c.)
- distinguished, with respect to governm., from a particip. noun
- as equivalent to infin. mood; heads of regular equivalence
- how compares with the Lat. gerund
- its nature and construc.

Impersonal verbs, so called, their peculiarity of use

- called monopersonal by some

Impropriety of language, what embraces

In and into, difference between; nature of the relation expressed by each; derivation of, from Sax.

Page 2030

Inclusive and exclusive terms of a comparison

Incorrigible errors, Crit. N. concerning

Indefinite article, see An, A Indefinite pronouns, of the class pronom. adjectives

Independent, see Absolute

Index, or hand, use of Indicative mood, defined

- Indic. mood*, why so called; its nature and use
- use of its pres. tense
- do. of its form of the pluperf. in lieu of the pot. pluperf.
- wherein differs characteristically from the subj.; the two moods continually confounded by writers
- Indic. mood*, format, and inflec. of its tenses shown in the verb LOVE, conjug.
- employed to express a conditional circumstance assumed as a fact

Inelegance of language, see Awkwardness.

Infinitive mood, defined

- Infin. mood*, so called in oppos. to the other moods
- usually distinguished by the prep. to before it
- its pres., the ROOT, or radical verb; what time it expresses
- archaic form in en
- its two tenses shown in the verb LOVE, conjug.
- Synt. of
- Infin. mood*, by what governed; (see To.)
- true construc. of, explained by the 18th Rule of the Synt.
- why simple of solution in Eng.; whether ever governed by a prep, in Fr., Span., or Ital.
- whimsical account of, given by NIX.
- how expressed in the Anglo-Sax. of the 11th century
- why may not, as some grammarians teach, be | considered a noun
- DR. WILS. on the charac. and import of
- to what other terms may be connected
- what in its nature, and for what things chiefly may stand
- taken abstractly, as subject of finite verb
- Loose infinitives, improp. in precise language
- Infin. mood*, position of
- misplacement of, to be avoided
- distinction of voice in, often disregarded, ("You are to BLAME;")

- hypercrit. teachings of SANB. and BLAIR hereon
- Infin.*, after bid, dare, &c., without TO
- whether used with TO after have, help, and find
- Infin.*, BY WHAT governed, often imposs. to say, according to the instructions of MURR.
- Infinitives* connected, governed by one preposition
- Infinitive*, ellipsis of, after to, whether to be approved
- sometimes doubtful whether transitive or intransitive
- in pause, or in remote dependence, punct. of
- poet. placing of
- Greek construc. of, in poetic use

Page 2031

Inflections, defined

- rising and falling, explained; do., as applied to questions
- notation* of, in writing and printing
- the rising more numerous than the falling; predominance of the rising in oral lang.; the falling, for what used, COMST.
- what kind of rules for, have been given by writers
- the rising and the falling, to be used with prop. discrimination; what should determine the direction of
- Inflection*, what constitutes the circumflex

Innovation extravagant, into the system of synt. or gram., a particular instance of, noticed

Inscriptions appear best in full capitals

Instead, what reckoned, and how best written

Intending, &c., verbs of, see Commanding.

Intensive nature of comparatives and superlatives, A. MURR.

Interrogative pronouns, defined

- what they severally demand
- their use and construc.
- in what differ from relatives
- are always of the third pers.
- declined
- their place in a sentence
- their construc. of cases, to what similar

Interrogative sentences, agreem. of verbs in

INTERJECTIONS, Etymol. of

- Interjection*, defined
- derivation and signif. of the term; LOWTH'S error in describing the interjections
- Interjections*, numb. of, in common use
- List of
- Interjections*, the frequent use of, an indication of thoughtlessness; expressiveness of some interjections in earnest utterance, &c.
- should be discriminatively used
- chief characteristics of; referred to the class of adverbs by the Gr. grammarians

- significant words uttered as, ("Out! out!")
- appar. taken substantively
- Synt. of
- absolute construc. of
- have no construc. with cases, as in Lat. and Gr.
- appar., sometimes connected to other words by a prep., or by that
- place of
- punct. of
- ellips. of, shown
- derivation of
- frequency of, in poet. lang.

Inversion of terms, sometimes of advantage, in respect to strength and vivacity of expression.

Irony, figure explained

Is being, with a perf. part., or the subject of the UNCO-PASSIVE form of verbs, canvassed

Ise or ize, which of these terminations to be taken in forming derivatives under Deriv. of Verbs

Ish, termination, whether it may be accounted a degree of comparison

Page 2032

It. its chief use

- declined
- to what creatures may be applied
- put for the distance, ("How far do you call IT?" &c., PRIESTL.,)
- without definite reference to an anteced.
- as explet., and referring to something expressed afterwards; faulty omission of, before verb, in such construc.
- had formerly no variation of cases
- its poss. form ITS, for of it, of recent origin, and not found in the text of the common Bible
- wrongly excluded by some from the list of pers. pronouns:
- its derivation from Sax., traced

Italic letters, Italics, some account of

- for what purpose used
- how denoted in preparing manuscripts

J.

J, its name and plur. numb.

- why never doubled
- why never ends a word in Eng.
- impropriety of dividing on the letter, in syllabication
- sounds of,

Johnson, Dr. S., his authority in Eng. orthography

Joint nominatives, agreem. of verb with

- whether words connected by with can be used as. Joint antecedents, agreem. of pron. with
- of different persons, agreem. of verb or pron. with, in ellipt. construc.

Jumbling together of the active voice and the passive, the manner of some

- Jumbling*, senseless, Crit. N. censuring

K.

K, its name and plur.

- in general, not needed in words derived from the learned languages
- its sounds

- when silent
- Two Kays standing together

Kind, sort, with these or those improp. preceding

L.

L, its name and plur. numb.

- of the class liquids
- final, monosyllables ending in
- final double, to what words peculiar
- its sound; in what words silent
- where doubled
- written for a number

Labial letters, how articulated

Language, the primitive sense of the term, what embraced; signif. of do., as now used

- in opposition to some grammarians, BROWN confines the term to speech and writing
- loose explanations of the word by certain slack thinkers; WEBST. notion of
- SHERID. idea of; KIRKH. wild and contradictory teachings concerning
- Language*, PROPRIETY of, in what consists; IMPROPRIETY of, what embraces
- PRECISION of, in what consists; Precepts concerning its opposites
- Language*, Eng., (see English Language)
- Languages*, uniform SERIES OF GRAMMARS for teaching the Eng., Lat., and Gr., that of DR. BULL., noticed

Page 2033

Lay, pay, and say, how written in the pret. and the perf. part.

Leading principles in the construc. of sentences, in what embraced in the Grammar

Least parts of language, as written, as spoken, &c., what constituents so called

Legal phraseology, in contrast with that of common life

Less, improper use of, for fewer, ("No LESS than three dictionaries," DR. WEBST.)

Lest, use of, for THAT, without due regard to its import, ("I feared LEST," &c.)

—derivation of, from Sax.

Let, verb, its construc, with an infin. following

LETTERS, in the Eng. alphabet, numb. of, and numb. of sounds which they represent

- a knowledge of, in what consists
- infinite variety in, yet the letters always THE SAME
- different sorts of types, or styles of, used in Eng.
- names of, in Eng.; do., sing, and plur.
- Classes of, named and defined
- powers* of
- the JUST POWERS of, (see Power)
- Forms of, and their distinctions, in the Eng. lang.
- different sorts of, to be kept distinct
- slanting strokes of the Roman, described
- Italic*, chief use of
- capital*, employment of
- small*, do.
- Letters*, history of
- the names of, are words of a peculiar kind
- the names and powers of, not always identical
- general neglect of learning to write the names of, in Eng.
- importance of learning to write do.
- erron. teaching with respect to certain names of
- Letters* of the Heb. alphabet given, with their names, and the significations of do.
- of the Gr. alphabet, with their names
- of the Lat. alphab., their names nearly lost
- of do., as now printed
- Letters*, the twenty-six, possible combinations and mutations of
- of the alphab., read by their names, how taken

- do., written for numbers, what their nature; omission of period after such letters
- DAY'S account of do.
- Letters*, the SOUNDS of, treated
- Letters*, the small, period of their adoption
- used for references
- Letter*, definition of
- Letter*, the sound of, called its POWER; yet its power not necessarily identified with its sound
- A letter, in what consists Like, near, nigh, appar., prepositions; why not placed by BROWN with the prep. Lily, W., grammarian, his arrangement of Lat. syntax

Lines, poetic, technical denominations of Liquids, what letters so called

Literary division of a work, common order of, downwards, and throughout; but all literary works not thus divided. Literary blunders, Crit. N. concerning

- awkwardness*, do.
- ignorance*, do.
- silliness*, do.

Page 2034

Little, lesser, less, different uses and import of

- Little, much, &c.*, preceded by not, too, or other such adv., how taken
- Less*, improp. used as an adj. of number; does not signify fewer; not to be used in the sense of do.
- Less, least*, adv., to be parsed separately, in the comparison of adjectives and adverbs

LOVE, verb active-trans., CONJUGATED affirmatively

- BE LOVED, pass., do.
- LOVE, conjug. negatively
- do*., interrogatively
- do*., interrogatively and negatively

Low and provincial expressions, use of, as opp. to purity, PREC. against

Ly, most common terminal of Eng. adverbs; added to nouns to form adjectives

(l.) u; 1055, b; 1053, L:

- when adverbs ending in, are preferable to those of other forms.

M.

M, its name and plur. numb.,

- of the class liquids,
- its sounds,
- when silent,
- as written for a number.

Macron, or macrotone, mark, its use.

Make, verb, whether to should be suppressed, and be, inserted, after,
("MAKE yourself BE heard," BLAIR,)

- its construc. with infin. following.

Man and woman, comp. nouns in, (man-servant, woman-servant, &c.) how pluralized.

Many a, with noun sing. represented by a plur. pronoun.

Marks, or points, used in literary composition, the principal; occasional. See Punctuation.

May, verb, how varied,

- derivation and uses of.

Mean, means, use and construc. of.

Measure, &c., see Time. Measure, poetical, see Verse.

Melody or beauty of a sentence, words necessary to, rarely to be omitted.

Member, or clause, defined.

- Memb.* and clause, generally used as synonymous, are discriminated by some,
- Clause* and phrase, confounded by some,
- Members*, simple, of a sent., punct. of,
- complex, do., do.,
- Members* of a sentence, arrangem. of, as affecting STRENGTH.

Metaphor, defined,

- what commonly understood to be,
- agreem. of pron. with antecedent in cases of.

Methinks, explanation of; the lexicographers on the word.

Metonymy, defined,

- Meton.*, on what founded,
- agreem. of pron. with its antecedent, in cases of.

Metres, more found in actual use, than those acknowledged in the ordinary schemes of prosody. Metre, see Verse.

Page 2035

Milton, MURR. proposed amendment of the “unintelligible” language of a certain passage of, criticised,

- double solec. in a pass, of, noticed,
- his poem, L'Allegro, what its versificat.; what the management of the orders of its verse,
- do., Il Penseroso, what its extent and construction.

Miss or Misses, Mr. or Messrs., what the proper applicat. of, when name and title are to be used together, in a plur. sense.

Mistaken, to be, irregularity of the verb; its import as applied to persons, and as applied to things.

Mimesis, explained; droll examples of.

Minus, plus, versus, via, Lat., use of, in Eng., in partic. constructions.

Mixing of synt. with etymol., the manner of INGERS., KIRKH., et al., censured. Mixture of the forms of style, inelegance of.

Modifications, defined,
—sense of the term as employed by BROWN.

Moloss, defined.

Monometer, scarcely constitutes a line, yet is sometimes so placed.

- Monometer* line, iambic, examples of,
- trochaic*, do.,
- anapestic*, do.,
- dactylic*, an examp. of.

Monopersonal verbs, see Impersonal Verbs.

Monotone, what, and how produced in elocution.

Months and days, names of, appar. proper names, and require capitals,
—how best expressed in literary compositions.

Moods of a verb, term defined,
—the five, named and defined,
—Mood, or MODE, the name. See Infinitive Mood, Indic. Mood, &c.

More and most, in ambiguous construction, (“Some people MORE than them,” MURR.)
—how parsed in comparisons of adjectives and adverbs.

Moses, in what characters, is supposed to have written.

Most, for almost, by vulgarism.

Motion, verbs of, with hither, &c., in stead of here.

Much, little, all, &c., as nouns,
—preceded by not, too, or other such adv.,
—This much, in stead of thus much, DR. BLAIR.

Mulkey, W., strictures on his system of orthoepy.

Multiplication, subject of the verb in, see Abstract Numbers.

Multiplicative numerals, as running on in a series; how written above decuple or tenfold.

Multitude, noun of, see Collective Noun.

Mute or silent, epithet applied to what letters.
—Mutes, what so reckoned; of these, which imperfect.
—Where a letter must be once mute.

My and mine, thy and thine, as duplicate forms of the poss. case, use of.

Page 2036

N.

N, its name and plur. numb.,
—of the class liquids,
—its sounds,
—in what position silent.

Name and title, see Proper Names.

Naming the letters of the alphab., importance of.

Narration, see Discourse.

Nasals, what consonants so called.

Near and nigh, see Like.

Need, as an uninflected third pers. sing. of the verb,
—has perh. become an auxiliary of the pot. mood,
—to what tenses must be understood to belong, if to be recognized as an auxil. of the pot. mood,
—that good writers sometimes inflect the verb, and sometimes do not,
and that they sometimes use to after it, and sometimes do not, how may be accounted for —three authorized forms of expression, with respect to the verb.
Needs, as an adv., its composition

Needless, mixing of characters in printing, bad effect of —capitals; effect of —articles, to be omitted
—ellipses, the supposition of, a common error among grammarians
—use of participles for nouns, or nouns for participles
—words, ineleg.
—possessive or art. before a part., how corrected
—periods, or other points, after certain numeral expressions
—abbreviations, offend against taste
—dashes inserted, how to be treated

Negation, expressed in the early Eng. by multiplied negatives; such manner of expression now obsolete and improper —Effect on a negation, of two negatives in the same clause

Negatives, the comm. rule of the grammars, that “two negatives, in Eng., destroy each other, or &c.,” whether a correct one

Neither, see Either

Neuter verb, defined

- Neuter verbs*, the active-trans. verbs are so called in most grammars and dictionaries; the absurdity of this
- extent of this class of verbs; their existence in any lang. denied by some grammarians
- Neut. verb BE, conjugated
- Neuter verbs*, made from active-transitives, (am come, is gone, &c.;) these called by some, “neuter passives”
- of passive form, (am grown, are flown, &c.;) as errors of conjugat., or of synt.
- do., how may be distinguished from pass. verbs
- do., DR. PRIESTL. mistaken notions concerning their nature and propriety
- Neut. verbs*, and their participles, take the same case after as before them
- Neuter verb* between two nominatives, its agreem.

Nevertheless, its composition and class

Page 2037

No or none, pronom. adj. No, as negative adj., “remarkable ambiguity in the use of,” noticed by PRIESTL., (“No laws are better than the English;”) how the ambiguity may be avoided

- as a simple negation, its construc.
- as an adv. of deg., relating only to comparatives, (“NO more,” —“NO better”)
- set before a noun, is an adj., corresponding to Lat. nullus
- In the phrases, no longer, no more, no where, DR. JOH. appar. suggests wrongly the class; its true class according to its several relations
- No*, or an other independent negative, repeated, its effect
- No*, adv., not to be used with reference to a verb or part.
- derivation of, from Anglo-Sax.

Nominative case, defined

- Nom. case*, how distinguished from the objective in nouns
- as subj. of a finite verb
- different ways of using
- Nominative* and verb, usual position of, and when varied
- Nom. case* and object., at the same time, noun placed in the relation of
- Nom.* following a verb or part, with what must accord in signif. See also Subject, &c.

Nominative sentences, examples of what MURR. erron. so terms; the prop. construc. shown

Nor, see Or.

Not, its place in negative questions

- how spoken in grave discourse, and how ordinarily
- vulg. contractions of, with certain verbs
- used with other negatives
- do. with nor (in stead of or) following, whether correctly, or not
- derivation of, from Anglo-Sax. Not but, how resolved. Not only, not merely, to what are correspondents

Notwithstanding, import and construc. of; misunderstood by DR. WEBST.

- formation and signif. of

NOUNS, Etymol. of

- Noun*, defined
- Nouns*, Classes of, named and defined

- Modifications of, named
- Persons of, named and defined; (see Persons)
- Numbers of, do.; (see Plural Number)
- Genders of, do.; (see Genders)
- Cases of, do.; (see Cases)
- Declension of
- Nouns*, number of, in Eng.
- the sense of, how made indefinitely partitive
- examples of words commonly belonging to other classes, used as
- collective*, abstract, and verbal or participial, included among common nouns; (see Collective Noun, and Particip. Noun)
- proper, (see Proper Names)
- Nouns*, Synt. of
- Noun*, why may not be put in the relation of two cases at once
- taken figuratively sing. for literally plur.
- required to be repeated, or inserted, in stead of a pronoun
- ellips. of, shown
- Nouns* of time, measure, distance, &c., (see Time)
- Nouns*, derivation of, from nouns, adjectives, verbs, or participles
- poet. peculiarities of

Page 2038

Numbers, the distinction of, to what belongs, and how applied. (See Plural Number.) Numbers, cardinal, ordinal, &c., (see Cardinal Numbers, &c.)

- Numbers*, abstract, expressions of multiplication in, ("Twice one IS two,"
- "Twice two ARE four," &c.,) seven different opinions of grammarians respecting, examined by BROWN; who determines the prop. forms of expression
- Numbers*, expressed by letters, how to be considered; whether to be marked by the period
- combined arithmetical, one adjective relating to an other

Numerals, numeral adjectives, see Adjectives, Numeral. Numerical figures used for references

O.

O, lett., as A, E, I, and U, self-naming

- its plural
- formation of the plur. of nouns in
- sounds properly its own
- where sounded as short u
- do. as obscure e
- diphthongs beginning with
- triphth. do. O, interj., with cap. lett.
- what emotion indicates
- differs from oh
- as denoting earnestness, before nouns or pronouns put absol. by direct address; is no positive index of the vocative
- O, &c., MURR., erron. doctrine concerning, to what teaching it has given rise
- O, &c., with a case following, Lat. construc. of, examined
- O, not unfreq. confounded with oh, even by grammarians.

Obelisk, or dagger, as mark of reference.

Objective case, defined

- Obj. case*, how distinguished from the nom. in nouns
- before the infin. mood, how taken in Eng.
- as governed by active-trans. verb or part.
- "Active verbs govern the obj. case," MURR., defect of this brief assertion; its uselessness as a RULE for "the syntax of verbs."
- Obj. case*, of how many constructions susceptible

- whether infinitives, participles, &c., can be in
- two nouns in, after a verb, how parsed,
- Whether any verb in Eng. governs two objectives not coupled
- Obj. case* as governed by passive verbs, erroneously allowed by some
- what verbs not to be employed without
- Obj. case* as governed by prep.
- “Prepositions gov. the obj. case,” why the brief assertion is exceptionable, as the sole RULE, in parsing prep.

Obsolete or antiquated words, use of, as opposed to purity, PREC. against

- Things obsolete* in Eng., DR. LATHAM’S attempts to revive.

Ocean, figurative representation of, as uttering his voice in tones of varied quantity.

Page 2039

Octometer line, may be reduced to tetrameter

- iambic, examples of
- trochaic*, do
- dactylic, example of
- Octometer*, trochaic, rhyme and termination of; its pauses, and how may be divided; the most common form of.

Of and on or upon, difference between.

Old English, characters of its alphabet, shown

- occasional use of do.

Omissions of words that are needful to the sense, Crit. N. against.

Omitting, verbs of, with part. in instead of infin.

One, employment of, as a noun or as a substitute for a noun; how classed by some grammarians

- may be preceded by the articles, or by adjectives
- like Fr. on or l'on, used indef. for any person; in this sense preferable to a pers. pron. applied indefinitely
- CHURCH., citation ridiculing the too frequent use of, for pers. pron.
- as pronom. adj., requires verb and pron. in the third pers. sing. to agree with it. One an other, see Other. One, or a unit, whether it is a number.

Only, derivation of; class and meaning of, in its several different relations

- strictures on the instructions of grammarians respecting the classification and placing of
- ambiguous use of, (as also of but,)
- use of, for but, or except that, not approved of by BROWN
- Not only*, not merely
- but*, &c., correspondents.

Onomatopoeia described and exemplified (extr. from SWIFT.)

Or, as expressing an alternation of terms, (Lat., sive.)

- in Eng., is frequently equivocal; the ambiguity how avoided
- Or*, perh. contracted from other
- Or* and nor discriminated
- Or*, nor, grammarians dispute which of these words should be adopted after an other negative than neither or nor; MURR., following PRIESTL., teaches that either word may be used with equal propriety;

BURN'S doctrine; BROWN, after revising CHURCH., attempts to settle the question, —Or ever, ("OR EVER the earth was,") the term explained.

Or or our, terminat., number of Eng. words in; how many of these may be written with our; BROWN'S practice and views in respect to this matter.

Oral spelling, the advantage of, to learners.

Order of things or events, the natural, PREC. directing the observance of, in the use of lang.

Orders of verse, see Verse.

Ordinal numeral, (see Numerals.)

—Ordinal adjectives may qualify card. numbers; cannot properly be qualified by do.

Page 2040

Orthoepy, see Pronunciation.

ORTHOGRAPHY

- Orthography*, of what treats
- difficulties attending it in Eng.
- DR. JOHNSON'S improvements in
- DR. WEBSTER'S do., in a different direction
- ignorance of, with respect to any word used, what betokens in the user (See also Spelling.) Orthography, figures of, MIMESIS and ARCHAISM
- its substantive or pronominal character; (with one.) how classed by some; may be preceded by the articles
- requires than before the latter term of an exclusive comparison; yet sometimes perhaps better takes the prep. besides. Each other one an other, import and just application of,
- misapplication of, frequent in books,
- DR. WEBST. errone. explanation of other, as “a correlative to each,”
- One* and other, frequently used as terms relative and partitive, appar. demanding a plur. form,
- An other*, in stead of another. Somehow or other, somewhere or other, how other is to be disposed of.

Ought, principal verb, and not auxiliary, as called by MURR. et al.,
 —originally part of the verb to OWE; now used as defec. verb,
 —its tense, as limited by the infin. which follows.

Ourself, anomalous form peculiar to the regal style,
 —peculiar construc. of.

Own, its origin and import; its class and construc.,
 —strangely called a noun by DR. JOH.

P.

P, its name and plur. numb.,
 —its sound,
 —when silent,
 —Ph, its sounds.

Pairs, words in, punct. of.

Palatals, what consonants so called.

Parables, in the Scriptures, see Allegory.

Paragoge, explained.

Paragraph mark, for what used.

Paralipsis, or apophasis, explained.

Parallels, as marks of reference.

Parenthesis, signif. and twofold application of the term,

—Parenthesis, marks of, (see Curves.)

—What clause to be inclosed within the curves as a PARENTHESIS, and what should be its punct.,

—Parentheses, the introduction of, as affecting unity.

Parsing, defined.

—Parsing, its relation to grammar,

—what must be considered in,

—the distinction between etymological and syntactical, to be maintained, against KIRKH. et al.,

—character of the forms of etymological adopted by BROWN,

—what implied in the right performance of,

—whether different from analysis,

—what to be supplied

Page 2041

in.

- Parsing*, of a prep., how performed,
- of a phrase, implies its separation,
- the RULES OF GOVERNMENT., how to be applied in,
- of words, is not varied by mere transposition.
- Parsing*, etymological and syntactical, in what order to be taken,
- the SENSE, why necessary to be observed in; what required of the pupil in syntactical,
- syntactical, EXAMPLE of.
- Parsing* or CORRECTING, which exercise perh. the more useful.

Participial adjectives, see Adjectives, Participial.

Participial or verbal noun, defined,

- how distinguished from the participle.
- Participial noun* and participle, the distinction between, ill preserved by MURR. and his amenders.
- Participial noun*, distinc. of VOICE in, sometimes disregarded, ("The day of my BURYING,")
- with INFIN. following, strictures on MURR., LENN., and BULL., with respect to examples of.

PARTICIPLES, Etymol. of.

- Participle*, defined.
- Participles*, whether they ought to be called verbs,
- appropriate naming of the kinds of,
- often become adjectives,
- become adjectives by composition with something not belonging to the verb,
- number of, simp. and comp.,
- imply time, but do not divide it,
- retain the essential meaning of their verbs, but differ from them in the formal,
- in Eng., from what derived,
- H. TOOKE'S view of the time of; with whom BROWN differs.
- Participles*, Classes of, named and defined,
- (See Imperfect Participle and Perfect Part.)
- Participles*, grammarians differ in their opinion with respect to the time and voice of,
- how have been called and treated by some,
- explanation of the different,
- how distinguished from particip. nouns,

- elegantly taken as plur. nouns, ("All his REDEEMED,")
- appar. used for adverbs,
- some become prepositions.
- Participle* and ADJUNCTS, as forming "one name," and as such, governing the poss., whence the doctrine; PRIESTL. criticised; MURR. et al. adopt PRIESTL. doctrine, which they badly sustain; teachers of do. disagree among themselves,
- governm. of possessives by, how BROWN generally disposes of; how determines with respect to such governm.
- Participles*, Synt. of,
- regular synt. of, twofold; nature of the two constructions; OTHER less regular constructions; which two constructions of all, are legitimate uses of the participle; which constructions are of doubtf. propriety.
- Participles*, to what RELATE, or in what state GOVERNED.

Page 2042

- Participle*, as relating to a phrase or sentence,
- taken abstractly,
- irregularly used in Eng. as substitute for infin. mood,
- in irreg. and mixed construc.
- Participle*, transitive, what case governs,
- nom. absol. with, to what equivalent,
- each requires its appropriate FORM,
- questionable uses of, admitted by MURR. et al.; why BROWN is disposed to condemn these irregularities.
- Participle* and particip. noun, distinction between, with respect to governm.
- Participle* in ing, multiplied uses of, lawful and forced, illustrated,
- equivalence of do. to infin. mood, instances of,
- every mixed construc. of, how regarded by BROWN,
- the “double nature” of, CROMB. on; his views, how accord with those of MURR. et al., HILEY’S treatment of; BROWN’S strictures on do.
- Participles*, place of:
- active, governm. of.
- Participle*, trans., converted to a noun:
- converted, when the expression should be changed:
- followed by an adj., its conversion into a noun appar. improper:
- comp. converted, how managed:
- not to be used for infin., or other more appropriate term:
- use of, for a nominative after be, is, was, &c., faulty:
- following a verb of preventing, how to be managed.
- Participles*, converted, disposal of their adverbs:
- must be construed with a regard to the leading word in sense:
- should have a clear reference to their subjects:
- needless use of, for nouns, to be avoided:
- punct. of:
- derivation of:
- poet. peculiarities in the use of.

Parts of speech, meaning of the term:

- Parts of speech*, named and defined:
- what explanations may aid learners to distinguish the different:
- why needful that learners be early taught to make for themselves the prop. distribution of:
- WILS. on the distribution of:

- the preferable number with respect to; the office of, specifically stated.
- The parts of speech, passage exemplifying all.
- Examples of a partic. part of speech accumulated in a sentence.
- Etymol. and Synt. of the different parts of speech, see Article, Noun, Adjective, &c.

Passions of the mind, by what tones to be expressed.

Passive verb, defined.

- Pass. verbs* contrasted with active-trans, verbs, in respect to the object or the agent of the action; their compos, and construc.:
- their FORM in Eng.
- Pass. verb* BE LOVED, conjug. affirmatively.
- Pass. verbs*, how distinguished from neuters of the same form:

Page 2043

- having active forms nearly equivalent to them, (is rejoiced, rejoices; am resolved, know, &c.):
- erroneously allowed by some to govern the obj. case in Eng.; CROMB. in this category, cited, canon, pseudo-canon.
- Pass. verb*, what should always take for its subj. or nom.:
- takes the same case after as before it, when both words refer to the same thing:
- between two nominatives, with which should be made to agree, ("Words ARE wind,"). See Unco-Passive, &c.

Passive form of an active-intrans. verb followed by a prep. and its objective, ("He WAS LAUGHED AT,"). Passive sense of the act. form of the verb, ("The books continue SELLING,").

Past for future, see Prophecy.

Pauses, term defined.

- Pauses*, kinds of, named and explained:
- the distinctive, duration of:
- after what manner should be formed:
- forced, unintentional, their effect:
- emphatic or rhetorical, applicat. and office of:
- harmonic, kinds of; these, essential to verse.
- Pauses*, abrupt, punct.:
- emphatic, do.

Pedantic and sense-dimming style of charlatans &c., as offending against purity.

Pentameter line, iambic, examples of:

- is the regular Eng. HEROIC; its quality and adaptation:
- embraces the elegiac stanza:
- trochaic*, example of, said by MURR. et al. to be very uncommon; was unknown to DR. JOH. and other old prosodists:
- the two examples of. in sundry grammars, whence came; a couplet of these scanned absurdly by HIL.; HART mistakes the metre of do.:
- dactylic*, example of, ("Salutation to America,").

Perfect, adj., whether admits of comparison; why its comparis. by adverbs not wholly inadmissible.

Perfect definition, what.

Perfect participle, or second part., defined:

- its form:
- how has been variously called:
- its character and name as distinguished from the imperf. part:
- why sometimes called the passive part.; why this name liable to objection:
- how may be distinguished from the preterit of the same form:
- should not be made to govern an objective term. ("The characters MADE USE OF," MURR.):
- not to be used for the pret., nor confounded with the pres.:
- what care necessary in the employment of; when to be distinguished from the preterits of their verbs.

Perfect tense, defined.

- Perf. tense* of indic., as referring to time relatively fut.

Page 2044

Period, or full stop, its pause.

- Period, or circuit, nature of.*
- Period, probably the oldest of the points; how first used:*
- how used in Hebrew:*
- what used to mark:*
- Rules for the use of:*
- not required when short sentences are rehearsed as examples:*
- whether to be applied to letters written for numbers:*
- with other points set after it:*
- whether proper after Arabic figures used as ordinals.*
- Period of abbreviation, whether always supersedes other points.*

Permanent propositions, to be expressed in the pres. tense.

Permitting, &c., verbs of, see Commanding.

Personal pronoun, defined.

- Personal pronouns, simple, numb, and specificat. of:*
- declension of:*
- often used in a reciprocal sense, ("Wash YOU," &c.).*
- (See also It.)*
- Personal pronouns, compound, numb. and specificat. of. 298:*
- explanat. and declension of:*
- CHURCH. account of:*
- of the first and second persons, placed before nouns to distinguish their persons.*

Personification, defined,

- MURR. definition of, blamed,*
- what constitutes the purest kind of,*
- change of the gend. of inanimate objects by,*
- whether it always changes the gender of anteced. term,*
- agreem. of pronouns with their antecedents in cases of,*
- Rule for capitals in do.,*
- comp.,*
- Personifications, CHURCH, on the determination of gender in,*
- Personified objects, names of, put in the second pers., and why,*
- how pronouns agree with,*

Persons, term defined,

- Persons, named and defined,*
- the distinction of, on what founded,*
- Persons, numbers, &c., character of BROWN'S definitions of,*
- Persons, in gram., nature of; absurd teachings of some*

- grammar-makers concerning,
- distinctions of, in written lang.,
- Person* and number of a verb, what,
- Persons*, second and third, of a verb, distinctive formations of,
- do., in Lat., shown,
- Person*, nouns of the second, in Eng., in how many ways can be employed,
- the third, put with the pron. I, by vulgarism, ("THINKS I to myself,")
- the first, place of,
- Persons*, whether the imperat. mood may have three,
- connected antecedents of different, agreem. of pron. with,
- connected nominatives of different, agreem. of verb with,

Perspicuity, as a quality of style, in what consists,

- is essential in composition; BLAIR quoted,
- the excellence of,
- Precepts aiming at offences against,

Page 2045

Perversions of Eng. grammar, the design, in part, of BROWN'S code of synt, is to make intelligent judges of,

—Perversions, literary, Crit. N. concerning,

Phonetics, phonography, phonotopy, BROWN'S estimate of; DR. JOH. cited,

—account of,

—TRENCH'S views of,

—Phonographic system of stenography, its practical value;

phonotopy, to what may be advantageously applied,

Phrase, defined,

—Phrase made the subject of a verb, how to be taken,

—Phrases, distinct, conjunctively connected, agreem. of verb with,

—distinct, disjunctively connected, do.,

—unconnected, do.,

—BAD phrases, examples of, from authors,

—do., corrected,

—Phrases or clauses, ellips. of, shown,

—Adverbial phrase, (so termed by some,) see Adverb.

Place or position of the different parts of speech, see Article, Noun, Adjective, &c.

Pleonasm, defined,

—Pleonasm, when allowable with respect to a pron.,

—in what instances impressive and elegant; when, the vice of ill writing,

—occurs sundry times in the Bible,

Pluperfect tense, defined,

—Pluperf. tense, what implies when used conditionally; what, in the negative form of supposition,

—how formed in the indic. mood; do. in the potential,

—indic. form of, put by enall. for pluperf. of the pot.,

—PLUPERFECT, signif. of the term; several innovators (as BULL., BUTL., et al.) have been fain to discard it,

Plural number, of nouns, how formed,

—of most nouns in Eng., is simple and regular,

—of nouns ending in a vowel preceded by a vowel,

—of do. in y preceded by a consonant,

—of do. in o preceded by a consonant,

—construc. of, when several persons of the same name are spoken of ("The Stuarts,")

—of prop. names, its formation,

- of nouns in i, o, u, or y, preceded by a consonant,
- when name and title are to be used together, ("The Miss Bells,")
- of nouns in f,
- of nouns not formed in s or es,
- of compounds,
- of certain compound terms, ("Ave-Maries," &c.,)
- wanting to some nouns,
- of nouns of multitude,
- Plural*, nouns made so by nature or art,
- of foreign nouns, 253,
- improperly formed by adding apostrophic s,
- of mere characters, how denoted,

Plurality, the idea of; see Unity, &c.

Page 2046

Poetic feet, treated,

- (See Iambus, Trochee, &c.)
- Poetic foot*, of what consists,
- Poet. feet*, number to be recognized in Eng.,
- principal Eng., named and defined,
- kinds of, which form ORDERS OF VERSE,
- what combinations of, severally form dimeter, trimeter, &c.,
- (See Dimeter, Trimeter, &c.)
- Poetic* collocation of words, in prose, as offending against perspicuity, PREC. respecting,
- Poetic diction*, treated,
- in what abounds,
- Poetical Peculiarities*,

Poetry, as defined by BLAIR,

- character of its style,
- aim and end of,
- exterior distinction of,
- why difficult, by a definition, to be distinguished from prose,
- inept directions of some grammarians respecting the parsing of,
- Poetry*, every line in, should begin with a capital,

Points, or stops, the principal, named, and their forms shown,

- the purpose of,
- length of pauses denoted by,
- often variously used in different editions of the same work,
- origin of, See Punctuation.

Points of the compass, adjectives for; modes of varying them,

Possession, relation of, see Property.

Possessive case, defined,

- Poss. case*, how formed
- disputes of the earlier grammarians respecting,
- CARD. et al. attempt to revive exploded error concerning,
- form of,
- origin of, in Eng.,
- odd notions of some grammarians concerning the regular formation of
- exceptions or irregularities in the formation of
- Poss. case*, PEI. on, criticised
- ASH and PRIESTL. on the plur.
- use of the two forms of, in pers. pronouns
- of the simp. pers. pronouns, grammarians differ with respect to;

- should not be considered mere adjectives
- are pronom. adjectives, according to DR. LOWTH and his followers,
- whose doctrine BROWN canvasses, also, WEBSTER'S, WILSON'S, MURRAY'S
- Poss. case*, its equivalence to of and the objective, not a sameness of case, (in oppos. to Nix.)
- of pronouns, not to be written with apostrophe
- of nouns in appos., application of the possessive sign to
- by what governed
- whether the rule for, has true exceptions
- appos. of one with an other, ("For DAVID my SERVANT'S sake,")
- the construc. examined
- appar. in abstract construc., ("All MINE are THINE,")
- as governed by a part, the construc. examined; COROL.
- why the governm. of, should be limited to nouns only
- whether before a real part., denotes the possession of something
- Possessive*

Page 2047

sign, omission of not a true ellipsis.

- always implies a governing word,
- how taken by compounds
- liable to be added to adjunct of the former noun
- whether it can be rightly added to separate adjectives, ("The GUILTY'S prayer,")
- which* noun of connected possessives takes
- Poss. case, place and order of
- generally equivalent to prep. of and the objective,
- governed by something not expressed, ("St. Paul's,")
- Possessives, connected*, how to be taken,
- Poss. singular, with s omitted, ("For CONSCIENCE' sake")
- Poss. case of nouns sing, in ss, false teaching of KIRKH. et al., respecting the formation of
- MURR. rule for the construc. of, why objectionable,
- compounds embracing, lack uniformity in writing,
- peculiarity of, with respect to correlatives, ("Father's son,")
- Possessive* relation between a portion of time and its correlative action, ("THREE YEARS' hard work" or, "Three years OF HARD WORK,")
- Poss. case, appropriate form of, to be observed,
- plural, with a noun in forced agreem., ("For OUR PARTS,") ib., N. iv:
- needless use of, before a participle, ("In THEIR pronouncing the Greek,")
- Possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, &c.*, how often should be inserted, or repeated

Potential mood, defined

- Potential mood*, why so called; by what signs distinguished,
- may, like the indic., be used in asking questions; why by some included in the subj.
- in what tenses used; nature of the imperf. tense
- formation and inflection of its tenses, shown in the verb LOVE, conjugated,

Power of a letter, the powers of the letters, what meant by, when spoken of,

- The power of a letter is not its sound, as MURR. et al incorrectly teach
- The simple powers of the letters, many irreconcilable doctrines have been advanced thereon; GARDINER'S notions concerning, stated in brief,
- RUSH'S explanations of, his pretentious scheme of the alphab. how estimated by BROWN

- The just powers of the letters, what, and how are to be learned,
- Powers* of the letters, variable; how become so; WALK, cited

Praxis, defined; lit. signif. of the word, as from the Gr.

Precision, as a quality of style, in what consists,

- Precepts aiming at offences against
- conciseness, or brevity, as opposed to

Prefixes, their management in syllabication, R.:

- Explanation of
- import and character of the particles used as, in Eng.; the roots to which prefixed, not always proper Eng. words
- Prefixes*, ENG. or ANGLO-SAX.,
- Prefixes*, poet, usage with respect to,

Page 2048

Preperfect participle, defined

- Preperf. part.*, its form
- its nature and name,

PREPOSITIONS, Etymol. of

- Preposition* defined
- importance of a right use, and a right explan. of
- HARR. explanation of, as cited by LOWTH, stricture on HARR.
- its simplicity among the parts of speech; how should be explained in parsing,
- no sufficient RULE for the synt. of, in most of the Eng. grammars, Prepositions and their objects, as preceding the words on which they depend, ("Of man's first disobedience, &c., Sing" MILC.)
- Prepositions*, what it is, to find the terms of relations of; disput. text cited in illustration
- the special adaptation of; example of misuse by MURR., remarked on
- HARR., on the purpose for which almost all prepositions were orig. formed, and on the nature of their relations; his views controverted by BROWN,
- Prepositions and their governed objects, the true determination of; examples of joint objects, and of joint antecedents, wrong views of MURR. and his followers concerning this matter.
- Prepositions*, two connected, for what different purposes used
- two coming together, ("FROM AMONG the just,")
- Prepositions complex*, what their character, and how may be resolved; are occasionally compounded by the hyphen
- Prepositions*, how might be divided into classes; the inutility in parsing of the division into "separable and inseparable;"

HALL'S absurd idea of a divis., noticed

- whether "two in immediate succession require a noun to be understood between them," (NUTT.)
- words commonly reckoned, (in, on, of, &c.,) used after infinitives or participles, in adverbial construc., ("Houses to eat and drink IN")
- Prepositions*, List of
- grammarians differ considerably in their tables of; do. concerning the characteristics of; what BROWN supposes, in oppos. to the assertion that "Every prep. requires an obj. case after it"
- LENN. and BULL. on "prepositions becoming adverbs," criticised
- MURR. on "prepositions appearing to be adverbs," criticised
- Preposition*, whether it can be justly said to take a sent. for its object
- Prepositions*, words in the list of, sometimes used as other parts

- of speech
- extension of the list of
- examples of the less usual, a, and others beginning with a
- do. of unusual ones beginning with b, c, or d
- unusual*, quotations illustrating further the list of
- Preposition*, RULE of synt. for the word governed by

Page 2049

- Prepositions*, in Eng., govern no other case than the obj.; most, may take the imperf. part. for their obj.
- The brief assertion, that “Prepositions govern the obj. case,” wherein is exceptionable as the sole rule for both terms
- Prepositions*, ellipt. construc. of, with adjectives, (in vain, in secret, &c.)
- sometimes appar. govern adverbs
- Preposition*, appar. governing a perf. part., (“To give it up FOR LOST”)
- Prepositions*, Synt. of
- do., in what consists
- what RELATIONS, show; (see To and For)
- the parsing of; why tolerable writers are liable to err most in their use of
- Preposition*, the true terms of the relat. of, how may be discovered
- when beginning or ending a sent. or clause, what the construc.
- the terms of relation of, what may be; both usually expressed
- position of, with respect to the governed word
- Prepositions*, several, dependent on one anteced. term, (“A declaration FOR virtue and AGAINST vice,” BUTL.)
- two coming together between the same terms of relat.; do. in the same construc.; erron. remark of PRIESTL., MURR., et al., concerning the latter
- Preposition*, the separating of, from its noun, false doctrine of LOWTH, MURR., et al., concerning
- Prepositions*, prop, choice of
- do., with respect to the allowable uses of
- as adapted in meaning to two objects, or to more
- Preposition*, ellips. or omiss. of, where ineleg.
- insertion of, when do.
- Prep. and its object*, position of, in respect to other words
- do., punc. of
- Prep.*, ellips. of, shown
- Prepositions*, derivation of
- poet. usage with respect to Present tense, defined

- Pres. tense*, described
- of the indic., used to express general truths
- deceased authors spoken of in, and why

- for the past, by Grecism; in animated narrative, for do., by enall.
- of the indic. and the subj., when preceded by as soon as, &c., to what time, refers
- of the infin., what time is expressed by; expedients used to express fut. time by
- of the INFINITIVE, the ROOT, or RADICAL VERB
- of the subj., its use, and how considered by some
- Pres. tense*, sometimes improp. with the conjunc. that, ("Others said, THAT it is Elias")

Preter, preterimperfect, &c., disused terms for past, imperfect, &c.

- Preter*, prefix, its meaning

Preterit, defined

- Preterit*, described
- its form and variations
- present tendency to a reg. orthog. of, to be encouraged
- groundless rule of some, for forming second pers. of, when the pres. and the pret. are alike
- not to be used in forming the comp. tenses of a verb

Page 2050

Preventing, verbs of, with part., in stead of infin.
—what construc. is proper for

Primitive word, defined
—Primitive words regarded as such in Eng., may generally be traced to ulterior sources

Principal parts, of a verb, (see Chief Terms)
—of a sent., how many, and what

Priscian, ancient grammarian, delivers the names of most of the Lat. letters

Progressive form of a verb, see Compound &c.

Pronominal adjectives, see Adjectives, Pronominal

PRONOUNS, Etymol. of

- Pronoun*, definition of
- Pronouns* in Eng., number of, and their variations
- nature of the representation by; are put substantively, relatively, or adjectively; difference in these three modes of substitution
- Classes of, named, and defined; (see Personal Pronoun, Relative Pron., and Interrogative Pron.)
- Pronouns, compound*, constructional peculiarities of
- Pronouns*, faultiness and discordance of most Eng. grammars, with respect to the classification and treatment of; specification of different modes of distribution by diff. authors
- Modifications of, named; these properties how distinguished in the personal pronouns; do. how ascertained in the relat. and interrog. pronouns
- Declension of; simp. personals declined; comp. personals do.; comp. relatives do.
- appar. used for adverbs
- Pronouns*, Synt. of
- Pronoun*, agreem. of, with its anteced.
- do., with anteced. indefinite
- plur., put by enall. for the sing., agreem. of
- sometimes disagreeing with the anteced. in one sense, because taking it in an other
- what the main point with respect to; what application of the rule of agreem., in parsing
- Pronouns*, agreem. of, with their antecedents, as affected by the figures of rhetoric
- place of

- Pronoun*, as representing a phrase or sentence
- under what circumstances can agree with either of two antecedents
- the parsing of, commonly requiring the application of two rules
- with suppressed anteced.
- needless introduction of, ("PALLAS, HER glass," BACON)
- with change of numb. in the second pers., or promisc. use of ye and you
- must present the same idea as the anteced., and never confound the name with the thing signified
- employment of the same, with respect to connected relative clauses
- in what instances the noun must be repeated, or inserted in stead of
- should never be used to represent an adj., ("Be ATTENTIVE; without WHICH," &c.)

Page 2051

- change of anteced. to accord with
- agreem. with collective nouns
- do. with joint antecedents
- do. with connected antecedents in apposition
- do. with connected antecedents emphat. distinguished
- do. with connected antecedents preceded by each, every, or no
- do. with connected antecedents of different persons
- agreeing with implied nominatives
- agreem. with disjunct antecedents
- what agreem. with disjunct. antecedents of different persons, numbers, and genders
- do. with antecedents taken affirmatively and negatively
- do. with two antecedents connected by as well as, &c.
- ellips. of, shown
- punct. of, without pause
- Pronouns*, derivation of, from Sax.
- poet. peculiarities of

Pronunciation, importance of an early habit of distinct

- how best taught to children
- Pronunc.*, as distinguished from elocution, what; how differs from articulation
- Pronunc.* of the Eng. lang., what knowledge requires; its difficulties; whether we have any system of, worthy to be accounted a STANDARD

Proof-texts, not to be perverted in the quotation, Crit. N.

- not quoted, but invented, by some, in their false illustrations of gram.

Proper names begin with capitals

- Comm.* and proper name associated, how written
- Prop. names*, derivatives from, do.
- (Names of Deity, see Deity.)
- Prop. names*, application of rule concerning; distinc. between do. and common appellatives
- of places, comparative difficulty of writing them
- modern compound, sparing use of hyphen in
- Prop. names*, what their relative importance in lang.
- structure and signif. of; how should be written

- of plur. form, preceded by def. art.
- Prop. name*, with def. art., acquires the import of a comm.
- Proper*, from a comm. noun personified
- Prop. names* of individuals, strictly used as such, have no plur.;
prop. name, how made plur., and how then considered
- when they form a plur., how form it
- of persons, generally designate their sex
- Prop. name*, in appos. with an appellative
- represented by which, ("Herod
- WHICH is," &c.)
- Prop. name* and title, when taken together in a plur. sense, in what form to be written

Property, the relation of, how may be otherwise expressed than by the poss. case

Prophecy, the past tenses substituted for the fut., in the lang. of Propositions, permanent, in what tense should be expressed

Propriety, as a quality of style, in what consists

- its oppos., impropriety, what embraces
- Precepts aiming at offences against

Page 2052

Prose and verse, in the composition of lang., how differ

PROSODY

- Prosody*, of what subjects treats
- etymol. and signif. of the word
- Prosody*, meagrely and immethodically treated in the works of many grammarians
- undetermined usage as to what things belong to; how treated by some of the old prosodists; account of SMETIUS'S treatise of; do. GENUENSIS'S

Prosthesis, explained

Proverbs, their elliptical character

Provincial expressions, use of, as opposed to purity

PUNCTUATION, arranged under the head of Prosody

- Punct.*, what
- principal marks of, named and shown; what they severally denote
- RULES of: for Comma; for Semicolon; for Colon; for Period; for Dash; for Eroteme; for Ecphoneme; for Curves
- description of the other marks of
- (See Comma, Semicolon, &c.)
- Punct.*, the present system of, in Eng., common to many languages
- why often found diverse, in diff. editions and diff. versions of the same work
- duty of writers in respect to, and of publishers in reproducing ancient books
- some account of the orig. and prog. of
- “improvement” in, which is no improvement
- confused and discordant explanations, by some, of certain of the marks of Purity, as a quality of style, in what consists

- Precepts aiming at offences against

Pyrrhic, defined

Q.

Q, its name and plur. numb.

- has no sound peculiar to itself; its power
- is always followed by u

Quakers, or Friends, their style of address, see Friends

Qualities of style, treated

- See Style Quantity, or time in pronunciation, explained
- as defined by the lexicographers
- its effect in the prolation of sounds
- WALKER'S views of, unsatisfac. to BROWN
- as regulated by emphasis, MURR.
- Quant.* of a syll., how commonly explained
- by what marks may be indicated
- Quantities poetic*, how denominated, and how proportioned
- What quantity coincides with accent or emphasis
- Quantity*, on what depends
- where variable, and where fixed, in Eng.
- Crit. observations on accent and quantity
- Quantity*, its distinction from accent
- Accent and quantity, differing views of authors relative to
- Quantity*, impropriety of affirming it to be the same as accent
- DR. JOH. identification of accent with; such, also, that of others; (not so HARRIS;) NOEHD. rightly defines; so FISK, (in Eschenb.

Page 2053

Man.

Class. Lit.,) et al.

- our grammarians seem not to have understood the distinc. of long and short, e. g., FISHER; so SHERID., WALK., MURR., et al.
- CHAND. absurd and confused scheme of, noticed
- suggestion of WEBST. on, approved

Questions, can be asked only in the indic. or the pot. mood

- direct, to be marked by the eroteme
- united, how to be marked
- indirect, do.
- a series of, how may be united and marked
- exclamatory, how to be marked
- Question, mentioned* in due form, how marked
- declaratively put, how uttered and marked
- in Spanish, doubly marked, ("?Quien llama?";) in Greek, how

Quite, with art. and adj., construc. how differs according to position of art.

Quotation, direct, first word of, written with capital

- Quotations* of proof-texts, &c., should be literally given
- dependent, separated from say, &c., by comma
- indep., preceded by colon
- Quotat. within a quotat.*, how usually marked

Quoth and quod, signif. and use of, in ludicrous lang. or in the old writers

R.

R, name and plur. numb.

- of the class liquids
- sound of; do., how can be varied in utterance
- what faults to be avoided in do.
- DR. JOH. account of; WALK. do.

Radicals, separable and inseparable, what are so called in Eng. derivation

Rath, adv., used only in the compar. deg.

- Rather*, with the exclusive term of comparis. introduced by than
- derivation of

Reading, to read, in gram., what the signif. of —READ, verb, CONJUGATED affirmatively in Comp. Form

Reciprocal terms, reciprocals, what pronom. adjectives may be so termed —Reciprocals, EACH OTHER, ONE AN OTHER, their nature and import —misapplicat. of, frequent in books; WEBST. errs in the signif. and applicat. of other. See also Other

Reciprocal or reflected verbs, constructions in imitation of the French

Recurrence of a word in different senses, a fault opposed to propriety

Redundant verb, defined
—Redund. verbs, why made a separate class
—treated
—List of

Reference, marks of, ASTERISK, OBELISK, &c., shown; in what order are introduced
—what other signs of, may be used. Reference, doubtful, Crit. N.
concerning

Reformers of the Eng. alphabet and orthog., some account of Rejoice, resolve, incline, &c., import of, in the pass. form

Page 2054

Relations of things, their infinitude and diversity; the nature of RELATION

- Relation of words*, what
- is diff. from agreem., but may coincide with it
- Relation* according to the sense, an important principle in Eng. synt.; what rules of relation commonly found in the grammars
- Simple relation, what parts of speech have no other syntact. property than; what simp. relations there are in Eng.
- Relation*, with respect to a prep., anteced. term, what may be; subseq., do.
- Relation*, do., terms of, to be named in parsing a prep.; how the terms may be ascertained by a learner
- terms* of, to a prep., may be transposed; are very various; both usually expressed

Relative pronouns, defined

- Relative pronouns*, and their compounds, named; declined
- chief constructional peculiarities of
- two faulty special rules given by the grammarians, for construc. of, noticed
- construc. of, with respect to CASE
- ellips. of, in famil. lang., ("The man I trust;") do., poet.
- Relative* and prep. governing it, when should not be omitted
- Relative pron.*, place of
- clauses, connected, employment of, with same pron. in each
- Rel. pronouns*, exclude conjunctions
- derivat. of, from Sax.
- poet, peculiarities with respect to. See also Who, Which, &c.

Repetition, of a noun or pronoun, what construc. it produces

- of words, emphatic, punct.
- of words, through paucity of lang.; against propriety
- of do., as demanded by precision
- Repetitions*, see Pleonasm

Restrictive and resumptive senses of the rel. pronouns, distinc. between, expl.

- Restrictive, relation*, most approp. expressed by the pron. THAT
- admits not a comma before the relative
- adj., admits not a comma before it
- part., do.

Rhetoric, figure of, defined

- Figures of rhetoric*, see Figures

Rhetorical pauses, see Pauses

Rhode Island, the name how acquired; peculiarity of its application

Rhyme, defined

—Rhyming syllables, their nature and quality

Rhythm, of verse, defined

—Fancifully explained by E. A. POE, (who without intelligence derives the term from [Greek: hurithmos])

—sense and signif. of the word

Roman letters, some account of

Rules, of RELATION, what, commonly found in grammars

—of SYNT., those common in grammars ill adapted to their purpose; examples of such

—of do., exposition of the faulty charac. of those in Eng. grammars

—Rules of grammar, advantage of, in the written language

Page 2055

Rush, Dr. J., his new doctrine of the vowels and consonants, in oppos. to the old, how estimated by BROWN

- his doctrine of a duplicity of the vocal elements, perstringed
- his strange division of the vowels “into two parts,” and conversion of most of them into diphthongs; his enumeration and specification of the alphabetic elements

S.

S, its name and plur. numb.

- final, in monosyllables, spell.
- of the poss. case, occas. dropping of; the elis. how to be regarded, and when to be allowed
- its sounds
- in what words silent
- Ss, sound of

S or es, verbal termin., DR. LOWTH'S account of Sans, from Fr., signif., and where read

Sabaoth, see Deity

Same cases, construc. of

- do., on what founded
- what position of the words, admitted by the construc.
- Same case*, after what verbs, except those which are pass., taken
- Same cases*, notice of the faulty rules given by LOWTH, MURR., et al., for the construc. of Sameness of signif., what should be that of the nom. following a verb or part.

- Sameness* of words, see Identity

Sapphic, verse, described

- stanza*, composition of; examp. from HOR.
- Sapphic verse*, difficulty of; Eng. Sapphics few; scansion of; “The Widow,” of SOUTHEY, scanned
- Eng. Sapphic*, DR. WATTS'S ode, (in part.) “The Day of Judgement,” “attempted in”
- HUMPH. on, cited
- Sapphics*, burlesque, examples of

Save, saving, as denoting exception, class and construc. of

- Save*, derivation of Saxon, alphabet, some account of —lang., its form about the year 450; do. subsequently

Scanning, or scansion, explained
—Why, in scanning, the principal feet are to be preferred to the secondary
—The poetry of the earliest Eng. poets, not easy of scansion

Script letters, the alphabet exhibited in —the forms of, their adaptation to the pen

Scripture names, many discrepancies in, found in different editions of the Bible.
Scriptures, see Bible

Section, mark, uses of

SEE, verb, irreg., act., CONJUGATED affirmatively —takes infin. without prep. TO —its construc. with infin. without to

Seeing and provided, as connectives, their class

Seldom, adv., its comparison; use of, as an adj.

Self, in the format, of the comp. pers. pronouns
—CHURCH. explan. of
—signif. and use of
—as an Eng. prefix
—after a noun poss., in poet. diction

Page 2056

Self-contradiction, Crit. N. respecting

Self-naming letters

Semicolon, point

- for what purpose used
- from what takes its name
- when* adopted in England
- is useful and necessary, though discarded by some late grammarians
- Rules for the use of

Semivowel, defined

- Semivowels* named; nature of w and y; sound of certain, as aspirates

Sense and construc. to be considered, in joining together or writing separately words otherw. liable to be misunderstood

- Sense* or meaning, necessary to be observed in parsing

Senseless jumbling, Crit. N. concerning

Sentence, defined

- Sentence*, its parts, principal and subordinate
- Sentences*, the two kinds of, named and defined
- whether a tripartite distribut. of is expedient
- Simple sent.*, false notions amongst grammarians of what constitutes one; the parsing of words not affected thereby
- Sentences*, simp. and comp., DR. WILS. explanation of
- component parts of, what these are
- whether all, can be divided into clauses
- in what FIVE WAYS, can be analyzed
- Sentences*, simp., punct.

of,

- distinct, do.,
- allied, do.,
- short, rehearsed in close succession, how pointed.

Series, of terms, proper use of the articles in,

- of words, how to be commaed.

Set and sit, signif. and employment of.

Sex, to what persons ascribed; why a young child may be spoken of without distinc. of,

- whether animals may be represented as of no,
- inanimate objects fig. represented as having.
- Sexes, distinction of, by words, in diff. ways,
- denoted by terminat. of words,
- designated by proper names.

Shall, verb, how varied,

- original signif. of,
- explet. use of.
- Shall* and will, discriminative application of, in the fut. indic.

Sheridan, T., actor and orthoepist, his literary reputation; the worth of his writings.

Side, noun, peculiarities of usage in regard to.

Silent, or mute, when a letter is said to be.

Silliness, literary, Crit. N. concerning.

Simile, explained.

Since, improp. use of, for ago,

- derivation of, from Anglo-Sax.

Sit and set, use and signif. of.

So, as expressing the sense of a preced. word or phrase,

- derivation of, from Sax.
- So*
- as*, as
- so*, correspondents.

Soever or soe'er, whether a word or only a part of an other word; how explained by WEBST.

Page 2057

Solemn style, as distinguished from the familiar,

- should not be displaced from the paradigms in a grammar,
- is not adapted to familiar discourse,
- pres. and pret. terminations of, what, and how uttered,
- examp. of, second pers. sing., negat., throughout the verb LOVE, conjugated.

Some, classed,

- vulg. used for somewhat, or in some degree, ("SOME longer," SANB.). Somehow or other, somewhere or other, what the construc. Somewhere, nowhere, anywhere, &c., their class, and how should be written.

Sort, see Kind.

Sound, of a letter, commonly called its power,

- elementary*, of the voice, defined.
- Sounds*, simp. or primary, numb. in Eng.,
- elementary, what meant by; are few in numb.; their combinations may be innumerable.
- Vowel* sounds, or vocal elements, how produced, and where heard; what those in Eng., and how may be modified in the format. of syllables; do., how may be written, and how uttered.
- Consonant sounds*, simp., in Eng., how many, and what; by what letters marked; in what words heard.
- Sounds*, long and short, SIGNS used to denote them.
- Sounds*, a knowledge of, how acquired,
- importance of being early taught to pronounce those of one's native lang.
- Passage exemplifying all the letters, and all the SOUNDS, in Eng.
- Sounds of the Letters*, treated.

Speak, to speak, what is meant by.

Speaker, why often speaks of himself in the third pers.,

- represents himself and others by we,
- in Eng., should mention himself last.
- The elegant speaker, by what distinguished.

Species and figure of words, what so called,

- unsettled usage of the lang. with regard to what relates to the latter. Species and genus of things, how admits limitation by the article.

SPELLING, defined.

- Spelling*, how to be acquired,
- cause of the difficulty of its acquisition,
- Rules for,
- usage*, as a law of,
- uniformity and consistency in, how only can be attained.
- The right spelling of a word, what, PHILOLOG. Mus.
- Oral spelling*, how should be conducted.
- Charac. of BROWN'S rules for spelling.

Spondee, defined.

St, unsyllab. suffix, whether, wherever found, is a modern contrac. of the syllable est.

Standards of English orthog., the books proposed as such, abound in errors and inconsistencies.

- Whether we have a system of Eng. ORTHOEPIY worthy to be accounted a STANDARD.

Page 2058

Stanza, defined.

- Stanzas*, uniformity of, in the same poem,
- varieties of,
- Elegiac stanza*, described.
- Stanzas, lyric*, examples of,
- "A GOOD NAME," ("two beautiful little stanzas," BROWN).

Star, or asterisk, use of.

- Three stars*, or asterism,

Stenotone, or breve, for what used.

Stops, in printing or writing, see Points.

Strength, as a quality of style, in what consists,

- essentials of,
- Precepts aiming at offences against.

Strew, whether, or not, an other mode of spelling strow; whether to be distinguished in utterance from do.; whether reg. or irreg.

STYLE, qualities of, treated.

- Style*, as connected with synt., what,
- differs from mere words and mere grammar; not regulated entirely by rules of construc.,
- what relation has to the author himself, and what shows,
- general characters of, by what epithets designated.
- What must be remembered by the learner, in forming his style; a good style how acquired.
- Style, solemn, familiar, &c.*, as used in gram., what meant by.
- (See Solemn Style.)

Subaudition, meaning of the term. Subdisjunctive particle, of the Latins, expressed in Eng. by or of alternat.

Subject of a finite verb, what, and how may be known,

- must be the NOM. CASE,
- what besides a noun or pronoun may be.
- Subject phrases*, joint, what agreements require.
- Subject* and predicate, in analysis. See also Nominative Case.

Subjunctive mood, defined.

- Subj. mood*, why so called; what denotes,
- differing views of grammarians in regard to the numb. and form of its tenses.

- The true subj. mood rejected by some late grammarians; strictures on WELLS.
- WELD'S erroneous teaching respecting the subj., noticed,
- CHAND. do., do.
- Chief characteristical diff. between the indic. and the subj. mood.
- Subj. mood* described,
- its two tenses do., and their forms shown, in the verb LOVE, conjugated,
- whether ever put after a rel. pronoun,
- proper limits of,
- how properly employed.
- False subj.*
- Subj. mood*, not necessarily governed by if, lest, &c.

Such, corresponding to that, with infin. foll.,

- with rel. as following, in stead of who or which.

Sui generis, what thing is thus designated.

Page 2059

Superlative degree, defined,

- BROWN'S definit. of, and of the other degrees, new; the faulty charac. of those of MURR., shown,
- the true nature of; how may be used; to what is applicable; the explanations of, by the copyists of MURR., criticised,
- whether not applicable to two objects,
- when employed*, what construc. of the latter term should follow.
- Double superlatives*, to be avoided.
- Superl. termination*, contractions of.

Supplied, in parsing, what must be. See also Ellipsis.

Suppression, mark of, see Ellipsis.

Syllabic writing, far inferior to the alphabetic, BLAIR.

Syllabication, Rules of,

- the doctrine of, why attended with difficulty,
- object of; WALK. on; strictures on MULK. rules of,
- which of the four purposes of, is preferable in spelling-books and dictionaries,
- DR. LOWTH on,
- nature of BROWN'S six Rules of; advantage of a system of, founded on the pronunciat.,
- LATH. and FOWL. fictitious dilemmas in.
- Syllabication*, erroneous, samples of, from MURR., WEBST., et al.

SYLLABLES, treated.

- Syllable* defined.
- Syllable*, cannot be formed without a vowel,
- cannot be broken.
- Syllables*, numb. of, in a word,
- words denominated from their numb. of,
- the ear chiefly directs in the division of words into.
- (See Syllabication.)
- Syllable*, its quantity in poetry,
- do., on what depends.

Syllepsis, explained,

- literal signif. of the term; extended applicat. of do. by the grammarians and rhetoricians; BROWN, by his definition, gives it a more restricted applicat.; disapproves of WEBST. explanat. of the term,

—what definition or what applicat. of the term is the most approp., has become doubtful.

Synaeresis, explained.

Synchysis, what was so termed by some of the ancients; is different from hyperbaton; its import in gram.; its literal signif.

Syncope, explained.

Synecdoche, (comprehension,) explained.

—Synecd., agreeem. of pron. with anteced., in cases of.

Synonymous, words so accounted, PREC. concerning the use of.

Syntactical parsing, see Parsing.

SYNTAX.

—Synt., of what treats,

—the relation of words, the most important principle of; defects of the grammars in treating of do.,

—false exhibitions of grammarians with respect to the scope and parts
of,

—character of the rules of, found in most grammars,

—divided by some

Page 2060

grammarians into concord and governm., and yet treated by them without regard to such division,
—common fault of grammarians, noticed, of joining together diff. parts of speech in the same rule of,
—do., of making the rules of, double or triple in their form,
—whether the principles of etymol. affect those of.
—All synt., on what founded.
—Why BROWN deemed it needful to add to his code of synt. a GENERAL RULE and CRITICAL NOTES. Figures of syntax.

T.

T, name and plur. numb. of,
—substitution of, for ed, how far allowable,
—sounds of,
—is seldom silent; in what words not sounded. Th, ([Greek: Th], [Greek: alt-th], or [Greek: alt2-th], Gr.) what represents; how was represented in Anglo-Sax., and to what sounds applied; the two sounds of. To a Tee, the colloq. phrase, explained.

Tautology of expression or of sentiment, a fault opposed to precision.

Teacher, what should be his aim with respect to gram.

Technical terms, unnec. use of, as opposed to propriety. Technically, words and signs taken, how to be construed.

Tenses, term defined.

- Tenses*, the difierent, named and defined,
- whether the names of, are approp., or whether they should be changed,
- whether all express time with equal precision,
- who reckon only three, and who two; who still differently and variously name their tenses,
- Tenses*, past and present, occurring together. See Present Tense, Imperf. Tense, &c.

Terminating a sentence with a prep. or other small particle

Terminations, of words, separated in syllabicat.

- of verbs, numb. of different, in each tense
- of the Eng. verb; DR. A. MURR. account of

- tendency of the lang. to lay aside the least agreeable
- usage of famil. discourse in respect to those of second pers. sing.
- verbal or participial, how are found written in old books
- the only reg. ones added to Eng. verbs; utterance of ed and edst
- ed*, participial, and n, verbal, WALK. on the contrac. of
- Termination t*, for ed, forced and irreg.

Terms of relation, see Relation. Tetrameter line, iambic, examples of

- a favorite with many Eng. writers; BUTL. Hudib., GAY'S Fab., and most of SCOTT'S poems, writt. in couplets of this meas.
- admits the doub. rhyme adapted to familiar and burlesque style
- trochaic*, examples of
- character of do.
- EVERETT'S fanciful notions about do.
- anapestic*, examples of
- L. HUNT'S "Feast of the Poets," an extended examp. of do.
- dactylic*, examples of

Page 2061

Than, as, with ellipsis in latter term of comparison

- character and import of
- declinable words connected by, put in same case
- Than* WHOM, as Gr. genitive governed by comparat., MILT.
- what grammarians have inferred from the phrase
- MURR. expedient to dispose of do.
- CHURCH. makes the rel. in do. “the obj. case absol.”
- BROWN determines with respect to the construc.
- Than*, as demanded after else, other, &c., and Eng. comparatives
- derivation of, from Goth. or Anglo-Sax.

That, its class determined

- its various uses
- as REL. PRONOUN, to what applied
- as used in anomalous construc.,
- its peculiarity of construc. as a relative
- its especial use as the restrictive relative
- the frequent employment of, by Addison, wrongly criticised by BLAIR
- as a relative, in what cases more appropriate than who or which
- That*, ellipt., repeating the import of the preceding words, (“And THAT,”
- [Greek: kai tauta],)
- That*, in the phrases in that, &c., how to be reckoned
- That*, as introducing a dependent clause, how to be ranked
- as introducing a sent. made the subj. or obj. of a finite verb
- its power at the head of a sent. or clause
- its derivation

The, before the species, what may denote

- how commonly limits the sense
- applied to nouns of either numb.
- before what adjectives, required
- distinctive use of (“The Psalmist”)
- as relating to comparatives and superlatives
- used for poss. pron.
- repetition of, how avoided
- derivation of, from Sax.
- pronunc. of e in. See also Definite Article.

Them, in vulg. use as an adj., for those

Thence, &c., with from prefixed, whether allowable

There, introductory and idiomatic, notions of grammarians concerning; its posit. and use; is a regular adv. of place, and not “without signification,”

- derivation of, from Anglo-Sax.
- poet. omission of

They, put indefinitely for men or people

This and that, as explained by CHURCH.

- placed before conjoint singulars, (“THIS POWER AND WILL do,” &c.,)
- in contrasted terms

Three stars, or asterism, use of

Time, the order and fitness of, to be observed in constructions expressing it

- nouns of, with adv. WHEN, as a special relative, following Time, measure, or weight, part made possessive of the whole, (“An HOUR’S time”)
- noun of, not poss., immediately before an other, (“A POUND

Page 2062

WEIGHT,") Time, place, &c., the obj. case in expressions of, taken after the fashion of an adv. Time, measure, distance, or value, nouns of, their peculiarity of construc.; the parsing of Time, obj. noun of, qualifying a subsequent adj., ("A child OF ten years OLD,") Four times, five times, &c., how to be reckoned. TIMES, before an other noun, by way of MULTIPLICATION, the nature and construc. of, discussed; decision. Times, in what construc. may be called the objective of repetition, or of time repeated. Time in pronunciation, or quantity

Titles, of books, are printed in capitals

- of office, &c., begin with do.
- merely mentioned as such, are without art.
- Name and TITLE*, (see Proper Names.) Side-titles, use of dash in application to

Tmesis, explained

To, as governing infin. mood

- do., variously explained by grammarians
- is a sign of inf., but not a part of it
- what BROWN claims for his RULE respecting the infin. as gov. by the prep. TO, &c.; he shows that the doctrine originated not with himself
- TO and the verb*, what FISHER (anno 1800) taught respecting; what, LOWTH, and what, absurdly, MURR., his copyist
- To*, as governing infin., traced from the Sax. to the Eng. of WICKL.,
- To*, before infin., evasive teachings of the later grammarians concerning its class and construc.
- do., how considered by most Eng. grammarians
- do., how proved to be a prep.
- do., preceded by for, anc.
- after what verbs, omitted,
- whether to be repeated before infinitives in the same construe.
- sometimes required, and sometimes excluded, after than or as
- whether it may be separated from its verb by an adv.; is placed more elegantly AFTER an adv., ("PROPERLY TO respect,")
- in what cases has no prop, antec. term of relat.
- To* suppressed and be inserted after MAKE, whether correctly

—To, prep, or adv., from Anglo-Sax.

—To, as prefix to noun, (to-day, to-night, to-morrow,).

Tones of the voice, what; why deserving of j particular attention

—what denominated by SHERID.; what should be their character

—BLAIR'S remark on; HIL. do.

—Tones of the passions, WALK, observation on.

Topics, different, to be treated in separate paragraphs, PREC. of Unity.

Transposition, of the terms of relat., when a preposition begins or ends a sentence or clause —rhetorical, of words, or hyperbaton.

Page 2063

Tribrach, defined.

Trimeter line, iambic, the measure seldom used alone; examples of,

- and do., with diversifications
- trochaic*, examples of
- anapestic*, examples of
- alternated with the tetram., examp., “The Rose,” of COWP.; the same scanned
- dactylic*, examples of. Triphthong, defined
- proper*, do., the only, in Eng.
- improp.*, do.; and the improp. triphthongs named.

Trochaic verse, treated

- Troch. verse*, the stress in
- nature of the single-rhymed; error of MURR. et al. concerning the last syll. in
- how may be changed to coincide with other measures; how is affected by retrenchment
- confounded with iambic by several gramm. and prosodists
- Strictures on CHURCH., who doubts the existence of the troch. ord. of verse
- Troch. verse* shown in its eight measures
- Trochaics*, Eng., the TETRAMETER the most common meas. of
- DR. CAMPB. on
- “Trochaic of One foot,” account of.

Trochee, or choree, defined.

Tropes, what figures of rhetoric are so called; signif. of the term.

Trow, its signif., and where occurs; in what person and tenses read.

Truisms and senseless remarks, how to be dealt with in gram.

Tutoyant, to what extent prevalent among the French. See Youyouing, &c.

Type or character, two forms of the letters in every kind of.

U.

U, lett., which (as A, E, I, or O) names itself

- its plur. numb.
- sounds properly its own
- as self-naming, to what equivalent; requires art. a, and not an,

- before it
- pronounced with borrowed sound
- long or diphthongal sound, as yu; sound of slender o or oo, after r or rh.

Unamendable imperfections sometimes found in ancient writings, remarks in relation to.

Unauthorized words, use of, as opposed to purity, PREC. concerning.

Unbecoming, adj., from participle compounded, error of using transitively words of this form; such error how corrected.

Uncertain, the part of speech left, see Equivocal, &c.

Unco-passive voice, or form, of the verb, ("Is being built,") the use of. conflicts with the older and better usage of the lang.

- the subject of, discussed by BROWN
- the true principle with respect to, stated.

Underlining words, in preparing manuscripts, to denote Italics &c.

Understood, words said, in technical phrase, to be, what such, (Lat., subaudita)

Page 2064

Ungrammatical language by which grammar itself is professedly taught, sample from MURR.; from PINNEO; et al. e diversis, Gram. of E. Gram., passim.

Unity, as a quality of style, in what consists

- required by every sentence
- Precepts aiming at offences against. Unity, THE IDEA OF, how generally determined, in respect to a collect. noun, whether it conveys such idea or not.

Usage, as a law of orthography for particular words

- Usage*, as it has been, and as it is, the advantage of an exhibition of, by the grammarian.

Useless words, employment of, as opposed to precision.

UTTERANCE, treated

- Utterance*, what, and what includes.

V.

V, name and plur. of:

- written for a number:
- sound of,

Value, &c., nouns of, see Time.

Verbal or participial noun, (see Participial, &c.)

- Verbal forms used substantively, by poet pecul.

VERBS, Etymol. of;

- Verb, defined:
- why so called:
- a perf. definition of, why difficult to form;
- CHIEF TERMS, or PRINCIP. PARTS, of an Eng. verb, named and defined.
- Verbs. Classes of, with respect to their FORM, named and defined:
- do., with respect to their signif., do.
- (See Active-Transitive Verb, &c.) Verbs, whole numb, of, in Eng.; the regular, far the most numerous; account of the others
- how divided with respect to signif. in most grammars and dictionaries; BROWN'S division
- divided by certain grammarians into act., pass., and neut.
- MURR, on the distribution of
- NIX. on do.
- Verbs*, in Lat., grammarians of old differed respecting the

- distribut. of
- different methods of distribut. of, by several other authors, noticed
- Verbs*, most act., may be used either as trans. or as intrans.
- some may be used either in an act. or a neut. sense
- act. form of, used in a pass. sense; so also PART. in ing, ("The books continue SELLING")
- Verbs*, Modifications of, named
- Moods of, named and defined; (see Infinitive Mood, Indic. Mood, &c.)
- Tenses of, named and defined; (see Present Tense, Imperf. Tense, &c.)
- Persons and numbers of, what
- Conjugations of
- how principally conjugated
- (See Conjugation)
- Verbs*, Irreg., List of
- simp. irreg., numb. of; whence derived
- Redundant, List of
- Defective, do.
- Verbs irreg.* and redund., of what character all former lists of, have been
- Verbs*, of asking and teaching, construc. of

Page 2065

- whether any, in Eng., can govern two cases
- suppressed in exclamat. &c.
- Verbs*, Synt. of
- Verbs* requiring a regimen, should not be used without an object
- Verb*, AGREEM. of, with its subject
- do., inferred
- do., by sylleps., in plur., title of a book
- do., in imperat. mood
- Verb* of the third pers. sing. with a plur. noun of the neut. gend., the use of, a strange custom of the Greeks; such use not existent in Eng.
- Verb*, AGREEM. of, with infin. phrase or sentence as subject
- do., with infin. subject limited, ("FOR MEN TO SEARCH their own glory, IS," &c.)
- do., with a nom. in interrog. sentences
- do., with a rel., according to the true anteced. of the pron.; (examp. of error from DR. BLAIR)
- do., with a nom. limited by adjuncts
- do., with composite or converted subjects
- do., with each, every, one, &c., as leading words
- do., by change of nominative
- Verb*, the form of, to be adapted to the style
- when requires a separate nom. expressed
- Verb*, AGREEM. of, with a nom. noun collective
- do., with joint nominatives
- do., with two connected nominatives in appos.
- do., with two conn. nominatives emphatically distinguished
- do., with two conn. nominatives preceded by each, every, or no
- do., with nearest of connected nominatives, and understood to the rest; whether the usage is proper in Eng.
- do., with connected nominatives of different persons
- do., with connected subjects, one taken affirmat. and the other negat.
- do., with two subjects connected by as well as, but, or save
- do., with connected subjects preceded by each, every, or no
- do., in ellipt. construc. of joint nominatives
- do., with distinct subject phrases connected by and
- do., with disjunct. nominatives
- do., with disagreeing nominatives connected disjunctively
- do., when connected nominatives require different forms of the verb

- do., with distinct phrases disjunct, connected
- Verbs*, connected by and, or, or nor, how must agree
- discordant, how managed with respect to agreem.
- Verb*, mixture of the diff. styles of, ineleg.
- diff. moods of, not to be used under the same circumstances
- when two connected terms require diff. forms of, what insertion is necessary
- Verbs* of commanding, desiring, expecting, &c., to what actions or events refer
- of desisting, omitting, &c., with a part. following, rather than an infin.
- of preventing, what should be made to govern
- Verb*, finite, punc. of
- ellips. of, shown
- derivation of, from nouns, adjectives, and verbs
- poet. peculiarities in the use of

Page 2066

Verbosity, as affecting strength

Verse, in oppos. to prose, what

- Blank verse*, as distinguished from rhyme
- Verse*, general sense of the term; its derivation and literal signif.; the visible form of verse
- Verse*, as defined by JOH., WALK., et al.; do. by WEBST.
- Verse*, Eng., the difficulty of treating the subject of, and from what this arises
- A verse, or line of poetry, of what consists
- Verse*, or poetic measure, the kinds, or orders of, named; (see Iambic Verse, Trochaic Verse, &c.)
- Verse*, the proper reading of

VERSIFICATION, treated

- Versification*, defined
- Versification*, POE'S (E. A.) notions concerning; his censure of BROWN'S former definition of; his rejection of the idea of versif. from the principle of rhythm; his unfortunate derivat. of rhythm from [Greek: hurithmos,] and vain attempts to explain the term: the farrago summarily disposed of by BROWN
- EVERETT'S "System of Eng. Versification," account of, and strictures on

Vision, or imagery, explained

Vocative case of Lat. and Gr. gram., not known in Eng.

Voice, ACTIVE, and PASSIVE, whether necessary terms in Eng. gram.

Vowel, defined

- Vowels* named
- W* and Y, when vowels; comp.
- Vowel sounds*, or vocal elements, the different, how produced
- what are those in Eng.
- how each may be variously expressed by letters; notation of
- Vowels*, two coming together, where may be parted in syllabication.

W.

W, its name and plur. numb.

- simpler term than Double-u perhaps desirable; DR. WEBST. on the lett.

- W, when a vowel
- with vowel foll., sound of
- before h, how pronounced
- in Eng. never used alone as a vowel
- no diphthongs or triphth. in Eng., beginning with.

Wages, noun, plur. by formation; its construe, with a verb.

Walker, J., estimate of his Critical Pronouncing Dictionary
—in his lexicography how far followed DR. JOH.

Was, contrary to usage preferred by some to were, in the imperf. sing, of the subj.

We, plur., as representing the speaker and others; how sometimes used in stead of the sing.; sometimes preferred by monarchs to I.

Webster, Dr. N., describes language as comprehending the voice of brutes —never named the Eng. letters rightly —his orthography as a standard; do. compared with that of DR. JOH.
—the result to himself of his various attempts to reform our orthog.;
the value of his definitions.

Page 2067

Weight, measure, &c., see Time.

Wert, as used in lieu of wast

—its mood not easy to determine; authorities for a various use of.

What, its class and nature

- to what usually applied; its twofold relat. explained
- its numb.; example of solec. in the use of
- as a mere adj., or as a pron. indef.
- its use both as an adj. and as a relative at the same time; do. for who or which, ludic. and vulg.
- declined
- how to be disposed of in etymolog. parsing; how to be parsed syntactically
- how becomes an interj.
- used appar. for an adv.; uttered exclamatorily before an adj., to be taken as an adj., ("WHAT PARTIAL judges are our," &c.,)
- followed by that, by way of pleonasm, ("WHAT I tell you in darkness, THAT," &c.,)
- with but preceding, ("To find a friend, BUT WHAT" &c.,)
- vulg. use of, for that
- derivation of, from Sax., shown.

Whatever or whatsoever, its peculiarities of construe., the same as those of what; its use in simp. relation

- its construc. as a double relative; whether it may be supposed ellipt.
- its declension.

When, where, or while, in what instance not fit to follow the verb is

- When, where, whither*, as partaking of the nature of a pron.; construc. of do., with antecedent nouns of time, &c., how far allowable
- derivation of, from Anglo-Sax.

Whether, as an interrog. pron.; as a disjunc. conjunc.

- conjunc. corresponsive to or
- as do., its derivation from Sax.

Which, relative

- its former use; to what objects now confined
- its use after a personal term taken by meton. for a thing; do., as still applicable to persons
- is of all the genders, (in oppos. to MURR., WEBST., et. al.,)

- is less approp. than who, in all personifications
- its construc. when taken in its discrim. sense,
- how differs from the rel. that
- BLAIR'S incorrect remarks respecting
- Which*, as rel. or interrog., declined
- Which*, sometimes takes whose for its poss.,
- represents a prop. name taken merely as a name, ("Herod
—WHICH is but," &c.,)
- do. nouns of mult. expressing persons, when such are strictly of the neut. gend., ("The COMMITTEES WHICH" &c.,)
- in what cases is less approp. than that
- does not fitly represent an indicative assertion, ("Be ATTENTIVE, without WHICH," &c.,)
- its Sax. derivation shown
- The which*, obsol.,
- Which*, interrog., what demands,
- to what objects applied
- now used for the obsol. whether.

Page 2068

Whichever, whichsoever, signif. and construc. of
—declension of.

Who, relative

- to what usually applied
- has superseded which, formerly applied to persons, ("Our Father WHO art" &c.,)
- to be preferred to which, in all personifications
- how differs from the rel. that
- Who*, as rel. or interrog., declined,
- Whose*, use of, for the defec. poss., of which
- Than whom*, (see Than.)
- Who*, interrog., what demands
- may be the anteced. of the rel. that
- Who*, derivation of, from Sax.

Whoever, and whoso or whosoever, signif. and construc. of —declens. of
—Whoso and whatso, antiq., import and use of,

Whole, improp. use of, for all. ("Almost the WHOLE inhabitants," HUME.).

Why, after nouns of cause, (see When, &c.)
—Why, wherefore, therefore, their class.

Will, verb, how varied
—use of, as a principal verb.

Wis, verb, pret. wist, signif. and use of
—Had I wist,

With, for and, (see Cum:)
—added to adv. of direc., with emphat. imperat. ("Up WITH it").
Withal its class and construc. Without, obsol. use of, for unless or except. Withouten, paragog. and poet. form.
Withinside of Won't, whence formed; its pronunc.

Worcester, Dr. J. E., his Universal and Critical Dictionary WORDS, treated.

- Word*, defined.
- Words* distinguished, and the divisions of, defined.
- (See Compound Word.)
- Words*, Rules for the figure of;
- simp., when compounding is to be avoided

- when to be joined, or to be written separately
- Words*, the nature of, explained
- the consid. of, as comm., and as prop.,
- brevity sought in the comm. use of
- the identity of, in what consists
- unsettled and variable usage with respect to the figure of
- Words* that may constitute diff. parts of speech, their construc. not to be left doubtf.
- the reference of, to other words, do.
- senselessly jumbled, charac. of
- entirely needless, how to be disposed of
- unintelligently misapplied, what indicates,
- Words*, PUNCT. of: in pairs; alternated; put absol.; in appos.; repeated
- Words*, derivation of, treated
- most of those regarded as primitives in Eng., may be traced to ulterior sources
- the study of, its importance
- how the knowledge of, may be promoted with respect to Eng.

Page 2069

- Words*, the use of, as affecting Purity
- do., as affect. Propriety
- do., as affect. Precision
- do., as affect. Perspicuity
- do., as affect. Strength

Worshiper, whether properly written with a single or a double p

Worth, its class and construc.

Worthy, admits not ellips. of prep, of before obj. following

Writing, to write, what meant by

X.

X, its name and plur. num.

- format. of the plur. of nouns in
- why never doubled
- written for a number
- its sounds

Y.

Y, its name and plur. numb.;

- borrowed first by the Romans from the Greeks, by whom called Ypsilon
- in Eng. is either a vowel or a conson.
- classed with the semivowels
- final, changed or unchanged before terminations
- do., when, by former practice, retained in verbs ending in y, before conson. terminations
- sounds of
- in poet. format. of adjectives

Ye, nom. plur., solemn style

- its use as the obj. case
- as a mere explet. in burlesque
- its use in the lang. of tragedy
- used for thee

- in the Eng. Bible not found in the obj. case
- Ye and you, promisc. use of, in the same case and the same style, ineleg.

Yes, yea, in a simp. affirmation, construc. and class of
—derivation of, from Anglo-Sax.

You, use of, for thou

- You*, with was, ("YOU WAS BUILDING,") approved by DR. WEBST. et al., as the better form for the sing. numb.
- You*, and VERB PLUR., in reference to one person, how to be treated in parsing. Your, facet. in conversation, and how uttered ("Dwells, like YOUR miser, sir," &c., SHAK.,) Yourself, its pecul. of construc.

Your Majesty, your Highness, &c., see Address.

Youyouing and theethouing, history of Z.

Z, its name and plur.

- has been called by several names; WALK., on the name
- peculiarity of its ordinary form
- its sounds described

Zeugma, (i.e., JUGATIO, vel CONNEXIO, Sanct.,) the various forms of, were named and noticed, but not censured, by the ancient grammarians

- constructions of adjectives, referred to the figure, ("ONE or a FEW judges,"); do. of verbs, ("But HE NOR I FEEL more," YOUNG,)

THE END OF THE INDEX,

AND OF THE GRAMMAR OF ENGLISH GRAMMARS.

Page 2070

FOOTNOTES:

[1] Ben Jonson's notion of grammar, and of its parts, was as follows: "Grammar is the art of true and well-speaking a language: the writing is but an accident.

The Parts of Grammar are

Etymology \ which is / the true notation of words,
Syntaxe / \ the right ordering of them.

A word is a part of speech or note, whereby a thing is known or called; and consisteth of one or more letters. A letter is an indivisible part of a syllable, whose prosody, or right sounding, is perceived by the power; the orthography, or right writing, by the form. Prosody, and Orthography, are not parts of grammar, but diffused, like blood and spirits, through the whole."—Jonson's Grammar, Book I.

[2] Horne Tooke eagerly seized upon a part of this absurdity, to prove that Dr. Lowth, from whom Murray derived the idea, was utterly unprepared for what he undertook in the character of a grammarian: "Dr. Lowth, when he undertook to write his Introduction, with the best intention in the world, most assuredly sinned against his better judgment. For he begins most judiciously, thus—'Universal grammar explains the principles which are common to all languages. The grammar of any particular language, applies those common principles to that particular language.' And yet, with this clear truth before his eyes, he boldly proceeds to give a particular grammar; without being himself possessed of one single principle of universal grammar."—Diversions of Purley, Vol. 1, p. 224. If Dr. Lowth discredited his better judgement in attempting to write an English grammar, perhaps Murray, and his weaker copyists, have little honoured theirs, in supposing they were adequate to such a work. But I do not admit, that either Lowth or Murray "begins most judiciously," in speaking of Universal and Particular grammar in the manner above cited. The authors who have started with this fundamental blunder, are strangely numerous. It is found in some of the most dissimilar systems that can be named. Even Oliver B. Peirce, who has a much lower opinion of Murray's ability in grammar than Tooke had of Lowth's, adopts this false notion with all implicitness, though he decks it in language more objectionable, and scorns to acknowledge whence he got it. See his Gram., p. 16. De Suey, in his Principles of General Grammar, says, "All rules of Syntax relate to two things, Agreement and Government."—Foxdick's Tr., p. 108. And again: "None of these rules properly belong to General Grammar, as each language follows, in regard to the rules of Agreement and Government, a course peculiar to itself."—Ibid., p. 109." "It is with Construction [i.e., Arrangement] as with Syntax. It follows no general rule common to all languages."—Ibid. According to these positions, which I do not admit to be strictly true, General or Universal Grammar has no principles of Syntax at all, whatever else it may have which Particular Grammar can assume and apply.

Page 2071

[3] This verb “do” is wrong, because “to be contemned” is passive.

[4] “A very good judge has left us his opinion and determination in this matter; that he ’would take for his rule in speaking, not what might happen to be the faulty caprice of the multitude, but the consent and agreement of learned men.”—Creighton’s Dict., p. 21. The “good judge” here spoken of, is Quintilian; whose words on the point are these: “Necessarium est iudicium, constituendumque imprimis, id ipsum quid sit, quod consuetudinem vocemus. * * * In loquendo, non, si quid vitiose multis insederit, pro regula sermonis, amplendum est. * * * Ergo consuetudinem sermonis, vocabo consensum eruditorum sicut vivendi, consensum honorum.”—De Inst. Orat., Lib. i. Cap. 6, p. 57.

[5] “The opinion of plenty is amongst the causes of want; and the great quantity of books maketh a show rather of superfluity than lack; which surcharge, nevertheless, is not to be removed by making no more books, but by making more good books, which, as the serpent of Moses, might devour the serpents of the enchanters.”—Bacon. In point of style, his lordship is here deficient; and he has also mixed and marred the figure which he uses. But the idea is a good one.

[6] Not, “Oldham, in Hampshire,” as the Universal Biographical Dictionary has it; for Oldham is in Lancashire, and the name of Lily’s birthplace has sometimes been spelled “Odiam.”

[7] There are other Latin grammars now in use in England; but what one is most popular, or whether any regard is still paid to the ancient edict or not, I cannot say. Dr. Adam, in his preface, dated 1793, speaking of Lily, says: “His Grammar was appointed, by an act which is still in force, to be taught in the established schools of England.” I have somehow gained the impression, that the act is now totally disregarded.—G. Brown.

[8] For this there is an obvious reason, or apology, in what his biographer states, as “the humble origin of his Grammar;” and it is such a reason as will go to confirm what I allege. This famous compilation was produced at the request of two or three young teachers, who had charge of a small female school in the neighbourhood of the author’s residence: and nothing could have been more unexpected to their friend and instructor, than that he, in consequence of this service, should become known the world over, as Murray the Grammarian. “In preparing the work, and consenting to the publication, he had no expectation that it would be read, except by the school for which it was designed, and two or three other schools conducted by persons who were also his friends.”—Life of L. Murray, p. 250.

[9] Grammatici namque auctoritas per se nulla est; quom ex sola doctissimorum oraturum, historicorum, poetarum, et aliorum ideonorum scriptorum observatione, constet ortam esse veram grammaticam. Multa dicenda forent, si grammaticistarum

ineptias refellere vellem: sed nulla est gloria praeterire asellos.—DESPAUTERII Praef. Art. Versif., fol. iii, 1517.

Page 2072

[10] The Latin word for participle is participium, which makes participio in the dative or the ablative case; but the Latin word for partake is participo, and not “participio.”—G. BROWN.

[11] This sentence is manifestly bad English: either the singular verb “appears” should be made plural, or the plural noun “investigations” should be made singular.—G. BROWN.

[12] “What! a book have no merit, and yet be called for at the rate of sixty thousand copies a year! What a slander is this upon the public taste! What an insult to the understanding and discrimination of the good people of these United States! According to this reasoning, all the inhabitants of our land must be fools, except one man, and that man is GOOLD BROWN!”—KIRKHAM, in the Knickerbocker, Oct. 1837, p. 361.

Well may the honest critic expect to be called a slanderer of “the public taste,” and an insulter of the nation’s “understanding,” if both the merit of this vaunted book and the wisdom of its purchasers are to be measured and proved by the author’s profits, or the publisher’s account of sales! But, possibly, between the intrinsic merit and the market value of some books there may be a difference. Lord Byron, it is said, received from Murray his bookseller, nearly ten dollars a line for the Fourth Canto of Childe Harold, or about as much for every two lines as Milton obtained for the whole of Paradise Lost. Is this the true ratio of the merit of these authors, or of the wisdom of the different ages in which they lived?

[13] Kirkham’s real opinion of Murray cannot be known from this passage only. How able is that writer who is chargeable with the greatest want of taste and discernment? “In regard to the application of the final pause in reading blank verse, nothing can betray a greater want of rhetorical taste and philosophical acumen, than the directions of Mr. Murray.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 145. Kirkham is indeed no judge either of the merits, or of the demerits, of Murray’s writings; nor is it probable that this criticism originated with himself. But, since it appears in his name, let him have the credit of it, and of representing the compiler whom he calls “that able writer” and “that eminent philologist,” as an untasteful dunce, and a teacher of nonsense: “To say that, unless we ‘make every line sensible to the ear,’ we mar the melody, and suppress the numbers of the poet, is all nonsense.”—Ibid. See Murray’s Grammar, on “Poetical Pauses,” 8vo, p. 260; 12mo, 210.

[14] “Now, in these instances, I should be fair game, were it not for the trifling difference, that I happen to present the doctrines and notions of other writers, and NOT my own, as stated by my learned censor.”—KIRKHAM, in the Knickerbocker, Oct. 1837, p. 360. If the instructions above cited are not his own, there is not, within the lids of either book, a penny’s worth that is. His fruitful copy-rights are void in law: the “learned censor’s” pledge shall guaranty this issue.—G. B. 1838.

Page 2073

[15] I am sorry to observe that the gentleman, Phrenologist, as he professes to be, has so little reverence in his crown. He could not read the foregoing suggestion without scoffing at it. Biblical truth is not powerless, though the scornful may refuse its correction.—G. B. 1838.

[16] Every schoolboy is familiar with the following lines, and rightly understands the words “evil” and “good” to be nouns, and not adjectives.

“The evil that men do, lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones.”—SHAKESPEARE.

Julius Caesar, Act 3: Antony’s Funeral Oration over Caesar’s Body.

Kirkham has vehemently censured me for omitting the brackets in which he encloses the words that he supposes to be understood in this couplet. But he forgets two important circumstances: First, that I was quoting, not the bard, but the grammarist; Second, that a writer uses brackets, to distinguish his own amendments of what he quotes, and not those of an other man. Hence the marks which he has used, would have been improper for me. Their insertion does not make his reading of the passage good English, and, consequently, does not avert the point of my criticism.

The foregoing Review of Kirkham’s Grammar, was published as an extract from my manuscript, by the editors of the Knickerbocker, in their number for June, 1837. Four months afterwards, with friendships changed, they gave, him the “justice” of appearing in their pages, in a long and virulent article against me and my works, representing me, “with emphatic force,” as “a knave, a liar, and a pedant.” The enmity of that effusion I forgave; because I bore him no personal ill-will, and was not selfish enough to quarrel for my own sake. Its imbecility clearly proved, that in this critique there is nothing with which he could justly find fault. Perceiving that no point of this argument could be broken, he changed the ground, and satisfied himself with despising, upbraiding, and vilifying the writer. Of what use this was, others may judge.

This extraordinary grammarian survived the publication of my criticism about ten years, and, it is charitably hoped, died happily; while I have had, for a period somewhat longer, all the benefits which his earnest “castigation” was fit to confer. It is not perceived, that what was written before these events, should now be altered or suppressed by reason of them. With his pretended “defence,” I shall now concern myself no further than simply to deny one remarkable assertion contained in it; which is this—that I, Gould Brown, “at the funeral of Aaron Ely,” in 1830, “praised, and highly praised, this self-same Grammar, and declared it to be ‘A GOOD WORK!’”—KIRKHAM, in the Knickerbocker, Oct., 1837, p. 362. I treated him always courteously, and, on this solemn occasion, walked with him without disputing on grammar; but, if this statement of his has any reasonable foundation, I know not what it is.—G. B. in 1850.

Page 2074

[17] See Notes to Pope's Dunciad, Book II, verse 140.

[18] A modern namesake of the Doctor's, the Rev. David Blair, has the following conception of the utility of these speculations: "To enable children to comprehend the abstract idea that all the words in a language consist but of nine kinds, it will be found useful to explain how savage tribes WHO having no language, would first invent one, beginning with interjections and nouns, and proceeding from one part of speech to another, as their introduction might successively be called for by necessity or luxury."—Blair's Pract. Gram., Pref., p. vii.

[19] "Interjections, I shewed, or passionate exclamations, were the first elements of speech. Men laboured to communicate their feelings to one another, by those expressive cries and gestures which nature taught them."—Dr. Hugh Blair's Lectures, p. 57.

[20] "It is certain that the verb was invented before the noun, in all the languages of which a tolerable account has been procured, either in ancient or modern times."—Dr. Alex. Murray's History of European Languages, Vol. I, p. 326.

[21] The Greek of this passage, together with a translation not very different from the foregoing, is given as a marginal note, in Harris's Hermes, Book III, Chap. 3d.

[22] The Bible does not say positively that there was no diversity of languages before the flood; but, since the life-time of Adam extended fifty-six years into that of Lamech, the father of Noah, and two hundred and forty-three into that of Methuselah, the father of Lamech, with both of whom Noah was contemporary nearly six hundred years, it is scarcely possible that there should have occurred any such diversity, either in Noah's day or before, except from some extraordinary cause. Lord Bacon regarded the multiplication of languages at Babel as a general evil, which had had no parallel but in the curse pronounced after Adam's transgression. When "the language of all the earth" was "confounded," Noah was yet alive, and he is computed to have lived 162 years afterwards; but whether in his day, or at how early a period, "grammar" was thought of, as a remedy for this evil, does not appear. Bacon says, "Concerning speech and words, the consideration of them hath produced the science of grammar. For man still striveth to reintegrate himself in those benedictions, of which, by his fault, he hath been deprived; and as he hath striven against the first general curse by the invention of all other arts, so hath he striven to come forth from the second general curse, which was the confusion of tongues, by the art of grammar; whereof the use in a mother tongue is small, in a foreign tongue more, but most in such foreign tongues as have ceased to be vulgar tongues, and are turned only to learned tongues."—See English Journal of Education, Vol. viii, p. 444.

Page 2075

[23] It should be, "to all living creatures;" for each creature had, probably, but one name.
—G. Brown.

[24] Some recent German authors of note suppose language to have sprung up among men of itself, like spontaneous combustion in oiled cotton; and seem to think, that people of strong feelings and acute minds must necessarily or naturally utter their conceptions by words—and even by words both spoken and written. Frederick Von Schlegel, admitting "the spontaneous origin of language generally," and referring speech to its "original source—a deep feeling, and a clear discriminating intelligence," adds: "The oldest system of writing developed itself at the same time, and in the same manner, as the spoken language; not wearing at first the symbolic form, which it subsequently assumed in compliance with the necessities of a less civilized people, but composed of certain signs, which, in accordance with the simplest elements of language, actually conveyed the sentiments of the race of men then existing."—Millington's Translation of Schlegel's AEsthetic Works, p. 455.

[25] "Modern Europe owes a principal share of its enlightened and moral state to the restoration of learning: the advantages which have accrued to history, religion, the philosophy of the mind, and the progress of society; the benefits which have resulted from the models of Greek and Roman taste—in short, all that a knowledge of the progress and attainments of man in past ages can bestow on the present, has reached it through the medium of philology."—Dr. Murray's History of European Languages, Vol. II, p. 335.

[26] "The idea of God is a development from within, and a matter of faith, not an induction from without, and a matter of proof. When Christianity has developed its correlative principles within us, then we find evidences of its truth everywhere; nature is full of them: but we cannot find them before, simply because we have no eye to find them with."—H. N. HUDSON: Democratic Review, May, 1845.

[27] So far as mind, soul, or spirit, is a subject of natural science, (under whatever name,) it may of course be known naturally. To say to what extent theology may be considered a natural science, or how much knowledge of any kind may have been opened to men otherwise than by words, is not now in point. Dr. Campbell says, "Under the general term [physiology] I also comprehend natural theology and psychology, which, in my opinion, have been most unnaturally disjoined by philosophers. Spirit, which here comprises only the Supreme Being and the human soul, is surely as much included under the notion of natural object as a body is, and is knowable to the philosopher purely in the same way, by observation and experience."—Philosophy of Rhetoric, p. 66. It is quite unnecessary for the teacher of languages to lead his pupils into any speculations on this subject. It is equally foreign to the history of grammar and to the philosophy of rhetoric.

Page 2076

[28] "Except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air. There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification. Therefore, if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh, a barbarian; and he that speaketh, shall be a barbarian unto me."—1 Cor., xiv. 9, 10, 11. "It is impossible that our knowledge of words should outstrip our knowledge of things. It may, and often doth, come short of it. Words may be remembered as sounds, but [they] cannot be understood as signs, whilst we remain unacquainted with the things signified."—Campbell's Philosophy of Rhetoric, p. 160. "Words can excite only ideas already acquired, and if no previous ideas have been formed, they are mere unmeaning sounds."—Spurzheim on Education, p. 200.

[29] Sheridan the elecutionist makes this distinction: "All that passes in the mind of man, may be reduced to two classes, which I call ideas and emotions. By ideas, I mean all thoughts which rise, and pass in succession in the mind. By emotions, all exertions of the mind in arranging, combining, and separating its ideas; as well as the effects produced on all the mind itself by those ideas; from the more violent agitation of the passions, to the calmer feelings produced by the operation of the intellect and the fancy. In short, thought is the object of the one; internal feeling, of the other. That which serves to express the former, I call the language of ideas; and the latter, the language of emotions. Words are the signs of the one: tones, of the other. Without the use of these two sorts of language, it is impossible to communicate through the ear, all that passes in the mind of man."—Sheridan's Art of Reading; Blair's Lectures, p. 333.

[30] "Language is the great instrument, by which all the faculties of the mind are brought forward, moulded, polished, and exerted."—Sheridan's Elocution, p. xiv.

[31] It should be, "These are."—G. B.

[32] It should be, "They fitly represent."—G. B.

[33] This is badly expressed; for, according to his own deduction, each part has but one sign. It should be, "We express the several parts by as many several signs."—G. Brown.

[34] It would be better English to say, "the instruments and the signs."—G. Brown.

[35] "Good speakers do not pronounce above three syllables in a second of time; and generally only two and a half, taking in the necessary pauses."—Steele's Melody of Speech.

[36] The same idea is also conveyed in the following sentence from Dr. Campbell: "Whatever regards the analysis of the operations of the mind, which is quicker than lightning in all her energies, must in a great measure be abstruse and dark."—

Philosophy of Rhetoric, p. 289. Yet this philosopher has given it as his opinion, “that we really think by signs as well as speak by them.”—Ib., p. 284. To reconcile these two positions with each other, we must suppose that thinking by signs, or words, is a process infinitely more rapid than speech.

Page 2077

[37] That generalization or abstraction which gives to similar things a common name, is certainly no laborious exercise of intellect; nor does any mind find difficulty in applying such a name to an individual by means of the article. The general sense and the particular are alike easy to the understanding, and I know not whether it is worth while to inquire which is first in order. Dr. Alexander Murray says, "It must be attentively remembered, that all terms run from a general to a particular sense. The work of abstraction, the ascent from individual feelings to classes of these, was finished before terms were invented. Man was silent till he had formed some ideas to communicate; and association of his perceptions soon led him to think and reason in ordinary matters."—Hist. of European Languages, Vol. I, p. 94. And, in a note upon this passage, he adds: "This is to be understood of primitive or radical terms. By the assertion that man was silent till he had formed ideas to communicate, is not meant, that any of our species were originally destitute of the natural expressions of feeling or thought. All that it implies, is, that man had been subjected, during an uncertain period of time, to the impressions made on his senses by the material world, before he began to express the natural varieties of these by articulated sounds. * * * * * Though the abstraction which formed such classes, might be greatly aided or supported by the signs; yet it were absurd to suppose that the sign was invented, till the sense demanded it."—ib., p. 399.

[38] Dr. Alexander Murray too, In accounting for the frequent abbreviation of words, seems to suggest the possibility of giving them the celerity of thought: "Contraction is a change which results from a propensity to make the signs as rapid as the thoughts which they express. Harsh combinations soon suffer contraction. Very long words preserve only the principal, that is, the accented part. If a nation accents its words on the last syllable, the preceding ones will often be short, and liable to contraction. If it follow a contrary practice, the terminations are apt to decay."—History of European Languages, Vol. I, p. 172.

[39] "We cannot form a distinct idea of any moral or intellectual quality, unless we find some trace of it in ourselves."—Beattie's Moral Science, Part Second, Natural Theology, Chap. II, No. 424.

[40] "Aristotle tells us that the world is a copy or transcript of those ideas which are in the mind of the first Being, and that those ideas which are in the mind of man, are a transcript of the world. To this we may add, that words are the transcripts of those ideas which are in the mind of man, and that writing or printing are [is] the transcript of words."—Addison, Spect., No. 166.

[41] Bolingbroke on Retirement and Study, Letters on History, p. 364.

[42] See this passage in "The Economy of Human Life," p. 105—a work feigned to be a compend of Chinese maxims, but now generally understood to have been written or compiled by Robert Dodsley, an eminent and ingenious bookseller in London.

Page 2078

[43] “Those philosophers whose ideas of being and knowledge are derived from body and sensation, have a short method to explain the nature of Truth.—It is a factitious thing, made by every man for himself; which comes and goes, just as it is remembered and forgot; which in the order of things makes its appearance the last of all, being not only subsequent to sensible objects, but even to our sensations of them! According to this hypothesis, there are many truths, which have been, and are no longer; others, that will be, and have not been yet; and multitudes, that possibly may never exist at all. But there are other reasoners, who must surely have had very different notions; those, I mean, who represent Truth not as the last, but as the first of beings; who call it immutable, eternal, omnipresent; attributes that all indicate something more than human.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 403.

[44] Of the best method of teaching grammar, I shall discourse in an other chapter. That methods radically different must lend to different results, is no more than every intelligent person will suppose. The formation of just methods of instruction, or true systems of science, is work for those minds which are capable of the most accurate and comprehensive views of the things to be taught. He that is capable of “originating and producing” truth, or true “ideas,” if any but the Divine Being is so, has surely no need to be trained into such truth by any factitious scheme of education. In all that he thus originates, he is himself a Novum Organon of knowledge, and capable of teaching others, especially those officious men who would help him with their second-hand authorship, and their paltry catechisms of common-places. I allude here to the fundamental principle of what in some books is called “The Productive System of Instruction,” and to those schemes of grammar which are professedly founded on it. We are told that, “The leading principle of this system, is that which its name indicates—that the child should be regarded not as a mere recipient of the ideas of others, but as an agent capable of collecting, and originating, and producing most of the ideas which are necessary for its education, when presented with the objects or the facts from which they may be derived.”—Smith’s New Gram., Pref., p. 5: Amer. Journal of Education, New Series, Vol. I, No. 6, Art. 1. It ought to be enough for any teacher, or for any writer, if he finds his readers or his pupils ready recipients of the ideas which he aims to convey. What more they know, they can never owe to him, unless they learn it from him against his will; and what they happen to lack, of understanding or believing him, may very possibly be more his fault than theirs.

Page 2079

[45] Lindley Murray, anonymously copying somebody, I know not whom, says: "Words derive their meaning from the consent and practice of those who use them. There is no necessary connexion between words and ideas. The association between the sign and the thing signified, is purely arbitrary."—Octavo Gram., Vol. i, p. 139. The second assertion here made, is very far from being literally true. However arbitrary may be the use or application of words, their connexion with ideas is so necessary, that they cannot be words without it. Signification, as I shall hereafter prove, is a part of the very essence of a word, the most important element of its nature. And Murray himself says, "The understanding and language have a strict connexion."—ib., Vol. i, p. 356. In this, he changes without amendment the words of Blair: "Logic and rhetoric have here, as in many other cases, a strict connexion."—Blair's Rhet., p. 120.

[46] "The language which is, at present, spoken throughout Great Britain, is neither the ancient primitive speech of the island, nor derived from it; but is altogether of foreign origin. The language of the first inhabitants of our island, beyond doubt, was the Celtic, or Gaelic, common to them with Gaul; from which country, it appears, by many circumstances, that Great Britain was peopled. This Celtic tongue, which is said to be very expressive and copious, and is, probably, one of the most ancient languages in the world, obtained once in most of the western regions of Europe. It was the language of Gaul, of Great Britain, of Ireland, and very probably, of Spain also; till, in the course of those revolutions which by means of the conquests, first, of the Romans, and afterwards, of the northern nations, changed the government, speech, and, in a manner, the whole face of Europe, this tongue was gradually obliterated; and now subsists only in the mountains of Wales, in the Highlands of Scotland, and among the wild Irish. For the Irish, the Welsh, and the Erse, are no other than different dialects of the same tongue, the ancient Celtic."—Blair's Rhetoric, Lect. IX, p. 85.

[47] With some writers, the Celtic language is the Welsh; as may be seen by the following extract: "By this he requires an Impossibility, since much the greater Part of Mankind can by no means spare 10 or 11 Years of their Lives in learning those dead Languages, to arrive at a perfect Knowledge of their own. But by this Gentleman's way of Arguing, we ought not only to be Masters of Latin and Greek, but of Spanish, Italian, High-Dutch, Low-Dutch, French, the Old Saxon, Welsh, Runic, Gothic, and Islandic; since much the greater number of Words of common and general Use are derived from those Tongues. Nay, by the same way of Reasoning we may prove, that the Romans and Greeks did not understand their own Tongues, because they were not acquainted with the Welsh, or ancient Celtic, there being above 620 radical Greek Words derived from the Celtic, and of the Latin a much greater Number."—Preface to Brightland's Grammar, p. 5.

Page 2080

[48] The author of this specimen, through a solemn and sublime poem in ten books, generally simplified the preterit verb of the second person singular, by omitting the termination st or est, whenever his measure did not require the additional syllable. But his tuneless editors have, in many instances, taken the rude liberty both to spoil his versification, and to publish under his name what he did not write. They have given him bad prosody, or unutterable harshness of phraseology, for the sake of what they conceived to be grammar. So Kirkham, in copying the foregoing passage, alters it as he will; and alters it differently, when he happens to write some part of it twice: as,

“That morning, thou, that slumberedst not before,
Nor slept, great Ocean! laidst thy waves at rest,
And hushed thy mighty minstrelsy.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 203.

Again:

“That morning, thou, that slumberedst not before,
Nor sleptst, great Ocean, laidst thy waves at rest,
And hush’dst thy mighty minstrelsy.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 44.

[49] Camenes, the Muses, whom Horace called Camaenae. The former is an English plural from the latter, or from the Latin word camena, a muse or song. These lines are copied from Dr. Johnson’s History of the English Language; their orthography is, in some respects, too modern for the age to which they are assigned.

[50] The Saxon characters being known nowadays to but very few readers, I have thought proper to substitute for them, in the latter specimens of this chapter, the Roman; and, as the old use of colons and periods for the smallest pauses, is liable to mislead a common observer, the punctuation too has here been modernized.

[51] Essay on Language, by William S. Cardell, New York, 1825, p. 2. This writer was a great admirer of Horne Tooke, from whom he borrowed many of his notions of grammar, but not this extravagance. Speaking of the words right and just, the latter says, “They are applicable only to man; to whom alone language belongs, and of whose sensations only words are the representatives.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, p. 9.

[52] CARDELL: Both Grammars, p. 4.

[53] “Quoties dicimus, toties de nobis judicatur.”—Cicero. “As often as we speak, so often are we judged.”

[54] “Nor had he far to seek for the source of our impropriety in the use of words, when he should reflect that the study of our own language, has never been made a part of the education of our youth. Consequently, the use of words is got wholly by chance, according to the company that we keep, or the books that we read.” SHERIDAN’S ELOCUTION, Introd., p. viii, dated “July 10, 1762,” 2d Amer. Ed.

Page 2081

[55] “To Write and Speak correctly, gives a Grace, and gains a favourable Attention to what one has to say: And since ’tis English, that an English Gentleman will have constant use of, that is the Language he should chiefly Cultivate, and wherein most care should be taken to polish and perfect his Stile. To speak or write better Latin than English, may make a Man be talk’d of, but he would find it more to his purpose to Express himself well in his own Tongue, that he uses every moment, than to have the vain Commendation of others for a very insignificant quality. This I find universally neglected, and no care taken any where to improve Young Men in their own Language, that they may thoroughly understand and be Masters of it. If any one among us have a facility or purity more than ordinary in his Mother Tongue, it is owing to Chance, or his Genius, or any thing, rather than to his Education or any care of his Teacher. To Mind what English his Pupil speaks or writes is below the Dignity of one bred up amongst Greek and Latin, though he have but little of them himself. These are the learned Languages fit only for learned Men to meddle with and teach: English is the Language of the illiterate Vulgar.”—Locke, on Education, p. 339; Fourth Ed., London, 1699.

[56] A late author, in apologizing for his choice in publishing a grammar without forms of praxis, (that is, without any provision for a stated application of its principles by the learner,) describes the whole business of Parsing as a “dry and uninteresting recapitulation of the disposal of a few parts of speech, and their often times told positions and influence;” urges “the unimportance of parsing, generally,” and represents it to be only “a finical and ostentatious parade of practical pedantry.”—Wright’s Philosophical Gram., pp. 224 and 226. It would be no great mistake to imagine, that this gentleman’s system of grammar, applied in any way to practice, could not fail to come under this unflattering description; but, to entertain this notion of parsing in general, is as great an error, as that which some writers have adopted on the other hand, of making this exercise their sole process of inculcation, and supposing it may profitably supersede both the usual arrangement of the principles of grammar and the practice of explaining them by definitions. It is asserted in Parkhurst’s “English Grammar for Beginners, on the Inductive Method of Instruction,” that, “to teach the child a definition at the outset, is beginning at the wrong end,” that, “with respect to all that goes under the name of etymology in grammar, it is learned chiefly by practice in parsing, and scarcely at all by the aid of definitions.”— Preface, pp. 5 and 6.

Page 2082

[57] Hesitation in speech may arise from very different causes. If we do not consider this, our efforts to remove it may make it worse. In most instances, however, it may be overcome by proper treatment, “Stammering,” says a late author, “is occasioned by an over-effort to articulate; for when the mind of the speaker is so occupied with his subject as not to allow him to reflect upon his defect, he will talk without difficulty. All stammerers can sing, owing to the continuous sound, and the slight manner in which the consonants are touched in singing; so a drunken man can run, though he cannot walk or stand still.”—Gardiner’s Music of Nature, p. 30.

“To think rightly, is of knowledge; to speak fluently, is of nature;
To read with profit, is of care; but to write aptly, is of practice.”
Book of Thoughts, p. 140.

[58] “There is nothing more becoming [to] a Gentleman, or more useful in all the occurrences of life, than to be able, on any occasion, to speak well, and to the purpose.”—Locke, on Education, Sec.171. “But yet, I think I may ask my reader, whether he doth not know a great many, who live upon their estates, and so, with the name, should have the qualities of Gentlemen, who cannot so much as tell a story as they should; much less speak clearly and persuasively in any business. This I think not to be so much their fault, as the fault of their education.—They have been taught Rhetoric, but yet never taught how to express themselves handsomely with their tongues or pens in the language they are always to use; as if the names of the figures that embellish the discourses of those who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. This, as all other things of practice, is to be learned, not by a few, or a great many rules given; but by EXERCISE and APPLICATION according to GOOD RULES, or rather PATTERNS, till habits are got, and a facility of doing it well.”—Ib., Sec.189. The forms of parsing and correcting which the following work supplies, are “patterns,” for the performance of these practical “exercises,” and such patterns as ought to be implicitly followed, by every one who means to be a ready and correct speaker on these subjects.

[59] The principal claimants of “the Inductive Method” of Grammar, are Richard W. Green, Roswell C. Smith, John L. Parkhurst, Dyor H. Sanborn, Bradford Frazee, and, Solomon Barrett, Jr.; a set of writers, differing indeed in their qualifications, but in general not a little deficient in what constitutes an accurate grammarian.

[60] William C. Woodbridge edited the Journal, and probably wrote the article, from which the author of “English Grammar on the Productive System” took his “Preface.”

Page 2083

[61] Many other grammars, later than Murray's, have been published, some in England, some in America, and some in both countries; and among these there are, I think, a few in which a little improvement has been made, in the methods prescribed for the exercises of parsing and correcting. In most, however, nothing of the kind has been attempted. And, of the formularies which have been given, the best that I have seen, are still miserably defective, and worthy of all the censure that is expressed in the paragraph above; while others, that appear in works not entirely destitute of merit, are absolutely much worse than Murray's, and worthy to condemn to a speedy oblivion the books in which they are printed. In lieu of forms of expression, clear, orderly, accurate, and full; such as a young parser might profitably imitate; such as an experienced one would be sure to approve; what have we? A chaos of half-formed sentences, for the ignorant pupil to flounder in; an infinite abyss of blunders, which a world of criticism could not fully expose! See, for example, the seven pages of parsing, in the neat little book entitled, "A Practical Grammar of the English Language, by the Rev. David Blair: Seventh Edition: London, 1815:" pp. 49 to 57. I cannot consent to quote more than one short paragraph of the miserable jumble which these pages contain. Yet the author is evidently a man of learning, and capable of writing well on some subjects, if not on this. "Bless the Lord, O my soul!" Form: "Bless, a verb, (repeat 97); active (repeat 99); active voice (102); infinitive mood (107); third person, soul being the nominative (118); present tense (111); conjugate the verb after the pattern (129); its object is Lord (99)."—Blair's Gram., p. 50. Of the paragraphs referred to, I must take some notice: "107. The imperative mood commands or orders or intreats."—ib., p. 19. "118. The second person is always the pronoun thou or you in the singular, and ye or you in the plural."—ib., p. 21. "111. The imperative mood has no distinction of tense: and the infinitive has no distinction of persons."—ib., p. 20. Now the author should have said: "Bless is a redundant active-transitive verb, from bless, blessed or blest, blessing, blessed or blest; found in the imperative mood, present tense, second person, and singular number:" and, if he meant to parse the word syntactically, he should have added: "and agrees with its nominative thou understood; according to the rule which says, 'Every finite verb must agree with its subject or nominative, in person and number.' Because the meaning is—Bless thou the Lord." This is the whole story. But, in the form above, several things are false; many, superfluous; some, deficient; several, misplaced; nothing, right. Not much better are the models furnished by Kirkham, Smith, Lennie, Bullions, and other late authors.

Page 2084

[62] Of Dr. Bullions's forms of parsing, as exhibited in his English Grammar, which is a modification of Lennie's Grammar, it is difficult to say, whether they are most remarkable for their deficiencies, their redundancies, or their contrariety to other teachings of the same author or authors. Both Lennie and Bullions adopt the rule, that, "An ellipsis is not allowable when it would obscure the sentence, weaken its force, or be attended with an impropriety."—L., p. 91; B., p. 130. And the latter strengthens this doctrine with several additional observations, the first of which reads thus: "In general, no word should be omitted that is necessary to the full and correct construction, or even harmony of a sentence."—Bullions, E. Gr., 130. Now the parsing above alluded to, has been thought particularly commendable for its brevity—a quality certainly desirable, so far as it consists with the end of parsing, or with the more needful properties of a good style, clearness, accuracy, ease, and elegance. But, if the foregoing rule and observation are true, the models furnished by these writers are not commendably brief, but miserably defective. Their brevity is, in fact, such as renders them all bad English; and not only so, it makes them obviously inadequate to their purpose, as bringing into use but a part of the principles which the learner had studied. It consists only in the omission of what ought to have been inserted. For example, this short line, "I lean upon the Lord," is parsed by both of these gentlemen thus: "I, the first personal pronoun, masculine, or feminine, singular, the nominative—lean, a verb, neuter, first person singular, present, indicative—upon, a preposition—the, an article, the definite—Lord, a noun, masculine, singular, the objective, (governed by upon.)"—Lennie's Principles of English Gram., p. 51; Bullions's, 74. This is a little sample of their etymological parsing, in which exercise they generally omit not only all the definitions or "reasons" of the various terms applied, but also all the following particulars: first, the verb is, and certain definitives and connectives, which are "necessary to the full and correct construction" of their sentences; secondly, the distinction of nouns as proper or common; thirdly, the person of nouns, first, second, or third; fourthly, the words, number, gender, and case, which are necessary to the sense and construction of certain words used; fifthly, the distinction of adjectives as belonging to different classes; sixthly, the division of verbs as being regular or irregular, redundant or defective; seventhly, sometimes, (Lennie excepted,) the division of verbs as active, passive, or neuter; eighthly, the words mood and tense, which

Page 2085

Bullions, on page 131, pronounces “quite unnecessary,” and inserts in his own formule on page 132; ninthly, the distinction of adverbs as expressing time, place, degree, or manner; tenthly, the distinction of conjunctions as copulative or disjunctive; lastly, the distinction of interjections as indicating different emotions. All these things does their completest specimen of etymological parsing lack, while it is grossly encumbered with parentheses of syntax, which “must be omitted till the pupil get the rules of syntax.”—Lennie, p. 51. It is also vitiated with several absurdities, contradictions, and improper changes of expression: as, “His, the third personal pronoun;” (B., p. 23;)—“me, the first personal pronoun;” (Id., 74;)—“A, The indefinite article;” (Id., 73;)—“a, an article, the indefinite;” (Id., 74;)—“When the verb is passive, parse thus: 'A verb active, in the passive voice, regular, irregular,' &c.”—Bullions, p. 131. In stead of teaching sufficiently, as elements of etymological parsing, the definitions which belong to this exercise, and then dismissing them for the principles of syntax, Dr. Bullions encumbers his method of syntactical parsing with such a series of etymological questions and answers as cannot but make it one of the slowest, longest, and most tiresome ever invented. He thinks that the pupil, after parsing any word syntactically, “should be requested to assign a reason for every thing contained in his statement!”—Principles of E. Grammar, p. 131. And the teacher is to ask questions as numerous as the reasons! Such is the parsing of a text-book which has been pronounced “superior to any other, for use in our common schools”—“a complete grammar of the language, and available for every purpose for which Mr. Brown’s can possibly be used.”—Ralph K. Finch’s Report, p. 12.

[63] There are many other critics, besides Murray and Alger, who seem not to have observed the import of after and before in connexion with the tenses. Dr. Bullions, on page 139th of his English Grammar, copied the foregoing example from Lennie, who took it from Murray. Even Richard Hiley, and William Harvey Wells, grammarians of more than ordinary tact, have been obviously misled by the false criticism above cited. One of Hiley’s Rules of Syntax, with its illustration, stands thus: “In the use of the different tenses, we must particularly observe to use that tense which clearly and properly conveys the sense intended; thus, instead of saying, ‘After I visited Europe, I returned to America;’ we should say, ‘After I had visited Europe, I returned to America.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 90. Upon this he thought it needful to comment thus: “‘After I visited Europe, I returned to America;’ this sentence is incorrect; visited ought to be had visited, because the action implied by the verb visited WAS COMPLETED before the other past action returned.”—ib., p. 91. See nearly the same thing in Wells’s School Grammar, 1st Edition, p. 151; but his later editions are wisely altered. Since “visited and was completed” are of the same tense, the argument from the latter, if it proves any thing, proves the former to be right, and the proposed change needless, or perhaps worse than needless. “I visited Europe before I returned to America,” or, “I visited Europe, and afterwards returned to America,” is good English, and not to be improved by any change of tense; yet here too we see the visiting “was completed before” the return, or HAD BEEN COMPLETED at the time of the return. I say, “The Pluperfect Tense is that which expresses what had taken place at some past time mentioned: as, ‘I had seen him, when I met you.’” Murray says, “The Pluperfect Tense represents a thing not only as past, but also as prior to some other point of time specified in the sentence: as, I had finished my letter before he arrived.” Hiley says, “The Past-Perfect expresses an action or event which was past before some other past action or event mentioned in the sentence, and to which it refers; as, I had finished my lessons before he came.” With this, Wells appears to concur, his example being similar. It seems to me, that these last two definitions, and their example too, are bad; because by the help of before or after, “the past before the past” may be clearly expressed by the simple past tense: as, “I finished my letter before he arrived.”—“I finished my lessons before he came.” “He arrived soon after I finished the letter.”—“Soon after it was completed, he came in.”

Page 2086

[64] Samuel Kirkham, whose grammar is briefly described in the third chapter of this introduction, boldly lays the blame of all his philological faults, upon our noble language itself; and even conceives, that a well-written and faultless grammar cannot be a good one, because it will not accord with that reasonless jumble which he takes every existing language to be! How diligently he laboured to perfect his work, and with what zeal for truth and accuracy, may be guessed from the following citation: “The truth is, after all which can be done to render the definitions and rules of grammar comprehensive and accurate, they will still be found, when critically examined by men of learning and science, more or less exceptionable. These exceptions and imperfections are the unavoidable consequence of the imperfections of the language. Language as well as every thing else of human invention, will always be imperfect. Consequently, a perfect system of grammatical principles, would not suit it. A perfect grammar will not be produced, until some perfect being writes it for a perfect language; and a perfect language will not be constructed, until some super-human agency is employed in its production. All grammatical principles and systems which are not perfect are exceptionable.”—Kirkham’s Grammar, p. 66. The unplausible sophistry of these strange remarks, and the palliation they afford to the multitudinous defects of the book which contains them, may be left, without further comment, to the judgement of the reader.

Page 2087

[65] The phrase complex ideas, or compound ideas, has been used for the notions which we have of things consisting of different parts, or having various properties, so as to embrace some sort of plurality: thus our ideas of all bodies and classes of things are said to be complex or compound. Simple ideas are those in which the mind discovers no parts or plurality: such are the ideas of heat, cold, blueness, redness, pleasure, pain, volition, &c. But some writers have contended, that the composition of ideas is a fiction; and that all the complexity, in any case, consists only in the use of a general term in lieu of many particular ones. Locke is on one side of this debate, Horne Tooke, on the other.

[66] Dilworth appears to have had a true idea of the thing, but he does not express it as a definition; “Q. Is an Unit of one, a Number? A. An Unit is a number, because it may properly answer the question how many!”—Schoolmaster’s Assistant, p. 2. A number in arithmetic, and a number in grammar, are totally different things. The plural number, as men or horses, does not tell how many; nor does the word singular mean one, as the author of a recent grammar says it does. The plural number is one number, but it is not the singular. “The Productive System” teaches thus: “What does the word singular mean? It means one.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 7.

[67] It is truly astonishing that so great a majority of our grammarians could have been so blindly misled, as they have been, in this matter; and the more so, because a very good definition of a Letter was both published and republished, about the time at which Lowth’s first appeared: viz., “What is a letter? A Letter is the Sign, Mark, or Character of a simple or uncompounded Sound. Are Letters Sounds? No. Letters are only the Signs or Symbols of Sounds, not the Sounds themselves.”—The British Grammar, p. 3. See the very same words on the second page of Buchanan’s “English Syntax,” a work which was published as early as 1767.

[68] In Murray’s octavo Grammar, this word is the in the first chapter, and their in the second; in the duodecimo, it is their in both places.

Page 2088

[69] “The definitions and the rules throughout the Grammar, are expressed with neatness and perspicuity. They are as short and comprehensive as the nature of the subject would admit: and they are well adapted both to the understanding and the memory of young persons.”—Life of L. Murray, p. 245. “It may truly be said that the language in every part of the work, is simple, correct, and perspicuous.”—Ib., p. 246.

[70] For this definition, see Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 40; Duodecimo, 41; Smaller Gram., 18; Alger's, 18; Bacon's, 15; Frost's, 8; Ingersoll's, 17; A Teacher's, 8; Maltby's, 14; T. H. Miller's, 20; Pond's, 18; S. Putnam's, 15; Russell's, 11; Merchant's Murray, 25; and Worcester's Univ. and Crit. Dictionary. Many other grammarians have attempted to define number; with what success a few examples will show: (1.) “Number is the distinction of one from many.”—W. Allen's Gram., p. 40; Merchant's School Gram., 28; Greenleaf's, 22; Nutting's, 17; Picket's, 19; D. Adams's, 31. (2.) “Number is the distinction of one from more.”—Fisher's Gram., 51; Alden's, 7. (3.) “Number is the distinction of one from several or many.”—Coar's Gram., p. 24. (4.) “Number is the distinction of one from more than one.”—Sanborn's Gram., p. 24; J. Flint's, 27; Wells's, 52. (5.) “Number is the distinction of one from more than one, or many.”—Grant's Latin Gram., p. 7. (6.) “What is number? Number is the Distinction of one, from two, or many.”—British Gram., p. 89; Buchanan's, 16. (7.) “You inquire, ‘What is number?’ Merely this: the distinction of one from two, or many. Greek substantives have three numbers.”—Bucke's Classical Gram., p. 38. All these authors say, that, in English, “there are two numbers, the singular and the plural.” According to their explanations, then, we have two “distinctions of one from two, several, more, or many;” and the Greeks, by adding a dual number, have three! Which, then, of the two or three modifications or forms, do they mean, when they say, “Number is the distinction” &c.? Or, if none of them, what else is meant? All these definitions had their origin in an old Latin one, which, although it is somewhat better, makes doubtful logic in its application: “NUMERUS est, unius et multorum distinctio. Numeri igitur sunt duo; Singularis et Pluralis.”—Ruddiman's Gram., p. 21. This means: (8.) “Number is a distinction of one and many. The numbers therefore are two; the Singular and the Plural.” But we have yet other examples: as, (9.) “Number is the distinction of objects, as one or more.”—Kirkham's Gram., p. 39. “The distinction of objects as one,” is very much like “the consideration of an object as more than one.” (10.) “Number distinguishes objects as one or more.”—Cooper’s Murray, p. 21; Practical Gram., p. 18. That is, number makes the plural to be either plural or singular for distinction’s sake! (11.) “Number is the distinction of nouns with regard to the objects signified, as one or more.”—Fisk’s Murray, p. 19. Here, too, number has “regard” to the same confusion: while, by a gross error, its “distinction” is confined to “nouns” only! (12.) “Number is that property of a noun by which it expresses one or more than one.”—Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 12; Analyt. Gram., 25. Here again number is improperly limited to “a noun,” and is said to be one sign of two, or either of two, incompatible ideas! (13.) “Number shows how many are meant, whether one or more.”—Smith’s new Gram., p. 45. This is not a definition, but a false assertion, in which Smith again confounds arithmetic with grammar! Wheat and oats are of different numbers; but neither of these numbers “means a sum that may be counted,” or really “shows how many are meant.” So of “Man in general, Horses in general, &c.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 77. (14.) “Number is the difference in a noun or pronoun, to denote either a single thing or more than one.”—Davenport’s Gram., p. 14. This excludes the numbers of a verb, and makes the singular and the plural to be essentially one thing. (15.) “Number is a modification of nouns and verbs, &c. according as the thing spoken of is represented, as, one or more, with regard to number.”—Burn’s Gram., p. 32. This also has many faults, which I leave to the discernment of the reader. (16.) “What is number? Number shows the distinction of one from many.”—Wilcox’s Gram., p. 6. This is no answer to the question asked; besides, it is obviously worse than the first form, which has “is,” for “shows.” (17.) “What is Number? It is the representation of objects with respect to singleness, or plurality.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 34. If there are two numbers, they are neither of them properly described in this definition, or in any of the preceding ones. There is a gross misconception, in taking each or either of them to be an alternate representation of two incompatible ideas. And this sort of error is far from being confined to the present subject; it runs through a vast number of the various definitions contained in our grammars. (18.) “Number is the inflection of a noun, to indicate one object or more than one. Or, Number is the expression of unity or of more than unity.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 14. How hard this author laboured to think what number is, and could not! (19.) “Number is the distinction of unity and plurality.”—Hart’s E. Gram., p. 40, Why say, “distinction,” the numbers, or distinctions, being two? (20.) “Number is the capacity of nouns to represent either one or more than one object.”—Barrett’s Revised Gram., p. 40. (21.) “Number is a property of the noun which denotes one or more than one.”—Weld’s Gram., 2d Ed., p. 55. (22.) “Number is a property of the noun or pronoun [,] by which it denotes one, or more than one.”—Weld’s Gram., Abridged Ed., p. 49. (23.) “Number is the property that distinguishes one from more than one.”—Weld’s Gram., Improved Ed., p. 60. This, of course, excludes the plural. (24.) “Number is a modification of nouns to denote whether one object is meant, or more than one.”—Butler’s Gram., p. 19. (25.) “Number is that modification of the Noun which distinguishes one from more than one.”—Spencer’s Gram., p. 26. Now, it is plain, that not one of these twenty-five definitions comports with the idea that the singular is one number and the plural another! Not one of them exhibits any tolerable approach to accuracy, either of thought or of expression! Many of the grammarians have not attempted any definition of number, or of the numbers, though they speak of both the singular and the plural, and perhaps sometimes apply the term number to the distinction which is in each: for it is the property of the singular number, to distinguish unity from plurality: and of the plural, to distinguish plurality from unity. Among the authors who are thus silent, are Lily, Colet, Brightland, Harris, Lowth, Ash, Priestly, Bicknell, Adam, Gould, Harrison, Comly, Jaudon, Webster, Webber, Churchill, Staniford, Lennie, Dalton, Blair, Cobbett, Cobb, A. Flint, Felch, Guy, Hall, and S. W. Clark. Adam and Gould, however, in explaining the properties of verbs, say: “Number marks how many we suppose to be, to act, or to suffer.”—A., 80; G., 78.

Page 2089

Page 2090

[71] These are the parts of speech in some late grammars; as, Barrett’s, of 1854, Butler’s, Covell’s, Day’s, Frazee’s, Fowle’s New, Spear’s, Weld’s, Wells’s, and the Well-wishers’. In Frost’s Practical Grammar, the words of the language are said to be “divided into eight classes,” and the names are given thus: “Noun, Article, Pronoun, Verb, Adverb, Preposition, Conjunction, and Interjection.”—P. 29. But the author afterwards treats of the Adjective, between the Article and the Pronoun, just as if he had forgotten to name it, and could not count nine with accuracy! In Perley’s Grammar, the parts of speech are a different eight: namely, “Nouns, Adjectives, Verbs, Adverbs, Prepositions, Conjunctions, Interjections, and Particles!”—P. 8. S. W. Clark has Priestley’s classes, but calls Interjections “Exclamations.”

Page 2091

[72] Felton, who is confessedly a modifier of Murray, claims as a merit, “the rejection of several useless parts of speech” yet acknowledges “nine,” and treats of ten; “viz., Nouns, Pronouns, Verbs, Participles, Prepositions, Adjectives, [Articles,] Adverbs, Conjunctions, Exclamations.”—O. C. Felton’s Gram. p. 5, and p. 9.

[73] Quintilian is at fault here; for, in some of his writings, if not generally, Aristotle recognized four parts of speech; namely, verbs, nouns, conjunctions, and articles. See Aristot. de Poetica, Cap. xx.

[74] “As there are ten different characters or figures in arithmetic to represent all possible quantities, there are also ten kinds of words or parts of speech to represent all possible sentences: viz.: article, noun, adjective, pronoun, verb, participle, adverb, preposition, conjunction, interjection.”—Chauvier’s Punctuation, p. 104.

[75] The Friend, 1829, Vol. ii, p. 117.

[76] The Friend, Vol. ii, p. 105.

[77] See the Preface to my Compendious English Grammar in the American editions of the Treasury of Knowledge, Vol. i, p. 8.

[78] Some say that Brightland himself was the writer of this grammar; but to suppose him the sole author, hardly comports with its dedication to the Queen, by her “most Obedient and Dutiful Subjects, the Authors,” or with the manner in which these are spoken of, in the following lines, by the laureate:

“Then say what Thanks, what Praises must attend The Gen’rous Wits, who thus could condescend! Skill, that to Art’s sublimest Orb can reach, Employ’d its humble Elements to Teach! Yet worthily Esteem’d, because we know To raise Their Country’s Fame they stoop’d so low.”—TATE.

[79] Dr. Campbell, in his Philosophy of Rhetoric, page 158th, makes a difficulty respecting the meaning of this passage: cites it as an instance of the misapplication of the term grammar; and supposes the writer’s notion of the thing to have been, “of grammar in the abstract, an universal archetype by which the particular grammars of all different tongues ought to be regulated.” And adds, “If this was his meaning, I cannot say whether he is in the right or in the wrong, in this accusation. I acknowledge myself to be entirely ignorant of this ideal grammar.” It would be more fair to suppose that Dr. Swift meant by “grammar” the rules and principles according to which the English language ought to be spoken and written; and, (as I shall hereafter show,) it is no great hyperbole to affirm, that every part of the code—nay, well-nigh every one of these rules and principles—is, in many instances, violated, if not by what may be called the language itself, at least by those speakers and writers who are under the strongest obligations to know and observe its true use.

Page 2092

[80] The phrase “of any” is here erroneous. These words ought to have been omitted; or the author should have said—“the least valuable of all his productions.”

[81] This word latter should have been last; for three works are here spoken of.

[82] With this opinion concurred the learned James White, author of a Grammatical Essay on the English Verb, an octavo volume of more than three hundred pages, published in London in 1761. This author says, “Our Essays towards forming an English Grammar, have not been very many: from the reign of Queen Elizabeth, to that of Queen Ann, there are but Two that the author of the Present knows of: one in English by the renown’d Ben Jonson, and one in Latin by the learn’d Dr. Wallis. In the reign of Queen Ann indeed, there seems to have arisen a noble Spirit of ingenious Emulation in this Literary way: and to this we owe the treatises compos’d at that period for the use of schools, by Brightland, Greenwood, and Maittaire. But, since that time, nothing hath appear’d, that hath come to this Essayist’s knowledge, deserving to be taken any notice of as tending to illustrate our Language by ascertaining the Grammar of it; except Anselm Bayly’s Introduction to Languages, Johnson’s Grammar prefix’d to the Abridgement of his Dictionary, and the late Dr. Ward’s Essays upon the English Language.—These are all the Treatises he hath met with, relative to this subject; all which he hath perus’d very attentively, and made the best use of them in his power. But notwithstanding all these aids, something still remains to be done, at least it so appears to him, preparatory to attempting with success the Grammar of our Language. All our efforts of this kind seem to have been render’d ineffectual hitherto, chiefly by the prevalency of two false notions: one of which is, that our Verbs have no Moods; and the other, that our Language hath no Syntax.”—White’s English Verb, p. viii.

[83] A similar doctrine, however, is taught by no less an author than “the Rev. Alexander Crombie, LL. D.,” who says, in the first paragraph of his introduction, “LANGUAGE consists of intelligible signs, and is the medium, by which the mind communicates its thoughts. It is either articulate, or inarticulate; artificial, or natural. The former is peculiar to man; the latter is common to all animals. By inarticulate language, we mean those instinctive cries, by which the several tribes of inferior creatures are enabled to express their sensations and desires. By articulate language is understood a system of expression, composed of simple sounds, differently modified by the organs of speech, and variously combined.”—Treatise on the Etymology and Syntax of the English Language, p. 1. See the same doctrine also in Hiley’s Gram., p. 141. The language which “is common to all animals,” can be no other than that in which AEsop’s wolves and weasels, goats and grasshoppers, talked—a language quite too unreal for grammar. On the other hand, that which is composed of sounds only, and not of letters, includes but a mere fraction of the science.

Page 2093

[84] The pronoun whom is not properly applicable to beasts, unless they are personified: the relative which would therefore, perhaps, have been preferable here, though whom has a better sound.—G. B.

[85] “The great difference between men and brutes, in the utterance of sound by the mouth, consists in the power of articulation in man, and the entire want of it in brutes.”—Webster’s Improved Gram., p. 8.

[86] Strictly speaking, an articulate sound is not a simple element of speech, but rather a complex one, whether syllable or word; for articulate literally means jointed. But our grammarians in general, have applied the term to the sound of a letter, a syllable, or a word, indiscriminately: for which reason, it seems not very suitable to be used alone in describing any of the three. Sheridan says, “The essence of a syllable consists in articulation only, for every articulate sound of course forms a syllable.”—Lectures on Elocution, p. 62. If he is right in this, not many of our letters—or, perhaps more properly, none of them—can singly represent articulate sounds. The looseness of this term induces me to add or prefer an other. “The Rev. W. Allen,” who comes as near as any of our grammarians, to the true definition of a letter, says: 1. “The sounds used in language are called articulate sounds.” 2. “A letter is a character used in printing or writing, to represent an articulate sound.”—Allen’s Elements of E. Gram., p. 2. Dr. Adam says: 1. “A letter is the mark of a sound, or of an articulation of sound.” 2. “A vowel is properly called a simple sound; and the sounds formed by the concurrence of vowels and consonants, articulate sounds.”—Latin and English Gram., pp. 1 and 2.

[87] Of this sort of blunder, the following false definition is an instance: “A Vowel is a letter, the name of which makes a full open sound.”—Lennie’s Gram., p. 5; Brace’s, 7; Hazen’s, 10. All this is just as true of a consonant as of a vowel. The comma too, used in this sentence, defeats even the sense which the writers intended. It is surely no description either of a vowel or of a consonant, to say, that it is a letter, and that the name of a letter makes a full open sound. Again, a late grammarian teaches, that the names of all the letters are nothing but Roman capitals, and then seems to inquire which of these names are vowels, thus: “Q. How many letters are in the alphabet? A. Twenty-six. Q. What are their names? A. A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M, N, O, P, Q, R, S, T, U, V, W, X, Y, Z. Q. Which of these are called Vowels?”—Fowle’s Common School Gram., Part First, p. 7. If my worthy friend Fowle had known or considered what are the names of the letters in English, he might have made a better beginning to his grammar than this.

Page 2094

[88] By the colloquial phrase, “to a Tee” we mean, “to a nicety, to a tittle, a jot, an iota. Had the British poet Cawthorn, himself a noted schoolmaster, known how to write the name of “T,” he would probably have preferred it in the following couplet:

“And swore by Varro’s shade that he Conceived the medal to a T.”—British Poets, Vol. VII, p. 65.

Here the name would certainly be much fitter than the letter, because the text does not in reality speak of the letter. With the names of the Greek letters, the author was better acquainted; the same poem exhibits two of them, where the characters themselves are spoken of:

“My eye can trace divinely true,
In this dark curve a little Mu;
And here, you see, there seems to lie
The ruins of a Doric Xi.”—Ibidem.

The critical reader will see that “seems” should be seem, to agree with its nominative “ruins.”

[89] Lily, reckoning without the H, J, or V, speaks of the Latin letters as “twenty-two,” but says nothing concerning their names. Ruddiman, Adam, Grant, Gould, and others, who include the H, J, and V, rightly state the number to be “twenty-five,” but, concerning their names, are likewise entirely silent. Andrews and Stoddard, not admitting the K, teach thus: “The letters of the Latin language are twenty-four. They have the same names as the corresponding characters in English.”—Andrews and Stoddard’s Latin Gram., p. 1. A later author speaks thus: “The Latin Alphabet consists of twenty-five letters, the same in name and form as the English, but without the w.”—Bullions’s Latin Gram., p. 1. It would probably be nearer to the truth, to say, “The Latin Alphabet, like the French, has no W; it consists of twenty-five letters, which are the same in name and form as the French.” Will it be pretended that the French names and the English do not differ?

[90] The Scotch Iz and the Craven Izzet, if still in use anywhere, are names strictly local, not properly English, nor likely to spread. “IZZET, the letter Z. This is probably the corruption of izzard, the old and common name for the letter, though I know not, says Nares, on what authority.”—Glossary of Craven, w. Izzet. “Z z, zed, more commonly called izzard or uzzard, that is, s hard.”—Dr. Johnson’s Gram., p. 1.

“And how she sooth’d me when with study sad
I labour’d on to reach the final Zad.”—Crabbe’s Borough, p. 228.

[91] William Bolles, in his new Dictionary, says of the letter Z: “Its sound is uniformly that of a hard S.” The name, however, he pronounces as I do; though he writes it not Zee but ze; giving not the orthography of the name, as he should have done, but a mere index of its pronunciation. Walker proves by citations from Professor Ward and Dr. Wallis, that these authors considered the sharp or hissing sound of s the “hard” sound; and the flat sound, like that of z, its “soft” sound. See his Dictionary, 8vo, p. 53.

Page 2095

[92] Dr. Webster died in 1843. Most of this work was written while he was yet in vigour.

[93] This old definition John L. Parkhurst disputes:—says it “is ambiguous,”—questions whether it means, “that the name of such a letter, or the simple sound,” requires a vowel! “If the latter,” says he, “the assertion is false. The simple sounds, represented by the consonants, can be uttered separately, distinctly, and perfectly. It can be done with the utmost ease, even by a little child.”—Parkhurst’s Inductive Gram. for Beginners, p. 164. He must be one of these modern philosophers who delight to make mouths of these voiceless elements, to show how much may be done without sound from the larynx.

[94] This test of what is, or is not, a vowel sound or a consonant sound, is often appealed to, and is generally admitted to be a just one. Errors in the application of an or a are not unfrequent, but they do not affect the argument. It cannot be denied, that it is proper to use a, and not proper to use an, before the initial sound of w or y with a vowel following. And this rule holds good, whether the sound be expressed by these particular letters, or by others; as in the phrases, “a wonder, a one, a yew, a use, a ewer, a humour, a yielding temper.” But I have heard it contended, that these are vowel sounds, notwithstanding they require a; and that the w and y are always vowels, because even a vowel sound (it was said) requires a and not an, whenever an other vowel sound immediately follows it. Of this notion, the following examples are a sufficient refutation: an aeronaut, an aerial tour, an oeiliad, an eyewink, an eyas, an iambus, an oaesis, an o’ersight, an oil, an oyster, an owl, an ounce. The initial sound of yielding requires a, and not an; but those who call the y a vowel, say, it is equivalent to the unaccented long e. This does not seem to me to be exactly true; because the latter sound requires an, and not a; as, “Athens, as well as Thebes, had an Eetion.”

[95] Dr. Rush, in his Philosophy of the Human Voice, has exhibited some acuteness of observation, and has written with commendable originality. But his accuracy is certainly not greater than his confidence. On page 57th, he says, “The m, n, and ng, are purely nasal,” on page 401st, “Some of the tonic elements, and one of the subtonics, are made by the assistance of the lips; they are o-we, oo-ze, ou-r, and m.” Of the intrinsic value of his work, I am not prepared or inclined to offer any opinion; I criticise him only so far as he strikes at grammatical principles long established, and worthy still to be maintained.

[96] Dr. Comstock, by enumerating as elementary the sound of the diphthong ou, as in our, and the complex power of wh, as in what, (which sounds ought not to be so reckoned,) makes the whole number of vocal elements in English to be “thirty-eight.” See Comstock’s Elocution, p. 19.

Page 2096

[97] This word is commonly heard in two syllables, yune'yun; but if Walker is right in making it three, yu'ne-un, the sound of y consonant is heard in it but once. Worcester's notation is "y=un'yun." The long sound of u is yu; hence Walker calls the letter, when thus sounded, a "semi-consonant diphthong."

[98] Children ought to be accustomed to speak loud, and to pronounce all possible sounds and articulations, even those of such foreign languages as they will be obliged to learn; for almost every language has its particular sounds which we pronounce with difficulty, if we have not been early accustomed to them. Accordingly, nations who have the greatest number of sounds in their speech, learn the most easily to pronounce foreign languages, since they know their articulations by having met with similar sounds in their own language."—Spurzheim, on Education, p. 159.

[99] If it be admitted that the two semivowels l and n have vocality enough of their own to form a very feeble syllable, it will prove only that there are these exceptions to an important general rule. If the name of Haydn rhymes with maiden, it makes one exception to the rule of writing; but it is no part of the English language. The obscure sound of which I speak, is sometimes improperly confounded with that of short u; thus a recent writer, who professes great skill in respect to such matters, says, "One of the most common sounds in our language is that of the vowel u, as in the word urn, or as the diphthong ea in the word earth, for which we have no character. Writers have made various efforts to express it, as in earth, berth, mirth, worth, turf, in which all the vowels are indiscriminately used in turn. [Fist] This defect has led to the absurd method of placing the vowel after the consonants, instead of between them, when a word terminates with this sound; as in the following, Bible, pure, centre, circle, instead of Bibel, puer, center, cirkel."—Gardiner's Music of Nature, p. 498. "It would be a great step towards perfection to spell our words as they are pronounced!"—Ibid., p. 499. How often do the reformers of language multiply the irregularities of which they complain!

[100] "The number of simple sounds in our tongue is twenty-eight, 9 Vowels and 19 Consonants. H is no letter, but merely a mark of aspiration."—Jones's Prosodial Gram. before his Dict., p. 14.

"The number of simple vowel and consonant sounds in our tongue is twenty-eight, and one pure aspiration h, making in all twenty-nine."—Bolles's Octavo Dict., Introd., p. 9.

Page 2097

“The number of letters in the English language is twenty-six; but the number of elements is thirty-eight.”—Comstock’s Elocution, p. 18. “There are thirty-eight elements in the English alphabet, and to represent those elements by appropriate characters, we should have thirty-eight letters. There is, then, a deficiency in our alphabet of twelve letters—and he who shall supply this imperfection, will be one of the greatest benefactors of the human race.”—ib., p. 19. “Our alphabet is both redundant and defective. C, q, and z, are respectively represented by k or s, k, and ks, or gz; and the remaining twenty-three letters are employed to represent forty-one elementary sounds.”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 36.

“The simple sounds were in no wise to be reckoned of any certain number: by the first men they were determined to no more than ten, as spine suppose; as others, fifteen or twenty; it is however certain that mankind in general never exceed twenty simple sounds; and of these only five are reckoned strictly such.”—Bicknell’s Grammar, Part ii, p. 4.

[101] “When these sounds are openly pronounced, they produce the familiar assent ay: which, by the old English dramatic writers, was often expressed by I.”—Walker. We still hear it so among the vulgar; as, “I, I, sir, presently!” for “Ay, ay, sir, presently!” Shakspeare wrote,

“To sleepe, perchance to dreame; I, there’s the rub.”
—Bucke’s Classical Gram., p. 143.

[102] Walker pronounces yew and you precisely alike, “yoo,” but, certainly, ew is not commonly equivalent to oo, though some make it so: thus Gardiner, in his scheme of the vowels, says, “ew equals oo, as in new, noo.”—Music of Nature, p. 483. Noo for new, is a vulgarism, to my ear.—G. BROWN.

[103] “As harmony is an inherent property of sound, the ear should he first called to the attention of simple sounds; though, in reality, all are composed of three, so nicely blended as to appear but as one.”—Gardiner’s Music of Nature, p. 8. “Every sound is a mixture of three tones; as much as a ray of light is composed of three prismatic colours.”—ib., p. 387.

[104] The titulary name of the sacred volume is “The Holy Bible.” The word Scripture or Scriptures is a common name for the writings contained in this inestimable volume, and, in the book itself, is seldom distinguished by a capital; but, in other works, it seems proper in general to write it so, by way of eminence.

[105] “Benedictus es Domine Deus Israel patris nostri ab eterno in eternum.”—Vulgate. “O Eternel! Dieu d’Israel, notre pere, tu es beni de tout temps et a toujours.”—Common French Bible. “[Greek: Eulogaetos ei Kyrie ho theos Israel ho pataer haemon apo tou aionos kai heos tou aionos.]”—Septuagint.

Page 2098

[106] Where the word “See” accompanies the reference, the reader may generally understand that the citation, whether right or wrong in regard to grammar, is not in all respects exactly as it will be found in the place referred to. Cases of this kind, however, will occur but seldom; and it is hoped the reasons for admitting a few, will be sufficiently obvious. Brevity is indispensable; and some rules are so generally known and observed, that one might search long for half a dozen examples of their undesigned violation. Wherever an error is made intentionally in the Exercises, the true reading and reference are to be expected in the Key.

[107] “Et irritaverunt ascendentes in mare, Mare rubrum.”—Latin Vulgate, folio, Psal. cv, 7. This, I think, should have been “Mare Rubrum,” with two capitals.—G. BROWN.

[108] The printers, from the manner in which they place their types before them, call the small letters “lower-case letters,” or “letters of the lower case.”

[109] I imagine that “plagues” should here be plague, in the singular number, and not plural. “Ero more ius, o mors; morsus tuus ero, inferne.”—Vulgate. “[Greek: Pou hae dikae sou, thanate; pou to kentron sou, aidae;]”—Septuagint, ibid.

[110] It is hoped that not many persons will be so much puzzled as are Dr. Latham and Professor Fowler, about the application of this rule. In their recent works on The English Language, these gentlemen say, “In certain words of more than one syllable, it is difficult to say to which syllable the intervening Consonant belongs. For instance, does the v in river and the v in fever belong to the first or to the second syllable? Are the words to be divided thus, ri-ver, fe-ver? or thus, riv-er, fev-er?”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 1850, Sec.85; Latham’s Hand-Book, p. 95. Now I suppose it plain, that, by the rule given above, fever is to be divided in the former way, and river in the latter; thus, fe-ver, riv-er. But this paragraph of Latham’s or Fowler’s is written, not to disembarass the learner, but just as if it were a grammarian’s business to confound his readers with fictitious dilemmas—and those expressed ungrammatically! Of the two Vees, so illogically associated in one question, and so solecistically spoken of by the singular verb “does,” one belongs to the former syllable, and the other, to the latter; nor do I discover that “it is difficult to say” this, or to be well assured that it is right. What an admirable passage for one great linguist to steal from an other!

[111] “The usual rules for dividing [words into] syllables, are not only arbitrary but false and absurd. They contradict the very definition of a syllable given by the authors themselves. * * * * A syllable in pronunciation is an indivisible thing; and strange as it may appear, what is indivisible in utterance is divided in writing: when the very purpose of dividing words into syllables in writing, is to lead the learner to a just pronunciation.”—Webster’s Improved Gram., p. 156; Philosophical Gram., 221.

Page 2099

[112] This word, like distich and monostich, is from the Greek stichos, a verse; and is improperly spelled by Walker with a final k. It should be hemistich, with the accent on the first syllable. See Webster, Scott, Perry, Worcester, and others.

[113] According to Aristotle, the compounding of terms, or the writing of them as separate words, must needs be a matter of great importance to the sense. For he will have the parts of a compound noun, or of a compound verb, to be, like other syllables, destitute of any distinct signification in themselves, whatever may be their meaning when written separately. See his definitions of the parts of speech, in his Poetics, Chapter 20th of the Greek; or Goulston's Version in Latin, Chapter 12th.

[114] Whether worshipper should follow this principle, or not, is questionable. If Dr. Webster is right in making worship a compound of worth and ship, he furnishes a reason against his own practice of using a single p in worshiper, worshipped, and worshipping. The Saxon word appears to have been weorthscype. But words ending in ship are derivatives, rather than compounds; and therefore they seem to belong to the rule, rather than to the exception: as, "So we fellowshipped him."—Herald of Freedom: Liberator, Vol. ix, p. 68.

[115] When ee comes before e, or may be supposed to do so, or when ll comes before l, one of the letters is dropped that three of the same kind may not meet: as, free, freer, freest, freeth, freed; skill, skillless; full, fully; droll, drolly. And, as burgess-ship, hostess-ship, and mistress-ship are derivatives, and not compounds, I think they ought to follow the same principle, and be written burgesship, hostesship, mistresship. The proper form of gall-less is perhaps more doubtful. It ought not to be gallless, as Dr. Webster has it; and galless, the analogical form, is yet, so far as I know without authority. But is it not preferable to the hyphenated form, with three Ells, which has authority? "GALL-LESS, a. Without gall or bitterness. Cleaveland."—Chalmers, Bolles, Worcester.

"Ah! mild and gall-less dove,
Which dost the pure and candid dwellings love,
Canst thou in Albion still delight?"—Cowley's Odes.

Worcester's Dictionary has also the questionable word bellless. Treen, for trees, or for an adjective meaning a tree's, or made of a tree, is exhibited in several of our dictionaries, and pronounced as a monosyllable: but Dr. Beattie, in his Poems, p. 84, has made it a dissyllable, with three like letters divided by a hyphen, thus:—

"Plucking from tree-en bough her simple food."

Page 2100

[116] Handiwork, handicraft, and handicraftsman, appear to have been corruptly written for handwork, handcraft, and handcraftsman. They were formerly in good use, and consequently obtained a place in our vocabulary, from which no lexicographer, so far as I know, has yet thought fit to discard them; but, being irregular, they are manifestly becoming obsolete, or at least showing a tendency to throw off these questionable forms. Handcraft and handcraftsman are now exhibited in some dictionaries, and handiwork seems likely to be resolved into handy and work, from which Johnson supposes it to have been formed. See Psalms xix, 1. The text is varied thus: “And the firmament sheweth his handiwork.”—Johnson’s Dict.. “And the firmament sheweth his handy-work.”—Scott’s Bible; Bruce’s Bible; Harrison’s Gram., p. 83. “And the firmament showeth his handy work.”—Alger’s Bible; Friends’ Bible; Harrison’s Gram., p. 103.

[117] Here a word, formed from its root by means of the termination ize, afterwards assumes a prefix, to make a secondary derivative: thus, organ, organize, disorganize. In such a case, the latter derivative must of course be like the former; and I assume that the essential or primary formation of both from the word organ is by the termination ize; but it is easy to see that disguise, demise, surmise, and the like, are essentially or primarily formed by means of the prefixes, dis, de, and sur. As to advertise, exercise, detonize, and recognize, which I have noted among the exceptions, it is not easy to discover by which method we ought to suppose them to have been formed; but with respect to nearly all others, the distinction is very plain; and though there may be no natural reason for founding upon it such a rule as the foregoing, the voice of general custom is as clear in this as in most other points or principles of orthography, and, surely, some rule in this case is greatly needed.

[118] Criticise, with s, is the orthography of Johnson, Walker, Webster, Jones, Scott, Bolles, Chalmers, Cobb, and others; and so did Worcester spell it in his Comprehensive Dictionary of 1831, but, in his Universal and Critical Dictionary of 1846, he wrote it with z, as did Bailey in his folio, about a hundred years ago. Here the z conforms to the foregoing rule, and the s does not.

[119] Like this, the compound brim-full ought to be written with a hyphen and accented on the last syllable; but all our lexicographers have corrupted it into brim’ful, and, contrary to the authorities they quote, accented it on the first. Their noun brim’fulness, with a like accent, is also a corruption; and the text of Shakspeare, which they quote for it, is nonsense, unless brim, be there made a separate adjective:—

Page 2101

"With ample and brimfulness of his force."—Johnson's Dict. et al.

"With ample and brim fullness of his force," would be better.

[120] According to Littleton, the coraliticus lapis was a kind of Phrygian marble, "called Coralius or by an other name Sangarius." But this substance seems to be different from all that are described by Webster, under the names of "coralline," "corallinite," and "corallite." See Webster's Octavo Dict.

[121] The Greek word for argil is [Greek: argilos], or [Greek: argillos], (from [Greek: argos], white,) meaning pure white earth; and is as often spelled with one Lamda as with two.

[122] Dr. Webster, with apparent propriety, writes caviling and cavilous with one l, like dialing and perilous; but he has in general no more uniformity than Johnson, in respect to the doubling of l final. He also, in some instances, accents similar words variously: as, cor'alliform, upon the first syllable, metal'lliform, upon the second; cav'ilous and pap'illous, upon the first, argil'lous, upon the second; ax'illar, upon the first, medul'lar, upon the second. See Webster's Octavo Dict.

[123] Perry wrote crystalline, crystalize, crystalization, metalline, metallist, metallurgist, and metallurgy; and these forms, as well as crystalography, metallie, metallography, and metalliferous, are noticed and preferred by the authors of the Red Book, on pp. 288 and 302.

[124] "But if a diphthong precedes, or the accent is on the preceding syllable, the consonant remains single: as, to toil, toiling; to offer, an offering."—Murray's Octavo Gram., p. 24; Walker's Rhym. Dict., Introd., p. ix.

[125] Johnson, Walker, and Webster, all spell this word sep'ilible; which is obviously wrong; as is Johnson's derivation of it from sepio, to hedge in. Sepio would make, not this word, but sepibilis and sepible, hedgeable.

[126] If the variable word control, controul, or controll, is from con and troul or troll, it should be spelled with ll, by Rule 7th, and retain the ll by Rule 6th. Dr. Webster has it so, but he gives control also.

[127] Ache, and its plural, aches, appear to have been formerly pronounced like the name of the eighth letter, with its plural, Aitch, and Aitches; for the old poets made "aches" two syllables. But Johnson says of ache, a pain, it is "now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one syllable."—See his Quarto Dict. So Walker: "It is now almost universally written ake and akes."—See Walker's Principles, No. 355. So Webster: "Ake, less properly written ache."—See his Octavo Dict. But Worcester seems rather to prefer ache.—G. B.

Page 2102

[128] This book has, probably, more recommenders than any other of the sort. I have not patience to count them accurately, but it would seem that more than a thousand of the great and learned have certified to the world, that they never before had seen so good a spelling-book! With personal knowledge of more than fifty of the signers, G. B. refused to add his poor name, being ashamed of the mischievous facility with which very respectable men had loaned their signatures.

[129] Scrat, for scratch. The word is now obsolete, and may be altered by taking ch in the correction.

[130] "Hairbrained, adj. This should rather be written harebrained; unconstant, unsettled, wild as a hare."—Johnson's Dict. Webster writes it harebrained, as from hare and brain. Worcester, too, prefers this form.

[131] "The whole number of verbs in the English language, regular and irregular, simple and compounded, taken together, is about 4,300. See, in Dr. Ward's Essays on the English language, the catalogue of English verbs. The whole number of irregular verbs, the defective included, is about 176."—Lowth's Gram., Philad., 1799, p. 59. Lindley Murray copied the first and the last of these three sentences, but made the latter number "about 177."—Octavo Gram., p. 109; Duodecimo, p. 88. In the latter work, he has this note: "The whole number of words, in the English language, is about thirty-five thousand."—ib. Churchill says, "The whole number of verbs in the English language, according to Dr. Ward, is about 4,300. The irregulars, including the auxiliaries [sic—KTH], scarcely exceed 200."—New Gram., p. 113. An other late author has the following enumeration: "There are in the English language about twenty thousand five hundred nouns, forty pronouns, eight thousand verbs, nine thousand two hundred adnouns, two thousand six hundred adverbs, sixty-nine prepositions, nineteen conjunctions, and sixty-eight interjections; in all, above forty thousand words."—Rev. David Blair's Gram., p. 10. William Ward, M. A., in an old grammar undated, which speaks of Dr. Lowth's as one with which the public had "very lately been favoured," says: "There are four Thousand and about Five Hundred Verbs in the English [language]."—Ward's Practical Gram., p. 52.

[132] These definitions are numbered here, because each of them is the first of a series now begun. In class rehearsals, the pupils may be required to give the definitions in turn; and, to prevent any from losing the place, it is important that the numbers be mentioned. When all have become sufficiently familiar with the definitions, the exercise may be performed without them. They are to be read or repeated till faults disappear—or till the teacher is satisfied with the performance. He may then save time, by commanding his class to proceed more briefly; making such distinctions as are required in the praxis, but ceasing to explain the terms employed; that is, omitting all the definitions, for brevity's sake. This remark is applicable likewise to all the subsequent praxes of etymological parsing.]

Page 2103

[133] The modifications which belong to the different parts of speech consist chiefly of the inflections or changes to which certain words are subject. But I use the term sometimes in a rather broader sense, as including not only variations of words, but, in certain instances, their original forms, and also such of their relations as serve to indicate peculiar properties. This is no questionable license in the use of the term; for when the position of a word modifies its meaning, or changes its person or case, this effect is clearly a grammatical modification, though there be no absolute inflection. Lord Kames observes, “That quality, which distinguishes one genus, one species, or even one individual, from an other, is termed a modification: thus the same particular that is termed a property or quality, when considered as belonging to an individual, or a class of individuals, is termed a modification, when considered as distinguishing the individual or the class from an other.”—Elements of Criticism, Vol. ii, p. 392.

[134] Wells, having put the articles into the class of adjectives, produces authority as follows: “‘The words a or an, and the, are reckoned by some grammarians a separate part of speech; but, as they in all respects come under the definition of the adjective, it is unnecessary, as well as improper, to rank them as a class by themselves.’—Cannon.” To this he adds, “The articles are also ranked with adjectives by Priestley, E. Oliver, Bell, Elphinston, M’Culloch, D’Orsey, Lindsay, Joel, Greenwood. Smetham, Dalton, King, Hort, Buchanan, Crane, J. Russell, Frazee, Cutler, Perley, Swett, Day. Goodenow, Willard, Robbins, Felton, Snyder, Butler, S. Barrett, Badgley, Howe, Whiting, Davenport, Fowle, Weld, and others.”—Wells’s School Gram., p. 69. In this way, he may have made it seem to many, that, after thorough investigation, he had decided the point discreetly, and with preponderance of authority. For it is claimed as a “peculiar merit” of this grammar, that, “Every point of practical importance is thoroughly investigated, and reference is carefully made to the researches of preceding writers, in all cases which admit of being determined by weight of authority.”—WILLIAM RUSSELL, on the cover. But, in this instance, as in sundry others, wherein he opposes the more common doctrine, and cites concurrent authors, both he and all his authorities are demonstrably to the wrong. For how can they be right, while reason, usage, and the prevailing opinion, are still against them? If we have forty grammars which reject, the articles as a part of speech, we have more than twice as many which recognize them as such; among which are those of the following authors: viz., Adam, D. Adams, Ainsworth, Alden, Alger, W. Allen, Ash, Bacon, Barnard, Beattie, Beck, Bicknell, Bingham, Blair, J.

Page 2104

H. Brown, Bucke, Bullions, Burn, Burr, Chandler, Churchill, Coar, Cobbett, Cobbin, Comly, Cooper, Davis, Dearborn, Ensell, Everett, Farnum, Fisk, A. Flint, Folker, Fowler, Frost, R. G. Greene, Greenleaf, Guy, Hall, Hallock, Hart, Harrison, Matt. Harrison, Hazen, Hendrick, Hiley, Hull, Ingersoll, Jaudon, Johnson, Kirkham, Latham, Lennie, A. Lewis, Lowth, Maltby, Maunder, Mennye, Merchant, T. H. Miller, Murray, Nixon, Nutting, Parker and Fox, John Peirce, Picket, Pond, S. Putnam, Russell, Sanborn, Sanders, R. C. Smith, Rev. T. Smith, Spencer, Tower, Tucker, Walker, Webber, Wilcox, Wilson, Woodworth, J. E. Worcester, S. Worcester, Wright. The articles characterize our language more than some of the other parts of speech, and are worthy of distinction for many reasons, one of which is the very great frequency of their use.

[135] In Murray's Abridgement, and in his "Second Edition," 12mo, the connective in this place is "or;" and so is it given by most of his amenders; as in Alger's Murray, p. 68; Alden's, 89; Bacon's, 48; Cooper's, 111; A. Flint's, 65; Maltby's, 60; Miller's, 67; S. Putnam's, 74; Russell's, 52; T. Smith's, 61. All these, and many more, repeat both of these ill-devised rules.

[136] When this was written, Dr. Webster was living.

[137] In French, the preposition a, (to,) is always carefully distinguished from the verb a, (has,) by means of the grave accent, which is placed over the former for that purpose. And in general also the Latin word a, (from,) is marked in the same way. But, with us, no appropriate sign has hitherto been adopted to distinguish the preposition a from the article a; though the Saxon a, (to,) is given by Johnson with an acute, even where no other a is found. Hence, in their ignorance, thousands of vulgar readers, and among them the authors of sundry grammars, have constantly mistaken this preposition for an article. Examples: "Some adverbs are composed of the article a prefixed to nouns; as a-side, a-thirst, a-sleep, a-shore, a-ground, &c."—Comly's Gram., p67. "Repeat some [adverbs] that are composed of the article a and nouns."—Kirkham's Gram., p. 89. "To go a fishing;" "To go a hunting;" i.e. "to go on a fishing voyage or business;" "to go on a hunting party."—Murray's Gram., p. 221; Fisk's, 147; Ingersoll's, 157; Smith's, 184; Bullions's, 129; Merchant's, 101; Weld's, 192, and others. That this interpretation is false and absurd, may be seen at once by any body who can read Latin; for, a hunting, a fishing, &c., are expressed by the supine in um: as, "Venatum ire."—Virg. AEn. i.e., "To go a hunting." "Abeo piscatum."—Beza. i.e. "I go a fishing."—John, xxi, 3. Every school-boy ought to know better than to call this a an article. A fishing is equivalent to the infinitive to fish. For the Greek of the foregoing text is [Greek: Hupago halieuein,] which is rendered by Montanus, "Vado piscari;" i.e., "I go to fish." One author ignorantly says, "The article a seems to have no particular meaning, and is hardly proper in such expressions as these. 'He went a-hunting,' She lies a-bed all day.'"—Wilcox's Gram., p. 59. No marvel that he could not find the meaning of an article in this a! With doltish and double inconsistency, Weld first calls this "The article a employed in the sense of a preposition," (E. Gram., p. 177,) and afterwards adopts Murray's interpretation as above cited! Some, too, have an absurd practice of joining this preposition to the participle; generally with the hyphen, but sometimes without: thus, "A-GOING, In motion; as, to set a mill agoing."—Webster's Dict. The doctor does not tell us what part of speech agoing is; but, certainly, "to set the mill to going," expresses just the same meaning, and is about as often heard. In the burial-service of the Common Prayer Book, we read, "They are even as asleep;" but, in the ninetieth Psalm, from which this is taken, we find the text thus: "They are as a sleep;" that is, as a dream that is fled. Now these are very different readings, and cannot both be right.

Page 2105

[138] Here the lexicographer forgets his false etymology of a before the participle, and writes the words separately, as the generality of authors always have done. A was used as a preposition long before the article a appeared in the language; and I doubt whether there is any truth at all in the common notions of its origin. Webster says, "In the words abed, ashore, &c., and before the participles acoming, agoing, ashooting, [he should have said, 'and before participles; as, a coming, a going, a shooting,'] a has been supposed a contraction of on or at. It may be so in some cases; but with the participles, it is sometimes a contraction of the Saxon prefix ge, and sometimes perhaps of the Celtic ag."—Improved Gram., p. 175. See Philos. Gram., p. 244. What admirable learning is this! A, forsooth, is a contraction of ge! And this is the doctor's reason for joining it to the participle!

[139] The following construction may be considered an archaism, or a form of expression that is now obsolete: "You have bestowed a many of kindnesses upon me."—Walker's English Particles, p. 278.

Page 2106

[140] “If I or we is set before a name, it [the name] is of the first person: as, I, N— N—, declare; we, N— and M— do promise.”—Ward’s Gram., p. 83. “Nouns which relate to the person or persons speaking, are said to be of the first person; as, I, William, speak to you.”—Fowle’s Common School Gram., Part ii, p. 22. The first person of nouns is admitted by Ainsworth, R. W. Bailey, Barnard, Brightland, J. H. Brown, Bullions, Butler, Cardell, Chandler, S. W. Clark, Cooper, Day, Emmons, Farnum, Felton, Fisk, John Flint, Fowle, Frazee, Gilbert, Goldsbury, R. G. Greene, S. S. Greene, Hall, Hallock, Hamlin, Hart, Hendrick, Hiley, Perley, Picket, Pinneo, Russell, Sanborn, Sanders, Smart, R. C. Smith, Spear, Weld, Wells, Wilcox, and others. It is denied, either expressly or virtually, by Alger, Bacon, Comly, Davis, Dilworth, Greenleaf, Guy, Hazen, Ingersoll, Jaudon, Kirkham, Latham, L. Murray, Maltby, Merchant, Miller, Nutting, Parkhurst, S. Putnam, Rev. T. Smith, and others. Among the grammarians who do not appear to have noticed the persons of nouns at all, are Alden, W. Allen, D. C. Allen, Ash, Bicknell, Bingham, Blair, Buchanan, Bucke, Burn, Burr, Churchill, Coar, Cobb, Dalton, Dearborn, Abel Flint, R. W. Green, Harrison, Johnson, Lennie, Lowth, Mennye, Mulligan, Priestley, Staniford, Ware, Webber, and Webster.

[141] Prof. S. S. Greene most absurdly and erroneously teaches, that, “When the speaker wishes to represent himself, he cannot use his name, but must use some other word, as, I; [and] when he wishes to represent the hearer, he must use thou or you.”—Greene’s Elements of E. Gram., 1853, p. xxxiv. The examples given above sufficiently show the falsity of all this.

[142] In shoe and shoes, canoe and canoes, the o is sounded slenderly, like oo; but in doe or does, foe or foes, and the rest of the fourteen nouns above, whether singular or plural, it retains the full sound of its own name, O. Whether the plural of two should be “twoes” as Churchill writes it, or “twos,” which is more common, is questionable. According to Dr. Ash and the Spectator, the plural of who, taken substantively, is “whos.”—Ash’s Gram., p. 131.

[143] There are some singular compounds of the plural word pence, which form their own plurals regularly; as, sixpence, sixpences. “If you do not all show like gilt twopences to me.”—SHAKESPEARE. “The sweepstakes of which are to be composed of the disputed difference in the value of two doubtful sixpences.”—GOODELL’S LECT.: Liberator. Vol. ix, p. 145.

[144] In the third canto of Lord Byron’s Prophecy of Dante, this noun is used in the singular number:—

“And ocean written o’er would not afford
Space for the annal, yet it shall go forth.”

Page 2107

[145] “They never yet had separated for their daylight beds, without a climax to their orgy, something like the present scene.”—The Crock of Gold, p. 13. “And straps never called upon to diminish that long whity-brown interval between shoe and trowser.”—Ib., p. 24. “And he gave them victual in abundance.”—2 Chron., xi, 23. “Store of victual.”—Ib., verse 11.

[146] The noun physic properly signifies medicine, or the science of medicine: in which sense, it seems to have no plural. But Crombie and the others cite one or two instances in which physic and metaphysic are used, not very accurately, in the sense of the singular of physics and metaphysics. Several grammarians also quote some examples in which physics, metaphysics, politics, optics, and other similar names of sciences are used with verbs or pronouns of the singular number; but Dr. Crombie justly says the plural construction of such words, “is more common, and more agreeable to analogy.”—On Etym. and Syntax, p. 27.

[147] “Benjamin Franklin, following the occupation of a compositor in a printing-office, at a limited weekly wage,” &c.—Chambers’ Edinburgh Journal, No. 232. “WAGE, Wages, hire. The singular number is still frequently used, though Dr. Johnson thought it obsolete.”—Glossary of Craven. 1828.

[148] Our lexicographers generally treat the word firearms as a close compound that has no singular. But some write it with a hyphen, as fire-arms. In fact the singular is sometimes used, but the way of writing it is unsettled. Dr. Johnson, in his Dictionary, defines a carbine as, “a small sort of fire arm;” Webster has it, “a short gun, or fire arm;” Worcester, “a small fire-arm;” Cobb, “a sort of small firearms.” Webster uses “fire-arm,” in defining “stock.”

[149] “But, soon afterwards, he made a glorious amend for his fault, at the battle of Plataea.”—Hist. Reader, p. 48.

[150] “There not a dreg of guilt defiles.”—Watts’s Lyrics, p. 27.

[151] In Young’s Night Thoughts, (N. vii, l. 475.) lee, the singular of lees, is found; Churchill says, (Gram., p. 211,) “Prior has used lee, as the singular of lees;” Webster and Bolles have also both forms in their dictionaries:—

“Refine, exalt, throw down their poisonous lee,
And make them sparkle in the bowl of bliss.”—Young.

[152] “The ‘Procrustean bed’ has been a myth heretofore; it promises soon to be a shamble and a slaughterhouse in reality.”—St. Louis Democrat, 1855.

Page 2108

[153] J. W. Wright remarks, "Some nouns admit of no plural distinctions: as, wine, wood, beer, sugar, tea, timber, fruit, meat, goodness, happiness, and perhaps all nouns ending in ness."—Philos. Gram., p. 139. If this learned author had been brought up in the woods, and had never read of Murray's "richer wines," or heard of Solomon's "dainty meats,"—never chattered in the market about sugars and teas, or read in Isaiah that "all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags," or avowed, like Timothy, "a good profession before many witnesses,"—he might still have hewed the timbers of some rude cabin, and partaken of the wild fruits which nature affords. If these nine plurals are right, his assertion is nine times wrong, or misapplied by himself seven times in the ten.

[154] "I will not suppose it possible for my dear James to fall into either the company or the language of those persons who talk, and even write, about barleys, wheats, clovers, flours, grasses, and malts."—Cobbett's E. Gram., p. 29.

[155] "It is a general rule, that all names of things measured or weighed, have no plural; for in them not number, but quantity, is regarded: as, wool, wine, oil. When we speak, however, of different kinds, we use the plural: as, the coarser wools, the richer wines, the finer oils."—Murray's Gram., p. 41.

[156] So pains is the regular plural of pain, and, by Johnson, Webster, and other lexicographers, is recognized only as plural; but Worcester inserts it among his stock words, with a comment, thus: "Pains, n. Labor; work; toil; care; trouble. [Fist] According to the best usage, the word pains, though of plural form, is used in these senses as singular, and is joined with a singular verb; as, 'The pains they had taken was very great.' Clarendon. 'No pains is taken.' Pope. 'Great pains is taken.' Priestley. 'Much pains.' Bolingbroke."—Univ. and Crit. Dict. The multiplication of anomalies of this kind is so undesirable, that nothing short of a very clear decision of Custom, against the use of the regular concord, can well justify the exception. Many such examples may be cited, but are they not examples of false syntax? I incline to think "the best usage" would still make all these verbs plural. Dr. Johnson cites the first example thus: "The pains they had taken were very great. Clarendon."—Quarto Dict., w. Pain. And the following recent example is unquestionably right: "Pains have been taken to collect the information required."—President Fillmore's Message, 1852.

Page 2109

[157] “And the fish that is in the river shall die.”—Exod., vii, 18. “And the fish that was in the river died.”—Ib., 21. Here the construction is altogether in the singular, and yet the meaning seems to be plural. This construction appears to be more objectionable, than the use of the word fish with a plural verb. The French Bible here corresponds with ours: but the Latin Vulgate, and the Greek Septuagint, have both the noun and the verb in the plural: as, “The fishes that are in the river,”—“The fishes that were,” &c. In our Bible, fowl, as well fish, is sometimes plural; and yet both words, in some passages, have the plural form: as, “And fowl that may fly,” &c.—Gen., i, 20. “I will consume the fowls of the heaven, and the fishes of the sea.”—Zeph., i, 3.

[158] Some authors, when they give to mere words the construction of plural nouns, are in the habit of writing them in the form of possessives singular; as, “They have of late, ’tis true, reformed, in some measure, the gouty joints and darning work of whereunto’s, whereby’s, thereof’s, therewith’s, and the rest of this kind.”—Shaftesbury. “Here,” says Dr. Crombie, “the genitive singular is improperly used for the objective case plural. It should be, whereuntos, wherebys, thereofs, therewiths.”—Treatise on Etym. and Synt., p. 338. According to our rules, these words should rather be, whereuntoes, wherebies, thereofs, therewiths. “Any word, when used as the name of itself, becomes a noun.”—Goodenow’s Gram., p. 26. But some grammarians say, “The plural of words, considered as words merely, is formed by the apostrophe and s; as, ‘Who, that has any taste, can endure the incessant, quick returns of the also’s, and the likewise’s, and the moreover’s, and the however’s, and the notwithstanding’s?’—CAMPBELL.”—Wells’s School Gram., p. 54. Practice is not altogether in favour of this principle, and perhaps it would be better to decide with Crombie that such a use of the apostrophe is improper.

[159] “The Supreme Being (God, [Greek: Theos], Deus, Dieu, &c.) is, in all languages, masculine; in as much as the masculine sex is the superior and more excellent; and as He is the Creator of all, the Father of gods and men.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 54. This remark applies to all the direct names of the Deity, but the abstract idea of Deity itself, [Greek: To Theion], Numen, Godhead, or Divinity, is not masculine, but neuter. On this point, some notions have been published for grammar, that are too heterodox to be cited or criticised here. See O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 208.

[160] That is, we give them sex, if we mean to represent them as persons. In the following example, a character commonly esteemed feminine is represented as neuter, because the author would seem to doubt both the sex and the personality: “I don’t know what a witch is, or what it was then.”—N. P. Rogers’s Writings, p. 154.

Page 2110

[161] There is the same reason for doubling the t in cittess, as for doubling the d in goddess. See Rule 3d for Spelling. Yet Johnson, Todd, Webster, Bolles, Worcester, and others, spell it citess, with one t.

“Cits and citesses raise a joyful strain.”—DRYDEN: Joh. Dict.

[162] “But in the English we have no Genders, as has been seen in the foregoing Notes. The same may be said of Cases.”—Brightland’s Gram., Seventh Edition, Lond., 1746, p. 85.

[163] The Rev. David Blair so palpably contradicts himself in respect to this matter, that I know not which he favours most, two cases or three. In his main text, he adopts no objective, but says: “According to the sense or relation in which nouns are used, they are in the NOMINATIVE or [the] POSSESSIVE CASE, thus, nom. man; poss. man’s.” To this he adds the following marginal note: “In the English language, the distinction of the objective case is observable only in the pronouns. Cases being nothing but inflections, where inflections do not exist, there can be no grammatical distinction of cases, for the terms inflection and case are perfectly synonymous and convertible. As the English noun has only one change of termination, so no other case is here adopted. The objective case is noticed in the pronouns; and in parsing nouns it is easy to distinguish subjects from objects. A noun which governs the verb may be described as in the nominative case, and one governed by the verb, or following a preposition, as in the objective case.”—Blair’s Practical Gram., Seventh Edition, London, 1815, p. 11. The terms inflection and case are not practically synonymous, and never were so in the grammars of the language from which they are derived. The man who rejects the objective case of English nouns, because it has not a form peculiar to itself alone, must reject the accusative and the vocative of all neuter nouns in Latin, for the same reason; and the ablative, too, must in general be discarded on the same principle. In some other parts of his book, Blair speaks of the objective case of nouns as familiarly as do other authors!

[164] This author says, “We choose to use the term subjective rather than nominative, because it is shorter, and because it conveys its meaning by its sound, whereas the latter word means, indeed, little or nothing in itself.”—Text-Book, p. 88. This appears to me a foolish innovation, too much in the spirit of Oliver B. Peirce, who also adopts it. The person who knows not the meaning of the word nominative, will not be very likely to find out what is meant by subjective; especially as some learned grammarians, even such men as Dr. Crombie and Professor Bullions, often erroneously call the word which is governed by the verb its subject. Besides, if we say subjective and objective, in stead of nominative and objective, we shall inevitably change the accent of both, and give them a pronunciation hitherto unknown to the words.—G. BROWN.

Page 2111

[165] The authorities cited by Felch, for his doctrine of “possessive adnouns,” amount to nothing. They are ostensibly two. The first is a remark of Dr. Adam’s: “John’s book was formerly written Johnis book. Some have thought the ‘s a contraction of his, but improperly. Others have imagined, with more justness, that, by the addition of the ‘s, the substantive is changed into a possessive adjective.’—Adam’s Latin and English Grammar, p. 7.”—Felch’s Comp. Gram., p. 26. Here Dr. Adam by no means concurs with what these “others have imagined,” for, in the very same place, he declares the possessive case of nouns to be their only case. The second is a dogmatical and inconsistent remark of some anonymous writer in some part of the “American Journal of Education,” a work respectable indeed, but, on the subject of grammar, too often fantastical and heterodox. Felch thinks it not improper, to use the possessive case before participles; in which situation, it denotes, not the owner of something, but the agent, subject, or recipient, of the action, being, or change. And what a jumble does he make, where he attempts to resolve this ungrammatical construction!—telling us, in almost the same breath, that, “The agent of a nounal verb [i. e. participle] is never expressed,” but that, “Sometimes it [the nounal or gerundial verb] is qualified, in its nounal capacity, by a possessive adnoun indicative of its agent as a verb; as, there is nothing like one’s BEING useful he doubted their HAVING it:” and then concluding, “Hence it appears, that the present participle may be used as agent or object, and yet retain its character as a verb.”—Felch’s Comprehensive Gram., p. 81. Alas for the schools, if the wise men of the East receive for grammar such utter confusion, and palpable self-contradiction, as this!

[166] A critic’s accuracy is sometimes liable to be brought into doubt, by subsequent alterations of the texts which, he quotes. Many an error cited in this volume of criticism, may possibly not be found in some future edition of the book referred to; as several of those which were pointed out by Lowth, have disappeared from the places named for them. Churchill also cites this line as above; (New Gram., p. 214;) but, in my edition of the Odyssey, by Pope, the reading is this: “By lov’d Telemachus’s blooming years!”—Book xi, L 84.

[167] Corpse forms the plural regularly, corpses; as in 2 Kings, xix, 35: “In the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.”

Page 2112

[168] Murray says, "An adjective put without a substantive, with the definite article before it, becomes a substantive in sense and meaning, and is written as a substantive: as, 'Providence rewards the good, and punishes the bad.'" If I understand this, it is very erroneous, and plainly contrary to the fact. I suppose the author to speak of good persons and bad persons; and, if he does, is there not an ellipsis in his language? How can it be said, that good and bad are here substantives, since they have a plural meaning and refuse the plural form? A word "written as a substantive," unquestionably is a substantive; but neither of these is here entitled to that name. Yet Smith, and other satellites of Murray, endorse his doctrine; and say, that good and bad in this example, and all adjectives similarly circumstanced, "may be considered nouns in parsing."—Smith's New Gram., p. 52. "An adjective with the definite article before it, becomes a noun, (of the third person, plural number,) and must be parsed as such."—R. G. Greene's Grammatical Text-Book, p. 55.

[169] Here the word English appears to be used substantively, not by reason of the article, but rather because it has no article; for, when the definite article is used before such a word taken in the singular number, it seems to show that the noun language is understood. And it is remarkable, that before the names or epithets by which we distinguish the languages, this article may, in many instances, be either used or not used, repeated or not repeated, without any apparent impropriety: as, "This is the case with the Hebrew, French, Italian, and Spanish."—Murray's Gram., i, p. 38. Better, perhaps: "This is the case with the Hebrew, the French, the Italian, and the Spanish." But we may say: "This is the case with Hebrew, French, Italian, and Spanish." In the first of these forms, there appears to be an ellipsis of the plural noun languages, at the end of the sentence; in the second, an ellipsis of the singular noun language, after each of the national epithets; in the last, no ellipsis, but rather a substantive use of the words in question.

[170] The Doctor may, for aught I know, have taken his notion of this "noun," from the language "of Dugald Dalgetty, boasting of his '5000 Irishes' in the prison of Argyle." See Letter of Wendell Phillips, in the Liberator, Vol. xi, p. 211.

[171] Lindley Murray, or some ignorant printer of his octavo Grammar, has omitted this s; and thereby spoiled the prosody, if not the sense, of the line:

"Of Sericana, where Chinese drive," &c.
—Fourth American Ed., p. 345.

If there was a design to correct the error of Milton's word, something should have been inserted. The common phrase, "the Chinese," would give the sense, and the right number of syllables, but not the right accent. It would be sufficiently analogous with our mode of forming the words, Englishmen, Frenchmen, Scotchmen, Dutchmen, and Irishmen, and perhaps not unpoetical, to say:

Page 2113

"Of Sericana, where Chinese-men drive,
With sails and wind, their cany wagons light."

[172] The last six words are perhaps more frequently pronouns; and some writers will have well-nigh all the rest to be pronouns also. "In like manner, in the English, there have been rescued from the adjectives, and classed with the pronouns, any, aught, each, every, many, none, one, other, some, such, that, those, this, these; and by other writers, all, another, both, either, few, first, last, neither, and several."—Wilson's Essay on Gram., p. 106. Had the author said wrested, in stead of "rescued," he would have taught a much better doctrine. These words are what Dr. Lowth correctly called "Pronominal Adjectives."—Lowth's Gram., p. 24. This class of adjectives includes most of the words which Murray, Lennie, Bullions, Kirkham, and others, so absurdly denominate "Adjective Pronouns." Their "Distributive Adjective Pronouns, each, every, either, neither;" their "Demonstrative Adjective Pronouns, this, that, these, those;" and their "Indefinite Adjective Pronouns, some, other, any, one, all, such, &c.," are every one of them here; for they all are Adjectives, and not Pronouns. And it is obvious, that the corresponding words in Latin, Greek, or French, are adjectives likewise, and are, for the most part, so called; so that, from General Grammar, or "the usages of other languages," arises an argument for ranking them as adjectives, rather than as pronouns. But the learned Dr. Bullions, after improperly assuming that every adjective must "express the quality of a noun," and thence arguing that no such definitives can rightly be called adjectives, most absurdly suggests, that "other languages," or "the usages of other languages," generally assign to these English words the place of substitutes! But so remarkable for self-contradiction, as well as other errors, is this gentleman's short note upon the classification of these words, that I shall present the whole of it for the reader's consideration.

"NOTE. The distributives, demonstratives, and indefinites, cannot strictly be called pronouns; since they never stand instead of nouns, but always agree with a noun expressed or understood: Neither can they be properly called adjectives, since they never express the quality of a noun. They are here classed with pronouns, in accordance with the usages of other languages, which generally assign them this place. All these, together with the possessives, in parsing, may with sufficient propriety be termed adjectives, being uniformly regarded as such in syntax."—Bullions's Principles of English Gram., p. 27. (See also his Appendix III, E. Gram., p. 199.)

Page 2114

What a sample of grammatical instruction is here! The pronominal adjectives “cannot properly be called adjectives,” but “they may with sufficient propriety be termed adjectives!” And so may “the possessives,” or the personal pronouns in the possessive case! “Here,” i.e., in Etymology, they are all “classed with pronouns,” but, “in Syntax,” they are “uniformly regarded as adjectives!” Precious MODEL for the “Series of Grammars, English, Latin, and Greek, all on THE SAME PLAN!”

[173] Some, for somewhat, or in some degree, appears to me a vulgarism; as, “This pause is generally some longer than that of a period.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 271. The word what seems to have been used adverbially in several different senses; in none of which is it much to be commended: as, “Though I forbear, what am I eased?”—Job, xvi, 6. “What advantageth it me?”—1 Cor., xv, 32. Here what, means in what degree? how much? or wherein? “For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband?”—1 Cor., vii, 16. Here how would have been better. “The enemy, having his country wasted, what by himself and what by the soldiers, findeth succour in no place.”—Spenser. Here what means partly;—“wasted partly by himself and partly by the soldiers.” This use of what was formerly very common, but is now, I think, obsolete. What before an adjective seems sometimes to denote with admiration the degree of the quality; and is called, by some, an adverb; as, “What partial judges are our love and hate!”—Dryden. But here I take what to be an adjective; as when we say, such partial judges, some partial judges, &c. “What need I be forward with Death, that calls not on me?”—Shakspeare. Here what seems to be improperly put in place of why.

[174] Dr. Blair, in his Lectures on Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres, often uses the phrase “this much,” but it is, I think, more common to say “thus much,” even when the term is used substantively.

[175] There seems to be no good reason for joining an and other: on the contrary, the phrase an other is always as properly two words, as the phrase the other, and more so. The latter, being long ago vulgarly contracted into t’other, probably gave rise to the apparent contraction another; which many people nowadays are ignorant enough to divide wrong, and mispronounce. See “a-no-ther” in Murray’s Spelling-Book, p. 71; and “a-noth-er” in Emerson’s, p. 76. An here excludes any other article; and both analogy and consistency require that the words be separated. Their union, like that of the words the and other, has led sometimes to an improper repetition of the article: as, “Another such a man,” for, “An other such man.”—“Bind my hair up. An ’twas yesterday? No, nor the t’other day.”—BEN JONSON: in Joh. Dict. “He can not tell when he should take the tone, and when the tother.”—SIR T. MOORE: Tooke’s D. P., Vol. 15, p. 448. That is—“when he should take the one and when the other.” Besides, the word other is declined, like a noun, and has the plural others; but the compounding of another constrains our grammarians to say, that this word “has no plural.” All these difficulties will be removed by writing an other as two words. The printers chiefly rule this matter. To them, therefore, I refer it; with directions, not to unite these words for me, except where it has been done in the manuscript, for the sake of exactness in quotation.—G. BROWN.

Page 2115

[176] This is a misapplication of the word between, which cannot have reference to more than two things or parties: the term should have been among.—G. BROWN.

[177] I suppose that, in a comparison of two, any of the degrees may be accurately employed. The common usage is, to construe the positive with as, the comparative with than, and the superlative with of. But here custom allows us also to use the comparative with of, after the manner of the superlative; as, “This is the better of the two.” It was but an odd whim of some old pedant, to find in this a reason for declaring it ungrammatical to say “This is the best of the two.” In one grammar, I find the former construction condemned, and the latter approved, thus: “This is the better book of the two. Not correct, because the comparative state of the adjective, (better.) can not correspond with the preposition, of. The definite article, the, is likewise improperly applied to the comparative state; the sentence should stand thus, This is the best book of the two.”—Chandler’s Gram., Ed. of 1821, p. 130; Ed. of 1847, p. 151.

[178] This example appears to have been borrowed from Campbell; who, however, teaches a different doctrine from Murray, and clearly sustains my position; “Both degrees are in such cases used indiscriminately. We say rightly, either ‘This is the weaker of the two,’ or—‘the weakest of the two.’”—Philosophy of Rhetoric, p. 202. How positively do some other men contradict this! “In comparing two persons or things, by means of an adjective, care must be taken, that the superlative state be not employed: We properly say, ‘John is the taller of the two;’ but we should not say, ‘John is the tallest of the two.’ The reason is plain: we compare but two persons, and must therefore use the comparative state.”—Wright’s Philosophical Gram., p. 143. Rev. Matt. Harrison, too, insists on it, that the superlative must “have reference to more than two,” and censures Dr. Johnson for not observing the rule. See Harrison’s English Language, p. 255.

Page 2116

[179] L. Murray copied this passage literally, (though anonymously,) as far as the colon; and of course his book teaches us to account "the termination ish, in some sort, a degree of comparison."—Octavo Gram., p. 47. But what is more absurd, than to think of accounting this, or any other suffix, "a degree of comparison?" The inaccuracy of the language is a sufficient proof of the haste with which Johnson adopted this notion, and of the blindness with which he has been followed. The passage is now found in most of our English grammars. Sanborn expresses the doctrine thus: "Adjectives terminating with ish, denote a degree of comparison less than the positive; as, saltish, whitish, blackish."—Analytical Gram., p. 87. But who does not know, that most adjectives of this ending are derived from nouns, and are compared only by adverbs, as childish, foolish, and so forth? Wilcox says, "Words ending in ish, generally express a slight degree; as, reddish, bookish."—Practical Gram., p. 17. But who will suppose that foolish denotes but a slight degree of folly, or bookish but a slight fondness for books? And, with such an interpretation, what must be the meaning of more bookish or most foolish?

[180] "'A rodde shall come furth of the stocke of Jesse.' Primer, Hen. VIII."—Craven Glossary.

[181] Midst is a contraction of the regular superlative middest, used by Spenser, but now obsolete. Midst, also, seems to be obsolete as an adjective, though still frequently used as a noun; as, "In the midst."—Webster. It is often a poetic contraction for the preposition amidst. In some cases it appears to be an adverb. In the following example it is equivalent to middlemost, and therefore an adjective: "Still greatest he the midst, Now dragon grown."—Paradise Lost, B. x, l. 528.

[182] What I here say, accords with the teaching of all our lexicographers and grammarians, except one dauntless critic, who has taken particular pains to put me, and some three or four others, on the defensive. This gentleman not only supposes less and fewer, least and fewest, to be sometimes equivalent in meaning, but actually exhibits them as being also etymologically of the same stock. Less and least, however, he refers to three different positives, and more and most, to four. And since, in once instance, he traces less and more, least and most, to the same primitive word, it follows of course, if he is right, that more is there equivalent to less and most is equivalent to least! The following is a copy of this remarkable "DECLENSION ON INDEFINITE SPECIFYING ADNAMES," and just one half of the table is wrong: "Some, more, most; Some, less, least; Little, less, least; Few, fewer or less, fewest or least; Several, more, most; Much, more, most; Many, more most."—Oliver B Peirce's Gram., p. 144.

Page 2117

[183] Murray himself had the same false notion concerning six of these adjectives, and perhaps all the rest; for his indefinite andsoforths may embrace just what the reader pleases to imagine. Let the following paragraph be compared with the observations and proofs which I shall offer: "Adjectives that have in themselves a superlative signification, do not properly admit of the superlative or [the] comparative form superadded: such as, 'Chief, extreme, perfect, right, universal, supreme,' &c.; which are sometimes improperly written, 'Chiefest, extremest, perfectest, rightest, most universal, most supreme,' &c. The following expressions are therefore improper. 'He sometimes claims admission to the chiefest offices;' 'The quarrel became so universal and national;' 'A method of attaining the rightest and greatest happiness.' The phrases, so perfect, so right, so extreme, so universal, &c., are incorrect; because they imply that one thing is less perfect, less extreme, &c. than another, which is not possible."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, Vol. i, p. 167. For himself, a man may do as he pleases about comparing these adjectives; but whoever corrects others, on such principles as the foregoing, will have work enough on his hands. But the writer who seems to exceed all others, in error on this point, is Joseph W. Wright. In his "Philosophical Grammar," p. 51st, this author gives a list of seventy-two adjectives, which, he says, "admit of no variation of state;" i. e., are not compared. Among them are round, flat, wet, dry, clear, pure, odd, free, plain, fair, chaste, blind, and more than forty others, which are compared about as often as any words in the language. Dr. Blair is hypercritically censured by him, for saying "most excellent," "more false," "the chastest kind," "more perfect" "fuller, more full, fullest, most full, truest and most true;" Murray, for using "quite wrong;" and Cobbett, for the phrase, "perfect correctness." "Correctness," says the critic, "does not admit of degrees of perfection."—ib., pp. 143 and 151. But what does such a thinker know about correctness? If this excellent quality cannot be perfect, surely nothing can. The words which Dr. Bullions thinks it "improper to compare," because he judges them to have "an absolute or superlative signification," are "true, perfect, universal, chief, extreme, supreme, &c."—no body knows how many. See Principles of E. Gram., p. 19 and p. 115.

[184] The regular comparison of this word, (like, liker, likest,) seems to be obsolete, or nearly so. It is seldom met with, except in old books: yet we say, more like, or most like, less like, or least like. "To say the flock with whom he is, is likest to Christ."—Barclay's Works, Vol. i, p. 180. "Of Godlike pow'r? for likest Gods they seem'd."—Milton, P. L. B. vi, l. 301.

Page 2118

[185] This example, and several others that follow it, are no ordinary solecisms; they are downright Irish bulls, making actions or relations reciprocal, where reciprocity is utterly unimaginable. Two words can no more be “derived from each other,” than two living creatures can have received their existence from each other. So, two things can never “succeed each other,” except they alternate or move in a circle; and a greater number in train can “follow one another” only in some imperfect sense, not at all reciprocal. In some instances, therefore, the best form of correction will be, to reject the reciprocal terms altogether—G. BROWN.

[186] This doctrine of punctuation, if not absolutely false in itself, is here very badly taught. When only two words, of any sort, occur in the same construction, they seldom require the comma; and never can they need more than one, whereas these grammarians, by their plural word “commas,” suggest a constant demand for two or more.—G. BROWN.

[187] Some grammarians exclude the word it from the list of personal pronouns, because it does not convey the idea of that personality which consists in individual intelligence. On the other hand, they will have who to be a personal pronoun, because it is literally applied to persons only, or intelligent beings. But I judge them to be wrong in respect to both; and, had they given definitions of their several classes of pronouns, they might perhaps have found out that the word it is always personal, in a grammatical sense, and who, either relative or interrogative.

[188] “Whoso and whatso are found in old authors, but are now out of use.”—Churchill's Gram., p. 76. These antiquated words are equivalent in import to whosoever and whatsoever. The former, whoso, being used many times in the Bible, and occasionally also by the poets, as by Cowper, Whittier, and others, can hardly be said to be obsolete; though Wells, like Churchill, pronounced it so, in his first edition.

[189] “‘The man is prudent which speaks little.’ This sentence is incorrect, because which is a pronoun of the neuter gender.”—Murray's Exercises, p. 18. “Which is also a relative, but it is of [the] neuter gender. It is also interrogative.”—Webster's Improved Gram., p. 26. For oversights like these, I cannot account. The relative which is of all the genders, as every body ought to know, who has ever heard of the horse which Alexander rode, of the ass which spoke to Balaam, or of any of the animals and things which Noah had with him in the ark.

Page 2119

[190] The word which also, when taken in its discriminative sense (i.e. to distinguish some persons or things from others) may have a construction of this sort; and, by ellipsis of the noun after it, it may likewise bear a resemblance to the double relative what: as, “I shall now give you two passages; and request you to point out which words are mono-syllables, which dis-syllables, which tris-syllables, and which poly-syllables.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 16. Here, indeed, the word what might be substituted for which; because that also has a discriminative sense. Either would be right; but the author might have presented the same words and thoughts rather more accurately, thus: “I shall now give you two passages; and request you to point out which words are monosyllables; which, dissyllables; which, trissyllables; and which, polysyllables.”

[191] The relative what, being equivalent to that which, sometimes has the demonstrative word that set after it, by way of pleonasm; as, “What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light, and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops.”—Matt., x, 27. In Covell’s Digest, this text is presented as “false syntax,” under the new and needless rule, “Double relatives always supply two cases.”—Digest of E. Gram., p. 143. In my opinion, to strike out the word that, would greatly weaken the expression: and so thought our translators; for no equivalent term is used in the original.

[192] As for Butler’s method of parsing these words by always recognizing a noun as being “UNDERSTOOD” before them,—a method by which, according to his publishers notice, “The ordinary unphilosophical explanation of this class of words is discarded, and a simple, intelligible, common-sense view of the matter now for the first time substituted,”—I know not what novelty there is in it, that is not also just so much error. “Compare,” says he, “these two sentences: ‘I saw whom I wanted to see;’ ‘I saw what I wanted to see. If what in the latter is equivalent to that which or the thing which, whom, in the former is equivalent to him whom, or the person whom.”—Butler’s Practical Gram., p. 51. The former example being simply elliptical of the antecedent, he judges the latter to be so too; and infers, “that what is nothing more than a relative pronoun, and includes nothing else.”—Ib. This conclusion is not well drawn, because the two examples are not analogous; and whoever thus finds “that what is nothing more than a relative,” ought also to find it is something less,—a mere adjective. “I saw the person whom I wanted to see,” is a sentence that can scarcely spare the antecedent and retain the sense; “I saw what I wanted to see," is one which cannot receive an antecedent, without changing both the sense and the construction. One may say, "I saw what things I wanted to see;" but this, instead of giving what an antecedent, makes it an adjective, while it retains the force of a relative. Or he may insert a noun before what, agreeably to the solution of Butler; as, "I saw the things, what I wanted to see;" or, if he please, both before and after; as, "I saw the things, what things I wanted to see." But still, in either case, what is no "simple relative;" for it here seems equivalent to the phrase, so many as. Or, again, he may omit the comma, and say, "I saw the thing what I wanted to see;" but this, if it be not a vulgarism, will only mean, "I saw the thing to be what I wanted to see." So that this method of parsing the pronoun what, is manifestly no improvement, but rather a perversion and misinterpretation.

Page 2120

But, for further proof of his position, Butler adduces instances of what he calls "the relative THAT with the antecedent omitted." A few examples of this," he says, "will help us to ascertain the nature of what. 'We speak that we do know,' Bible. [John, iii, 11.] 'I am that I am.' Bible. [Exod., iii, 14.] 'Eschewe that wicked is.' Gower. 'Is it possible he should know what he is, and be that he is?' Shakespeare. 'Gather the sequel by that went before.' Id. In these examples," continues he, "that is a relative; and is exactly synonymous with what. No one would contend that that stands for itself and its antecedent at the same time. The antecedent is omitted, because it is indefinite, OR EASILY SUPPLIED."—Butler's Practical Gram., p. 52; Bullions's Analytical and Practical Gram., p. 233. Converted at his wisest age, by these false arguments, so as to renounce and gainsay the doctrine taught almost universally, and hitherto spread industriously by himself, in the words of Lennie, that, "What is a compound relative, including both the relative and the antecedent," Dr. Bullions now most absurdly urges, that, "The truth is, what is a simple relative, having, wherever used, like all other relatives, BUT ONE CASE; but * * * that it always refers to a general antecedent, omitted, BUT EASILY SUPPLIED by the mind," though "not UNDERSTOOD, in the ordinary sense of that expression."—Analyt. and Pract. Gram. of 1849, p. 51. Accordingly, though he differs from Butler about this matter of "the ordinary sense," he cites the foregoing suggestions of this author, with the following compliment: "These remarks appear to me just, and conclusive on this point."—Ib., p. 233. But there must, I think, be many to whom they will appear far otherwise. These elliptical uses of that are all of them bad or questionable English; because, the ellipsis being such as may be supplied in two or three different ways, the true construction is doubtful, the true meaning not exactly determined by the words. It is quite as easy and natural to take "that" to be here a demonstrative term, having the relative which understood after it, as to suppose it "a relative," with an antecedent to be supplied before it. Since there would not be the same uncertainty, if what were in these cases substituted for that, it is evident that the terms are not "exactly synonymous;" but, even if they were so, exact synonymy would not evince a sameness of construction.

Page 2121

[193] See this erroneous doctrine in Kirkham's Grammar, p. 112; in Wells's, p. 74; in Sanborn's, p. 71, p. 96, and p. 177; in Cooper's, p. 38; in O. B. Peirce's, p. 70. These writers show a great fondness for this complex mode of parsing. But, in fact, no pronoun, not even the word what, has any double construction of cases from a real or absolute necessity; but merely because, the noun being suppressed, yet having a representative, we choose rather to understand and parse its representative doubly, than to supply the ellipsis. No pronoun includes "both the antecedent and the relative," by virtue of its own composition, or of its own derivation, as a word. No pronoun can properly be called "compound" merely because it has a double construction, and is equivalent to two other words. These positions, if true, as I am sure they are, will refute sundry assertions that are contained in the above-named grammars.

[194] Here the demonstrative word that, as well as the phrase that matter, which I form to explain its construction, unquestionably refers back to Judas's confession, that he had sinned; but still, as the word has not the connecting power of a relative pronoun, its true character is that of an adjective, and not that of a pronoun. This pronominal adjective is very often mixed with some such ellipsis, and that to repeat the import of various kinds of words and phrases: as, "God shall help her, and that right early."—Psal., xlv, 5. "Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren."—I Cor., vi, 8. "I'll know your business, that I will."—Shakespeare.

[195] Dr. Bullions has undertaken to prove, "That the word AS should not be considered a relative in any circumstances." The force of his five great arguments to this end, the reader may well conceive of, when he has compared the following one with what is shown in the 22d and 23d observations above: "3. As can never be used as a substitute for another relative pronoun, nor another relative pronoun as a substitute for it. If, then, it is a relative pronoun, it is, to say the least, a very unaccommodating one."—Bullions's Analytical and Practical Gram. of 1849, p. 233.

Page 2122

[196] The latter part of this awkward and complex rule was copied from Lowth's Grammar, p. 101. Dr. Ash's rule is, "Pronouns must always agree with the nouns for which they stand, or to which they refer, in Number, person, and gender."—Grammatical Institutes, p. 54. I quote this exactly as it stands in the book: the Italics are his, not mine. Roswell C. Smith appears to be ignorant of the change which Murray made in his fifth rule: for he still publishes as Murray's a principle of concord which the latter rejected as early as 1806: "RULE V. Corresponding with Murray's Grammar, RULE V. Pronouns must agree with the nouns for which they stand, in gender, number, AND PERSON."—Smith's New Gram., p. 130. So Allen Fisk, in his "Murray's English Grammar Simplified," p. 111; Aaron M. Merchant, in his "Abridgment of Murray's English Grammar, Revised, Enlarged and Improved," p. 79; and the Rev. J. G. Cooper, in his "Abridgment of Murray's English Grammar," p. 113; where, from the titles, every reader would expect to find the latest doctrines of Murray, and not what he had so long ago renounced or changed.

[197] L. Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 51; 12mo, 51; 18mo, 22; D. Adams's, 37; Alger's, 21; Bacon's, 19; Fisk's, 20; Kirkham's, 17; Merchant's Murray, 35; Merchant's American Gram., 40; F. H. Miller's Gram., 26; Pond's, 28; S. Putnam's, 22; Russell's, 16; Rev. T. Smith's, 22.

[198] Dr. Crombie, and some others, represent I and thou, with their inflections, as being "masculine and feminine." Lennie, M'Culloch, and others, represent them as being "masculine or feminine." But, if either of them can have an antecedent that is neuter, neither of these views is strictly correct. (See Obs. 5th, above.) Mackintosh says, "We use our, your, their, in speaking of a thing or things belonging to plural nouns of any gender."—Essay on English Gram., p. 149. So William Barnes says, "I, thou, we, ye or you, and they, are of all genders,"—Philosophical Gram., p. 196.

[199] "It is perfectly plain, then, that my and mine are but different forms of the same word, as are a and an. Mine, for the sake of euphony, or from custom, stands for the possessive case without a noun; but must be changed for my when the noun is expressed: and my, for a similar reason, stands before a noun, but must be changed for mine when the noun is dropped. * * * Mine and my, thine and thy, will, therefore, be considered in this book, as different forms of the possessive case from I and Thou. And the same rule will be extended to her and hers, our and ours, your and yours, their and theirs."—Barnard's Analytic Grammar, p. 142.

[200] It has long been fashionable, in the ordinary intercourse of the world, to substitute the plural form of this pronoun for the singular through all the cases. Thus, by the figure ENALLAGE, "you are," for instance, is commonly put for "thou art." See Observations 20th and 21st, below; also Figures of Syntax, in Part IV.

Page 2123

[201] The original nominative was ye, which is still the only nominative of the solemn style; and the original objective was you, which is still the only objective that our grammarians in general acknowledge. But, whether grammatical or not, ye is now very often used, in a familiar way, for the objective case. (See Observations 22d and 23d, upon the declensions of pronouns.) T. Dilworth gave both cases alike: “Nom. Ye or you;” “Acc. [or Obj.] Ye or you.”—His New Guide, p. 98. Latham gives these forms: “Nom. ye or you; Obj. you or ye.”—Elementary Gram., p. 90. Dr. Campbell says, “I am inclined to prefer that use which makes ye invariably the nominative plural of the personal pronoun thou, and you the accusative, when applied to an actual plurality.”—Philosophy of Rhetoric, p. 174. Professor Fowler touches the case, rather blindly, thus: “Instead of the true nominative YE, we use, with few exceptions, the objective case; as, ‘YOU speak;’ ‘YOU two are speaking.’ In this we substitute one case for another.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, Sec.478. No other grammarian, however, discards you as a nominative of “actual plurality;” and the present casual practice of putting ye in the objective, has prevailed to some extent for at least two centuries: as,

“Your change approaches, when all these delights
Will vanish and deliver ye to woe.”
—Milton, P. L., B. iv, l. 367.

[202] Dr. Young has, in one instance, and with very doubtful propriety, converted this pronoun into the second person, by addressing himself thus:—

“O thou, myself I abroad our counsels roam
And, like ill husbands, take no care at home.”
—Love of Fame, Sat. II, l. 271.

[203] The fashion of using the plural number for the singular, or you for thou, has also substituted yourself for thyself, in common discourse. In poetry, in prayer, in Scripture, and in the familiar language of the Friends, the original compound is still retained; but the poets use either term, according to the gravity or the lightness of their style. But yourself, like the regal compound ourself, though apparently of the singular number, and always applied to one person only, is, in its very nature, an anomalous and ungrammatical word; for it can neither mean more than one, nor agree with a pronoun or a verb that is singular. Swift indeed wrote: “Conversation is but carving; carve for all, yourself is starving.” But he wrote erroneously, and his meaning is doubtful: probably he meant, “To carve for all, is, to starve yourself.” The compound personals, when they are nominatives before the verb, are commonly associated with the simple; as, “I myself also am a man.”—Acts, x, 16. “That thou thyself art a guide.”—Rom., ii, 19. “If it stand, as you yourself still do”—Shakspeare. “That you yourself are much condemned.”—Id. And, if the simple pronoun be omitted, the compound still requires the same form of the verb; as, “Which way I fly is Hell; myself am Hell.”—Milton. The following example is different: “I love mankind; and in a monarchy myself is all that I can love.”—Life of Schiller, Follen’s Pref., p. x. Dr. Follen objects to the British version, “Myself were all that I could love;” and, if his own is good English, the verb is agrees with all, and not with myself. Is is of the third person: hence, “myself is” or, “yourself is,” cannot be good syntax; nor does any one say, “yourself art,” or, “ourself am,” but rather, “yourself are,” as, “Captain, yourself are the fittest.”—Dryden. But to call this a “concord,” is to turn a third part of the language upsidedown; because, by analogy, it confounds, to such extent at least, the plural number with the singular through all our verbs; that is, if ourself and yourself are singulars, and not rather plurals put for singulars by a figure of syntax. But the words are, in some few instances, written separately; and then both the meaning and the construction are different; as, “Your self is sacred, profane it not.”—The Dial, Vol. i, p. 86. Perhaps the word myself above ought rather to have been two words; thus, “And, in a monarchy, my self is all that I can love.” The two words here differ in person and case, perhaps also in gender; and, in the preceding instance, they differ in person, number, gender, and case. But the compound always follows the person, number, and gender of its first part, and only the case of its last. The notion of some grammarians, (to wit, of Wells, and the sixty-eight others whom he cites for it,) that you and your are actually made singular by usage, is demonstrably untrue. Do we, our, and us, become actually singular, as often as a king or a critic applies them to himself? No: for nothing can be worse syntax than, we am, we was, or you was, though some contend for this last construction.

Page 2124

[204] Whose is sometimes used as the possessive case of which; as, “A religion whose origin is divine.”—Blair. See Observations 4th and 5th, on the Classes of Pronouns.

[205] After but, as in the following sentence, the double relative what is sometimes applied to persons; and it is here equivalent to the friend who:—

“Lorenzo, pride repress; nor hope to find
A friend, but what has found a friend in thee.”—Young.

Page 2125

[206] Of all these compounds. L. Murray very improperly says, “They are seldom used, in modern style.”—Octavo Gram., p. 54; also Fisk’s, p. 65. None of them are yet obsolete, though the shorter forms seem to be now generally preferred. The following suggestion of Cobbett’s is erroneous; because it implies that the shorter forms are innovations and faults; and because the author carelessly speaks of them as one thing only: “We sometimes omit the so, and say, whoever, whomever, whatever, and even whosever. It is a mere abbreviation. The so is understood: and, it is best not to omit to write it.”—Eng. Gram., 209. R. C. Smith dismisses the compound relatives with three lines; and these he closes with the following notion: “They are not often used!”—New Gram., p. 61.

[207] Sanborn, with strange ignorance of the history of those words, teaches thus: “Mine and thine appear to have been formed from my and thy by changing y into i and adding n, and then subjoining e to retain the long sound of the vowel.”—Analytical Gram., p. 92. This false notion, as we learn from his guillemets and a remark in his preface, he borrowed from “Parkhurst’s Systematic Introduction.” Dr. Lowth says, “The Saxon lc hath the possessive case Min; Thu, possessive Thin; He, possessive His: From which our possessive cases of the same pronouns are taken without alteration.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 23.

[208] Latham, with a singularity quite remarkable, reverses this doctrine in respect to the two classes, and says, “My, thy, our, your, her, and their signify possession, because they are possessive cases. * * * Mine, thine, ours, yours, hers, theirs, signify possession for a different reason. They partake of the nature of adjectives, and in all the allied languages are declined as such.”—Latham’s Elementary E. Gram., p. 94. Weld, like Wells, with a few more whose doctrine will be criticised by-and-by, adopting here an other odd opinion, takes the former class only for forms of the possessive case; the latter he disposes of thus: “Ours, yours, theirs, hers, and generally mine and thine, are POSSESSIVE PRONOUNS, used in either the nominative or objective case,”—Weld’s Gram., Improved Ed., p. 68. Not only denying the possessives with ellipsis to be instances of the possessive case, but stupidly mistaking at once two dissimilar things for a third which is totally unlike to either,—i. e., assuming together for substitution both an ellipsis of one word and an equivalence to two—(as some others more learned have very strangely done—) he supposes all this class of pronouns to have forsaken every property of their legitimate roots,—their person, their number, their gender, their case,—and to have assumed other properties, such as belong to “the thing possessed!” In the example, “Your house is on the plain, ours is on the hill,” he supposes ours to be of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case; and not, as it plainly is, of the first person, plural number, masculine gender, and possessive case. Such parsing should condemn forever any book that teaches it.

Page 2126

[209] This word should have been numerals, for two or three reasons. The author speaks of the numeral adjectives; and to say “the numbers must agree in number with their substantives,” is tautological—G. Brown.

[210] Cardell assails the common doctrine of the grammarians on this point, with similar assertions, and still more earnestness. See his Essay on Language, p. 80. The notion that “these pretended possessives [are] uniformly used as nominatives or objectives”—though demonstrably absurd, and confessedly repugnant to what is “usually considered” to be their true explanation—was adopted by Jaudon, in 1812; and has recently found several new advocates; among whom are Davis, Felch, Goodenow, Hazen, Smart, Weld, and Wells. There is, however, much diversity, as well as much inaccuracy, in their several expositions of the matter. Smart inserts in his declensions, as the only forms of the possessive case, the words of which he afterwards speaks thus: “The following possessive cases of the personal pronouns, (See page vii,) must be called PERSONAL PRONOUNS POSSESSIVE: mine, thine, his, hers, ours, yours, theirs. For these words are always used substantively, so as to include the meaning of some noun in the third person singular or plural, in the nominative or the objective ease. Thus, if we are speaking of books, and say [,] ‘Mine are here,’ mine means my books, [Fist] and it must be deemed a personal pronoun possessive in the third person plural, and nominative to the verb are.”—Smart’s Accidence, p. xxii. If to say, these “possessive cases must be called a class of pronouns, used substantively, and deemed nominatives or objectives,” is not absurd, then nothing can be. Nor is any thing in grammar more certain, than that the pronoun “mine” can only be used by the speaker or writer, to denote himself or herself as the owner of something. It is therefore of the first person, singular number, masculine (or feminine) gender, and possessive case; being governed by the name of the thing or things possessed. This name is, of course, always known; and, if known and not expressed, it is “understood.” For sometimes a word is repeated to the mind, and clearly understood, where “it cannot properly be” expressed; as, “And he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.”—Luke, xiii, 6. Wells opposes this doctrine, citing a passage from Webster, as above, and also imitating his argument. This author acknowledges three classes of pronouns—"personal, relative, and interrogative;" and then, excluding these words from their true place among personals of the possessive case, absurdly makes them a supernumerary class of possessive nominatives or objectives! "Mine, thine, his, ours, yours, and theirs, are POSSESSIVE PRONOUNS, used in construction either as nominatives or objectives; as, 'Your pleasures are past, mine are to come.' Here the word mine, which is used as a substitute for my pleasures, is the subject of the verb are."—Wells's School Gram., p. 71; 113 Ed., p. 78. Now the question to find the subject of the verb are, is, "My what are to come?" Ans. "pleasures." But the author proceeds to argue in a note thus: "Mine, thine, etc. are often parsed as pronouns in the possessive case, and governed by nouns understood. Thus, in the sentence, 'This book is mine,' the word mine is said to possess book. That the word book is not here understood, is obvious from the fact, that, when it is supplied, the phrase becomes not 'mine book,' but 'my book,' the pronoun being changed from mine to my; so that we are made, by this practice, to parse mine as possessing a word understood, before which it cannot properly be used. The word mine is here evidently employed as a substitute for the two words, my and book."—Wells, ibid. This note appears to me to be, in many respects, faulty. In the first place, its whole design was, to disprove what is true. For, bating the mere difference of person, the author's example above is equal to this: "Your pleasures are past, W. H. Wells's are to come." The ellipsis of "pleasures", is evident in both. But ellipsis is not substitution; no, nor is equivalence. Mine, when it suggests an ellipsis of the governing noun, is equivalent to my and that noun; but certainly, not "a substitute for the two words." It is a substitute, or pronoun, for the name of the speaker or writer; and so is my; both forms representing, and always agreeing with, that name or person only. No possessive agrees with what governs it; but every pronoun ought to agree with that for which it stands. Secondly, if the note above cited does not aver, in its first sentence, that the pronouns in question are "governed by nouns understood," it comes much nearer to saying this, than a writer should who meant to deny it. In the third place, the example, "This book is mine," is not a good one for its purpose. The word "mine" may be regularly parsed as a possessive, without supposing any ellipsis; for "book," the name of the thing possessed, is given, and in obvious connexion with it. And further, the matter affirmed is ownership, requiring different cases; and not the identity of something under different names, which must be put in the same case. In the fourth place, to mistake regimen for possession, and thence speak of one word “as possessing” an other, a mode of expression occurring twice in the foregoing note, is not only unscholarlike, but positively absurd. But, possibly, the author may have meant by it, to ridicule the choice phraseology of the following Rule: “A noun or pronoun in the possessive case, is governed by the noun it possesses.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 181; Frazee’s, 1844, p. 25.

Page 2127

Page 2128

[211] In respect to the numbers, the following text is an uncouth exception: “Pass ye away, thou inhabitant of Saphir.”—Micah, i, 11. The singular and the plural are here strangely confounded. Perhaps the reading should be, “Pass thou away, O inhabitant of Saphir.” Nor is the Bible free from abrupt transitions from one number to the other, or from one person to an other, which are neither agreeable nor strictly grammatical; as, “Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which [who] are spiritual, restore such an [a] one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.”—Gal., vi, 1. “Ye that put far away the evil day, and cause the seat of violence to come near; that lie upon beds of ivory, and stretch themselves upon their couches,” &c—Amos, vi, 9.

[212] “The solemn style is used, chiefly, in the Bible and in prayer. The Society of Friends retain it in common parlance. It consists in using thou in the singular number, and ye in the plural, instead of using you in both numbers as in the familiar style. * * * The third person singular [of verbs] ends with th or eth, which affects only the present indicative, and hath of the perfect. The second person, singular, ends with st, est, or t only.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 58. “In [the] solemn and poetic styles, mine, thine, and thy, are used; and THIS is the style adopted by the Friends’ society. In common discourse it appears very stiff and affected.”—Bartlett’s C. S. Man’l, Part II, p. 72.

[213] “And of the History of his being tost in a Blanket, he saith, ‘Here, Scriblerus, thou lessest in what thou assertest concerning the blanket: it was not a blanket, but a rug.—Curliad, p. 25.”—Notes to Pope’s Dunciad, B. ii, verse 3. A vulgar idea solemnly expressed, is ludicrous. Uttered in familiar terms, it is simply vulgar: as, “You lie, Scriblerus, in what you say about the blanket.”

Page 2129

[214] “Notwithstanding these verbal mistakes, the Bible, for the size of it, is the most accurate grammatical composition that we have in the English language. The authority of several eminent grammarians might be adduced in support of this assertion, but it may be sufficient to mention only that of Dr. Lowth, who says, ‘The present translation of the Bible, is the best standard of the English language.’”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 166. I revere the Bible vastly too much to be pleased with an imitation of its peculiar style, in any man’s ordinary speech or writing.—G. BROWN.

[215] “Ye, except in the solemn style, is obsolete; but it is used in the language of tragedy, to express contempt: as, ‘When ye shall know what Margaret knows, ye may not be so thankful.’ Franklin.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 57. “The second person plural had formerly YE both in the nominative and the objective. This form is now obsolete in the objective, and nearly obsolete in the nominative.”—Hart’s Gram., p. 55.

[216] So has Milton:—

“To waste it all myself, and leave ye none!
So disinherited how would you bless me!”—Par. Lost, B. x, l. 820.

[217] “The word what is a compound of two specifying adjectives, each, of course, referring to a noun, expressed or understood. It is equivalent to the which; that which; which that; or that that; used also in the plural. At different periods, and in different authors, it appears in the varying forms, tha qua, qua tha, qu’tha, quthat, quhat, hwat, and what. This word is found in other forms; but it is needless to multiply them.”—Cardell’s Essay on Language, p. 86.

[218] This author’s distribution of the pronouns, of which I have taken some notice in Obs. 10th above, is remarkable for its inconsistencies and absurdities. First he avers, “Pronouns are generally divided into three kinds, the Personal, the Adjective, and the Relative pronouns. They are all known by the lists.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 96. These short sentences are far from being accurate, clear, or true. He should have made the several kinds known, by a good definition of each. But this was work to which he did not find himself adequate. And if we look to his lists for the particular words of each kind, we shall get little satisfaction. Of the Personal pronouns, he says, “There are five of them; I, thou, he, she, it.”—Ib., p. 97. These are simple words, and in their declension they are properly multiplied to forty. (See Ib., p. 99.) Next he seems to double the number, thus: “When self is added to the personal pronouns, as himself, myself, itself, themselves, &c. they are called Compound Personal Pronouns.”—Ib.,

Page 2130

p. 99. Then he asserts that mine, thine, his, hers, ours, yours, and theirs, are compounds of ne or s with mi, thi, hi, &c.: that their application invariably “gives them a compound character:” and that, “They may, therefore, be properly denominated Compound Personal Pronouns.”—Ib., p. 101. Next he comes to his Adjective pronouns; and, after proving that he has grossly misplaced and misnamed every one of them, he gives his lists of the three kinds of these. His Relative pronouns are who, which, and that. “What is generally a compound relative.”—Ib., p. 111. The compounds of who, which, and what, with ever or soever, he calls “compound pronouns, but not compound relatives.”—Ib., pp. 110 and 112. Lastly he discovers, that, “Truth and simplicity” have been shamefully neglected in this his third section of pronouns; that, “Of the words called ‘relatives,’ who only is a pronoun, and this is strictly personal,” that, “It ought to be classed with the personal pronouns;” and that, “Which, that, and what, are always adjectives. They never stand for, but always belong to nouns, either expressed or implied.”—Ib., p. 114. What admirable teachings are these!

[219] “It is now proper to give some examples of the manner in which the learners should be exercised, in order to improve their knowledge, and to render it familiar to them. This is called parsing. The nature of the subject, as well as the adaptation of it to learners, requires that it should be divided into two parts: viz. parsing, as it respects etymology alone; and parsing, as it respects both etymology and syntax.”—Murray’s Gram., Octavo, Vol. 1, p. 225. How very little real respect for the opinions of Murray, has been entertained by these self-seeking magnifiers and modifiers of his work!

What Murray calls “Syntactical Parsing” is sometimes called “Construing,” especially by those who will have Parsing to be nothing more than an etymological exercise. A late author says, “The practice of Construing differs from that of parsing, in the extension of its objects. Parsing merely indicates the parts of speech and their accidents, but construing searches for and points out their syntactical relations.”—D. Blair’s Gram., p. 49.

Here the distinction which Murray judged to be necessary, is still more strongly marked and insisted on. And though I see no utility in restricting the word Parsing to a mere description of the parts of speech with their accidents, and no impropriety in calling the latter branch of the exercise “Syntactical Parsing,” I cannot but think there is such a necessity for the division, as forms a very grave argument against those tangled schemes of grammar which do not admit of it. Blair is grossly inconsistent with himself. For, after drawing his distinction between Parsing and Construing, as above, he takes no further notice of the latter; but, having filled up seven pages with his most wretched mode of "PARSING," adds, in an emphatic note: "The Teacher should direct the Pupil to CONSTRUE, IN THE SAME MANNER, any passage from MY CLASS-BOOK, or other Work, at the rate of three or four lines per day."—D. Blair's Gram., p. 56.

Page 2131

[220] This is a comment upon the following quotation from Milton, where Hers for His would be a gross barbarism:—

"Should intermitted vengeance arm again
His red right hand to plague us."—Par. Lost, B. ii, l. 174.

[221] The Imperfect Participle, when simple, or when taken as one of the four principal terms constituting the verb or springing from it, ends always in ing. But, in a subsequent chapter, I include under this name the first participle of the passive verb; and this, in our language, is always a compound, and the latter term of it does not end in ing: as, "In all languages, indeed, examples are to be found of adjectives being compared whose signification admits neither intension nor remission."—CROMBIE, on Etym. and Syntax, p. 106. According to most of our writers on English grammar, the Present or Imperfect Participle Passive is always a compound of being and the form of the perfect participle: as, being loved, being seen. But some represent it to have two forms, one of which is always simple; as, "PERFECT PASSIVE, obeyed or being obeyed."—Sanborn's Analytical Gram., p. 55. "Loved or being loved."—Parkhurst's Grammar for Beginners, p. 11; Greene's Analysis, p. 225. "Loved, or, being loved."—Clark's Practical Gram., p. 83. I here concur with the majority, who in no instance take the participle in ed or en, alone, for the Present or Imperfect.

[222] In the following example, "he" and "she" are converted into verbs; as "thou" sometimes is, in the writings of Shakspeare, and others: "Is it not an impulse of selfishness or of a depraved nature to he and she inanimate objects?"—Cutler's English Gram., p. 16. Dr. Bullions, who has heretofore published several of the worst definitions of the verb anywhere extant, has now perhaps one of the best: "A VERB is a word used to express the act, being, or state of its subject."—Analyt. & Pract. Gram., p. 59. Yet it is not very obvious, that "he" and "she" are here verbs under this definition. Dr. Mandeville, perceiving that "the usual definitions of the verb are extremely defective," not long ago helped the schools to the following: "A verb is a word which describes the state or condition of a noun or pronoun in relation to time,”—Course of Reading, p. 24. Now it is plain, that under this definition too, Cutler’s infinitives, “to he and she” cannot be verbs; and, in my opinion, very small is the number of words that can be. No verb “describes the state or condition of a noun or pronoun,” except in some form of parsing; nor, even in this sort of exercise, do I find any verb “which describes the state or condition” of such a word “in relation to time.” Hence, I can make of this definition nothing but nonsense. Against my definition of a verb, this author urges, that it “excludes neuter verbs, expresses no relation to subject or time, and uses terms in a vague or contradictory sense.”—ib., p. 25. The first and the last of these three allegations do not appear to be well founded; and the second, if infinitives are verbs, indicates an excellence rather than a fault. The definition assumes that the mind as well as the body may “act” or “be acted upon.” For this cause, Dr. Mandeville, who cannot conceive that “to be loved” is in any wise “to be acted upon,” pronounces it “fatally defective!” His argument is a little web of sophistry, not worth unweaving here. One of the best scholars cited in the reverend Doctor’s book says, “Of mental powers we have no conception, but as certain capacities of intellectual action.” And again, he asks, “Who can be conscious of judgment, memory, and reflection, and doubt that man was made to act!”—EVERETT: Course of Reading, p. 320.

Page 2132

[223] Dr. Johnson says, “English verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languish. The neuters are formed like the actives. The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterit to the substantive verb, as I am loved.” He also observes, “Most verbs signifying action may likewise signify condition or habit, and become neuters; as, I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking.”—Gram. with his Quarto Dict., p. 7.

[224] The doctrine here referred to, appears in both works in the very same words: to wit, “English Verbs are either Active, Passive, or Neuter. There are two sorts of Active Verbs, viz. active-transitive and active-intransitive Verbs.”—British Gram., p. 153; Buchanan’s, 56. Buchanan was in this case the copyist.

[225] “The distinction between verbs absolutely neuter, as to sleep, and verbs active intransitive, as to walk, though founded in NATURE and TRUTH, is of little use in grammar. Indeed it would rather perplex than assist the learner; for the difference between verbs active and [verbs] neuter, as transitive and intransitive, is easy and obvious; but the difference between verbs absolutely neuter and [those which are] intransitively active is not always clear. But however these latter may differ in nature, the construction of them both is the same; and grammar is not so much concerned with their real, as with their grammatical properties.”—Lowth’s Gram; p. 30. But are not “TRUTH, NATURE, and REALITY,” worthy to be preferred to any instructions that contradict them? If they are, the good doctor and his worthy copyist have here made an ill choice. It is not only for the sake of these properties, that I retain a distinction which these grammarians, and others above named, reject; but for the sake of avoiding the untruth, confusion, and absurdity, into which one must fall by calling all active-intransitive verbs neuter. The distinction of active verbs, as being either transitive or intransitive, is also necessarily retained. But the suggestion, that this distinction is more “easy and obvious” than the other, is altogether an error. The really neuter verbs, being very few, occasion little or no difficulty. But very many active verbs, perhaps a large majority, are sometimes used intransitively; and of those which our lexicographers record as being always transitive, not a few are occasionally found without any object, either expressed or clearly suggested: as, “He convinces, but he does not elevate nor animate,”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 242. “The child imitates, and commits to memory; whilst the riper age digests, and thinks independently.”—Dr. Lieber, Lit. Conv., p. 313. Of examples like these, three different views maybe taken; and it is very questionable which is the right one: First, that these verbs are here intransitive, though they are not commonly so; Second, that they are transitive, and have objects understood; Third, that they are used improperly, because no determinate objects are given them. If we assume the second opinion or the last, the full or the correct expressions may be these: “He convinces the judgement, but he does not elevate the imagination, or animate the feelings.”—“The child imitates others, and commits words to memory; whilst the riper age digests facts or truths, and thinks independently.” These verbs are here transitive, but are they so above? Those grammarians who, supposing no other distinction important, make of verbs but two classes, transitive and intransitive, are still as much at variance, and as much at fault, as others, (and often more so,) when they come to draw the line of this distinction. To “require” an objective, to “govern” an objective, to “admit” an objective, and to “have” an objective, are criterions considerably different. Then it is questionable, whether infinitives, participles, or sentences, must or can have the effect of objectives. One author says, “If a verb has any objective case expressed, it is transitive: if it has none, it is intransitive. Verbs which appear transitive in their nature, may frequently be used intransitively.”— Chandler’s Old Gram., p. 32; his Common School Gram., p. 48. An other says, “A transitive verb asserts action which does or can, terminate on some object.”—Frazee’s Gram., p. 29. An other avers, “There are two classes of verbs perfectly distinct from each other, viz: Those which do, and those which do not, govern an objective case.” And his definition is, “A Transitive Verb is one which requires an objective case after it.”—Hart’s E. Gram., p. 63. Both Frazee and Hart reckon the passive verb transitive! And the latter teaches, that, “Transitive verbs in English, are sometimes used without an objective case; as, The apple tastes sweet!”—Hart’s Gram., p, 73.

Page 2133

Page 2134

[226] In the hands of some gentlemen, “the Principles of Latin Grammar,” and “the Principles of English Grammar,”—are equally pliable, or changeable; and, what is very remarkable, a comparison of different editions will show, that the fundamental doctrines of a whole “Series of Grammars, English, Latin, and Greek,” may so change in a single lustrum, as to rest upon authorities altogether different. Dr. Bullions’s grammars, a few years ago, like those of his great oracles, Adam, Murray, and Lennie, divided verbs into “three kinds, Active, Passive, and Neuter.” Now they divide them into two only, “Transitive and Intransitive;” and absurdly aver, that “Verbs in the passive form are really transitive as in the active form.”—Prin. of E. Gram., 1843, p. 200. Now, as if no verb could be plural, and no transitive act could be future, conditional, in progress, or left undone, they define thus: “A Transitive verb expresses an act done by one person or thing to another.”—Ib., p. 29; Analyt. and Pract. Gram., 60; Latin Gram., 77. Now, the division which so lately as 1842 was pronounced by the Doctor to be “more useful than any other,” and advantageously accordant with “most dictionaries of the English language,” (see his Fourth Edition, p. 30,) is wholly rejected from this notable “Series.” Now, the “vexed question” about “the classification of verbs,” which, at some revision still later, drew from this author whole pages of weak arguments for his faulty changes, is complacently supposed to have been well settled in his favour! Of this matter, now, in 1849, he speaks thus: “The division of verbs into transitive and intransitive has been so generally adopted and approved by the best grammarians, that any discussion of the subject is now unnecessary.”—Bullions’s Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 59.

Page 2135

[227] This late writer seems to have published his doctrine on this point as a novelty; and several teachers ignorantly received and admired it as such: I have briefly shown, in the Introduction to this work, how easily they were deceived. “By this, that Question may be resolv’d, whether every Verb not Passive governs always an Accusative, at least understood: ’Tis the Opinion of some very able GRAMMARIANS, but for our Parts we don’t think it.”—Grammar published by John Brightland, 7th Ed., London, 1746, p. 115.

[228] Upon this point, Richard Johnson cites and criticises Lily’s system thus: “A Verb Neuter endeth in o or m, and cannot take r to make him a Passive; as, Curro, I run; Sum, I am.’—Grammar, Eng. p. 13. This Definition, is founded upon the Notion abovementioned, viz. That none but Transitives are Verbs Active, which is contrary to the reason of Things, and the common sense of Mankind. And what can shock a Child more, of any Ingenuity, than to be told, That Ambuto and Curro are Verbs Neuter; that is, to speak according to the common Apprehensions of Mankind, that they signifie neither to do, nor suffer.”—Johnson’s Grammatical Commentaries, 8vo, London, 1706, p. 273.

[229] Murray says, “Mood or Mode is a particular form of the verb, showing the manner in which the being, action, or passion is represented.”—Octavo Gram., p. 63. By many grammarians, the term Mode is preferred to Mood; but the latter is, for this use, the more distinctive, and by far the more common word. In some treatises on grammar, as well as in books of logic, certain parts of speech, as adjectives and adverbs, are called Modes, because they qualify or modify other terms. E.g., “Thus all the parts of speech are reducible to four; viz., Names, Verbs, Modes, Connectives.”—Enclytica, or Universal Gram., p. 8. “Modes are naturally divided, by their attribution to names or verbs, into adnames and adverbs.”—Ibid., p. 24. After making this application of the name modes, was it not improper for the learned author to call the moods also “modes?”

[230] “We have, in English, no genuine subjunctive mood, except the preterimperfect, if I were, if thou wert, &c. of the verb to be. [See Notes and Observations on the Third Example of Conjugation, in this chapter.] The phrase termed the subjunctive mood, is elliptical; shall, may, &c. being understood: as, ‘Though hand (shall) join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished.’ ‘If it (may) be possible, live peaceably with all.’ Scriptures.”—Rev. W. Allen’s Gram., p. 61. Such expressions as, “If thou do love, If he do love,” appear to disprove this doctrine. [See Notes and Remarks on the Subjunctive of the First Example conjugated below.]

Page 2136

[231] “Mr. Murray has changed his opinion, as often as Laban changed Jacob’s wages. In the edition we print from, we find shall and will used in each person of the first and second future tenses of the subjunctive, but he now states that in the second future tense, shalt, shall, should be used instead of wilt, will. Perhaps this is the only improvement he has made in his Grammar since 1796.”—Rev. T. Smith’s Edition of Lindley Murray’s English Grammar, p. 67.

[232] Notwithstanding this expression, Murray did not teach, as do many modern grammarians, that inflected forms of the present tense, such as, “If he thinks so,” “Unless he deceives me,” “If thou lov’st me,” are of the subjunctive mood; though, when he rejected his changeless forms of the other tenses of this mood, he improperly put as many indicatives in their places. With him, and his numerous followers, the ending determines the mood in one tense, while the conjunction controls it in the other five! In his syntax, he argues, “that in cases wherein contingency and futurity do not occur, it is not proper to turn the verb from its signification of present time, nor to vary [he means, or to forbear to change] its form or termination. [Fist] The verb would then be in the indicative mood, whatever conjunctions might attend it.”—L. Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 208: 12mo, p. 167.

[233] Some grammarians—(among whom are Lowth, Dalton, Cobbett, and Cardell—) recognize only three tenses, or “times,” of English verbs; namely, the present, the past, and the future. A few, like Latham and Child, denying all the compound tenses to be tenses, acknowledge only the first two, the present and the past; and these they will have to consist only of the simple or radical verb and the simple preterit. Some others, who acknowledge six tenses, such as are above described, have endeavoured of late to change the names of a majority of them; though with too little agreement among themselves, as may be seen by the following citations: (1.) “We have six tenses; three, the Present, Past, and Future, to represent time in a general way; and three, the Present Perfect, Past Perfect, and Future Perfect, to represent the precise time of finishing the action.”—Perley’s Gram., 1834, p. 25. (2.) “There are six tenses; the present, the past, the present-perfect, the past-perfect, the future, and the future-perfect.”—Hiley’s Gram., 1840, p. 28. (3.) “There are six tenses; the Present and Present Perfect, the Past and Past Perfect, and the Future and Future Perfect.”—Farnum’s Gram., 1842, p. 34. (4.) “The names of the tenses will then be, Present, Present Perfect; Past, Past Perfect; Future, Future Perfect.”

Page 2137

They are usually named as follows: Present, Perfect, Imperfect, Pluperfect, Future, Second Future.—N. Butler's Gram, 1845, p. 69. (5.) "We have six tenses;—the present, the past, the future, the present perfect, the past perfect, and the future perfect."—Wells's School Gram., 1846. p. 82. (6.) "The tenses in English are six—the Present, the Present-perfect, the Past, the Past-perfect, the Future, and the Future-perfect."—Bullions's Gram., 1849. p. 71. (7.) "Verbs have Six Tenses, called the Present, the Perfect-Present, the Past, the Perfect-Past, the Future, and the Perfect-Future."—Spencer's Gram., 1852, p. 53. (8.) "There are six tenses: the present, past, future, present perfect, past perfect, and future perfect."—Covell's Gram., 1853, p. 62. (9.) "The tenses are—the present, the present perfect; the past, the past perfect; the future, the future perfect."—S. S. Greene's Gram., 1853, p. 65. (10.) "There are six tenses; one present, and but one, three past, and two future." They are named thus: "The Present, the First Past, the Second Past, the Third Past, the First Future, the Second Future."—"For the sake of symmetry, to call two of them present, and two only past, while one only is present, and three are past tenses, is to sacrifice truth to beauty."—Pinneo's Gram., 1853, pp. 69 and 70. "The old names, imperfect, perfect, and pluperfect," which, in 1845, Butler justly admitted to be the usual names of the three past tenses. Dr. Pinneo, who dates his copy-right from 1850, most unwarrantably declares to be "now generally discarded!"—Analytical Gram., p. 76; Same Revised, p. 81. These terms, still predominant in use, he strangely supposes to have been suddenly superseded by others which are no better, if so good: imagining that the scheme which Perley or Hiley introduced, of "two present, two past, and two future tenses,"—a scheme which, he says, "has no foundation in truth, and is therefore to be rejected,"—had prepared the way for the above-cited innovation of his own, which merely presents the old ideas under new terms, or terms partly new, and wholly unlikely to prevail. William Ward, one of the ablest of our old grammarians, rejecting in 1765 the two terms imperfect and perfect, adopted others which resemble Pinneo's; but few, if any, have since named the tenses as he did, thus: "The Present, the First Preterite, the Second Preterite, the Pluperfect, the First Future, the Second Future."—Ward's Gram., p. 47.

[234] "The infinitive mood, as 'to shine,' may be called the name of the verb; it carries neither time nor affirmation; but simply expresses that attribute, action, or state of things, which is to be the subject of the other moods and tenses."—Blair's Lectures, p. 81. By the word "subject" the Doctor does not here mean the nominative to the other moods and tenses, but the material of them, or that which is formed into them.

Page 2138

[235] Some grammarians absurdly deny that persons and numbers are properties of verbs at all: not indeed because our verbs have so few inflections, or because these authors wish to discard the little distinction that remains; but because they have some fanciful conception, that these properties cannot pertain to a verb. Yet, when they come to their syntax, they all forget, that if a verb has no person and number, it cannot agree with a nominative in these respects. Thus KIRKHAM: "Person, strictly speaking, is a quality that belongs not to verbs, but to nouns and pronouns. We say, however, that the verb must agree with its nominative in person, as well as in number."—Gram. in Familiar Lect., p. 46. So J. W. WRIGHT: "In truth, number and person are not properties of verbs. Mr. Murray grants that, 'in philosophical strictness, both number and person might (say, may) be excluded from every verb, as they are, in fact, the properties of substantives, not a part of the essence of the verb.'"—Philosophical Gram., p. 68. This author's rule of syntax for verbs, makes them agree with their nominatives, not in person and number, but in termination, or else in nobody knows what: "A verb must vary its terminations, so as to agree with the nominative to which it is connected."—ib., p. 168. But Murray's rule is, "A verb must agree with its nominative case in number and person:" and this doctrine is directly repugnant to that interpretation of his words above, by which these gentlemen have so egregiously misled themselves and others. Undoubtedly, both the numbers and the persons of all English verbs might be abolished, and the language would still be intelligible. But while any such distinctions remain, and the verb is actually modified to form them, they belong as properly to this part of speech as they can to any other. De Sacy says, "The distinction of number occurs in the verb;" and then adds, "yet this distinction does not properly belong to the verb, as it signifies nothing which can be numbered."—Fosdick's Version, p. 64. This deceptive reason is only a new form of the blunder which I have once exposed, of confounding the numbers in grammar with numbers in arithmetic. J. M. Putnam, after repeating what is above cited from Murray, adds: "The terms number and person, as applied to the verb are figurative. The properties which belong to one thing, for convenience' sake are ascribed to another."—Gram., p. 49. Kirkham imagines, if ten men build a house, or navigate a ship round the world, they perform just "ten actions," and no more. "Common sense teaches you," says he, "that there must be as many actions as there are actors; and that the verb when it has no form or ending to show it, is as strictly plural, as when it has. So, in the phrase, 'We walk,' the verb walk is [of the] first person, because it expresses the actions performed by the speakers. The verb, then, when correctly written, always agrees, in sense, with its nominative in number and person."—Kirkham's Gram., p. 47. It seems to me, that these authors do not very well know what persons or numbers, in grammar, are.

Page 2139

[236] John Despauter, whose ample Grammar of the Latin language appeared in its third edition in 1517, represents this practice as a corruption originating in false pride, and maintained by the wickedness of hungry flatterers. On the twentieth leaf of his Syntax, he says, “Videntur hodie Christiani superbiores, quam olim ethnici imperatores, qui dii haberi voluerunt; nam hi nunquam inviti audierunt pronomina tu, tibi, tuus. Quae si hodie alicui monachorum antistiti, aut decano, aut pontifici dicantur aut scribantur, videbitur ita loquens aut scribens blasphemasse, et anathemate dignus: nec tamen Abbas, aut pontifex, tam aegre feret, quam Malchi, aut famelici gnathones, his assistentes, et vociferantes, Sic loqueris, aut scribis, pontifici? Quintilianus et Donatus dicunt barbarismum, aut soloecismum esse, siquis uni dicat. Salvete.” The learned Erasmus also ridiculed this practice, calling those who adopted it, “voscitatores,” or youyouers.

[237] “By a perversion of language the pronoun you is almost invariably used for the second person singular, as well as plural; always, however, retaining the plural verb; as, ‘My friend, you write a good hand.’ Thou is confined to a solemn style, or [to] poetical compositions.”—Chandler’s Grammar, Edition of 1821, p. 41; Ed. of 1847, p. 66.

[238] In regard to the inflection of our verbs, William B. Fowle, who is something of an antiquarian in grammar, and who professes now to be “conservative” of the popular system, makes a threefold distinction of style, thus: “English verbs have three Styles[,] or Modes[,] called [the] Familiar, [the] Solemn[,] and [the] Ancient. The familiar style, or mode, is that used in common conversation; as, you see, he fears. The solemn style, or mode, is that used in the Bible, and in prayer; as, Thou seest, he feareth. The ancient style, or mode, now little used, allows no change in the second and third person, [persons,] singular, of the verb, and generally follows the word if, though, lest, or whether; as, if thou see; though he fear; lest he be angry; whether he go or stay.”—Fowle’s Common School Grammar, Part Second, p. 44. Among his subsequent examples of the Solemn style, he gives the following: “Thou lovest, Thou lovedst, Thou art, Thou wast, Thou hast, Thou hadst, Thou doest or dost, Thou didst.” And, as corresponding examples of the Ancient style, he has these forms: “Thou love, Thou loved, Thou or you be, Thou wert, Thou have, Thou had, Thou do, Thou did.”—Ib., pp. 44-50. This distinction and this arrangement do not appear to me to be altogether warranted by facts. The necessary distinction of moods, this author rejects; confounding the Subjunctive with the Indicative, in order to furnish out this useless and fanciful contrast of his Solemn and Ancient styles.

Page 2140

[239] In that monstrous jumble and perversion of Murray's doctrines, entitled, "English Grammar on the Productive System, by Roswell C. Smith," you is everywhere preferred to thou, and the verbs are conjugated without the latter pronoun. At the close of his paradigms, however, the author inserts a few lines respecting "these obsolete conjugations," with the pronoun thou; for a further account of which, he refers the learner, with a sneer, to the common grammars in the schools. See the work, p. 79. He must needs be a remarkable grammarian, with whom Scripture, poetry, and prayer, are all "obsolete!" Again: "Thou in the singular is obsolete, except among the Society of Friends; and ye is an obsolete plural!"—Guy's School Gram., p. 25. In an other late grammar, professedly "constructed upon the basis of Murray's, by the Rev. Charles Adams, A. M., Principal of Newbury Seminary," the second person singular is everywhere superseded by the plural; the former being silently dropped from all his twenty pages of conjugations, without so much as a hint, or a saving clause, respecting it; and the latter, which is put in its stead, is falsely called singular. By his pupils, all forms of the verb that agree only with thou, will of course be conceived to be either obsolete or barbarous, and consequently ungrammatical. Whether or not the reverend gentleman makes any account of the Bible or of prayer, does not appear; he cites some poetry, in which there are examples that cannot be reconciled with his "System of English Grammar." Parkhurst, in his late "Grammar for Beginners," tells us that, "Such words as are used in the Bible, and not used in common books, are called obsolete!"—P. 146. Among these, he reckons all the distinctive forms of the second person singular, and all the "peculiarities" which "constitute what is commonly called the Solemn Style."—Ib., p. 148. Yet, with no great consistency, he adds: "This style is always used in prayer, and is frequently used in poetry."—Ibid. Joab Brace, Jnr., may be supposed to have the same notion of what is obsolete: for he too has perverted all Lennie's examples of the verb, as Smith and Adams did Murray's.

[240] Coar gives durst in the "Indicative mood," thus: "I durst, thou durst, he durst;" &c. —Coar's E. Gram., p. 115. But when he comes to wist, he does not know what the second person singular should be, and so he leaves it out: "I wist, -----, he wist; we wist, ye wist, they wist."—Coar's E. Gram., p. 116.

Page 2141

[241] Dr. Latham, who, oftener perhaps than any other modern writer, corrupts the grammar of our language by efforts to revive in it things really and deservedly obsolete, most strangely avers that “The words thou and thee are, except in the mouths of Quakers, obsolete. The plural forms, ye and you, have replaced them.”—Hand-Book, p. 284. Ignoring also any current or “vital” process of forming English verbs in the second person singular, he gravely tells us that the old form, as “callest” (which is still the true form for the solemn style,) “is becoming obsolete.”—ib., p. 210. “In phrases like you are speaking, &c.,” says he rightlier, “even when applied to a single individual, the idea is really plural; in other words, the courtesy consists in treating one person as more than one, and addressing him as such, rather than in using a plural form in a singular sense. It is certain that, grammatically considered, you=thou is a plural, since the verb with which it agrees is plural.”—ib., p. 163. If these things be so, the English Language owes much to the scrupulous conservatism of the Quakers; for, had their courtesy consented to the grammar of the fashionables, the singular number would now have had but two persons!

[242] For the substitution of you for thou, our grammarians assign various causes. That which is most commonly given in modern books, is certainly not the original one, because it concerns no other language than ours: “In order to avoid the unpleasant formality which accompanies the use of thou with a correspondent verb, its plural you, is usually adopted to familiar conversation; as, Charles, will you walk? instead of—wilt thou walk? You read too fast, instead of—thou readest too fast.”—Jaudon’s Gram., p. 33.

[243] This position, as may be seen above, I do not suppose it competent for any critic to maintain. The use of you for thou is no more “contrary to grammar,” than the use of we for I; which, it seems, is grammatical enough for all editors, compilers, and crowned heads, if not for others. But both are figures of syntax; and, as such, they stand upon the same footing. Their only contrariety to grammar consists in this, that the words are not the literal representatives of the number for which they are put. But in what a posture does the grammarian place himself, who condemns, as bad English, that phraseology which he constantly and purposely uses? The author of the following remark, as well as all who have praised his work, ought immediately to adopt the style of the Friends, or Quakers: “The word thou, in grammatical construction, is preferable to you, in the second person singular: however, custom has familiarized the latter, and consequently made it more general, though BAD GRAMMAR. To say, 'You are a man.' is NOT GRAMMATICAL LANGUAGE; the word you having reference to a plural noun only. It should be, 'Thou art a man.'"—Wright's Philosoph. Gram., p. 55. This author, like Lindley Murray and many others, continually calls himself WE; and it is probable, that neither he, nor any one of his sixty reverend commendars, dares address any man otherwise than by the above-mentioned "BAD GRAMMAR!"

Page 2142

[244] "We are always given to cut our words short; and, with very few exceptions, you find people writing lov'd, mov'd, walk'd; instead of loved, moved, walked. They wish to make the pen correspond with the tongue. From lov'd, mov'd, walk'd, it is very easy to slide into lov't, mov't, walk't. And this has been the case with regard to curst, dealt, dwelt, leapt, helpt, and many others in the last inserted list. It is just as proper to say jumpt, as it is to say leapt; and just as proper to say walkt as either; and thus we might go on till the orthography of the whole language were changed. When the love of contraction came to operate on such verbs as to burst and to light, it found such a clump of consonants already at the end of the words, that, it could add none. It could not enable the organs even of English speech to pronounce burstdst, lightdst. It, therefore, made really short work of it, and dropping the last syllable altogether, wrote, burst, light, [rather, lit] in the past time and passive participle."—Cobbett's English Gram., 169. How could the man who saw all this, insist on adding st for the second person, where not even the d of the past tense could he articulated? Am I to be called an innovator, because I do not like in conversation such new and unauthorized words as littest, leapttest, curstest; or a corrupter of the language, because I do not admire in poetry such unutterable monstrosities as, light'dst, leap'dst, curs'dst? The novelism, with the corruption too, is wholly theirs who stickle for these awkward forms.

[245] "You were, not you was, for you was seems to be as ungrammatical, as you hast would be. For the pronoun you being confessedly plural, its correspondent verb ought to be plural."—John Burn's Gram., 10th Ed., P. 72.

[246] Among grammarians, as well as among other writers, there is some diversity of usage concerning the personal inflections of verbs; while nearly all, nowadays, remove the chief occasion for any such diversity, by denying with a fashionable bigotry the possibility of any grammatical use of the pronoun thou in a familiar style. To illustrate this, I will cite Cooper and Wells—two modern authors who earnestly agree to account you and its verb literally singular, and thou altogether erroneous, in common discourse: except that Wells allows the phrase, "If thou art," for "Common style."—School Gram., p. 100.

Page 2143

1. Cooper, improperly referring all inflection of the verb to the grave or solemn style, says: "In the colloquial or familiar style, we observe no change. The same is the case in the plural number." He then proceeds thus: "In the second person of the present of the indicative, in the solemn style, the verb takes st or est; and in the third person th or eth, as: thou hast, thou lovest, thou teachest; he hath, he loveth, he goeth. In the colloquial or familiar style, the verb does not vary in the second person; and in the third person, it ends in s or es, as: he loves, he teaches, he does. The indefinite, [i. e. the preterit,] in the second person singular of the indicative, in the grave style, ends in est, as: thou taughtest, thou wentest. [Fist] But, in those verbs, where the sound of st will unite with the last syllable of the verb, the vowel is omitted, as: thou lovedst, thou heardst, thou didst."—Cooper's Murray, p. 60; Plain and Practical Gram., p. 59. This, the reader will see, is somewhat contradictory; for the colloquial style varies the verb by "s or es," and taught'st may be uttered without the e. As for "lovedst," I deny that any vowel "is omitted" from it; but possibly one may be, as lov'dst.

2. Wells's account of the same thing is this: "In the simple form of the present and past indicative, the second person singular of the solemn style ends regularly in st or est, as, thou seest, thou hearest, thou sawest, thou heardest; and the third person singular of the present, in s or es, as, he hears, he wishes, and also in th or eth, as, he saith, he loveth. In the simple form of the present indicative, the third person singular of the common or familiar style, ends in s or es; as, he sleeps; he rises. The first person singular of the solemn style, and the first and second persons singular of the common style, have the same form as the three persons plural."—Wells's School Grammar, 1st Ed. p. 83; 3d Ed. p. 86. This, too, is both defective and inconsistent. It does not tell when to add est, and when, st only. It does not show what the regular preterit, as freed or loved, should make with thou: whether freedest and lovedest, by assuming the syllable est; fre-edst and lov-edst, by increasing syllabically from assuming st only; or freedst and lov'dst, or lovedst, still to be uttered as monosyllables. It absurdly makes "s or es" a sign of two opposite styles. (See OBS. 9th, above.) And it does not except "I am, I was, If I am, If I was, If thou art, I am loved," and so forth, from requiring "the same form, [are or were,] as the three persons plural." This author prefers "hearest;" the other, "heardst," which I think better warranted:

Page 2144

“And heardst thou why he drew his blade?
Heardst thou that shameful word and blow
Brought Roderick’s vengeance on his foe?”—Scott, L. L., C. v, st. 6.

[247] Better, as Wickliffe has it, “the day in which,” though, after nouns of time, the relative that is often used, like the Latin ablative quo or qua, as being equivalent to in which or on which.

[248] It is not a little strange, that some men, who never have seen or heard such words as their own rules would produce for the second person singular of many hundreds of our most common verbs, will nevertheless pertinaciously insist, that it is wrong to countenance in this matter any departure from the style of King James’s Bible. One of the very rashest and wildest of modern innovators,—a critic who, but for the sake of those who still speak in this person and number, would gladly consign the pronoun thou, and all its attendant verbal forms, to utter oblivion,—thus treats this subject and me: “The Quakers, or Friends, however, use thou, and its attendant form of the asserter, in conversation. FOR THEIR BENEFIT, thou is given, in this work, in all the varieties of inflection; (in some of which it could not properly be used in an address to the Deity;) for THEY ERR MOST EGREGIOUSLY in the use of thou, with the form of the asserter which follows he or they, and are countenanced in their errors by G. Brown, who, instead of ‘disburdening the language of 144,000 useless distinctions, increases their number just 144,000.”—Oliver B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 85 Among people of sense, converts are made by teaching, and reasoning, and proving; but this man’s disciples must yield to the balderdash of a false speller, false quoter, and false assertor! This author says, that “dropt” is the past tense of “drop,” (p. 118;) let him prove, for example, that droptest is not a clumsy innovation, and that droppedst is not a formal archaism, and then tell of the egregious error of adopting neither of these forms in common conversation. The following, with its many common contractions, is the language of POPE; and I ask this, or any other opponent of my doctrine, TO SHOW HOW SUCH VERBS ARE RIGHTLY FORMED, either for poetry or for conversation, in the second person singular.

“It fled, I follow’d; now in hope, now pain;
It stopt, I stopt; it mov’d, I mov’d again.
At last it fix’t, ’twas on what plant it pleas’d,
And where it fix’d, the beauteous bird I seiz’d.”
—Dunciad, B. IV, l. 427.

Page 2145

[249] The Rev. W. Allen, in his English Grammar, p. 132, says: “Yth and eth (from the Saxon laeth [sic—KTH]) were formerly, plural terminations; as, ‘Manners makyth man.’ William of Wykeham’s motto. ‘After long advisement, they taketh upon them to try the matter.’ Stapleton’s Translation of Bede. ‘Doctrine and discourse maketh nature less importune.’ Bacon.” The use of eth as a plural termination of verbs, was evidently earlier than the use of en for the same purpose. Even the latter is utterly obsolete, and the former can scarcely have been English. The Anglo-Saxon verb lufian, or lufigean, to love, appears to have been inflected with the several pronouns thus: Ic lufige, Thu lufast, He lufath, We lufiath, Ge lufiath, Hi lufiath. The form in Old English was this: I love, Thou lovest, He loveth, We loven, Ye loven, They loven. Dr. Priestley remarks, (though in my opinion unadvisedly,) that, “Nouns of a plural form, but of a singular signification, require a singular construction; as, mathematicks is a useful study. This observation will likewise,” says he, “in some measure, vindicate the grammatical propriety of the famous saying of William of Wykeham, Manners maketh man.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 189. I know not what half-way vindication there can be, for any such construction. Manners and mathematics are not nouns of the singular number, and therefore both is and maketh are wrong. I judge it better English to say, “Mathematics are a useful study.”—“Manners make the man.” But perhaps both ideas may be still better expressed by a change of the nominative, thus: “The study of mathematics is useful.”—“Behaviour makes the man.”

[250] What the state of our literature would have been, had no author attempted any thing on English grammar, must of course be a matter of mere conjecture, and not of any positive “conviction.” It is my opinion, that, with all their faults, most of the books and essays in which this subject has been handled, have been in some degree beneficial, and a few of them highly so; and that, without their influence, our language must have been much more chaotic and indeterminable than it now is. But a late writer says, and, with respect to some of our verbal terminations, says wisely: “It is my sincere conviction that fewer irregularities would have crept into the language had no grammars existed, than have been authorized by grammarians; for it should be understood that the first of our grammarians, finding that good writers differed upon many points, instead of endeavouring to reconcile these discrepancies, absolutely perpetuated them by citing opposite usages, and giving high authorities for both. To this we owe all the irregularity which exists in the personal terminations of verbs, some of the best early writers using them promiscuously, some using them uniformly, and others making no use of them; and really they are of no use but to puzzle children and foreigners, perplex poets, and furnish an awkward dialect to that exemplary sect of Christians, who in every thing else study simplicity.”—Fowle’s True E. Gram., Part II, p. 26. Wells, a still later writer, gives this unsafe rule: “When the past tense is a monosyllable not ending in a single vowel, the second person singular of the solemn style is generally formed by the addition of est; as heardest, fleddest, tookest. Hadst, wast, saidst, and didst, are exceptions.”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 106; 3d Ed., p. 110; 113th Ed., p. 115. Now the termination d or ed commonly adds no syllable; so that the regular past tense of any monosyllabic verb is, with a few exceptions, a monosyllable still; as, freed, feed, loved, feared, planned, turned: and how would these sound with est added, which Lowth, Hiley, Churchill, and some others erroneously claim as having pertained to such preterits anciently? Again, if heard is a contraction of heared, and fled, of fleed, as seems probable; then are heardst and fledtst, which are sometimes used, more regular than heardest, fleddest: so of many other preterits.

Page 2146

[251] Chaucer appears not to have inflected this word in the second person: “Also ryght as thou were ensample of moche folde errour, righte so thou must be ensample of manifold correction.”—Testament of Love. “Rennin and crie as thou were wode.”—House of Fame. So others: “I wolde thou were cold or hoot.”—WICKLIFFE’S VERSION OF THE APOCALYPSE. “I wolde thou were cold or hote.”—VERSION OF EDWARD VI: Tooke, Vol. ii, p. 270. See Rev., iii, 15: “I would thou wert cold or hot.”—COMMON VERSION.

[252] See evidence of the antiquity of this practice, in the examples under the twenty-third observation above. According to Churchill, it has had some local continuance even to the present time. For, in a remark upon Lowth’s contractions, lov’t, turn’t, this author says, “These are still in use in some country places, the third person singular of verbs in general being formed by the addition of the sound th simply, not making an additional syllable.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 255 So the eth in the following example adds no syllable:—

“Death goeth about the field, rejoicing mickle
To see a sword that so surpass’d his sickle.”
Harrington’s Ariosto, B. xiii:
see Singer’s Shak., Vol. ii, p. 296.

[253] The second person singular of the simple verb do, is now usually written dost, and read dust; being permanently contracted in orthography, as well as in pronunciation. And perhaps the compounds may follow; as, Thou undost, outdost, misdost, overdost, &c. But exceptions to exceptions are puzzling, even when they conform to the general rule. The Bible has dost and doth for auxiliaries, and doest and doeth for principal verbs.

Page 2147

[254] N. Butler avers, "The only regular terminations added to verbs are est, s, ed, edst, and ing."—Butler's Practical Gram., p. 81. But he adds, in a marginal note, this information: "The third person singular of the present formerly ended in eth. This termination is still sometimes used in the solemn style. Contractions sometimes take place; as, sayst for sayest."—Ibid. This statement not only imposes a vast deal of needless irregularity upon the few inflections admitted by the English verb, but is, so far as it disagrees with mine, a causeless innovation. The terminations rejected, or here regarded as irregular, are d, st, es, th, and eth; while edst, which is plainly a combination of ed and st,—the past ending of the verb with the personal inflection,—is assumed to be one single and regular termination which I had overlooked! It has long been an almost universal doctrine of our grammarians, that regular verbs form their preterits and perfect participles by adding d to final e, and ed to any other radical ending. Such is the teaching of Blair, Brightland, Bullions, Churchill, Coar, Comly, Cooper, Fowle, Frazee, Ingersoll, Kirkham, Lennie, Murray, Weld, Wells, Sanborn, and others, a great multitude. But this author alleges, that, "Loved is not formed by adding d to love, but by adding ed, and dropping e from love."—Butler's Answer to Brown. Any one is at liberty to think this, if he will. But I see not the use of playing thus with mute Ees, adding one to drop an other, and often pretending to drop two under one apostrophe, as in lov'd, lov'st! To suppose that the second person of the regular preterit, as lovedst, is not formed by adding st to the first person, is contrary to the analogy of other verbs, and is something worse than an idle whim. And why should the formation of the third person be called irregular when it requires es, as in flies, denies, goes, vetoos, wishes, preaches, and so forth? In forming flies from fly, Butler changes "y into ie," on page 20th, adding s only; and, on page 11th, "into i" only, adding es. Uniformity would be better.

[255] Cooper says, "The termination eth is commonly contracted into th, to prevent the addition of a syllable to the verb, as: doeth, doth."—Plain and Practical Gram., p. 59. This, with reference to modern usage, is plainly erroneous. For, when s or es was substituted for th or eth, and the familiar use of the latter ceased, this mode of inflecting the verb without increasing its syllables, ceased also, or at least became unusual. It appears that the inflecting of verbs with th without a vowel, as well as with st without a vowel, was more common in very ancient times than subsequently. Our grammarians of the last century seem to have been more willing to encumber the language with syllabic endings, than to simplify it by avoiding them. See Observations, 21st, 22d, and 23d, above.

Page 2148

[256] These are what William Ward, in his Practical Grammar, written about 1765, denominated “the CAPITAL FORMS, or ROOTS, of the English Verb.” Their number too is the same. “And these Roots,” says he, “are considered as Four in each verb; although in many verbs two of them are alike, and in some few three are alike.”—P. 50. Few modern grammarians have been careful to display these Chief Terms, or Principal Parts, properly. Many say nothing about them. Some speak of three, and name them faultily. Thus Wells: “The three principal parts of a verb are the present tense, the past tense, and the perfect participle.”—School Gram., 113th Ed., p. 92. Now a whole “tense” is something more than one verbal form, and Wells’s “perfect participle” includes the auxiliary “having.” Hence, in stead of write, wrote, writing, written, (the true principal parts of a certain verb,) one might take, under Wells’s description, either of these threes, both entirely false: am writing, did write, and having written; or, do write, wrotest, and having written. But writing, being the root of the “Progressive Form of the Verb,” is far more worthy to be here counted a chief term, than wrote, the preterit, which occurs only in one tense, and never receives an auxiliary. So of other verbs. This sort of treatment of the Principal Parts, is a very grave defect in sundry schemes of grammar.

[257] A grammarian should know better, than to exhibit, as a paradigm for school-boys, such English as the following: “I do have, Thou dost have, He does have: We do have, You do have, They do have.”—Everest’s Gram., p. 106. “I did have, Thou didst have, He did have: We did have, You did have, They did have.”—Ib., p. 107. I know not whether any one has yet thought of conjugating the verb be after this fashion; but the attempt to introduce, “am being, is being,” &c., is an innovation much worse.

[258] Hiley borrows from Webster the remark, that, “Need, when intransitive, is formed like an auxiliary, and is followed by a verb, without the prefix to”; as, ‘He need go no farther.’—Hiley’s Gram., p. 90; Webster’s Imp. Gram., p. 127; Philos. Gram., p. 178. But he forbears to class it with the auxiliaries, and even contradicts himself, by a subsequent remark taken from Dr. Campbell, that, for the sake of “ANALOGY, ‘he needs,’ he dares,’ are preferable to ‘he need,’ ‘he dare,’”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 145; Campbell’s Rhet., p. 175

[259] This grammarian here uses need for the third person singular, designedly, and makes a remark for the justification of the practice; but he neither calls the word an auxiliary, nor cites any other than anonymous examples, which are, perhaps, of his own invention.

Page 2149

[260] “The substantive form, or, as it is commonly termed, infinitive mood, contains at the same time the essence of verbal meaning, and the literal ROOT on which all inflections of the verb are to be grafted. This character being common to the infinitive in all languages, it [this mood] ought to precede the [other] moods of verbs, instead of being made to follow them, as is absurdly practised in almost all grammatical systems.”—Enclytica, p. 14.

[261] By this, I mean, that the verb in all the persons, both singular and plural, is the same in form. But Lindley Murray, when he speaks of not varying or not changing the termination of the verb, most absurdly means by it, that the verb is inflected, just as it is in the indicative or the potential mood; and when he speaks of changes or variations of termination, he means, that the verb remains the same as in the first person singular! For example: “The second person singular of the imperfect tense in the subjunctive mood, is also very frequently varied in its termination: as, ‘If thou loved him truly, thou wouldst obey him.’”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 209. “The auxiliaries of the potential mood, when applied to the subjunctive, do not change the termination of the second person singular; as, ‘If thou mayst or canst go.’”—ib., p. 210. “Some authors think, that the termination of these auxiliaries should be varied: as, I advise thee, that thou may beware.”—ib., p. 210. “When the circumstances of contingency and futurity concur, it is proper to vary the terminations of the second and third persons singular.”—ib., 210. “It may be considered as a rule, that the changes of termination are necessary, when these two circumstances concur.”—ib., p. 207. “It may be considered as a rule, that no changes of termination are necessary, when these two circumstances concur.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 264. Now Murray and Ingersoll here mean precisely the same thing! Whose fault is that? If Murray’s, he has committed many such. But, in this matter, he is contradicted not only by Ingersoll, but, on one occasion, by himself. For he declares it to be an opinion in which he concurs. “That the definition and nature of the subjunctive mood, have no reference to change of termination.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 211. And yet, amidst his strange blunders, he seems to have ascribed the meaning which a verb has in this mood, to the inflections which it receives in the indicative: saying. “That part of the verb which grammarians call the present tense of the subjunctive mood, has a future signification. This is effected by varying the terminations of the second and third persons singular of the indicative!”—ib., p. 207. But the absurdity which he really means to teach, is, that the subjunctive mood is derived from the indicative,—the primitive or radical verb, from it’s derivatives or branches!

Page 2150

[262] Wert is sometimes used in lieu of wast; and, in such instances, both by authority and by analogy, it appears to belong here, if anywhere. See OBS. 2d and 3d, below.

[263] Some grammarians, regardless of the general usage of authors, prefer was to were in the singular number of this tense of the subjunctive mood. In the following remark, the tense is named "present" and this preference is urged with some critical extravagance: "Was, though the past tense of the indicative mood, expresses the present of the hypothetical; as, 'I wish that I was well.' The use of this hypothetical form of the subjunctive mood, has given rise to a form of expression wholly unwarranted by the rules of grammar. When the verb was is to be used in the present tense singular, in this form of the subjunctive mood, the ear is often pained with a plural were, as, 'Were I your master'—'Were he compelled to do it,' &c. This has become so common that some of the best grammars of the language furnish authority for the barbarism, and even in the second person supply wert, as a convenient accompaniment. If such a conjugation is admitted, we may expect to see Shakspeare's 'thou beest' in full use."—Chandler's Gram., Ed. of 1821, p. 55. In "Chandler's Common School Grammar," of 1847, the language of this paragraph is somewhat softened, but the substance is still retained. See the latter work, p. 80.

[264] "If I were, If thou were. If he were."—Harrison's Gram., p. 31. "If, or though, I were loved. If, or though, thou were, or wert loved. If, or though, he were loved."—Bicknell's Gram., Part i, p. 69. "If, though, &c. I were burned, thou were burned or you were burned, he were burned."—Buchanan's Gram., p. 53. "Though thou were. Some say, 'though thou wert.'"—Mackintosh's Gram., p. 178. "If or though I were. If or though thou were. If or though he were."—St. Quentin's General Gram., p. 86. "If I was, Thou wast, or You was or were, He was. Or thus: If I were, Thou wert, or you was or were, He were."—Webster's Philosophical Gram., p. 95; Improved Gram., p. 64. "PRESENT TENSE. Before, &c. I be; thou beest, or you be; he, she, or it, be: We, you or ye, they, be. PAST TENSE. Before, &c. I were; thou wert, or you were; he, she, or it, were; We, you or ye, they, were."—WHITE, on the English Verb, p. 52.

Page 2151

[265] The text in Acts, xxii, 20th, "I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death," ought rather to be, "I also stood by, and consented to his death;" but the present reading is, thus far, a literal version from the Greek, though the verb "kept," that follows, is not. Montanus renders it literally: "Et ipse eram astans, et consentiens interemptioni ejus, et custodiens vestimenta interficientium illum." Beza makes it better Latin thus: "Ego quoque adstabam, et una assentiebar caedi ipsius, et custodiebam pallia eorum qui interimebant eum." Other examples of a questionable or improper use of the progressive form may occasionally be found in good authors; as, "A promising boy of six years of age, was missing by his parents."—Whittier, Stranger in Lowell, p. 100. Missing, wanting, and willing, after the verb to be, are commonly reckoned participial adjectives; but here "was missing" is made a passive verb, equivalent to was missed, which, perhaps, would better express the meaning. To miss, to perceive the absence of, is such an act of the mind, as seems unsuited to the compound form, to be missing; and, if we cannot say, "The mother was missing her son," I think we ought not to use the same form passively, as above.

[266] Some grammarians, contrary to the common opinion, suppose the verbs here spoken of, to have, not a passive, but a neuter signification. Thus, Joseph Guy, Jun., of London: "Active verbs often take a neuter sense; as, A house is building; here, is building is used in a neuter signification, because it has no object after it. By this rule are explained such sentences as, Application is wanting; The grammar is printing; The lottery is drawing; It is flying, &c."—Guy's English Gram., p. 21. "Neuter," here, as in many other places, is meant to include the active-intransitives. "Is flying" is of this class; and "is wanting," corresponding to the Latin caret, appears to be neuter; but the rest seem rather to be passives. Tried, however, by the usual criterion,—the naming of the "agent" which, it is said, "a verb passive necessarily implies,"—what may at first seem progressive passives, may not always be found such. "Most verbs signifying action" says Dr. Johnson, "may likewise signify condition, or habit, and become neuters, [i. e. active-intransitives]; as I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking."—Gram. before Quarto Dict., p. 7. So sell, form, make, and many others, usually transitive, have sometimes an active-intransitive sense which nearly approaches the passive, and of which are selling, is forming, are making, and the like, may be only equivalent expressions. For example: "It is cold, and ice forms rapidly—is forming rapidly—or is formed rapidly.”—Here, with little difference of meaning, is the appearance of both voices, the Active and the Passive; while “is forming,” which some will have for an example of “the Middle voice,” may be referred to either. If the following passive construction is right, is wanting or are wanting may be a verb of three or four different sorts: “Reflections that may drive away despair, cannot be wanting by him, who considers,” &c.—Johnson’s Rambler, No. 129: Wright’s Gram., p. 196.

Page 2152

[267] Dr. Bullions, in his grammar of 1849, says, “Nobody would think of saying, ‘He is being loved’—‘This result is being desired.’”—Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 237. But, according to J. W. Wright, whose superiority in grammar has sixty-two titled vouchers, this unheard-of barbarism is, for the present passive, precisely and solely what one ought to say! Nor is it, in fact, any more barbarous, or more foreign from usage, than the spurious example which the Doctor himself takes for a model in the active voice: “I am loving. Thou art loving, &c; I have been loving, Thou hast been loving, &c.”—A. and P. Gr., p. 92. So: “James is loving me.”—Ib., p. 235.

[268] “The predicate in the form, ‘The house is being built,’ would be, according to our view, ‘BEING BEING built,’ which is manifestly an absurd tautology.”—Mulligan’s Gram., 1852, p. 151.

[269] “Suppose a criminal to be enduring the operation of binding:—Shall we say, with Mr. Murray,—‘The criminal is binding?’ If so, HE MUST BE BINDING SOMETHING,—a circumstance, in effect, quite opposed to the fact presented. Shall we then say, as he does, in the present tense conjugation of his passive verb,—‘The criminal is bound?’ If so, the action of binding, which the criminal is suffering, will be represented as completed, —a position which the action its self will palpably deny.” See Wright’s Phil. Gram., p. 102. It is folly for a man to puzzle himself or others thus, with fictitious examples, imagined on purpose to make good usage seem wrong. There is bad grammar enough, for all useful purposes, in the actual writings of valued authors; but who can show, by any proofs, that the English language, as heretofore written, is so miserably inadequate to our wants, that we need use the strange neologism, “The criminal is being bound,” or any thing similar?

[270] It is a very strange event in the history of English grammar, that such a controversy as this should have arisen; but a stranger one still, that, after all that has been said, more argument is needed. Some men, who hope to be valued as scholars, yet stickle for an odd phrase, which critics have denounced as follows: “But the history of the language scarcely affords a parallel to the innovation, at once unphilosophical and hypercritical, pedantic and illiterate, which has lately appeared in the excruciating refinement ‘is being’ and its unmerciful variations. We hope, and indeed believe, that it has not received the sanction of any grammar adopted in our popular education, as it certainly never will of any writer of just pretensions to scholarship.”—The True Sun. N. Y., April 16, 1846.

Page 2153

[271] Education is a work of continuance, yet completed, like many others, as fast as it goes on. It is not, like the act of loving or hating, so complete at the first moment as not to admit the progressive form of the verb; for one may say of a lad, “I am educating him for the law;” and possibly, “He is educating for the law;” though not so well as, “He is to be educated for the law.” But, to suppose that “is educated” or “are educated” implies unnecessarily a cessation of the educating is a mistake. That conception is right, only when educated is taken adjectively. The phrase, “those who are educated in our seminaries,” hardly includes such as have been educated there in times past: much less does it apply to these exclusively, as some seem to think. “Being,” as inserted by Southey, is therefore quite needless: so it is often, in this new phraseology, the best correction being its mere omission.

[272] Worcester has also this citation: “The Eclectic Review remarks, ‘That a need of this phrase, or an equivalent one, is felt, is sufficiently proved by the extent to which it is used by educated persons and respectable writers.’”—Gram. before Dict., p. xlvii. Sundry phrases, equivalent in sense to this new voice, have long been in use, and are, of course, still needed; something from among them being always, by every accurate writer, still preferred. But this awkward innovation, use it who will, can no more be justified by a plea of “need,” than can every other hackneyed solecism extant. Even the Archbishop, if quoted right by Worcester, has descended to “uncouth English,” without either necessity or propriety, having thereby only misexpounded a very common Greek word—a “perfect or pluperfect” participle, which means “beaten, struck, or having been beaten”—G. Brown.

[273] Wells has also the following citations, which most probably accord with his own opinions, though the first is rather extravagant: “The propriety of these imperfect passive tenses has been doubted by almost all our grammarians; though I believe but few of them have written many pages without condescending to make use of them. Dr. Beattie says, ‘One of the greatest defects of the English tongue, with regard to the verb, seems to be the want of an imperfect passive participle.’ And yet he uses the imperfect participle in a passive sense as often as most writers.”—Pickbourn’s Dissertation on the English Verb.

“Several other expressions of this sort now and then occur, such as the new-fangled and most uncouth solecism, ‘is being done,’ for the good old English idiomatic expression, ‘is doing,’—an absurd periphrasis, driving out a pointed and pithy turn of the English language.”—N. A. Review. See Wells’s Grammar, 1850, p. 161.

Page 2154

The term, "imperfect passive tenses," seems not a very accurate one; because the present, the perfect, &c., are included. Pickbourn applies it to any passive tenses formed from the simple "imperfect participle;" but the phrase, "passive verbs in the progressive form," would better express the meaning. The term, "compound passive participle," which Wells applies above to "being built," "being printed," and the like, is also both unusual and inaccurate. Most readers would sooner understand by it the form, having been built, having been printed, &c. This author's mode of naming participles is always either very awkward or not distinctive. His scheme makes it necessary to add here, for each of these forms, a third epithet, referring to his main distinction of "imperfect and perfect;" as, "the compound imperfect participle passive," and "the compound perfect participle passive." What is "being builded" or "being printed," but "an imperfect passive participle?" Was this, or something else, the desideratum of Beattie?

[274] Borne usually signifies carried; born signifies brought forth. J. K. Worcester, the lexicographer, speaks of these two participles thus: "[Fist] The participle born is used in the passive form, and borne in the active form, [with reference to birth]; as, 'He was born blind,' John ix.; 'The barren hath borne seven,' I Sam. ii. This distinction between born and borne, though not recognized by grammars, is in accordance with common usage, at least in this country. In many editions of the Bible it is recognized; and in many it is not. It seems to have been more commonly recognized in American, than in English, editions."—Worcester's Universal and Critical Dict., w. Bear. In five, out of seven good American editions of the Bible among my books, the latter text is, "The barren hath born seven;" in two, it is as above, "hath borne." In Johnson's Quarto Dictionary, the perfect participle of bear is given erroneously, "bore, or born;" and that of forbear, which should be forborne, is found, both in his columns and in his preface, "forborn."

[275] According to Murray, Lennie, Bullions, and some others, to use begun for began or run for ran, is improper; but Webster gives run as well as ran for the preterit, and begun may be used in like manner, on the authority of Dryden, Pope, and Parnell.

[276] "And they shall pass through it, hardly bestead, and hungry."—Isaiah, viii, 21.

Page 2155

[277] “Brake [for the preterit of Break] seems now obsolescent.”—Dr. Crombie, Etymol. and Syntax, p. 193. Some recent grammarians, however, retain it; among whom are Bullions and M’Culloch. Wells retains it, but marks it as, “Obsolete,” as he does also the preterits bare, clave, drove, gat, slang, spake, span, spat, sware, tare, writ; and the participles hoven, loaden, rid from ride, spitten, stricken, and writ. In this he is not altogether consistent. Forms really obsolete belong not to any modern list of irregular verbs; and even such as are archaic and obsolescent, it is sometimes better to omit. If “loaden,” for example, is now out of use, why should “load, unload, and overload,” be placed, as they are by this author, among “irregular verbs;” while freight and distract, in spite of fraught and distraught, are reckoned regular? “Rid,” for rode or ridden, though admitted by Worcester, appears to me a low vulgarism.

[278] Cleave, to split, is most commonly, if not always, irregular, as above; cleave, to stick, or adhere, is usually considered regular, but clave was formerly used in the preterit, and clove still may be: as, “The men of Judah clave unto their king.”—Samuel. “The tongue of the public prosecutor clove to the roof of his mouth.”—Boston Atlas, 1855.

[279] Respecting the preterit and the perfect participle of this verb, drink, our grammarians are greatly at variance. Dr. Johnson says, “preter. drank or drunk; part. pass, drunk or drunken.” Dr. Webster: “pret. and pp. drank. Old pret. and pp. drunk; pp. drunken.” Lowth: “pret. drank; part, drunk or drunken.” So Stamford. Webber, and others. Murray has it: “Imperf. drank, Perf. Part, drunk.” So Comly, Lennie, Bullions, Blair, Butler. Frost, Felton, Goldsbury, and many others. Churchill cites the text, “Serve me till I have eaten and drunken,” and observes, “Drunken is now used only as an adjective. The impropriety of using the preterimperfect [drank] for the participle of this verb is very common.”—New Gram., p. 261. Sanborn gives both forms for the participle, preferring drank to drunk. Kirkham prefers drunk to drank; but contradicts himself in a note, by unconsciously making drunk an adjective: “The men were drunk; i. e. inebriated. The toasts were drank.”—Gram., p. 140. Cardell, in his Grammar, gives, “drink, drank, drunk,” but in his story of Jack Halyard, on page 59, he wrote, “had drinked,” and this, according to Fowle’s True English Grammar, is not incorrect. The preponderance of authority is yet in favour of saying, “had drunk,” but drank seems to be a word of greater delicacy, and perhaps it is sufficiently authorized. A hundred late writers may be quoted for it, and some that were popular in the days of Johnson. “In the choice of what is fit to be eaten and drank.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, Vol. 1, p. 51. “Which I had no sooner drank.”—Addison, Tattler, No. 131.

Page 2156

“Thy brother’s blood the thirsty earth hath drank,
Broach’d with the steely point of Clifford’s lance.”—Shakspeare.

[280] “Holden is not in general use; and is chiefly employed by attorneys.”—Crombie, on Etymology and Synt., p. 190. Wells marks this word as, “Obsolescent.”—School Gram., p. 103. L. Murray rejected it; but Lowth gave it alone, as a participle, and held only as a preterit.

[281] “I have been found guilty of killing cats I never hurted.”—Roderick Random, Vol. i, p. 8.

[282] “They keeped aloof as they passed her bye.”—J. Hogg, Pilgrims of the Sun, p. 19.

[283] Lie, to be at rest, is irregular, as above; but lie, to utter falsehood, is regular, as follows: lie, lied, lying, lied.

“Thus said, at least, my mountain guide,
Though deep, perchance, the villain lied.”
—Scott’s Lady of the Lake.

[284] Perhaps there is authority sufficient to place the verb rend among those which are redundant.

“Where’er its cloudy veil was rended.”
—Whittier’s Moll Pitcher.

“Mortal, my message is for thee; thy chain to earth is rended;
I bear thee to eternity; prepare! thy course is ended.”
—The Amulet.

“Come as the winds come, when forests are rended.”
—Sir W. Scott.

“The hunger pangs her sons which rended.”
—NEW QUARTERLY REVIEW: Examiner, No. 119.

[285] We find now and then an instance in which gainsay is made regular: as, “It can neither be rivalled nor gainsayed.”—Chapman’s Sermons to Presbyterians, p. 36. Perhaps it would be as well to follow Webster here, in writing rivald with one l: and the analogy of the simple verb say, in forming this compound irregularly, gainsaid. Usage warrants the latter, however, better than the former.

[286] “Shoe, shoed or shod, shoeing, shoed or shod.”—Old Gram., by W. Ward, p. 64; and Fowle’s True English Gram., p. 46.

[287] "A. Murray has rejected sung as the Preterite, and L. Murray has rejected sang. Each Preterite, however, rests on good authority. The same observation may be made, respecting sank and sunk. Respecting the preterites which have a or u, as slang, or slung, sank, or sunk, it would be better were the former only to be used, as the Preterite and Participle would thus be discriminated."—Dr. Crombie, on Etymology and Syntax, p. 199. The preterits which this critic thus prefers, are rang, sang, stung, sprang, swang, sank, shrank, slank, stank, swam, and span for spun.

Page 2157

In respect to them all, I think he makes an ill choice. According to his own showing, fling, string, and sting, always make the preterit and the participle alike; and this is the obvious tendency of the language, in all these words. I reject slang and span, as derivatives from sling and spin; because, in such a sense, they are obsolete, and the words have other uses. Lindley Murray, in his early editions, rejected sang, sank, slang, swang, shrank, slank, stank, and span; and, at the same time, preferred rang, sprang, and swam, to rung, sprung, and swum. In his later copies, he gave the preference to the u, in all these words; but restored sang and sank, which Crombie names above, still omitting the other six, which did not happen to be mentioned to him.

[288] Sate for the preterit of sit, and sitten for the perfect participle, are, in my opinion, obsolete, or no longer in good use. Yet several recent grammarians prefer sitten to sat; among whom are Crombie, Lennie, Bullions, and M'Culloch. Dr. Crombie says, "Sitten, though formerly in use, is now obsolescent. Laudable attempts, however, have been made to restore it."—On Etymol. and Syntax, p. 199. Lennie says, "Many authors, both here and in America, use sate as the Past time of sit; but this is improper, for it is apt to be confounded with sate to glut. Sitten and spitten are preferable [to sat and spit,] though obsolescent."—Principles of E. Gram., p. 45. Bullions says, "Sitten and spitten are nearly obsolete, though preferable to sat and spit."—Principles of E. Gram., p. 64. M'Culloch gives these verbs in the following form: "Sit, sat, sitten or sat. Spit, spit or spat, spit or spitten."—Manual of E. Gram., p. 65.

[289] "He will find the political hobby which he has bestrided no child's nag."—The Vanguard, a Newspaper.

"Through the pressed nostril, spectacle-bestrid."—Cowper.

"A lank haired hunter strided."—Whittier's Sabbath Scene.

[290] In the age of Pope, writ was frequently used both for the participle and for the preterit of this verb. It is now either obsolete or peculiar to the poets. In prose it seems vulgar: as, "He writ it, at least, published it, in 1670."—Barclay's Works, Vol. i, p. 77.

"He, who, supreme in judgement, as in wit, Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ."—Pope, Ess. on Crit.

Dr. Crombie remarked, more than thirty years ago, that, "Wrote as the Participle [of Write,] is generally disused, and likewise writ."—Treatise on Etym. and Synt., p. 202.

[291] A word is not necessarily ungrammatical by reason of having a rival form that is more common. The regular words, beseached, blowed, bursted, digged, freezed, bereaved, hanged, meant, sawed, showed, stringed, weeped, I admit for good English, though we find them all condemned by some critics.

Page 2158

[292] “And the man in whom the evil spirit was, leapt on them.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Acts, xix, 16. In Scott’s Bible, and several others, the word is “leaped.” Walker says, “The past time of this verb is generally heard with the diphthong short; and if so, it ought to be spelled leapt, rhyming with kept.”—Walker’s Pron. Dict., w. Leap. Worcester, who improperly pronounces leaped in two ways, “l–ept or l=ept,” misquotes Walker, as saying, “it ought to be spelled lept.”—Universal and Critical Dict., w. Leap. In the solemn style, leaped is, of course, two syllables. As for leapedst or leapest, I know not that either can be found.

[293] Acquit is almost always formed regularly, thus: acquit, acquitted, acquitting, acquitted. But, like quit, it is sometimes found in an irregular form also; which, if it be allowable, will make it redundant: as, “To be acquit from my continual smart.”—SPENCER: Johnson’s Dict. “The writer holds himself acquit of all charges in this regard.”—Judd, on the Revolutionary War, p. 5. “I am glad I am so acquit of this tinder-box.”—SHAK.

[294]

“Not know my voice! O, time’s extremity!
Hast thou so crack’d and splitted my poor tongue?”
—SHAK.: Com. of Er.

[295] Whet is made redundant in Webster’s American Dictionary, as well as in Wells’s Grammar; but I can hardly affirm that the irregular form of it is well authorized.

[296] In S. W. Clark’s Practical Grammar, first published in 1847—a work of high pretensions, and prepared expressly “for the education of Teachers”—sixty-three out of the foregoing ninety-five Redundant Verbs, are treated as having no regular or no irregular forms. (1.) The following twenty-nine are omitted by this author, as if they were always regular; belay, bet, betide, blend, bless, curse, dive, dress, geld, lean, leap, learn, mulet, pass, pen, plead, prove, rap, reave, roast, seethe, smell, spoil, stave, stay, wake, wed, whet, wont. (2.) The following thirty-four are given by him as being always irregular; abide, bend, beseech, blow, burst, catch, chide, creep, deal, freeze, grind, hang, knit, lade, lay, mean, pay, shake, sleep, slide, speed, spell, spill, split, string, strive, sweat, sweep, thrive, throw, weave, weep, wet, wind. Thirty-two of the ninety-five are made redundant by him, though not so called in his book.

In Wells’s School Grammar, “the 113th Thousand,” dated 1850, the deficiencies of the foregoing kinds, if I am right, are about fifty. This author’s “List of Irregular Verbs” has forty-four Redundants, to which he assigns a regular form as well as an irregular. He is here about as much nearer right than Clark, as this number surpasses thirty-two, and comes towards ninety-five. The words about which they differ, are—pen, seethe, and whet, of the former number; and catch, deal, hang, knit, spell, spill, sweat, and thrive, of the latter.

Page 2159

[297] In the following example, there is a different phraseology, which seems not so well suited to the sense: “But we must be aware of imagining, that we render style strong and expressive, by a constant and multiplied use of epithets”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 287. Here, in stead of “be aware,” the author should have said, “beware,” or “be ware,” that is, be wary, or cautious; for aware means apprised, or informed, a sense very different from the other.

[298] Dr. Crombie contends that must and ought are used only in the present tense. (See his Treatise, p. 204.) In this he is wrong, especially with regard to the latter word. Lennie, and his copyist Bullions, adopt the same notion; but Murray, and many others, suppose them to “have both a present and [a] past signification.”

[299] Dr. Crombie says, “This Verb, as an auxiliary, is inflexible; thus we say, ‘he will go;’ and ‘he wills to go.’”—Treatise on Etym. and Syntax, p. 203. He should have confined his remarks to the familiar style, in which all the auxiliaries, except do, be, and have, are inflexible. For, in the solemn style, we do not say, “Thou will go,” but, “Thou wilt go.”

[300] “HAD-I-WIST. A proverbial expression, Oh that I had known. Gower.”—Chalmers’s Dict., also Webster’s. In this phrase, which is here needlessly compounded, and not very properly explained, we see wist used as a perfect participle. But the word is obsolete. “Had I wist,” is therefore an obsolete phrase, meaning. If I had known, or, “O that I had known.”

[301] That is, passive verbs, as well as others, have three participles for each; so that, from one active-transitive root, there come six participles—three active, and three passive. Those numerous grammarians who, like Lindley Murray, make passive verbs a distinct class, for the most part, very properly state the participles of a verb to be “three,” but, to represent the two voices as modifications of one species of verbs, and then say, “The Participles are three,” as many recent writers do, is manifestly absurd: because two threes should be six. Thus, for example, Dr. Bullions: “In English [,] the transitive verb has always two voices, the Active and [the] Passive.”—Prin. of E. Gram., p. 33. “The Participles are three, [:] the Present, the Perfect, and the Compound Perfect.”—Ib., p. 57. Again: “Transitive verbs have two voices, called the Active and the Passive.”—Bullions’s Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 66. “Verbs have three participles—the present, the past, and the perfect; as, loving, loved, having loved, in the active voice: AND being loved, loved, having been loved, in the passive.”—lb., p. 76. Now either not all these are the participles of one verb, or that verb has more than three. Take your choice. Redundant verbs usually have duplicate forms of all the participles except the Imperfect Active; as, lighting, lighted or lit, having lighted or having lit; so again, being lighted or being lit, lighted or lit, having been lighted or having been lit.

Page 2160

[302] The diversity in the application of these names, and in the number or nature of the participles recognized in different grammars, is quite as remarkable as that of the names themselves. To prepare a general synopsis of this discordant teaching, no man will probably think it worth his while. The following are a few examples of it:

1. “How many Participles, are there; There are two, the Active Participle which ends in (ing), as burning, and the Passive Participle which ends in (ed) as, burned.”—The British Grammar, p. 140. In this book, the participles of Be are named thus: “ACTIVE. Being. PASSIVE. Been, having been.”—lb., p. 138.
2. “How many Sorts of Participles are there? A. Two; the Active Participle, that ends always in ing; as, loving, and the Passive Participle, that ends always in ed, t, or n; as, loved, taught, slain.”—Fisher’s Practical New Gram., p. 75.
3. “ACTIVE VOICE. Participles. Present, calling. Past, having called. Future, being about to call. PASSIVE VOICE. Present, being called. Past, having been called. Future, being about to be called.”—Ward’s Practical Gram., pp. 55 and 59.
4. ACT. “Present, loving; Perfect, loved; Past, having loved.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 39. The participles passive are not given by Lowth; but, by inference from his rule for forming “the passive verb,” they must be these: “Present, being loved; Perfect, loved, or been loved; Past, having been loved.” See Lowth’s Gram., p. 44.
5. “ACT. V. Present, Loving. Past, Loved. Perfect, Having loved. PAS. V. Pres. Being loved. Past, Loved. Perf. Having been loved.”—Lennie’s Gram., pp. 25 and 33; Greene’s Analysis, p. 225; Bullions’s Analyt. and Pract. Gram., pp. 87 and 95. This is Bullions’s revised scheme, and much worse than his former one copied from Murray.
6. ACT. “Present. Loving. Perfect. Loved. Compound Perfect, Having loved.” PAS. “Present. Being loved. Perfect or Passive. Loved. Compound Perfect. Having been loved.”—L. Murray’s late editions, pp. 98 and 99; Hart’s Gram., pp. 85 and 88; Bullions’s Principles of E. Gram., pp. 47 and 55. No form or name of the first participle passive was adopted by Murray in his early editions.

Page 2161

7. ACT. "Present. Pursuing. Perfect. Pursued. Compound perfect. Having pursued." PAS. "Present and Perfect. Pursued, or being pursued. Compound Perfect. Having been pursued."—Rev. W. Allen's Gram., pp. 88 and 93. Here the first two passive forms, and their names too, are thrown together; the former as equivalents, the latter as coalescents.

8. "TRANSITIVE. Pres. Loving, Perf. Having loved. PASSIVE. Pres. Loved or Being loved, Perf. Having been loved."—Parkhurst's Gram. for Beginners, p. 110. Here the second active form is wanting; and the second passive is confounded with the first.

9. ACT. "Imperfect, Loving [;] Perfect, Having loved [;]" PAS. "Imperfect, Being loved [;] Perfect, Loved, Having been loved."—Wells's School Gram., pp. 99 and 101. Here, too, the second active is not given; the third is called by the name of the second; and the second passive is confounded with the third, as if they were but forms of the same thing.

10. ACT. "Imperfect, (Present,) Loving. Perfect. Having loved. Auxiliary Perfect, Loved." PAS. "Imperfect, (Present,) Being loved. Perfect, Having been loved. Passive, Loved."—N. Butler's Pract. Gram., pp. 84 and 91. Here the common order of most of the participles is very improperly disturbed, and as many are misnamed.

11. ACT. "Present, Loving [;] Perfect, Loved [;] Comp. Perf. Having loved [;]" PAS. "Present, Being loved [;] Perfect, Loved, or been loved [;] Compound Perfect, Having been loved."—Frazer's Improved Gram., 63 and 73. Here the second participle passive has two forms, one of which, "been loved," is not commonly recognized, except as part of some passive verb or preperfect participle.

12. ACT. V. "Imperfect, Seeing. Perfect, Seen. Compound, Having seen." PAS. V. "Preterimperfect, Being seen. Preterperfect, Having been seen."—Churchill's New Gram., p. 102. Here the chief and radical passive participle is lacking, and neither of the compounds is well named.

13. ACT. "Present, Loving, [;] Past, Loved, [;] Com. Past, Having loved." PAS. "Present, Being loved. [;] Past, Loved. [;] Com. Past. [;] Having been loved."—Felton's Analyt. and Pract. Gram., of 1843, pp. 37 and 50.

14. ACT. "Present. [,] Loving. [;] Perfect. [,] Loved. [;] Compound Perfect. [,] Having loved." PAS. "Perfect or Passive. Loved. Compound Perfect. Having been loved."—Bicknell's Gram. Lond., 1790, Part I, pp. 66 and 70; L. Murray's 2d Edition, York, 1796, pp. 72 and 77. Here "Being loved," is not noticed.

15. "Participles. Active Voice. Present. Loving. Past. Loved, or having loved. Participles. Passive Voice. Present. Being loved. Past. Having been loved."—John Burn's Practical Gram., p. 70. Here the chief Passive term, "Loved," is omitted, and two of the active forms are confounded.

Page 2162

16. “Present, loving, Past, loved, Compound, having loved.”—S. W. Clark’s Practical Gram., of 1848, p. 71. “ACT. VOICE.—Present ... Loving [;] Compound [;] Having loved..... Having been loving.”—ib., p. 81. “PAS. VOICE.—Present..... Loved, or, being loved [;] Compound..... Having been loved.”—ib., p. 83. “The Compound Participle consists of the Participle of a principal verb, added to the word having, or being, or to the two words having been. Examples—Having loved—being loved—having been loved.”—ib., p. 71. Here the second extract is deficient, as may be seen by comparing it with the first; and the fourth is grossly erroneous, as is shown by the third. The participles, too, are misnamed throughout.

The reader may observe that the punctuation of the foregoing examples is very discrepant. I have, in brackets, suggested some corrections, but have not attempted a general adjustment of it.

[303] “The most unexceptionable distinction which grammarians make between the participles, is, that the one points to the continuation of the action, passion, or state denoted by the verb; and the other, to the completion of it. Thus, the present participle signifies imperfect action, or action begun and not ended: as, ‘I am writing a letter.’ The past participle signifies action perfected, or finished: as, ‘I have written a letter.’—‘The letter is written.’”—Murray’s Grammar, 8vo, p. 65. “The first [participle] expresses a continuation; the other, a completion.”—W. Allen’s Grammar, 12mo, London, 1813. “The idea which this participle [e.g. ‘tearing’] really expresses, is simply that of the continuance of an action in an incomplete or unfinished state. The action may belong to time present, to time past, or to time future. The participle which denotes the completion of an action, as torn, is called the perfect participle; because it represents the action as perfect or finished.”—Barnard’s Analytic Gram., p. 51. Emmons stealthily copies from my Institutes as many as ten lines in defence of the term ‘Imperfect’ and yet, in his conjugations, he calls the participle in ing, “Present.” This seems inconsistent. See his “Grammatical Instructor,” p. 61.

[304] “The ancient termination (from the Anglo-Saxon) was and; as, ‘His schynand sword.’ Douglas. And sometimes ende; as, ‘She, between the deth and life, Swounende lay full ofte.’ Gower.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 88. “The present Participle, in Saxon, was formed by ande, ende, or onde; and, by cutting off the final e, it acquired a Substantive signification, and extended the idea to the agent: as, alysende, freeing, and alysend, a redeemer; freonde, loving or friendly, and freond, a lover or a friend.”—Booth’s Introd. to Dict., p. 75.

Page 2163

[305] William B. Fowle, a modern disciple of Tooke, treats the subject of grammatical time rather more strangely than his master. Thus: "How many times or tenses have verbs? Two, [the] present and [the] past," To this he immediately adds in a note: "We do not believe in a past any more than a future tense of verbs."—The True English Gram., p. 30. So, between these two authors, our verbs will retain no tenses at all. Indeed, by his two tenses, Fowle only meant to recognize the two simple forms of an English verb. For he says, in an other place, "We repeat our conviction that no verb in itself expresses time of any sort."—Ib., p. 69,

[306] "STONE'-BLIND," "STONE'-COLD," and "STONE'-DEAD," are given in Worcester's Dictionary, as compound adjectives; and this is perhaps their best classification; but, if I mistake not, they are usually accented quite as strongly on the latter syllable, as on the former, being spoken rather as two emphatic words. A similar example from Sigourney, "I saw an infant marble cold," is given by Frazee under this Note: "Adjectives sometimes belong to other adjectives; as, 'red hot iron.'"—Improved Gram., p. 141. But Webster himself, from whom this doctrine and the example are borrowed, (see his Rule XIX,) makes "RED'-HOT" but one word in his Dictionary; and Worcester gives it as one word, in a less proper form, even without a hyphen, "RED'HOT."

[307] "OF ENALLAGE.—The construction which may be reduced to this figure in English, chiefly appears when one part of speech, is used with the power and effect of another."—Ward's English Gram., p. 150.

[308] Forsooth is literally a word of affirmation or assent, meaning for truth, but it is now almost always used ironically: as, "In these gentlemen whom the world forsooth calls wise and solid, there is generally either a moroseness that persecutes, or a dullness that tires you."—Home's Art of Thinking, p. 24.

[309] In most instances, however, the words hereof, thereof, and whereof, are placed after nouns, and have nothing to do with any verb. They are therefore not properly adverbs, though all our grammarians and lexicographers call them so. Nor are they adjectives; because they are not used adjectively, but rather in the sense of a pronoun governed by of; or, what is nearly the same thing, in the sense of the possessive or genitive case. Example: "And the fame hereof went abroad."—Matt., ix, 26. That is, "the fame of this miracle;" which last is a better expression, the other being obsolete, or worthy to be so, on account of its irregularity.

Page 2164

[310] Seldom is sometimes compared in this manner, though not frequently; as, “This kind of verse occurs the seldomest, but has a happy effect in diversifying the melody.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 385. In former days, this word, as well as its correlative often, was sometimes used adjectively; as, “Thine often infirmities.”—1 Tim., v, 23. “I hope God’s Book hath not been my seldomest lectures.”—Queen Elizabeth, 1585. John Walker has regularly compared the adverb forward: in describing the latter L, he speaks of the tip of the tongue as being “brought a little forwarder to the teeth.”—Pron. Dict., Principles, No. 55.

[311] A few instances of the regular inflection of adverbs ending in ly, may be met with in modern compositions, as in the following comparisons: “As melodies will sometimes ring sweetlier in the echo.”—The Dial, Vol. i, p. 6. “I remember no poet whose writings would safelier stand the test.”—Coleridge’s Biog. Lit., Vol. ii, p. 53.

[312] De Sacy, in his Principles of General Grammar, calls the relative pronouns “Conjunctive Adjectives.” See Fosdick’s Translation, p. 57. He also says, “The words who, which, etc. are not the only words which connect the function of a Conjunction with another design. There are Conjunctive Nouns and Adverbs, as well as Adjectives; and a characteristic of these words is, that we can substitute for them another form of expression in which shall be found the words who, which, etc. Thus, when, where, what, how, as, and many others, are Conjunctive words: [as,] ‘I shall finish when I please;’ that is, ‘I shall finish at the time at which I please.’—‘I know not where I am;’ i.e. ‘I know not the place in which I am.’”—Ib., p. 58. In respect to the conjunctive adverbs, this is well enough, so far as it goes; but the word who appears to me to be a pronoun, and not an adjective; and of his “Conjunctive Nouns,” he ought to have given us some examples, if he knew of any.

[313] “Now the Definition of a CONJUNCTION is as follows—a Part of Speech, void of Signification itself, but so formed as to help Signification by making TWO or more significant Sentences to be ONE significant Sentence.”—Harris’s Hermes, 6th Edition, London, p. 238.

[314] Whether these, or any other conjunctions that come together, ought to be parsed together, is doubtful. I am not in favour of taking any words together, that can well be parsed separately. Goodenow, who defines a phrase to be “the union of two or more words having the nature and construction [sic—KTH] of a single word,” finds an immense number of these unions, which he cannot, or does not, analyze. As examples of “a conjunctive phrase,” he gives “as if and “as though.”—Gram., p. 25. But when he comes to speak of ellipsis, he says: “After the conjunctions than, as, but, &c., some words are generally understood; as, ‘We have more than [that is which] will suffice;’ ‘He acted as [he would act] if he were mad.’”—ib., p. 41. This doctrine is plainly repugnant to the other.

Page 2165

[315] Of the construction noticed in this observation, the Rev. Matt. Harrison cites a good example; pronounces it elliptical; and scarcely forbears to condemn it as bad English: “In the following sentence, the relative pronoun is three times omitted:—‘Is there a God to swear by, and is there none to believe in, none to trust to?’—Letters and Essays, Anonymous. By, in, and to, as prepositions, stand alone, denuded of the relatives to which they apply. The sentence presents no attractions worthy of imitation. It exhibits a license carried to the extreme point of endurance.”—Harrison’s English Language, p. 196.

[316] “An ellipsis of from after the adverb off has caused the latter word sometimes to be inserted incorrectly among the prepositions. Ex. ‘off (from) his horse.’”—Hart’s Gram., p. 96. Off and on are opposites; and, in a sentence like the following, I see no more need of inserting “from” after the former, than to after the latter: “Thou shalt not come down off that bed on which thou art gone up.”—2 Kings, i, 16.

[317] “Who consequently reduced the greatest part of the island TO their own power.”—Swift, on the English Tongue. “We can say, that one nation reduces another TO subjection. But when dominion or power is used, we always, as [so] far as I know, say, reduce UNDER their power” [or dominion].—Blair’s Rhet., p. 229.

[318] “O foy, don’t misapprehend me; I don’t say so.”—DOUBLE DEALER: Kames, El. of Crit., i, 305.

[319] According to Walker and Webster, la is pronounced law; and, if they are right in this, the latter is only a false mode of spelling. But I set down both, because both are found in books, and because I incline to think the former is from the French la, which is pronounced lah. Johnson and Webster make la and lo synonymous; deriving lo from the Saxon la, and la either from lo or from the French la. “Law, how you joke, cousin.”—Columbian Orator, p. 178. “Law me! the very ghosts are come now!”—Ibid. “Law, sister Betty! I am glad to see you!”—Ibid.

“La you! If you speak ill of the devil,
How he takes it at heart!”—SHAKESPEARE: Joh. Dict., w. La.

Page 2166

[320] The interjection of interrogating, being placed independently, either after a question, or after something which it converts into a question, is usually marked with its own separate erote; as, "But this is even so: eh?"—Newspaper. "Is't not drown'd i' the last rain? Ha?"—Shakespeare. "Does Bridget paint still, Pompey? Ha?"—Id. "Suits my complexion—hey, gal? so I think."—Yankee Schoolmaster. Sometimes we see it divided only by a comma, from the preceding question; as, "What dost thou think of this doctrine, Friend Gurth, ha?"—SCOTT'S IVANHOE: Fowler's E. Gram., Sec.29.

[321] Though oh and ah are most commonly used as signs of these depressing passions, it must be confessed that they are sometimes employed by reputable writers, as marks of cheerfulness or exultation; as, "Ah, pleasant proof," &c.—Cowper's Task, p. 179. "Merrily oh! merrily oh!"—Moore's Tyrolese Song. "Cheerily oh! cheerily oh!"—Ib. But even if this usage be supposed to be right, there is still some difference between these words and the interjection O: if there were not, we might dispense with the latter, and substitute one of the former; but this would certainly change the import of many an invocation.

[322] This position is denied by some grammarians. One recent author says, "The object cannot properly be called one of the principal parts of a sentence; as it belongs only to some sentences, and then is dependent on the verb, which it modifies or explains."—Goodenow's Gram., p. 87. This is consistent enough with the notion, that, "An infinitive, with or without a substantive, may be the object of a transitive verb; as, 'I wish to ride;' 'I wish you to ride.'"—Ib., p. 37. Or, with the contrary notion, that, "An infinitive may be the object of a preposition, expressed or understood; as, 'I wish for you to ride.'"—Ibid. But if the object governed by the verb, is always a mere qualifying adjunct, a mere "explanation of the attribute," (Ib., p. 28,) how differs it from an adverb? "Adverbs are words added to verbs, and sometimes to other words, to qualify their meaning."—Ib., p. 23. And if infinitives and other mere adjuncts may be the objects which make verbs transitive, how shall a transitive verb be known? The fact is, that the true object of the transitive verb is one of the principal parts of the sentence, and that the infinitive mood cannot properly be reckoned such an object.

Page 2167

[323] Some writers distinguish sentences as being of three kinds, simple, and complex, and compound; but, in this work, care has not in general been taken to discriminate between complex sentences and compound. A late author states the difference thus: "A sentence containing but one proposition is simple; a sentence containing two propositions, one of which modifies the other, is complex; a sentence containing two propositions which in no way modify each other, is compound."—Greene's Analysis, p. 3. The term compound, as applied to sentences, is not usually so restricted. An other, using the same terms for a very different division, explains them thus: "A Simple Sentence contains but one subject and one attribute; as, 'The sun shines.' A Complex Sentence contains two or more subjects of the same attribute, or two or more attributes of the same subject; as, 'The sun and the stars shine.' 'The sun rises and sets.' 'The sun and the stars rise and set.' A Compound Sentence is composed of two or more simple or complex sentences united; as, 'The sun shines, and the stars twinkle.' 'The sun rises and sets, as the earth revolves.'"—Pinneo's English Teacher, p. 10; Analytical Gram., pp. 128, 142, and 146. This notion of a complex sentence is not more common than Greene's; nor is it yet apparent, that the usual division of sentences into two kinds ought to give place to any tripartite distribution.

[324] The terms clause and member, in grammar, appear to have been generally used as words synonymous; but some authors have thought it convenient to discriminate them, as having different senses. Hiley says, "Those parts of a sentence which are separated by commas, are called clauses; and those separated by semicolons, are called members."—Hiley's Gram., p. 66. W. Allen too confines the former term to simple members: "A compound sentence is formed by uniting two or more simple sentences; as, Man is mortal, and life is uncertain. Each of these simple sentences is called a clause. When the members of a compound sentence are complex, they are subdivided into clauses; as, Virtue leads to honor, and insures true happiness; but vice degrades the understanding, and is succeeded by infamy."—Allen's Gram., p. 128. By some authors, the terms clause and phrase are often carelessly confounded, each being applied with no sort of regard to its proper import. Thus, where L. Murray and his copyists expound their text about "the pupil's composing frequently," even the minor phrase, "composing frequently," is absurdly called a clause; "an entire clause of a sentence."—See Murray's Gram., p. 179; Alger's, 61; Fisk's, 108; Ingersoll's, 180; Merchant's,

Page 2168

84; R. C. Smith's, 152; Weld's, 2d Ed., 150. The term sentence also is sometimes grossly misapplied. Thus, by R. C. Smith, the phrases "James and William," "Thomas and John," and others similar, are called "sentences."—Smith's New Gram., pp. 9 and 10. So Weld absurdly writes as follows; "A whole sentence is frequently the object of a preposition; as, 'The crime of being a young man.' Being a young man, is the object of the preposition of."—Weld's E. Gram., 2d Edition, p. 42. The phrase, "being a young man," here depends upon "of," but this preposition governs nothing but the participle "being." The construction of the word "man" is explained below, in Obs. 7th on Rule 6th, of Same Cases.

[325] In the very nature of things, all agreement consists in concurrence, correspondence, conformity, similarity, sameness, equality; but government is direction, control, regulation, restrain, influence, authoritative requisition, with the implication of inequality. That these properties ought to be so far distinguished in grammar, as never to be supposed to co-exist in the same terms and under the same circumstances, must be manifest to every reasoner. Some grammarians who seem to have been not always unaware of this, have nevertheless egregiously forgotten it at times. Thus Nutting, in the following remark, expresses a true doctrine, though he has written it with no great accuracy: "A word in parsing never governs the same word which it qualifies, or with which it agrees."—Practical Gram., p. 108. Yet, in his syntax, in which he pretends to separate agreement from government, he frames his first rule under the better head thus: "The nominative case governs a verb."—Ib. p. 96. Lindsey Murray recognizes no such government as this; but seems to suppose his rule for the agreement of a verb with its nominative to be sufficient for both verb and nominative. He appears, however, not to have known that a word does not agree syntactically with another that governs it; for, in his Exercises, he has given us, apparently from his own pen, the following untrue, but otherwise not very objectionable sentence: "On these occasions, the pronoun is governed by, an consequently agrees with, the preceding word."—Exercises, 8vo, ii, 74. This he corrects thus: On these occasions, the pronoun is governed by the preceding word, and consequently agrees with it."—Key, 8vo, ii, 204. The amendments most needed he overlooks; for the thought is not just, and the two verbs which are here connected with one and the same nominative, are different in form. See the same example, with the same variation of it, in Smith's New Gram., p. 167; and, without the change, in Ingersoll's, p. 233; and Fisk's, 141.

Page 2169

[326] It has been the notion of some grammarians, that the verb governs the nominative before it. This is an old rule, which seems to have been very much forgotten by modern authors; though doubtless it is as true, and as worthy to be perpetuated, as that which supposes the nominative to govern the verb: “Omne verbum personale finiti modi regit ante se expresse vel subaudite ejusdem numeri et personae nominativum vel aliquid pro nominativo: ut, ego scribo, tu legis, ille auscultat.”—DESPAUTERII SYNT. fol. xvi. This Despauter was a laborious author, who, within fifty years after the introduction of printing, complains that he found his task heavy, on account of the immense number of books and opinions which he had to consult: “Necdum tamen huic operi ultimam manum aliter imposui, quam Apelles olim picturis: siquidem aptius exire, quum in multis tum in hac arte est difficillimum, propter librorum legendorum immensitatem, et opinionum innumeram diversitatem.”—Ibid., Epist. Apologetica, A. D. 1513. But if, for this reason, the task was heavy then, what is it now!

[327] Nutting’s rule certainly implies that articles may relate to pronouns, though he gives no example, nor can he give any that is now good English; but he may, if he pleases, quote some other modern grammatists, who teach the same false doctrine: as, “RULE II. The article refers to its noun (OR PRONOUN) to limit its signification.”—R. G. Greene’s Grammatical Text-Book, p. 18. Greene’s two grammars are used extensively in the state of Maine, but they appear to be little known anywhere else. This author professes to inculcate “the principles established by Lindley Murray.” If veracity, on this point, is worth any thing, it is a pity that in both books there are so many points which, like the foregoing parenthesis, belie this profession. He followed here Ingersoll’s RULE IV, which is this: “The article refers to a noun OR PRONOUN, expressed or understood, to limit its signification.”—Conversations on E. Gram., p. 185.

[328] It is truly a matter of surprise to find under what titles or heads, many of the rules of syntax have been set, by some of the best scholars that have ever written on grammar. In this respect, the Latin and Greek grammarians are particularly censurable; but it better suits my purpose to give an example or two from one of the ablest of the English. Thus that elegant scholar the Rev. W. Allen: “SYNTAX OF NOUNS. 325. A verb agrees with its nominative case in number and person.”—Elements of E. Gram., p. 131. This is in no wise the syntax of Nouns, but rather that of the Verb. Again: “SYNTAX OF VERBS. 405. Active Verbs govern the accusative case; as, I love him. We saw them. God rules the world.”—ib., p. 161. This is not properly the syntax of Verbs, but rather that of Nouns or Pronouns in the accusative or objective case. Any one who has but the least sense of order, must see the propriety of referring the rule to that sort of words to which it is applied in parsing, and not some other. Verbs are never parsed or construed by the latter of these rules nor nouns by the former.

Page 2170

[329] What “the Series of Grammars, English, Latin, and Greek, ON THE SAME PLAN,” will ultimately be,—how many treatises for each or any of the languages it will probably contain,—what uniformity will be found in the distribution of their several sorts and sizes,—or what sameness they will have, except that which is bestowed by the binders,—cannot yet be stated with any certainty. It appears now, in 1850, that the scheme has thus far resulted in the production of three remarkably different grammars, for the English part of the series, and two more, a Latin grammar and a Greek, which resemble each other, or any of these, as little. In these works, abound changes and discrepancies, sometimes indicating a great unsettlement of “principles” or “plan,” and often exciting our wonder at the extraordinary variety of teaching, which has been claimed to be, “as nearly in the same words as the as the genius of the languages would permit!” In what should have been uniform, and easily might have been so, these grammars are rather remarkably diverse! Uniformity in the order, number, or phraseology of the Rules of Syntax, even for our own language, seems scarcely yet to have entered this “SAME PLAN” at all! The “onward progress of English grammar,” or, rather, of the author’s studies therein, has already, within “fifteen years,” greatly varied, from the first model of the “Series,” his own idea of a good grammar; and, though such changes bar consistency, a future progress, real or imaginary, may likewise, with as good reason, vary it yet as much more. In the preface to the work of 1840, it is said: “This, though not essentially different from the former, is yet in some respects a new work. It has been almost entirely rewritten.” And again: “The Syntax is much fuller than in the former work; and though the rules are not different, they are arranged in a different order.” So it is proved, that the model needed remodelling; and that the Syntax, especially, was defective, in matter as well as in order. The suggestions, that “the rules are not different,” and the works, “not essentially” so, will sound best to those who shall never compare them. The old code has thirty-four chief, and twenty-two “special rules;” the new has twenty chief, thirty-six “special,” and one “general rule.” Among all these, we shall scarcely find exact sameness preserved in so many as half a dozen instances. Of the old thirty-four, fourteen only were judged worthy to remain as principal rules; and two of these have no claim at all to such rank, one of them being quite useless. Of the twenty now made chief, five are new to “the Series of Grammars,” and three of these exceedingly resemble as many of mine; five are slightly altered, and five greatly, from their predecessors among the old: one is the first half of an old rule; one is an old subordinate rule, altered and elevated; and three are as they were before, their numbers and relative positions excepted!

Page 2171

[330] "The grammatical predicate is a verb."—Butler's Pract. Gram., 1845, p. 135, "The grammatical predicate is a finite verb."—Wells's School Gram., 1850, p. 185. "The grammatical predicate is either a verb alone, or the copula sum [some part of the verb be] with a noun or adjective."—Andrews and Stoddard's Lat. Gram., p. 163. "The predicate consists of two parts,—the verb, or copula, and that which is asserted by it, called the attribute; as 'Snow is white.'"—Greene's Analysis. p. 15. "The grammatical predicate consists of the attribute and copula not modified by other word."—Bullions, Analyt, and Pract. Gram., P. 129. "The logical predicate is the grammatical, with all the words or phrases that modify it." Ib. p. 130. "The Grammatical predicate is the word or words containing the simple affirmation, made respecting the subject."—Bullions, Latin Gram., p. 269. "Every proposition necessarily consists of these three parts: [the subject, the predicate, and the copula]; but then it is not alike needful, that they be all severally expressed in words; because the copula is often included in the term of the predicate; as when we say, he sits, which imports the same as, he is sitting."—Duncan's Logic, p 105. In respect to this Third Method of Analysis. It is questionable, whether a noun or an adjective which follows the verb and forms part of the assertion, is to be included in "the grammatical predicate" or not. Wells says, No: "It would destroy at once all distinction between the grammatical and the logical predicate."—School Gram., p. 185. An other question is, whether the copula (is, was or the like,) which the logicians discriminate, should be included as part of the logical predicate, when it occurs as a distinct word. The prevalent practice of the grammatical analyzers is, so to include it,—a practice which in itself is not very "logical." The distinction of subjects and predicates as "grammatical and logical," is but a recent one. In some grammars, the partition used in logic is copied without change, except perhaps of words: as "There are, in sentences, a subject, a predicate and a copula." JOS. R. CHANDLER, Gram. of 1821, p. 105; Gram. of 1847, p. 116. The logicians, however, and those who copy them, may have been hitherto at fault in recognizing and specifying their "copula." Mulligan forcibly argues that the verb of being is no more entitled to this name than is every other verb. (See his Exposition," Sec.46.) If he is right in this, the "copula" of the logicians (an in my opinion, his own also) is a mere figment of the brain, there being nothing that answers to the definition of the thing or to the true use of the word.

Page 2172

[331] I cite this example from Wells, for the purpose of explaining it without the several errors which that gentleman's "Model" incidentally inculcates. He suggests that and connects, not the two relative clauses, as such, but the two verbs can give and can take; and that the connexion between away and is must be traced through the former, and its object which. These positions, I think, are wrong. He also uses here, as elsewhere, the expressions, "which relates it" and, "which is related by," each in a very unusual, and perhaps an unauthorized, sense. His formule reads thus: "Away modifies can take; can take is CONNECTED with can give by and; WHICH is governed by CAN GIVE, and relates to security; security is the object of finding, which is RELATED BY of to conviction; conviction is the object of with, which RELATES IT to can look; to expresses the relation between whom and can look, and whom relates to Being, which is the subject of is." —Wells's School Gram., 113th Ed., p. 192. Neither this nor the subsequent method has been often called "analysis;" for, in grammar, each user of this term has commonly applied it to some one method only,—the method preferred by himself.

[332] The possessive phrase here should be, "Andrews and Stoddard's," as Wells and others write it. The adding of the apostrophe to the former name is wrong, even by the better half of Butler's own absurd and self-contradictory Rule: to wit, "When two or more nouns in the possessive case are connected by and, the possessive termination should be added to each of them; as, 'These are John's and Eliza's books.' But, if objects are possessed in common by two or more, and the nouns are closely connected without any intervening words, the possessive termination is added to the last noun only; as, 'These are John and Eliza's books.'" —Butler's Practical Gram., p. 163. The sign twice used implies two governing nouns: "John's and Eliza's books." = "John's books and Eliza's;" "Andrews' and Stoddard's Latin Grammar," = "Andrews' (or Andrews's) Latin Grammar and Stoddard's"

[333] In Mulligan's recent "Exposition of the Grammatical Structure of the English Language,"—the work of an able hand,—this kind of "Analysis," being most improperly pronounced "the chief business of the grammarian," is swelled by copious explanation under minute heads, to a volume containing more than three times as much matter as Greene's; but, since school-boys have little relish for long arguments, and prolixity had here already reached to satiety and disgust, it is very doubtful whether the practical utility of this "Improved Method of Teaching Grammar," will be greater in proportion to this increase of bulk.—G. B., 1853.

Page 2173

[334] “I will not take upon me to say, whether we have any Grammar that sufficiently instructs us by rule and example; but I am sure we have none, that in the manner here attempted, teaches us what is right, by showing what is wrong; though this perhaps may prove the more useful and effectual method of Instruction.”—Lowth’s Gram., Pref., p. viii.

[335] With the possessive case and its governing noun, we use but one article; and sometimes it seems questionable, to which of the two that article properly relates: as, “This is one of the Hebrews’ children.”—Exodus, ii, 6. The sentence is plainly equivalent to the following, which has two articles: “This is one of the children of the Hebrews.” Not because the one article is equivalent to the two, or because it relates to both of the nouns; but because the possessive relation itself makes one of the nouns sufficiently definite. Now, if we change the latter construction back into the former, it is the noun children that drops its article; it is therefore the other to which the remaining article relates. But we sometimes find examples in which the same analogy does not hold. Thus, “a summer’s day” means, “a day of summer;” and we should hardly pronounce it equivalent to “the day of a summer.” So the questionable phrase, “a three days’ journey,” means, “a journey of three days;” and, whether the construction be right or wrong, the article a cannot be said to relate to the plural noun. Possibly such a phrase as, “the three years’ war,” might mean, “the war of three years;” so that the article must relate to the latter noun. But in general it is the latter noun that is rendered definite by the possessive relation: thus the phrase, “man’s works” is equivalent to “the works of man,” not to “works of the man;” so, “the man’s works,” is equivalent, not to “the works of man,” but to “the works of the man.”

[336] Horne Tooke says, “The use of A after the word MANY is a corruption for of; and has no connection whatever with the article A, i. e. one.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, p. 324. With this conjecture of the learned etymologist, I do not concur: it is hardly worth while to state here, what may be urged pro and con.

[337] “Nothing can be more certain than that [in Greek syntax] all words used for the purpose of definition, either stand between the article and the noun, or have their own article prefixed. Yet it may sometimes happen that an apposition [with an article] is parenthetically inserted instead of being affixed.”—J. W. DONALDSON: Journal of Philology, No. 2, p. 223.

Page 2174

[338] Churchill rashly condemns this construction, and still more rashly proposes to make the noun singular without repeating the article. See his New Gram., p. 311. But he sometimes happily forgets his own doctrine; as, "In fact, the second and fourth lines here stamp the character of the measure."—Ib., p. 391. O. B. Peirce says, "'Joram's second and third daughters,' must mean, if it means any thing, his second daughters and third daughters; and, 'the first and second verses,' if it means any thing, must represent the first verses and the second verses."—Peirce's English Gram., p. 263. According to my notion, this interpretation is as false and hypercritical, as is the rule by which the author professes to show what is right. He might have been better employed in explaining some of his own phraseology, such as, "the indefinite-past and present of the declarative mode."—Ib., p. 100. The critic who writes such stuff as this, may well be a misinterpreter of good common English. It is plain, that the two examples which he thus distorts, are neither obscure nor inelegant. But, in an alternative of single things, the article must be repeated, and a plural noun is improper; as, "But they do not receive the Nicene or the Athanasian creeds."—Adam's Religious World, Vol. ii, p. 105. Say, "creed." So in an enumeration; as, "There are three participles: the present, the perfect, and the compound perfect participles"—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 42. Expunge this last word, "participles." Sometimes a sentence is wrong, not as being in itself a solecism, but as being unadapted to the author's thought. Example: "Other tendencies will be noticed in the Etymological and Syntactical part."—Fowler's E. Gram., N. Y., 1850, p. 75. This implies, what appears not to be true, that the author meant to treat Etymology and Syntax together in a single part of his work. Had he put an s to the noun "part," he might have been understood in either of two other ways, but not in this. To make sure of his meaning, therefore, he should have said—"in the Etymological Part and the Syntactical."

[339] Oliver B. Peirce, in his new theory of grammar, not only adopts Ingersoll's error, but adds others to it. He supposes no ellipsis, and declares it grossly improper ever to insert the pronoun. According to him, the following text is wrong: "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord."—Heb., xii, 5. See Peirce's Gram., p. 255. Of this gentleman's book I shall say the less, because its faults are so many and so obvious. Yet this is "The Grammar of the English Language," and claims to be the only work which is worthy to be called an English Grammar. "The first and only Grammar of the English Language!"—Ib.,

Page 2175

p. 10. In punctuation, it is a very chaos, as one might guess from the following Rule: “A word of the second person, and in the subjective case, must have a semicolon after it; as, John; hear me.”—Id., p. 282. Behold his practice! “John, beware.”—P. 84. “Children, study.”—P. 80. “Henry; study.”—P. 249. “Pupil: parse.”—P. 211; and many other places. “Be thou, or do thou be writing? Be ye or you, or do ye or you be writing?”—P. 110. According to his Rule, this tense requires six semicolons; but the author points it with two commas and two notes of interrogation!

[340] In Butler’s Practical Grammar, first published in 1845, this doctrine is taught as a novelty. His publishers, in their circular letter, speak of it as one of “the peculiar advantages of this grammar over preceding works,” and as an important matter, “heretofore altogether omitted by grammarians!” Wells cites Butler in support of his false principle: “A verb in the infinitive is often preceded by a noun or pronoun in the objective, which has no direct dependence on any other word. Examples:—‘Columbus ordered a strong fortress of wood and plaster to be erected.’—Irving. ‘Its favors here should make us tremble.’—Young.” See Wells’s School Gram., p. 147.

[341] “Sometimes indeed the verb hath two regimens, and then the preposition is necessary to one of them; as, ‘I address myself to my judges.’”—Campbell’s Philosophy of Rhetoric, p. 178. Here the verb address governs the pronoun myself, and is also the antecedent to the preposition to; and the construction would be similar, if the preposition governed the infinitive or a participle: as, “I prepared myself to swim,” or, “I prepared myself for swimming.” But, in any of these cases, it is not very accurate to say, “the verb has two regimens,” for the latter term is properly the regimen of the preposition. Cardell, by robbing the prepositions, and supposing ellipses, found two regimens for every verb. W. Allen, on the contrary, (from whom Nixon gathered his doctrine above,) by giving the “accusative” to the infinitive, makes a multitude of our active-transitive verbs “neuter.” See Allen’s Gram., p. 166. But Nixon absurdly calls the verb “active-transitive,” because it governs the infinitive; i. e. as he supposes—and, except when to is not used, erroneously supposes.

[342] A certain new theorist, who very innocently fogs himself and his credulous readers with a deal of impertinent pedantry, after denouncing my doctrine that to before the infinitive is a preposition, appeals to me thus: “Let me ask you, G. B.—is not the infinitive in Latin the same as in the English? Thus, I desire to teach Latin—Ego Cupio docere.”

Page 2176

I saw Abel come—Ego videbam Abelem venire. The same principle is recognized by the Greek grammars and those of most of the modern languages.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 358. Of this gentleman I know nothing but from what appears in his book—a work of immeasurable and ill-founded vanity—a whimsical, dogmatical, blundering performance. This short sample of his Latin, (with six puerile errors in seven words), is proof positive that he knows nothing of that language, whatever may be his attainments in Greek, or the other tongues of which he tells. To his question I answer emphatically, NO. In Latin, “One verb governs another in the infinitive; as, Cupio discere, I desire to learn.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 181. This government never admits the intervention of a preposition. “I saw Abel come,” has no preposition; but the Latin of it is, “Vidi Abelem venientem,” and not what is given above; or, according to St. Jerome and others, who wrote, “Abel,” without declension, we ought rather to say, “Vidi Abel venientem.” If they are right, “Ego videbam Abelem venire,” is every word of it wrong!

[343] Priestley cites these examples as authorities, not as false syntax. The errors which I thus quote at secondhand from other grammarians, and mark with double references, are in general such as the first quoters have allowed, and made themselves responsible for; but this is not the case in every instance. Such credit has sometimes, though rarely, been given, where the expression was disapproved.—G. BROWN.

[344] Lindley Murray thought it not impracticable to put two or more nouns in apposition and add the possessive sign to each; nor did he imagine there would often be any positive impropriety in so doing. His words, on this point, are these: “On the other hand, the application of the genitive sign to both or all of the nouns in apposition, would be generally harsh and displeasing, and perhaps in some cases incorrect: as, ‘The Emperor’s Leopold’s; King George’s; Charles’s the Second’s; The parcel was left at Smith’s, the bookseller’s and stationer’s.’—Octavo Gram., p. 177. Whether he imagined any of these to be “incorrect” or not, does not appear! Under the next rule, I shall give a short note which will show them all to be so. The author, however, after presenting these uncouth fictions, which show nothing but his own deficiency in grammar, has done the world the favour not to pronounce them very convenient phrases; for he continues the paragraph as follows: “The rules which we have endeavoured to elucidate, will prevent the inconveniences of both these modes of expression; and they appear to be simple, perspicuous, and consistent with the idiom of the language.’—ib. This undeserved praise of his own rules, he might as well have left to some other hand. They have had the fortune, however, to please sundry critics, and to become the prey of many thieves; but are certainly very deficient in the three qualities here named; and, taken together with their illustrations, they form little else than a tissue of errors, partly his own, and partly copied from Lowth and Priestley.

Page 2177

Dr. Latham, too, and Prof. Child, whose erroneous teaching on this point is still more marvellous, not only inculcate the idea that possessives in form may be in apposition, but seem to suppose that two possessive endings are essential to the relation. Forgetting all such English as we have in the phrases, "John the Baptist's head,"—"For Jacob my servant's sake,"—"Julius Caesar's Commentaries,"—they invent sham expressions, too awkward ever to have come to their knowledge from any actual use,—such as, "John's the farmer's wife,"—"Oliver's the spy's evidence,"—and then end their section with the general truth, "For words to be in apposition with each other, they must be in the same case."—Elementary Grammar, Revised Edition, p. 152. What sort of scholarship is that in which fictitious examples mislead even their inventors?

[345] In Professor Fowler's recent and copious work, "The English Language in its Elements and Forms," our present Reciprocals are called, not Pronominal Adjectives, but "Pronouns," and are spoken of, in the first instance, thus: "Sec.248. A RECIPROCAL PRONOUN is one that implies the mutual action of different agents. EACH OTHER, and ONE ANOTHER, are our reciprocal forms, which are treated exactly as if they were compound pronouns, taking for their genitives, each other's, one another's. Each other is properly used of two, and one another of more." The definition here given takes for granted what is at least disputable, that "each other," or "one another," is not a phrase, but is merely "one pronoun." But, to none of his three important positions here taken, does the author himself at all adhere. In Sec.451, at Note 3, he teaches thus: "'They love each other.' Here each is in the nominative case in apposition with they, and other is in the objective case. 'They helped one another.' Here one is in apposition with they, and another is in the objective case." Now, by this mode of parsing, the reciprocal terms "are treated," not as "compound pronouns," but as phrases consisting of distinct or separable words: and, as being separate or separable words, whether they be Adjectives or Pronouns, they conform not to his definition above. Out of the sundry instances in which, according to his own showing, he has misapplied one or the other of these phrases, I cite the following: (1.) "The two ideas of Science and Art differ from one another as the understanding differs from the will."—Fowler's Gram., 1850, Sec.180. Say,—"from each other;" or,—"one from the other." (2.) "THOU, THY, THEE, are etymologically related to each other."—Ib., Sec.216. Say,—"to one another;" because there are "more" than "two." (3.) "Till within some centuries, the Germans, like the French and the English, addressed each other in familiar conversation by the Second Person Singular.”—lb., Sec.221. Say,—“addressed one an other.” (4.) “Two sentences are, on the other hand, connected in the way of co-ordination [,] when they are not thus dependent one upon another.”—lb., Sec.332. Say,—“upon each other;” or,—“one upon the other;” because there are but two. (5.) “These two rivers are at a great distance from one another.”—lb., Sec.617. Say,—“from each other;” or,—“one from the other.” (6.) “The trees [in the Forest of Bombast] are close, spreading, and twined into each other.”—lb., Sec.617. Say,—“into one an other.”

Page 2178

[346] For this quotation, Dr. Campbell gives, in his margin, the following reference: “Introduction, &c., Sentences, Note on the 6th Phrase.” But in my edition of Dr. Lowth’s Introduction to English Grammar, (a Philadelphia edition of 1799,) I do not find the passage. Perhaps it has been omitted in consequence of Campbell’s criticism, of which I here cite but a part.—G. BROWN.

[347] By some grammarians it is presumed to be consistent with the nature of participles to govern the possessive case; and Hiley, if he is to be understood literally, assumes it as an “established principle,” that they all do so! “Participles govern nouns and pronouns in the possessive case, and at the same time, if derived from transitive verbs, require the noun or pronoun following to be in the objective case, without the intervention of the preposition of; as ‘Much depends on William’s observing the rule, and error will be the consequence of his neglecting it,’ or, ‘Much will depend on the rule’s being observed by William, and error will be the consequence of its being neglected.’”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 94. These sentences, without doubt, are nearly equivalent to each other in meaning. To make them exactly so, “depends” or “will depend” must be changed in tense, and “its being neglected” must be “its being neglected by him.” But who that has looked at the facts in the case, or informed himself on the points here in dispute, will maintain that either the awkward phraseology of the latter example, or the mixed and questionable construction of the former, or the extensive rule under which they are here presented, is among “the established principles and best usages of the English language?”—lb., p. 1.

[348] What, in Weld’s “Abridged Edition,” is improperly called a “participial noun,” was, in his “original work,” still more erroneously termed “a participial clause.” This gentleman, who has lately amended his general rule for possessives by wrongfully copying or imitating mine, has also as widely varied his conception of the participial—“object possessed;” but, in my judgement, a change still greater might not be amiss. “The possessive is often governed by a participial clause; as, much will depend on the pupil’s composing frequently. Pupil’s is governed by the clause, ‘composing frequently.’ NOTE.—The sign (’s) should be annexed to the word governed by the participial clause following it.”—Weld’s Gram., 2d Edition, p. 150. Again: “The possessive is often governed by a participial noun; as, Much will depend on the pupil’s composing frequently. Pupil’s is governed by the participial noun composing. NOTE.—The sign (’s) should be annexed to the word governed by the participial noun following it.”—Weld’s Gram., Abridged, p. 117. Choosing the possessive case, where, both by analogy and by authority, the objective would be quite as grammatical, if not more so; destroying, as far as possible, all syntactical distinction between the participle and the participial noun, by confounding them purposely, even in name; this author, like Wells, whom he too often imitates, takes no notice of the question here discussed, and seems quite unconscious that participles partly made nouns can produce false syntax. To the foregoing instructions, he subjoins the following comment, as a marginal note: “The participle used as a noun, still retains its verbal properties, and may govern the objective case, or be modified by an adverb or adjunct, like the verb from which it is derived.”—Ibid. When one part of speech is said to be used as an other, the learner may be greatly puzzled to understand to which class the given word belongs. If “the participle used as a noun, still retains its verbal properties,” it is, manifestly, not a noun, but a participle still; not a participial noun, but a nounal participle, whether the thing be allowable or not. Hence the teachings just cited are inconsistent. Wells says, “Participles are often used in the sense of nouns; as, ‘There was again the smacking of whips, the clattering of hoofs, and the glittering of harness.’—IRVING.”—School Gram., p. 154. This is not well stated; because these are participial nouns, and not “participles.” What Wells calls “participial nouns,” differ from these, and are all spurious, all mongrels, all participles rather than nouns. In regard to possessives before participles, no instructions appear to be more defective than those of this gentleman. His sole rule supposes the pupil always to know when and why the possessive is proper, and only instructs him not to form it without the sign! It is this: “When a noun or a pronoun, preceding a participle used as a noun, is properly in the possessive case, the sign of possession should not be omitted.”—School Gram., p. 121. All the examples put under this rule, are inappropriate: each will mislead the learner. Those which are called “Correct,” are, I think erroneous; and those which are called “False Syntax,” the adding of the possessive sign will not amend.

Page 2179

Page 2180

[349] It is remarkable, that Lindley Murray, with all his care in revising his work, did not see the inconsistency of his instructions in relation to phrases of this kind. First he copies Lowth's doctrine, literally and anonymously, from the Doctor's 17th page, thus: "When the thing to which another is said to belong, is expressed by a circumlocution, or by many terms, the sign of the possessive case is commonly added to the last term: as, 'The king of Great Britain's dominions.'"—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 45. Afterwards he condemns this: "The word in the genitive case is frequently PLACED IMPROPERLY: as, 'This fact appears from Dr. Pearson of Birmingham's experiments.' It should be, 'from the experiments of Dr. Pearson of Birmingham.'"—Ib., p. 175. And again he makes it necessary: "A phrase in which the words are so connected and dependent, as to admit of no pause before the conclusion, necessarily requires the genitive sign at or near the end of the phrase: as, 'Whose prerogative is it? It is the king of Great Britain's;' 'That is the duke of Bridgewater's canal;' " &c.—Ib., p. 276. Is there not contradiction in these instructions?

[350] A late grammarian tells us: "In nouns ending in es and ss, the other s is not added; as, Charles' hat, Goodness' sake."—Wilcox's Gram., p. 11. He should rather have said, "To nouns ending in es or ss, the other s is not added." But his doctrine is worse than his syntax; and, what is remarkable, he himself forgets it in the course of a few minutes, thus: "Decline Charles. Nom. Charles, Poss. Charles's, Obj. Charles."—Ib., p. 12. See the like doctrine in Mulligan's recent work on the "Structure of Language," p. 182.

[351] VAUGELAS was a noted French critic, who died in 1650. In Murray's Grammar, the name is more than once mistaken. On page 359th, of the edition above cited, it is printed "Vangelas"—G. BROWN.

[352] Nixon parses boy, as being "in the possessive case, governed by distress understood;" and girl's, as being "coupled by nor to boy," according to the Rule, "Conjunctions connect the same cases." Thus one word is written wrong; the other, parsed wrong: and so of all his examples above.—G. BROWN.

[353] Wells, whose Grammar, in its first edition, divides verbs into "transitive, intransitive, and passive;" but whose late edition absurdly make all passives transitive; says, in his third edition, "A transitive verb is a verb that has some noun or pronoun for its object;" (p. 78;) adopts, in his syntax, the old dogma, "Transitive verbs govern the objective case;" (3d Ed., p. 154;) and to this rule subjoins a series of remarks, so singularly fit to puzzle or mislead the learner, and withal so successful in winning the approbation of committees and teachers, that it may be worth while to notice most of them here.

Page 2181

“REM. 1.—A sentence or phrase often supplies the place of a noun or pronoun in the objective case; as, ‘You see how few of these men have returned.’”—Wells’ School Gram., “Third Thousand,” p. 154; late Ed. Sec.215. According to this, must we not suppose verbs to be often transitive, when not made so by the author’s definition? And if “see” is here transitive, would not other forms, such as are told, have been told, or are aware, be just as much so, if put in its place?

“REM. 2.—An intransitive verb may be used to govern an objective, when the verb and the noun depending upon it are of kindred signification; as, ‘To live a blameless life;’—‘To run a race.’”—lb. Here verbs are absurdly called “intransitive,” when, both in fact and by the foregoing definition, they are clearly transitive; or, at least, are, by many teachers, supposed to be so.

“REM. 3.—Idiomatic expressions sometimes occur in which intransitive verbs are followed by objectives depending upon them; as, ‘To look the subject fully in the face.’—Channing. ‘They laughed him to scorn.’—Matt. 9:24. ‘And talked the night away.’—Goldsmith.”—lb. Here again, verbs evidently made transitive by the construction, are, with strange inconsistency, called “intransitive.” By these three remarks together, the distinction between transitives and intransitives must needs be extensively obscured in the mind of the learner.

“REM. 4.—Transitive verbs of asking, giving, teaching, and some others, are often employed to govern two objectives; as, ‘Ask him his opinion;’—‘This experience taught me a valuable lesson.’—‘Spare me yet this bitter cup.’—Hemans. ‘I thrice presented him a kingly crown.’—Shakspeare.”—lb. This rule not only jumbles together several different constructions, such as would require different cases in Latin or Greek, but is evidently repugnant to the sense of many of the passages to which it is meant to be applied. Wells thinks, the practice of supplying a preposition, “is, in many cases, arbitrary, and does violence to an important and well established idiom of the language.”—lb. But how can any idiom be violated by a mode of parsing, which merely expounds its true meaning? If the dative case has the meaning of to, and the ablative has the meaning of from, how can they be expounded, in English, but by suggesting the particle, where it is omitted? For example: “Spare me yet [from] this bitter cup.”—“Spare [to] me yet this joyous cup.” This author says, “The rule for the government of two objectives by a verb, without the aid of a preposition, is adopted by Webster, Murray, Alexander, Frazee, Nutting, Perley, Goldsbury, J. M. Putnam, Hamlin, Flower, Crane, Brace, and many others.”—Ib. Yet, if I mistake not, the weight of authority is vastly against it. Such a rule as this, is not extensively approved; and even some of the names here given, are improperly cited. Lindley Murray’s remark, “Some of our verbs appear to govern two words in the objective case,” is applied only to words in apposition, and wrong even there; Perley’s rule is only of “Some verbs of asking and teaching,” and Nutting’s note, “It sometimes happens that one transitive verb governs two objective cases,” is so very loose, that one can neither deny it, nor tell how much it means.

Page 2182

“REM. 5.—Verbs of asking, giving, teaching, and some others, are often employed in the passive voice to govern a noun or pronoun; as, ‘He was asked his opinion.’—Johnson. ‘He had been refused shelter.’—Irving.”—Ib., p. 155, Sec. 215. Passive governing is not far from absurdity. Here, by way of illustration, we have examples of two sorts; the one elliptical, the other solecistical. The former text appears to mean, “He was asked for, his opinion;”—or, “He was asked to give his opinion: the latter should have been, “Shelter had been refused him;”—i.e., “to him.” Of the seven instances cited by the author, five at least are of the latter kind, and therefore to be condemned; and it is to be observed, that when they are corrected, and the right word is made nominative, the passive government, by Wells’s own showing, becomes nothing but the ellipsis of a preposition. Having just given a rule, by which all his various examples are assumed to be regular and right, he very inconsistently adds this note: “This form of expression is anomalous, and might, in many cases, be improved. Thus, instead of saying, ‘He was offered a seat on the council,’ it would be preferable to say ‘A seat in the council was offered [to] him.’”—Ib., p. 155, Sec. 215. By admitting here the ellipsis of the preposition to, he evidently refutes the doctrine of his own text, so far as it relates to passive government, and, by implication, the doctrine of his fourth remark also. For the ellipsis of to, before “him,” is just as evident in the active expression, “I thrice presented him a kingly crown,” as in the passive, “A kingly crown was thrice presented him.” It is absurd to deny it in either. Having offset himself, Wells as ingeniously balances his authorities, pro and con; but, the elliptical examples being allowable, he should not have said that I and others “condemn this usage altogether.”

Page 2183

“REM. 6.—The passive voice of a verb is sometimes used in connection with a preposition, forming a compound passive verb; as ‘He was listened to.’—‘Nor is this to be scoffed at.’—‘This is a tendency to be guarded against.’—‘A bitter persecution was carried on.’—Hallam.”—Ib., p. 155, Sec. 215. The words here called “prepositions,” are adverbs. Prepositions they cannot be; because they have no subsequent term. Nor is it either necessary or proper, to call them parts of the verb: “was carried on,” is no more a “compound verb,” than “was carried off,” or “was carried forward,” and the like.

“REM. 7.—Idiomatic expressions sometimes occur in which a noun in the objective is preceded by a passive verb, and followed by a preposition used adverbially.
EXAMPLES: ‘Vocal and instrumental music were made use of.’—Addison. ‘The third, fourth, and fifth, were taken possession of at half past eight.’—Southey. ‘The Pinta soon lost sight of in the darkness of the night.’—Irving.”—Ib., p. 155, Sec. 215. As it is by the manner of their use, that we distinguish prepositions and adverbs, it seems no more proper to speak of “a preposition used adverbially,” than of “an adverb used prepositionally.” But even if the former phrase is right and the thing conceivable, here is no instance of it; for “of” here modifies no verb, adjective, or adverb. The construction is an unparsable synchysis, a vile snarl, which no grammarian should hesitate to condemn. These examples may each be corrected in several ways: 1. Say—“were used,”—“were taken into possession,”—“was soon lost from sight.” 2. Say—“They made use of music, both vocal and instrumental.”—“Of the third, the fourth, and the fifth, they took possession at half past eight.”—“Of the Pinta they soon lost sight,” &c. 3. Say—“Use was also made of both vocal and instrumental music.”—“Possession of the third, the fourth, and the fifth, was taken at half past eight.”—“The Pinta soon disappeared in the darkness of the night.” Here again, Wells puzzles his pupil, with a note which half justifies and half condemns the awkward usage in question. See School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 147; 3d Ed., 156; late Ed., Sec. 215.

“REM. 8.—There are some verbs which may be used either transitively or intransitively; as, ‘He will return in a week,’ ‘He will return the book.’”—Ib., p. 147; 156; &c. According to Dr. Johnson, this is true of “most verbs,” and Lindley Murray asserts it of “many.” There are, I think, but few which may not, in some phraseology or other, be used both ways. Hence the rule, “Transitive verbs govern the objective case,” or, as Wells now has it, “Transitive verbs, in the active voice, govern the objective case,” (Sec. 215,) rests only upon a distinction which itself creates, between transitives and intransitives; and therefore it amounts to little.

Page 2184

[354] To these examples, Webster adds two others, of a different sort, with a comment, thus: “‘Ask him his opinion?’ ‘You have asked me the news.’ Will it be said that the latter phrases are elliptical, for ‘ask of him his opinion?’ I apprehend this to be a mistake. According to the true idea of the government of a transitive verb, him must be the object in the phrase under consideration, as much as in this, ‘Ask him for a guinea;’ or in this, ‘ask him to go.’”—Ibid, ut supra; Frazee’s Gram., p. 152; Fowler’s, p. 480. If, for the reason here stated, it is a “mistake” to supply of in the foregoing instances, it does not follow that they are not elliptical. On the contrary, if they are analogous to, “Ask him for a guinea;” or, “Ask him to go;” it is manifest that the construction must be this: “Ask him [for] his opinion;” or, “Ask him [to tell] his opinion.” So that the question resolves itself into this: What is the best way of supplying the ellipsis, when two objectives thus occur after ask?—G. BROWN.

[355] These examples Murray borrowed from Webster, who published them, with references, under his 34th Rule. With too little faith in the corrective power of grammar, the Doctor remarks upon the constructions as follows: “This idiom is outrageously anomalous, but perhaps incorrigible.”—Webster’s Philos. Gram., p. 180; Imp. G., 128.

[356] This seems to be a reasonable principle of syntax, and yet I find it contradicted, or a principle opposite to it set up, by some modern teachers of note, who venture to justify all those abnormal phrases which I here condemn as errors. Thus Fowler: “Note 5. When a Verb with its Accusative case, is equivalent to a single verb, it may take this accusative after it in the passive voice; as, ‘This has been put an end to.’”—Fowler’s English Language, 8vo, Sec.552. Now what is this, but an effort to teach bad English by rule?—and by such a rule, too, as is vastly more general than even the great class of terms which it was designed to include? And yet this rule, broad as it is, does not apply at all to the example given! For “put an end,” without the important word “to,” is not equivalent to stop or terminate. Nor is the example right. One ought rather to say, “This has been ended;” or, “This has been stopped.” See the marginal Note to Obs. 5th, above.

[357] Some, however, have conceived the putting of the same case after the verb as before it, to be government; as, “Neuter verbs occasionally govern either the nominative or [the] objective case, after them.”—Alexander’s Gram., p. 54. “The verb to be, always governs a Nominative, unless it be of the Infinitive Mood.”—Buchanan’s Gram., p. 94. This latter assertion is, in fact, monstrously untrue, and also solecistical.

Page 2185

[358] Not unfrequently the conjunction as intervenes between these “same cases,” as it may also between words in apposition; as, “He then is as the head, and we as the members; he the vine, and we the branches.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. ii, p. 189.

[359] “‘Whose house is that?’ This sentence, before it is parsed, should be transposed; thus, ‘Whose is that house?’ The same observation applies to every sentence of a similar construction.”—Chandler’s old Gram., p. 93. This instruction is worse than nonsense; for it teaches the pupil to parse every word in the sentence wrong! The author proceeds to explain Whose, as “qualifying house, understood;” is, as agreeing “with its nominative, house;” that, as “qualifying house;” and house, as “nominative case to the verb, is.” Nothing of this is true of the original question. For, in that, Whose is governed by house; house is nominative after is; is agrees with house understood; and that relates to house understood. The meaning is, “Whose house is that house?” or, in the order of a declarative sentence, “That house is whose house?”

[360] 1: In Latin, the accusative case is used after such a verb, because an other word in the same case is understood before it; as, “Facere quae libet, ID est [hominem] esse regem.”—SALLUST. “To do what he pleases, THAT is [for a man] to be a king.” If Professor Bullions had understood Latin, or Greek, or English, as well as his commendators imagine, he might have discovered what construction of cases we have in the following instances: “It is an honour [for a man] to be the author of such a work.”—Bullions’s Eng. Gram., p. 82. “To be surety for a stranger [,] is dangerous.”—ib. “Not to know what happened before you were born, is to be always a child.”—ib. “Nescire quid acciderit antequam natus es, est semper esse puerum.”—ib. “[Greek: Esti tion aischron ...topon, hon haemen pote kurioi phainesthai proiemenous].” “It is a shame to be seen giving up countries of which we were once masters.”—DEMOSTHENES: ib. What support these examples give to this grammarian’s new notion of “the objective indefinite” or to his still later seizure of Greene’s doctrine of “the predicate-nominative” the learned reader may judge. All the Latin and Greek grammarians suppose an ellipsis, in such instances; but some moderns are careless enough of that, and of the analogy of General Grammar in this case, to have seconded the Doctor in his absurdity. See Farnum’s Practical Gram., p. 23; and S. W. Clark’s, p. 149.

Page 2186

2. Professor Hart has an indecisive remark on this construction, as follows:
“Sometimes a verb in the infinitive mood has a noun after it without any other noun before it; as, ‘To be a good man, is not so easy a thing as many people imagine.’ Here ‘man’ may be parsed as used indefinitely after the verb to be. It is not easy to say in what case the noun is in such sentences. The analogy of the Latin would seem to indicate the objective.—Thus, ‘Not to know what happened in past years, is to be always a child,’ Latin, ‘semper esse puerum.’ In like manner, in English, we may say, ‘Its being me, need make no change in your determination.’”—Hart’s English Gram., p. 127.

3. These learned authors thus differ about what certainly admits of no other solution than that which is given in the Observation above. To parse the nouns in question, “as used indefinitely,” without case, and to call them “objectives indefinite,” without agreement or government, are two methods equally repugnant to reason. The last suggestion of Hart’s is also a false argument for a true position. The phrases, “Its being me,” and “To be a good man,” are far from being constructed “in like manner.” The former is manifestly bad English; because its and me are not in the same case. But S. S. Greene would say, “Its being I, is right.” For in a similar instance, he has this conclusion: “Hence, in abridging the following proposition, ‘I was not aware that it was he,’ we should say ‘of its being he,’ not ‘his’ nor ‘him.’”—Greene’s Analysis, 1st Ed., p. 171. When being becomes a noun, no case after it appears to be very proper; but this author, thus “abridging” four syllables into five, produces an anomalous construction which it would be much better to avoid.

[361] Parkhurst and Sanborn, by what they call “A NEW RULE,” attempt to determine the doubtful or unknown case which this note censures, and to justify the construction as being well-authorized and hardly avoidable. Their rule is this: “A noun following a neuter or [a] passive participial noun, is in the nominative independent. A noun or pronoun in the possessive case, always precedes the participial noun, either expressed or understood, signifying the same thing as the noun does that follows it.” To this new and exceptionable’ dogma, Sanborn adds: “This form of expression is one of the most common idioms of the language, and in general composition cannot be well avoided. In confirmation of the statement made, various authorities are subjoined. Two grammarians only, to our knowledge, have remarked OH this phraseology: ‘Participles are sometimes preceded by a possessive case and followed by a nominative; as, There is no doubt of his being a great statesman.' B. GREENLEAF. 'We sometimes find a participle that takes the same case after as before it, converted into a verbal noun, and the latter word retained unchanged in connexion with it; as, I have some recollection of his father's being a judge.' GOOLD BROWN."—Sanborn's Analytical Gram., p. 189. On what principle the words statesman and judge can be affirmed to be in the nominative case, I see not; and certainly they are not nominatives "independent" because the word being, after which they stand, is not itself independent. It is true, the phraseology is common enough to be good English: but I dislike it; and if this citation from me, was meant for a confirmation of the reasonless dogmatism preceding, it is not made with fairness, because my opinion of the construction is omitted by the quoter. See Institutes of English Gram., p. 162. In an other late grammar,—a shameful work, because it is in great measure a tissue of petty larcenies from my Institutes, with alterations for the worse,—I find the following absurd "Note," or Rule: "An infinitive or participle is often followed by a substantive explanatory of an indefinite person or thing. The substantive is then in the objective case, and may be called the objective after the infinitive, or participle; [as,] It is an honor to be the author of such a work. His being a great man, did not make him a happy man. By being an obedient child, you will secure the approbation of your parents."—Farnum's Practical Gram., 1st Ed., p. 25. The first of these examples is elliptical; (see Obs. 12th above, and the Marginal Note;) the second is bad English,—or, at' any rate, directly repugnant to the rule for same cases; and the third parsed wrong by the rule: "child" is in the nominative case. See Obs. 7th above.

Page 2187

[362] When the preceding case is not "the verb's nominative" this phrase must of course be omitted; and when the word which is to be corrected, does not literally follow the verb, it may be proper to say, "constructively follows," in lieu of the phrase, "comes after."

[363] The author of this example supposes friend to be in the nominative case, though John's is in the possessive, and both words denote the same person. But this is not only contrary to the general rule for the same cases, but contrary to his own application of one of his rules. Example: "Maria's duty, as a teacher, is, to instruct her pupils." Here, he says, "Teacher is in the possessive case, from its relation to the name Maria, denoting the same object."—Peirce's Gram., p. 211. This explanation, indeed, is scarcely intelligible, on account of its grammatical inaccuracy. He means, however, that, "Teacher is in the possessive case, from its relation to the name Maria's, the two words denoting the same object." No word can be possessive "from its relation to the name Maria," except by standing immediately before it, in the usual manner of possessives; as, "Sterne's Maria."

Page 2188

[364] Dr. Webster, who was ever ready to justify almost any usage for which he could find half a dozen respectable authorities, absurdly supposes, that who may sometimes be rightly preferred to whom, as the object of a preposition. His remark is this: "In the use of who as an interrogative, there is an apparent deviation from regular construction—it being used without distinction of case; as, 'Who do you speak to?' 'Who is she married to?' 'Who is this reserved for?' 'Who was it made by?' This idiom is not merely colloquial: it is found in the writings of our best authors."—Webster's Philosophical Gram., p. 194; his Improved Gram., p. 136. "In this phrase, 'Who do you speak to?' there is a deviation from regular construction; but the practice of thus using who, in certain familiar phrases, seems to be established by the best authors."—Webster's Rudiments of E. Gram., p. 72. Almost any other solecism may be quite as well justified as this. The present work shows, in fact, a great mass of authorities for many of the incongruities which it ventures to rebuke.

[365] Grammarians differ much as to the proper mode of parsing such nouns. Wells says, "This is the case independent by ellipsis."—School Gram., p. 123. But the idea of such a case is a flat absurdity. Ellipsis occurs only where something, not uttered, is implied; and where a preposition is thus wanting, the noun is, of course, its object; and therefore not independent. Webster, with too much contempt for the opinion of "Lowth, followed by the whole tribe of writers on this subject," declares it "a palpable error," to suppose "prepositions to be understood before these expressions;" and, by two new rules, his 22d and 28th, teaches, that, "Names of measure or dimension, followed by an adjective," and "Names of certain portions of time and space, and especially words denoting continuance of time or progression, are used without a governing word."—Philos. Gram., pp. 165 and 172; Imp. Gram., 116 and 122; Rudiments, 65 and 67. But this is no account at all of the construction, or of the case of the noun. As the nominative, or the case which we may use independently, is never a subject of government, the phrase, "without a governing word," implies that the case is objective; and how can this case be known, except by the discovery of some "governing word," of which it is the object? We find, however, many such rules as the following: "Nouns of time, distance, and degree, are put in the objective case without a preposition."—Nutting's Gram., p. 100. "Nouns which denote time, quantity, measure, distance, value, or direction are often put in the objective case without a preposition."—Weld's Gram., p. 153; "Abridged Ed.," 118.

Page 2189

"Nunes signifying duration, extension, quantity, quality, and valuation, are in the objective case without a governing word."—Frazee's Gram., p. 154. Bullions, too, has a similar rule. To estimate these rules aright, one should observe how often the nouns in question are found with a governing word. Weld, of late, contradicts himself by admitting the ellipsis; and then, inconsistently with his admission, most absurdly denies the frequent use of the preposition with nouns of time, quantity, &c. "Before words of this description, the ellipsis of a preposition is obvious. But it is seldom proper to use the preposition before such words."—Weld's "Abridged Edition," p. 118.

[366] Professor Fowler absurdly says, "Nigh, near, next, like, when followed by the objective case, may be regarded either as Prepositions or as Adjectives, to being understood."—Fowler's E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, Sec.458, Note 7. Now, "to being understood," it is plain that no one of these words can be accounted a preposition, but by supposing the preposition to be complex, and to be partly suppressed. This can be nothing better than an idle whim; and, since the classification of words as parts of speech, is always positive and exclusive, to refer any particular word indecisively to "either" of two classes, is certainly no better teaching, than to say, "I do not know of which sort it is; call it what you please!" With decision prompt enough, but with too little regard to analogy or consistency, Latham and Child say, "The adjective like governs a case, and it is the only adjective that does so."—Elementary Gram., p. 155. In teaching thus, they seem to ignore these facts: that near, nigh, or opposite, might just as well be said to be an adjective governing a case; and that the use of to or unto after like has been common enough to prove the ellipsis. The Bible has many examples; as, "Who is like to thee in Israel?"—1 Samuel, xxvi, 15. "Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first."—Exodus, xxxiv, 1; and Deut., x, 1. But their great inconsistency here is, that they call the case after like "a dative"—a case unknown to their etymology! See Gram. of E. Gram., p. 259. In grammar, a solitary exception or instance can scarcely be a true one.

[367] The following examples may illustrate these points: "These verbs, and all others like to them, were like TIMAO."—Dr. Murray's Hist. of Europ. Lang., Vol. ii, p. 128. "The old German, and even the modern German, are much liker to the Visigothic than they are to the dialect of the Edda."—Ib., i, 330. "Proximus finem, nighest the end."—Ib., ii, 150. "Let us now come nearer to our own language."—Dr. Blair's Rhet., p. 85. "This looks very like a paradox."—BEATTIE: Murray's Gram., Vol. i, p. 113. "He was near [to] falling."—Ib., p. 116. Murray, who puts near into his list of prepositions, gives this example to show how "prepositions become adverbs!" "There was none ever before like unto it."—Stone, on Masonry, p. 5.

Page 2190

“And earthly power doth then show likest God’s,
When mercy seasons justice.”—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 45.

[368] Wright’s notion of this construction is positively absurd and self-contradictory. In the sentence, “My cane is worth a shilling,” he takes the word worth to be a noun “in apposition to the word shilling.” And to prove it so, he puts the sentence successively into these four forms: “My cane is worth or value for a shilling;”—“The worth or value of my cane is a shilling;”—“My cane is a shilling’s worth;”—“My cane is the worth of a shilling.”—Philosophical Gram., p. 150. In all these transmutations, worth is unquestionably a noun; but, in none of them, is it in apposition with the word shilling; and he is quite mistaken in supposing that they “indispensably prove the word in question to be a noun.” There are other authors, who, with equal confidence, and equal absurdity, call worth a verb. For example: “A noun, which signifies the price, is put in the objective case, without a preposition; as, ‘my book is worth twenty shillings.’ Is worth is a neuter verb, and answers to the latin [sic—KTH] verb valet.”—Barrett’s Gram., p. 138. I do not deny that the phrase “is worth” is a just version of the verb valet; but this equivalence in import, is no proof at all that worth is a verb. Prodest is a Latin verb, which signifies “is profitable to,” but who will thence infer, that profitable to is a verb?

[369] In J. R. Chandler’s English Grammar, as published in 1821, the word worth appears in the list of prepositions: but the revised list, in his edition of 1847, does not contain it. In both books, however, it is expressly parsed as a preposition; and, in expounding the sentence, “The book is worth a dollar,” the author makes this remark: “Worth has been called an adjective by some, and a noun by others: worth, however, in this sentence expresses a relation by value, and is so far a preposition; and no ellipsis, which may be formed, would change the nature of the word, without giving the sentence a different meaning.”—Chandler’s Gram., Old Ed., p. 155; New Ed., p. 181.

[370] Cowper here purposely makes Mrs. Gilpin use bad English; but this is no reason why a school-boy may not be taught to correct it. Dr. Priestley supposed that the word we, in the example, “To poor we, thine enmity,” &c., was also used by Shakespeare, “in a droll humorous way.”—Gram., p. 103. He surely did not know the connexion of the text. It is in “Volumnia’s pathetic speech” to her victorious son. See Coriolanus, Act V, Sc. 3.

Page 2191

[371] Dr. Enfield misunderstood this passage; and, in copying it into his Speaker, (a very popular school-book,) he has perverted the text, by changing we to us: as if the meaning were, "Making us fools of nature." But it is plain, that all "fool's of nature!" must be fools of nature's own making, and not persons temporarily frightened out of their wits by a ghost; nor does the meaning of the last two lines comport with any objective construction of this pronoun. See Enfield's Speaker, p. 864.

[372] In Clark's Practical Grammar, of 1848, is found this NOTE: "The Noun should correspond in number with the Adjectives. EXAMPLES—A two feet ruler. A ten feet pole."—P. 165. These examples are wrong: the doctrine is misapplied in both. With this author, a, as well as two or ten, is an adjective of number; and, since these differ in number, what sort of concord or construction do the four words in each of these phrases make? When a numeral and a noun are united to form a compound adjective, we commonly, if not always, use the latter in its primitive or singular form: as, "A twopenny toy,"—"a twofold error,"—"three-coat plastering," say, "a twofoot rule,"—"a tenfoot pole;" which phrases are right; while Clark's are not only unusual, but unanalogical, ungrammatical.

[373] Certain adjectives that differ in number, are sometimes connected disjunctively by or or than, while the noun literally agrees with that which immediately precedes it, and with the other merely by implication or supplement, under the figure which is called zeugma: as, "Two or more nouns joined together by one or more copulative conjunctions."—Lowth's Gram., p. 75; L. Murray's, 2d Ed., p. 106. "He speaks not to one or a few judges, but to a large assembly."—Blair's Rhet., p. 280. "More than one object at a time."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 301. See Obs. 10th on Rule 17th.

[374] Double comparatives and double superlatives, such as, "The more serene spirit,"—"The most straitest sect,"—are noticed by Latham and Child, in their syntax, as expressions which "we occasionally find, even in good writers," and are truly stated to be "pleonastic;" but, forbearing to censure them as errors, these critics seem rather to justify them as pleonasms allowable. Their indecisive remarks are at fault, not only because they are indecisive, but because they are both liable and likely to mislead the learner.—See their Elementary Grammar, p. 155.

Page 2192

[375] The learned William B. Fowle strangely imagines all pronouns to be adjectives, belonging to nouns expressed or understood after them; as, “We kings require them (subjects) to obey us (kings).”—The True English Gram., p. 21. “They grammarians, [i. e.] those grammarians. They is an other spelling of the, and of course means this, that, these, those, as the case may be.”—Ibid. According to him, then, “them grammarians,” for “those grammarians,” is perfectly good English; and so is “they grammarians,” though the vulgar do not take care to vary this adjective, “as the case may be.” His notion of subjoining a noun to every pronoun, is a fit counterpart to that of some other grammarians, who imagine an ellipsis of a pronoun after almost every noun. Thus: “The personal Relatives, for the most part, are suppressed when the Noun is expressed: as, Man (he) is the Lord of this lower world. Woman (she) is the fairest Part of the Creation. The Palace (it) stands on a Hill. Men and Women (they) are rational Creatures.”—British Gram., p. 234; Buchanan’s, 131. It would have been worth a great deal to some men, to have known what an Ellipsis is; and the man who shall yet make such knowledge common, ought to be forever honoured in the schools.

[376] “An illegitimate and ungrammatical use of these words, either and neither, has lately been creeping into the language, in the application of these terms to a plurality of objects: as, ‘Twenty ruffians broke into the house, but neither of them could be recognized.’ ‘Here are fifty pens, you will find that either of them will do.’”—MATT. HARRISON, on the English Language, p. 199. “Either and neither, applied to any number more than one of two objects, is a mere solecism, and one of late introduction.”—Ib., p. 200. Say, “Either OR neither,” &c.—G. B.

[377] Dr. Priestley censures this construction, on the ground, that the word whole is an “attribute of unity,” and therefore improperly added to a plural noun. But, in fact, this adjective is not necessarily singular, nor is all necessarily plural. Yet there is a difference between the words: whole is equivalent to all only when the noun is singular; for then only do entireness and totality coincide. A man may say, “the whole thing,” when he means, “all the thing,” but he must not call all things, whole things. In the following example, all is put for whole, and taken substantively; but the expression is a quaint one, because the article and preposition seem needless: “Which doth encompass and embrace the all of things.”—The Dial, Vol. i, p. 59.

[378] This is not a mere repetition of the last example cited under Note 14th above; but it is Murray’s interpretation of the text there quoted. Both forms are faulty, but not in the same way.—G. BROWN.

Page 2193

[379] Some authors erroneously say, “A personal pronoun does not always agree in person with its antecedent; as, ‘John said, I will do it.’”—Goodenow’s Gram. “When I say, ‘Go, and say to those children, you must come in,’ you perceive that the noun children is of the third person, but the pronoun you is of the second; yet you stands for children,”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 54. Here are different speakers, with separate speeches; and these critics are manifestly deceived by the circumstance. It is not to be supposed, that the nouns represented by one speaker’s pronouns, are to be found or sought in what an other speaker utters. The pronoun I does not here stand for the noun John which is of the third person; it is John’s own word, representing himself as the speaker. The meaning is, “I myself, John, of the first person, will do it.” Nor does you stand for children as spoken of by Ingersoll; but for children of the second person, uttered or implied in the address of his messenger: as, “Children, you must come in.”

[380] The propriety of this construction is questionable. See Obs. 2d on Rule 14th.

[381] Among the authors who have committed this great fault, are, Alden, W. Allen, D. C. Allen, C. Adams, the author of the British Grammar, Buchanan, Cooper, Cutler, Davis, Dilworth, Felton, Fisher, Fowler, Frazee, Goldsbury, Hallock, Hull, M’Culloch, Morley, Pinneo, J. Putnam, Russell, Sanborn, R. C. Smith, Spencer, Weld, Wells, Webster, and White. “You is plural, whether it refer to only one individual, or to more.”—Dr. Crombie, on Etym. and Synt., p. 240. “The word you, even when applied to one person, is plural, and should never be connected with a singular verb.”—Alexander’s Gram., p. 53; Emmons’s, 26. “You is of the Plural Number, even though used as the Name of a single Person.”—W. Ward’s Gram., p. 88. “Altho’ the Second Person Singular in both Times be marked with thou, to distinguish it from the Plural, yet we, out of Complaisance, though we speak but to one particular Person, use the Plural you, and never thou, but when we address ourselves to Almighty God, or when we speak in an emphatical Manner, or make a distinct and particular Application to a Person.”—British Gram., p. 126; Buchanan’s, 37. “But you, tho’ applied to a single Person, requires a Plural Verb, the same as ye; as, you love, not you lovest or loves; you were, not you was or wast.”—Buchanan’s Gram., p. 37.

[382] “Mr. Murray’s 6th Rule is unnecessary.”—Lennie’s English Gram., p. 81; Bullions’s, p. 90. The two rules of which I speak, constitute Murray’s Rule VI; Alger’s and Bacon’s Rule VI; Merchant’s Rule IX; Ingersoll’s Rule XII; Kirkham’s Rules XV and XVI; Jaudon’s XXI and XXII; Crombie’s X and XI; Nixon’s Obs. 86th and 87th: and are found in Lowth’s Gram., p. 100; Churchill’s, 136; Adam’s, 203; W. Allen’s, 156; Blair’s, 75; and many other books.

Page 2194

[383] This rule, in all its parts, is to be applied chiefly, if not solely, to such relative clauses as are taken in the restrictive sense; for, in the resumptive sense of the relative, who or which may be more proper than that: as, “Abraham solemnly adjures his most faithful servant, whom he despatches to Charran on this matrimonial mission for his son, to discharge his mission with all fidelity.”—Milman’s Jews, i, 21. See Etymology, Chap. 5th, Obs. 23d, 24th, &c., on the Classes of Pronouns.

[384] Murray imagined this sentence to be bad English. He very strangely mistook the pronoun he for the object of the preposition with; and accordingly condemned the text, under the rule, “Prepositions govern the objective case.” So of the following: “It is not I he is engaged with.”—Murray’s Exercises, R. 17. Better: “It is not I that he is engaged with.” Here is no violation of the foregoing rule, or of any other; and both sentences, with even Murray’s form of the latter, are quite as good as his proposed substitutes: “It was not with him, that they were so angry.”—Murray’s Key, p. 51. “It is not with me he is engaged.”—lb. In these fancied corrections, the phrases with him and with me have a very awkward and questionable position: it seems doubtful, whether they depend on was and is, or on angry and engaged.

[385] In their speculations on the personal pronouns, grammarians sometimes contrive, by a sort of abstraction, to reduce all the persons to the third; that is, the author or speaker puts I, not for himself in particular, but for any one who utters the word, and thou, not for his particular hearer or reader, but for any one who is addressed; and, conceiving of these as persons merely spoken of by himself, he puts the verb in the third person, and not in the first or second: as, “I is the speaker, thou [is] the hearer, and he, she, or it, is the person or thing spoken of. All denote qualities of existence, but such qualities as make different impressions on the mind. I is the being of consciousness, thou [is the being] of perception, and he of memory.”—Booth’s Introd., p. 44. This is such syntax as I should not choose to imitate; nor is it very proper to say, that the three persons in grammar “denote qualities of existence.” But, supposing the phraseology to be correct, it is no real exception to the foregoing rule of concord; for I and thou are here made to be pronouns of the third person. So in the following example, which I take to be bad English: “I, or the person who speaks, is the first person; you, is the second; he, she, or it, is the third person singular.”—Bartlett’s Manual, Part ii, p. 70. Again, in the following; which is perhaps a little better: "The person 'I' is spoken of as acted upon."—Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., 2d Edition, p. 29. But there is a manifest absurdity in saying, with this learned "Professor of Languages," that the pronouns of the different persons are those persons: as, "I is the first person, and denotes the speaker. Thou is the second, and denotes the person spoken to."—ib., p. 22.

Page 2195

[386] (1.) Concerning the verb need, Dr. Webster has the following note: "In the use of this verb there is another irregularity, which is peculiar, the verb being without a nominative, expressed or implied. 'Whereof here needs no account.'—Milt., P. L., 4. 235. There is no evidence of the fact, and there needs none. This is an established use of need."—Philos. Gram., p. 178; Improved Gram., 127; Greenleaf's Gram. Simp., p. 38; Fowler's E. Gram., p. 537. "Established use?" To be sure, it is "an established use;" but the learned Doctor's comment is a most unconscionable blunder,—a pedantic violation of a sure principle of Universal Grammar,—a perversion worthy only of the veriest ignoramus. Yet Greenleaf profitably publishes it, with other plagiarisms, for "Grammar Simplified!" Now the verb "needs," like the Latin eget, signifying is necessary, is here not active, but neuter; and has the nominative set after it, as any verb must, when the adverb there or here is before it. The verbs lack and want may have the same construction, and can have no other, when the word there, and not a nominative, precedes them; as, "Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous."—Gen., xviii, 28. There is therefore neither "irregularity," nor any thing "peculiar," in thus placing the verb and its nominative.

(2.) Yet have we other grammarians, who, with astonishing facility, have allowed themselves to be misled, and whose books are now misleading the schools, in regard to this very simple matter. Thus Wells: "The transitive verbs need and want, are sometimes employed in a general sense, without a nominative, expressed or implied. Examples:—'There needed a new dispensation.'—Caleb Cushing. 'There needs no better picture.'—Irving. 'There wanted not patrons to stand up.'—Sparks. 'Nor did there want Cornice, or frieze.'—Milton."—Wells's School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 141: 113th Ed., p. 154. In my edition of Milton, the text is, "Nor did they want Cornice or frieze."—P. L., B. i, l. 715, 716. This reading makes want a "transitive" verb, but the other makes it neuter, with the nominative following it. Again, thus Weld: "A verb in the imperative mode, and the transitive verbs need, want, and require, sometimes appear to be used indefinitely, without a nominative; as, let there be light; There required haste in the business; There needs no argument for proving, &c. There wanted not men who would, &c. The last expressions have an active form with a passive sense, and should perhaps rather be considered elliptical than wanting a nominative; as, haste is required, no argument is needed, &c.”—Weld’s English Grammar Illustrated, p. 143. Is there anywhere, in print, viler pedantry than this? The only elliptical example, “Let there be light,”—a kind of sentence from which the nominative is usually suppressed,—is here absurdly represented as being full, yet without a subject for its verb; while other examples, which are full, and in which the nominative must follow the verb, because the adverb “there” precedes, are first denied to have nominatives, and then most bunglingly tortured with false ellipses, to prove that they have them!

Page 2196

(3.) The idea of a command wherein no person or thing is commanded, seems to have originated with Webster, by whom it has been taught, since 1807, as follows: “In some cases, the imperative verb is used without a definite nominative.”—Philos. Gram., p. 141; Imp. Gram., 86; Rudiments, 69. See the same words in Frazee’s Gram., p. 133. Wells has something similar: “A verb in the imperative is sometimes used absolutely, having no direct reference to any particular subject expressed or implied; as, ‘And God said, Let there be light.’”—School Gram., p. 141. But, when this command was uttered to the dark waves of primeval chaos, it must have meant, “Do ye let light be there.” What else could it mean? There may frequently be difficulty in determining what or who is addressed by the imperative let, but there seems to be more in affirming that it has no subject. Nutting, puzzled with this word, makes the following dubious and unsatisfactory suggestion: “Perhaps it may be, in many cases, equivalent to may; or it may be termed itself an imperative mode impersonal; that is, containing a command or an entreaty addressed to no particular person.”—Nutting’s Practical Gram., p. 47.

(4.) These several errors, about the “Imperative used Absolutely,” with “no subject addressed,” as in “Let there be light,” and the Indicative “verbs NEED and WANT, employed without a nominative, either expressed or implied,” are again carefully reiterated by the learned Professor Fowler, in his great text-book of philology “in its Elements and Forms,”—called, rather extravagantly, an “English Grammar.” See, in his edition of 1850, Sec.597, Note 3 and Note 7; also Sec.520, Note 2. Wells’s authorities for “Imperatives Absolute,” are, “Frazee, Allen and Cornwell, Nutting, Lynde, and Chapin;” and, with reference to “NEED and WANT,” he says, “See Webster, Perley, and Ingersoll.”—School Gram., 1850, Sec.209.

Page 2197

(5.) But, in obvious absurdity most strangely overlooked by the writer, all these blunderers are outdone by a later one, who says: “Need and dare are sometimes used in a general sense without a nominative: as, ‘There needed no prophet to tell us that;’ ‘There wanted no advocates to secure the voice of the people.’ It is better, however, to supply it, as a nominative, than admit an anomaly. Sometimes, when intransitive, they have the plural form with a singular noun: as, ‘He need not fear;’ ‘He dare not hurt you.’”—Rev. H. W. Bailey’s E. Gram., 1854, p. 128. The last example—“He dare”—is bad English: dare should be dares. “He need not fear,” if admitted to be right, is of the potential mood; in which no verb is inflected in the third person. “He,” too, is not a “noun,” nor can it ever rightly have a “plural” verb. “To supply it, as a nominative,” where the verb is declared to be “without a nominative,” and to make “wanted” an example of “dare” are blunders precisely worthy of an author who knows not how to spell anomaly!

[387] This interpretation, and others like it, are given not only by Murray, but by many other grammarians, one of whom at least was earlier than he. See Bicknell’s Gram., Part i, p. 123; Ingersoll’s, 153; Guy’s, 91; Alger’s, 73; Merchant’s, 100; Picket’s, 211; Fisk’s, 146; D. Adams’s, 81; R. C. Smith’s, 182.

[388] The same may be said of Dr. Webster’s “nominative sentences,” three fourths of which are nothing but phrases that include a nominative with which the following verb agrees. And who does not know, that to call the adjuncts of any thing “an essential part of it,” is a flat absurdity? An adjunct is “something added to another, but not essentially a part of it.”—Webster’s Dict. But, says the Doctor, “Attributes and other words often make an essential part of the nominative; [as,] ‘Our IDEAS of eternity CAN BE nothing but an infinite succession of moments of duration.’—LOCKE. ‘A wise SON MAKETH a glad father; but a foolish SON IS the heaviness of his mother.’ Abstract the name from its attribute, and the proposition cannot always be true. ‘HE that gathereth in summer is a wise son.’ Take away the description, ‘that gathereth in summer,’ and the affirmation ceases to be true, or becomes inapplicable. These sentences or clauses thus constituting the subject of an affirmation, may be termed nominative sentences.”—Improved Gram., p. 95. This teaching reminds me of the Doctor’s own exclamation: “What strange work has been made with Grammar!”—Ib., p. 94; Philos. Gram., 138. In Nesbit’s English Parsing, a book designed mainly for “a

Page 2198

Key to Murray's Exercises in Parsing," the following example is thus expounded: "The smooth stream, the serene atmosphere, [and] the mild zephyr, are the proper emblems of a gentle temper, and a peaceful life."—Murray's Exercises, p. 8. "The smooth stream, the serene atmosphere, the mild zephyr, is part of a sentence, which is the nominative case to the verb 'are.' Are is an irregular verb neuter, in the indicative mood, the present tense, the third person plural, and agrees with the aforementioned part of a sentence, as its nominative case."—Introduction to English Parsing, p. 137. On this principle of analysis, all the rules that speak of the nominatives or antecedents connected by conjunctions, may be dispensed with, as useless; and the doctrine, that a verb which has a phrase or sentence for its subject, must be singular, is palpably contradicted, and supposed erroneous!

[389] "No Relative can become a Nominative to a Verb."—Joseph W. Wright's Philosophical Grammar, p. 162. "A personal pronoun becomes a nominative, though a relative does not."—ib., p. 152. This teacher is criticised by the other as follows: "Wright says that 'Personal pronouns may be in the nominative case,' and that 'relative pronouns can not be. Yet he declines his relatives thus: 'Nominative case, who; possessive, whose; objective, whom!'—Oliver B. Peirce's Grammar, p. 331. This latter author here sees the palpable inconsistency of the former, and accordingly treats who, which, what, whatever, &c., as relative pronouns of the nominative case—or, as he calls them, "connective substitutes in the subjective form;" but when what or whatever precedes its noun, or when as is preferred to who or which, he refers both verbs to the noun itself, and adopts the very principle by which Cobbet and Wright erroneously parse the verbs which belong to the relatives, who, which, and that: as, "Whatever man will adhere to strict principles of honesty, will find his reward in himself."—Peirce's Gram., p. 55. Here Peirce considers whatever to be a mere adjective, and man the subject of will adhere and will find. "Such persons as write grammar, should themselves be grammarians."—ib., p. 330. Here he declares as to be no pronoun, but "a modifying connective," i.e., conjunction; and supposes persons to be the direct subject of write as well as of should be: as if a conjunction could connect a verb and its nominative!

Page 2199

[390] Dr. Latham, conceiving that, of words in apposition, the first must always be the leading one and control the verb, gives to his example an other form thus: “Your master, I, commands you (not command).”—Ib. But this I take to be bad English. It is the opinion of many grammarians, perhaps of most, that nouns, which are ordinarily of the third person, may be changed in person, by being set in apposition with a pronoun of the first or second. But even if terms so used do not assimilate in person, the first cannot be subjected to the third, as above. It must have the preference, and ought to have the first place. The following study-bred example of the Doctor’s, is also awkward and ungrammatical: “I, your master, who commands you to make haste, am in a hurry.”—Hand-Book, p. 334.

[391] Professor Fowler says, “One when contrasted with other, sometimes represents plural nouns; as, ‘The reason why the one are ordinarily taken for real qualities, and the other for bare powers, seems to be.’—LOCKE.”, Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, p. 242. This doctrine is, I think, erroneous; and the example, too, is defective. For, if one may be plural, we have no distinctive definition or notion of either number. “One” and “other” are not here to be regarded as the leading words in their clauses; they are mere adjectives, each referring to the collective noun class or species, understood, which should have been expressed after the former. See Etym., Obs. 19, p. 276.

[392] Dr. Priestley says, “It is a rule, I believe, in all grammars, that when a verb comes between two nouns, either of which may be understood as the subject of the affirmation, that it may agree with either of them; but some regard must be had to that which is more naturally the subject of it, as also to that which stands next to the verb; for if no regard be paid to these circumstances, the construction will be harsh: [as,] Minced pies was regarded as a profane and superstitious viand by the sectaries. Hume’s Hist. A great cause of the low state of industry were the restraints put upon it. Ib. By this term was understood, such persons as invented, or drew up rules for themselves and the world.”—English Gram. with Notes, p. 189. The Doctor evidently supposed all these examples to be bad English, or at least harsh in their construction. And the first two unquestionably are so; while the last, whether right or wrong, has nothing at all to do with his rule: it has but one nominative, and that appears to be part of a definition, and not the true subject of the verb. Nor, indeed, is the first any more relevant; because Hume’s “viand” cannot possibly be taken “as the subject of the affirmation.” Lindley Murray, who literally copies Priestley’s note, (all but the first line and the last,) rejects these two examples, substituting for the former, “His meat was locusts and wild honey,” and for the latter, “The wages of sin is death.” He very evidently supposes all three of his examples to be good English. In this, according to Churchill, he is at fault in two instances out of the three; and still more so, in regard to the note, or rule, itself. In stead of being “a rule in all grammars,” it is (so far as I know) found only in these authors, and such as have implicitly copied it from Murray. Among these last, are Alger, Ingersoll, R. C. Smith, Fisk, and Merchant. Churchill, who cites it only as Murray’s, and yet expends two pages of criticism upon it, very justly says: “To make that the nominative case, [or subject of the affirmation,] which happens to stand nearest to the verb, appears to me to be on a par with the blunder pointed out in note 204th;” [that is, of making the verb agree with an objective case which happens to stand nearer to it, than its subject, or nominative.]— Churchill’s New Gram., p. 313.

Page 2200

[393] “If the excellence of Dryden’s works was lessened by his indigence, their number was increased.”—Dr. Johnson. This is an example of the proper and necessary use of the indicative mood after an if, the matter of the condition being regarded as a fact. But Dr. Webster, who prefers the indicative too often, has the following note upon it: “If Johnson had followed the common grammars, or even his own, which is prefixed to his Dictionary, he would have written were—‘If the excellence of Dryden’s works were lessened’—Fortunately this great man, led by usage rather than by books, wrote correct English, instead of grammar.”— Philosophical Gram., p. 238. Now this is as absurd, as it is characteristic of the grammar from which it is taken. Each form is right sometimes, and neither can be used for the other, without error.

[394] Taking this allegation in one sense, the reader may see that Kirkham was not altogether wrong here; and that, had he condemned the solecisms adopted by himself and others, about “unity of idea” and “plurality of idea,” in stead of condemning the things intended to be spoken of, he might have made a discovery which would have set him wholly right. See a footnote on page 738, under the head of Absurdities.

[395] In his English Reader, (Part II, Chap. 5th, Sec. 7th,) Murray has this line in its proper form, as it here stands in the words of Thomson; but, in his Grammar, he corrupted it, first in his Exercises, and then still more in his Key. Among his examples of “False Syntax” it stands thus:

“What black despair, what horror, fills his mind!”
—Exercises, Rule 2.

So the error is propagated in the name of Learning, and this verse goes from grammar to grammar, as one that must have a “plural” verb. See Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 242; Smith’s New Gram., p. 127; Fisk’s Gram., p. 120; Weld’s E. Gram., 2d Ed., p. 189; Imp. Ed., p. 196.

Page 2201

[396] S. W. Clark, by reckoning “as” a “preposition,” perverts the construction of sentences like this, and inserts a wrong case after the conjunction. See Clark’s Practical Grammar, pp. 92 and 178; also this Syntax, Obs. 6 and Obs. 18, on Conjunctions.

[397] Murray gives us the following text for false grammar, under the head of Strength: “And Elias with Moses appeared to them.”—Exercises, 8vo, p. 135. This he corrects thus: “And there appeared to them Elias with Moses.”—Key, 8vo, p. 266. He omits the comma after Elias, which some copies of the Bible contain, and others do not. Whether he supposed the verb appeared to be singular or plural, I cannot tell; and he did not extend his quotation to the pronoun they, which immediately follows, and in which alone the incongruity lies.

[398] This order of the persons, is not universally maintained in those languages. The words of Mary to her son, “Thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing,” seem very properly to give the precedence to her husband; and this is their arrangement in St. Luke’s Greek, and in the Latin versions, as well as in others.

[399] The hackneyed example, “I and Cicero are well,”—“Ego et Cicero valemus”—which makes such a figure in the grammars, both Latin and English, and yet is ascribed to Cicero himself, deserves a word of explanation. Cicero the orator, having with him his young son Marcus Cicero at Athens, while his beloved daughter Tullia was with her mother in Italy, thus wrote to his wife, Terentia: “Si tu, et Tullia, lux nostra, valetix; ego, et suavissimus Cicero, valemus.”—EPIST. AD FAM. Lib. xiv, Ep. v. That is, “If thou, and Tullia, our joy, are well; I, and the sweet lad Cicero, are likewise well.” This literal translation is good English, and not to be amended by inversion; for a father is not expected to give precedence to his child. But, when I was a boy, the text and version of Dr. Adam puzzled me not a little; because I could not conceive how Cicero could ever have said, “I and Cicero are well.” The garbled citation is now much oftener read than the original. See it in Crombie’s Treatise, p. 243; McCulloch’s Gram., p. 158; and others.

[400] Two singulars connected by and, when they form a part of such a disjunction, are still equivalent to a plural; and are to be treated as such, in the syntax of the verb. Hence the following construction appears to be inaccurate: “A single consonant or a mute and a liquid before an accented vowel, is joined to that vowel”—Dr. Bullions, Lat. Gram. p. xi.

[401] Murray the schoolmaster has it, “used to govern.”—English Gram., p. 64. He puts the verb in a wrong tense. Dr. Bullions has it, “usually governs.”—Lat. Gram., p. 202. This is right.—G. B.

Page 2202

[402] The two verbs to sit and to set are in general quite different in their meaning; but the passive verb to be set sometimes comes pretty near to the sense of the former, which is for the most part neuter. Hence, we not only find the Latin word sedeo, to sit, used in the sense of being set, as, “Ingens coena sedet,” “A huge supper is set,” Juv., 2, 119; but, in the seven texts above, our translators have used is set, was set, &c., with reference to the personal posture of sitting. This, in the opinion of Dr. Lowth and some others, is erroneous. “Set,” says the Doctor, “can be no part of the verb to sit. If it belong to the verb to set, the translation in these passages is wrong. For to set, signifies to place, but without any designation of the posture of the person placed; which is a circumstance of importance, expressed by the original.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 53; Churchill’s, 265. These gentlemen cite three of these seven examples, and refer to the other four; but they do not tell us how they would amend any of them—except that they prefer sitten to sat, vainly endeavouring to restore an old participle which is certainly obsolete. If any critic dislike my version of the last two texts, because I use the present tense for what in the Greek is the first aorist; let him notice that this has been done in both by our translators, and in one by those of the Vulgate. In the preceding example, too, the same aorist is rendered, “am set,” and by Beza, “sedeo,” though Montanus and the Vulgate render it literally by “sedi,” as I do by sat. See Key to False Syntax, Rule XVII, Note xii.

[403] Nutting, I suppose, did not imagine the Greek article, [Greek: to], the, and the English or Saxon verb do, to be equivalent or kindred words. But there is no knowing what terms conjectural etymology may not contrive to identify, or at least to approximate and ally. The ingenious David Booth, if he does not actually identify do, with [Greek: to], the, has discovered synonymes [sic—KTH] and cognates that are altogether as unapparent to common observers: as, “It and the,” says he, “when Gender is not attended to, are synonymous. Each is expressive of Being in general, and when used Verbally, signifies to bring forth, or to add to what we already see. The, it, and, add, at, to, and do, are kindred words. They mark that an addition is made to some collected mass of existence. To, which literally signifies add, (like at and the Latin ad,) is merely a different pronunciation of do. It expresses the junction of an other thing, or circumstance, as appears more evidently from its varied orthography of too.”—Introd. to Analyt. Dict., p. 45. Horne Tooke, it seems, could not persuade this author into his notion of the derivation and meaning of the, it, to, or do. But Lindley Murray, and his followers, have been more tractable. They were ready to be led without looking. “To,” say they, “comes from Saxon and Gothic words, which signify action, effect, termination, to act, &c.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 183; Fisk’s, 92. What an admirable explanation is this! and how prettily the great Compiler says on the next leaf: “Etymology, when it is guided by judgment, and [when] proper limits are set to it, certainly merits great attention!”—ib., p. 135. According to his own express rules for interpreting “a substantive without any article to limit it” and the “relative pronoun with a comma before it,” he must have meant, that “to comes from Saxon and Gothic words” of every sort, and that the words of these two languages “signify action, effect, termination, to act, &c.” The latter assertion is true enough: but, concerning the former, a man of sense may demur. Nor do I see how it is possible not to despise such etymology, be the interpretation of the words what it may. For, if to means action or to act, then our little infinitive phrase, to be, must mean, action be, or to act be; and what is this, but nonsense?

Page 2203

[404] So, from the following language of three modern authors, one cannot but infer, that they would parse the verb as governed by the preposition; but I do not perceive that they anywhere expressly say so:

(1.) “The Infinitive is the form of the supplemental verb that always has, or admits, the preposition TO before it; as, to move. Its general character is to represent the action in prospect, or to do; or in retrospect, as to have done. As a verb, it signifies to do the action; and as object of the preposition TO, it stands in the place of a noun for the doing of it. The infinitive verb and its prefix to are used much like a preposition and its noun object.”—Felch’s Comprehensive Gram., p. 62.

(2.) “The action or other signification of a verb may be expressed in its widest and most general sense, without any limitation by a person or agent, but merely as the end or purpose of some other action, state of being, quality, or thing; it is, from this want of limitation, said to be in the Infinitive mode; and is expressed by the verb with the preposition TO before it, to denote this relation of end or purpose; as, ‘He came to see me;’ ‘The man is not fit die;’ ‘It was not right for him to do thus.’”—Dr. S. Webber’s English Gram., p. 35.

(3.) “RULE 3. A verb in the Infinitive Mode, is the object of the preposition TO, expressed or understood.”—S. W. Clark’s Practical Gram., p. 127.

Page 2204

[405] Rufus Nutting, A. M., a grammarian of some skill, supposes that in all such sentences there was "anciently" an ellipsis, not of the phrase "in order to," but of the preposition for. He says, "Considering this mode as merely a verbal noun, it might be observed, that the infinitive, when it expresses the object, is governed by a transitive verb; and, when it expresses the final cause, is governed by an intransitive verb, OR ANCIENTLY, BY A PREPOSITION UNDERSTOOD. Of the former kind—'he learns to read.' Of the latter—'he reads to learn,' i. e. 'for to learn.'"—Practical Gram., p. 101. If for was anciently understood in examples of this sort, it is understood now, and to a still greater extent; because we do not now insert the word for, as our ancestors sometimes did; and an ellipsis can no otherwise grow obsolete, than by a continual use of what was once occasionally omitted.

[406] (1.) "La preposition, est un mot indeclinable, place devant les noms, les pronoms, et les verbes, qu'elle regit."—"The preposition is an indeclinable word placed before the nouns, pronouns, and verbs which it governs."—Perrin's Grammar, p. 152.

(2.) "Every verb placed immediately after an other verb, or after a preposition, ought to be put in the infinitive; because it is then the regimen of the verb or preposition which precedes."—See La Grammaire des Grammaires, par Girault Du Vivier, p. 774.

(3.) The American translator of the Elements of General Grammar, by the Baron De Sacy, is naturally led, in giving a version of his author's method of analysis, to parse the English infinitive mood essentially as I do; calling the word to a preposition, and the exponent, or sign, of a relation between the verb which follows it, and some other word which is antecedent to it. Thus, in the phrase, "commanding them to use his power," he says, that "'to' [is the] Exponent of a relation whose Antecedent is 'commanding,' and [whose] Consequent [is] 'use.'"—Fosdick's De Sacy, p. 131. In short, he expounds the word to in this relation, just as he does when it stands before the objective case. For example, in the phrase, "belonging to him alone:" 'to,' Exponent of a relation of which the Antecedent is 'belonging,' and the Consequent, 'him alone.'"—Ib., p. 126. My solution, in either case, differs from this in scarcely any thing else than the choice of words to express it.

(4.) It appears that, in sundry dialects of the north of Europe, the preposition at has been preferred for the governing of the infinitive: "The use of at for to, as the sign of the infinitive mode, is Norse, not Saxon. It is the regular prefix in Icelandic, Danish, Swedish, and Feroic. It is also found in the northern dialects of the Old English, and in the particular dialect of Westmoreland at the present day."—Fowler, on the English Language, 8vo, 1850, p. 46.

Page 2205

[407] Here is a literal version, in which two infinitives are governed by the preposition between; and though such a construction is uncommon, I know not why it should be thought less accurate in the one language than in the other. In some exceptive phrases, also, it seems not improper to put the infinitive after some other preposition than to; as, "What can she do besides sing?"—"What has she done, except rock herself?" But such expressions, if allowable, are too unfrequent to be noticed in any general Rule of syntax. In the following example, the word of pretty evidently governs the infinitive: "Intemperance characterizes our discussions, that is calculated to embitter in stead of conciliate."—CINCINNATI HERALD: Liberator, No. 986.

[408] This doctrine has been lately revived in English by William B. Fowle, who quotes Dr. Rees, Beauzee, Harris, Tracy, and Crombie, as his authorities for it. He is right in supposing the English infinitive to be generally governed by the preposition to, but wrong in calling it a noun, or "the name of the verb," except this phrase be used in the sense in which every verb may be the name of itself. It is an error too, to suppose with Beauzee, "that the infinitive never in any language refers to a subject or nominative;" or, as Harris has it, that infinitives "have no reference at all to persons or substances." See Fowle's True English Gram., Part ii, pp. 74 and 75. For though the infinitive verb never agrees with a subject or nominative, like a finite verb, it most commonly has a very obvious reference to something which is the subject of the being, action, or passion, which it expresses; and this reference is one of the chief points of difference between the infinitive and a noun. S. S. Greene, in a recent grammar, absurdly parses infinitives "as nouns," and by the common rules for nouns, though he begins with calling them verbs. Thus: "Our honor is to be maintained. To be maintained, is a regular passive VERB, infinitive mode, present tense, and is used as a NOUN in the relation of predicate; according to Rule II. A noun or pronoun used with the copula to form the predicate, must be in the nominative case."—Greene's Gram., 1848. p. 93. (See the Rule, ib. p. 29.) This author admits, "The 'to' seems, like the preposition, to perform the office of a connective:" but then he ingeniously imagines, "The infinitive differs from the preposition and its object, in that the 'to' is the only preposition used with the verb." And so he concludes, "The two [or more] parts of the infinitive are taken together, and, thus combined, may become a NOUN in any relation."—ib., 1st Edition, p. 87. S. S. Greene will also have the infinitive to make the verb before it transitive; for he says, "The only form [of phrase] used as the direct object of a transitive verb is the infinitive; as, 'We intend (What?) to leave [town] to-day:' 'They tried (What?) to conceal their fears.'"—Ib., p. 99. One might as well find transitive verbs in these equivalents: "It is our purpose to leave town to-day."—"They endeavoured to conceal their fears." Or in this:—"They blustered to conceal their fears."

Page 2206

[409] It is remarkable that the ingenious J. E. Worcester could discern nothing of the import of this particle before a verb. He expounds it, with very little consistency, thus: "To, or To, ad. A particle employed as the usual sign or prefix of the infinitive mood of the verb; and it might, in such use, be deemed a syllable of the verb. It is used merely as a sign of the infinitive, without having any distinct or separate meaning: as, 'He loves to read.'"—Univ. and Crit. Dict. Now is it not plain, that the action expressed by "read" is "that towards which" the affection signified by "loves" is directed? It is only because we can use no other word in lieu of this to, that its meaning is not readily seen. For calling it "a syllable of the verb," there is, I think, no reason or analogy whatever. There is absurdity in calling it even "a part of the verb."

[410] As there is no point of grammar on which our philologists are more at variance, so there seems to be none on which they are more at fault, than in their treatment of the infinitive mood, with its usual sign, or governing particle, to. For the information of the reader, I would gladly cite every explanation not consonant with my own, and show wherein it is objectionable; but so numerous are the forms of error under this head, that such as cannot be classed together, or are not likely to be repeated, must in general be left to run their course, exempt from any criticism of mine. Of these various forms of error, however, I may here add an example or two.

(1.) "What is the meaning of the word to? Ans. To means act. NOTE.—As our verbs and nouns are spelled in the same manner, it was formerly thought best to prefix the word TO, to words when used as verbs. For there is no difference between the NOUN, love; and the VERB, to love; but what is shown by the prefix TO, which signifies act; i. e. to act love."—R. W. Greene's Inductive Exercises in English Grammar, N. Y., 1829, p. 52. Now all this, positive as the words are, is not only fanciful, but false, utterly false. To no more "means act," than from "means act." And if it did, it could not be a sign of the infinitive, or of a verb at all; for, "act love," is imperative, and makes the word "love" a noun; and so, "to act love,"

Page 2207

(where “love” is also a noun,) must mean “act act love,” which is tautological nonsense. Our nouns and verbs are not, in general, spelled alike; nor are the latter, in general, preceded by to; nor could a particle which may govern either, have been specifically intended, at first, to mark their difference. By some, as we have seen, it is argued from the very sign, that the infinitive is always essentially a noun.

(2.) “The infinitive mode is the root or simple form of the verb, used to express an action or state indefinitely; as, to hear, to speak. It is generally distinguished by the sign to. When the particle to is employed in forming the infinitive, it is to be regarded as a part of the verb. In every other case it is a preposition.”—Wells’s School Grammar, 1st Ed., p. 80. “A Preposition is a word which is used to express the relation of a noun or pronoun depending upon it, to some other word in the sentence.”—ib., pp. 46 and 108. “The passive form of a verb is sometimes used in connection with a preposition, forming a compound passive verb. Examples:—‘He was listened to without a murmur.’—A. H. EVERETT. ‘Nor is this enterprise to be scoffed at.’—CHANNING.”—ib., p. 146. “A verb in the infinitive usually relates to some noun or pronoun. Thus, in the sentence, ‘He desires to improve,’ the verb to improve relates to the pronoun he while it is governed by desires.”—ib., p. 150. “The agent to a verb in the infinitive mode must be in the objective case.”—NUTTING.”—ib., p. 148. These citations from Wells, the last of which he quotes approvingly, by way of authority, are in many respects self-contradictory, and in nearly all respects untrue. How can the infinitive be only “the root or simple form of the verb,” and yet consist “generally” of two distinct words, and often of three, four, or five; as, “to hear,”—“to have heard,”—“to be listened to,”—“to have been listened to?” How can to be a “preposition” in the phrase, “He was listened to,” and not so at all in “to be listened to?” How does the infinitive “express an action or state indefinitely,” if it “usually relates to some noun or pronoun?” Why must its agent “be in the objective case,” if “to improve relates to the pronoun he?” Is to “in every other case a preposition,” and not such before a verb or a participle? Must every preposition govern some “noun or pronoun?” And yet are there some prepositions which govern nothing, precede nothing? “The door banged to behind him.”—BLACKWELL: Prose Edda, Sec.2. What is to here?

Page 2208

(3.) “The preposition TO before a verb is the sign of the Infinitive.”—Weld’s E. Gram., 2d Ed., p. 74. “The preposition is a part of speech used to connect words, and show their relation.”—ib., p. 42. “The perfect infinitive is formed of the perfect participle and the auxiliary HAVE preceded by the preposition TO.”—ib., p. 96. “The infinitive mode follows a verb, noun, or adjective.”—ib., pp. 75 and 166. “A verb in the Infinitive may follow: 1. Verbs or participles; 2. Nouns or pronouns; 3. Adjectives; 4. As or than; 5. Adverbs; 6. Prepositions; 7. The Infinitive is often used independently; 8. The Infinitive mode is often used in the office of a verbal noun, as the nominative case to the verb, and as the objective case after verbs and prepositions.”—ib., p. 167. These last two counts are absurdly included among what “the Infinitive may follow,” and is it not rather queer, that this mood should be found to “follow” every thing else, and not “the preposition TO,” which comes “before” it, and by which it is “preceded?” This author adopts also the following absurd and needless rule: “The Infinitive mode has an objective case before it when [the word] THAT is omitted: as, I believe the sun to be the centre of the solar system; I know him to be a man of veracity.”—ib., p. 167; Abridged Ed., 124. (See Obs. 10th on Rule 2d, above.) “Sun” is here governed by “believe,” and “him,” by “know,” and “be,” in both instances, by “the preposition TO:” for this particle is not only “the sign of the Infinitive,” but its governing word, answering well to the definition of a preposition above cited from Weld.

[411] “The infinitive is sometimes governed by a preposition; as, ‘The shipmen were about to flee.’”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 149; 3d Ed., p. 158. Wells has altered this, and for “preposition” put “adverb.”—Ed. of 1850, p. 163.

[412] Some grammatists, being predetermined that no preposition shall control the infinitive, avoid the conclusion by absurdly calling FOR, a conjunction; ABOUT, an adverb; and TO—no matter what—but generally, nothing. Thus: “The conjunction FOR, is inelegantly used before verbs in the infinitive mood; as, ‘He came for to study Latin.’”—Greenleaf’s Gram., p. 38. “The infinitive mood is sometimes governed by conjunctions or adverbs; as, ‘An object so high as to be invisible;’ ‘The army is about to march.’”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 188. This is a note to that extra rule which Kirkham proposes for our use, “if we reject the idea of government, as applied to the verb in this mood!”—ib.

Page 2209

[413] After the word “fare,” Murray put a semicolon, which shows that he misunderstood the mood of the verb “hear.” It is not always necessary to repeat the particle to, when two or more infinitives are connected; and this fact is an other good argument against calling the preposition to “a part of the verb.” But in this example, and some others here exhibited, the repetition is requisite.—G. B.

[414] “The Infinitive Mood is not confined to a trunk or nominative, and is always preceded by to, expressed or implied.”—S. Barrett’s Gram., 1854, p. 43.

[415] Lindley Murray, and several of his pretended improvers, say, “The infinitive sometimes follows the word AS: thus, ‘An object so high as to be invisible.’ The infinitive occasionally follows THAN after a comparison; as, ‘He desired nothing more than to know his own imperfections.’”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 184; Fisk’s, 125; Alger’s, 63; Merchant’s, 92. See this second example in Weld’s Gram., p. 167; Abridg., 124. Merchant, not relishing the latter example, changes it thus: “I wish nothing more, than to know his fate.” He puts a comma after more, and probably means, “I wish nothing else than to know his fate.” So does Fisk, in the other version: and probably means, “He desired nothing else than to know his own imperfections.” But Murray, Alger, and Weld, accord in punctuation, and their meaning seems rather to be, “He desired nothing more heartily than [he desired] to know his own imperfections.” And so is this or a similar text interpreted by both Ingersoll and Weld, who suppose this infinitive to be “governed by another verb, understood: as, ‘He desired nothing more than to see his friends;’ that is, ‘than he desired to see,’ &c.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 244; Weld’s Abridged, 124. But obvious as is the ambiguity of this fictitious example, in all its forms, not one of these five critics perceived the fault at all. Again, in their remark above cited, Ingersoll, Fisk, and Merchant, put a comma before the preposition “after,” and thus make the phrase, “after a comparison,” describe the place of the infinitive. But Murray and Alger probably meant that this phrase should denote the place of the conjunction “than.” The great “Compiler” seems to me to have misused the phrase “a comparison,” for, “an adjective or adverb of the comparative degree,” and the rest, I suppose, have blindly copied him, without thinking or knowing what he ought to have said, or meant to say. Either this, or a worse error, is here apparent. Five learned grammarians severally represent either “than” or “the infinitive,” as being AFTER “a comparison,” of which one is the copula, and the other but the beginning of the latter term! Palpable as is the absurdity, no one of the five perceives it! And, besides, no one of them says any thing about the government of this infinitive, except Ingersoll, and he supplies a verb. “Than and as,” says Greenleaf, “sometimes appear to govern the infinitive mood; as, ‘Nothing makes a man suspect much more, than to know little;’ ‘An object so high as to be invisible.’”—Gram. Simp., p. 38. Here is an other fictitious and ambiguous example, in which the phrase, “to know little,” is the subject of makes understood. Nixon supposes the infinitive phrase after as to be always the subject of a finite verb understood after it; as, “An object so high as to be invisible is or, implies.” See English Parser, p. 100.

Page 2210

[416] Dr. Crombie, after copying the substance of Campbell’s second Canon, that, “In doubtful cases analogy should be regarded,” remarks: “For the same reason, ‘it needs’ and ‘he dares,’ are better than ‘he need’ and ‘he dare.’”—On Etym. and Synt., p. 326. Dr. Campbell’s language is somewhat stronger: “In the verbs to dare and to need, many say, in the third person present singular, dare and need, as ‘he need not go: he dare not do it.’ Others say, dares and needs. As the first usage is exceedingly irregular, hardly any thing less than uniform practice could authorize it.”—Philosophy of Rhet., p. 175. Dare for dares I suppose to be wrong; but if need is an auxiliary of the potential mood, to use it without inflection, is neither “irregular,” nor at all inconsistent with the foregoing canon. But the former critic notices these verbs a second time, thus: “‘He dare not,’ ‘he need not,’ may be justly pronounced solecisms, for ‘he dares,’ ‘he needs.’”—Crombie, on Etym. and Synt., p. 378. He also says, “The verbs bid, dare, need, make, see, hear, feel, let, are not followed by the sign of the infinitive.”—lb., p. 277. And yet he writes thus: “These are truths, of which, I am persuaded, the author, to whom I allude, needs not to be reminded.”—lb., p. 123. So Dr. Bullions declares against need in the singular, by putting down the following example as bad English: “‘He need not be in so much haste.”—Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 134. Yet he himself writes thus: “A name more appropriate than the term neuter, need not be desired.”—lb., p. 196. A school-boy may see the inconsistency of this.

[417] Some modern grammarians will have it, that a participle governed by a preposition is a “participial noun,” and yet, when they come to parse an adverb or an objective following, their “noun” becomes a “participle” again, and not a “noun.” To allow words thus to dodge from one class to an other, is not only unphilosophical, but ridiculously absurd. Among those who thus treat this construction of the participle, the chief, I think, are Butler, Hurt, Weld, Wells, and S. S. Greene.

Page 2211

[418] Dr. Blair, to whom Murray ought to have acknowledged himself indebted for this sentence, introduced a noun, to which, in his work, this infinitive and these participles refer: thus, "It is disagreeable for the mind to be left pausing on a word which does not, by itself, produce any idea."—Blair's Rhetoric, p. 118. See Obs. 10th and 11th on Rule 14th.

[419] The perfect contrast between from and to, when the former governs the participle and the latter the infinitive, is an other proof that this to is the common preposition to. For example, "These are the four spirits of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth."—Zech., vi, 5. Now if this were rendered "which go forth to stand," &c., it is plain that these prepositions would express quite opposite relations. Yet, probably from some obscurity in the original, the Greek version has been made to mean, "going forth to stand;" and the Latin, "which go forth, that they may stand;" while the French text conveys nearly the same sense as ours,—"which go forth from the place where they stood."

[420] Cannot, with a verb of avoiding, or with the negative but, is equivalent to must. Such examples may therefore be varied thus: "I cannot but mention:" i.e., "I must mention."—"I cannot help exhorting him to assume courage."—Knox. That is, "I cannot but exhort him."

[421] See the same thing in Kirkham's Gram. p. 189; in Ingersoll's, p. 200; in Smith's New Grammar, p. 162; and in other modifications and mutilations of Murray's work. Kirkham, in an other place, adopts the doctrine, that, "Participles frequently govern nouns and pronouns in the possessive case; as, 'In case of his majesty's dying without issue, &c.; Upon God's having ended all his works, &c.; I remember its being reckoned a great exploit; At my coming in he said, &c.'"—Kirkham's Gram., p. 181. None of these examples are written according to my notion of elegance, or of accuracy. Better: "In case his Majesty die without issue."—"God having ended all his works."—"I remember it was reckoned a great exploit."—"At my entrance, he said," &c.

[422] We have seen that Priestley's doctrine, as well as Lowth's, is, that when a participle is taken substantively, "it ought not to govern another word;" and, for the same reason, it ought not to have an adverb relating to it. But many of our modern grammarians disregard these principles, and do not restrict their "participial nouns" to the construction of nouns, in either of these respects. For example: Because one may say, "To read superficially, is useless," Barnard supposes it right to say, "Reading superficially is useless."

Page 2212

"But the participle," says he, "will also take the adjective; as, 'Superficial reading is useless.'"—Analytic Gram., p. 212. In my opinion, this last construction ought to be preferred; and the second, which is both irregular and unnecessary, rejected. Again, this author says: "We have laid it down as a rule, that the possessive case belongs, like an adjective, to a noun. What shall be said of the following? 'Since the days of Samson, there has been no instance of a man's accomplishing a task so stupendous.' The entire clause following man's, is taken as a noun. 'Of a man's success in a task so stupendous.' would present no difficulty. A part of a sentence, or even a single participle, thus often stands for a noun. 'My going will depend on my father's giving his consent,' or 'on my father's consenting.' A participle thus used as a noun, may be called a PARTICIPIAL NOUN."—ib., p. 131. I dislike this doctrine also. In the first example, man may well be made the leading word in sense; and, as such, it must be in the objective case; thus: "There has been no instance of a man accomplishing a task so stupendous." It is also proper to say, "My going will depend on my father's consenting," or, "on my father's consent." But an action possessed by the agent, ought not to be transitive. If, therefore, you make this the leading idea, insert of: thus, "There has been no instance of a man's accomplishing of a task so stupendous." "My going will depend on my father's giving of his consent."—"My brother's acquiring [of] the French language will be a useful preparation for his travels."—Barnard's Gram., p. 227. If participial nouns retain the power of participles, why is it wrong to say, "A superficial reading books is useless?" Again, Barnard approves of the question, "What do you think of my horse's running to-day?" and adds, "Between this form of expression and the following, 'What do you think of my horse running to-day?' it is sometimes said, that we should make a distinction; because the former implies that the horse had actually run, and the latter, that it is in contemplation to have him do so. The difference of meaning certainly exists; but it would seem more judicious to treat the latter as an improper mode of speaking. What can be more uncouth than to say, 'What do you think of me going to Niagara?' We should say my going, notwithstanding the ambiguity. We ought, therefore, to introduce something explanatory; as, 'What do you think of the propriety of my going to Niagara?'—Analytic Gram., p. 227. The propriety of a past action is as proper a subject of remark as that of a future one; the explanatory phrase here introduced has therefore nothing to do with Priestley's distinction, or with the alleged ambiguity. Nor does the uncouthness of an objective pronoun with the leading word in sense improperly taken as an adjunct, prove that a participle may properly take to itself a possessive adjunct, and still retain the active nature of a participle.

Page 2213

[423] The following is an example, but it is not very intelligible, nor would it be at all amended, if the pronoun were put in the possessive case: "I sympathize with my sable brethren, when I hear of them being spared even one lash of the cart-whip."—REV. DR. THOMPSON: Garrison, on Colonization, p. 80. And this is an other, in which the possessive pronoun would not be better: "But, if the slaves wish, to return to slavery, let them do so; not an abolitionist will turn out to stop them going back."—Antislavery Reporter, Vol. IV, p. 223. Yet it might be more accurate to say—"to stop them from going back." In the following example from the pen of Priestley, the objective is correctly used with as, where some would be apt to adopt the possessive: "It gives us an idea of him, as being the only person to whom it can be applied."—Priestley's Gram., p. 151. Is not this better English than to say, "of his being the only person?" The following is from the pen of a good scholar: "This made me remember the discourse we had together, at my house, about me drawing constitutions, not as proposals, but as if fixed to the hand."—WILLIAM PENN: Letter to Algernon Sidney, Oct. 13th, 1681. Here, if me is objectionable, my without of would be no less so. It might be better grammar to say, "about my drawing of constitutions."

[424] Sometimes the passive form is adopted, when there is no real need of it, and when perhaps the active would be better, because it is simpler; as, "Those portions of the grammar are worth the trouble of being committed to memory."—Dr. Barrow's Essays, p. 109. Better, perhaps:—"worth the trouble of committing to memory:" or,— "worth the trouble committing them to memory." Again: "What is worth being uttered at all, is worth being spoken in a proper manner."—Kirkham's Elocution, p. 68. Better, perhaps: "What is worth uttering at all, is worth uttering in a proper manner."—G. Brown.

[425] "RULE.—When the participle expresses something of which the noun following is the DOER, it should have the article and preposition; as, 'It was said in the hearing of the witness.' When it expresses something of which the noun following is not the doer, but the OBJECT, both should be omitted; as, 'The court spent some time in hearing the witness.'"—BULLIONS, Prin. of E. Gram., p. 108; Analyt. and Pract. Gram., 181.

[426] This doctrine is far from being true. See Obs. 12th, in this series, above.—G. B.

Page 2214

[427] “Dr. Webster considers the use of then and above as ADNOUNS, [i. e., adjectives,] to be ‘well authorized and very convenient;’ as, the then ministry; the above remarks.”—Felch’s Comp. Gram., p. 108. Dr. Webster’s remark is in the following words: “Then and above are often used as ATTRIBUTES: [i. e., adjectives; as,] the then ministry; the above remarks; nor would I prescribe this use. It is well authorized and very convenient.”—Philos. Gram., p. 245; Improved Gram., p. 176. Of this use of then, Dr. Crombie has expressed a very different opinion: “Here then,” says he, “the adverb equivalent to at that time, is solecistically employed as an adjective, agreeing with ministry. This error seems to gain ground; it should therefore be vigilantly opposed, and carefully avoided.”—On Etym. and Synt., p. 405.

[428] W. Allen supposes, “An adverb sometimes qualifies a whole sentence: as, Unfortunately for the lovers of antiquity, no remains of Grecian paintings have been preserved.”—Elements of Eng. Gram., p. 173. But this example may be resolved thus: “It happens unfortunately for the lovers of antiquity, that no remains of Grecian paintings have been preserved.”

[429] This assertion of Churchill’s is very far from the truth. I am confident that the latter construction occurs, even among reputable authors, ten times as often as the former can be found in any English books.—G. BROWN.

[430] Should not the Doctor have said, “are there more,” since “more than one” must needs be plural? See Obs. 10th on Rule 17th.

[431] This degree of truth is impossible, and therefore not justly supposable. We have also a late American grammarian who gives a similar interpretation: “‘Though never so justly deserving of it.’ Comber. Never is here an emphatic adverb; as if it were said, so justly as was never. Though well authorized, it is disapproved by most grammarians of the present day; and the word ever is used instead of never.”—Felch’s Comp. Gram., p. 107. The text here cited is not necessarily bad English as it stands; but, if the commenter has not mistaken its meaning, as well as its construction, it ought certainly to be, “Though ever so justly deserving of it.”—“So justly as was never,” is a positive degree that is not imaginable; and what is this but an absurdity?

[432] Since this remark was written, I have read an other grammar, (that of the “Rev. Charles Adams,”) in which the author sets down among “the more frequent improprieties committed, in conversation, ‘Ary one’ for either, and ‘nary one’ for neither.”—Adams’s System of Gram., p. 116. Eli Gilbert too betrays the same ignorance. Among his “Improper Pronunciations” he puts down “Nary” and “Ary” and for “Corrections” of them, gives “neither” and “either.”—Gilbert’s Catechetical Gram., p. 128. But these latter terms, either and neither, are applicable only to one of two things, and cannot be used where many are spoken of; as,

Page 2215

“Stealing her soul with many vows of faith,
And ne’er a true one.”—Shakspeare.

What sense would there be in expounding this to mean, “And neither a true one?” So some men both write and interpret their mother tongue erroneously through ignorance. But these authors condemn the errors which they here falsely suppose to be common. What is yet more strange, no less a critic than Prof. William C. Fowler, has lately exhibited, without disapprobation, one of these literary blunders, with sundry localisms, (often descending to slang,) which, he says, are mentioned by “Mr. Bartlett, in his valuable dictionary [Dictionary] of Americanisms.” The brief example, which may doubtless be understood to speak for both phrases and both authors, is this: “ARY = either.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, N. Y., 1850, p. 92.

[433] The conjunction that, at the head of a sentence or clause, enables us to assume the whole preposition as one thing; as, “All arguments whatever are directed to prove one or other of these three things: that something is true; that it is morally right or fit; or that it is profitable and good.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 318. Here each that may be parsed as connecting its own clause to the first clause in the sentence; or, to the word things with which the three clauses are in a sort of apposition. If we conceive it to have no such connecting power, we must make this too an exception.

[434] “Note. Then and than are distinct Particles, but use hath made the using of then for than after a Comparative Degree at least passable. See Butler’s Eng. Gram. Index.”—Walker’s Eng. Particles, Tenth Ed., 1691, p. 333.

[435] “When the relative who follows the preposition than, it must be used as in the accusative case.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 93. Dr. Priestley seems to have imagined the word than to be always a preposition; for he contends against the common doctrine and practice respecting the case after it: “It is, likewise, said, that the nominative case ought to follow the preposition than; because the verb to be is understood after it; As, You are taller than he, and not taller than him; because at full length, it would be, You are taller than he is; but since it is allowed, that the oblique case should follow prepositions; and since the comparative degree of an adjective, and the particle than have, certainly, between them, the force of a preposition, expressing the relation of one word to another, they ought to require the oblique case of the pronoun following.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 105. If than were a preposition, this reasoning would certainly be right; but the Doctor begs the question, by assuming that it is a preposition. William Ward, an other noted grammarian of the same age, supposes that, “ME sapientior es, may be translated, Thou art wiser THAN ME.” He also, in the same place, avers, that, “The best English Writers have considered than as a Sign of an oblique Case; as, ‘She suffers more THAN ME.’ Swift, i.e. more than I suffer.

Page 2216

'Thou art a Girl as much brighter THAN HER,
As he was a Poet sublimer THAN ME.' Prior.

i.e. Thou art a Girl as much brighter than she was, as he was a Poet sublimer than I am."—Ward's Practical Gram., p. 112. These examples of the objective case after than, were justly regarded by Lowth as bad English. The construction, however, has a modern advocate in S. W. Clark, who will have the conjunctions as, but, save, saving, and than, as well as the adjectives like, unlike, near, next, nigh, and opposite, to be prepositions. "After a Comparative the Preposition than is commonly used. Example—Grammar is more interesting than all my other studies."—Clark's Practical Gram., p. 178. "As, like, than, &c., indicate a relation of comparison. Example 'Thou hast been wiser all the while than me.' Southey's Letters."—ib., p. 96. Here correct usage undoubtedly requires I, and not me. Such at least is my opinion.

[436] In respect to the case, the phrase than who is similar to than he, than they, &c., as has been observed by many grammarians; but, since than is a conjunction, and who or whom is a relative, it is doubtful whether it can be strictly proper to set two such connectives together, be the case of the latter which it may. See Note 5th, in the present chapter, below.

[437] After else or other, the preposition besides is sometimes used; and, when it recalls an idea previously suggested, it appears to be as good as than, or better: as, "Other words, besides the preceding, may begin with capitals."—Murray's Gram., Vol. i. p. 285. Or perhaps this preposition may be proper, whenever else or other denotes what is additional to the object of contrast, and not exclusive of it; as, "When we speak of any other quantity besides bare numbers."—Tooke's Diversions, Vol. i, p. 215. "Because he had no other father besides God."—Milton, on Christianity, p. 109. Though we sometimes express an addition by more than, the following example appears to me to be bad English, and its interpretation still worse: "'The secret was communicated to more men than him.' That is, (when the ellipsis is duly supplied,) 'The secret was communicated to more persons than to him.'"—Murray's Key, 12mo, p. 61; his Octavo Gram., p. 215; Ingersoll's Gram., 252. Say rather,—"to other men besides him." Nor, again, does the following construction appear to be right: "Now shew me another Popish rhymester but he."—DENNIS: Notes to the Dunciad, B. ii, l. 268. Say rather, "Now show me an other popish rhymester besides him." Or thus: "Now show me any popish rhymester except him." This too is questionable: "Now pain must here be intended to signify something else besides warning."—Wayland's Moral Science, p. 121. If "warning" was here intended to be included with "something else," the expression is right; if not, besides should be than. Again: "There is seldom any other cardinal in Poland but him."—Life of Charles XII. Here "but him" should be either "besides him," or "than he;" for but never rightly governs the objective case, nor is it proper after other. "Many more examples, besides the foregoing, might have been adduced."—Nesbit's English Parsing, p. xv. Here, in fact, no comparison is expressed; and therefore it is questionable, whether the word "more" is allowably used. Like else and other, when construed with besides, it signifies additional; and, as this idea is implied in besides, any one of these adjectives going before is really pleonastic. In the sense above noticed, the word beside is sometimes written in stead of besides, though not very often; as, "There are other things which pass in the mind of man, beside ideas."—Sheridan's Elocution, p. 136.

Page 2217

[438] A few of the examples under this head might be corrected equally well by some preceding note of a more specific character; for a general note against the improper omission of prepositions, of course includes those principles of grammar by which any particular prepositions are to be inserted. So the examples of error which were given in the tenth chapter of Etymology, might nearly all of them have been placed under the first note in this tenth chapter of Syntax. But it was thought best to illustrate every part of this volume, by some examples of false grammar, out of the infinite number and variety with which our literature abounds.

[439] "The Rev. Joab Goldsmith Cooper, A. M.," was the author of two English grammars, as well as of what he called "A New and Improved Latin Grammar," with "An Edition of the Works of Virgil, &c.," all published in Philadelphia. His first grammar, dated 1828, is entitled, "An Abridgment of Murray's English Grammar, and Exercises." But it is no more an abridgement of Murray's work, than of mine; he having chosen to steal from the text of my Institutes, or supply matter of his own, about as often as to copy Murray. His second is the Latin Grammar. His third, which is entitled, "A Plain and Practical English Grammar," and dated 1831, is a book very different from the first, but equally inaccurate and worthless. In this book, the syntax of interjections stands thus: "RULE 21. The interjections O, oh and ah are followed by the objective case of a noun or pronoun, as: 'O me! ah me! oh me!' In the second person, they are a mark or sign of an address, made to a person or thing, as: O thou persecutor! Oh, ye hypocrites! O virtue, how amiable thou art!"—Page 157. The inaccuracy of all this can scarcely be exceeded.

Page 2218

[440] “Oh is used to express the emotion of pain, sorrow, or surprise. O is used to express wishing, exclamation, or a direct address to a person.”—Lennie’s Gram., 12th Ed., p. 110. Of this distinction our grammarians in general seem to have no conception; and, in fact, it is so often disregarded by other authors, that the propriety of it may be disputed. Since O and oh are pronounced alike, or very nearly so, if there is no difference in their application, they are only different modes of writing the same word, and one or the other of them is useless. If there is a real difference, as I suppose there is, it ought to be better observed; and O me! and oh ye! which I believe are found only in grammars, should be regarded as bad English. Both O and oh, as well as ah, were used in Latin by Terence, who was reckoned an elegant writer; and his manner of applying them favours this distinction: and so do our own dictionaries, though Johnson and Walker do not draw it clearly, for oh is as much an “exclamation” as O. In the works of Virgil, Ovid, and Horace, we find O or o used frequently, but nowhere oh. Yet this is no evidence of their sameness, or of the uselessness of the latter; but rather of their difference, and of the impropriety of confounding them. O, oh, ho, and ah, are French words as well as English. Boyer, in his Quarto Dictionary, confounds them all; translating “O!” only by “Oh!” “OH! ou HO!” by “Ho! Oh!” and “AH!” by “Oh! alas! well-a-day! ough! A! ah! hah! ho!” He would have done better to have made each one explain itself; and especially, not to have set down “ough!” and “A!” as English words which correspond to the French ah!

[441] This silence is sufficiently accounted for by Murray’s; of whose work, most of the authors who have any such rule, are either piddling modifiers or servile copyists. And Murray’s silence on these matters, is in part attributable to the fact, that when he wrote his remark, his system of grammar denied that nouns have any first person, or any objective case. Of course he supposed that all nouns that were uttered after interjections, whether they were of the second person or of the third, were in the nominative case; for he gave to nouns two cases only, the nominative and the possessive. And when he afterwards admitted the objective case of nouns, he did not alter his remark, but left all his pupils ignorant of the case of any noun that is used in exclamation or invocation. In his doctrine of two cases, he followed Dr. Ash: from whom also he copied the rule which I am criticising: “The Interjections, O, Oh, and Ah, require the accusative case of a pronoun in the first Person: as, O me, Oh me, Ah me: But the Nominative in the second:

Page 2219

as, O thou, O ye.”—Ash’s Gram., p. 60. Or perhaps he had Bicknell’s book, which was later: “The interjections O, oh, and ah, require the accusative case of a pronoun in the first person after them; as, O, me! Oh, me! Ah, me! But the nominative case in the second person; as, O, thou that rulest! O, ye rulers of this land!”—The Grammatical Wreath, Part I, p. 105.

[442] See 2 Sam., xix, 4; also xviii, 33. Peirce has many times misquoted this text, or some part of it; and, what is remarkable, he nowhere agrees either with himself or with the Bible! “O! Absalom! my son!”—Gram., p. 283. “O Absalom! my son, my son! would to God I had died for thee.”—Ib., p. 304. Pinneo also misquotes and perverts a part of it, thus: “Oh, Absalom! my son”—Primary Gram., Revised Ed., p. 57.

[443] Of this example, Professor Bullions says, “This will be allowed to be a correct English sentence, complete in itself, and requiring nothing to be supplied. The phrase, ‘being an expert dancer,’ is the subject of the verb ‘does entitle,’ but the word ‘dancer’ in that phrase is neither the subject of any verb, nor is governed by any word in the sentence.”—Eng. Gram., p. 52. It is because this word cannot have any regular construction after the participle when the possessive case precedes, that I deny his first proposition, and declare the sentence not “to be correct English.” But the Professor at length reasons himself into the notion, that this indeterminate “predicate,” as he erroneously calls it, “is properly in the objective case, and in parsing, may correctly be called the objective indefinite,” of which case, he says, “The following are also examples: ‘He had the honour of being a director for life.’ ‘By being a diligent student, he soon acquired eminence in his profession.’”—Ib., p. 83. But “director” and “student” are here manifestly in the nominative case: each agreeing with the pronoun he, which denotes the same person. In the latter sentence, there is a very obvious transposition of the first five words.

[444] Faulty as this example is, Dr. Blair says of it: “Nothing can be more elegant, or more finely turned, than this sentence. It is neat, clear, and musical. We could hardly alter one word, or disarrange one member, without spoiling it. Few sentences are to be found, more finished, or more happy.”—Lecture XX, p. 201. See the six corrections suggested in my Key, and judge whether or not they spoil the sentence.—G. B.

Page 2220

[445] This Note, as well as all the others, will by-and-by be amply illustrated by citations from authors of sufficient repute to give it some value as a grammatical principle: but one cannot hope such language as is, in reality, incorrigibly bad, will always appear so to the generality of readers. Tastes, habits, principles, judgements, differ; and, where confidence is gained, many utterances are well received, that are neither well considered nor well understood. When a professed critic utters what is incorrect beyond amendment, the fault is the more noteworthy, as his professions are louder, or his standing is more eminent. In a recent preface, deliberately composed for a very comprehensive work on “English Grammar,” and designed to allure both young and old to “a thorough and extensive acquaintance with their mother tongue,”—in the studied preface of a learned writer, who has aimed “to furnish not only a text-book for the higher institutions, but also a reference-book for teachers, which may give breadth and exactness to their views,”—I find a paragraph of which the following is a part: “Unless men, at least occasionally, bestow their attention upon the science and the laws of the language, they are in some danger, amid the excitements of professional life, of losing the delicacy of their taste and giving sanction to vulgarisms, or to what is worse. On this point, listen to the recent declarations of two leading men in the Senate of the United States, both of whom understand the use of the English language in its power: ‘In truth, I must say that, in my opinion, the vernacular tongue of the country has become greatly vitiated, depraved, and corrupted by the style of our Congressional debates.’ And the other, in courteous response remarked, ‘There is such a thing as an English and a parliamentary vocabulary, and I have never heard a worse, when circumstances called it out, on this side [of] Billingsgate!’”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo. 1850, Pref., p. iv.

Now of these “two leading men,” the former was Daniel Webster, who, in a senatorial speech, in the spring of 1850, made such a remark concerning the style of oratory used in Congress. But who replied, or what idea the “courteous response,” as here given, can be said to convey, I do not know. The language seems to me both unintelligible and solecistical; and, therefore, but a fair sample of the Incorrigible. Some intelligent persons, whom I have asked to interpret it, think, as Webster had accused our Congress of corrupting the English language, the respondent meant to accuse the British Parliament of doing the same thing in a greater degree,—of descending yet lower into the vileness of slang. But this is hardly a probable conjecture. Webster might be right in acknowledging a very depraving abuse of the tongue in the two Houses of Congress; but could it be “courteous,” or proper, for the answerer to jump the Atlantic, and pounce upon the English Lords and Commons, as a set of worse corrupters?

Page 2221

The gentleman begins with saying, “There is such a thing”—as if he meant to describe some one thing; and proceeds with saying, “as an English and a parliamentary vocabulary,” in which phrase, by repeating the article, he speaks of two “things”—two vocabularies; then goes on, “and I have never heard a worse!” A worse what? Does he mean “a worse vocabulary?” If so, what sense has “vocabulary?” And, again, “a worse than what?” Where and what is this “thing” which is so bad that the leading Senator has “never heard a worse?” Is it some “vocabulary” both “English and parliamentary?” If so, whose? If not, what else is it? Lest the wisdom of this oraculous “declaration” be lost to the public through the defects of its syntax,—and lest more than one rhetorical critic seem hereby “in some danger” of “giving sanction to” nonsense,—it may be well for Professor Fowler, in his next edition, to present some elucidation of this short but remarkable passage, which he values so highly!

An other example, in several respects still more remarkable,—a shorter one, into which an equally successful professor of grammar has condensed a much greater number and variety of faults,—is seen in the following citation: “The verb is so called, because it means word; and as there can be no sentence without it, it is called, emphatically, the word.”—Pinneo’s Analytical Gram., p. 14. This sentence, in which, perhaps, most readers will discover no error, has in fact faults of so many different kinds, that a critic must pause to determine under which of more than half a dozen different heads of false syntax it might most fitly be presented for correction or criticism. (1.) It might be set down under my Note 5th to Rule 10th; for, in one or two instances out of the three, if not in all, the pronoun “it” gives not the same idea as its antecedent. The faults coming under this head might be obviated by three changes, made thus: “The verb is so called, because verb means word; and, as there can be no sentence without a verb, this part of speech is called, emphatically, the word.” Cobbett wisely says, “Never put an it upon paper without thinking well of what you are about.”—E. Gram., 196. But (2.) the erroneous text, and this partial correction of it too, might be put under my Critical Note 5th, among Falsities; for, in either form, each member affirms what is manifestly untrue. The term “word” has many meanings; but no usage ever makes it, “emphatically” or otherwise, a name for one of the classes called “parts of speech;” nor is there nowadays any current usage in which “verb means word.” (3.) This text might be put under Critical Note 6th, among Absurdities; for whoever will read it, as in fairness he should, taking the pronoun “it” in the exact sense of its antecedent "the verb," will see that the import of each part is absurd—the whole, a two-fold absurdity. (4.) It might be put under Critical Note 7th, among Self-Contradictions; for, to teach at once that "the verb is so called," and "is called, emphatically," otherwise,—namely, "the word,"—is, to contradict one's self. (5.) It might be set down under Critical Note 9th, among examples of Words Needless; for the author's question is, "Why is the verb so called?" and this may be much better answered in fewer words, thus: "THE VERB is so called, because in French it is called le verbe and in Latin, verbum, which means word." (6.) It might be put under Critical Note 10th, as an example of Improper Omissions; for it may be greatly bettered by the addition of some words, thus: "The verb is so called, because [in French] it [is called le verbe, and in Latin, verbum, which] means word: as there can be no sentence without a verb, this [most important part of speech] is called, emphatically, [the verb,—q.d.,] the word." (7.) It might be put under Critical Note 11th, among Literary Blunders; for there is at least one blunder in each of its members. (8.) It might be set down under Critical Note 13th, as an example of Awkwardness; for it is but clumsy work, to teach grammar after this sort. (9.) It might be given under Critical Note 16th, as a sample of the Incorrigible; for it is scarcely possible to eliminate all its defects and retain its essentials.

Page 2222

These instances may suffice to show, that even gross errors of grammar may lurk where they are least to be expected, in the didactic phraseology of professed masters of style or oratory, and may abound where common readers or the generality of hearers will discover nothing amiss.

[446] As a mere assertion, this example is here sufficiently corrected; but, as a definition, (for which the author probably intended it,) it is deficient; and consequently, in that sense, is still inaccurate. I would also observe that most of the subsequent examples under the present head, contain other errors than that for which they are here introduced; and, of some of them, the faults are, in my opinion, very many: for example, the several definitions of an adverb, cited below. Lindley Murray's definition of this part of speech is not inserted among these, because I had elsewhere criticised that. So too of his faulty definition of a conjunction. See the Introduction, Chap. X. paragraphs 26 and 28. See also Corrections in the Key, under Note 10th to Rule 1st.

Page 2223

[447] In his explanation of Ellipsis, Lindley Murray continually calls it “the ellipsis,” and speaks of it as something that is “used,”—“made use of,”—“applied,”—“contained in” the examples; which expressions, referring, as they there do, to the mere absence of something, appear to me solecistical. The notion too, which this author and others have entertained of the figure itself, is in many respects erroneous; and nearly all their examples for its illustration are either questionable as to such an application, or obviously inappropriate. The absence of what is needless or unsuggested, is no ellipsis, though some grave men have not discerned this obvious fact. The nine solecisms here quoted concerning “the ellipsis,” are all found in many other grammars. See Fisk’s E. Gram., p. 144; Guy’s, 91; Ingersoll’s, 153; J. M. Putnam’s, 137; R. C. Smith’s, 180; Weld’s, 190.

[448] Some of these examples do, in fact, contain more than two errors; for mistakes in punctuation, or in the use of capitals, are not here reckoned. This remark may also be applicable to some of the other lessons. The reader may likewise perceive, that where two, three, or more improprieties occur in one sentence, some one or more of them may happen to be such, as he can, if he choose, correct by some rule or note belonging to a previous chapter. Great labour has been bestowed on the selection and arrangement of these syntactical exercises; but to give to so great a variety of literary faults, a distribution perfectly distinct, and perfectly adapted to all the heads assumed in this digest, is a work not only of great labour, but of great difficulty. I have come as near to these two points of perfection in the arrangement, as I well could.—G. BROWN.

[449] In Murray’s sixth chapter of Punctuation, from which this example, and eleven others that follow it, are taken, there is scarcely a single sentence that does not contain many errors; and yet the whole is literally copied in Ingersoll’s Grammar, p. 293; in Fisk’s, p. 159; in Abel Flint’s, 116; and probably in some others. I have not always been careful to subjoin the great number of references which might be given for blunders selected from this hackneyed literature of the schools. For corrections, or improvements, see the Key.

[450] This example, or L. Murray’s miserable modification of it, traced through the grammars of Alden, Alger, Bullions, Comly, Cooper, Flint, Hiley, Ingersoll, Jaudon, Merchant, Russell, Smith, and others, will be found to have a dozen different forms—all of them no less faulty than the original—all of them obscure, untrue, inconsistent, and almost incorrigible. It is plain, that “a comma,” or one comma, cannot divide more than two “simple members,” and these, surely, cannot be connected by more than one relative, or by more than one “comparative,” if it be allowable to call than, as, or so, by this questionable name. Of the multitude of errors into which these pretended critics have so blindly fallen, I shall have space and time to point out only a very small part: this text, too justly, may be taken as a pretty fair sample of their scholarship!

Page 2224

[451] The “idea” which is here spoken of, Dr. Blair discovers in a passage of Addison’s Spectator. It is, in fact, as here “brought out” by the critic, a bald and downright absurdity. Dr. Campbell has criticised, under the name of marvellous nonsense, a different display of the same “idea,” cited from De Piles’s Principles of Painting. The passage ends thus: “In this sense it may be asserted, that in Rubens’ pieces, Art is above Nature, and Nature only a copy of that great master’s works.” Of this the critic says: “When the expression is stript of the absurd meaning, there remains nothing but balderdash.”—Philosophy of Rhet., p, 278.

[452] All his rules for the comma, Fisk appears to have taken unjustly from Greenleaf. It is a double shame, for a grammarian to steal what is so badly written!—G. BROWN.

[453] Bad definitions may have other faults than to include or exclude what they should not, but this is their great and peculiar vice. For example: “Person is that property of nouns and pronouns which distinguishes the speaker, the person or thing addressed, and the person or thing spoken of.”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 51; 113th Ed., p. 57. See nearly the same words, in Weld’s English Gram., p. 67; and in his Abridgement, p. 49. The three persons of verbs are all improperly excluded from this definition; which absurdly takes “person” to be one property that has all the effect of all the persons; so that each person, in its turn, since each cannot have all this effect, is seen to be excluded also: that is, it is not such a property as is described! Again: “An intransitive verb is a verb which does not have a noun or pronoun for its object.”—Wells, 1st Ed., p. 76. According to Dr. Johnson, “does not have,” is not a scholarly phrase; but the adoption of a puerile expression is a trifling fault, compared with that of including here all passive verbs, and some transitives, which the author meant to exclude; to say nothing of the inconsistency of excluding here the two classes of verbs which he absurdly calls “intransitive,” though he finds them “followed by objectives depending upon them!”—Id., p. 145. Weld imitates these errors too, on pp. 70 and 153.

[454] S. R. Hall thinks it necessary to recognize “four distinctions” of “the distinction occasioned by sex.” In general, the other authors here quoted, suppose that we have only “three distinctions” of “the distinction of sex.” And, as no philosopher has yet discovered more than two sexes, some have thence stoutly argued, that it is absurd to speak of more than two genders. Lily makes it out, that in Latin there are seven: yet, with no great consistency, he will have a gender to be a or the distinction of sex.

Page 2225

“GENUS est sexus discretio. Et sunt genera numero septem.”—Lilii Gram., p. 10. That is, “GENDER is the distinction of sex. And the genders are seven in number.” Ruddiman says, “GENUS est, discrimen nominis secundum sexum, vel ejus in structura grammatica imitatio. Genera nominum sunt tria.”—Ruddimanni Gram., p. 4. That is, “GENDER is the diversity of the noun according to sex, or [it is] the imitation of it in grammatical structure. The genders of nouns are three.” These old definitions are no better than the newer ones cited above. All of them are miserable failures, full of faults and absurdities. Both the nature and the cause of their defects are in some degree explained near the close of the tenth chapter of my Introduction. Their most prominent errors are these: 1. They all assume, that gender, taken as one thing, is in fact two, three, or more, genders, 2. Nearly all of them seem to say or imply, that words differ from one another in sex, like animals. 3. Many of them expressly confine gender, or the genders, to nouns only. 4. Many of them confessedly exclude the neuter gender, though their authors afterwards admit this gender. 5. That of Dr. Webster supposes, that words differing in gender never have the same “termination.” The absurdity of this may be shown by a multitude of examples: as, man and woman, male and female, father and mother, brother and sister. This is better, but still not free from some other faults which I have mentioned. For the correction of all this great batch of errors, I shall simply substitute in the Key one short definition, which appears to me to be exempt from each of these inaccuracies.

[455] Walker states this differently, and even repeats his remark, thus: “But y preceded by a vowel is never changed: as coy, coyly, gay, gayly.”—Walker’s Rhyming Dict., p.x. “Y preceded by a vowel is never changed, as boy, boys, I cloy, *he cloy*s, etc..”—Ib., p viii. Walker’s twelve “Orthographical Aphorisms,” which Murray and others republish as their “Rules for Spelling,” and which in stead of amending they merely corrupt, happened through some carelessness to contain two which should have been condensed into one. For “words ending with y preceded by a consonant,” he has not only the absurd rule or assertion above recited, but an other which is better, with an exception or remark under each, respecting “y preceded by a vowel.” The grammarians follow him in his errors, and add to their number: hence the repetition, or similarity, in the absurdities here quoted. By the term “verbal nouns,” Walker meant nouns denoting agents, as carrier from carry; but Kirkham understood him to mean “participial nouns,” as the carrying. Or rather, he so mistook “that able philologist” Murray; for he probably knew nothing of Walker in the matter; and accordingly changed the word “verbal” to “participial,” thus teaching, through all his hundred editions, except a few of the first, that participial nouns from verbs ending in y preceded by a consonant, are formed by merely “changing the y into i.” But he seems to have known, that this is not the way to form the participle; though he did not know, that “coylless” is not a proper English word.

Page 2226

[456] The idea of plurality is not “plurality of idea,” any more than the idea of wickedness, or the idea of absurdity, is absurdity or wickedness of idea; yet, behold, how our grammarians copy the blunder, which Lowth (perhaps) first fell into, of putting the one phrase for the other! Even Professor Fowler, (as well as Murray, Kirkham, and others,) talks of having regard “to unity or plurality of idea!”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo. 1850, Sec.513,—G. BROWN.

[457] In the Doctor’s “New Edition, Revised and Corrected,” the text stands thus: “The Present participle of THE ACTIVE VOICE has an active signification; as, James is building the house. In many of these, however, it has,” &c. Here the first sentence is but an idle truism; and the phrase, “In many of these,” for lack of an antecedent to these, is utter nonsense. What is in “the active voice,” ought of course to be active in “signification;” but, in this author’s present scheme of the verb, we find “the active voice,” in direct violation of his own definition of it, ascribed not only to verbs and participles either neuter or intransitive, but also, as it would seem by this passage, to “many” that are passive!—G. BROWN.

[458] One objection to these passage is, that they are examples of the very construction which they describe as a fault. The first and second sentences ought to have been separated only by a semicolon. This would have made them “members” of one and the same sentence. Can it be supported that one “thought” is sufficient for two periods, or for what one chooses to point as such, but not for two members of the same period?—G. BROWN.

[459] (1.) “Accent is the tone with which one speaks. For, in speaking, the voice of every man is sometimes more grave in the sound, and at other times more acute or shrill.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, p. 25. “Accent is the tone of the voice with which a syllable is pronounced.”—Dr. Adam’s Latin and English Gram., p. 266.

(2.) “Accent in a peculiar stress of the voice on some syllable in a word to distinguish it from the others.”—Gould’s Adam’s Lat. Gram., p. 243.

(3.) “The tone by which one syllable is distinguished from another is the accent; which is a greater stress and elevation of voice on that particular syllable.”—Bicknell’s Eng. Gram., Part II, p. 111.

Page 2227

(4.) “Quantity is the Length or Shortness of Syllables; and the Proportion, generally speaking, betwixt a long and [a] short Syllable, is two to one; as in Music, two Quavers to one Crotchet.—Accent is the rising and falling of the Voice, above or under its usual Tone, but an Art of which we have little Use, and know less, in the English Tongue; nor are we like to improve our Knowledge in this Particular, unless the Art of Delivery or Utterance were a little more study’d.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 156.

(5.) “ACCENT, s. m. (inflexion de la voix.) Accent, tone, pronunciation.”—Nouveau Dictionnaire Universel, 4to, Tome Premier, sous le mot Accent.

“ACCENT, subst. (tone or inflection of the voice.) Accent, ton ou inflexion de voix.”—Same Work, Garner’s New Universal Dictionary, 4to, under the word Accent.

(6.) “The word accent is derived from the Latin language and signifies the tone of the voice.”—Parker and Fox’s English Gram., Part III, p. 32.

(7.) “The unity of the word consists in the tone or accent, which binds together the two parts of the composition.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., Sec.360.

(8.) “The accent of the ancients is the opprobrium of modern criticism. Nothing can show more evidently the fallibility of the human faculties, than the total ignorance we are in at present of the nature of the Latin and Greek accent.”—Walker’s Principles, No. 486; Dict., p. 53.

(9.) “It is not surprising, that the accent and quantity of the ancients should be so obscure and mysterious, when two such learned men of our own nation as Mr. Foster and Dr. Gaily, differ about the very existence of quantity in our own language.”—Walker’s Observations on Accent, &c.; Key, p. 311.

(10.) “What these accents are has puzzled the learned so much that they seem neither to understand each other nor themselves.”—Walker’s Octavo Dict., w. Barytone.

(11.) “The ancients designated the pitch of vocal sounds by the term accent; making three kinds of accents, the acute (e), the grave (e), and the circumflex (e), which signified severally the rise, the fall, and the turn of the voice, or union of acute and grave on the same syllable.”—Sargent’s Standard Speaker, p. 18.

[460] “Interrogatio, Graece Erotema, Accentum quoque transfert; ut, Ter. Siccine ais Parmeno? Voss. Susenbr.”—Prat’s Latin Grammar, 8vo, Part II, p. 190.

Page 2228

[461] In regard to the admission of a comma before the verb, by the foregoing exception, neither the practice of authors nor the doctrine of punctuators is entirely uniform; but, where a considerable pause is, and must be, made in the reading, I judge it not only allowable, but necessary, to mark it in writing. In W. Day's "Punctuation Reduced to a System," a work of no inconsiderable merit, this principle is disallowed; and even when the adjunct of the nominative is a relative clause, which, by Rule 2d below and its first exception, requires a comma after it but none before it, this author excludes both, putting no comma before the principal verb. The following is an example: "But it frequently happens, that punctuation is not made a prominent exercise in schools; and the brief manner in which the subject is there dismissed has proved insufficient to impress upon the minds of youth a due sense of its importance."—Day's Punctuation, p. 32. A pupil of mine would here have put a comma after the word dismissed. So, in the following examples, after sake, and after dispenses: "The vanity that would accept power for its own sake is the pettiest of human passions."—Ib., p. 75. "The generous delight of beholding the happiness he dispenses is the highest enjoyment of man."—Ib., p. 100.

[462] When several nominatives are connected, some authors and printers put the comma only where the conjunction is omitted. W. Day separates them all, one from another; but after the last, when this is singular before a plural verb, he inserts no point. Example: "Imagination is one of the principal ingredients which enter into the complex idea of genius; but judgment, memory, understanding, enthusiasm, and sensibility are also included."—Day's Punctuation, p. 52. If the points are to be put where the pauses naturally occur, here should be a comma after sensibility; and, if I mistake not, it would be more consonant with current usage to set one there. John Wilson, however, in a later work, which is for the most part a very good one, prefers the doctrine of Day, as in the following instance: "Reputation, virtue, and happiness depend greatly on the choice of companions."—Wilson's Treatise on Punctuation, p. 30.

[463] Some printers, and likewise some authors, suppose a series of words to require the comma, only where the conjunction is suppressed. This is certainly a great error. It gives us such punctuation as comports neither with the sense of three or more words in the same construction, nor with the pauses which they require in reading. "John, James and Thomas are here," is a sentence which plainly tells John that James and Thomas are here; and which, if read according to this pointing, cannot possibly have any other meaning. Yet this is the way in which the rules of Cooper, Felton, Frost,

Page 2229

Webster, and perhaps others, teach us to point it, when we mean to tell somebody else that all three are here! In his pretended “Abridgment of Murray’s English Grammar,” (a work abounding in small thefts from Brown’s Institutes,) Cooper has the following example: “John, James or Joseph intends to accompany me.”—Page 120. Here, John being addressed, the punctuation is right; but, to make this noun a nominative to the verb, a comma must be put after each of the others. In Cooper’s “Plain and Practical Grammar,” the passage is found in this form: “John, James, or Joseph intends to accompany us.”—Page 132. This pointing is doubly wrong; because it is adapted to neither sense. If the three nouns have the same construction, the principal pause will be immediately before the verb; and surely a comma is as much required by that pause, as by the second. See the Note on Rule 3d, above.

[464] In punctuation, the grammar here cited is unaccountably defective. This is the more strange, because many of its errors are mere perversions of what was accurately pointed by an other hand. On the page above referred to, Dr. Bullions, in copying from Lennie’s syntactical exercises a dozen consecutive lines, has omitted nine needful commas, which Lennie had been careful to insert!

[465] Needless abbreviations, like most that occur in this example, are in bad taste, and ought to be avoided. The great faultiness of this text as a model for learners, compels me to vary the words considerably in suggesting the correction. See the Key.—G. B.

[466] “To be, or not to be?—that’s the question.”—Hallock’s Gram., p. 220. “To be, or not to be, that is the question.”—Singer’s Shak., ii. 488. “To be, or not to be; that is the Question.”—Ward’s Gram., p 160. “To be, or not to be, that is the Question.”—Brightland’s Gram., p 209. “To be, or not to be?”—Mandeville’s Course of Reading, p. 141. “To be or not to be! That is the question.”—Pinneo’s Gram., p. 176. “To be—or not to be—that is the question—”—Burgh’s Speaker, p. 179.

[467] In the works of some of our older poets, the apostrophe is sometimes irregularly inserted, and perhaps needlessly, to mark a prosodial synsaeresis, or synalepha, where no letter is cut off or left out; as,

“Retire, or taste thy folly’, and learn by proof, Hell-born, not to contend with spir’its of Heaven.”
—Milton, P. L., ii, 686.

In the following example, it seems to denote nothing more than the open or long sound of the preceding vowel e:

“That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour,
Even till a lethe’d dulness.”
—Singer’s Shakspeare, Vol. ii, p. 280.

Page 2230

[468] The breve is properly a mark of short quantity, only when it is set over an unaccented syllable or an unemphatic monosyllable, as it often is in the scanning of verses. In the examples above, it marks the close or short power of the vowels; but, under the accent, even this power may become part of a long syllable; as it does in the word raven, where the syllable rav, having twice the length of that which follows, must be reckoned long. In poetry, r=av-en and r=a-ven are both trochees, the former syllable in each being long, and the latter short.

[469] 1. The signs of long and short sounds, and especially of the former, have been singularly slow in acquiring appropriate names—or any appellatives suited to their nature, or such as could obtain the sanction of general use. The name breve, from the French breve, (which latter word came, doubtless, originally from the neuter of the Latin adjective brevis, short,) is now pretty generally applied to the one; and the Greek term macron, long, (also originally a neuter adjective,) is perhaps as common as any name for the other. But these are not quite so well adapted to each other, and to the things named, as are the substitutes added above.

2. These signs are explained in our grammars under various names, and often very unfit ones, to say the least; and, in many instances, their use is, in some way, awkwardly stated, without any attempt to name them, or more than one, if either. The Rev. T. Smith names them “Long (=), and Short (~).”—Smith’s Murray, p. 72. Churchill calls them “The long = and the short ~.”—New Gram., p. 170. Gould calls them “a horizontal line” and “a curved line.”—Gould’s Adam’s Gram., p. 3. Coar says, “Quantity is distinguished by the characters of — long, and ~ short.”—Eng. Gram., p. 197. But, in speaking of the signs, he calls them, “A long syllable =,” and “A short syllable ~.”—Gram., pp. 222 and 228. S. S. Greene calls them “the long sound,” and “the breve or short sound.”—Gram., p. 257. W. Allen says, “The long-syllable mark, (=) and the breve, or short-syllable mark, (~) denote the quantity of words poetically employed.”—Gram., p. 215. Some call them “the Long Accent,” and “the Short Accent,” as does Guy’s Gram., p. 95. This naming seems to confound accent with quantity. By some, the Macron is improperly called “a Dash,” as by Lennie, p. 137; by Bullions, p. 157; by Hiley, p. 123; by Butler, p. 215. Some call it “a small dash,” as does Well’s, p. 183; so Hiley, p. 117. By some it is absurdly named “Hyphen,” as by Buchanan, p. 162; by Alden, p. 165; by Chandler, 183; by Parker and Fox, iii, 36; by Jaudon, 193. Sanborn calls it “the hyphen, or macron.”—Analyt. Gr., p. 279. Many, who name it not, introduce it to their readers by a “this =,” or “thus ~;” as do Alger, Blair, Dr. Adam, Comly, Cooper, Ingersoll, L. Murray, Sanders, Wright, and others!

Page 2231

[470] “As soon as language proceeds, from mere articulation, to coherency, and connection, accent becomes the guide of the voice. It is founded upon an obscure perception of symmetry, and proportion, between the different sounds that are uttered.”—Noehden’s Grammar of the German Language, p. 66.

[471] According to Johnson, Walker, Webster, Worcester, and perhaps all other lexicographers, Quantity, in grammar, is—“The measure of time in pronouncing a syllable.” And, to this main idea, are conformed, so far as I know, all the different definitions ever given of it by grammarians and critics, except that which appeared in Asa Humphrey’s English Prosody, published in 1847. In this work—the most elaborate and the most comprehensive, though not the most accurate or consistent treatise we have on the subject—Time and Quantity are explained separately, as being “two distinct things,” and the latter is supposed not to have regard to duration, but solely to the amount of sound given to each syllable.

This is not only a fanciful distinction, but a radical innovation—and one which, in any view, has little to recommend it. The author’s explanations of both time and quantity—of their characteristics, differences, and subdivisions—of their relations to each other, to poetic numbers, to emphasis and cadence, or to accent and non-accent—as well as his derivation and history of “these technical terms, time and quantity”—are hardly just or clear enough to be satisfactory. According to his theory, “Poetic numbers are composed of long and short syllables alternately,” (page 5;) but the difference or proportion between the times of these classes of syllables he holds to be indeterminable, “because their lengths are various.” He began with destroying the proper distinction of quantity, or time, as being either long or short, by the useless recognition of an indefinite number of “intermediate lengths,” saying of our syllables at large, “some are LONG, some SHORT, and some are of INTERMEDIATE LENGTHS; as, mat, not, con, &c. are short sounds; mate, note, cone, and grave are long. Some of our diphthongal sounds are LONGER STILL; as, voice, noise, sound, bound, &c. OTHERS are seen to be of INTERMEDIATE lengths.”—Humphrey’s Prosody, p. 4.

On a scheme like this, it must evidently be impossible to determine, with any certainty, either what syllables are long and what short, or what is the difference or ratio between any two of the innumerable “lengths” of that time, or quantity, which is long, short, variously intermediate, or longer still, and again variously intermediate! No marvel then that the ingenious author scans some lines in a manner peculiar to himself.

Page 2232

[472] It was the doctrine of Sheridan, and perhaps of our old lexicographers in general, that no English word can have more than one full accent; but, in some modern dictionaries, as Bolles's, and Worcester's, many words are marked as if they had two; and a few are given by Bolles's as having three. Sheridan erroneously affirmed, that "every word has an accent," even "all monosyllables, the particles alone excepted."—Lecture on Elocution, pp. 61 and 71. And again, yet more erroneously: "The essence of English words consisting in accent, as that of syllables in articulation; we know that there are as many syllables as we hear articulate sounds, and as many words as we hear accents."—ib., p. 70. Yet he had said before, in the same lecture: "The longer polysyllables, have frequently two accents, but one is so much stronger than the other, as to shew that it is but one word; and the inferior accent is always less forcible, than any accent that is the single one in a word."—ib., p. 31. Wells defines accent as if it might lie on many syllables of a word; but, in his examples, he places it on no more than one: "Accent is the stress which is laid on one or more syllables of a word, in pronunciation; as, re_ver_berate, under_take_."—Wells's School Gram., p. 185. According to this loose definition, he might as well have accented at least one other syllable in each of these examples; for there seems, certainly, to be some little stress on ate and un. For sundry other definitions of accent, see Chap. IV, Section 2d, of Versification; and the marginal note referring to Obs. 1st on Prosody.

[473] According to Dr. Rush, Emphasis is—"a stress of voice on one or more words of a sentence, distinguishing them by intensity or peculiarity of meaning."—Philosophy of the Voice, p. 282. Again, he defines thus: "Accent is the fixed but inexpressive distinction of syllables by quantity and stress: alike both in place and nature, whether the words are pronounced singly from the columns of a vocabulary, or connectedly in the series of discourse. Emphasis may be defined to be the expressive but occasional distinction of a syllable, and consequently of the whole word, by one or more of the specific modes of time, quality, force, or pitch."—Ibid.

[474] 1. This doctrine, though true in its main intent, and especially applicable to the poetic quantity of monosyllables, (the class of words most frequently used in English poetry,) is, perhaps, rather too strongly stated by Murray; because it agrees not with other statements of his, concerning the power of accent over quantity; and because the effect of accent, as a "regulator of quantity," may, on the whole, be as great as that of emphasis. Sheridan contradicts himself yet more pointedly on this subject; and his discrepancies may have been the efficient of Murray's. "The quantity of our syllables is perpetually varying with the sense, and is for the most part regulated by EMPHASIS."—Sheridan's Rhetorical Gram., p. 65. Again: "It is by the ACCENT chiefly that the quantity of our syllables is regulated."—Sheridan's Lectures on Elocution, p. 57. See Chap. IV, Sec. 2d, Obs. 1; and marginal note on Obs. 8.

Page 2233

2. Some writers erroneously confound emphasis with accent; especially those who make accent, and not quantity, the foundation of verse. Contrary to common usage, and to his own definition of accent, Wells takes it upon him to say, "The term accent is also applied, in poetry, to the stress laid on monosyllabic words; as,

'Content is wealth, the riches of the mind.'—Dryden."
—Wells's School Grammar, p. 185.

It does not appear that stress laid on monosyllables is any more fitly termed accent, when it occurs in the reading of poetry, than when in the utterance of prose. Churchill, who makes no such distinction, thinks accent essential alike to emphasis and to the quantity of a long vowel, and yet, as regards monosyllables, dependent on them both! His words are these: "Monosyllables are sometimes accented, sometimes not. This depends chiefly on their being more or less emphatic; and on the vowel sound being long or short. We cannot give emphasis to any word, or it's [its] proper duration to a long vowel, without accenting it."—Churchill's New Gram., p. 182.

[475] Not only are these inflections denoted occasionally by the accentual marks, but they are sometimes expressly identified with accents, being called by that name. This practice, however, is plainly objectionable. It confounds things known to be different,—mere stress with elevation or depression,—and may lead to the supposition, that to accent a syllable, is to inflect the voice upon it. Such indeed has been the guess of many concerning the nature of Greek and Latin accents, but of the English accent, the common idea is, that it is only a greater force distinguishing some one syllable of a word from the rest. Walker, however, in the strange account he gives in his Key, of "what we mean by the accent and quantity of our own language," charges this current opinion with error, dissenting from Sheridan and Nares, who held it; and, having asserted, that, "in speaking, the voice is continually sliding upwards or downwards," proceeds to contradict himself thus: "As high and low, loud and soft, forcible and feeble, are comparative terms, words of one syllable pronounced alone, and without relation to other words or syllables, cannot be said to have any ACCENT. The only distinction to which such words are liable, is an elevation or depression of voice, when we compare the beginning with the end of the word or syllable. Thus a monosyllable, considered singly, rises from a lower to a higher tone in the question No? which may therefore be called the acute ACCENT: and falls from a higher to a lower tone upon the same word in the answer No, which may therefore be called the grave [ACCENT].”—Walker’s Key, p. 316. Thus he tells of different accents on “a monosyllable,” which, by his own showing, “cannot be said to have any accent”! and others read and copy the text with as little suspicion of its inconsistency! See Worcester’s Universal and Critical Dictionary, p. 934.

Page 2234

[476] In Humphrey’s English Prosody, cadence is taken for the reverse of accent, and is obviously identified or confounded with short quantity, or what the author inclines to call “small quantity.” He defines it as follows: “Cadence is the reverse or counterpart to accent; a falling or depression of voice on syllables unaccented: and by which the sound is shortened and depressed.”—P. 3. This is not exactly what is generally understood by the word cadence. Lord Kames also contrasts cadence with accent; but, by the latter term, he seems to have meant something different from our ordinary accent. “Sometimes to humour the sense,” says he, “and sometimes the melody, a particular syllable is sounded in a higher tone; and this is termed accenting a syllable, or gracing it with an accent. Opposed to the accent, is the cadence, which I have not mentioned as one of the requisites of verse, because it is entirely regulated by the sense, and hath no peculiar relation to verse.”—Elements of Criticism, Vol. ii, p. 78.

[477] The Latin term, (made plural to agree with verba, words,) is subaudita, underheard—the perfect participle of subaudio, to underhear. Hence the noun, subauditio, subaudition, the recognition of ellipses.

[478] “Thus, in the Proverbs of all Languages, many Words are usually left to be supplied from the trite obvious Nature of what they express; as, out of Sight out of Mind; the more the merrier, &c.”—W. Ward’s Pract. Gram., p. 147.

[479] Lindley Murray and some others say, “As the ellipsis occurs in almost every sentence in the English language, numerous examples of it might be given.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 220; Weld’s, 292; Fisk’s, 147. They could, without doubt, have exhibited many true specimens of Ellipsis; but most of those which they have given, are only fanciful and false ones; and their notion of the frequency of the figure, is monstrously hyperbolical.

Page 2235

[480] Who besides Webster has called syllepsis "substitution," I do not know. Substitution and conception are terms of quite different import, and many authors have explained syllepsis by the latter word. Dr. Webster gives to "SUBSTITUTION" two meanings, thus: "1. The act of putting one person or thing in the place of another to supply [his or] its place.—2. In grammar, syllepsis, or the use of one word for another."—American Dict., 8vo. This explanation seems to me inaccurate; because it confounds both substitution and syllepsis with enallage. It has signs of carelessness throughout; the former sentence being both tautological and ungrammatical.—G. B.

[481] Between Tropes and Figures, some writers attempt a full distinction; but this, if practicable, is of little use. According to Holmes, "TROPES affect only single Words; but FIGURES, whole Sentences."—Rhetoric, B. i, p. 28. "The CHIEF TROPES in Language," says this author, "are seven; a Metaphor, an Allegory, a Metonymy, a Synecdoche, an Irony, an Hyperbole, and a Catachresis."—Ib., p. 30. The term Figure or Figures is more comprehensive than Trope or Tropes; I have therefore not thought it expedient to make much use of the latter, in either the singular or the plural form. Holmes's seven tropes are all of them defined in the main text of this section, except Catachresis, which is commonly explained to be "an abuse of a trope." According to this sense, it seems in general to differ but little from impropriety. At best, a Catachresis is a forced expression, though sometimes, perhaps, to be indulged where there is great excitement. It is a sort of figure by which a word is used in a sense different from, yet connected with, or analogous to, its own; as,

"And pity, like a naked new-born babe, Striding the blast, as heaven's cherubim Hors'd upon the sightless couriers of the air, Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye, That tears shall drown the wind."—Shak., Macbeth, Act i, Sc. 7.

[482] Holmes, in his Art of Rhetoric, writes this word "Paraleipsis" retaining the Greek orthography. So does Fowler in his recent "English Grammar," Sec. 646. Webster, Adam, and some others, write it "Paralepsis." I write it as above on the authority of Littleton, Ainsworth, and some others; and this is according to the analogy of the kindred word ellipsis, which we never write either ellepsis, or, as the Greek, elleipsis.

[483] To this principle there seems to be now and then an exception, as when a weak dissyllable begins a foot in an anapestic line, as in the following examples:—

"I think—let me see—yes, it is, I declare,
As long ago now as that Buckingham there."—Leigh Hunt.

Page 2236

"And Thomson, though best in his indolent fits, Either slept himself weary, or blasted his wits."—Id.

Here, if we reckon the feet in question to be anapests, we have dissyllables with both parts short. But some, accenting "ago" on the latter syllable, and "Either" on the former, will call "ago now" a bacchy, and "Either slept" an amphimac: because they make them such by their manner of reading.—G. B.

[484] "Edgar A. Poe, the author, died at Baltimore on Sunday" [the 7th].—Daily Evening Traveller, Boston Oct. 9, 1849. This was eight or ten months after the writing of these observations.—G. B.

[485] "Versification is the art of arranging words into lines of correspondent length, so as to produce harmony by the regular alternation of syllables differing in quantity"—Brown's Institutes of E. Gram., p. 235.

[486] This appears to be an error; for, according to Dilworth, and other arithmeticians, "a unit is a number;" and so is it expounded by Johnson, Walker, Webster, and Worcester. See, in the Introduction, a note at the foot of p. 117. Mulligan, however, contends still, that one is no number; and that, "to talk of the singular number is absurd—a contradiction in terms;"—because, "in common discourse," a "number" is "always a plurality, except"—when it is "number one!"—See Grammatical Structure of the E. Language, Sec.33. Some prosodists have taught the absurdity, that two feet are necessary to constitute a metre, and have accordingly applied the terms, monometer, dimeter, trimeter, tetrameter, pentameter, and hexameter,—or so many of them as they could so misapply,—in a sense very different from the usual acceptance. The proper principle is, that, "One foot constitutes a metre."—Dr. P. Wilson's Greek Prosody, p. 53. And verses are to be denominated Monometer, Dimeter, Trimeter, &c., according to "THE NUMBER OF FEET."—See ib. p. 6. But Worcester's Universal and Critical Dictionary has the following not very consistent explanations: "MONOMETER, n. One metre. Beck. DIMETER, n. A poetic measure of four feet; a series of two meters. Beck. TRIMETER, a. Consisting of three poetical measures, forming an iambic of six feet. Tyrwhitt. TETRAMETER, n. A Latin or Greek verse consisting of four feet; a series of four metres. TETRAMETER, a. Having four metrical feet. Tyrwhitt. PENTAMETER, n. A Greek or Latin verse of five feet; a series of five metres. PENTAMETER, a. Having five metrical feet. Warton. HEXAMETER, n. A verse or line of poetry, having six feet, either dactyls or spondees; the heroic, and most important, verse among the Greeks and Romans;—a rhythmical series of six metres. HEXAMETER, a. Having six metrical feet. Dr. Warton." According to these definitions, Dimeter has as many feet as Tetrameter; and Trimeter has as many as Hexameter!

Page 2237

[487] It is common, at any rate, for prosodists to speak of “the movement of the voice,” as do Sheridan, Murray, Humphrey, and Everett; but Kames, in treating of the Beauty of Language from Resemblance, says “There is no resemblance of sound to motion, nor of sound to sentiment.”—Elements of Criticism, Vol. ii, p. 63. This usage, however, is admitted by the critic, had cited to show how, “causes that have no resemblance may produce resembling effects.”—Ib. 64. “By a number of syllables in succession, an emotion is sometimes raised extremely similar to that raised by successive motion: which may be evident even to those who are defective in taste, from the following fact, that the term movement in all languages is equally applied to both.”—Ib. ii. 66.

[488] “From what has been said of accent and quantity in our own language, we may conclude them to be essentially distinct and perfectly separable: nor is it to be doubted that they were equally separable in the learned languages.”—Walkers’s Observations on Gr. and Lat. Accent and Quantity, Sec.20; Key, p. 326. In the speculative essay here cited, Walker meant by accent the rising or the falling inflection,—an upward or a downward slide of the voice: and by quantity, nothing but the open or close sound of some vowel; as of “the a in scatter” and in “skater,” the initial syllables of which words be supposed to differ in quantity as much as any two syllables can!—Ib., Sec.24; Key, p. 331. With these views of the things, it is perhaps the less to be wondered at, that Walker, who appears to have been a candid and courteous writer, charges “that excellent scholar Mr. Forster—with a total ignorance of the accent and quantity of his own language,” (Ib., Note on Sec.8; Key, p. 317;) and, in regard to accent, ancient or modern, elsewhere confesses his own ignorance, and that of every body else, to be as “total.” See marginal note on Obs. 4th below.

[489] (1.) “We shall now take a view of sounds when united into syllables. Here a beautiful variation of quantity presents itself as the next object of our attention. The knowledge of long and short syllables, is the most excellent and most neglected quality in the whole art of pronunciation.

The disputes of our modern writers on this subject, have arisen chiefly from an absurd notion that has long prevailed; viz. that there is no difference between the accent and the quantity, in the English language; that the accented syllables are always long, and the unaccented always short.

An absurdity so glaring, does not need refutation. Pronounce any one line from Milton, and the ear will determine whether or not the accent and quantity always coincide. Very seldom they do.”—HERRIES: Bicknell’s Gram., Part ii, p. 108.

Page 2238

(2.) “Some of our Moderns (especially Mr. Bishe, in his Art of Poetry) and lately Mr. Mattaire, in what he calls, The English Grammar, erroneously use Accent for Quantity, one signifying the Length or Shortness of a Syllable, the other the raising or falling of the Voice in Discourse.”—Brightland’s Gram., London, 1746, p. 156.

(3.) “Tempus cum accentu a nonnullis male confunditur; quasi idem sit acui et produci. Cum brevis autem syllaba acuitur, elevatur quidem vox in ea proferenda, sed tempus non augetur. Sic in voce hominibus acuitur mi; at ni quae sequitur, aequam in efferendo moram postulat.”—Lily’s Gram., p. 125. Version: “By some persons, time is improperly confounded with accent; as if to acute and to lengthen were the same. But when a short syllable is acuted, the voice indeed is raised in pronouncing it, but the time is not increased. Thus, in the word hominibus, mi as the acute accent; but ni, which follows, demands equal slowness in the pronunciation.” To English ears, this can hardly seem a correct representation; for, in pronouncing hominibus, it is not mi, but min, that we accent; and this syllable is manifestly as much longer than the rest, as it is louder.

[490] (1.) “Syllables, with respect to their quantity, are either long, short, or common.”—Gould’s Adam’s Lat. Gram., p. 243. “Some syllables are common; that is, sometimes long, and sometimes short.”—Adam’s Lat. and Eng. Gram., p. 252. Common is here put for variable, or not permanently settled in respect to quantity: in this sense, from which no third species ought to be inferred, our language is, perhaps, more extensively “common” than any other.

(2.) “Most of our Monosyllables either take this Stress or not, according as they are more or less emphatical; and therefore English Words of one Syllable may be considered as common; i.e. either as long or short in certain Situations. These Situations are chiefly determined by the Pause, or Cesure, of the Verse, and this Pause by the Sense. And as the English abounds in Monosyllables, there is probably no Language in which the Quantity of Syllables is more regulated by the Sense than in English.”—W. Ward’s Gram., Ed. of 1765, p. 156.

(3.) Bicknell’s theory of quantity, for which he refers to Herries, is this: “The English quantity is divided into long, short, and common. The longest species of syllables are those that end in a vowel, and are under the accent; as, mo in har_mo_nious, sole in con_sole_, &c. When a monosyllable, which is unemphatic, ends in a vowel, it is always short; but when the emphasis is placed upon it, it is always long. Short syllables are such as end in any of the six mutes; as cu_t_, sto_p_, ra_p_i_d_, ru_g_ge_d_, lo_ck_.

Page 2239

In all such syllables the sound cannot be lengthened: they are necessarily and invariably short. If another consonant intervenes between the vowel and mute, as re_nd_, so_ft_, fla_sk_, the syllable is rendered somewhat longer. The other species of syllables called common, are such as terminate in a half-vowel or aspirate. For instance, in the words ru_n_, swi_m_, cru_sh_, pu_rl_, the concluding sound can be continued or shortened, as we please. This scheme of quantity," it is added, "is founded on fact and experience."—Bicknell's Gram., Part ii, p. 109. But is it not a fact, that such words as cuttest, stopping, rapid, rugged, are trochees, in verse? and is not unlock an iambus? And what becomes of syllables that end with vowels or liquids and are not accented?

[491] I do not say the mere absence of stress is never called accent; for it is, plainly, the doctrine of some authors that the English accent differs not at all in its nature from the accent of the ancient Greeks or Romans, which was distinguished as being of three sorts, acute, grave, inflex; that "the stronger breathing, or higher sound," which distinguishes one syllable of a word from or above the rest, is the acute accent only; that "the softer breathing, or lower sound," which belongs to an unacuted (or unaccented) syllable, is the grave accent; and that a combination of these two sounds, or "breathings," upon one syllable, constitutes the inflex or circumflex accent. Such, I think, is the teaching of Rev. William Barnes; who further says, "English verse is constructed upon sundry orders of acute and grave accents and matchings of rhymes, while the poetic language of the Romans and Greeks is formed upon rules of the sundry clusterings of long and short syllables."—Philological Grammar, p. 263. This scheme is not wholly consistent, because the author explains accent or accents as being applicable only to "words of two or more syllables;" and it is plain, that the accent which includes the three sorts above, must needs be "some other thing than what we call accent," if this includes only the acute.

[492] Sheridan used the same comparison, "To illustrate the difference between the accent of the ancients and that of ours" [our tongue]. Our accent he supposed, with Nares and others, to have "no reference to inflections of the voice."—See Art of Reading, p. 75; Lectures on Elocution, p. 56; Walker's Key, p. 313.

[493] (1.) It may in some measure account for these remarkable omissions, to observe that Walker, in his lexicography, followed Johnson in almost every thing but pronunciation. On this latter subject, his own authority is perhaps as great as that of any single author. And here I am led to introduce a remark or two touching the accent and quantity with which he was chiefly concerned; though the suggestions may have no immediate connexion with the error of confounding these properties.

Page 2240

(2.) Walker, in his theory, regarded the inflections of the voice as pertaining to accent, and as affording a satisfactory solution of the difficulties in which this subject has been involved; but, as an English orthoepist, he treats of accent in no other sense, than as stress laid on a particular syllable of a word—a sense implying contrast, and necessarily dividing all syllables into accented and unaccented, except monosyllables. Having acknowledged our “total ignorance of the nature of the Latin and Greek accent,” he adds: “The accent of the English language, which is constantly sounding in our ears, and every moment open to investigation, seems as much a mystery as that accent which is removed almost two thousand years from our view. Obscurity, perplexity, and confusion, run through every treatise on the subject, and nothing could be so hopeless as an attempt to explain it, did not a circumstance present itself, which at once accounts for the confusion, and affords a clew to lead us out of it. Not one writer on accent has given such a definition of the voice as acquaints us with its essential properties. * * * But let us once divide the voice into its rising and falling inflections, the obscurity vanishes, and accent becomes as intelligible as any other part of language. * * * On the present occasion it will be sufficient to observe, that the stress we call accent is as well understood as is necessary for the pronunciation of single words, which is the object of this treatise.”—Walker’s Dict., p. 53, Princip. 486, 487, 488.

(3.) Afterwards, on introducing quantity, as an orthoepical topic, he has the following remark: “In treating this part of pronunciation, it will not be necessary to enter into the nature of that quantity which constitutes poetry; the quantity here considered will be that which relates to words taken singly; and this is nothing more than the length or shortness of the vowels, either as they stand alone, or as they are differently combined with the vowels or consonants.” Ib., p. 62, Princip. 529. Here is suggested a distinction which has not been so well observed by grammarians and prosodists, or even by Walker himself, as it ought to have been. So long as the practice continues of denominating certain mere vowel sounds the long and the short, it will be very necessary to notice that these are not the same as the syllabic quantities, long and short, which constitute English verse.

[494] (1.) In the Latin and Greek languages, this is not commonly supposed to be the case; but, on the contrary, the quantity of syllables is professedly adjusted by its own rules independently of what we call accent; and, in our English pronunciation of these languages, the accentuation of all long words is regulated by the quantity of the last syllable but one. Walker, in the introduction to his Key, speaks of “The English pronunciation of Greek and Latin [as] injurious to quantity.” And no one can deny, that we often accent what are called short syllables, and perhaps oftener leave unaccented such as are called long; but, after all, were the quantity of Latin and Greek syllables always judged of by their actual time, and not with reference to the vowel sounds called long and short, these our violations of the old quantities would be found much fewer than some suppose they are.

Page 2241

(2.) Dr. Adam’s view of the accents, acute and grave, appears to be peculiar; and of a nature which may perhaps come nearer to an actual identity with the quantities, long and short, than any other. He says,

“1. The acute or sharp accent raises the voice in pronunciation, and is thus marked [ˊ]; profero, profer. [The English word is written, not thus, but with two Effs, proffer.—G. B.]

“2. The grave or base accent depresses the voice, or keeps it in its natural tone; and is thus marked [ˋ]; as, docte. [Fist] This accent properly belongs to all syllables which have no other.

“The accents are hardly ever marked in English books, except in dictionaries, grammars, spelling-books, or the like, where the acute accent only is used. The accents are likewise seldom marked in Latin books, unless for the sake of distinction; as in these adverbs, aliquo, continuo, docte, una, &c.”—Adam’s Latin and English Grammar, p. 266.

(3.) As stress naturally lengthens the syllables on which it falls, if we suppose the grave accent to be the opposite of this, and to belong to all syllables which have no peculiar stress,—are not enforced, not acuted, not circumflected, not emphasized; then shall we truly have an accent with which our short quantity may fairly coincide. But I have said, “the mere absence of stress, which produces short quantity, we do not call accent,” and it may be observed, that the learned improver of Dr. Adam’s Grammar, B. A. Gould, has totally rejected all that his predecessor taught concerning accent, and has given an entirely different definition of the thing. See marginal notes on page 771, above. Dr. Johnson also cites from Holder a very different explanation of it, as follows: “Accent, as in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tune of the voice; the acute accent, raising the voice in some certain syllables, to a higher, (i.e. more acute) pitch or tone; and the grave, depressing it lower; [Fist] and both having some emphasis, i.e. more vigorous pronunciation. HOLDER.”—Johnson’s Quarto Dict., w. Accent.

[495] (1.) “Amongst them [the ancients,] we know that accents were marked by certain inflexions [inflections] of the voice like musical notes; and the grammarians to this day, with great formality inform their pupils, that the acute accent, is the raising [of] the voice on a certain syllable; the grave, a depression of it; and the circumflex, a raising and depression both, in one and the same syllable. This jargon they constantly preserve, though they have no sort of ideas annexed to these words; for if they are asked to shew how this is to be done, they cannot tell, and their practice always belies their precept.—Sheridan's Lectures on Eloc., p. 54.

Page 2242

(2.) “It is by the accent chiefly that the quantity of our syllables is regulated; but not according to the mistaken rule laid down by all who have written on the subject, that the accent always makes the syllable long; than which there cannot be any thing more false.”—lb., p. 57.

(3.) “And here I cannot help taking notice of a circumstance, which shews in the strongest light, the amazing deficiency of those, who have hitherto employed their labours on that subject, [accent, or pronunciation,] in point of knowledge of the true genius and constitution of our tongue. Several of the compilers of dictionaries, vocabularies, and spelling books, have undertaken to mark the accents of our words; but so little acquainted were they with the nature of our accent, that they thought it necessary only to mark the syllable on which the stress is to be laid, without marking the particular letter of the syllable to which the accent belongs.”—lb., p. 59.

(4.) “The mind thus taking a bias under the prejudice of false rules, never arrives at a knowledge of the true nature of quantity; and accordingly we find that all attempts hitherto to settle the prosody of our language, have been vain and fruitless.”—Sheridan’s Rhetorical Gram., p. 52.

[496] In the following extract, this matter is stated somewhat differently: “The quantity depends upon the seat of the accent, whether it be on the vowel or [on the] consonant; if on the vowel, the syllable is necessarily long: as it makes the vowel long; if on the consonant, it may be either long or short, according to the nature of the consonant, or the time taken up in dwelling upon it.”—Sheridan’s Lectures on Eloc., p. 57. This last clause shows the “distinction” to be a very weak one.—G. BROWN.

[497] “If the consonant be in its nature a short one, the syllable is necessarily short. If it be a long one, that is, one whose sound is capable of being lengthened, it may be long or short at the will of the speaker. By a short consonant I mean one whose sound cannot be continued after a vowel, such as c or k p t, as ac, ap, at—whilst that of long consonants can, as, el em en er ev, &c.”—Sheridan’s Lectures on Elocution, p. 58. Sheridan here forgets that “bor’row” is one of his examples of short quantity.

Murray admits that “accent on a semi-vowel” may make the syllable long; and his semivowels are these: “f, l, m, n, r, v, s, z, x, and c and g soft.” See his Octavo Gram., p. 240 and p. 8.

[498] On account of the different uses made of the breve, the macron, and the accents, one grammarian has proposed a new mode of marking poetic quantities. Something of the kind might be useful; but there seems to be a reversal of order in this scheme, the macrotone being here made light, and the stenotone dark and heavy. “Long and short syllables have sometimes been designated by the same marks which are used for accent, tones, and the quality of the vowels; but it will be better[,] to prevent confusion[,] to use different marks. This mark may represent a long syllable, and this . a short syllable; as,

Page 2243

. . deg. . . deg. . . deg. . . deg.

‘At the close of the day when the hamlet is still.’”

—Perley’s Gram., p. 73.

[no . over ‘let’, sic—KTH]

[499] Dr. Adam’s Gram., p. 267; B. A. Gould’s, 257. The Latin word caesura signifies “a cutting, or division.” This name is sometimes Anglicized, and written “Cesure.” See Brightland’s Gram., p. 161; or Worcester’s Dict., w. Cesure.

[500] “As to the long quantity arising from the succession of two consonants, which the ancients are uniform in asserting, if it did not mean that the preceding vowel was to lengthen its sound, as we should do by pronouncing the a in scatter as we do in skater, (one who skates,) I have no conception of what it meant; for if it meant that only the time of the syllable was prolonged, the vowel retaining the same sound, I must confess as ut er [sic—KTH] an inability of comprehending this source of quantity in the Greek and Latin as in English.”—Walker on Gr. and L. Accent, Sec.24; Key, p. 331. This distinguished author seems unwilling to admit, that the consonants occupy time in their utterance, or that other vowel sounds than those which name the vowels, can be protracted and become long; but these are truths, nevertheless; and, since every letter adds something to the syllable in which it is uttered, it is by consequence a “source of quantity,” whether the syllable be long or short.

[501] Murray has here a marginal note, as follows: “Movement and measure are thus distinguished. Movement expresses the progressive order of sounds, whether from strong to weak, from long to short, or vice versa. Measure signifies the proportion of time, both in sounds and pauses.”—Octavo Gram., p. 259. This distinction is neither usual nor accurate; though Humphrey adopts it, with slight variations. Without some species of measure,—iambic, Trochaic, Anapestic, Dactylic, or some other,—there can be no regular movement, no “progressive order of sounds.” Measure is therefore too essential to movement to be in contrast with it. And the movement “from strong to weak, from long to short,” is but one and the same, a trochaic movement; its reverse, the movement, “vice versa,” from weak to strong, or from short to long, is, of course, that of iambic measure. But Murray’s doctrine is, that strong and long, weak and short, may be separated; that strong may be short, and weak be long; so that the movement from weak to strong may be from long to short, and vice versa: as if a trochaic movement might arise from iambic measure, and an iambic movement from trochaic feet! This absurdity comes of attempting to regulate the movement of verse by accent, and not by quantity, while it is admitted that quantity, and not accent, forms the measure, which “signifies the proportion of time.” The idea that pauses belong to measure, is an other radical error of the foregoing note. There are more pauses in poetry than in prose, but none of them are properly “parts” of either. Humphrey says truly, “Feet are the constituent parts of verse.”—English Prosody, p. 8. But L. Murray says, “Feet and pauses are the constituent parts of verse.”—Octavo Gram., p. 252. Here Sheridan gave bias. Intending to treat of verse, and “the pauses peculiarly belonging to it,” the “Caesural” pause and the “Final,” the rhetorician had improperly said, “The constituent parts of verse are, feet, and pauses.”—Sheridan’s Rhetorical Gram., p. 64.

Page 2244

[502] “But as many Ways as Quantities may be varied by Composition and Transposition, so many different Feet have the Greek Poets contriv’d, and that under distinct Names, from two to six Syllables, to the Number of 124. But it is the Opinion of some Learned Men in this Way, that Poetic Numbers may be sufficiently explain’d by those of two or three Syllables, into which the rest are to be resolv’d.”—Brightland’s Grammar, 7th Ed., p. 161.

[503] “THE BELLS OF ST. PETERSBURGH.”

“Those ev’ning bells, those ev’ning bells,
How many a tale their music tells!”—Moore’s Melodies, p. 263.

This couplet, like all the rest of the piece from which it is taken, is iambic verse, and to be divided into feet thus:—

“Those ev’ | -ning bells, | those ev’ | -ning bells,
How man | -y a tale | their mu | -sic tells!”

[504] Lord Kames, too, speaking of “English Heroic verse,” says: “Every line consists of ten syllables, five short and five long; from which [rule] there are but two exceptions, both of them rare.”—Elements of Criticism, Vol. ii, p. 89.

[505] “The Latin is a far more stately tongue than our own. It is essentially spondaic; the English is as essentially dactylic. The long syllable is the spirit of the Roman (and Greek) verse; the short syllable is the essence of ours.”—Poe’s Notes upon English Verse; Pioneer, Vol. i, p. 110. “We must search for spondaic words, which, in English, are rare indeed.”—Ib., p. 111.

[506] “There is a rule, in Latin prosody, that a vowel before two consonants is long. We moderns have not only no such rule, but profess inability to comprehend its rationale.”—Poe’s Notes: Pioneer, p. 112.

[507] The opponents of capital punishment will hardly take this for a fair version of the sixth commandment.—G. B.

[508] These versicles, except the two which are Italicized, are not iambic. The others are partly trochaic; and, according to many of our prosodists, wholly so; but it is questionable whether they are not as properly amphimacric, or Cretic.

Page 2245

[509] See exercises in Punctuation, on page 786, of this work.—G. B.

[510] The Seventieth Psalm is the same as the last five verses of the Fortieth, except a few unimportant differences of words or points.

[511] It is obvious, that these two lines may easily be reduced to an agreeable stanza, by simply dividing each after the fourth foot—G. B.

[512] In Sanborn's Analytical Grammar, on page 279th, this couplet is ascribed to "Pope;" but I have sought in vain for this quotation, or any example of similar verse, in the works of that poet. The lines, one or both of them, appear, without reference, in L. Murray's Grammar, Second Edition, 1796, p. 176, and in subsequent editions; in W. Allen's, p. 225; Bullions's, 178; N. Butler's, 192; Chandler's New, 196; Clark's, 201; Churchill's, 187; Cooper's Practical, 185; Davis's, 137; Farnum's, 106; Felton's, 142; Frazee's, 184; Frost's, 164; S. S. Greene's, 250; Hallock's, 244; Hart's, 187; Hiley's, 127; Humphrey's Prosody, 17; Parker and Fox's Gram., Part iii, p. 60; Weld's, 211; Ditto Abridged, 138; Wells's, 200; Fowler's, 658; and doubtless in many other such books.

[513] "Owen succeeded his father Griffin in the principality of North Wales, A. D. 1120. This battle was fought near forty years afterwards. North Wales is called, in the fourth line, 'Gwyneth;' and 'Lochlin,' in the fourteenth, is Denmark."—Gray. Some say "Lochlin," in the Annals of Ulster, means Norway.—G. B.

[514] "The red dragon is the device of Cadwallader, which all his descendants bore on their banners."—Gray.

[515] This passage, or some part of it, is given as a trochaic example, in many different systems of prosody. Everett ascribes it entire to "John Chalkhill;" and Nutting, more than twenty years before, had attached the name of "Chalkhill" to a part of it. But the six lines "of three syllables," Dr. Johnson, in his Grammar, credits to "Walton's Angler;" and Bicknell, too, ascribes the same to "Walton." The readings also have become various. Johnson, Bicknell, Burn, Churchill, and Nutting, have "Here" for "Where" in the fifth line above; and Bicknell and Burn have "Stop" in the eighth line, where the rest read "Stops." Nutting has, for the ninth line, "Others' joys," and not, "Other joys," as have the rest.—G. B.

[516] OBS.—Of this, and of every other example which requires no amendment, let the learner simply say, after reading the passage, "This sentence is correct as it stands."—G. BROWN.

Page 2246

[517] OBSERVATION.—In the Bible, the word LORD, whenever it stands for the Hebrew name JEHOVAH, not only commences with a full capital, but has small or half capitals for the other letters; and I have thought proper to print both words in that manner here. In correcting the last example, I follow Dr. Scott's Bible, except in the word "God," which he writes with a small g. Several other copies have "first" and "last" with small initials, which I think not so correct; and some distinguish the word "hosts" with a capital, which seems to be needless. The sentence here has eleven capitals: in the Latin Vulgate, it has but six, and one of them is for the last word, "Deus," God.—G. B.

[518] OBS.—This construction I dislike. Without hyphens, it is improper; and with them it is not to be commended. See Syntax, Obs 24th on Rule IV.—G. B.

[519] On the page here referred to, the author of the Gazetteer has written "Charles city," &c. Analogy requires that the words be compounded, because they constitute three names which are applied to counties, and not to cities.

[520] OBS.—The following words, as names of towns, come under Rule 6th, and are commonly found correctly compounded in the books of Scotch geography and statistics; "Strathaven, Stonehaven, Strathdon, Glenluce, Greenlaw, Coldstream, Lochwinnoch, Lochcarron, Loehmaber, Prestonpans, Prestonkirk, Peterhead, Queensferry, Newmills," and many more like them.

[521] Section OBS.—This name, in both the Vulgate and the Septuagint, is Pharao Nechao, with two capitals and no hyphen. Walker gives the two words separately in his Key, and spells the latter Necho, and not Nechoh. See the same orthography in Jer., xlvi, 2. In our common Bibles, many such names are needlessly, if not improperly, compounded; sometimes with one capital, and sometimes with two. The proper manner of writing Scripture names, is too little regarded even by good men and biblical critics.

[522] "[Marcus] Terentius Varro, vir Romanorum eruditissimus."—QUINTILIAN. Lib. x, Cap. 1, p. 577.

[523] NOTE.—By this amendment, we remove a multitude of errors, but the passage is still very faulty. What Murray here calls "phrases," are properly sentences; and, in his second clause, he deserts the terms of the first to bring in "my," "our," and also "&c.," which seem to be out of place there.—G. BROWN.

[524] An other is a phrase of two words, which ought to be written separately. The transferring of the n to the latter word, is a gross vulgarism. Separate the words, and it will be avoided.

[525] Mys-ter-y, according to Scott and Cobb; mys-te-ry, according to Walker and Worcester.

[526] Kirkham borrowed this doctrine of “Tonics, Subtonics, and Atonies,” from Rush: and dressed it up in his own worse bombast. See Obs. 13 and 14, on the Powers of the Letters.—GB.

Page 2247

[527] There is, in most English dictionaries, a contracted form of this phrase, written prithe, or I prithe; but Dr. Johnson censures it as “a familiar corruption, which some writers have injudiciously used;” and, as the abbreviation amounted to nothing but the slurring of one vowel sound into an other, it has now, I think, very deservedly become obsolete.—G. BROWN.

[528] This is the doctrine of Murray, and his hundred copyists; but it is by no means generally true. It is true of adverbs, only when they are connected by conjunctions; and seldom applies to two words, unless the conjunction which may be said to connect them, be suppressed and understood.—G. BROWN.

[529] Example: “Imperfect articulation comes not so much from bad organs, as from the abuse of good ones.”—Porter’s Analysis. Here ones represents organs, and prevents unpleasant repetition.—G. BROWN.

[530] From the force of habit, or to prevent the possibility of a false pronunciation, these ocular contractions are still sometimes carefully made in printing poetry; but they are not very important, and some modern authors, or their printers, disregard them altogether. In correcting short poetical examples, I shall in general take no particular pains to distinguish them from prose. All needful contractions however will be preserved, and sometimes also a capital letter, to show where the author commenced a line.

[531] The word “imperfect” is not really necessary here; for the declaration is true of any phrase, as this name is commonly applied.—G. BROWN.

[532] A part of speech is a sort of words, and not one word only. We cannot say, that every pronoun, or every verb, is a part of speech, because the parts of speech are only ten. But every pronoun, verb, or other word, is a word; and, if we will refer to this genus, there is no difficulty in defining all the parts of speech in the singular, with an or a: as, “A pronoun is a word put for a noun.” Murray and others say, “An Adverb is a part of speech,” &c., “A Conjunction is a part of speech,” &c., which is the same as to say, “One adverb is a sort of words,” &c. This is a palpable absurdity.—G. BROWN.

[533] The propriety of this conjunction, “nor,” is somewhat questionable: the reading in both the Vulgate and the Septuagint is—“they, and their wives, and their sons, and their daughters.”

[534] All our lexicographers, and all accurate authors, spell this word with an o; but the gentleman who has furnished us with the last set of new terms for the science of grammar, writes it with an e, and applies it to the verb and the participle. With him, every verb or participle is an “asserter,” except when he forgets his creed, as he did in writing the preceding example about certain “verbs.” As he changes the names of all the parts of speech, and denounces the entire technology of grammar, perhaps his innovation would have been sufficiently broad, had he for THE VERB, the most important class of all, adopted some name which he knew how to spell.—G. B.

Page 2248

[535] It would be better to omit the word "forth," or else to say—"whom I brought forth from the land of Egypt." The phrase, "forth out of," is neither a very common nor a very terse one.—G. BROWN.

[536] This doctrine, that participles divide and specify time, I have elsewhere shown to be erroneous.—G. BROWN.

[537] Perhaps it would be as well or better, in correcting these two examples, to say, "There are a generation." But the article a, as well as the literal form of the noun, is a sign of unity; and a complete uniformity of numbers is not here practicable.

[538] Though the pronoun thou is not much used in common discourse, it is as proper for the grammarian to consider and show, what form of the verb belongs to it when it is so used, as it is for him to determine what form is adapted to any other pronoun, when a difference of style affects the question.

[539] "Forgavest," as the reading is in our common Bible, appears to be wrong; because the relative that and its antecedent God are of the third person, and not of the second.

[540] All the corrections under this head are directly contrary to the teaching of William S. Cardell. Oliver B. Peirce, and perhaps some other such writers on grammar; and some of them are contrary also to Murray's late editions. But I am confident that these authors teach erroneously; that their use of indicative forms for mere suppositions that are contrary to the facts, is positively ungrammatical; and that the potential imperfect is less elegant, in such instances, than the simple subjunctive, which they reject or distort.

[541] This is what Smith must have meant by the inaccurate phrase, "those in the first." For his first example is, "He went to school;" which contains only the one pronoun "He."—See Smith's New Gram., p. 19.

[542] According to modern usage, has would here be better than is,—though is fallen is still allowable.—G. BROWN.

[543] From this opinion, I dissent. See Obs. 1st on the Degrees of Comparison, and Obs. 4th on Regular Comparison, in the Etymology of this work, at pp. 279 and 285.—G. BROWN.

[544] "The country looks beautiful;" that is, appears beautiful—is beautiful. This is right, and therefore the use which Bucke makes of it, may be fairly reversed. But the example was ill chosen; and I incline to think, it may also be right to say, "The country looks beautifully;" for the quality expressed by beautiful, is nothing else than the manner in which the thing shows to the eye. See Obs. 11th on Rule 9th.—G. BROWN.

Page 2249

[545] Many examples and authorities may be cited in favour of these corrections; as, "He acted independently of foreign assistance."—Murray's Key, Gram., Vol. ii, p. 222. "Independently of any necessary relation."—Murray's Gram., Vol. i. p. 275. "Independently of this peculiar mode of construction."—Blair's Rhet., p. 473. "Independent of the will of the people."—Webster's Essays, p. 13. "Independent one of an other."—Barclay's Works, i, 84. "The infinitive is often independent of the rest of the sentence."—Lennie's Gram., p. 85. "Some sentences are independent of each other."—Murray's Gram., i, 277. "As if it were independent of it"—Priestley's Gram., p. 186. "Independent of appearance and show."—Blair's Rhet., p. 13.

[546] The preposition of which Jefferson uses before about, appears to me to be useless. It does not govern the noun diameter, and is therefore no substitute for the in which I suppose to be wanting; and, as the preposition about seems to be sufficient between is and feet, I omit the of. So in other instances below.—G. BROWN.

[547] Murray, Jamieson, and others, have this definition with the article "a," and the comma, but without the hyphen: "APOSTROPHE is a turning off from the regular course," &c. See errors under Note 4th to Rule 20th.

[548] This sentence may be written correctly in a dozen different ways, with precisely the same meaning, and very nearly the same words. I have here made the noun gold the object of the verb took, which in the original appears to govern the noun treasure, or money, understood. The noun amount might as well be made its object, by a suppression of the preposition to. And again, for "pounds' weight," we may say, "pounds in weight." The words will also admit of many other positions.—G. BROWN.

[549] See a different reading of this example, cited as the first item of false syntax under Rule 16th above, and there corrected differently. The words "both of," which make the difference, were probably added by L. Murray in some of his revisals; and yet it does not appear that this popular critic ever got the sentence right.—G. BROWN.

[550] "If such maxims, and such practices prevail, what has become of national liberty?"—Hume's History. Vol. vi, p. 254; Priestley's Gram., p. 128.

[551] According to my notion, but is never a preposition; but there are some who think otherwise.—G. BROWN.

[552] "Cum vestieris te coccino, cum ornata fueris monili aureo, et pinxeris stibio oculos tuos, frustra componeris."—Vulgate. "[Greek: Ean peribalae[i] kokkinon, kai kosm' aesa[e][i] kosmw[i] chrys~w[i]. ean egchrisae[i] stibi tous ophthalmous sou eis mataion wraismos sou.]"—Septuagint. "Quoique tu te revetes de pourpre, que tu te pares d'ornemens d'or, et que tu te peignes les yeux avec du fard, tu t'embellis en vain."—French Bible.

Page 2250

[553] The word “any” is here omitted, not merely because it is unnecessary, but because “every any other piece,”—with which a score of our grammarians have pleased themselves,—is not good English. The impropriety might perhaps be avoided, though less elegantly, by repeating the preposition, and saying,—“or of any other piece of writing.”—G. BROWN.

[554] This correction, as well as the others which relate to what Murray says of the several forms of ellipsis, doubtless conveys the sense which he intended to express; but, as an assertion, it is by no means true of all the examples which he subjoins, neither indeed are the rest. But that is a fault of his which I cannot correct.—G. BROWN.

[555] The article may be repeated in examples like these, without producing impropriety; but then it will alter the construction of the adjectives, and render the expression more formal and emphatic, by suggesting a repetition of the noun.—G. BROWN.

[556] “The whole number of verbs in the English language, regular and irregular, simple and compounded, taken together, is about 4300.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 59; Murray’s, 12mo, p. 98; 8vo, p. 109; et al.

[557] In Singer’s Shakspeare, Vol. ii, p. 495, this sentence is expressed and pointed thus: “O, shame! where is thy blush?”—Hamlet, Act III, Sc. 4. This is as if the speaker meant, “O! it is a shame! where is thy blush?” Such is not the sense above; for there “Shame” is the person addressed.

[558] If, in each of these sentences, the colon were substituted for the latter semicolon, the curves might well be spared. Lowth has a similar passage, which (bating a needful variation of guillemets) he pointed thus: “as —, as; expressing a comparison of equality; ‘as white as snow:’ as —, so; expressing a comparison sometimes of equality; ‘as the stars, so shall thy seed be;’ that is, equal in number: but” &c.—Lowth’s Gram., p. 109. Murray, who broke this passage into paragraphs, retained at first these semicolons, but afterwards changed them all to colons. Of later grammarians, some retain the former colon in each sentence; some, the latter; and some, neither. Hiley points thus: “As requires as, expressing equality; as, ‘He is as good as she.’”—Hiley’s E. Gram., p. 107.