

Wolfville Nights eBook

Wolfville Nights

The following sections of this BookRags Literature Study Guide is offprint from Gale's For Students Series: Presenting Analysis, Context, and Criticism on Commonly Studied Works: Introduction, Author Biography, Plot Summary, Characters, Themes, Style, Historical Context, Critical Overview, Criticism and Critical Essays, Media Adaptations, Topics for Further Study, Compare & Contrast, What Do I Read Next?, For Further Study, and Sources.

(c)1998-2002; (c)2002 by Gale. Gale is an imprint of The Gale Group, Inc., a division of Thomson Learning, Inc. Gale and Design and Thomson Learning are trademarks used herein under license.

The following sections, if they exist, are offprint from Beacham's Encyclopedia of Popular Fiction: "Social Concerns", "Thematic Overview", "Techniques", "Literary Precedents", "Key Questions", "Related Titles", "Adaptations", "Related Web Sites". (c)1994-2005, by Walton Beacham.

The following sections, if they exist, are offprint from Beacham's Guide to Literature for Young Adults: "About the Author", "Overview", "Setting", "Literary Qualities", "Social Sensitivity", "Topics for Discussion", "Ideas for Reports and Papers". (c)1994-2005, by Walton Beacham.

All other sections in this Literature Study Guide are owned and copyrighted by BookRags, Inc.

Contents

Wolfville Nights eBook.....	1
Contents.....	2
Table of Contents.....	9
Page 1.....	10
Page 2.....	12
Page 3.....	13
Page 4.....	14
Page 5.....	15
Page 6.....	16
Page 7.....	17
Page 8.....	18
Page 9.....	20
Page 10.....	21
Page 11.....	22
Page 12.....	23
Page 13.....	25
Page 14.....	27
Page 15.....	29
Page 16.....	31
Page 17.....	32
Page 18.....	33
Page 19.....	35
Page 20.....	37
Page 21.....	38
Page 22.....	39

Page 23.....	41
Page 24.....	42
Page 25.....	44
Page 26.....	46
Page 27.....	47
Page 28.....	48
Page 29.....	50
Page 30.....	52
Page 31.....	54
Page 32.....	56
Page 33.....	58
Page 34.....	59
Page 35.....	60
Page 36.....	61
Page 37.....	62
Page 38.....	63
Page 39.....	65
Page 40.....	67
Page 41.....	69
Page 42.....	70
Page 43.....	72
Page 44.....	73
Page 45.....	75
Page 46.....	77
Page 47.....	79
Page 48.....	81

Page 49.....	82
Page 50.....	83
Page 51.....	84
Page 52.....	85
Page 53.....	86
Page 54.....	87
Page 55.....	89
Page 56.....	91
Page 57.....	92
Page 58.....	93
Page 59.....	95
Page 60.....	96
Page 61.....	97
Page 62.....	98
Page 63.....	99
Page 64.....	100
Page 65.....	101
Page 66.....	102
Page 67.....	104
Page 68.....	105
Page 69.....	106
Page 70.....	107
Page 71.....	108
Page 72.....	110
Page 73.....	111
Page 74.....	113

Page 75.....	115
Page 76.....	116
Page 77.....	118
Page 78.....	120
Page 79.....	121
Page 80.....	123
Page 81.....	124
Page 82.....	125
Page 83.....	126
Page 84.....	128
Page 85.....	130
Page 86.....	132
Page 87.....	134
Page 88.....	135
Page 89.....	137
Page 90.....	138
Page 91.....	139
Page 92.....	140
Page 93.....	141
Page 94.....	142
Page 95.....	143
Page 96.....	144
Page 97.....	145
Page 98.....	146
Page 99.....	148
Page 100.....	150

Page 101.....	152
Page 102.....	153
Page 103.....	155
Page 104.....	156
Page 105.....	157
Page 106.....	159
Page 107.....	161
Page 108.....	163
Page 109.....	164
Page 110.....	165
Page 111.....	166
Page 112.....	167
Page 113.....	169
Page 114.....	171
Page 115.....	173
Page 116.....	175
Page 117.....	177
Page 118.....	179
Page 119.....	181
Page 120.....	182
Page 121.....	183
Page 122.....	185
Page 123.....	187
Page 124.....	189
Page 125.....	191
Page 126.....	193

Page 127.....	195
Page 128.....	197
Page 129.....	199
Page 130.....	201
Page 131.....	202
Page 132.....	203
Page 133.....	204
Page 134.....	205
Page 135.....	206
Page 136.....	207
Page 137.....	209
Page 138.....	211
Page 139.....	212
Page 140.....	214
Page 141.....	216
Page 142.....	217
Page 143.....	219
Page 144.....	221
Page 145.....	223
Page 146.....	224
Page 147.....	225
Page 148.....	227
Page 149.....	229
Page 150.....	231
Page 151.....	232
Page 152.....	234

Page 153.....236

Page 154.....238

Table of Contents

Section	Table of Contents	Page
Start of eBook		1
CHAPTER		1
NEW YORK CITY,		1
WOLFVILLE NIGHTS		7
CHAPTER I.		7
CHAPTER II.		19
CHAPTER III.		25
CHAPTER IV.		31
CHAPTER V.		38
CHAPTER VI.		47
CHAPTER VII.		52
CHAPTER VIII.		58
CHAPTER IX.		68
CHAPTER X.		74
CHAPTER XI.		80
CHAPTER XII.		85
CHAPTER XIII.		96
CHAPTER XIV.		102
CHAPTER XV.		107
CHAPTER XVI.		113
CHAPTER XVII.		118
CHAPTER XVIII		124
CHAPTER XIX.		129
CHAPTER XX.		139
CHAPTER XXI.		144

Page 1

CHAPTER

Dedication

some cowboy facts

- I. The dismissal of silver Phil
- II. Colonel Sterett's panther hunt
- III. How faro Nell dealt bank
- IV. How the raven died
- V. The queerness of Dave Tutt
- VI. With the Apache's compliments
- VII. The Mills of savage gods
- VIII. Tom and Jerry; wheelers
- IX. The influence of faro Nell
- X. The ghost of the bar-B-8
- XI. Tucson Jennie's correction
- XII. Bill Connors of the Osages
- XIII. When Tutt first saw Tucson
- XIV. The troubles of Dan Boggs
- XV. Bowlegs and Major Ben
- XVI. Toad Allen's elopement
- XVII. The clients of Aaron green
- XVIII. Colonel Sterett's marvels
- XIX. The luck of Hardrobe
- XX. Long ago on the Rio Grande
- XXI. Colonel coyote Clubbs

To

William Greene Sterett

this volume is inscribed.

NEW YORK CITY,

August 1, 1902

My dear Sterett:—

In offering this book to you I might have advantage of the occasion to express my friendship and declare how high I hold you as a journalist and a man. Or I might speak of those years at Washington when in the gallery we worked shoulder to shoulder; I might recall to you the wit of Hannum, or remind you of the darkling Barrett, the mighty Decker, the excellent Cohen, the vivid Brown, the imaginative Miller, the volatile Angus, the epigrammatic Merrick, the quietly satirical Splain, Rouzer the earnest, Boynton the energetic, Carson the eminent, and Dunnell, famous for a bitter, frank integrity. I might remember that day when the gifted Fanciulli, with no more delicate inspiration than crackers, onions, and cheese, and no more splendid conservatory than Shoemaker's, wrote, played and consecrated to you his famous "Lone Star March" wherewith he so disquieted the public present of the next concert in the White House grounds. Or I might hark back to the campaign of '92, when together we struggled against national politics as evinced in the city of New York; I might repaint that election night when, with one hundred thousand whirling dervishes of democracy in Madison Square, dancing dances, and singing songs of victory, we undertook through the hubbub to send from the "Twenty-third street telegraph office" half-hourly bulletins to our papers in the West; how you, accompanied of the dignified Richard Bright, went often to the Fifth Avenue Hotel; and how at last you dictated your bulletins—a sort of triumphant blank verse, they were—as Homeric of spirit as lofty of phrase—to me, who caught them as they came from your lips, losing none of their fire, and so flashed them all burning into Texas, far away. But of what avail would be such recount? Distance separates us and time has come between. Those are the old years, these are the new, with newer years beyond. Life like a sea is filling from rivers of experience. Forgetfulness rises as a tide and creeps upward to drown within us those stories of the days that were. And because this is true, it comes to me that you as a memory must stand tallest in the midst of my regard. For of you I find within me no forgetfulness. I have met others; they came, they tarried, they departed. They came again; and on this second encounter the recollection of their existences smote upon me as a surprise. I had forgotten them as though they had not been. But such is not your tale. Drawn on the plates of memory, as with a tool of diamond, I carry you both in broadest outline and in each least of shade; and there hangs no picture in the gallery of hours gone, to which I turn with more of pleasure and of good. Nor am I alone in my recollection. Do I pass through the Fifth Avenue Hotel on my way to the Hoffman, that vandyked dispenser leans pleasantly across his counter, to ask with deepest interest: "Do you hear from the Old Man now?" Or am I belated in Shanley's, a beaming ring of waiters—if it be not an hour overrun of custom—will half-circle my table, and the boldest, "Pat," will question timidly, yet with a kindly Galway warmth: "How's the Old Man?" Old Man! That is your title: at once dignified and affectionate; and by it you come often to be referred to along Broadway these ten years after its conference. And when the latest word is uttered what is there more to fame! I shall hold myself fortunate, indeed, if, departing, I'm remembered by half so many half so long. But wherefore extend ourselves regretfully? We may meet again; the game is not played out. Pending such bright chance, I dedicate this book to you. It is the most of honour that lies in my lean power. And in so doing, I am almost moved to say, as said Goldsmith of Johnson in his offering of She Stoops to Conquer: "By inscribing this slight performance to you, I do not mean to so much compliment you as myself. It may do me some honour to inform the public that I have lived many years in intimacy with you. It may serve the interests of mankind also to inform them that the greatest wit may be found in a character without impairing the most unaffected piety." I repeat, I am all but moved to write these lines of you. It would tell my case at least; and while description might limp in so far as you lack somewhat of that snuffle of "true piety" so often engaging the Johnsonian nose, you make up the defect with possession of a wider philosophy, a better humour and a brighter, quicker wit than visited or dwelt beneath the candle-scorched wig of our old bully lexicographer.

Page 2

Alfred Henry Lewis.

Some Cowboy Facts.

Page 3

There are certain truths of a botanical character that are not generally known. Each year the trees in their occupation creep further west. There are regions in Missouri—not bottom lands—which sixty years ago were bald and bare of trees. Today they are heavy with timber. Westward, beyond the trees, lie the prairies, and beyond the prairies, the plains; the first are green with long grasses, the latter bare, brown and with a crisp, scorched, sparse vesture of vegetation scarce worth the name. As the trees march slowly westward in conquest of the prairies, so also do the prairies, in their verdant turn, become aggressors and push westward upon the plains. These last stretches, extending to the base of that bluff and sudden bulwark, the Rocky Mountains, can go no further. The Rockies hold the plains at bay and break, as it were, the teeth of the desert. As a result of this warfare of vegetations, the plains are to first disappear in favour of the prairies; and the prairies to give way before the trees. These mutations all wait on rain; and as the rain belt goes ever and ever westward, a strip of plains each year surrenders its aridity, and the prairies and then the trees press on and take new ground.

These facts should contain some virtue of interest; the more since with the changes chronicled, come also changes in the character of both the inhabitants and the employments of these regions. With a civilised people extending themselves over new lands, cattle form ever the advance guard. Then come the farms. This is the procession of a civilised, peaceful invasion; thus is the column marshalled. First, the pastoral; next, the agricultural; third and last, the manufacturing;—and per consequence, the big cities, where the treasure chests of a race are kept. Blood and bone and muscle and heart are to the front; and the money that steadies and stays and protects and repays them and their efforts, to the rear.

Forty years ago about all that took place west of the Mississippi of a money-making character was born of cattle. The cattle were worked in huge herds and, like the buffalo supplanted by them, roamed in unnumbered thousands. In a pre-railroad period, cattle were killed for their hides and tallow, and smart Yankee coasters went constantly to such ports as Galveston for these cargoes. The beef was left to the coyotes.

Cattle find a natural theatre of existence on the plains. There, likewise, flourishes the pastoral man. But cattle herding, confined to the plains, gives way before the westward creep of agriculture. Each year beholds more western acres broken by the plough; each year witnesses a diminution of the cattle ranges and cattle herding. This need ring no bell of alarm concerning a future barren of a beef supply. More cattle are the product of the farm-regions than of the ranges. That ground, once range and now farm, raises more cattle now than then. Texas is a great cattle State. Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri are first States of agriculture. The area of Texas is about even with the collected area of the other five. Yet one finds double the number of cattle in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri than in Texas, to say nothing of tenfold the sheep and hogs. No; one may be calm; one is not to fall a prey to any hunger of beef.

Page 4

While the farms in their westward pushing do not diminish the cattle, they reduce the cattleman and pinch off much that is romantic and picturesque. Between the farm and the wire fence, the cowboy, as once he flourished, has been modified, subdued, and made partially to disappear. In the good old days of the Jones and Plummer trail there were no wire fences, and the sullen farmer had not yet arrived. Your cowboy at that time was a person of thrill and consequence. He wore a broad-brimmed Stetson hat, and all about it a rattlesnake skin by way of band, retaining head and rattles. This was to be potent against headaches—a malady, by the way, which swept down no cowboy save in hours emergent of a spree. In such case the snake cure didn't cure. The hat was retained in defiance of winds, by a leathern cord caught about the back of the head, not under the chin. This cord was beautiful with a garniture of three or four perforated poker chips, red, yellow, and blue.

There are sundry angles of costume where the dandyism of a cowboy of spirit and conceit may acquit itself; these are hatband, spurs, saddle, and leggins. I've seen hatbands made of braided gold and silver filigree; they were from Santa Fe, and always in the form of a rattlesnake, with rubies or emeralds or diamonds for eyes. Such gauds would cost from four hundred to two thousand dollars. Also, I've encountered a saddle which depleted its proud owner a round twenty-five hundred dollars. It was of finest Spanish leather, stamped and spattered with gold bosses. There was gold-capping on the saddle horn, and again on the circle of the cantle. It was a dream of a saddle, made at Paso del Norte; and the owner had it cinched upon a bronco dear at twenty dollars. One couldn't have sold the pony for a stack of white chips in any faro game of that neighbourhood (Las Vegas) and they were all crooked games at that.

Your cowboy dandy frequently wears wrought steel spurs, inlaid with silver and gold; price, anything you please. If he flourish a true Brummel of the plains his leggins will be fronted from instep to belt with the thick pelt, hair outside, of a Newfoundland dog. These "chapps," are meant to protect the cowboy from rain and cold, as well as plum bushes, wire fences and other obstacles inimical, and against which he may lunge while riding headlong in the dark. The hair of the Newfoundland, thick and long and laid the right way, defies the rains; and your cowboy loathes water.

Save in those four cardinals of vanity enumerated, your cowboy wears nothing from weakness; the rest of his outfit is legitimate. The long sharp heels of his boots are there to dig into the ground and hold fast to his mother earth while roping on foot. His gay pony when "roped" of a frosty morning would skate him all across and about the plains if it were not for these heels. The buckskin gloves tied in one of the saddle strings are used when roping, and to keep the half-inch manila lariat—or mayhap it's horsehair or rawhide pleated—from burning his hands. The red silken sash one was wont aforesome to see knotted about his waist, was used to hogtie and hold down the big cattle when roped and thrown. The sash—strong, soft and close—could be tied more tightly, quickly, surely than anything besides. In these days, with wire pastures and branding pens and the fine certainty of modern round-ups and a consequent paucity of mavericks, big cattle are seldom roped; wherefor the sash has been much cast aside.

Page 5

The saddle-bags or “war-bags,”—also covered of dogskin to match the leggings, and worn behind, not forward of the rider—are the cowboy's official wardrobe wherein he carries his second suit of underclothes, and his other shirt. His handkerchief, red cotton, is loosely knotted about the cowboy's neck, knot to the rear. He wipes the sweat from his brow therewith on those hot Texas days when in a branding pen he “flanks” calves or feeds the fires or handles the irons or stands off the horned indignation of the cows, resentful because of burned and bawling offspring.

It would take two hundred thousand words to tell in half fashion the story of the cowboy. His religion of fatalism, his courage, his rides at full swing in midnight darkness to head and turn and hold a herd stampeded, when a slip on the storm-soaked grass by his unshod pony, or a misplaced prairie-dog hole, means a tumble, and a tumble means that a hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of cattle, with hoofs like chopping knives, will run over him and make him look and feel and become as dead as a cancelled postage stamp; his troubles, his joys, his soberness in camp, his drunkenness in town, and his feuds and occasional “gun plays” are not to be disposed of in a preface. One cannot in such cramped space so much as hit the high places in a cowboy career.

At work on the range and about his camp—for, bar accidents, wherever you find a cowboy you will find a camp—the cowboy is a youth of sober quiet dignity. There is a deal of deep politeness and nothing of epithet, insult or horseplay where everybody wears a gun.

There are no folk inquisitive on the ranges. No one asks your name. If driven by stress of conversation to something akin to it the cowboy will say: “What may I call you, sir?” And he's as careful to add the “sir,” as he is to expect it in return.

You are at liberty to select what name you prefer. Where you hail from? where going? why? are queries never put. To look at the brand on your pony—you, a stranger—is a dangerous vulgarity to which no gentleman of the Panhandle or any other region of pure southwestern politeness would stoop. And if you wish to arouse an instant combination of hate, suspicion and contempt in the bosom of a cowboy you have but to stretch forth your artless Eastern hand and ask: “Let me look at your gun.”

Page 6

Cowboys on the range or in the town are excessively clannish. They never desert each other, but stay and fight and die and storm a jail and shoot a sheriff if needs press, to rescue a comrade made captive in their company. Also they care for each other when sick or injured, and set one another's bones when broken in the falls and tumbles of their craft. On the range the cowboy is quiet, just and peaceable. There are neither women nor cards nor rum about the cow camps. The ranches and the boys themselves banish the two latter; and the first won't come. Women, cards and whiskey, the three war causes of the West, are confined to the towns.

Those occasions when cattle are shipped and the beef-herds, per consequence, driven to the shipping point become the only times when the cowboy sees the town. In such hours he blooms and lives fully up to his opportunity. He has travelled perhaps two hundred miles and has been twenty days on the trail, for cattle may only be driven about ten miles a day; he has been up day and night and slept half the time in the saddle; he has made himself hoarse singing "Sam Bass" and "The Dying Ranger" to keep the cattle quiet and stave off stampedes; he has ridden ten ponies to shadows in his twenty days of driving, wherefore, and naturally, your cowboy feels like relaxing.

There would be as many as ten men with each beef-herd; and the herd would include about five thousand head. There would be six "riders," divided into three watches to stand night guard over the herd and drive it through the day; there would be two "hoss hustlers," to hold the eighty or ninety ponies, turn and turn about, and carry them along with the herd; there would be the cook, with four mules and the chuck wagon; and lastly there would be the herd-boss, a cow expert he, and at the head of the business.

Once the herd is off his hands and his mind at the end of the drive, the cowboy unbuckles and reposes himself from his labours. He becomes deeply and famously drunk. Hungering for the excitement of play he collides amiably with faro and monte and what other deadfalls are rife of the place. Never does he win; for the games aren't arranged that way. But he enjoys himself; and his losses do not prey on him.

Sated with faro bank and monte—they can't be called games of chance, the only games of chance occurring when cowboys engage with each other at billiards or pool—sated, I say, with faro and Mexican monte, and exuberant of rum, which last has regular quick renewal, our cowboy will stagger to his pony, swing into the saddle, and with gladsome whoops and an occasional outburst from his six shooter directed toward the heavens, charge up and down the street. This last amusement appeals mightily to cowboys too drunk to walk. For, be it known, a gentleman may ride long after he may not walk.

Page 7

If a theatre be in action and mayhap a troop of “Red Stocking Blondes,” elevating the drama therein, the cowboy is sure to attend. Also he will arrive with his lariat wound about his body under his coat; and his place will be the front row. At some engaging crisis, such as the “March of the Amazons,” having first privily unwound and organised his lariat to that end, he will arise and “rope” an Amazon. This will produce bad language from the manager of the show, and compel the lady to sit upon the stage to the detriment of her wardrobe if no worse, and all to keep from being pulled across the footlights. Yet the exercise gives the cowboy deepest pleasure. Having thus distinguished the lady of his admiration, later he will meet her and escort her to the local dancehall. There, mingling with their frank companions, the two will drink, and loosen the boards of the floor with the strenuous dances of our frontier till daylight does appear.

For the matter of a week, or perchance two—it depends on how fast his money melts—in these fashions will our gentleman of cows engage his hours and expand himself. He will make a deal of noise, drink a deal of whiskey, acquire a deal of what he terms “action”; but he harms nobody, and, in a town toughened to his racket and which needs and gets his money, disturbs nobody.

“Let him whoop it up; he’s paying for it, ain’t he?” will be the prompt local retort to any inquiry as to why he is thus permitted to disport.

So long as the cowboy observes the etiquette of the town, he will not be molested or “called down” by marshal or sheriff or citizen. There are four things your cowboy must not do. He must not insult a woman; he must not shoot his pistol in a store or bar-room; he must not ride his pony into those places of resort; and as a last proposal he must not ride his pony on the sidewalks. Shooting or riding into bar-rooms is reckoned as dangerous; riding on the sidewalk comes more under the head of insult, and is popularly regarded as a taunting defiance of the town marshal. On such occasions the marshal never fails to respond, and the cowboy is called upon to surrender. If he complies, which to the credit of his horse-sense he commonly does, he is led into brief captivity to be made loose when cooled. Does he resist arrest, there is an explosive rattle of six shooters, a mad scattering of the careful citizenry out of lines of fire, and a cowboy or marshal is added to the host beyond. At the close of the festival, if the marshal still lives he is congratulated; if the cowboy survives he is lynched; if both fall, they are buried with the honours of frontier war; while whatever the event, the communal ripple is but slight and only of the moment, following which the currents of Western existence sweep easily and calmly onward as before.

A. H. L.

WOLFFVILLE NIGHTS

CHAPTER I.

Page 8

The Dismissal of Silver Phil.

“His name, complete, is ‘Silver City Philip.’ In them social observances of the Southwest wherein haste is a feacher an’ brev’ty the bull’s eye aimed at, said cognomen gets shortened to ‘Silver Phil.’”

The Old Cattleman looked thoughtfully into his glass, as if by that method he collected the scattered elements of a story. There was a pause; then he lifted the glass to his lips as one who being now evenly equipped of information, proposed that it arrive hand in hand with the inspiration which should build a tale from it.

“Shore, this Silver Phil is dead now; an’ I never yet crosses up with the gent who’s that sooperfluous as to express regrets. It’s Dan Boggs who dismisses Silver Phil; Dan does it in efforts he puts forth to faithfully represent the right.

“Doc Peets allers allows this Silver Phil is a ‘degen’rate;’ leastwise that’s the word Peets uses. An’ while I freely concedes I ain’t none too cl’ar as to jest what a degen’rate is, I stands ready to back Peets’ deescription to win. Peets is, bar Colonel William Greene Sterett, the best eddicated sharp in Arizona; also the wariest as to expressin’ views. Tharfore when Peets puts it up, onflinchin’, that this yere Silver Phil’s a degen’rate, you-all can spread your blankets an’ go to sleep on it that a degen’rate he is.

“Silver Phil is a little, dark, ignorant, tousled-ha’red party, none too neat in costume. He’s as black an’ small an’ evil-seemin’ as a Mexican; still, you sees at a glance he ain’t no Greaser neither. An’ with all this yere surface wickedness, Silver Phil has a quick, hyster’cal way like a woman or a bird; an’ that’s ever a grin on his face. You can smell ‘bad’ off Silver Phil, like smoke in a house, an’ folks who’s on the level—an’ most folks is—conceives a notion ag’in him the moment him an’ they meets up.

“The first time I observes Silver Phil, he’s walkin’ down the lickier room of the Red Light. As he goes by the bar, Black Jack—who’s rearrangin’ the nose paint on the shelf so it shows to advantage—gets careless an’ drops a bottle.

“‘Crash!’ it goes onto the floor.

“With the sound, an’ the onexpected suddenness of it stampedin’ his nerves, that a-way, Silver Phil leaps into the air like a cat; an’ when he ‘lights, he’s frontin’ Black Jack an’ a gun in each hand.

“‘Which I won’t be took!’ says Silver Phil, all flustered.

“His eyes is gleamin’ an’ his face is palin’ an’ his ugly grin gets even uglier than before. But like a flash, he sees thar’s nothin’ to go in the air about—nothin’ that means him; an’ he puts up his hardware an’ composes himse’f.

“You-all conducts yourse’f like a sport who has something on his mind,’ says Texas Thompson, who’s thar present at the time, an’ can’t refrain from commentin’ on the start that bottle-smashin’ gives Silver Phil.

“This Silver Phil makes no response, but sort o’ grins plenty ghastly, while his breath comes quick.

Page 9

“Still, while you-all notes easy that this person’s scared, it’s plain he’s a killer jest the same. It’s frequent that a-way. I’m never much afraid of one of your cold game gents like Cherokee Hall; you can gamble the limit they’ll never put a six-shooter in play till it’s shorely come their turn. But timid, feverish, locoed people, whose jedgment is bad an’ who’s prone to feel themse’fs in peril; they’re the kind who kills. For myse’f I shuns all sech. I won’t say them erratic, quick-to-kill sports don’t have courage; only it strikes me—an’ I’ve rode up on a heap of ’em—it’s more like a fear-bit f’rocity than sand.

“Take Enright or Peets or Cherokee or Tutt or Jack Moore or Boggs or Texas Thompson; you’re plumb safe with sech gents—all or any. An’ yet thar ain’t the first glimmer of bein’ gun-shy about one of ’em; they’re as clean strain as the eternal granite, an’ no more likely to hide out from danger than a hill. An’ while they differs from each other, yet they’re all different from sech folks as Silver Phil. Boggs, goin’ to war, is full of good-humoured grandeur, gala and confident, ready to start or stop like a good hoss. Cherokee Hall is quiet an’ wordless; he gets pale, but sharp an’ deadly; an’ his notion is to fight for a finish. Peets is haughty an’ sooperior on the few o’casions when he onbends in battle, an’ comports himse’f like a gent who fights downhill; the same, ondoubted, bein’ doo to them book advantages of Peets which elevates him an’ lifts him above the common herd a whole lot. Enright who’s oldest is of course slowest to embark in blood, an’ pulls his weepens—when he does pull ’em—with sorrowful resignation.

“Which I’m shorely saddest when I shoots,’ says Enright to me, as he reloads his gun one time.

“These yere humane sentiments, however, don’t deter him from shootin’ soon an’ aimin’ low, which latter habits makes Wolfville’s honoured chief a highly desp’rate game to get ag’inst.

“Jack Moore, bein’ as I explains former, the execyootive of the Strangers, an’ responsible for law an’ order, has a heap of shootin’ shoved onto him from time to time. Jack allers transacts these fireworks with a ca’m, offishul front, the same bein’ devoid, equal, of anger or regrets. Tutt, partic’lar after he weds Tucson Jennie, an’ more partic’lar still when he reaps new honours as the originator of that blessed infant Enright Peets Tutt, carries on what shootin’ comes his way in a manner a lot dignified an’ lofty; while Texas Thompson—who’s mebbly morbid about his wife down in Laredo demandin’ she be divorced that time—although he picks up his hand in a fracas, ready an’ irritable an’ with no delays, after all is that well-balanced he’s bound to be each time plumb right.

“Which, you observes, son, from these yere settin’s forth, that thar’s a mighty sight of difference between gents like them pards of mine an’ degen’rates of the tribe of Silver Phil. It’s the difference between right an’ wrong; one works from a impulse of pure jestice, the other is moved of a sperit of crime; an’ thar you be.

Page 10

“Silver Phil, we learns later—an’ it shore jestifies Peets in his theories about him bein’ a degen’rate—has been in plenty of blood. But allers like a cat; savage, gore-thirsty, yet shy, prideless, an’ ready to fly. It seems he begins to be homicidal in a humble way by downin’ a trooper over near Fort Cummings. That’s four years before he visits us. He’s been blazin’ away intermittent ever since, and allers croel, crafty an’ safe. It’s got to be a shore thing or Silver Phil quits an’ goes into the water like a mink.

“This yere undersized miscreant ain’t ha’nted about Wolfville more’n four days before he shows how onnecessary he is to our success. Which he works a ha’r copper on Cherokee Hall. What’s a ha’r copper? I’ll onfold, short and terse, what Silver Phil does, an’ then you saveys. Cherokee’s dealin’ his game—farobank she is; an’ if all them national banks conducts themse’fs as squar’ as that enterprise of Cherokee’s, the fields of finance would be as safely honest as a church. Cherokee’s turnin’ his game one evenin’; Faro Nell on the lookout stool where she belongs. Silver Phil drifts up to the lay-out, an’ camps over back of the king-end. He gets chips, an’ goes to takin’ chances alternate on the king, queen, jack, ten; all side an’ side they be. Cherokee bein’ squar’ himse’f ain’t over-prone to expect a devious play in others. He don’t notice this Silver Phil none speshul, an’ shoves the kyards.

“Silver Phil wins three or four bets; it’s Nell that catches on to his racket, an’ signs up to Cherokee onder the table with her little foot. One glance an’ Cherokee is loaded with information. This Silver Phil, it seems, in a sperit of avarice, equips himse’f with a copper—little wooden checker, is what this copper is—one he’s done filched from Cherokee the day prior. He’s fastened a long black hoss-ha’r to it, an’ he ties the other end of the hoss-ha’r to his belt in front. This ha’r is long enough as he’s planted at the table that a-way, so it reaches nice to them four nearest kyards,—the king, queen, jack, ten. An’ said ha’r is plumb invisible except to eyes as sharp as Faro Nell’s. The deceitful Silver Phil will have a stack on one of ’em, coppered with this yere ha’r copper. He watches the box. As the turns is made, if the kyards come his way, well an’ good. Silver Phil does nothin’ but garners in results. When the kyards start to show ag’in him, however, that’s different. In sech events Silver Phil draws in his breath, sort o’ takin’ in on the hoss-ha’r, an’ the copper comes off the bet. When the turn is made, thar’s Silver Phil’s bet—by virchoo of said fraud—open an’ triumphant an’ waitin’ to be paid.

“Cherokee gets posted quick an’ with a look. As sharp as winkin’ Cherokee has a nine-inch bowie in his hand an’ with one slash cuts the hoss-ha’r clost up by Silver Phil’s belt.

Page 11

“That’s a yoonique invention!” observes Cherokee, an’ he’s sarcastic while he menaces with the knife at Silver Phil; ‘that contraption is shorely plenty sagacious! But it don’t go here. Shove in your chips.’ Silver Phil obeys: an’ he shows furtive, ugly, an’ alarmed, an’ all of ‘em at once. He don’t say a word. ‘Now pull your freight,’ concloods Cherokee. ‘If you ever drifts within ten foot of a game of mine ag’in I’ll throw this knife plumb through you—through an’ through.’ An’ Cherokee, by way of lustration lets fly the knife across the bar-room. It comes like a flash.

“Chuck!”

“Thar’s a picture paper pasted onto the wooden wall of the Red Light, displayin’ the liniaments of some party. That bowie pierces the picture—a shot in the cross it is—an’ all with sech fervour that the p’int of the blade shows a inch an’ a half on the other side of that individyool board.

“The next time I throws a knife in your presence,’ remarks Cherokee to Silver Phil, an’ Cherokee’s as cold an’ p’isonous as a rattlesnake, ‘it’ll be la’nched at you.’

“Silver Phil don’t say nothin’ in retort. He’s aware by the lib’ral way Cherokee sep’rates himse’f from the bowie that said weepoon can’t constitoot Cherokee’s entire armament. An’ as Silver Phil don’t pack the sperit to face no sech flashlight warrior, he acts on Cherokee’s hint to vamos, an’ fades into the street. Shore, Cherokee don’t cash the felon’s chips none; he confiscates ‘em. Cherokee ain’t quite so tenderly romantic as to make good to a detected robber. Moreover, he lets this Silver Phil go onharmd when by every roole his skelp is forfeit. It turns out good for the camp, however, as this yere experience proves so depressin’ to Silver Phil he removes his blankets to Red Dog. Thar among them purblind tarrapins, its inhabitants, it’s likely he gets prosperous an’ ondetected action on that little old ha’r copper of his.

“It’s not only my beliefs, but likewise the opinions of sech joodicial sports as Enright, Peets, an’ Colonel Sterett, that this maverick, Silver Phil, is all sorts of a crim’nal. An’ I wouldn’t wonder if he’s a pure rustler that a-way; as ready to stand up a stage as snake a play at farobank. This idee settles down on the Wolfville intell’gence on the heels of a vicissitode wherein Dan Boggs performs, an’ which gets pulled off over in the Bird Cage Op’ry House. Jack Moore ain’t thar none that time. Usual, Jack is a constant deevotee of the dramy. Jack’s not only a first-nighter, he comes mighty clost to bein’ a every-nighter. But this partic’lar evenin’ when Boggs performs, Jack’s rummagin’ about some’ers else.

“If Jack’s thar, it’s even money he’d a-had that second shot instead of Boggs; in which event, the results might have been something graver than this yere minoote wound which Boggs confers. I’m confident Jack would have cut in with the second shot for sech is his offishul system. Jack more’n once proclaims his position.

Page 12

“By every roole of law,’ says Jack at epocks when he declar’s himse’f, ‘an’ on all o’casions, I, as kettle-tender to the Stranglers, is entitled to the first shot. When I uses the term ‘o’casion,’ I would be onderstood as alloodin’ to affairs of a simply social kind, an’ not to robberies, hold-ups, hoss-larcenies, an’ other an’ sim’lar transactions in spec’latif crime when every gent defends his own. Speakin’ social, however, I reasserts that by every roole of guidance, I’m entitled to the first shot. Which a doo regyard for these plain rights of mine would go far to freein’ Wolfville upper circles of the bullets which occurs from time to time, an’ which even the most onconventional admits is shore a draw-back. All I can add as a closer,’ concloods Jack, ‘is that I’ll make haste to open on any sport who transgresses these fiats an’ goes to shootin’ first. Moreover, it’s likely that said offender finds that when I’m started once, what I misses in the orig’nal deal I’ll make up in the draw, an’ I tharfore trusts that none will prove so soocidal as to put me to the test.’

“This Bird Cage Op’ry House evenin’, however, Jack is absent a heap. Dan Boggs is present, an’ is leanin’ back appreciatin’ the show an’ the Valley Tan plenty impartial. Dan likes both an’ is doin’ ’em even jestic. Over opp’site to Dan is a drunken passel of sports from Red Dog, said wretched hamlet bein’ behind Wolfville in that as in all things else an’ not ownin’ no op’ry house.

“As the evenin’ proceeds—it’s about sixth drink time—a casyooal gun goes off over among the Red Dog outfit, an’ the lead tharfrom bores a hole in the wall clost to Dan’s y’ear. Nacherally Dan don’t like it. The show sort o’ comes to a balk, an’ takin’ advantages of the lull Dan arises in a listless way an’ addresses the Red Dogs.

“‘I merely desires to inquire,’ says Dan ‘whether that shot is inadvertent; or is it a mark of innocent joobilation an’ approval of the show; or is it meant personal to me?’

“‘You can bet your moccasins!’ shouts one of the Red Dog delegation, ‘thar’s no good fellowship with that gun-play. That shot’s formal an’ serious an’ goes as it lays.’

“‘My mind bein’ now cl’ar on the subject of motive,’ says Dan; ‘the proper course is plain.’”

With this retort Dan slams away gen’ral—shoots into the flock like—at the picnickers from Red Dog, an’ a party who’s plenty drunk an’ has his feet piled up on a table goes shy his off big toe.

“As I remarks yeretofore it’s as well Jack Moore ain’t thar. Jack would have corralled something more momentous than a toe. Which Jack would have been shootin’ in his capac’ty as marshal, an’ couldn’t onder sech circumstances have stooped to toes. But it’s different with Dan. He is present private an’ only idlin’ ’round; an’ he ain’t driven to take high ground. More partic’lar since Dan’s playin’ a return game in the nacher of reproofs an' merely to resent the onlicensed liberties which Red Dog takes with him, Dan, as I says, is free to accept toes if he so decides.

Page 13

“When Dan busts this yere inebriate, the victim lams loose a yell ag’instant which a coyote would protest. That sot thinks he’s shore killed. What with the scare an’ the pain an’ the nosepaint, an’ regyardin’ of himse’f as right then flutterin’ about the rim of eternity, he gets seized with remorse an’ allows he’s out to confess his sins before he quits. As thar’s no sky pilot to confide in, this drunkard figgers that Peets ‘ll do, an’ with that he onloads on Peets how, bein’ as he is a stage book-keep over in Red Dog, he’s in cahoots with a outfit of route agents an’ gives ‘em the word when it’s worth while to stand-up the stage. An’ among other crim’nal pards of his this terrified person names that outlaw Silver Phil. Shore, when he rounds to an’ learns it ain’t nothin’ but a toe, this party’s chagrined to death.

“This yere confidin’ sport’s arrested an’ taken some’ers—Prescott mebbby—to be tried in a shore-enough co’t for the robberies; the Red Dog Stranglers not bein’ game to butt in an’ hang him a lot themse’fs. They surrenders him to the marshal who rides over for him; an’ they would have turned out Silver Phil, too, only that small black outcast don’t wait, but goes squanderin’ off to onknown climes the moment he hears the news. He’s vamoosed Red Dog before this penitent bookkeep ceases yelpin’ an’ sobbin’ over his absent toe.

“It ain’t no time, however, before we hears further of Silver Phil; that is, by way of roomer. It looks like a couple of big cow outfits some’ers in the San Simon country—they’re the ‘Three-D’ an’ the ‘K-in-a-box’ brands—takes first to stealin’ each, other’s cattle, an’, final, goes to war. Each side retains bands of murderers an’ proceeds buoyantly to lay for one another. Which Silver Phil enlists with the ‘Three-D’ an’ sneaks an’ prowls an’ bushwhacks an’ shoots himse’f into more or less bloody an’ ignoble prom’nence. At last the main war-chiefs of the Territory declar’s themse’fs in on the riot an’ chases both sides into the hills; an’ among other excellent deeds they makes captive Silver Phil.

“It’s a great error they don’t string this Silver Phil instanter. But no; after the procrastinatin’ fashion of real law, they permits the villain—who’s no more use on the surface of Arizona that a-way than one of them hydrophoby polecats whose bite is death—to get a law sharp to plead an’ call for a show-down before a jedge an’ jury. It takes days to try Silver Phil, an’ marshals an’ sheriff gents is two weeks squanderin’ about gettin’ witnesses; an’ all to as much trouble an’ loss of time an’ dinero as would suffice to round-up the cattle of Cochise county. Enright an’ the Stranglers would have turned the trick in twenty minutes an’ never left the New York Store ontill with Silver Phil an’ a lariat they reepairs to the windmill to put the finishin’ touches on their lucoobations.

“Still, dooms slow an’ shiftless as they shore be, at the wind-up Silver Phil’s found guilty, an’ is put in nom’nation by the presidin’ alcade to be hanged; the time bein’ set in a crazy-hoss fashion for a month away. As Silver Phil—which he’s that bad an’ hard he comes mighty clost to bein; game—is leavin’ the co’t-room with the marshal who’s ridin’ herd on him, he says:

Page 14

“I ain’t payin’ much attention at the time,’—Silver Phil’s talkin’ to that marshal gent,— ‘bein’ I’m thinkin’ of something else, but do I onderstand that old grey sport on the bench to say you-all is to hang me next month?’

“That’s whatever!’ assents this marshal gent, ‘an’ you can gamble a bloo stack that hangin’ you is a bet we ain’t none likely to overlook. Which we’re out to put our whole grateful souls into the dooty.’

“Now I thinks of it,’ observes Silver Phil, ‘I’m some averse to bein’ hanged. I reckons, speakin’ free an’ free as between fellow sports, that in order for that execootion to be a blindin’ success I’ll have to be thar personal?’

“It’s one of the mighty few o’casions,’ responds the marshal, ‘when your absence would shorely dash an’ damp the gen’ral joy. As you says, you’ll have to be thar a heap personal when said hangin’ occurs.’

“I’m mighty sorry,’ says Silver Phil, ‘that you-all lays out your game in a fashion that so much depends on me. The more so, since the longer I considers this racket, the less likely it is I’ll be thar. It’s almost a cinch, with the plans I has, that I’ll shore be some’ers else.’

“They corrals Silver Phil in the one big upper room of a two-story ‘doby, an’ counts off a couple of dep’ty marshals to gyard him. These gyards, comin’ squar’ down to cases, ain’t no improvement, moral, on Silver Phil himse’f; an’ since they’re twice his age— Silver Phil not bein’ more’n twenty—it’s safe as a play to say that both of ‘em oughter have been hanged a heap before ever Silver Phil is born. These two hold-ups, however, turns dep’ty marshals in their old age, an’ is put in to stand watch an’ watch an’ see that Silver Phil don’t work loose from his hobbles an’ go pirootin’ off ag’in into parts onknown. Silver Phil is loaded with fetters,—handcuffs an’ laig-locks both—an’ these hold-up sentries is armed to the limit.

“It’s the idee of Doc Peets later, when he hears the details, that if the gyards that time treats Silver Phil with kindness, the little felon most likely would have remained to be hanged. But they don’t: they abooses Silver Phil; cussin’ him out an’ herdin’ him about like he’s cattle. They’re a evil-tempered couple, them dep’ties, an’ they don’t give Silver Phil no sort o’ peace.

“As I su’gests yeretofore,’ says Doc Peets, when he considers the case, ‘this Silver Phil is a degen’rate. He’s like a anamile. He don’t entertain no reg’lar scheme to work free when he waxes sardonic with the marshal; that’s only a bluff. Later, when them gyards takes to maltreatin’ him an’ battin’ him about, it wakes up the venom in him, an’ his cunnin’ gets aroused along with his appetite for revenge.’

“This Silver Phil, who’s lean an’ slim like I explains at the jump, has hands no bigger than a cat’s paws. It ain’t no time when he discovers that by cuttin’ himse’f a bit on the irons, he can shuck the handcuffs whenever he’s disposed. Even then, he don’t outline no campaign for liberty; jest sort o’ roommates an’ waits.

Page 15

"It's one partic'lar mornin', some two weeks after Silver Phil's sentenced that a-way. The marshal gent himse'f ain't about, bein' on some dooty over to Tucson. Silver Phil is upsta'rs on the top floor of the 'doby with his gyards. Which he's hotter than a wildcat; the gyards an' him has been havin' a cussin' match, an' as Silver Phil outplays 'em talkin', one of 'em's done whacked him over the skelp with his gun. The blood's tricklin' down Silver Phil's fore'erd as he sits glowerin'.

"One of the gyards is loadin' a ten-gauge Greener—a whole mouthful of buckshot in each shell. He's grinnin' at Silver Phil as he shoves the shells in the gun an' slams her shet.

"Which I'm loadin' that weepoon for you,' says the gyard, contemplatin' Silver Phil derisive.

"You be, be you!' replies Silver Phil, his eyes burnin' with rage. 'Which you better look out a whole lot; you-all may get it yourse'f.'

"The gyard laughs ugly an' exasperatin' an' puts the ten-gauge in a locker along with two or three Winchesters. Then he turns the key on the firearms an' goes caperin' off to his feed.

"The other gyard, his compadre, is settin' on a stool lookin' out a window. Mebby he's considerin' of his sins. It would be more in his hand at this time if he thinks of Silver Phil.

"Silver Phil, who's full of wrath at the taunts of the departed gyard, slips his hands free of the irons. Most of the hide on his wrists comes with 'em, but Silver Phil don't care. The gyard's back is to him as that gent sits gazin' out an' off along the dusty trail where it winds gray an' hot toward Tucson. Silver Phil organises, stealthy an' cat-cautious; he's out for the gyard's gun as it hangs from his belt, the butt all temptin' an' su'gestive.

"As Silver Phil makes his first move the laig-locks clanks. It ain't louder than the jingle of a brace of copper centouse knockin' together. It's enough, however; it strikes on the y'ear of that thoughtful gyard like the roar of a '44. He emerges from his reverie with a start; the play comes cl'ar as noonday to him in a moment.

"The gyard leaps, without even lookin' 'round, to free himse'f from the clutch of Silver Phil. Which he's the splinter of a second too late. Silver Phil makes a spring like a mountain lion, laig-locks an' all, an' grabs the gun. As the gyard goes clatterin' down sta'rs. Silver Phil pumps two loads into him an' curls him up at the foot. Then Silver Phil hurls the six-shooter at him with a volley of mal'dictions.

"Without pausin' a moment, Silver Phil grabs the stool an' smashes to flinders the locker that holds the 10-gauge Greener. He ain't forgot none; an' he's fair locoed to get that partic'lar weepoon for the other gyard. He rips it from the rack an' shows at the window as his prey comes runnin' to the rescoo of his pard:

“Oh, you! Virg Sanders!’ yells Silver Phil.

Page 16

“The second gyard looks up; an’ as he does, Silver Phil gives him both bar’ls. Forty-two buckshot; an’ that gyard’s so clost he stops ’em all! As he lays dead, Silver Phil breaks the Greener in two, an’ throws, one after the other, stock an’ bar’l at him.

“Which I’ll show you-all what happens when folks loads a gun for me!’ says Silver Phil.

“Nacherally, this artillery practice turns out the entire plaza. The folks is standin’ about the ‘doby which confines Silver Phil, wonderin’ whatever that enthoosias’t’s goin’ to do next. No, they don’t come after him, an’ I’ll tell you why. Shore, thar’s twenty gents lookin’ on, any one of whom, so far as personal apprehensions is involved, would trail Silver Phil single-handed into a wolf’s den. Which he’d feel plumb confident he gets away with Silver Phil an’ the wolves thrown in to even up the odds. Still, no one stretches forth to capture Silver Phil on this yere voylent o’casion. An’ these is the reasons. Thar’s no reg’lar offishul present whose dooty it is to rope up this Silver Phil. If sech had chanced to be thar, you can put down a stack he’d come a-runnin’, an’ him or Silver Phil would have caught up with the two gyards on their journey into the beyond. But when it gets down to private people volunteerin’ for dooty as marshals, folks in the Southwest goes some slothful to work. Thar’s the friends of the accoosed—an’ as a roole he ain’t none friendless—who would mighty likely resent sech zeal. Also, in the case of Silver Phil, his captivity grows out of a cattle war. One third the public so far as it stands about the ‘doby where Silver Phil is hived that time is ‘Three-D’ adherents, mebbby another third is ‘K-in-a-box’ folks, while the last third is mighty likely nootral. Whichever way it breaks, however, thar’s a tacit stand-off, an’ never a sport of ’em lifts a finger or voice to head off Silver Phil.

“Which she’s the inalien’ble right of Americans onder the constitootion to escape with every chance they gets,’ says one.

“That’s whatever!’ coincides his pard; ‘an’ moreover this ain’t our round-up nohow.’

“It’s in that fashion these private citizens adjusts their dooty to the state while pausin’ to look on, in a sperit of cur’osity while Silver Phil makes his next play.

“They don’t wait long. Silver Phil comes out on the roof of a stoop in front. He’s got a Winchester by now, an’ promptly throws the muzzle tharof on a leadin’ citizen. Silver Phil allows he’ll plug this dignitary if they don’t send up a sport with a file to cut loose the laig-locks. Tharupon the pop’lace, full of a warm interest by this time, does better. They gropes about in the war-bags of the Virg Sanders sharp who stops the buckshot an’ gets his keys; a moment after, Silver Phil is free.

Page 17

“Still, this ontirin’ hold-up goes on menacin’ the leadin’ citizen as former. Which now Silver Phil demands a bronco, bridled an’ saddled. He gives the public ten minutes; if the bronco is absent at the end of ten minutes Silver Phil allows he’ll introdooce about a pound of lead into where that village father does his cogitating. The bronco appears with six minutes to spar’. As it arrives, the vivacious Silver Phil jumps off the roof of the stoop—the same bein’ low—an’ is in the saddle an’ out o’ sight while as practised a hand as Huggins is pourin’ out a drink. Where the trail bends ’round a mesa Silver Phil pulls up.

“‘Whoop! whoop! whoopee! for Silver Phil,’ he shouts.

“Then he waves the Winchester, an’ as he spurs ’round the corner of the hill it’s the last that spellbound outfit ever sees of Silver Phil.

“Nacherally now,” remarked my old friend, as he refreshed himself with a mouthful of scotch, “you-all is waitin’ an’ tryin’ to guess wherever does Dan Boggs get in on this yere deal. An’ it won’t take no time to post you; the same bein’ a comfort.

“Not one word do we-all wolves of Wolfville hear of the divertin’ adventures of Silver Phil—shootin’ up his gyards an’ fetchin’ himse’f free—ontil days after. No one in camp has got Silver Phil on his mind at all; at least if he has he deems him safe an’ shore in hock, a-waitin’ to be stretched. Considerin’ what follows, I never experiences trouble in adoptin’ Doc Peets’ argyments that the eepisodes wherein this onhappy Silver Phil figgers sort o’ aggravates his intellects ontill he’s locoed.

“‘Bein’ this Silver Phil’s a degen’rate,’ declar’s Peets, explanatory, ‘he’s easy an’ soon to loco. His mind as well as his moral nacher is onbalanced congenital. Any triflin’ jolt, much less than what that Silver Phil runs up on, an’ his fretful wits is shore to leave the saddle.

“Now that Silver Phil’s free, but loonatic like Peets says, an’ doubly vicious by them taltalin’ gyards, it looks like he thinks of nothin’ but wreckin’ reprisals on all who’s crossed his trail. An’ so with vengeance eatin’ at his crim’nal heart he p’int that bronco’s muzzle straight as a bird flies for Wolfville. Whoever do you-all reckon now he wants? Cherokee Hall? Son, you’ve followed off the wrong waggon track. Silver Phil—imagine the turpitoode of sech a ornery wretch!—is out for the lovely skelp of Faro Nell who detects him in his ha’r-copper frauds that time.

“Which the first intimations we has of Silver Phil after that escape, is one evenin’ about fifth drink time—or as you-all says ‘four o’clock.’ The sun’s still hot an’ high over in the west. Thar’s no game goin’; but bein’ it’s as convenient thar as elsewhere an’ some cooler, Cherokee’s settin’ back of his layout with Faro Nell as usual on her lookout perch. Dan Boggs is across the street in the dancehall door, an’ his pet best bronco is waitin’ saddled in front. Hot an’ drowsy; the street save for these is deserted.

Page 18

"It all takes place in a moment. Thar's a clattering rush; an' then, pony a-muck with sweat an' alkali dust, Silver Phil shows in the portals of the Red Light. Thar's a flash an' a spit of white smoke as he fires his six-shooter straight at Faro Nell.

"Silver Phil is quick, but Cherokee is quicker. Cherokee sweeps Faro Nell from her stool with one motion of his arm an' the bullet that's searchin' for her lifts Cherokee's ha'r a trifle where he 'most gets his head in its way.

"Ondoubted, this Silver Phil allows he c'llects on Faro Nell as planned. He don't shoot twice, an' he don't tarry none, but wheels his wearied pony, gives a yell, an' goes surgin' off.

"But Silver Phil's got down to the turn of that evil deal of his existence. He ain't two hundred yards when Dan Boggs is in the saddle an' ridin' hard. Dan's bronco runs three foot for every one of the pony of Silver Phil's; which that beaten an' broken cayouse is eighty miles from his last mouthful of grass.

"As Dan begins to crowd him, Silver Phil turns in the saddle an' shoots. The lead goes 'way off yonder—wild. Dan, grim an' silent, rides on without returnin' the fire.

"'Which I wouldn't dishonour them guns of mine,' says Dan, explainin' later the phenomenon of him not shootin' none, 'which I wouldn't dishonour them guns by usin' 'em on varmints like this yere Silver Phil.'

"As Silver Phil reorganises for a second shot his bronco stumbles. Silver Phil pitches from the saddle an' strikes the grass to one side. As he half rises, Dan lowers on him like the swoop of a hawk. It's as though Dan's goin' to snatch a handkerchief from the ground.

"As Dan flashes by, he swings low from the saddle an' his right hand takes a troo full grip on that outlaw's shoulder. Dan has the thews an' muscles of a cinnamon b'ar, an' Silver Phil is only a scrap of a man. As Dan straightens up in the stirrups, he heaves this Silver Phil on high to the length of his long arm; an' then he dashes him ag'inst the flint-hard earth; which the manooover—we-all witnesses it from mebbby a quarter of a mile—which the manooover that a-way is shore remorseless! This Silver Phil is nothin' but shattered bones an' bleedin' pulp. He strikes the plains like he's crime from the clouds an' is dead without a quiver.

"'Bury him? No!' says Old Man Enright to Dave Tutt who asks the question. 'Let him find his bed where he falls.

"While Enright speaks, an' as Dan rides up to us at the Red Light, a prompt raven drops down over where this Silver Phil is layin'. Then another raven an' another—black an' wide of wing—comes floatin' down. A coyote yells—first with the short, sharp yelp, an'

then with that multiplied patter of laughter like forty wolves at once. That daylight howl of the coyote alters tells of a death. Shore raven an' wolf is gatherin'. As Enright says: 'This yere Silver Phil ain't likely to be lonesome none to-night.'

Page 19

“Did you kill him, Dan?’ asks Faro Nell.

“Why, no, Nellie,’ replies Dan, as he steps outen the stirrups an’ beams on Faro Nell. She’s still a bit onstrung, bein’ only a little girl when all is said. ‘Why, no, Nellie; I don’t kill him specific as Wolfville onderstands the word; but I dismisses him so effectual the kyard shore falls the same for Silver Phil.’”

CHAPTER II.

Colonel Sterett’s Panther Hunt,

“Panthers, what we-all calls ‘mountain lions,’” observed the Old Cattleman, wearing meanwhile the sapient air of him who feels equipped of his subject, “is plenty furtive, not to say mighty sedyoolous to skulk. That’s why a gent don’t meet up with more of ‘em while pirootin’ about in the hills. Them cats hears him, or they sees him, an’ him still ignorant tharof; an’ with that they bashfully withdraws. Which it’s to be urged in favour of mountain lions that they never forces themse’fs on no gent; they’re shore considerate, that a-way, an’ speshul of themse’fs. If one’s ever hurt, you can bet it won’t be a accident. However, it ain’t for me to go ‘round impugnin’ the motives of no mountain lion; partic’lar when the entire tribe is strangers to me complete. But still a love of trooth compels me to concede that if mountain lions ain’t cowardly, they’re shore cautious a lot. Cattle an’ calves they passes up as too bellicose, an’ none of ‘em ever faces any anamile more warlike than a baby colt or mebbly a half-grown deer. I’m ridin’ along the Caliente once when I hears a crashin’ in the bushes on the bluff above—two hundred foot high, she is, an’ as sheer as the walls of this yere tavern. As I lifts my eyes, a fear-frenzied mare an’ colt comes chargin’ up an’ projects themse’fs over the precipice an’ lands in the valley below. They’re dead as Joolius Caesar when I rides onto ‘em, while a brace of mountain lions is skirtin’ up an’ down the aige of the bluff they leaps from, mewin’ an’ lashin’ their long tails in hot enthoosiasm. Shore, the cats has been chasin’ the mare an’ foal, an’ they locoes ‘em to that extent they don’t know where they’re headin’ an’ makes the death jump I relates. I bangs away with my six-shooter, but beyond givin’ the mountain lions a convulsive start I can’t say I does any execootion. They turns an’ goes streakin’ it through the pine woods like a drunkard to a barn raisin’.

“Timid? Shore! They’re that timid seminary girls compared to ‘em is as sternly courageous as a passel of buccaneers. Out in Mitchell’s canyon a couple of the Lee-Scott riders cuts the trail of a mountain lion and her two kittens. Now whatever do you-all reckon this old tabby does? Basely deserts her offsprings without even barin’ a tooth, an’ the cow-punchers takes ‘em gently by their tails an’ beats out their joovenile brains. That’s straight; that mother lion goes swarmin’ up the canyon like she ain’t got a minute to live. An’ you can gamble the limit that where a anamile sees its children perish without frontin' up for war, it don't possess the commonest roodiments of sand.

Sech, son, is mountain lions.

Page 20

“It’s one evenin’ in the Red Light when Colonel Sterett, who’s got through his day’s toil on that Coyote paper he’s editor of, unfolds concernin’ a panther round-up which he pulls off in his yooth.

“‘This panther hunt,’ says Colonel Sterett, as he fills his third tumbler, ‘occurs when mighty likely I’m goin’ on seventeen winters. I’m a leader among my young companions at the time; in fact, I allers is. An’ I’m proud to say that my soopremacy that a-way is doo to the dom’nant character of my intellects. I’m ever bright an’ sparklin’ as a child, an’ I recalls how my aptitooode for learnin’ promotes me to be regarded as the smartest lad in my set. If thar’s visitors, to the school, or if the selectmen invades that academy to sort o’ size us up, the teacher allers plays me on ’em. I’d go to the front for the outfit. Which I’m wont on sech harrowin’ o’casions to recite a ode—the teacher’s done wrote it himse’f—an’ which is entitled Napoleon’s Mad Career. Thar’s twenty-four stanzas to it; an’ while these interlopin’ selectmen sets thar lookin’ owley an’ sagacious, I’d wallop loose with the twenty-four verses, stampin’ up and down, an’ accompanyin’ said recitations with sech a multiood of reckless gestures, it comes plenty clost to backin’ everybody plumb outen the room. Yere’s the first verse:

I’d drink an’ sw’ar an’ r’ar an’ t’ar
An’ fall down in the mud,
While the y’earth for forty miles about
Is kivered with my blood.

“‘You-all can see from that speciment that our schoolmaster ain’t simply flirtin’ with the muses when he originates that epic; no sir, he means business; an’ whenever I throws it into the selectmen, I does it jestice. The trustees used to silently line out for home when I finishes, an’ never a yeeep. It stuns ’em; it shore fills ’em to the brim!

“‘As I gazes r’arward,’ goes on the Colonel, as by one rapt impulse he uplifts both his eyes an’ his nosepaint, ‘as I gazes r’arward, I says, on them sun-filled days, an’ speshul if ever I gets betrayed into talkin’ about ’em, I can hardly t’ar myse’f from the subject. I explains yeretofore, that not only by inclination but by birth, I’m a shore-enough ’ristocrat. This captaincy of local fashion I assoomes at a tender age. I wears the record as the first child to don shoes throughout the entire summer in that neighbourhood; an’ many a time an’ oft does my yoothful but envy-eaten compeers lambaste me for the insultin’ innovation. But I sticks to my moccasins; an’ to-day shoes in the Bloo Grass is almost as yooniversal as the lickin’ habit.

“‘Thar dawns a hour, however, when my p’sition in the van of Kaintucky ton comes within a ace of bein’ ser’ously shook. It’s on my way to school one dewey mornin’ when I gets involved all inadvertent in a onhappy rupture with a polecat. I never does know how the misonderstandin’ starts. After all, the seeds of said dispoote is by no means important; it’s enough to say that polecat finally has me thoroughly convinced.

Page 21

Followin' the difference an' my defeat, I'm witless enough to keep goin' on to school, whereas I should have returned homeward an' cast myse'f upon my parents as a sacred trust. Of course, when I'm in school I don't go impartin' my troubles to the other chil'en; I emyooolates the heroism of the Spartan boy who stands to be eat by a fox, an' keeps 'em to myself. But the views of my late enemy is not to be smothered; they appeals to my young companions; who tharupon puts up a most onneedful riot of coughin's an' sneezin's. But nobody knows me as the party who's so pungent.

"It's a tryin' moment. I can see that, once I'm located, I'm goin' to be as onpop'lar as a b'ar in a hawg pen; I'll come tumblin' from my pinnacle in that proud commoonity as the glass of fashion an' the mold of form. You can go your bottom peso, the thought causes me to feel plenty perturbed.

"At this peril I has a inspiration; as good, too, as I ever entertains without the aid of rum. I determines to cast the opprobrium on some other boy an' send the hunt of gen'ral indignation sweepin' along his trail.

"Thar's a innocent infant who's a stoodent at this temple of childish learnin' an' his name is Riley Bark. This Riley is one of them giant children who's only twelve an' weighs three hundred pounds. An' in proportions as Riley is a son of Anak, physical, he's dwarfed mental; he ain't half as well upholstered with brains as a shepherd dog. That's right; Riley's intellects, is like a fly in a saucer of syrup, they struggles 'round plumb slow. I decides to uplift Riley to the public eye as the felon who's disturbin' that seminary's sereenity. Comin' to this decision, I p'int at him where he's planted four seats ahead, all tangled up in a spellin' book, an' says in a loud whisper to a child who's sittin' next:

"Throw him out!"

"That's enough. No gent will ever realise how easy it is to direct a people's sentiment ontill he take a whirl at the game. In two minutes by the teacher's bull's-eye copper watch, every soul knows it's pore Riley; an' in three, the teacher's done drug Riley out doors by the ha'r of his head an' chased him home. Gents, I look back on that yoothful feat as a triumph of diplomacy; it shore saves my standin' as the Beau Brummel of the Bloo Grass.

"Good old days, them!" observes the Colonel mournfully, 'an' ones never to come ag'in! My sternest studies is romances, an' the peroosals of old tales as I tells you-all prior fills me full of moss an' mockin' birds in equal parts. I reads deep of Walter Scott an' waxes to be a sharp on Moslems speshul. I dreams of the Siege of Acre, an' Richard the Lion Heart; an' I simply can't sleep nights for honin' to hold a tournament an' joust a whole lot for some fair lady's love.

Page 22

“Once I commits the error of my career by joustin’ with my brother Jeff. This yere Jeff is settin’ on the bank of the Branch fishin’ for bullpouts at the time, an’ Jeff don’t know I’m hoverin’ near at all. Jeff’s reedic’lous fond of fishin’; which he’d sooner fish than read Paradise Lost. I’m romancin’ along, sim’larly bent, when I notes Jeff perched on the bank. To my boyish imagination Jeff at once turns to be a Paynim. I drops my bait box, couches my fishpole, an’ emittin’ a impromptoo warcry, charges him. It’s the work of a moment; Jeff’s onhossed an’ falls into the Branch.

“But thar’s bitterness to follow vict’ry. Jeff emerges like Diana from the bath an’ frales the wamus off me with a club. Talk of puttin’ a crimp in folks! Gents when Jeff’s wrath is assuaged I’m all on one side like the leanin’ tower of Pisa. Jeff actooally confers a skew-gee to my spinal column.

“A week later my folks takes me to a doctor. That practitioner puts on his specs an’ looks me over with jealous care.

““Whatever’s wrong with him, Doc?” says my father.

““Nothin’,” says the physician, “only your son Willyum’s five inches out o’ plumb.”

“Then he rigs a contraption made up of guy-ropes an’ stay-laths, an’ I has to wear it; an’ mebbly in three or four weeks he’s got me warped back into the perpendic’lar.’

“But how about this cat hunt?” asks Dan Boggs. ‘Which I don’t aim to be introosive none, but I’m camped yere through the second drink waitin’ for it, an’ these procrastinations is makin’ me kind o’ batty.’

“That panther hunt is like this,’ says the Colonel turnin’ to Dan. ‘At the age of seventeen, me an’ eight or nine of my intimate brave comrades founds what we-all denom’nates as the “Chevy Chase Huntin’ Club.” Each of us maintains a passel of odds an’ ends of dogs, an’ at stated intervals we convenes on hosses, an’ with these fourscore curs at our tails goes yellin’ an’ skally-hootin’ up an’ down the countryside allowin’ we’re shore a band of Nimrods.

“The Chevy Chasers ain’t been in bein’ as a institootion over long when chance opens a gate to ser’ous work. The deep snows in the Eastern mountains it looks like has done drove a panther into our neighbourhood. You could hear of him on all sides. Folks glimpses him now an’ then. They allows he’s about the size of a yearlin’ calf; an’ the way he pulls down sech feeble people as sheep or lays desolate some he’pless henroost don’t bother him a bit. This panther spreads a horror over the county. Dances, pra’er meetin’s, an’ even poker parties is broken up, an’ the social life of that region begins to bog down. Even a weddin’ suffers; the bridesmaids stayin’ away lest this ferocious monster should show up in the road an’ chaw one of ‘em while she’s en route for the scene of trouble. That’s gospel trooth! the pore deserted bride has to heel an' handle herse'f an' never a friend to yoonite her sobs with hers doorin' that weddin' ordeal. The old ladies present shakes their heads a heap solemn.

Page 23

““It’s a worse augoory,” says one, “than the hoots of a score of squinch owls.”

“When this reign of terror is at its height, the local eye is rolled appealin’ly towards us Chevy Chasers. We rises to the opportoonty. Day after day we’re ridin’ the hills an’ vales, readin’ the milk white snow for tracks. An’ we has success. One mornin’ I comes up on two of the Brackenridge boys an’ five more of the Chevy Chasers settin’ on their hosses at the Skinner cross roads. Bob Crittenden’s gone to turn me out, they says. Then they p’int down to a handful of close-wove bresh an’ stunted timber an’ allows that this maraudin’ cat-o-mount is hidin’ thar; they sees him go skulkin’ in.

“Gents, I ain’t above admittin’ that the news puts my heart to a canter. I’m brave; but conflicts with wild an’ savage beasts is to me a novelty an’ while I faces my fate without a flutter, I’m yere to say I’d sooner been in pursoot of minks or raccoons or some varmint whose grievous cap’bilities I can more ackerately stack up an’ in whose merry ways I’m better versed. However, the dauntless blood of my grandsire mounts in my cheek; an’ as if the shade of that old Trojan is thar personal to su’gest it, I searches forth a flask an’ renoos my sperit; thus qualified for perils, come in what form they may, I resoloutely stands my hand.

“Thar’s forty dogs if thar’s one in our company as we pauses at the Skinner crossroads. An’ when the Crittenden yooth returns, he brings with him the Rickett boys an’ forty added dogs. Which it’s worth a ten-mile ride to get a glimpse of that outfit of canines! Thar’s every sort onder the canopy: thar’s the stolid hound, the alert fice, the sapient collie; that is thar’s individyool beasts wherein the hound, or fice, or collie seems to preedominate as a strain. The trooth is thar’s not that dog a-whinin’ about our hosses’ fetlocks who ain’t proudly descended from fifteen different tribes, an’ they shorely makes a motley mass meetin’. Still, they’re good, zealous dogs; an’ as they’re going to go for’ard an’ take most of the resks of that panther, it seems invidious to criticise ’em.

“One of the Twitty boys rides down an’ puts the eighty or more dogs into the bresh. The rest of us lays back an’ strains our eyes. Thar he is! A shout goes up as we descries the panther stealin’ off by a far corner. He’s headin’ along a hollow that’s full of bresh an’ baby timber an’ runs parallel with the pike. Big an’ yaller he is; we can tell from the slight flash we gets of him as he darts into a second clump of bushes. With a cry—what young Crittenden calls a “view halloo,”—we goes stampedin’ down the pike in pursoot.

“Our dogs is sta’nch; they shore does themse’fs proud. Singin’ in twenty keys, reachin’ from growls to yelps an’ from yelps to shrillest screams, they pushes dauntlessly on the fresh trail of their terrified quarry. Now an’ then we gets a squint of the panther as he skulks from one copse to another jest ahead. Which he’s goin’ like a arrow; no mistake! As for us Chevy Chasers, we parallels the hunt, an’ continyoos poundin’ the Skinner turnpike abreast of the pack, ever an’ anon givin’ a encouragin’ shout as we briefly sights our game.

Page 24

“Gents,’ says Colonel Sterett, as he ag’in refreshes himse’f, ’it’s needless to go over that hunt in detail. We hustles the flyin’ demon full eighteen miles, our faithful dogs crowdin’ close an’ breathless at his coward heels. Still, they don’t catch up with him; he streaks it like some saffron meteor.

“Only once does we approach within strikin’ distance; that’s when he crosses at old Stafford’s whiskey still. As he glides into view, Crittenden shouts:

““Thar he goes!”

“For myse’f I’m prepared. I’ve got one of these misguided cap-an’-ball six-shooters that’s built doorin’ the war; an’ I cuts that hardware loose! This weepson seems a born profligate of lead, for the six chambers goes off together. Which you should have seen the Chevy Chasers dodge! An’ well they may; that broadside ain’t in vain! My aim is so troo that one of the r’armost dogs evolves a howl an’ rolls over; then he sets up gnawin’ an’ lickin’ his off hind laig in frantic alternations. That hunt is done for him. We leaves him doctorin’ himse’f an’ picks him up two hours later on our triumphant return.

“As I states, we harries that foogitive panther for eighteen miles an’ in our hot ardour founders two hosses. Fatigue an’ weariness begins to overpower us; also our prey weakens along with the rest. In the half glimpses we now an’ ag’in gets of him its plain that both pace an’ distance is tellin’ fast. Still, he presses on; an’ as thar’s no spur like fear, that panther holds his distance.

“But the end comes. We’ve done run him into a rough, wild stretch of country where settlements is few an’ cabins roode. Of a sudden, the panther emerges onto the road an’ goes rackin’ along the trail. We pushes our spent steeds to the utmost.

“Thar’s a log house ahead; out in the stump-filled lot in front is a frowsy woman an’ five small children. The panther leaps the rickety worm-fence an’ heads straight as a bullet for the cl’arin’! Horrors! the sight freezes our marrows! Mad an’ savage, he’s doo to bite a hunk outen that devoted household! Mutooally callin’ to each other, we goads our hosses to the utmost. We gain on the panther! He may wound but he won’t have time to slay that fam’ly.

“Gents, it’s a soopreme moment! The panther makes for the female squatter an’ her litter, we pantin’ an’ pressin’ clost behind. The panther is among ’em; the woman an’ the children seems transfixed by the awful spectacle an’ stands rooted with open eyes an’ mouths. Our emotions shore beggars deescriptions.

“Now ensooes a scene to smite the hardiest of us with dismay. No sooner does the panther find himse’f in the midst of that he’pless bevy of little ones, than he stops, turns round abrupt, an’ sets down on his tail; an’ then upliftin’ his muzzle he busts into shrieks an’ yells an’ howls an’ cries, a complete case of dog hysterics! That’s what he is, a great yeller dog; his reason is now a wrack because we harasses him the eighteen miles.

Page 25

“Thar’s a ugly outcast of a squatter, mattock in hand, comes tumblin’ down the hillside from some’ers out back of the shanty where he’s been grubbin’:

““What be you-all eediots chasin’ my dog for?” demands this onkempt party. Then he menaces us with the implement.

“We makes no retort but stands passive. The great orange brute whose nerves has been torn to rags creeps to the squatter an’ with mournful howls explains what we’ve made him suffer.

“No, thar’s nothin’ further to do an’ less to be said. That cavalcade, erstwhile so gala an’ buoyant, drags itself wearily homeward, the exhausted dogs in the r’ar walkin’ stiff an’ sore like their laigs is wood. For more’n a mile the complainin’ howls of the hysterical yellor dog is wafted to our y’ears. Then they ceases; an’ we figgers his sympathizin’ master has done took him into the shanty an’ shet the door.

“No one comments on this adventure, not a word is heard. Each is silent until we mounts the Big Murray hill. As we collects ourse’fs on this eminence one of the Brackenridge boys holds up his hand for a halt. “Gents,” he says, as—hosses, hunters an’ dogs—we-all gathers ‘round, “gents, I moves you the Chevy Chase Huntin’ Club yereby stands adjourned sine die.” Thar’s a moment’s pause, an’ then as by one impulse every gent, hoss an’ dog, says “Ay!” It’s yoonanimous, an’ from that hour till now the Chevy Chase Huntin’ Club ain’t been nothin’ save tradition. But that panther shore disappears; it’s the end of his vandalage; an’ ag’in does quadrilles, pra’rs, an’ poker resoom their wonted sway. That’s the end; an’ now, gents, if Black Jack will caper to his dooties we’ll uplift our drooped energies with the usual forty drops.”

CHAPTER III.

How Faro Nell Dealt Bank.

“Riches,” remarked the Old Cattleman, “riches says you! Neither you-all nor any other gent is competent to state whether in the footure he amasses wealth or not. The question is far beyond the throw of your rope.”

My friend’s tone breathed a note of strong contradiction while his glance was the glance of experience. I had said that I carried no hope of becoming rich; that the members of my tribe were born with their hands open and had such hold of money as a riddle has of water. It was this which moved him to expostulatory denial.

“This matter of wealth, that a-way,” he continued, “is a mighty sight a question of luck. Shore, a gent has to have capacity to grasp a chance an’ savey sufficient to get his chips down right. But this chance, an’ whether it offers itse’f to any specific sport, is frequent accident an’ its comin’ or failure to come depends on conditions over which the party about to be enriched ain't got no control. That's straight, son! You backtrack any fortune to its beginning an some'ers along the trail or at the farthest end you'll come up with the fact that it took a accident or two, what we-all darkened mortals calls 'luck,' to make good the play. It's like gettin' shot gettin' rich is; all you has to do is be present personal at the time, an' the bullet does the rest.

Page 26

"You distrusts these doctrines. You shore won't if you sets down hard an' thinks. Suppose twenty gents has made a surround an' is huntin' a b'ar. Only one is goin' to down him. An' in his clumsy blunderin' the b'ar is goin' to select his execootioner himse'f. That's a fact; the party who downs the b'ar, final, ain't goin' to pick the b'ar out; the b'ar's goin' to pick him out. An' it's the same about wealth; one gent gets the b'ar an' the other nineteen—an' they're as cunnin' an' industr'ous as the lucky party—don't get nothing—don't even get a shot. I repeats tharfore, that you-all settin' yere this evenin', firin' off aimless observations, don't know whether you'll quit rich or not."

At the close of his dissertation, my talkative companion puffed a cloud which seemed to hang above his venerable head in a fashion of heavy blue approval. I paused as one impressed by the utter wisdom of the old gentleman. Then I took another tack.

"Speaking of wealth," I said, "tell me concerning the largest money you ever knew to be won or lost at faro—tell me a gambling story."

"Tell you-all a gamblin' tale," he repeated, and then mused as if lost in retrospection. "If I hesitates it's because of a multitoode of incidents from which to draw. I've beheld some mighty cur'ous doin's at the gamblin' tables. Once I knows a party who sinks his hopeless head on the layout an' dies as he loses his last chip. This don't happen in Wolfville none. No, I don't say folks ain't cashed in at farobank in that excellent hamlet an' gone singin' to their home above; but it ain't heart disease. Usual it's guns; the same bein' invoked by sech inadvertencies as pickin' up some other gent's bet.

"Tell you-all a story about gamblin'! Now I reckons the time Faro Nell rescoos Cherokee Hall from rooin is when I sees the most dinero changed in at one play. You can gamble that's a thrillin' eepisode when Faro Nell steps in between Cherokee an' the destroyer. It's the gossip of the camp for days, an' when Wolfville discusses anything for days that outfit's plumb moved.

"This gent who crowds Cherokee to the wall performs the feat deliberate. He organises a sort o' campaign ag'in Cherokee; what you might term a fiscal dooel, an' at the finish he has Cherokee corralled for his last peso. It's at that p'int Nell cuts in an' redeems the sityooation a heap. It's all on the squar'; this invadin' sport simply outlucks the bank. That, an' the egreegious limit Cherokee gives him, is what does the trick.

"In Wolfville, we-all allers recalls that sharp-set gent who comes after Cherokee with respect. In fact he wins our encomiums before he sets in ag'in Cherokee—before ever he gets his second drink at the Red Light bar. He comes ramblin' over with Old Monte from Tucson one evenin'; that's the first glimpse we has of him. An' for a hour, mebbly, followin' his advent, seein' the gen'ral herd is busy with the mail, he has the Red Light to himse'f.

Page 27

“On this yere o’casion, thar’s likewise present in Wolfville—he’s been infringin’ ‘round some three days—a onsettled an’ migratory miscreant who’s name is Ugly Collins. He’s in a heap of ill repoote in the territories, this Ugly Collins is; an’ only he contreebutes the information when he arrives in camp that his visit is to be mighty temp’rary, Enright would have signed up Jack Moore to take his guns an’ stampede him a lot.

“At the time I’m talkin’ of, as thar’s no one who’s that abandoned as to go writin’ letters to Ugly Collins, it befalls he’s plenty footloose. This leesure on the part of Ugly Collins turns out some disastrous for that party. Not havin’ no missives to read leaves him free to go weavin’ about permiscus an’ it’s while he’s strayin’ here an’ thar that he tracks up on this stranger who’s come after Cherokee.

“Ugly Collins sees our pilgrim in the Red Light an’, except Black Jack,—who of course is present offishul—the stranger’s alone. He’s weak an’ meek an’ shook by a cough that sounds like the overture to a fooner. Ugly Collins, who’s a tyrannizin’ cowardly form of outcast, sizes him up as a easy prey. He figgers he’ll have a heap of evil fun with him, Ugly Collins does. Tharupon he approaches the consumptive stranger:

“‘You-all seems plenty ailin’, pard,’ says Ugly Collins.

“‘Which I shore ain’t over peart none,’ retorts the stranger.

“‘An’ you-all can put down a bet,’ returns Ugly Collins, ‘I learns of your ill-health with regrets. It’s this a-way: I ain’t had no exercise yet this evenin’; an’ as I tracks in yere, I registers a vow to wallop the first gent I meets up with to whom I’ve not been introdooed;—merely by way of stretchin’ my muscles. Now I must say—an’ I admits it with sorrow—that you-all is that onhappy sport. It’s no use; I knows I’ll loathe myse’f for crawlin’ the hump of a gent who’s totterin’ on the brink of the grave; but whatever else can I do? Vows is vows an’ must be kept, so you might as well prepare yourse’f for a cloud of sudden an’ painful vicissitoodes.’

“As Ugly Collins says this he kind o’ reaches for the invalid gent where he’s camped in a cha’r. It’s a onfortunate gesture; the invalid—as quick as a rattlesnake,—prodooes a derringer, same as Doc Peets allers packs, from his surtoot an’ the bullet carries away most of Ugly Collins’ lower jaw.

“‘You-all is goin’ to be a heap sight more of a audience than a orator yereafter, Collins,’ says Doc Peets, as he ties up the villain’s visage that a-way. ‘Also, you oughter be less reckless an’ get the address of your victims before embarkin’ on them skelp-collectin’ enterprises of yours. That gent you goes ag’in’st is Doc Holliday; as hard a game as lurks anywhere between the Slope an’ the Big Muddy.’

“Does the Strangers do anything to this Holliday? Why, no, not much; all they does is present him with a Colt’s-44 along with the compliments of the camp.

Page 28

“‘An’ it’s to be deplored,’ says Enright, when he makes the presentation speech to Holliday, ‘that you-all don’t have this weep on when you cuts loose at Collins instead of said jimcrow derringer. In sech events, that hoss-thief’s death would have been assured. Shore! shootin’ off Collins’ jaw is good as far as it goes, but it can’t be regyarded as no sech boon as downin’ him complete.

“It’s after supper when this Holliday encounters Cherokee; the two has a conference. This Holliday lays bar’ his purpose.

“‘Which I’m yere,’ says this Holliday, ‘not only for your money, but I wants the camp.’ Then he goes for’ard an’ proposes that they plays till one is broke; an, if it’s Cherokee who goes down, he is to vamos the outfit while Holliday succeeds to his game. ‘An’ the winner is to stake his defeated adversary to one thousand dollars wherewith to begin life anew,’ concloodes this Holliday.

“‘Which what you states seems like agreeable offers,’ says Cherokee, an’ he smiles clever an’ gentlemanly. ‘How strong be you-all, may I ask?’

“‘Thirty thousand dollars in thirty bills,’ replies this Holliday. ‘An’ now may I enquire how strong be you? I also likes to know how long a trail I’ve got to travel.’

“‘My roll is about forty thousand big,’ says Cherokee. Then he goes on: ‘It’s all right; I’ll open a game for you at second drink time sharp.’

“‘That’s comfortin’ to hear,’ retorts this Holliday. ‘The chances,—what with splits an’ what with the ten thousand you oversizes me,—is nacherally with you; but I takes ‘em. If I lose, I goes back with a even thousand; if I win, you-all hits the trail with a thousand, while I’m owner of your roll an’ bank. Does that onderstandin’ go?’

“‘It goes!’ says Cherokee. Then he turns off for a brief powwow with Faro Nell.

“‘But thar’s one thing you-all forgets, Cherokee,’ says Nell. ‘If he breaks you, he’s got to go on an’ break me. I’ve a bundle of three thousand; he’s got to get it all before ever the play is closed. Tell this yere Holliday party that.’

“Cherokee argues ag’in it; but Nell stamps ‘round an’ starts to weep some, an’ at that, like every other troo gent, he gives in abject.

“‘Thar’s a bet I overlooks,’ observes Cherokee, when he resoomes his talk with this Holliday; ‘it’s my partner. It’s only a little matter of three thousand, but the way the scheme frames itse’f up, after I’m down an’ out, you’ll have to break my partner before Wolfville’s all your own.’

“‘That’s eminent satisfactory,’ returns this Holliday. ‘An’ I freely adds that your partner is a dead game sport to take so brief a fortune an’—win all, lose all—go after more’n twenty times as much. Your partner’s a shore enough optimist that a-way.’

“Cherokee don’t make no retort. This Holliday ain’t posted none that the partner Cherokee’s mentionin’ is Faro Nell, an’ Cherokee allows he won’t onbosom himse’f on that p’int onless his hand is forced.

Page 29

"When the time arrives to open the game, the heft of Wolfville's public is gathered at the Red Light. The word goes 'round as to the enterprisin' Holliday bein' out for Cherokee's entire game; an' the prospect of seein' a limit higher than a cat's back, an' a dooel to the death, proves mighty pop'lar. The play opens to a full house, shore!

"What limit do you give me?' says this Holliday, with a sort o' cough, at the same time settin' in opposite to Cherokee. 'Be lib'ral; I ain't more'n a year to live, an' I've got to play 'em high an' hard to get average action. If I'm in robust health now, with a long, useful life before me, the usual figgers would do. Considerin' my wasted health, however, I shore hopes you'll say something like the even thousand.'

"Which I'll do better than that,' returns Cherokee, as he snaps the deck in the box, 'I'll let you fix the limit to suit yourse'f. Make it the ceilin' if the sperit moves you.'

"That's gen'rous!' says Holliday. 'An' to mark my appreciation tharof, I'll jest nacherally take every resk of splits an' put ten thousand in the pot, coppered; ten thousand in the big squar'; an' ten thousand, coppered, on the high kyard.'

"Son, we-all sports standin' lookin' on draws a deep breath. Thirty thousand in three ten thousand dollar bets, an' all on the layout at once, marks a epock in Wolfville business life wherefrom folks can onblushin'ly date time! Thar it lays however, an' the two sharps most onmoved tharby is Cherokee an' Holliday themse'fs.

"Turn your game!' says this Holliday, when his money is down, an' leanin' back to light a seegyar.

"Cherokee makes the turn. Never does I witness action so sudden an' complete! It's shore the sharpest! The top kyard as the deck lays in the box is a ten-spot. An' as the papers is shoved forth, how do you-all reckon they falls! I'm a Mexican! if they don't come seven-king! This Holliday wins all along; Cherokee is out thirty thousand an' only three kyards showed! How's that for perishin' flesh an' blood!

"I looks at Cherokee; his face is as ca'm as a Injun's; he's too finely fibred a sport to so much as let a eyelash quiver. This Holliday is equally onemotional. Cherokee shoves over three yaller chips.

"Call 'em ten thousand each,' says Cherokee. Then he waits for this Holliday to place his next bets.

"Since you-all has exackly that sum left in your treasury,' observes this Holliday, puffin' his seegyar, 'I reckons I'll let one of these yaller tokens go, coppered, on the high kyard ag'in. You-all doubles or breaks right yere.'

"The turn falls trey-eight. Cherokee takes in that ten thousand dollar chip.

“‘Bein’s that I’m still playin’ on velvet,’ remarks this Holliday, an’ his tone is listless an’ languid like he’s only half interested, ‘I’ll go twenty thousand on the high kyard, open. This trip we omits the copper.’

Page 30

"The first kyard to show is a deuce. It's better than ten to one Cherokee will win. But disapp'intment chokes the camp; the next kyard is a ace, an' Cherokee's swept off his moccasins. The bank is broke; and to signify as much, Cherokee turns his box on its side, counts over forty thousand dollars to this Holliday an' gets up from the dealer's cha'r.

"As Cherokee rises, Faro Nell slides off the lookout's stool an' into the vacated cha'r. When Cherokee loses the last bet I hears Nell's teeth come together with a click. I don't dare look towards her at the time; but now, when she turns the box back, takes out the deck, riffles an' returns it to its place I gives her a glance. Nell's as game as Cherokee. As she sets over ag'inst this lucky invalid her colour is high an' her eyes like two stars.

"An' now you've got to break me,' says Nell to this Holliday. 'Also, we restores the statu quo, as Colonel Sterett says in that Coyote paper, an' the limit retreats to a even hundred dollars.'

"Be you-all the partner Mister Hall mentions?' asks this Holliday, at the same time takin' off his sombrero an' throwin' away his seegyar.

"Nell says she is.

"Miss,' says this Holliday, 'I feels honoured to find myse'f across the layout from so much sperit an' beauty. A limit of one hundred, says you; an' your word is law! As a first step then, give me three thousand dollars worth of chips an' make 'em fifty dollars each. I'll take the same chance with you on that question of splits I does former, an' I wants a hundred on every kyard, middle to win ag'in the ends.'

"The deal begins; Nell is winner from the jump; she takes in three bets to lose one plumb down to the turn. This Holliday calls the turn for the limit; an' loses. The kyards go into the box ag'in an' a next deal ensooes. So it continyoos; an' Nell beats this Holliday hard for half a hour. Nell sees she's in luck; an' she feels that strong she concloods to press it some.

"The limit's five hundred!' says Nell to this Holliday. 'Come after me!'

"Holliday bows like he's complimented. 'I'm after you; an' I comes a-runnin',' he says.

"Down goes his money all over the lay-out; only now its five hundred instead of one hundred.

"It's no avail, this Holliday still loses. At the end of a hour Nell sizes up her roll; she's a leetle over forty thousand strong; jest where Cherokee stands at the start.

“Nell pauses as she’s about to put the deck in the box for a deal. She looks at this Holliday a heap thoughtful. That look excites Dan Boggs who’s been on the brink of fits since ever the play begins, he’s that ’motional.

““Don’t raise the limit, Nell!” says Dan in a awful whisper. ‘That’s where Cherokee’s weak at the go-off. He ought never to have thrown away the limit.’

“Nell casts her eyes—they’re burnin’ like coals!—on Dan. I can see his bluff about Cherokee bein’ weak has done decided her mind.

Page 31

“Cherokee does right,’ says Nell to Dan, ‘like Cherokee allers does. An’ I’ll do the same as Cherokee. Stranger,’ goes on Nell, turnin’ from Dan to this Holliday; ‘go as far as you likes. The bridle’s off the hoss.’

“An’ much obleeged to you, Miss!’ says this Holliday, with another of them p’lite bows. ‘As the kyards goes in the box, I makes you the same three bets I makes first to Mister Hall. Ten thousand, coppered, in the pot; ten thousand, open, in the big squar’; an’ ten thousand on the high kyard, coppered.’

“An’ now as then,’ says Nell, sort o’ catchin’ her breath, ‘the ten-spot’s the soda kyard!’

“Son, it won’t happen ag’in in a billion years! Nell’s right hand shakes a trifle—she’s only a child, mind, an’ ain’t got the nerves that goes with case-hardened sports—as she shoves the ten-spot forth. But it’s comin’ her way; her luck holds; as certain as we all sets yere drinkin’ toddy, the same two kyards shows for her as for Cherokee, but this time they falls ‘king-seven’; the bank wins, an’ pore Holliday is cleaned out.

“Thar, Cherokee,’ says Nell, an’ thar’s a soft smile an’ a sigh of deep content goes with the observation, ‘thar’s your bank ag’in; only it’s thirty thousand stronger than it is four hours ago.’

“Your bank, ladybird, you means!’ says Cherokee.

“Well, our bank, then,’ retorts Nell. ‘What’s the difference? Don’t you-all tell me we’re partners?’ Then Nell motions to Black Jack. ‘The drinks is on me, Jack,’ she says; ‘see what the house will have.’”

CHAPTER IV.

How The Raven Died.

“Which if you-all is out to hear of Injuns, son,” observed the Old Cattleman, doubtfully, “the best I can do is shet my eyes an’ push along regyardless, like a cayouse in a storm of snow. But I don’t guarantee no facts; none whatever! I never does bend myse’f to severe study of savages an’ what notions I packs concernin’ ’em is the casual frootes of what I accidental hears an’ what I sees. It’s only now an’ then, as I observes former, that Injuns invades Wolfville; an’ when they does, we-all scowls ’em outen camp—sort o’ makes a sour front, so as to break ’em early of habits of visitin’ us. We shore don’t hone none to have ’em hankerin’ ’round.

“Nacherally, I makes no doubt that if you goes clost to Injuns an’ studies their little game you finds some of ’em good an’ some bad, some gaudy an’ some sedate, some cu’rous an’ some indifferent, same as you finds among shore-enough folks. It’s so with mules an’ broncos; wherefore, then, may not these differences exist among Injuns? Come squar' to the turn, you-all finds white folks separated the same. Some gents follows off one waggon track an' some another; some even makes a new trail.

Page 32

“Speakin’ of what’s opposite in folks, I one time an’ ag’in sees two white chiefs of scouts who frequent comes pirootin’ into Wolfville from the Fort. Each has mebbly a score of Injuns at his heels who pertains to him personal. One of these scout chiefs is all buckskins, fringes, beads an’ feathers from y’ears to hocks, while t’other goes garbed in a stiff hat with a little jim crow rim—one of them kind you deenom’nates as a darby—an’ a diag’nal overcoat; one chief looks like a dime novel on a spree an’ t’other as much like the far East as he saveys how. An’ yet, son, this voylent person in buckskins is a Second Lootenant—a mere boy, he is—from West P’int; while that outcast in the reedic’lous hat is foaled on the plains an’ never does go that clost to the risin’ sun as to glimpse the old Missouri. The last form of maverick bursts frequent into Western bloom; it’s their ambition, that a-way, to deloode you into deemin’ ’em as fresh from the States as one of them tomatter airtights.

“Thar’s old gent Jeffords; he’s that sort. Old Jeffords lives for long with the Apaches; he’s found among ’em when Gen’ral Crook—the old ‘Grey Fox’—an’ civilisation and gatlin’ guns comes into Arizona arm in arm. I used to note old Jeffords hibernatin’ about the Oriental over in Tucson. I shore reckons he’s procrastinatin’ about thar yet, if the Great Sperit ain’t done called him in. As I says, old Jeffords is that long among the Apaches back in Cochise’s time that the mem’ry of man don’t run none to the contrary. An’ yet no gent ever sees old Jeffords wearin’ anything more savage than a long-tail black surtoot an’ one of them stove pipe hats. Is Jeffords dangerous? No, you-all couldn’t call him a distinct peril; still, folks who goes devotin’ themse’fs to stirrin’ Jeffords up jest to see if he’s alive gets disasterous action. He has long grey ha’r an’ a tangled white beard half-way down his front; an’ with that old plug hat an’ black coat he’s a sight to frighten children or sour milk! Still, Jeffords is all right. As long as towerists an’ other inquisitive people don’t go pesterin’ Jeffords, he shore lets ’em alone. Otherwise, you might as well be up the same saplin’ with a cinnamon b’ar; which you’d most likely hear something drop a lot!

“For myse’f, I likes old Jeffords, an’ considers him a pleasin’ conundrum. About tenth drink time he’d take a cha’r an’ go camp by himse’f in a far corner, an’ thar he’d warble hymns. Many a time as I files away my nosepaint in the Oriental have I been regaled with,

Jesus, Lover of my soul,
Let me to Thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high, as emanatin’ from Jeffords where he’s r’ared back conductin’ some personal services. Folks never goes buttin’ in interferin’ with these concerts; which it’s cheaper to let him sing.

“Speakin’ of Injuns, as I su’gests, I never does see over-much of ’em in Wolfville. An’ my earlier experiences ain’t thronged with ’em neither, though while I’m workin’ cattle along the Red River I does carom on Injuns more or less. Thar’s one old hostile I recalls speshul; he’s a fool Injun called Black Feather;—Choctaw, he is. This Black Feather’s weakness is fire-water; he thinks more of it than some folks does of children.

Page 33

“Black Feather used to cross over to where Dick Stocton maintains a store an’ lick house on the Upper Hawgthief. Of course, no gent sells these Injuns lick. It’s ag’in the law; an’ unless you-all is onusual eager to make a trip to Fort Smith with a marshal ridin’ herd on you doorin’ said visit, impartin’ of nosepaint to aborigines is a good thing not to do. But Black Feather, he’d come over to Dick Stocton’s an’ linger ‘round the bar’ls of Valley Tan, an’ take a chance on stealin’ a snifter or two while Stocton’s busy.

“At last Stocton gets tired an’ allows he’ll lay for Black Feather. This yere Stocton is a mighty reckless sport; he ain’t carin’ much whatever he does do; he hates Injuns an’ shot guns, an’ loves lick, seven-up, an’ sin in any form; them’s Stocton’s prime characteristics. An’ he gets mighty weary of the whiskey-thievin’ Black Feather, an’ lays for him.

“One evenin’ this aggravatin’ Black Feather crosses over an’ takes to ha’ntin’ about Dick Stocton’s lick room as is his wont. It looks like Black Feather has already been buyin’ whiskey of one of them boot-laig parties who takes every chance an’ goes among the Injuns an’ sells ‘em nosepaint on the sly. ‘Fore ever he shows up on the Upper Hawgthief that time, this Black Feather gets nosepaint some’ers an’ puts a whole quart of it away in the shade; an’ he shore exhibits symptoms. Which for one thing he feels about four stories tall!

“Stocton sets a trap for Black Feather. He fills up the tin cup into which he draws that Valley Tan with coal-oil—karoseen you-all calls it—an’ leaves it, temptin’ like, settin’ on top a whiskey bar’l. Shore! it’s the first thing Black Feather notes. He sees his chance an’ grabs an’ downs the karoseen; an’ Stocton sort o’ startin’ for him, this Black Feather gulps her down plump swift. The next second he cuts loose the yell of that year, burns up about ten acres of land, and starts for Red River. No, I don’t know whether the karoseen hurts him none or not; but he certainly goes squatterin’ across the old Red River like a wounded wild-duck, an’ he never does come back no more.

“But, son, as you sees, I don’t know nothin’ speshul or much touchin’ Injuns, an’ if I’m to dodge the disgrace of ramblin’ along in this desultory way, I might better shift to a tale I hears Sioux Sam relate to Doc Peets one time in the Red Light. This Sam is a Sioux, an a mighty decent buck, considerin’ he’s Injun; Sam is servin’ the Great Father as a scout with the diag’nal-coat, darby-hat sharp I mentions. Peets gives this saddle-tinted longhorn a 4-bit piece, an’ he tells this yarn. It sounds plenty childish; but you oughter b’ar in mind that savages, mental, ain’t no bigger nor older than ten year old young-ones among the palefaces.

““This is the story my mother tells me,” says Sioux Sam, ‘to show me the evils of cur’osity. “The Great Sperit allows to every one the right to ask only so many questions,” says my mother, “an’ when they ask one more than is their right, they die.”

Page 34

“This is the story of the fate of Kaw-kaw-chee, the Raven, a Sioux Chief who died long ago exactly as my mother told me. The Raven died because he asked too many questions an’ was too cur’ous. It began when Sublette, who was a trader, came up the Mitchi-zoor-rah, the Big-Muddy, an’ was robbed by the Raven’s people. Sublette was mad at this, an’ said next time he would bring the Sioux a present so they would not rob him. So he brought a little cask of fire-water an’ left it on the bank of the Big-Muddy. Then Sublette went away, an’ twenty of the Raven’s young men found the little cask. An’ they were greedy an’ did not tell the camp; they drank the fire-water where it was found.

“The Raven missed his twenty young men an’ when he went to spy for them, behold! they were dead with their teeth locked tight an’ their faces an’ bodies writhen an’ twisted as the whirlwind twists the cottonwoods. Then the Raven thought an’ thought; an’ he got very cur’ous to know why his young men died so writhen an’ twisted. The fire-water had a whirlwind in it, an’ the Raven was eager to hear. So he sent for Sublette.

“Then the Raven an’ Sublette had a big talk. They agreed not to hurt each other; an’ Sublette was to come an’ go an’ trade with the Sioux; an’ they would never rob him.

“At this, Sublette gave the Raven some of the whirlwind that so killed an’ twisted the twenty young men. It was a powder, white; an’ it had no smell. Sublette said its taste was bitter; but the Raven must not taste it or it would lock up his teeth an’ twist an’ kill him. For to swallow the white powder loosed the whirlwind on the man’s heart an’ it bent him an’ twisted him like the storms among the willows.

“But the Raven could give the powder to others. So the Raven gave it in some deer’s meat to his two squaws; an’ they were twisted till they died; an’ when they would speak they couldn’t, for their teeth were held tight together an’ no words came out of their mouths,—only a great foam. Then the Raven gave it to others that he did not love; they were twisted an’ died. At last there was no more of the powder of the whirlwind; the Raven must wait till Sublette came up the Big-Muddy again an’ brought him more.

“There was a man, the Gray Elk, who was of the Raven’s people. The Gray Elk was a Choo-ayk-eed, a great prophet. And the Gray Elk had a wife; she was wise an’ beautiful, an’ her name was Squaw-who-has-dreams. But Gray Elk called her Kee-nee-moo-sha, the Sweetheart.

“While the Raven waited for Sublette to bring him more powder of the whirlwind, a star with a long tail came into the sky. This star with the tail made the Raven heap cur’ous. He asked Gray Elk to tell him about it, for he was a prophet. The Raven asked many questions; they fell from him like leaves from a tree in the month of the first ice. So the Gray Elk called Chee-bee, the Spirit; an’ the Spirit told the Gray Elk. Then the Gray Elk told the Raven.’

Page 35

“It was not a tail, it was blood—star blood; an’ the star had been bit an’ was wounded, but would get well. The Sun was the father of the stars, an’ the Moon was their mother. The Sun, Gheezis, tried ever to pursue an’ capture an’ eat his children, the stars. So the stars all ran an’ hid when the Sun was about. But the stars loved their mother who was good an’ never hurt them; an’ when the Sun went to sleep at night an’ Coush-ee-wan, the Darkness, shut his eyes, the Moon an’ her children came together to see each other. But the star that bled had been caught by the Sun; it got out of his mouth but was wounded. Now it was frightened, so it always kept its face to where the Sun was sleeping over in the west. The bleeding star, Sch-coo-dah, would get well an’ its wound would heal.

“Then the Raven wanted to know how the Gray Elk knew all this. An’ the Gray Elk had the Raven into the medicine lodge that night; an’ the Raven heard the spirits come about an’ heard their voices; but he could not understand. Also, the Raven saw a wolf all fire, with wings like the eagle which flew overhead. Also he heard the Thunder, Boom-wa-wa, talking with the Gray Elk; but the Raven couldn’t understand. The Gray Elk told the Raven to draw his knife an’ stab with it in the air outside the medicine lodge. An’ when he did, the Raven’s blade an’ hand came back covered with blood. Still, the Raven was cur’ous an’ kept askin’ to be told how the Gray Elk knew these things. An’ the Gray Elk at last took the Raven to the Great Bachelor Sycamore that lived alone, an’ asked the Raven if the Bachelor Sycamore was growing. An’ the Raven said it was. Then Gray Elk asked him how he knew it was growing. An’ the Raven said he didn’t know. Then Gray Elk said he did not know how he knew about Sch-coo-dah, the star that was bit. This made the Raven angry, for he was very cur’ous; an’ he thought the Gray Elk had two tongues.

“Then it came the month of the first young grass an’ Sublette was back for furs. Also he brought many goods; an’ he gave to the Raven more of the powder of the whirlwind in a little box. At once the Raven made a feast of ducks for the Gray Elk; an’ he gave him of the whirlwind powder; an’ at once his teeth came together an’ the Gray Elk was twisted till he died.

“Now no one knew that the Raven had the powder of the whirlwind, so they could not tell why all these people were twisted and went to the Great Spirit. But the Squaw-who-has-dreams saw that it was the Raven who killed her husband, the Gray Elk, in a vision. Then the Squaw-who-has-dreams went into the mountains four days an’ talked with Moh-kwa, the Bear who is the wisest of the beasts. The Bear said it was the Raven who killed the Gray Elk an’ told the Squaw-who-has-dreams of the powder of the whirlwind.

Page 36

“Then the Bear an’ the Squaw-who-has-dreams made a fire an’ smoked an’ laid a plot. The Bear did not know where to find the powder of the whirlwind which the Raven kept always in a secret place. But the Bear told the Squaw-who-has-dreams that she should marry the Raven an’ watch until she found where the powder of the whirlwind was kept in its secret place; an’ then she was to give some to the Raven, an’ he, too, would be twisted an’ die. There was a great danger, though; the Raven would, after the one day when they were wedded, want to kill the Squaw-who-has-dreams. So to protect her, the Bear told her she must begin to tell the Raven the moment she was married to him the Story-that-never-ends. Then, because the Raven was more cur’ous than even he was cruel, he would put off an’ put off giving the powder of the whirlwind to the Squaw-who-has-dreams, hoping to hear the end of the Story-that-never-ends. Meanwhile the Squaw-who-has-dreams was to watch the Raven until she found the powder of the whirlwind in its secret place.

“Then the wise Bear gave the Squaw-who-has-dreams a bowlful of words as seed, so she might plant them an’ raise a crop of talk to tell the Story-that-never-ends. An’ the Squaw-who-has-dreams planted the seed-words, an’ they grew an’ grew an’ she gathered sixteen bundles of talk an’ brought them to her wigwam. After that she put beads in her hair, an’ dyed her lips red, an’ rubbed red on her cheeks, an’ put on a new blanket; an’ when the Raven saw her, he asked her to marry him. So they were wedded; an’ the Squaw-who-has-dreams went to the teepee of the Raven an’ was his wife.

“But the Raven was old an’ cunning like Yah-mee-kee, the Beaver, an’ he said, “He is not wise who keeps a squaw too long!” An’ with that he thought he would kill the Squaw-who-has-dreams the next day with the powder of the whirlwind. But the Squaw-who-has-dreams first told the Raven that she hated When-dee-goo, the Giant; an’ that she should not love the Raven until he had killed When-dee-goo. She knew the Giant was too big an’ strong for the Raven to kill with his lance, an’ that he must get his powder of the whirlwind; she would watch him an’ learn its secret place. The Raven said he would kill the Giant as the sun went down next day.

“Then the Squaw-who-has-dreams told the Raven the first of the Story-that-never-ends an’ used up one bundle of talk; an’ when the story ended for that night, the Squaw-who-has-dreams was saying: “An’ so, out of the lake that was red as the sun came a great fish that was green, with yellow wings, an’ it walked also with feet, an’ it came up to me an’ said: “But then she would tell no more that night; nor could the Raven, who was crazy with cur’osity, prevail on her. “I must now sleep an’ dream what the green fish with the yellow wings said,” was the reply of the Squaw-who-has-dreams, an’ she pretended to slumber. So the Raven, because he was cur’ous, put off her death.

Page 37

“All night she watched, but the Raven did not go to the secret place where he had hidden the powder of the whirlwind. Nor the next day, when the sun went down, did the Raven kill the Giant. But the Squaw-who-has-dreams took up again the Story-that-never-ends an’ told what the green fish with the yellow wings said; an’ she used up the second bundle of talk. When she ceased for that time, the Squaw-who-has-dreams was saying: “An’ as night fell, Moh-kwa, the Bear, called to me from his canyon, an’ said for me to come an’ he would show me where the great treasure of fire-water was buried for you who are the Raven. So I went into the canyon, an’ Moh-kwa, the Bear, took me by the hand an’ led me to the treasure of fire-water which was greater an’ richer than was ever seen by any Sioux.”

“Then the Squaw-who-has-dreams would tell no more that night, while the Raven eat his fingers with cur’osity. But he made up a new plan not to twist the Squaw-who-has-dreams until she showed him the treasure of fire-water an’ told him the end of the Story-that-never-ends. On her part, however, the Squaw-who-has-dreams, as she went to sleep, wept an’ tore the beads from her hair an’ said the Raven did not love her; for he had not killed the Giant as he promised. She said she would tell no more of the Story-that-never-ends until the Giant was dead; nor would she show to a husband who did not love her the great treasure of fire-water which Moh-kwa, the Bear, had found. At this, the Raven who was hot to have the treasure of firewater an’ whose ears rang with cur’osity to hear the end of the Story-that-never-ends saw that he must kill the Giant. Therefore, when the Squaw-who-has-dreams had ceased to sob and revile him, an’ was gone as he thought asleep, the Raven went to his secret place where he kept the powder of the whirlwind an’ took a little an’ wrapped it in a leaf an’ hid the leaf in the braids of his long hair. Then the Raven went to sleep.

“When the Raven was asleep the Squaw-who-has-dreams went also herself to the secret place an’ got also a little of the powder of the whirlwind. An’ the next morning she arose early an’ gave the powder of the whirlwind to the Raven on the roast buffalo, the Pez-hee-kee, which was his food.

“When the Raven had eaten, the Squaw-who-has-dreams went out of the teepee among the people an’ called all the Sioux to come an’ see the Raven die. So the Sioux came gladly, and the Raven was twisted an’ writhen with the power of the whirlwind wrenching at his heart; an’ his teeth were tight like a trap; an’ no words, but only foam, came from his mouth; an’ at last the Spirit, the Chee-bee, was twisted out of the Raven; an’ the Squaw-who-has-dreams was revenged for the death of the Gray Elk whom she loved an’ who always called her Kee-nee-moo-sha, the Sweetheart, because it made her laugh.

Page 38

“When the Raven was dead, the Squaw-who-has-dreams went to the secret place an’ threw the powder of the whirlwind into the Big-Muddy; an’ after that she distributed her fourteen bundles of talk that were left among all the Sioux so that everybody could tell how glad he felt because the Raven was twisted and died. An’ for a week there was nothing but happiness an’ big talk among the Sioux; an’ Moh-kwa, the Bear, came laughing out of his canyon with the wonder of listening to it; while the Squaw-who-has-dreams now, when her revenge was done, went with When-dee-goo, the Giant, to his teepee and became his squaw. So now everything was ended save the Story-that-never-ends.’

“When Sioux Sam gets this far,” concluded the Old Cattleman, “he says, ‘an’ my mother’s words at the end were: “An’ boys who ask too many questions will die, as did the Raven whose cur’osity was even greater than his cruelty.””

CHAPTER V.

The Queerness of Dave Tutt.

“Which these queernesses of Dave’s,” observed the Old Cattleman, “has already been harrowin’ an’ harassin’ up the camp for mighty likely she’s two months, when his myster’ous actions one evenin’ in the Red Light brings things to a climax, an’ a over-strained public, feelin’ like it can b’ar no more, begins to talk.

“It’s plumb easy to remember this Red Light o’casion, for jest prior to Dave alarmin’ us by becomin’ melodious, furtive—melody bein’ wholly onnacheral to Dave, that a-way—thar’s a callow pin-feather party comes caperin’ in an’ takin’ Old Man Enright one side, asks can he yootilise Wolfville as a strategic p’int in a elopement he’s goin’ to pull off.

““Which I’m out to elope a whole lot from Tucson,’ explains this pin-feather party to Enright, ‘an’ I aims to cinch the play. I’m a mighty cautious sport, an’ before ever I hooks up for actooal freightin’ over any trail, I rides her once or twice to locate wood and water, an’ pick out my camps. Said system may seem timorous, but it’s shore safer a heap. So I asks ag’in whether you-all folks has any objections to me elopin’ into Wolfville with my beloved, like I suggests. I ain’t out to spring no bridals on a onprotected outfit, wherefore I precedes the play with these queries.’

““But whatever’s the call for you to elope at all?’ remonstrates Enright. ‘The simple way now would be to round up this lady’s paternal gent, an’ get his consent.’

““Seein’ the old gent,’ says the pin-feather party, “speshully when you lays it smoothly off like that, shore does seem simplicity itse’f. But if you was to prance out an’ try it some, it would be found plenty complex. See yere!’ goes on the pin-feather party, beginnin’ to roll up his sleeve, ‘you-all impresses me as more or less a jedge of casyooalities.

Whatever now do you think of this? 'An' the pin-feather party exhibits a bullet wound in his left fore-arm, the same bein' about half healed.

Page 39

“Colt’s six-shooter,’ says Enright.

“That’s straight,’ says the pin-feather party, buttonin’ up his sleeve; ‘you calls the turn. I wins out that abrasion pleadin’ with the old gent. Which I tackles him twice. The first time he opens on me with his 44-gun before ever I ends the sentence. But he misses. Nacherally, I abandons them marital intentions for what you-all might call the “nonce” to sort o’ look over my hand ag’in an’ see be I right. Do my best I can’t on earth discern no reasons ag’in the nuptials. Moreover, the lady—who takes after her old gent a heap—cuts in on the play with a bluff that while she don’t aim none to crowd my hand, she’s doo to begin shootin’ me up herse’f if I don’t show more passionate anxiety about leadin’ her to the altar. It’s then, not seein’ why the old gent should go entertainin’ notions ag’in me, an’ deemin’ mebbby that when he blazes away that time he’s merely pettish and don’t really mean said bullet none, that I fronts up ag’in.’

“An’ then,’ asks Enright, ‘whatever does this locoed parent do?’

“Which I jest shows you what,’ says the pin-feather party. ‘He gets the range before ever I opens my mouth, an’ plugs me. At that I begins to half despair of winnin’ his indorsements. I leaves it to you-all; be I right?’

“Why,’ says Enright, rubbin’ his fore’erd some doobious, ‘it would look like the old gent is a leetle set ag’in you. Still, as the responsible chief of this camp, I would like to hear why you reckons Wolfville is a good place to elope to. I don’t s’ppose it’s on account of them drunkards over in Tucson makin’ free with our good repoote an’ lettin’ on we’re light an’ immoral that a-way?’

“None whatever!’ says the pin-feather party. ‘It’s on account of you wolves bein’ regyarded as peaceful, staid, an’ law abidin’ that I first considers you. Then ag’in, thar ain’t a multitoed of places clost about Tucson to elope to nohow; an’ I can’t elope far on account of my roll.’

“The replies of this pin-feather party soothes Enright an’ engages him on that side, so he ups an’ tells the ‘swain,’ as Colonel Sterett calls him later in the Coyote, to grab off his inamorata an’ come a-runnin’.

“Which, givin’ my consent,’ says Enright when explainin’ about it later, ‘is needed to protect this tempest-tossed lover in the possession of his skelp. The old gent an’ that maiden fa’r has got him between ’em, an’ onless we opens up Wolfville as a refooge, it looks like they’ll cross-lift him into the promised land.’

“But to go back to Dave.”

Here my old friend paused and called for refreshments. I seized the advantage of his silence over a glass of peach and honey, to suggest an eagerness for the finale of the Tucson love match.

“No,” responded my frosty friend, setting down his glass, “we’ll pursoo the queernesses of Dave. That Tucson elopement ’is another story a heap,’ as some wise maverick says some’ers, an’ I’ll onload it on you on some other day.

Page 40

“When Dave evolves the cadencies in the Red Light that evenin’, thar’s Enright, Moore an’ me along with Dan Boggs, bein’ entertained by hearin’ Cherokee Hall tell us about a brace game he gets ag’inst in Las Vegas one time.

“This deadfall—this brace I’m mentionin’,’ says Cherokee, ’is over on the Plaza. Of course, I calls this crooked game a “brace” in speakin’ tharof to you-all sports who ain’t really gamblers none. That’s to be p’lite. But between us, among a’credited kyard sharps, a brace game is allers allooded to as “the old thing.” If you refers to a game of chance as “the old thing,” they knows at once that every chance is ’liminated an’ said deevice rigged for murder.’

“That’s splendid, Cherokee,’ says Faro Nell, from her lookout’s roost by his shoulder; ’give ’em a lecture on the perils of gamblin’ with strangers.’

“Thar’s no game goin’ at this epock an’ Cherokee signifies his willin’ness to become instructive.

“Not that I’m no beacon, neither,’ says Cherokee, ’on the rocky wreck-sown shores of sport; an’ not that I ever resorts to onderhand an’ doobious deals myse’f; still, I’m cap’ble of p’intin’ out the dangers. Scientists of my sort, no matter how troo an’ faithful to the p’int of honour, is bound to savey all kyard dooplicities in their uttermost depths, or get left dead on the field of finance. Every gent should be honest. But more than honest—speshully if he’s out to buck faro-bank or set in on casyooal games of short-kyards—every gent should be wise. In the amoosements I mentions to be merely honest can’t be considered a complete equipment. Wherefore, while I never makes a crooked play an’ don’t pack the par’fernalialia so to do, I’m plenty astoote as to how said tricks is turned.

“Which sports has speshulties same as other folks. Thar’s Texas Thompson, his speshulty is ridin’ a hoss; while Peets’s speshulty is shootin’ a derringer, Colonel Sterett’s is pol’tics, Enright’s is jestice, Dave’s is bein’ married, Jack Moore’s is upholdin’ law an’ order, Boggs’s is bein’ sooperstitious, Missis Rucker’s is composin’ bakin’ powder biscuits, an’ Huggins’s is strong drink.’

“Whatever is my speshulty, Cherokee?’ asks Faro Nell, who’s as immersed as the rest in these settin’s forth; ’what do you-all reckon now is my speshulty?’

“Bein’ the loveliest of your sex,’ says Cherokee, a heap emphatic, an’ on that p’int we-all strings our game with his.

“That puts the ambrosia on me,’ says Faro Nell, blushin’ with pleasure, an’ she calls to Black Jack.

“As I observes,’ goes on Cherokee, ‘every sport has his speshulty. Thar’s Casino Joe; his is that he can “tell the last four.” Nacherally, bein’ thus gifted, a game of casino is like so much money in the bank for Joe. Still, his gifts ain’t crooked, they’re genius; Joe’s simply born able to “tell the last four.”

Page 41

“Which, you gents is familiar by repoote at least with the several plans for redoocin’ draw-poker to the prosaic level of shore-things. Thar’s the “bug” an’ the “foot-move” an’ the “sleeve holdout” an’ dozens of kindred schemes for playin’ a cold hand. An’ thar’s optimists, when the game is easy, who depends wholly on a handkerchief in their laps to cover their nefariousness. If I’m driven to counsel a gent concernin’ poker it would be to never play with strangers; an’ partic’lar to never spec’late with a gent who sneezes a lot, or turns his head an’ talks of draughts of cold air invading’ the place, or says his foot’s asleep an’ gets up to stampede about the room after a hand is dealt an’ prior to the same bein’ played. It’s four to one this afflicted sharp is workin’ a holdout. Then that’s the “punch” to mark a deck, an’ the “lookin’ glass” to catch the kyards as they’re dealt. Then thar’s sech manoeovers as stockin’ a deck, an’ shiftin’ a cut, an’ dealin’ double. Thar’s gents who does their work from the bottom of a deck—puts up a hand on the bottom, an’ confers it on a pard or on themse’fs as dovetails with their moods. He’s a one-arm party—shy his right arm, he is—who deals a hand from the bottom the best I ever beholds.

“No, I don’t regyard crooked folks as dangerous at poker, only you’ve got to watch ’em. So long as your eye is on ’em a heap attentive they’re powerless to perform their partic’lar miracle, an’ as a result, since that’s the one end an’ aim of their efforts, they becomes mighty innocuous. As a roole, crooked people ain’t good players on the squar’, an’ as long as you makes ’em play squar’, they’re yours.

“But speakin’ of this devious person on the Las Vegas Plaza that time: The outfit is unknown to me—I’m only a pilgrim an’ a stranger an’ don’t intend to tarry none—when I sets up to the lay-out. I ain’t got a bet down, however, before I sees the gent who’s dealin’, sign-up the seven to the case-keep, an’ instantan’ I feels like I’d known that bevy of bandits since long before the war. Also, I realises their methods after I takes a good hard look. That dealer’s got what post gradyooates in faro-bank robbery calls a “end squeeze” box; the deck is trimmed—“wedges” is the name—to put the odds ag’in the evens, an’ sanded so as to let two kyards come at a clatter whenever said phenomenon is demanded by the exigencies of their crimes; an’ thar you be. No, it’s a fifty-two-kyard deck all right, an’ the dealer depends on “puttin’ back” to keep all straight. An’ I’m driven to concede that the put-back work of said party is like a romance; puttin’ back’s his speshulty. His left hand would sort o’ settle as light as a dead leaf over the kyard he’s after that a-way—not a tenth part of a second—an’ that pasteboard would come along, palmed, an’ as his hand floats over the box as he’s goin’ to make the next turn the kyard would reassome its cunnin’ place inside. An’ all as smoothly serene as pray’r meetin’s.’

Page 42

“An’, nacherally, you denounces this felon,’ says Colonel Sterett, who’s come in an’ who’s integrity is of the active sort.

“Nacherally, I don’t say a word,’ retorts Cherokee. ‘I ain’t for years inhabited these roode an’ sand-blown regions, remote as they be from best ideals an’ high examples of the East, not to long before have learned the excellence of that maxim about lettin’ every man kill his own snakes. I says nothin’; I merely looks about to locate the victim of them machinations with a view of goin’ ag’inst his play.’

“It’s when Cherokee arrives at this place in his recitals that Dave evolves his interruptions. He’s camped by himse’f in a reemote corner of the room, an’ he ain’t been noticin’ nobody an’ nobody’s been noticin’ him. All at once, in tones which is low but a heap discordant, Dave hums to himse’f something that sounds like:

‘Bye O babe, lie still in slumber,
Holy angels gyard thy bed.’

“At this, Cherokee in a horrified way stops, an’ we-all looks at each other. Enright makes a dispar’in’ gesture towards Dave an’ says:

“Gents, first callin’ your attention to the fact that Dave ain’t over-drinkt an’ that no nosepaint theory is possible in accountin’ for his acts, I asks you for your opinions. As you knows, this thing’s been goin’ for’ard for some time, an’ I desires to hear if from any standp’int of public interest do you-all figger that steps should be took?’

“In order to fully onderstand Enright in all he means, I oughter lay bar’ that Dave’s been conductin’ himse’f in a manner not to be explained for mighty likely she’s eight weeks. Yeretofore, thar’s no more sociable sport an’ none whose system is easier to follow in all Wolfville than Dave. While holdin’ himse’f at what you might call ‘par’ on all o’casions, Dave is still plenty minglesome an’ fraternal with the balance of the herd, an’ would no more think of donnin’ airs or puttin’ on dog than he’d think of blastin’ away at one of us with his gun. Yet eight weeks prior thar shorely dawns a change.

“Which the first symptom—the advance gyard as it were of Dave’s gettin’ queer—is when Dave’s standin’ in front of the post-office. Thar’s a faraway look to Dave at the time, like he’s tryin’ to settle whether he’s behind or ahead on some deal. While thus wropped in this fit of abstraction Dan Boggs comes hybernatin’ along an’ asks Dave to p’int into the Red Light for a smell of Valley Tan. Dave sort o’ rouses up at this an’ fastens on Dan with his eyes, half truculent an’ half amazed, same as if he’s shocked at Dan’s familiarity. Then he shakes his head decisive.

“Don’t try to braid this mule’s tail none!’ says Dave, an’ at that he strides off with his muzzle in the air. Boggs is abashed.

“Which these insultin’ bluffs of Dave’s,’ says Boggs, as we canvasses the play a bit later, ‘would cut me to the quick, but I knows it ain’t on the level, Dave ain’t himse’f when he declines said nosepaint—his intellects ain’t in camp.’

Page 43

“This ontoward an’ onmerited rebuke to Boggs is followed, by further breaks as hard to savey. Dave ain’t no two days alike. One time he’s that haughty he actooally passes Enright himse’f in the street an’ no more heed or recognition than if Wolfville’s chief is the last Mexican to come no’t h of the line. Then later Dave is effoosive an’ goes about riotin’ in the s’ciety of every gent whereof he cuts the trail. One day he won’t drink; an’ the next he’s tippin’ the canteen from sun-up till he’s claimed by sleep. Which he gets us mighty near distracted; no one can keep a tab on him. What with them silences an’ volyoobilities, sobrieties an’ days of drink, an’ all in bewilderin’ alternations, he’s shore got us goin’ four ways at once.

“‘In spite of the fact,’ continyooes Dan Boggs when we’re turnin’ Dave’s conduct over in our minds an’ rummagin’ about for reasons; ‘in spite of the fact, I says, that I’m plenty posted in advance that I’m up ag’in st a gen’ral shout of derision on account of me bein’ sooperstitious, I’m yere to offer two to one Dave’s hoodooed. Moreover, I can name the hoodoo.’

“‘Whatever is it then?’ asks Texas Thompson; ‘cut her freely loose an’ be shore of our solemn consid’ration.’

“‘It’s opals,’ says Boggs. ‘Them gems as every well-instructed gent is aware is the very spent of bad luck. Dave’s wearin’ one in his shirt right now. It’s that opal pin wherewith he decks himse’f recent while he’s relaxin’ with nose paint in Tucson. I’m with him at the time an’ I says to him: “Dave, I wouldn’t mount that opal none. Which all opals is implacable hoodoos, an’ it’ll likely conjure up your rooin.” But I might as well have addressed that counsel to a buffalo bull for all the respectful heed I gains. Dave gives me a grin, shets one eye plenty cunnin’, an’ retorts: “Dan, you’re envious; you wants that ornament yourse’f an’ you’re out to try an make me diskyard it in your favour. Sech schemes, Dan, can’t make the landin’. Opals that a-way is as harmless as bull snakes. Also, I knows what becomes my looks; an’ while I ain’t vain, still, bein’ married as you’re aware, it’s wisdom in me to seize every openin’ for enhancin’ my pulcritoo de. The better I looks, the longer Tucson Jennie loves me; an’ I’m out to reetain that lady’s heart at any cost.” No, I don’t onbend in no response,’ goes on Boggs. ‘Them accoosations of Dave about me honin’ for said bauble is oncalled for. I’d no more pack a opal than I’d cut for deal an’ embark on a game of seven-up with a ghost. As I states, the luck of opals is black.’

“‘I was wont to think so,’ says Enright, ‘but thar once chances a play, the same comin’ off onder my personal notice, that shakes my convictions on that p’int. Thar’s a broke-down sport—this yere’s long ago while I’m briefly sojournin’ in Socorro—who’s got a opal, an’ he one day puts it in hock with a kyard sharp for a small stake. The kyard gent says he ain’t alarmed none by these charges made of opals bein’ bad luck. It’s a ring, an’ he sticks it on his little finger. Two days later he goes broke ag’in four jacks.

Page 44

“This terrifies him; he begins to believe in the evil innocences of opals. He presents the jewelry to a bar-keep, who puts it up, since his game limits itse’f to sellin’ licker an’, him bein’ plenty careful not to drink none himse’f, his contracted destinies don’t offer no field for opals an’ their malign effects. In less time than a week, however, his wife leaves him; an’ also that drink-shop wherein he officiates is blown down by a high wind.

“That bar-keep emerges from the rooms of his domestic hopes an’ the desolation of that gin mill, an’ endows a lady of his acquaintance with this opal ornament. It ain’t twenty-four hours when she cuts loose an’ weds a Mexican.

“Which by this time, excitement is runnin’ high, an’ you-all couldn’t have found that citizen in Socorro with a search warrant who declines to believe in opals bein’ bad luck. On the hocks of these catastrophes it’s the common notion that nobody better own that opal; an’ said malev’lent stone in the doal capacity of a cur’osity an’ a warnin’ is put in the seegyar case at the Early Rose s’loon. The first day it’s thar, a jeweller sharp come in for his daily drinks—he runs the jewelry store of that meetropolis an’ knows about diamonds an’ sim’lar jimcracks same as Peets does about drugs—an’ he considers this talisman, scrootinisin’ it a heap clost. “Do you-all believe in the bad luck of opals?” asks a pard who’s with him. “This thing ain’t no opal,” says the jeweller sharp, lookin’ up; “it’s glass.”

“An’ so it is: that baleful gewgaw has been sailin’ onder a alias; it ain’t no opal more’n a Colt’s cartridge is a poker chip. An’, of course, it’s plain the divers an’ several disasters, from the loss of that kyard gent’s bank-roll down to the Mexican nuptials of the ill-advised lady to whom I alludes, can’t be laid to its charge. The whole racket shocks an’ shakes me to that degree,’ concloods Enright, ‘that to-day I ain’t got no settled views on opals’, none whatever.’

“Jest the same, I thinks it’s opals that’s the trouble with Dave,’ declar’s Boggs, plenty stubborn an’ while the rest of us don’t yoonite with him, we receives his view serious an’ respectful so’s not to jolt Boggs’s feelin’s.

“Goin’ back, however, to when Dave sets up the warble of ‘Bye O baby!’ that a-way, we-all, followin’ Enright’s s’licitation for our thoughts, abides a heap still an’ makes no response. Enright asks ag’in: ‘What do you-all think?’

“At last Boggs, who as I sets forth frequent is a nervous gent, an’ one on whom silence soon begins to prey, ag’in speaks up. Bein’ doubtful an’ mindful of Enright’s argyment ag’in his opal bluff, however, Boggs don’t advance his conclussions this time at all emphatic. In a tone like he’s out ridin’ for information himse’f, Boggs says:

“Mebby, if it ain’t opals, it’s a case of straight loco.’

“While I wouldn’t want to readily think Dave locoed,’ says Enright, ‘seein’ he’s uncommon firm on his mental feet, still he’s shore got something on his mind. An’ bein’ it is something, it’s possible as you says that Dave’s intellects is onhossed.’

Page 45

“‘Whatever for a play would it be,’ says Cherokee, ‘to go an’ ask Dave himse’f right now?’

“‘I’d be some slow about propoundin’ sech surmises to Dave,’ says Boggs. ‘He might get hostile; you can put a wager on it, he’d turn out disagree’ble to a degree, if he did. No, you-all has got to handle a loonatic with gloves. I knows a gent who entangles himse’f with a loonatic, askin’ questions, an’ he gets all shot up.’

“‘I reckons, however,’ says Cherokee, ‘that I’ll assoome the resk. Dave an’ me’s friends; an’ I allows if I goes after him in ways both soft an’ careless, so as not to call forth no suspicions, he’ll take it good-humoured even if he is locoed.’

“‘We-all sets breathless while Cherokee sa’nters down to where Dave’s still wropped in them melodies.

“‘Whatever be you hummin’ toones for, Dave?’ asks Cherokee all accidental like.

“‘Which I’m rehearsin’,’ says Dave, an’ he shows he’s made impatient. ‘Don’t come infringin’ about me with no questions,’ goes on Dave. ‘I’m like the ancient Romans, I’ve got troubles of my own; an’ no sport who calls himse’f my friend will go aggravatin’ me with ontimely inquis’tiveness.’ Then Dave gets up an’ pulls his freight an’ leaves us more onsettled than at first.

“‘For a full hour, we does nothin’ but canvass this yere question of Dave’s aberrations. At last a idee seizes us. Thar’s times when Dave’s been seen caucusin’ with Missis Rucker an’ Doc Peets. Most likely one of ’em would be able to shed a ray on Dave. By a excellent coincidence, an’ as if to he’p us out, Peets comes in as Texas Thompson su’gests that mebbly the Doc’s qualified to onravel the myst’ry.

“‘Tell you-all folks what’s the matter with Dave?’ says Peets. ‘Pards, it’s simply not in the deck. Meanin’ no disrespects—for you gents knows me too well to dream of me harborin’ anything but feelin’s of the highest regyards for one an’ all—I’ll have to leave you camped in original darkness. It would be breakin’ professional confidences. Shore, I saveys Dave’s troubles an’ the causes of these vagaries of his; jest the same the traditions of the medical game forces me to hold ‘em sacred an’ secret.’

“‘Tell us at least, Doc,’ says Enright, ‘whether Dave’s likely to grow voylent. If he is, it’s only proper that we arranges to tie him down.’

“‘Dave may be boisterous later,’ says Peets, an’ his reply comes slow an’ thoughtful, like he’s considerin’; ‘he may make a joyful uproar, but he won’t wax dangerous.’ This yere’s as far as Peets’ll go; he declines to talk longer, on professional grounds.

“‘Which suspense, this a-way,’ says Boggs, after Peets is gone, ‘an’ us no wiser than when he shows in the door, makes me desp’rate. I’ll offer the motion: Let’s prance over in a bunch, an' demand a explanation of Missis Rucker. Dave's been talkin' to her as much as ever he has to Peets, an' thar's no professional hobbles on the lady; she's footloose, an' free to speak.'

Page 46

“We waits on you, Marm,’ says Enright, when ten minutes later Boggs, Cherokee, Texas Thompson an’ he is in the kitchen of the O. K. Restauraw where Missis Rucker is slicin’ salt hoss an’ layin’ the fragrant foundations of supper; ‘we waits on you-all to ask your advice. Dave Tutt’s been carryin’ on in a manner an’ form at once doobious an’ threatenin’. It ain’t too much to say that we-all fears the worst. We comes now to invite you to tell us all you knows of Dave an’ whatever it is that so onsettles him. Our idee is that you onderstands a heap about it.’

“See yere, Sam Enright,’ retorts Missis Rucker, pausin’ over the salt hoss, ‘you ain’t doin’ yourse’f proud. You better round up this herd of inebriates an’ get ‘em back to the Red Light. Thar’s nothin’ the matter with Dave; leastwise if it was the matter with you, you’d be some improved. Dave Tutt’s a credit to this camp; never more so than now; the same bein’ a mighty sight more’n I could say of any of you-all an’ stick to the trooth.’

“Then you does know, Missis Rucker,’ says Enright, ‘the secret that’s gnawin’ at Dave.’

“Know it,’ replies Misses Rucker, ‘of course, I knows it. But I don’t propose to discuss it none with you tarrapins. I ain’t got no patience with sech dolts! Now that you-all is yere, however, I’ll give you notice that to-morry you can begin to do your own cookin’ till you hears further word from me. I’m goin’ to be otherwise an’ more congenially engaged. Most likely I’ll be back in my kitchen ag’in in a day or two; but I makes no promises. An’ ontill sech time as I shows up, you-all can go scuffle for yourse’fs. I’ve got more important dooties jest now on my hands than cookin’ chuck for sots.’

“As Missis Rucker speaks up mighty vigorous, an’ as none of us has the nerve to ask her further an’ take the resk of turnin’ loose her temper, we lines out ag’in for the Red Light no cl’arer than what we was.

“I could ask her more questions,’ says Enright, ‘but, gents, I didn’t deem it wise. Missis Rucker is a most admirable character; but I’m sooperstitious about crowdin’ her too clost. Like Boggs says about opals, thar’s plenty of bad luck lurkin’ about Missis Rucker’s environs if you only goes about its deevlopment the right way.’

“The sityooation is too many for me,’ says Boggs, goin’ up to the bar for a drink, ‘I gives it up. I ain’t got a notion left, onless it is that Dave’s runnin’ for office; that is, I might entertain sech a thought only thar ain’t no office.’

“The next day Missis Rucker abandons her post; an’ we tharupon finds that feedin’ ourse’fs keeps us busy an’ we don’t have much time to discuss Dave. Also, Dave disappears;—in fact, both Dave an’ Missis Rucker fades from view.

“It’s about fo’rth drink time the evenin’ of the third day, an’ most of us is in the Red Light. Thar’s a gloom overhangs us like a fog. Mebby it’s the oncertainties which envelops

Dave, mebbby it's because Missis Rucker's done deserted an' left us to rustle for ourse'fs or starve. Most of us is full of present'ments that something's due to happen.

Page 47

“All at once, an’ onexpected, Dave walks in. A sigh of relief goes up, for the glance we gives him shows he’s all right—sane as Enright—clothed an’ in his right mind as set fo’th in holy writ. Also, his countenance is a wrinkle of glee.

“‘Gents,’ says Dave, an’ his air is that patronisin’ it would have been exasperatin’ only we’re so relieved, ‘gents, I’m come to seek congratoolations an’ set ‘em up. Peets an’ that motherly angel, Missis Rucker, allows I’ll be of more use yere than in my own house, whereat I nacherally floats over. Coupled with a su’gestion that we drinks, I wants to say that he’s a boy, an’ that I brands him “Enright Peets Tutt.””

CHAPTER VI.

With the Apache’s Compliments.

“Ondoubted,” observed the Old Cattleman, during one of our long excursive talks, “ondoubted, the ways an’ the motives of Injuns is past the white man’s findin’ out. He’s shore a myst’ry, the Injun is! an’ where the paleface forever fails of his s’lotion is that the latter ropes at this problem in copper-colour from the standp’int of the Caucasian. Can a dog onderstand a wolf? Which I should remark not!

“It’s a heap likely that with Injuns, the white man in his turn is jest as difficult to solve. An’ without the Injun findin’ onusual fault with ‘em, thar’s a triangle of things whereof the savage accooses the paleface. The Western Injuns at least—for I ain’t posted none on Eastern savages, the same bein’ happily killed off prior to my time—the Western Injuns lays the bee, the wild turkey, an’ that weed folks calls the ‘plantain,’ at the white man’s door. They-all descends upon the Injun hand in hand. No, the Injun don’t call the last-named veg’table a ‘plantain;’ he alloodes to it as ‘the White Man’s Foot.’

“Thar’s traits dominant among Injuns which it wouldn’t lower the standin’ of a white man if he ups an’ imitates a whole lot. I once encounters a savage—one of these blanket Injuns with feathers in his ha’r—an’ bein’ idle an’ careless of what I’m about, I staggers into casyooal talk with him. This buck’s been East for the first time in his darkened c’reer an’ visited the Great Father in Washin’ton. I asks him what he regyards as the deepest game he in his travels goes ag’in’st. At first he allows that pie, that a-way, makes the most profound impression. But I bars pie, an’ tells him to su’gest the biggest thing he strikes, not on no bill of fare. Tharupon, abandonin’ menooos an’ wonders of the table, he roominates a moment an’ declar’s that the steamboat—now that pie is exclooded—ought to get the nomination.

“‘The choo-choo boat,’ observes this intelligent savage, ‘is the paleface’s big medicine.’

“‘You’ll have a list of marvels,’ I says, ‘to avalanche upon the people when you cuts the trail of your ancestral tribe ag’in?’

“‘No,’ retorts the savage, shakin’ his head ontill the skelp-lock whips his y’ears, an’ all mighty decisive; ‘no; won’t tell Injun nothin’.’

Page 48

“‘Why not?’ I demands.

“‘If I tell,’ he says, ‘they no believe. They think it all heap lie.’

“Son, consider what a example to travellers is set by that ontooterred savage? That’s what makes me say thar be traits possessed of Injuns, personal, which a paleface might improve himse’f by copyin’.

“Bein’ white myse’f, I’m born with notions ag’in Injuns. I learns of their deestruction with relief, an’ never sees one pirootin’ about, full of life an’ vivacity, but the spectacle fills me with vain regrets. All the same thar’s a load o’ lies told East concernin’ the Injun. I was wont from time to time to discuss these red folks with Gen’ral Stanton, who for years is stationed about in Arizona, an’—merely for the love he b’ars to fightin’—performs as chief of scouts for Gen’ral Crook.

“‘Our divers wars with the Apaches,’ says Gen’ral Stanton, ‘comes more as the frootes of a misdeal by a locoed marshal than anything else besides. When Crook first shows up in Arizona—this is in the long ago—an’ starts to inculcate peace among the Apaches, he gets old Jeffords to bring Cochise to him to have a pow-wow. Jeffords rounds up Cochise an’ herds him with soft words an’ big promises into the presence of Crook. The Grey Fox—which was the Injun name for Crook—makes Cochise a talk. Likewise he p’int out to the chief the landmarks an’ mountain peaks that indicates the Mexican line. An’ the Grey Fox explains to Cochise that what cattle is killed an’ what skelps is took to the south’ard of the line ain’t goin’ to bother him a bit. But no’t’h’ard it’s different; thar in that sacred region cattle killin’ an’ skelp collectin’ don’t go. The Grey Fox shoves the information on Cochise that every trick turned on the American side of the line has done got to partake of the characteristics of a love affair, or the Grey Fox with his young men in bloo—his walk-a-heaps an’ his hoss-warriors—noomerous as the grass, they be—will come down on Cochise an’ his Apaches like a coyote on a sage hen or a pan of milk from a top shelf an’ make ’em powerful hard to find.

“‘Cochise smokes an’ smokes, an’ after considerin’ the bluff of the Grey Fox plenty profound, allows he won’t call it. Thar shall be peace between the Apache an’ the paleface to the no’t’h’ard of that line. Then the Grey Fox an’ Cochise shakes hands an’ says “How!” an’ Cochise, with a bolt or two of red calico wherewith to embellish his squaws, goes squanderin’ back to his people, permeated to the toes with friendly intentions.

“‘Sech is Cochise’s reverence for his word, coupled with his fear of the Grey Fox, that years float by an’ every deefile an’ canyon of the Southwest is as safe as the aisles of a church to the moccasins of the paleface. Thus it continyoos ontill thar comes a evenin’ when a jimcrow marshal, with more six-shooters than hoss sense, allows he’ll apprehend Cochise’s brother a whole lot for some offense that ain’t most likely deuce high in the category of troo crime. This ediot offishul reaches for the relative of Cochise; an' as the latter—bein' a savage an' tharfore plumb afraid of captivity—leaps back'ard like he's met up with a rattlesnake, the marshal puts his gun on him an' plugs him so good that he cashes in right thar. The marshal says later in explanation of his game that Cochise's brother turns hostile an' drops his hand on his knife. Most likely he does; a gent's hands—even a Apache's—has done got to be some'ers.

Page 49

“But the killin' overturns the peaceful programmes built up between the Grey Fox an' Cochise. When the old chief hears of his brother bein' downed, he paints himse'f black an' red an' sends a bundle of arrows tied with a rattlesnake skin to the Grey Fox with a message to count his people an' look out for himse'f. The Grey Fox, who realises that the day of peace has ended an' the sun gone down to rise on a mornin' of trouble, fills the rattlesnake skin with cartridges an' sends 'em back with a word to Cochise to turn himse'f loose. From that moment the war-jig which is to last for years is on. After Cochise comes Geronimo, an' after Geronimo comes Nana; an' one an' all, they adds a heap of spice to life in Arizona. It's no exaggeration to put the number of palefaces who lose their ha'r as the direct result of that fool marshal layin' for Cochise's brother an' that Injun's consequent cuttin' off, at a round ten thousand. Shore! thar's scores an' scores who's been stood up an' killed in the hills whereof we never gets a whisper. I, myse'f, in goin' through the teepees of a Apache outfit, after we done wipes 'em off the footstool, sees the long ha'r of seven white women who couldn't have been no time dead.

“Who be they? Folks onknown who's got shot into while romancin' along among the hills with schemes no doubt of settlement in Californy.

“With what we saveys of the crooelties of the Apaches, thar's likewise a sperit of what book-sharps calls chivalry goes with 'em an' albeit on one ha'r-hung o'casion I profits mightily tharby, I'm onable to give it a reason. You wouldn't track up on no sim'lar weaknesses among the palefaces an' you-all can put down a stack on that.

“It's when I'm paymaster,' says the Gen'ral, reachin' for the canteen, 'an' I starts fo'th from Fort Apache on a expedition to pay off the nearby troops. I've got six waggons an' a escort of twenty men. For myse'f, at the r'ar of the procession, I journeys proudly in a amb'lance. Our first camp is goin' to be on top of the mesa out a handful of miles from the Fort.

“The word goes along the line to observe a heap of caution an' not straggle or go rummagin' about permiscus, for the mountains is alive with hostiles. It's five for one that a frownin' cloud of 'em is hangin' on our flanks from the moment we breaks into the foothills. No, they'd be afoot; the Apaches ain't hoss-back Injuns an' only fond of steeds as food. He never rides on one, a Apache don't, but he'll camp an' build a fire an' eat a corral full of ponies if you'll furnish 'em, an' lick his lips in thankfulness tharfore. But bein' afoot won't hinder 'em from keepin' up with my caravan, for in the mountains the snow is to the waggon beds an' the best we can do, is wriggle along the trail like a hurt snake at a gait which wouldn't tire a papoose.

Page 50

“We've been pushin' on our windin' uphill way for mighty likely half a day, an' I'm beginnin'—so dooms slows is our progress—to despair of gettin' out on top the mesa before dark, when to put a coat of paint on the gen'ral trouble the lead waggon breaks down. I turns out in the snow with the rest, an' we-all puts in a heated an' highly profane half-hour restorin' the waggon to health. At last we're onder headway ag'in, an' I wades back through the snow to my amb'lance.

“As I arrives at the r'ar of my offishul waggon, it occurs to me that I'll fill a pipe an' smoke some by virchoo of my nerves, the same bein' torn and frayed with the many exasperations of the day. I gives my driver the word to wait a bit, an' searchin' forth my tobacco outfit loads an' lights my pipe. I'm planted waist deep in the mountain snows, but havin' on hossman boots the snow ain't no hardship.

“While I'm fussin' with my pipe, the six waggons an' my twenty men curves 'round a bend in the trail an' is hid by a corner of the canyon. I reflects at the time—though I ain't really expectin' no perils—that I'd better catch up with my escort, if it's only to set the troops a example. As I exhales my first puff of smoke and is on the verge of tellin' my driver to pull out—this yere mule-skinner is settin' so that matters to the r'ar is cut off from his gaze by the canvas cover of my waggon—a slight noise attracts me, an' castin' my eye along the trail we've been climbin', I notes with feelin's of disgust a full dozen Apaches comin'. An' it ain't no hyperbole to say they're shore comin' all spraddled out.

“In the lead for all the deep snow, an' racin' up on me like the wind, is a big befeathered buck, painted to the eyes; an' in his right fist, raised to hurl it, is a 12-foot lance. As I surveys this pageant, I realises how he'pless, utter, I be, an' with what ca'mness I may, adjusts my mind to the fact that I've come to the end of my trails. He'pless? Shore! I'm stuck as firm in the snow as one of the pines about me; my guns is in the waggon outen immediate reach; thar I stands as certain a prey to that Apache with the lance as he's likely to go up ag'in'st doorin' the whole campaign. Why, I'm a pick-up! I remembers my wife an' babies, an' sort o' says “Goodbye!” to 'em, for I'm as certain of my finish as I be of the hills, or the snows beneath my feet. However, since it's all I can do, I continyoos to smoke an' watch my execootioners come on.

Page 51

“The big lance Injun is the dominatin’ sperit of the bunch. As he draws up to me—he’s fifty foot in advance of the others—he makes his lance shiver from p’int to butt. It fairly sings a death song! I can feel it go through an’ through me a score of times. But I stands thar facin’ him; for, of course, I wants it to go through from the front. I don’t allow to be picked up later with anything so onfashionable as a lance wound in my back. That would be mighty onprofessional!

“You onderstands that what now requires minutes in the recital don’t cover seconds as a play. The lance Injun runs up to within a rod of me an’ halts. His arm goes back for a mighty cast of the lance; the weepoon is vibrant with the very sperit of hate an’ malice. His eyes, through a fringe of ha’r that has fallen over ’em, glows out like a cat’s eyes in the dark.

“We stands thar—I still puffin my pipe, he with his lance raised—an’ we looks on each other—I an’ that paint-daubed buck! I can’t say whatever is his notion of me, but on my side I never beholds a savage who appeals to me as a more evil an’ forbiddin’ picture!

“As I looks him over a change takes place. The fire in his eyes dies out, his face relaxes its f’rocity, an’ after standin’ for a moment an’ as the balance of the band arrives, he turns the lance over his arm an’ with the butt presented, surrenders it into my hand. You can gamble I don’t lose no time in arguin’ the question, but accepts the lance with all that it implies. Bringin’ the weepoon to a ‘Right Shoulder’ an’ with my mind relieved, I gives the word to my mule-skinner—who’s onconscious of the transactions in life an’ death goin’ on behind his back—an’ with that, we-all takes up our march an’ soon comes up on the escort where it’s ag’in fixed firm in the snow about a furlong to the fore. My savages follows along with me, an’ each of ’em as grave as squinch owls an’ tame as tabby cats.

“Joke? no; them Apaches was as hostile as Gila monsters! But beholdin’ me, as they regyards it—for they don’t in their ontaught simplicity make allowance for me bein’ implanted in the snow, gunless an’ he’pless—so brave, awaitin’ deestruction without a quiver, their admiration mounts to sech heights it drowns within ’em every thought of cancellin’ me with that lance, an’ tharupon they pays me their savage compliments in manner an’ form deescribed. They don’t regyard themse’fs as surrenderin’ neither; they esteems passin’ me the lance as inauguratin’ a armistice an’ looks on themse’fs as guests of honor an’ onder my safegyard, free to say “How!” an’ vamos back to the warpath ag’in whenever the sperit of blood begins to stir within their breasts. I knows enough of their ways to be posted as to what they expects; an’ bein’, I hopes, a gent of integrity, I accedes to ’em that exact status which they believes they enjoys.

Page 52

“They travels with me that day, eats with me that evenin’ when we makes our camp, has a drink with me all ’round, sings savage hymns to me throughout the night, loads up with chuck in the mornin’, offers me no end of flattery as a dead game gent whom they respects, says adios; an’ then they scatters like a flock of quail. Also, havin’ resoomed business on old-time lines, they takes divers shots at us with their Winchesters doorin’ the next two days, an’ kills a hoss an’ creases my sergeant. Why don’t I corral an’ hold ’em when they’re in my clutch? It would have been breakin’ the trooce as Injuns an’ I onderstands sech things; moreover, they let me go free without conditions when I was loser by every roole of the game.”

CHAPTER VII.

The Mills of Savage Gods.

“Thar might, of course, be romances in the West,” observed the Old Cattleman, reflectively, in response to my question, “but the folks ain’t got no time. Romance that a-way demands leesure, an’ a party has to be more or less idlin’ about to get what you-all might style romantic action. Take that warjig whereof I recently relates an’ wherein this yere Wild Bill Hickox wipes out the McCandlas gang—six to his Colt’s, four to his bowie, an’ one to his Hawkins rifle; eleven in all—I asks him myse’f later when he’s able to talk, don’t he regyard the eepisode as some romantic. An’ Bill says, ‘No, I don’t notice no romance tharin; what impresses me most is that she’s shore a zealous fight—also, mighty busy.’

“Injuns would be romantic, only they’re so plumb ignorant they never once saveys. Thar’s no Injun word for ‘romantic’; them benighted savages never tumblin’ to sech a thing as romance bein’ possible. An’ yet said aborigines engages in plays which a eddicated Eastern taste with leesure on its hands an’ gropin’ about for entertainment would pass on as romantic.

“When I’m pesterin’ among the Osages on that one o’casion that I’m tryin’ to make a round-up of my health, the old buck Strike Axe relates to me a tale which I allers looks on as possessin’ elements. Shore; an’ it’s as simple an’ straight as the sights of a gun. It’s about a squaw an’ three bucks, an’ thar’s enough blood in it to paint a waggon. Which I reckons now I’ll relate it plain an’ easy an’ free of them frills wherewith a professional racontoor is so prone to overload his narratives.

“The Black Cloud is a Osage medicine man an’ has high repoote about Greyhoss where he’s pitched his teepee an’ abides. He’s got a squaw, Sunbright, an’ he’s plenty jealous of this yere little Sunbright. The Black Cloud has three squaws, an’ Sunbright is the youngest. The others is Sunbright’s sisters, for a Osage weds all the sisters of a fam’ly at once, the oldest sister goin’ to the front at the nuptials to deal the weddin’ game for the entire outfit.

Page 53

“Now this Sunbright ain’t over-enamoured of Black Cloud; he’s only a half-blood Injun for one thing, his father bein’ a buffalo-man (negro) who’s j’ined the Osages, an’ Sunbright don’t take kindly to his nose which is some flatter than the best rools of Osage beauty demands; an’ likewise thar’s kinks in his ha’r. Still, Sunbright sort o’ keeps her aversions to herse’f, an’ if it ain’t for what follows she most likely would have travelled to her death-blankets an’ been given a seat on a hill with a house of rocks built ‘round her—the same bein’ the usual burial play of a Osage—without Black Cloud ever saveyin’ that so far from interestin’ Sunbright, he only makes her tired.

“Over south from Black Cloud’s Greyhoss camp an’ across the Arkansaw an’ some’ers between the Polecat an’ the Cimmaron thar’s livin’ a young Creek buck called the Lance. He’s straight an’ slim an’ strong as the weepson he’s named for; an’ he like Black Cloud is a medicine sharp of cel’bration an’ stands way up in the papers. The Creeks is never weary of talkin’ about the Lance an’ what a marvel as a medicine man he is; also, by way of insultin’ the Osages, they declar’s onhesitatin’ that the Lance lays over Black Cloud like four tens, an’ offers to bet hosses an’ blankets an’ go as far as the Osages likes that this is troo.

“By what Strike Axe informs me,—an’ he ain’t none likely to overplay in his statements—by what Strike Axe tells me, I says, the Lance must shore have been the high kyard as a medicine man. Let it get dark with the night an’ no moon in the skies, an’ the Lance could take you-all into his medicine lodge, an’ you’d hear the sperits flappin’ their pinions like some one flappin’ a blanket, an’ thar’d be whisperin’s an’ goin’s on outside the lodge an’ in, while fire-eyes would show an’ burn an’ glower up in the peak of the teepee; an’ all plenty skeary an’ mystifiyin’. Besides these yere accomplishments the Lance is one of them mesmerism sports who can set anamiles to dreamin’. He could call a coyote or a fox, or even so fitful an’ nervous a prop’sition as a antelope; an’ little by little, snuffin’ an’ snortin’, or if it’s a coyote, whinin’, them beasts would approach the Lance until they’re that clost he’d tickle their heads with his fingers while they stands shiverin’ an’ sweatin’ with apprehensions. You can put a bet on it, son, that accordin’ to this onbiassed buck, Strike Axe, the Lance is ondoubted the big medicine throughout the Injun range.

“As might be assoomed, the Black Cloud is some heated ag’in the Lance an’ looks on him with baleful eye as a rival. Still, Black Cloud has his nerve with him constant, an’ tharfore one day when the Osages an’ Creeks has been dispootin’ touchin’ the reespective powers of him an’ the Lance, an’ this latter Injun offers to come over to Greyhoss an’ make medicine ag’in him, Black Cloud never hesitates or hangs back like a dog tied onder a waggon, but calls the bluff a heap prompt an’ tells the Lance to come.

Page 54

"Which the day is set an' the Lance shows in the door, as monte sharps would say. Black Cloud an' the Lance tharupon expands themse'fs, an' delights the assembled Creeks an' Osages with their whole box of tricks, an' each side is braggin' an' boastin' an' puttin' it up that their gent is most likely the soonest medicine man who ever buys black paint. It's about hoss an' hoss between the two.

"Black Cloud accompanies himse'f to this contest with a pure white pony which has eyes red as roobies—a kind o' albino pony—an' he gives it forth that this milk-coloured bronco is his 'big medicine' or familiar sperit. The Lance observes that the little red-eyed hoss is mighty impressive to the savages, be they Creeks or Osages. At last he says to Black Cloud:

"To show how my medicine is stronger than yours, to-morry I'll make your red-eyed big medicine bronco go lame in his off hind laig.'

"Black Cloud grins scornful at this; he allows that no sport can make his white pony go lame.

"He's plumb wrong; the next mornin' the white pony is limpin' an' draggin' his off hind hoof, an' when he's standin' still he p'int the toe down like something's fetched loose. Black Cloud is sore; but he can't find no cactus thorn nor nothin' to bring about the lameness an' he don't know what to make of the racket. Black Cloud's up ag'inst it, an' the audience begins to figger that the Lance's' medicine is too strong for Black Cloud.

"What's the trouble with the red-eyed pony? That's simple enough, son. The Lance done creeps over in the night an' ties a hossha'r tight about the pony's laig jest above the fetlock. Black Cloud ain't up to no sech move, the same bein' a trade secret of the Lance's an' bein' the hossha'r is hid in the ha'r on the pony's laig, no one notes its presence.

"After Black Cloud looks his red-eyed big medicine pony all over an' can't onderstand its lameness, the Lance asks him will he cure it. Black Cloud, who's sc'owlin' like midnight by now, retorts that he will. So he gets his pipe an' fills it with medicine tobacco an' blows a mouthful of smoke in the red-eyed pony's nose. Sech remedies don't work; that pony still limps on three laigs, draggin' the afflicted member mighty pensive.

"At last the Lance gives Black Cloud a patronisin' smile an' says that his medicine'll cure the pony sound an' well while you're crackin' off a gun. He walks up to the pony an' looks long in its red eyes; the pony's y'ears an' tail droops, its head hangs down, an' it goes mighty near to sleep. Then the Lance rubs his hand two or three times up an' down the lame laig above the fetlock an' elim'nates that hossha'r ligature an' no one the wiser. A moment after, he wakes up the red-eyed pony an' to the amazement of the Osages an' the onbounded delight of the Creeks, the pony is no longer lame, an' the laig so late afflicted is as solid an' healthy as a sod house. What's bigger medicine still, the red-eyed pony begins to follow the Lance about like a dog an' as if it's charmed; an' it likewise turns in to bite an' r'ar an' pitch an' jump sideways if Black Cloud seeks to put his paw on him. Then all the Injuns yell with one voice: 'The Lance has won the Black Cloud's big medicine red-eyed pony away from him.'

Page 55

"The Lance is shore the fashion, an' Black Cloud discovers he ain't a four-spot by compar'son. His repootation is gone, an' the Lance is regyarded as the great medicine along the Arkansaw.

"Sunbright is lookin' on at these manooovers an' her heart goes out to the Lance; she falls more deeply in love with him than even the red-eyed bronco does. That evenin' as the Lance is goin' to his camp onder the cottonwoods, he meets up with Sunbright standin' still as a tree in his path with her head bowed like a flower that's gone to sleep. The Lance saveys; he knows Sunbright; likewise he knows what her plantin' herse'f in his way an' her droopin' attitooode explains. He looks at her, an' says;

"'I am a guest of the Osages, an' to-night is not the night. Wait until the Lance is in his own teepee on the Polecat; then come.'

"Sunbright never moves, never looks up; but she hears an' she knows this is right. No buck should steal a squaw while he's a guest. The Lance walks on an' leaves her standin', head bowed an' motionless.

"Two days later the Lance is ag'in in his own teepee. Sunbright counts the time an' knows that he must be thar. She skulks from the camp of Black Cloud an' starts on her journey to be a new wife to a new husband.

"Sunbright is a mile from camp when she's interrupted. It's Black Cloud who heads her off. Black Cloud may not be the boss medicine man, but he's no fool, an' his eyes is like a wolf's eyes an' can see in the dark. He guesses the new love which has stampeded Sunbright.

"Injuns is a mighty cur'ous outfit. Now if Sunbright had succeeded in gettin' to the lodge of her new husband, the divorce between her an' Black Cloud would have been complete. Moreover, if on the day followin' or at any time Black Cloud had found her thar, he wouldn't so much as have wagged a y'ear or batted a eye in recognition. He wouldn't have let on he ever hears of a squaw called 'Sunbright.' This ca'mness would be born of two causes. It would be ag'in Injun etiquette to go trackin' about makin' a onseemly uproar an' disturbin' the gen'ral peace for purely private causes. Then ag'in it would be beneath the dignity of a high grade savage an' a big medicine sharp to conduct himse'f like he'd miss so trivial a thing as a squaw.

"But until Sunbright fulfils her elopement projects an' establishes herse'f onder the protectin' wing of her new love, she's runnin' resks. She's still the Black Cloud's squaw; an' after she pulls her marital picket pin an' while she's gettin' away, if the bereaved Black Cloud crosses up with her he's free, onder the license permitted to Injun husbands, to kill her an' skelp her an' dispose of her as consists best with his moods.

“Sunbright knows this; an’ when she runs ag’in the Black Cloud in her flight, she seats herse’f in the long prairie grass an’ covers her head with her blanket an’ speaks never a word.

Page 56

“Does Sunbright so love me,’ says Black Cloud, turnin’ aheap ugly, ‘that she comes to meet me? Is it for me she has combed her h’ar an’ put on a new feather an’ beads? Does she wear her new blanket an’ paint her face bright for Black Cloud? Or does she dress herse’f like the sun for that Creek coyote, the Lance?’” Sunbright makes no reply, Black Cloud looks at her a moment an’ then goes on: “It’s for the Lance! Good! I will fix the Sunbright so she will be a good squaw to my friend, the Lance, an’ never run from his lodge as she does now from Black Cloud’s.’ With that he stoops down, an’ a slash of his knife cuts the heel-tendons of Sunbright’s right foot. She groans, and writhes about the prairie, while Black Cloud puts his knife back in his belt, gets into his saddle ag’in an’ rides away.

“The next day a Creek boy finds the body of Sunbright where she rolls herse’f into the Greyhoss an’ is drowned.

“When the Lance hears the story an’ sees the knife slash on Sunbright’s heel, he reads the trooth. It gives him a bad heart; he paints his face red an’ black an’ thinks how he’ll be revenged. Next day he sends a runner to Black Cloud with word that Black Cloud has stole his hoss. This is to arrange a fight on virtuous grounds. The Lance says that in two days when the sun is overhead Black Cloud must come to the three cottonwoods near the mouth of the Cimmaron an’ fight, or the Lance on the third day an’ each day after will hunt for him as he’d hunt a wolf until Black Cloud is dead. The Black Cloud’s game, an’ sends word that on the second day he’ll be thar by the three cottonwoods when the sun is overhead; also, that he will fight with four arrows.

“Then Black Cloud goes at once, for he has no time to lose, an’ kills a dog near his lodge. He cuts out its heart an’ carries it to the rocky canyon where the rattlesnakes have a village. Black Cloud throws the dog’s heart among them an’ teases them with it; an’ the rattlesnakes bite the dog’s heart ag’in an’ ag’in until it’s as full of p’isen as a bottle is of rum. After that, Black Cloud puts the p’isen heart in the hot sun an’ lets it fret an’ fester until jest before he goes to his dooel with the Lance. As he’s about to start, Black Cloud dips the four steel arrowheads over an’ over in the p’isen heart, bein’ careful to dry the p’isen on the arrowheads; an’ now whoever is touched with these arrows so that the blood comes is shore to die. The biggest medicine in the nation couldn’t save him.

“Thar’s forty Osage and forty Creek bucks at the three cottonwoods to see that the dooelists get a squar’ deal. The Lance an’ Black Cloud is thar; each has a bow an’ four arrows; each has made medicine all night that he may kill his man.

“But the dooel strikes a obstacle.

Page 57

“Thar’s a sombre, sullen sport among the Osages who’s troo name is the ‘Bob-cat,’ but who’s called the ‘Knife Thrower.’ The Bob-cat is one of the Osage forty. Onknown to the others, this yere Bob-cat—who it looks like is a mighty impressionable savage—is himse’f in love with the dead Sunbright. An’ he’s hot an’ cold because he’s fearful that in this battle of the bows the Lance’ll down Black Cloud an’ cheat him, the Bob-cat, of his own revenge. The chance is too much; the Bob-cat can’t stand it an’ resolves to get his stack down first. An’ so it happens that as Black Cloud an’ the Lance, painted in their war colours, is walkin’ to their places, a nine-inch knife flickers like a gleam of light from the hand of the Bob-cat, an’ merely to show that he ain’t called the ‘Knife Thrower’ for fun, catches Black Cloud flush in the throat, an’ goes through an’ up to the gyard at the knife-haft. Black Cloud dies standin’, for the knife p’int bites his spine.

“No, son, no one gets arrested; Injuns don’t have jails, for the mighty excellent reason that no Injun culprit ever vamoses an’ runs away. Injun crim’nals, that a-way, allers stands their hands an’ takes their hemlock. The Osages, who for Injuns is some shocked at the Bob-cat’s interruption of the dooel—it bein’ mighty onparliamentary from their standp’int—tries the Bob-cat in their triboonals for killin’ Black Cloud an’ he’s decided on as guilty accordin’ to their law. They app’int a day for the Bob-cat to be shot; an’ as he ain’t present at the trial none, leavin’ his end of the game to be looked after by his reelatives, they orders a kettle-tender or tribe crier to notify the Bob-cat when an’ where he’s to come an’ have said sentence execooted upon him. When he’s notified, the Bob-cat don’t say nothin’; which is satisfactory enough, as thar’s nothin’ to be said, an’ every Osage knows the Bob-cat’ll be thar at the drop of the handkerchief if he’s alive.

“It so turns out; the Bob-cat’s thar as cool as wild plums. He’s dressed in his best blankets an’ leggin’s; an’ his feathers an’ gay colours makes him a overwhelmin’ match for peacocks. Thar’s a white spot painted over his heart.

“The chief of the Osages, who’s present to see jestice done, motions to the Bob-cat, an’ that gent steps to a red blanket an’ stands on its edge with all the blanket spread in front of him on the grass. The Bob-cat stands on the edge, as he saveys when he’s plugged that he’ll fall for’ard on his face. When a gent gets the gaff for shore, he falls for’ard. If a party is hit an’ falls back’ards, you needn’t get excited none; he’s only creased an’ ’ll get over it.

“Wherefore, as I states, the Bob-cat stands on the edge of the blanket so it’s spread out in front to catch him as he drops. Thar’s not a word spoke by either the Bob-cat or the onlookers, the latter openin’ out into a lane behind so the lead can go through. When the Bob-cat’s ready, his cousin, a buck whose name is Little Feather, walks to the front of the blanket an’ comes down careful with his Winchester on the white mark over the Bob-cat’s heart. Thar’s a moment’s silence as the Bob-cat’s cousin runs his eye through the sights; thar’s a flash an’ a hatful of gray smoke; the white spot turns red with blood; an’ then the Bob-cat falls along on his face as soft as a sack of corn.

Page 58

“What becomes of the Lance? It’s two weeks later when that scientist is waited on by a delegation of Osages. They reminds him that Sunbright has two sisters, the same bein’ now widows by virchoo of the demise of that egreegious Black Cloud. Also, the Black Cloud was rich; his teepee was sumptuous, an’ he’s left a buckskin coat with ivory elk teeth sewed onto it plenty as stars at night. The coat is big medicine; moreover thar’s the milk-white big medicine bronco with red eyes. The Osage delegation puts forth these trooths while the Lance sets cross-laiged on a b’arskin an’ smokes willow bark with much dignity. In the finish, the Osage outfit p’intns up to the fact that their tribe is shy a medicine man, an’ a gent of the Lance’s accomplishments who can charm anamiles an’ lame Broncos will be a mighty welcome addition to the Osage body politic. The Lance lays down his pipe at this an’ says, ‘It is enough!’ An’ the next day he sallies over an’ weds them two relicts of Black Cloud an’ succeeds to that dead necromancer’s estate an’ both at one fell swoop. The two widows chuckles an’ grins after the manner of ladies, to get a new husband so swift; an’ abandonin’ his lodge on the Polecat the Lance sets up his game at Greyhoss, an’ onless he’s petered, he’s thar dealin’ it yet.”

CHAPTER VIII.

Tom and Jerry; Wheelers.

“Obstinacy or love, that a-way, when folks pushes ’em to excess, is shore bad medicine. Which I’d be aheap loath to count the numbers them two attribootes harries to the tomb. Why, son, it’s them sentiments that kills off my two wheel mules, Tom an’ Jerry.”

The Old Cattleman appeared to be on the verge of abstract discussion. As a metaphysician, he was not to be borne with. There was one method of escape; I interfered to coax the currents of his volubility into other and what were to me, more interesting channels.

“Tell me of the trail; or a story about animals,” I urged. “You were saying recently that perfect systems of oral if not verbal communication existed among mules, and that you had listened for hours to their gossip. Give me the history of one of your freighting trips and what befell along the trail; and don’t forget the comment thereon—wise, doubtless, it was—of your long-eared servants of the rein and trace-chain.”

“Tell you what chances along the trail? Son, you-all opens a wide-flung range for my mem’ry to graze over. I might tell you how I’m lost once, freightin’ from Vegas into the Panhandle, an’ am two days without water—blazin’ Jooly days so hot you couldn’t touch tire, chain, or bolt-head without fryin’ your fingers. An’ how at the close of the second day when I hauls in at Cabra Springs, I lays down by that cold an’ blessed fountain an’ drinks till I aches. Which them two days of thirst terrorises me to sech degrees that for one plumb year tharafter, I never meets up with water when I don't drink a quart, an' act like I'm layin' in ag'in another parched spell.

Page 59

“Or I might relate how I stops over one night from Springer on my way to the Canadian at a Triangle-dot camp called Kingman. This yere is a one-room stone house, stark an’ sullen an’ alone on the desolate plains, an’ no scenery worth namin’ but a half-grown feeble spring. This Kingman ain’t got no windows; its door is four-inch thick of oak; an’ thar’s loopholes for rifles in each side which shows the sports who builds that edifice in the stormy long-ago is lookin’ for more trouble than comfort an’ prepares themse’fs. The two cow-punchers I finds in charge is scared to a standstill; they allows this Kingman’s ha’nted. They tells me how two parties who once abides thar—father an’ son they be—gets downed by a hold-up whose aim is pillage, an’ who comes cavortin’ along an’ butchers said fam’ly in their sleep. The cow-punchers declar’s they hears the spooks go scatterin’ about the room as late as the night before I trails in. I ca’ms ’em—not bein’ subject to nerve stampedes myse’f, an’ that same midnight when the sperits comes ha’ntin’ about ag’in, I turns outen my blankets an’ lays said spectres with the butt of my mule whip—the same when we strikes a light an’ counts ’em up bein’ a couple of kangaroo rats. This yere would front up for a mighty thrillin’ tale if I throws myse’f loose with its reecital an’ daubs in the colour plenty vivid an’ free.

“Then thar’s the time I swings over to the K-bar-8 ranch for corn—bein’ I’m out of said cereal—an’ runs up on a cow gent, spurs, gun-belt, big hat an’ the full regalia, hangin’ to the limb of a cottonwood, dead as George the Third, an’ not a hundred foot from the ranch door. An’ how inside I finds a half-dozen more cow folks, lookin’ grave an’ sayin’ nothin’; an’ the ranch manager has a bloody bandage about his for’ead, an’ another holdin’ up his left arm, half bandage an’ half sling, the toot ensemble, as Colonel Sterett calls it, showin’ sech recent war that the blood’s still wet on the cloths an’ drops on the floor as we talks. An’ how none of us says a word about the dead gent in the cottonwood or of the manager who’s shot up; an’ how that same manager outfits me with ten sacks of mule-food an’ I goes p’intin’ out for the Southeast an’ forgets all I sees an’ never mentions it ag’in.

“Then thar’s Sim Booth of the Fryin’ Pan outfit, who’s one evenin’ camped with me at Antelope Springs; an’ who saddles up an’ ropes onto the laigs of a dead Injun where they’re stickin’ forth—bein’ washed free by the rains—an’ pulls an’ rolls that copper-coloured departed outen his sepulchre a lot, an’ then starts his pony off at a canter an’ sort o’ fritters the remains about the landscape. Sim does this on the argyment that the obsequies, former, takes place too near the spring. This yere Sim’s pony two months later steps in a dog hole when him an’ Sim’s goin’ along full swing with some cattle on a stampede, an’ the cayouse falls on Sim an’ breaks everything about him incloosive of his neck. The other cow-punchers allers allow it’s because Sim turns out that aborigine over by Antelope Springs. Now sech a eepisode, properly elab’rated, might feed your attention an’ hold it spellbound some.

Page 60

“Son, if I was to turn myse’f loose on, great an’ little, the divers incidents of the trail, it would consoome days in the relation. I could tell of cactus flowers, blazin’ an’ brilliant as a eye of red fire ag’in the brown dusk of the deserts; or of mile-long fields of Spanish bayonet in bloom; or of some Mexican’s doby shinin’ like a rooby in the sunlight a day’s journey ahead, the same one onbroken mass from roof to ground of the peppers they calls chili, all reddenin’ in the hot glare of the day.

“Or, if you has a fancy for stirrin’ incident an’ lively scenes, thar’s a time when the rains has raised the old Canadian until that quicksand ford at Tascosa—which has done eat a hundred teams if ever it swallows one!—is torn up complete an’ the bottom of the river nothin’ save b’ilin’ sand with a shallow yere an’ a hole deep enough to drown a house scooped out jest beyond. An’ how since I can’t pause a week or two for the river to run down an’ the ford to settle, I goes spraddlin’ an’ tumblin’ an’ swimmin’ across on Tom, my nigh wheeler, opens negotiations with the LIT ranch, an’ Bob Roberson, has his riders round-up the pasture, an’ comes chargin’ down to the ford with a bunch of one thousand ponies, all of ’em dancin’ an’ buckin’ an’ prancin’ like chil’en outen school. Roberson an’ the LIT boys throws the thousand broncos across an’ across the ford for mighty likely it’s fifty times. They’d flash ’em through—the whole band together—on the run; an’ then round ’em up on the opp’site bank, turn ’em an’ jam ’em through ag’in. When they ceases, the bottom of the river is tramped an’ beat out as hard an’ as flat as a floor, an’ I hooks up an’ brings the waggons over like the ford—bottomless quicksand a hour prior—is one of these yere asphalt streets.

“Or I might relate about a cowboy tournament that’s held over in the flat green bottom of Parker’s arroya; an’ how Jack Coombs throws a rope an’ fastens at one hundred an’ four foot, while Waco Simpson rides at the herd of cattle one hundred foot away, ropes, throws an’ ties down a partic’lar steer, frees his lariat an’ is back with the jedges ag’in in forty-eight seconds. Waco wins the prize, a Mexican saddle—stamp-leather an’ solid gold she is—worth four hundred dollars, by them onprecedented alacrities.

“Or, I might impart about a Mexican fooneal where the hearse is a blanket with two poles along the aige, the same as one of these battle litters; of the awful songs the mournful Mexicans sings about departed; of the candles they burns an’ the dozens of baby white-pine crosses they sets up on little jim-crow stone-heaps along the trail to the tomb; meanwhiles, howlin’ dirges constant.

“Now I thinks of it I might bresh up the recollections of a mornin’ when I rolls over, blankets an’ all, onto something that feels as big as a boot-laig an’ plenty squirmy; an’ how I shows zeal a-gettin’ to my feet, knowin’ I’m reposin’ on a rattlesnake who’s bunked in ag’in my back all sociable to warm himse’f. It’s worth any gent’s while to see how heated an’ indignant that serpent takes it because of me turnin’ out so early and so swift.

Page 61

"Then thar's a mornin' when I finds myse'f not five miles down the wind from a prairie fire; an' it crackin' an' roarin' in flame-sheets twenty foot high an' makin' for'ard jumps of fifty foot. What do I do? Go for'ard down the wind, set fire to the grass myse'f, an' let her burn ahead of me. In two minutes I'm over on a burned deestrick of my own, an' by the time the orig'nal flames works down to my fire line, my own speshul fire is three miles ahead an' I myse'f am ramblin' along cool an' saloobrious with a safe, shore area of burnt prairie to my r'ar.

"An' thar's a night on the Serrita la Cruz doorin' a storm, when the lightnin' melts the tire on the wheel of my trail-waggon, an' me layin' onder it at the time. An' it don't even wake me up. Thar's the time, too, when I crosses up at Chico Springs with eighty Injuns who's been buffalo huntin' over to the South Paloduro, an' has with 'em four hundred odd ponies loaded with hides an' buffalo beef an' all headed for their home-camps over back of Taos. The bucks is restin' up a day or two when I rides in; later me an' a half dozen jumps a band of antelopes jest 'round a p'int of rocks. Son, you-all would have admired to see them savages shoot their arrows. I observes one young buck a heap clost. He holds the bow flat down with his left hand while his arrows in their cow-skin quiver sticks over his right shoulder. The way he would flash his right hand back, yank forth a arrow, slam it on his bow, pull it to the head an' cut it loose, is shore a heap earnest. Them missiles would go sailin' off for over three hundred yards, an' I sees him get seven started before ever the first one strikes the ground. The Injuns acquires four antelope by this archery an' shoots mebbby some forty arrows; all of which they carefully reclaims when the excitement subsides. She's trooly a sperited exhibition an' I finds it mighty entertainin'.

"I throws these hints loose to show what might be allooded to by way of stories, grave and gay, of sights pecooliar to the trail if only some gent of experience ups an' devotes himse'f to the relations. As it is, however, an' recurrin' to Tom an' Jerry—the same bein' as I informs you, my two wheel mules—I reckons now I might better set forth as to how they comes to die that time. It's his obstinacy that downs Jerry; while pore, tender Tom perishes the victim—volunteer at that—of the love he b'ars his contrary mate.

"Them mules, Tom an' Jerry, is obtained by me, orig'nal in Vegas. They're the wheelers of a eight-mule team; an' I gives Frosty—who's a gambler an' wins 'em at monte of some locoed sport from Chaparita—twelve hundred dollars for the outfit. Which the same is cheap an' easy at double the dinero.

Page 62

"These mules evident has been part an' passel of the estates of some Mexican, for I finds a cross marked on each harness an' likewise on both waggons. Mexicans employs this formal'ty to run a bluff on any evil sperit who may come projectin' round. Your American mule skinner never makes them tokens. As a roole he's defiant of sperits; an' even when he ain't he don't see no refooge in a cross. Mexicans, on the other hand, is plenty strong on said symbol. Every mornin' you beholds a Mexican with a dab of white on his fore'erd an' on each cheek bone, an' also on his chin where he crosses himse'f with flour; shore, the custom is yooniversal an' it takes a quart of flour to fully fortify a full-blown Greaser household ag'inst the antic'pated perils of the day.

"No sooner am I cl'ar of Vegas—I'm camped near the Plaza de la Concepcion at the time—when I rounds up the eight mules an' looks 'em over with reference to their characters. This is jest after I acquires 'em. It's allers well for a gent to know what he's ag'inst; an' you can put down a stack the disp'sitions of eight mules is a important problem.

"The review is plenty satisfactory. The nigh leader is a steady practical person as a lead mule oughter be, an' I notes by his ca'm jedgmatical eye that he's goin' to give himse'f the benefit of every doubt, an' ain't out to go stampedin' off none without knowin' the reason why. His mate at the other end of the jockey-stick is nervous an' hysterical; she never trys to solve no riddles of existence herse'f, this Jane mule don't, but relies on her mate Peter an' plays Peter's system blind. The nigh p'inter is a deecorous form of mule with no bad habits; while his mate over the chain is one of these yere hard, se'fish, wary parties an' his little game is to get as much of everything except work an' trouble as the lay of the kyards permits. My nigh swing mule is a wit like I tells you the other day. Which this jocose anamile is the life of the team an' allers lettin' fly some dry, quaint observation. This mule wag is partic'lar excellent at a bad ford or a hard crossin', an his gay remarks, full of p'int as a bowie knife, shorely cheers an' uplifts the sperits of the rest. The off swing is a heedless creature who regyards his facetious mate as the very parent of fun, an' he goes about with his y'ear cocked an' his mouth ajar, ready to laugh them 'hah, hah!' laughs of his'n at every word his pard turns loose.

"Tom an' Jerry is different from the others. Bein' bigger an' havin' besides the respons'bilities of the hour piled onto them as wheel mules must, they cultivates a sooperior air an is distant an' reserved in their attitoodes towards the other six. As to each other their pose needs more deescription. Tom, the nigh wheeler—the one I rides when drivin'—is infatyooated with Jerry. I hears a sky-sharp aforetime preach about Jonathan an' David. Yet I'm yere to assert, son, that them sacred people ain't on speakin' terms compared to the way that pore old lovin' Tom mule feels towards Jerry.

Page 63

"This affection of Tom's is partic'lar amazin' when you-all recalls the fashion in which the sullen Jerry receives it. Doorin' the several years I spends in their s'ciety I never once detects Jerry in any look or word of kindness to Tom. Jerry bites him an' kicks him an' cusses him out constant; he never tol'rates Tom closter than twenty foot onless at times when he orders Tom to curry him. Shore, the imbecile Tom submits. On sech o'casions when Jerry issues a summons to go over him, usin' his upper teeth for a comb an' bresh, Tom is never so happy. Which he digs an' delves at Jerry's ribs that a-way like it's a honour; after a half hour, mebbby, when Jerry feels refreshed s'fficient, he w'irls on Tom an' dismisses him with both heels.

"'I track up on folks who's jest the same,' says Dan Boggs, one time when I mentions this onaccountable infatyooation of Tom. 'This Jerry loves that Tom mule mate of his, only he ain't lettin' on. I knows a lady whose treatment of her husband is a dooplicate of Jerry's. She metes out the worst of it to that long-sufferin' shorthorn at every bend in the trail; it looks like he never wins a good word or a soft look from her once. An' yet when that party cashes in, whatever does the lady do? Takes a hooker of whiskey, puts in p'isen enough to down a dozen wolves, an' drinks off every drop. 'Far'well, vain world, I'm goin' home,' says the lady; 'which I prefers death to sep'ration, an' I'm out to jine my beloved husband in the promised land.' I knows, for I attends the fooneal of that family—said fooneal is a double-header as the lady, bein' prompt, trails out after her husband before ever he's pitched his first camp—an' later assists old Chandler in deevisin' a epitaph, the same occurin' in these yere familiar words:

"She sort o got the drop on him,
In the dooel of earthly love;
Let's hope he gets an even break
When they meets in heaven above."

"'Thar,' concloods Dan, 'is what I regyards as a parallel experience to this Tom an' Jerry. The lady plays Jerry's system from soda to hock, an' yet you-all can see in the lights of that thar soocide how deep she loves him.'

"'That's all humbug, Dan,' says Enright; 'the lady you relates of isn't lovin'. She's only locoed that a-way.'

"'Whyever if she's locoed, then,' argues Dan, 'don't they up an' hive her in one of their madhouse camps? She goes chargin' about as free an' fearless as a cyclone.'

"'All the same,' says Texas Thompson, 'her cashin' in don't prove no lovin' heart. Mebbby she does it so's to chase him up an' continyoo onbroken them hectorin's of her's. I could onfold a fact or two about that wife of mine who cuts out the divorce from me in Laredo that would lead you to conclooosions sim'lar. But she wasn't your wife; an' I don't aim to impose my domestic afflictions on this innocent camp, which bein' troo I mootely stands my hand.'

Page 64

"This Jerry's got one weakness however, I don't never take advantage of it. He's scared to frenzy if you pulls a gun. I reckons, with all them crimes of his'n preyin' on his mind, that he allows you're out, to shoot him up. Jerry is ca'm so long as your gun's in the belt, deemin' it as so much onmeanin' ornament. But the instant you pulls it like you're goin' to put it in play, he onbuckles into piercin' screams. I reaches for my six-shooter one evenin' by virchoo of antelopes, an' that's the time I discovers this foible of Jerry's. I never gets a shot. At the sight of the gun Jerry evolves a howl an' the antelopes tharupon hits two or three high places an' is miles away. Shore, they thinks Jerry is some new breed of demon.

"When I turns to note the cause of Jerry's clamours he's loppin' his fore-laigs over Tom's back an' sobbin' an' sheddin' tears into his mane. Tom sympathises with Jerry an' says all he can to teach him that the avenger ain't on his trail. Nothin' can peacify Jerry, however, except jammin' that awful six-shooter back into its holster. I goes over Jerry that evenin' patiently explorin' for bullet marks, but thar ain't none. No one's ever creased him; an' I figgers final by way of a s'lotion of his fits that mighty likely Jerry's attended some killin' between hoomans, inadvertent, an' has the teeth of his apprehensions set on aige.

"Jerry is that high an' haughty he won't come up for corn in the mornin' onless I petitions him partic'lar an' calls him by name. To jest whoop 'Mules!' he holds don't incloode him. Usual I humours Jerry an' shouts his title speshul, the others bein' called in a bunch. When Jerry hears his name he walks into camp, delib'rate an' dignified, an' kicks every mule to pieces who tries to shove in ahead.

"Once, feelin' some malignant myse'f, I tries Jerry's patience out. I don't call 'Jerry,' merely shouts 'Mules' once or twice an' lets it go at that. Jerry, when he notices I don't refer to him partic'lar lays his y'ears back; an' although his r'ar elevation is towards me I can see he's hotter than a hornet. The faithful Tom abides with Jerry; though he tells him it's feed time an' that the others with a nosebag on each of 'em is already at their repasts. Jerry only gets madder an' lays for Tom an' tries to bite him. After ten minutes, sullen an' sulky, hunger beats Jerry an' he comes bumpin' into camp like a bar'l down hill an' eases his mind by wallopin' both hind hoofs into them other blameless mules, peacefully munchin' their rations. Also, after Jerry's let me put the nosebag onto him he reeverses his p'sition an' swiftly lets fly at me. But I ain't in no trance an' Jerry misses. I don't frale him; I saveys it's because he feels hoomiliated with me not callin' him by name.

"As a roole me an' Jerry gets through our dooties harmonious. He can pull like a lion an' never flinches or flickers at a pinch. It's shore a vict'ry to witness the heroic way Jerry goes into the collar at a hard steep hill or some swirlin', rushin' ford. Sech bein' Jerry's work habits I'm prepared to overlook a heap of moral deeficiencies an' never lays it up ag'in Jerry that he's morose an' repellant when I flings him any kindnesses.

Page 65

"But while I don't resent 'em none by voylence, still Jerry has habits ag'inst which I has to gyard. You-all recalls how long ago I tells you of Jerry's, bein' a thief. Shore, he can't he'p it; he's a born kleptomaniac. Leastwise 'kleptomaniac' is what Colonel Sterett calls it when he's tellin' me of a party who's afflicted sim'lar.

"'Otherwise this gent's a heap respectable,' says the Colonel. 'Morally speakin' thar's plenty who's worse. Of course, seein' he's crowdin' forty years, he ain't so shamefully innocent neither. He ain't no debyootanty; still, he ain't no crime-wrung debauchee. I should say he grades midway in between. But deep down in his system this person's a kleptomaniac, an' at last his weakness gets its hobbles off an' he turns himse'f loose, an' begins to jest nacherally take things right an' left. No, he don't get put away in Huntsville; they sees he's locoed an' he's corraled instead in one of the asylums where thar's nothin' loose an' little kickin' 'round, an' tharfore no temptations.'

"Takin' the word then from Colonel Sterett, Jerry is a kleptomaniac. I used former to hobble Jerry but one mornin' I'm astounded to see what looks like snow all about my camp. Bein' she's in Joone that snow theery don't go. An' it ain't snow, it's flour; this kleptomaniac Jerry creeps to the waggons while I sleeps an' gets away, one after the other, with fifteen fifty-pound sacks of flour. Then he entertains himse'f an' Tom by p'radin' about with the sacks in his teeth, shakin' an' tossin' his head an' powderin' my 'Pride of Denver' all over the plains. Which Jerry shore frosts that scenery plumb lib'ral.

"It's the next night an' I don't hobble Jerry; I pegs him out on a lariat. What do you-all reckon now that miscreant does? Corrupts pore Tom who you may be certain is sympathisin' 'round, an' makes Tom go to the waggons, steal the flour an' pack it out to him where he's pegged. The soopine Tom, who otherwise is the soul of integrity, abstracts six sacks for his mate an' at daybreak the wretched Jerry's standin' thar, white as milk himse'f, an' flour a foot deep in a cirkle whereof the radius is his rope Tom's gazin' on Jerry in a besotted way like he allows he's certainly the greatest sport on earth.

"Which this last is too much an' I ropes up Jerry for punishment. I throws an' hawgties Jerry, an' he's layin' thar on his side. His eye is obdoorate an' thar's neither shame nor repentance in his heart. Tom is sort o' sobbin' onder his breath; Tom would have swapped places with Jerry too quick an' I sees he has it in his mind to make the offer, only he knows I'll turn it down."

"The other six mules comes up an' loafs about observant an' respectful. They jestifies my arrangements; besides Jerry is mighty onpop'lar with 'em by reason of his heels. I can hear Peter the little lead mule sayin' to Jane, his mate: 'The boss is goin' to lam Jerry a lot with a trace-chain. Which it's shore comin' to him!'

Page 66

"I wirls the chain on high an' lays it along Jerry's evil ribs, kerwhillup! Every other link bites through the hide an' the chain plows a most excellent an' wholesome furrow. As the chain descends, the sympathetic Tom jumps an' gives a groan. Tom feels a mighty sight worse than his companero. At the sixth wallop Tom can't b'ar no more, but with tears an' protests comes an' stands over Jerry an' puts it up he'll take the rest himse'f. This evidence of brotherly love stands me off, an' for Tom's sake I desists an' throws Jerry loose. That old scoundrel—while I sees he's onforgivin' an' a-harbourin' of hatreds ag'in me—don't forget the trace-chain an' comports himse'f like a law-abidin' mule for months. He even quits bitin' an' kickin' Tom, an' that lovin' beast seems like he's goin' to break his heart over it, 'cause he looks on it as a sign that Jerry's gettin' cold.

"But thar comes a day when I loses both Tom an' Jerry. It's about second drink time one August mornin' an' me an' my eight mules goes scamperin' through a little Mexican plaza called Tramperos on our way to the Canadian. Over by a 'doby stands a old fleabitten gray mare; she's shore hideous.

"Now if mules has one overmasterin' deloosion it's a gray mare; she's the religion an' the goddess of the mules. This knowledge is common; if you-all is ever out to create a upheaval in the bosom of a mule the handiest, quickest lever is a old gray mare. The gov'ment takes advantage of this aberration of the mules. Thar's trains of pack mules freightin' to the gov'ment posts in the Rockies. They figgers on three hundred pounds to the mule an' the freight is packed in panniers. The gov'ment freighters not bein' equal to the manifold mysteries of a diamond-hitch, don't use no reg'lar shore-enough pack saddle but takes refooge with their ignorance in panniers.

"Speakin' gen'ral, thar's mebbly two hundred mules in one of these gov'ment pack trains. An' in the lead, followed, waited on an' worshipped by the mules, is a aged gray mare. She don't pack nothin' but her virchoo an' a little bell, which last is hung 'round her neck. This old mare, with nothin' but her character an' that bell to encumber her, goes fa'rly flyin' light. But go as fast an' as far as she pleases, them long-y'eared locoed worshippers of her's won't let her outen their raptured sight. The last one of 'em, panniers, freight an' all, would go surgin' to the topmost pinnacle of the Rockies if she leads the way.

"An' at that this gray mare don't like mules none; she abhors their company an' kicks an' abooses 'em to a standstill whenever they draws near. But the fool mules don't care; it's ecstasy to simply know she's livin' an' that mule's cup of joy is runnin' over who finds himse'f permitted to crop grass within forty foot of his old, gray bell-bedecked idol.

"We travels all day, followin' glimpsin' that flea-bitten cayouse at Tramperos. But the mules can't think or talk of nothin' else. It arouses their religious enthoosiasm to highest pitch; even the cynic Jerry gets half-way keyed up over it. I looks for trouble that night; an' partic'lar I pegs out Jerry plenty deep and strong. The rest is hobbled, all except

Tom. Gray mare or not, I'll gamble the outfit Tom wouldn't abandon Jerry, let the indoocement be ever so alloorin'.

Page 67

“Every well-organised mule team that a-way allers carries along a bronco. This little steed, saddled an’ bridled, trots throughout the day by the side of the off-wheeler, his bridle-rein caught over the wheeler’s hame. The bronco is used to round up the mules in event they strays or declines in the mornin’ to come when called. Sech bein’ the idee, the cayous is allers kept strictly in camp.

“‘James’ is my bronco’s name; an’ the evenin’, followin’ the vision of that Tramperos gray mare I makes onusual shore ’that James stays with me. Not that gray mares impresses James—him bein’ a boss an’ bosses havin’ religious convictions different from mules—or is doo to prove temptations to him; but he might conceal other plans an’ get strayed prosecootin’ of ’em to a finish. I ties James to the trail-waggon, an’ followin’ bacon, biscuits, airtights an’ sech, the same bein’ my froogal fare when on the trail, I rolls in onder the lead-waggon ‘an’ gives myse’f up to sleep.

“Exactly as I surmises, when I turns out at sun-up thar’s never a mule in sight. Every one of them idolaters goes poundin’ back, as fast as ever he can with hobbles on, to confess his sins an’ say his pray’rs at the shrine of that old gray mare. Even Jerry, whose cynicism should have saved him, pulls his picket-pin with the rest an’, takin’ Tom along, goes curvin’ off. It ain’t more than ten minutes, you can gamble! when James an’ me is on their trails.

“One by one, I overtakes the team strung all along between my camp an’ Tramperos. Peter, the little lead mule, bein’ plumb agile an’ a sharp on hobbles, gets cl’ar thar; an’ I finds him devourin’ the goddess gray mare with heart an’ soul an’ eyes, an’ singin’ to himse’f the while in low, satisfied tones.

“As one after the other I passes the pilgrim mules I turns an’ lifts about a squar’ inch of hide off each with the blacksnake whip I’m carryin’, by way of p’intin’ out their heresies an’ arousin’ in ’em a eagerness to get back to their waggons an’ a’ upright, pure career. They takes the chastisement humble an’ dootiful, an’ relinquishes the thought of reachin’ the goddess gray mare.

“When I overtakes old Jerry I pours the leather into him speshul, an’ the way him an’ his pard Tom goes scatterin’ for camp refreshes me a heap. An’ yet after I rescoos Peter from the demoralisin’ infloences of the gray mare, an’ begins to pick up the other members of the team on the journey back, I’m some deepressed when I don’t see Tom or Jerry. Nor is either of them mules by the waggons when I arrives.

“It’s onadulterated cussedness! Jerry, with no hobbles an’ merely draggin’ a rope, can lope about free an’ permiscus. Tom, with nothin’ to hamper him but his love for Jerry, is even more lightsome an’ loose. That Jerry mule, hatin’ me an’ allowin’ to make me all the grief he can, sneakingly leaves the trail some’ers after I turns him an’ touches him up with the lash. An’ now Tom an’ Jerry is shorely hid out an’ lost a whole lot. It’s nothin’ but Jerry’s notion of revenge on me.

Page 68

"I camps two days where I'm at, an rounds up the region for the trooants. I goes over it like a fine-tooth comb an' rides James to a show-down. That bronco never is so long onder the saddle since he's foaled; I don't reckon he knows before thar's so much hard work in the world as falls to him when we goes ransackin' in quest of Tom an' Jerry.

"It's no use; the ground is hard an' dry an' I can't even see their hoof-marks. The country's so rollin', too, it's no trouble for 'em to hide. At last I quits an' throws my hand in the diskyard. Tom an' Jerry is shore departed an' I'm deeficient my two best mules. I hooks up the others, an' seein' it's down hill an' a easy trail I makes Tascosa an' refits.

"I never crosses up on Tom an' Jerry in this yere life no more, but one day I learns their fate. It's a month later on my next trip back, an' I'm camped about a half day's drive of that same locoed plaza of Tramperos. As I'm settin' in camp with the sun still plenty high—I'm compilin' flapjacks at the time—I sees eight or ten ravens wheelin' an' cirklin' over beyond a swell about three miles to the left.

"Tom an' Jerry for a bloo stack!' I says to myse'f; an' with that I cinches the saddle onto James precip'tate.

"Shore enough; I'm on the scene of the tragedy. Half way down a rocky slope where thar ain't grass enough to cover the brown nakedness of the ground lies the bones of Tom an' Jerry. This latter, who's that obstinate an' resentful he won't go back to camp when I wallops him on that gray mare mornin', allows he'll secrete himse'f an' Tom off to one side an' worrit me up. While he's manoooverin' about he gets the half-inch rope he's draggin' tangled good an' fast in a mesquite bush. It shorely holds him; that bush is old Jerry's last picket—his last camp. Which he'd a mighty sight better played his hand out with me, even if I does ring in a trace-chain on him at needed intervals. Jerry jest nacherally starves to death for grass an' water. An' what's doubly hard the lovin' Tom, troo to the last, starves with him. Thar's water within two miles; but Tom declines it, stays an' starves with Jerry, an' the ravens an' the coyotes picks their frames."

CHAPTER IX.

The Influence of Faro Nell.

"Thar's no doubt about it," observed the Old Cattleman, apropos of the fairer, better sex—for woman was the gentle subject of our morning's talk; "thar's no doubt about it, females is a refinin' an' ennoblin' inflooence; you-all can hazard your chips on that an' pile 'em higher than Cook's Peak! An' when Faro Nell prefers them requests, she's ondoubted moved of feelin's of mercy. They shore does her credit, said motives does, an' if she had asked Cherokee or Jack Moore, or even Texas Thompson, things would have come off as effective an' a mighty sight more discreet. But since he's standin' thar handy, Nell ups an' recruits

Page 69

Dan Boggs on the side of hoomanity, an' tharupon Dan goes trackin' in without doo reflection, an' sets the Mexicans examples which, to give 'em a best deescription, is shore some bad. It ain't Nell's fault, but Dan is a gent of sech onusual impulses that you-all don't know wherever Dan will land none, once you goes pokin' up his ha'r-hung sensibilties with su'gestions that is novel to his game. Still, Nell can't he'p it; an' in view of what we knows to be the female record since ever the world begins, I re-asserts onhesitatin' that the effects of woman is good. She subdooes the reckless, subjoogates the rebellious, sobers the friv'lous, burns the ground from onder the indolent moccasins of that male she's roped up in holy wedlock's bonds, an' p'int the way to a higher, happier life. That's whatever! an' this dramy of existence, as I once hears Colonel Sterett say, would be a frost an' a failure an' bog plumb down at that, if you was to cut out the leadin' lady roles an' ring up the curtain with nothin' but bucks in the cast.'

"Narrow an' contracted as you may deem said camp to be, Wolfville itse'f offers plenty proof on this head. Thar's Dave Tutt: Whatever is Dave, I'd like for to inquire, prior to Tucson Jennie runnin' her wifely brand on to him an' redoocin' him to domesticity? No, thar's nothin' so evil about Dave neither, an' yet he has his little ways. For one thing, Dave's about as extemporaneous a prop'sition as ever sets in a saddle, an' thar's times when you give Dave licker an' convince him it's a o'casion for joobilation, an' you-all won't have to leave no 'call' with the clerk to insure yourse'f of bein' out early in the mornin.' Son, Dave would keep that camp settin' up all night.

"But once Dave comes onder the mitigatin' spells of Tucson Jennie, things is changed. Tucson Jennie knocks Dave's horns off doorin' the first two weeks; he gets staid an' circumspect an' tharby plays better poker an' grows more urbane.

"Likewise does Benson Annie work mir'cles sim'lar in the conduct of that maverick French which Enright an' the camp, to allay the burnin' excitement that's rendin' the outfit on account of the Laundry War, herds into her lovin' arms. Tenderfoot as he is, when we-all ups an' marries him off that time, this French already shows symptoms of becomin' one of the most abandoned sports in Arizona. Benson Annie seizes him, purifies him, an' makes him white as snow.

"An' thar's Missis Rucker;—as troo a lady as ever bakes a biscuit! Even with the burdens of the O.K. Restauraw upon her she still finds energy to improve old Rucker to that extent he ups an' rides off towards the hills one mornin' an' never does come back no more.

Page 70

“Doc,’ he says to Doc Peets, while he’s fillin’ a canteen in the Red Light prior to his start; ‘I won’t tell you what I’m aimin’ to accomplish, because the Stranglers might regyard it as their dooty to round me up. But thar’s something comin’ to the public, Doc; so I yereby leaves word that next week, or next month, or mebbly later, if doubts is expressed of my fate, I’m still flutterin’ about the scenery some’ers an’ am a long ways short of dead. An’ as I fades from sight, Doc, I’ll take a chance an’ say that the clause in the Constitootion which allows that all gents is free an’ equal wasn’t meant to incloode no married man.’ An’ with these croode bluffs Rucker chases forth for the Floridas.

“No, the camp don’t do nothin’; the word gets passed ’round that old Rucker’s gone prospectin’ an’ that he will recur in our midst whenever thar’s a reg’lar roll-call. As for Missis Rucker, personal, from all we can jedge by lookin’ on—for thar’s shore none of us who’s that locoed we ups an’ asks—I don’t reckon now she ever notices that Rucker’s escaped.

“Yere’s how it is the time when Faro Nell, her heart bleedin’ for the sufferin’s of dumb an’ he’pless brutes, employs Dan Boggs in errants of mercy an’ Dan’s efforts to do good gets ill-advised. Not that Dan is easily brought so he regyards his play as erroneous; Enright has to rebooke Dan outright in set terms an’ assoome airs of severity before ever Dan allows he entertains a doubt.

“‘Suppose I does retire that Greaser’s hand from cirk’lation?’ says Dan, sort o’ dispoottatious with Enright an’ Doc Peets, who’s both engaged in p’intin’ out Dan’s faults. ‘Mexicans ain’t got no more need for hands than squinch owls has for hymn books. They won’t work; they never uses them members except for dealin’ monte or clawin’ a guitar. I regyards a Mexican’s hands that a-way, when considered as feachers in his makeup, as sooperfluous.’

“‘Dan, you shore is the most perverse sport!’ says Enright, makin’ a gesture of impatience an’ at the same time refillin’ his glass in hopes of a ca’mer frame. ‘This ain’t so much a question of hands as it’s a question of taste. Nell’s requests is right, an’ you’re bound to go about the rescoo of said chicken as the victim of crooelties. Where you-all falls down is on a system. The method you invokes is impertinent. Don’t you say so, Doc?’

“‘Which I shore does,’ says Peets. ‘Dan’s conduct is absolootely oncouth.’

“Dan lays the basis for these strictures in the follow-in’ fashion: It’s a fieste with the Mexicans—one of the noomerous saint’s days they gives way to when every Greaser onbuckles an’ devotes himse’f to merriments—an’ over in Chihuahua, as the Mexican part of the camp is called, the sunburnt portion of Wolfville’s pop’lation broadens into quite a time. Thar’s hoss races an’ monte an’ mescal an’ pulque, together with roode music sech as may be wrung from primitive instruments like the guitar, the fiddle, an’ tin cans half filled with stones.

Page 71

“Faro Nell, who is only a child as you-all might say, an’ ready to be engaged an’ entertained with childish things, goes trippin’ over to size up the gala scene.

“Thar’s a passel of young Mexicans who’s Ridin’ for the Chicken’s Head. This yere is a sport something like a Gander Pullin’, same as we-all engages in on Thanksgivin’ days an’ Christmas, back when I’m a boy in Tennessee. You saveys a Gander Pullin’? Son, you don’t mean sech ignorance! Thar must have been mighty little sunshine in the life of a yooth in the morose regions where you was raised for you-all never to disport yourse’f, even as a spectator, at a Gander Pullin’! It wouldn’t surprise me none after that if you ups an’ informs me you never shakes a fetlock in that dance called money-musk.

“To the end that you be eddicated,—for it’s better late than never,”—I’ll pause concernin’ Boggs an’ the Mexicans long enough to eloocidate of Gander Pullin’s.

“As I su’gests, we onbends in this pastime at sech epocks as Christmas an’ Thanksgivin.’ I don’t myse’f take actooal part in any Gander Pullin’s. Not that I’m too delicate, but I ain’t got no hoss. Bein’ a pore yooth, I spends the mornin’ of my c’reer on foot, an’ as a hoss is a necessary ingreedient to a Gander Pullin’, I never does stand in personal on the festival, but is redooced to become a envy-bitten looker-on.

“Gander Pullin’s is conducted near a tavern or a still house so’s the assembled gents won’t want the inspiration befittin’ both the season an’ the scene, an’ is commonly held onder the auspices of the proprietor tharof. Thar’s a track marked out in a cirkle like a little racecourse for the hosses to gallop on. This course runs between two poles pinned into the ground; or mebbly it’s two trees. Thar’s a rope stretched from pole to pole,—taut an’ stiff she’s stretched; an’ the gander who’s the object of the meetin’, with his neck an’ head greased a heap lavish, is hung from the rope by his two hind laigs. As the gander hangs thar, what Colonel Sterett would style ‘the cynosure of every eye,’ you’ll notice that a gent by standin’ high in the stirrups can get a grip of the gander’s head.

“As many as determines to distinguish themse’fs in the amoosement throws a two-bit piece into a hat. Most likely thar’ll be forty partic’pants. They then lines up, Injun file, an’ goes caperin’ round the course, each in his place in the joyous procession. As a gent goes onder the rope he grabs for the gander’s head; an’ that party who’s expert enough to bring it away in his hand, wins the hat full of two-bit pieces yeretofore deescribed.

“Which, of course, no gent succeeds the first dash outen the box, as a gander’s head is on some good and strong; an’ many a saddle gets emptied by virchoo of the back’ard yanks a party gets. But it’s on with the dance! They keeps whoopin’ an’ shoutin’ an’ ridin’ the cirkle an’ grabbin’ at the gander, each in his cheerful turn, ontill some strong or lucky party sweeps away the prize, assoomes title to the two-bit pieces, goes struttin' to the lickin' room an' buys nose paint for the pop'lace tharwith.

Page 72

“Shore, doorin’ a contest a gent’s got to keep ridin’; he’s not allowed to pause an’ dally with the gander an’ delay the game. To see to this a brace of brawny sharps is stationed by each pole with clubs in their willin’ hands to reemonstrate with any hoss or gent who slows down or stops as he goes onder the gander.

“Thar you have it, son; a brief but lively picture of a Gander Pullin’ as pulled former in blithe old Tennessee. An’ you’ll allow, if you sets down to a ca’m, onja’ndiced study of the sport, that a half hour of reasonable thrill might be expected to flow from it. Gander Pullin’s is popular a lot when I’m a yearlin’; I knows that for shore; though in a age which grows effete it’s mighty likely if we-all goes back thar now, we’d find it fallen into disuse as a reelaxation.

“In Ridin’ for the Chicken’s Head, a Mexican don’t hang up his prey none same as we-all does at Gander Pullin’s. He buries it in the ground to sech degrees that nothin’ but the head an’ neck protroodes. An’ as the Mexicans goes flashin’ by on their broncos, each in turn swings down an’ makes a reach for the chicken’s head. The experiment calls for a shore-enough rider; as when a party is over on one side that a-way, an’ nothin’ to hold by but a left hand on the saddlehorn an’ a left spur caught in the cantle, any little old pull will fetch him out on his head.

“This day when Faro Nell comes bulgin’ up to amoose her young an’ idle cur’osity with the gayeties of Chihuahua, the Ridin’ for the Chicken’s Head is about to commence. Which they’re jest plantin’ the chicken. At first Nell don’t savey, as she ain’t posted deep on Mexican pastimes. But Nell is plenty quick mental; as, actin’ look-out for Cherokee’s bank, she’s bound to be. Wherefore Nell don’t study the preeliminaries long before she gets onto the roodiments of some idee concernin’ the jocund plans of the Greasers.

“At last the chicken is buried, an’ thar’s nothin’ in sight but its anxious head. Except that it can turn an’ twist its neck some, it’s fixed in the ground as firm an’ solid as the stumps of a mesquite bush.

“The first Greaser—he’s a gaudy party with more colours than you could count in any rainbow—is organisin’ for a rush. He’s pickin’ up his reins an’ pushin’ his moccasins deep into his tappedaries, when, as he gives his cayouse the spur, the beauty of Ridin’ for the Chicken’s Head bursts full on Faro Nell. Comin’ on her onexpected, Nell don’t see no pleasure in it. It don’t present the attractions which so alloores the heart of a Greaser. Without pausin’ to think, an’ feelin’ shocked over the fate that’s ridin’ down on the buried chicken, Nell grips her little paws convulsive an’ snaps her teeth. It’s then her eye catches Dan Boggs, who’s contemplatin’ details an’ awaitin’ the finish with vivid interest.

““Oh, Dan!’ says Nell, grabbin’ Dan’s arm, ‘I don’t want that chicken hurt none! Can’t you-all make ‘em stop?’

Page 73

“‘Shore!’ says Dan, prompt to Nell’s cry. ‘I preevails on ‘em to cease easy.’

“As Dan says this, that radiant cavalier is sweepin’ upon the pore chicken like the breath of destiny. He’s bendin’ from the saddle to make a swoop as Dan speaks. Thar ain’t a moment to lose an’ Dan’s hand goes to his gun.

“‘Watch me stop him,’ says Dan; an’ as he does, his bullet makes rags of the Mexican’s hand not a inch from the chicken’s head.

“For what time you-all might need to slop out a drink, the onlookin’ Mexicans stands still. Then the stoopefyin’ impressions made by Dan’s pistol practice wears off an’ a howl goes up like a hundred wolves. At this Dan gets his number-two gun to b’ar, an’ with one in each hand, confronts the tan-coloured multitoode.

“‘That’s shore a nice shot, Nell!’ says Dan over his shoulder, ropin’ for the congratoolations he thinks is comin.’

“But Nell don’t hear him; she’s one hundred yards away an’ streakin’ it for the Red Light like a shootin’ star. She tumbles in on us with the brake off like a stage-coach downhill.

“‘Dan’s treed Chihuahua!’ gasps Nell, as she heads straight for Cherokee; ‘you-all better rustle over thar plumb soon!’

“Cherokee jumps an’ grabs his hardware where they’re layin’ onder the table. Bein’ daylight an’ no game goin’, an’ the day some warm besides, he ain’t been wearin’ ‘em, bein’ as you-all might say in negligee. Cherokee buckles on his belts in a second an’ starts; the rest of us, however, since we’re more ackerately garbed, don’t lose no time an’ is already half way to Dan.

“It ain’t a two-minute run an’ we arrives in time. Thar’s no more blood, though thar might have been, for we finds Dan frontin’ up to full two hundred Greasers, their numbers increasin’ and excitement runnin’ a heap high. We cuts in between Dan an’ Mexican public opinion and extricates that over-vol’tile sport.

“But Dan won’t return until he exhoomes the chicken, which is still bobbin’ an’ twistin’ its onharmd head where the Mexican buries it. Dan digs it up an’ takes it by the laigs; Enright meanwhile cussin’ him out, fervent an’ nervous, for he fears some locoed Greaser will cut loose every moment an’ mebbly crease a gent, an’ so leave it incumbent on the rest of us to desolate Chihuahua.

“‘It’s for Nell,’ expostulates Dan, replyin’ to Enright’s criticisms. ‘I knows she wants it by the way she grabs my coat that time. Moreover, from the tones she speaks in, I reckons she wants it alive. Also, I don’t discern no excoose for this toomult neither; which you-all is shore the most peevish bunch, Enright, an’ that’s whatever!’

“‘Peevish or no,’ retorts Enright, ‘as a jedge of warjigs I figgers that we gets here jest in time. Thar you be, up ag’inst the entire tribe, an’ each one with a gun. It’s one of the deefects of a Colt’s six-shooter that it hits as hard an’ shoots as troo for a Injun or a Greaser as it does for folks. Talk about us bein’ peevisish! what do you-all reckon would have been results if we hadn’t cut in on the baile at the time we does?’

Page 74

“Nothin’,’ says Dan, with tones of soopreme vanity, at the same time dustin’ the dirt off Nell’s chicken, ’nothing except I’d hung crape on half the dobies in Chihuahua.’

“About two hours after, when things ag’in simmers to the usual, an’ Nell is makin’ her chicken a coop out to the r’ar of the Red Light, Enright gives a half laugh.

“‘Dan,’ says Enright, ’when I reflects on the hole we drug you out of, an’ the way you-all gets in, you reminds me of that Thomas Benton dog I owns when I’m a yoothful child on the Cumberland. Which Thomas Benton that a-way is a mighty industrious dog an’ would turn over a quarter-section of land any afternoon diggin’ out a ground-hawg. But thar’s this drawback to Thomas Benton which impairs his market valyoo. Some folks used to regyard it as a foible; but it’s worse, it’s a deefect. As I remarks, this Thomas Benton dog would throw his whole soul into the work, an’ dig for a groundhawg like he ain’t got another dollar. But thar’s this pecooliarity: After that Thomas Benton dog has done dug out the ground-hawg for a couple of hours, you-all is forced to get a spade an’ dig out that Thomas Benton dog. He’s dead now these yere forty years, but if he’s livin’ I’d shore change his name an’ rebrand him “Dan’l Boggs.””

CHAPTER X.

The Ghost of the Bar-B-8.

“Spectres? Never! I refooses ’em my beliefs utter”; and with these emphatic words the Old Cattleman tasted his liquor thoughtfully on his tongue. The experiment was not satisfactory; and he despatched his dark retainer Tom for lemons and sugar. “An’ you-all might better tote along some hot water, too;” he commanded. “This nosepaint feels raw an’ over-fervid; a leetle dilootion won’t injure it none.”

“But about ghosts?” I persisted.

“Ghosts?” he retorted. “I never does hear of but one; that’s a apparition which enlists the attentions of Peets and Old Man Enright a lot. It’s a spectre that takes to ha’ntin’ about one of Enright’s Bar-B-8 sign-camps, an’ scarin’ up the cattle an’ drivin’ ’em over a precipice, an’ all to Enright’s disaster an’ loss. Nacherally, Enright don’t like this spectral play; an’ him an’ Peets lays for the wraith with rifles, busts its knee some, an’ Peets ampytates its laig. Then they throws it loose; allowin’ that now it’s only got one lai’g, the visitations will mighty likely cease. Moreover Enright regyards ampytation that a-way, as punishment enough. Which I should shore allow the same myse’f!

“It ain’t much of a tale. It turns out like all sperit stories; when you approaches plumb close an’ jumps sideways at ’em an’ seizes ’em by the antlers, the soopernacheral elements sort o’ bogs down.

“It’s over mebbby fifty miles to the southeast of Wolfville, some’ers in the fringes of the Tres Hermanas that thar’s a sign-camp of Enright’s brand. Thar’s a couple of Enright’s riders holdin’ down this corner of the Bar-B-8 game, an’ one evenin’ both of ’em comes squanderin’ in,—ponies a-foam an’ faces pale as milk,—an’ puts it up they don’t return to that camp no more.

Page 75

“‘Because she’s ha’nted,’ says one; ‘Jim an’ me both encounters this yere banshee an’ it’s got fire eyes. Also, itse’f and pony is constructed of bloo flames. You can gamble! I don’t want none of it in mine; an’ that’s whatever!’

“Any gent can see that these yooths is mighty scared. Enright elicits their yarn only after pourin’ about a quart of nosepaint into ’em.

“It looks like on two several o’casions that a handful of cattle gets run over a steep bluff from the mesa above. The fall is some sixty feet in the cl’ar, an’ when them devoted cattle strikes the bottom it’s plenty easy to guess they’re sech no longer, an’ thar’s nothin’ left of ’em but beef. These beef drives happens each time in the night; an’ the cattle must have been stampeded complete to make the trip. Cattle, that a-way, ain’t goin’ to go chargin’ over a high bluff none onless their reason is onhinged. No, the coyotes an’ the mountain lions don’t do it; they never chases cattle, holdin’ ’em in fear an’ tremblin.’ These mountain lions pronounces down on colts like a mink on a settin’ hen, but never calves or cattle.

“It’s after the second beef killin’ when the two riders allows they’ll do some night herdin’ themse’fs an’ see if they solves these pheenomenons that’s cuttin’ into the Bar-B-8.

“‘An’ it’s mebbly second drink time after midnight,’ gasps the cow-puncher who’s relatin’ the adventures, ‘an’ me an’ Jim is experimentin’ along the aige of the mesa, when of a suddent thar comes two steers, heads down, tails up, locoed absoloot they be; an’ flashin’ about in the r’ar of ’em rides this flamin’ cow-sperit on its flamin’ cayouse. Shore! he heads ’em over the cliff; I hears ’em hit the bottom of the canyon jest as I falls off my bronco in a fit. As soon as ever I comes to an’ can scramble into that Texas saddle ag’in, me an’ Jim hits the high places in the scenery, in a fervid way, an’ yere we-all be! An’ you hear me, gents, I don’t go back to that Bar-B-8 camp no more. I ain’t ridin’ herd on apparitions; an’ whenever ghosts takes to romancin’ about in the cow business, that lets me out.’

“‘I reckons,’ says Enright, wrinkl’n up his brows, ‘I’ll take a look into this racket myse’f.’

“‘An’ if you-all don’t mind none, Enright,’ says Peets, ‘I’ll get my chips in with yours. Thar’s been no one shot for a month in either Red Dog or Wolfville an’ I’m reedic’lous free of patients. An’ if the boys’ll promise to hold themse’fs an’ their guns in abeyance for a week or so, an’ not go framin’ up excooses for my presence abrupt, I figgers that a few days idlin’ about the ranges, an’ mebbly a riot or two roundin’ up this cow-demon, will expand me an’ do me good.’

“‘You’re lookin’ for trouble, Doc,’ says Colonel Sterett, kind o’ laughin’ at Peets. ‘You reminds me of a onhappy sport I encounters long ago in Looeyville.’

“‘An’ wherein does this Bloo Grass party resemble me?’ asks Peets.

Page 76

“‘It’s one evenin’,’ says Colonel Sterett, ‘an’ a passel of us is settin’ about in the Gait House bar, toyin’ with our beverages. Thar’s a smooth, good-lookin’ stranger who’s camped at a table near. Final, he yawns like he’s shore weary of life an’ looks at us sharp an’ cur’ous. Then he speaks up gen’ral as though he’s addressin’ the air. “This is a mighty dull town!” he says. “Which I’ve been yere a fortnight an’ I ain’t had no fight as yet.” An’ he continyoos to look us over plenty mournful.

““You-all needn’t gaze on us that a-way,” says a gent named Granger; “you can set down a stack on it, you ain’t goin’ to pull on no war with none of us.”

““Shore, no!” says the onhappy stranger. Then he goes on apol’getic; “Gents, I’m onfort’nately constitootcd. Onless I has trouble at reasonable intervals it preys on me. I’ve been yere in your town two weeks an’ so far ain’t seen the sign. Gents, it’s beginnin’ to tell; an’ if any of you-all could direct me where I might get action it would be kindly took.”

““If you’re honin’ for a muss,” says Granger, “all you has to do is go a couple of blocks to the east, an’ then five to the no’t’h, an’ thar on the corner you’ll note a mighty prosperous s’loon. You caper in by the side door; it says FAMILY ENTRANCE over this yere portal. Sa’nter up to the bar, call for licker, drink it; an’ then you remark to the barkeep, casooal like, that you’re thar to maintain that any outcast who’ll sell sech whiskey ain’t fit to drink with a nigger or eat with a dog. That’s all; that barkeep’ll relieve you of the load that’s burdenin’ your nerves in about thirty seconds. You’ll be the happiest sport in Looneyville when he gets through.”

““But can’t you come an’ p’int out the place,” coaxes the onhappy stranger of Granger. He’s all wropped up in what Granger tells him. “I don’t know my way about good, an’ from your deescriptions I shorely wouldn’t miss visitin’ that resort for gold an’ precious stones. Come an’ show me, pard; I’ll take you thar in a kerriage.”

““At that Granger consents to guide the onhappy stranger. They drives over an’ Granger stops the outfit, mebbby she’s fifty yards from the door. He p’int’s it out to the onhappy stranger sport.

““Come with me,” says the onhappy stranger, as he gets outen the kerriage. “Come on; you-all don’t have to fight none. I jest wants you to watch me. Which I’m the dandiest warrior for the whole length of the Ohio!”

““But Granger is firm that he won’t; he’s not inquisitive, he says, an’ will stay planted right thar on the r’ar seat an’ await deevolpments. With that, the onhappy stranger sport goes sorrowfully for’ard alone, an’ gets into the gin-mill by the said FAMILY ENTRANCE. Granger’ sets thar with his head out an’ y’ears cocked lookin’ an’ listenin’.

“Everything’s plenty quiet for a minute. Then slam! bang! bing! crash! the most flagrant hubbub breaks forth! It sounds like that store’s comin’ down. The racket rages an’ grows worse. Thar’s a smashin’ of glass. The lights goes out, while customers comes boundin’ an’ skippin’ forth from the FAMILY ENTRANCE like frightened fawns. At last the uproars dies down until they subsides complete.

Page 77

“Granger is beginnin’ to upbraid himse’f for not gettin the onhappy stranger’s address, so’s he could ship home the remainder. In the midst of Granger’s se’f-accoosations, the lights in the gin-mill begins to burn ag’in, one by one. After awhile, she’s reilluminated an’ ablaze with old-time glory. It’s then the FAMILY ENTRANCE opens an’ the onhappy stranger sport emerges onto the sidewalk. He’s in his shirtsleeves, an’ a satisfied smile wreathes his face. He shore looks plumb content!

““Get out of the kerriage an’ come in, pard,” he shouts to Granger. “Come on in a whole lot! I’d journey down thar an’ get you, but I can’t leave; I’m tendin’ bar!”

““You’re shore right, Colonel,’ says Peets, when Colonel Sterett ends the anecdote, ‘the feelin’ of that onhappy stranger sport is parallel to mine. Ghosts is new to me; an’ I’m goin’ pirootin’ off with Enright on this demon hunt an’ see if I can’t fetch up in the midst of a trifle of nerve-coolin’ excitement.’

“The ghost tales of the stampeded cow-punchers excites Dan Boggs a heap. After Enright an’ Peets has organised an’ gone p’inting out for the ha’nted Bar-B-8 sign-camp to investigate the spook, Dan can’t talk of nothin’ else.

““Them’s mighty dead game gents, Enright an’ Doc Peets is!’ says Dan. ‘I wouldn’t go searchin’ for no sperits more’n I’d write letters to rattlesnakes! I draws the line at intimacies with fiends.’

““But mebbby this yere is a angel,’ says Faro Nell, from her stool alongside of Cherokee Hall.

““Not criticisin’ you none, Nell,’ says Dan, ‘Cherokee himse’f will tell you sech surmises is reedic’lous. No angel is goin’ to visit Arizona for obvious reasons. An’ ag’in, no angel’s doo to go skally-hootin’ about after steers an’ stampeedin’ ’em over brinks. It’s ag’in reason; you bet! That blazin’ wraith, that a-way, is a shore-enough demon! An’ as for me, personal, I wouldn’t cut his trail for a bunch of ponies!

““Be you-all scared of ghosts, Dan?’ asks Faro Nell.

““Be I scared of ghosts?’ says Dan. ‘Which I wish, I could see a ghost an’ show you! I don’t want to brag none, Nellie, but I’ll gamble four for one, an’ go as far as you likes, that if you was to up an’ show me a ghost right now, I wouldn’t stop runnin’ for a month. But what appals me partic’lar,’ goes on Dan, ‘about Peets an’ Enright, is they takes their guns. Now a ghost waxes onusual indignant if you takes to shootin’ him up with guns. No, it don’t hurt him; but he regyards sech demonstrations as insults. It’s like my old pap says that time about the Yankees. My old pap is a colonel with Gen’ral Price, an’ on this evenin’ is engaged in leadin’ one of the most intrepid retreats of the war. As he’s prancin’ along at the head of his men where a great commander belongs, he’s shore scandalised by hearin’ his r’ar gyard firin’ on the Yanks. So he rides back, my old pap does, an' he says: "Yere you-all eediots! Whatever do you mean by shootin' at them Yankees? Don't you know it only makes 'em madder?" An' that,' concloods Dan, 'is how I feels about spectres. I wouldn't go lammin' loose at 'em with no guns; it only makes 'em madder.'

Page 78

“It’s the next day, an’ Peets an’ Enright is organised in the ha’nted sign-camp of the Bar-B-8. Also, they’ve been lookin’ round. By ridin’ along onder the face of the precipice, they comes, one after t’other, on what little is left of the dead steers. What strikes ’em as a heap pecooliar is that thar’s no bones or horns. Two or three of the hoofs is kickin’ about, an’ Enright picks up one the coyotes overlooks. It shows it’s been cut off at the fetlock j’int by a knife.

“‘This spectre,’ says Enright, passin’ the hoof to Peets, ’packs a bowie; an’ he likewise butchers his prey. Also, ondoubted, he freights the meat off some’ers to his camp, which is why we don’t notice no big bones layin’ ’round loose.’ Then Enright scans the grass mighty scroopulous; an’ shore enough! thar’s plenty of pony tracks printed into the soil. ‘That don’t look so soopernacheral neither,’ says Enright, p’intin’ to the hoof-prints.

“‘Them’s shorely made by a flesh an’ blood pony,’ says Peets. ‘An’ from their goin’ some deep into the ground, I dedooes that said cayouse is loaded down with what weight of beef an’ man it can stagger onder.’

“That evenin’ over their grub Enright an’ Peets discusses the business. Thar’s a jimcrow Mexican plaza not three miles off in the hills. Both of ’em is aware of this hamlet, an’ Peets, partic’lar, is well acquainted with a old Mexican sharp who lives thar—he’s a kind o’ schoolmaster among ’em—who’s mighty cunnin’ an’ learned. His name is Jose Miguel.

“‘An’ I’m beginnin’ to figger,’ says Peets, ’that this ghostly rider is the foxy little Jose Miguel. Which I’ve frequent talked with him; an’ he saveys enough about drugs an’ chemicals to paint up with phosphorus an’ go surgin’ about an’ stampedin’ cattle over bluffs. It’s a mighty good idee from his standp’int. He can argue that the cattle kills themse’fs—sort o’ commits soocide inadvertent—an’ if we-all trades up on him with the beef, he insists on his innocence, an’ puts it up that his cuttin’ in on the play after said cattle done slays themse’fs injures nobody but coyotes.’

“‘Doc,’ coincides Enright, after roominatin’ in silence, ’Doc, the longer I ponders, the more them theories seems sagacious. That enterprisin’ Greaser is jest about killin’ my beef an’ sellin’ it to the entire plaza. Not only does this ghost play opp’rate to stampede the cattle an’ set ’em runnin’ cimmaron an’ locoed so they’ll chase over the cliffs to their ends, but it serves to scare my cow-punchers off the range, which last, ondoubted, this Miguel looks on as a deesideratum. However, it’s goin’ to be good an’ dark to-night, an’ if we-all has half luck I reckons that we fixes him.’

“It’s full two hours after midnight an’ while thar’s stars overhead thar’s no moon; along the top of the mesa it’s as dark as the inside of a jug. Peets an’ Enright is Injunin’ about on the prowl for the ghost. They don’t much reckon it’ll be abroad, as mebbly the plaza has beef enough.

Page 79

“‘However, by to-morry night,’ says Enright in a whisper, ‘or at the worst, by the night after, we’re shore to meet up with this marauder.’

“‘Hesh!’ whispers Peets, at the same time stoppin’ Enright with his hand, ‘he’s out to-night!’

“An’ thar for shore is something like a dim bloo light movin’ across the plains. Now an’ then, two brighter lights shows in spots like the blazes of candles; them’s the fire eyes the locoed cowboys tells of. Whatever it is, whether spook or Greaser, it’s quarterin’ the ground like one of these huntin’ dogs. Its gait is a slow canter.

“‘He’s on the scout,’ says Enright, ‘tryin’ to start a steer or two in the dark; but he ain’t located none yet.’

“Enright an’ Peets slides to the ground an’ hobbles their broncos. They don’t aim to have ‘em go swarmin’ over no bluffs in any blindness of a first surprise. When the ponies is safe, they bends low an’ begins makin’ up towards the ground on which this bloo-shimmerin’ shadow is ha’ntin’ about. Things comes their way; they has luck. They’ve done crope about forty rods when the ghost heads for ‘em. They can easy tell he’s comin’, for the fire eyes shows all the time an’ not by fits an’ starts as former. As the bloo shimmer draws nearer they makes out the vague shadows of a man on a hoss. Son, she’s shore plenty ghostly as a vision, an’ Enright allows later, it’s no marvel the punchers vamoses sech scenes.

“‘How about it,’ whispers Peets; ‘shall I do the shootin’?’

“‘Which your eyes is younger,’ says Enright. ‘You cut loose; an’ I’ll stand by to back the play. Only aim plenty low. You can’t he’p over-shootin’ in the dark. Hold as low as his stirrup.’

“Peets pulls himse’f up straight as a saplin’ an’ runs his left hand along the bar’l as far as his arm’ll reach. An’ he hangs long on the aim as shootin’ in the dark ain’t no cinch. If this ghost is a bright ghost it would be easy. But he ain’t; he’s bloo an’ dim like washed out moonlight, or when it’s jest gettin’ to be dawn. Enright’s twenty yards to one side so as to free himse’f of Peet’s smoke in case he has to make a second shot.

“But Peets calls the turn. With the crack of that Sharp’s of his, the ghost sets up sech a screech it proves he ain’t white an’ also that he’ll live through the evenin’s events. As the spectre yelps, the bloo cayouse goes over on its head an’ neck an’ then falls dead on its side. The lead which only smashes the spectre’s knee to splinters goes plumb through the pony’s heart.

“As Peets foresees, the ghost ain’t none other than the wise little Jose Miguel, schoolmaster, who’s up on drugs an’ chemicals. The bloo glimmer is phosphorus; an’ the fire eyes is two of these little old lamps like miners packs in their caps.

“Enright an’ Peets strolls up; this Miguel is groanin’ an’ mournin’ an’ cryin’ ‘Marie, Madre de Dios!’ When he sees who downs him, he drags himse’f to Enright an’ begs a heap abject for his life. With that, Enright silently lets down the hammer of his rifle.

Page 80

“Peets when the sun comes up enjoys himse’f speshul with the opp’ration. Peets is fond of ampytations, that a-way, and he lops off said limb with zest an’ gusto.

“‘I shore deplores, Jose,’ says Peets, ‘to go shortenin’ up a fellow scientist like this. But thar’s no he’pin’ it; fate has so decreed. Also, as some comfort to your soul, I’ll explain to Sam Enright how you won’t ride much when I gets you fairly trimmed. Leastwise, after I’m done prunin’ you, thar won’t be nothin’ but these yere woman’s saddles that you’ll fit, an’ no gent, be he white or be he Greaser, can work cattle from a side-saddle.’ An’ Peets, hummin’ a roundelay, cuts merrily into the wounded member.”

CHAPTER XI.

Tucson Jennie’s Correction.

“Doc Peets, son,” said the Old Cattleman, while his face wore the look of decent gravity it ever donned when that man of medicine was named, “Doc Peets has his several uses. Aside from him bein’ a profound sharp on drugs, an’ partic’lar cowboy drugs, he’s plenty learned in a gen’ral way, an’ knows where every kyard lays in nacher’s deck, from them star-flecked heavens above to the earth beneath, an’—as Scriptor puts it—to the ‘waters under the earth.’ It’s a good scheme to have a brace of highly eddicated gents, same as Colonel Sterett an’ Doc Peets, sort o’ idlin’ ’round your camp. Thar’s times when a scientist, or say, a lit’rary sport comes bluffin’ into Wolfville; an’ sech folks is a mighty sight too deep for Boggs an’ me an’ Tutt. If we’re left plumb alone with a band of them book-read shorthorns like I deescribes, you-all sees yourse’f, they’re bound to go spraddlin’ East ag’in, an’ report how darkened Wolfville is. But not after they locks horns with Doc Peets or Colonel Sterett. Wherefore, whenever the camp’s invaded by any over-enlightened people who’s gone too far in schools for the rest of us to break even with, we ups an’ plays Doc Peets or Colonel Sterett onto ’em; an’ the way either of them gents would turn in an’ tangle said visitors up mental don’t bother ’em a bit. That’s straight; Peets an’ the Colonel is our refooge; they’re our protectors; an’ many a time an’ oft, have I beheld ’em lay for some vain-glorious savant who’s got a notion the Southwest, that a-way, is a region of savagery where the folks can’t even read an’ write none, an’ they’d rope, throw, an’ hawgtie him—verbal, I means—an’ brand his mem’ry with the red-hot fact that he’s wrong an’ been wadin’ in error up to the saddle-girths touchin’ the intellectooal attainments of good old Arizona. Shore,—Doc Peets has other uses than drugs, an’ he discharges ’em.

Page 81

“Now that I thinks of the matter, it’s Doc Peets who restores Dave Tutt to full standin’ with Tucson Jennie, the time she begins to neglect Dave. You see, the trouble is this a-way: It really starts—leastwise I allers so believes—in Dave’s beginnin’ wrong with Tucson Jennie. Troo, as I confesses to you frequent yeretofore, I ain’t married none myse’f; still, I’ve been livin’ a likely number of years, an’ has nacherally witnessed a whole lot touchin’ other gents an’ their wives; an’ sech experiences is bound to breed conclussions. An’ while I may be wrong, for these yere views is nothin’ more than a passel of ontested theeries with me, it’s my beliefs that thar’s two attitoodes, speakin’ gen’ral, which a gent assoomes toward his bride. Either he deals with her on what we-all will call the buck-squaw system, or he turns the game about complete, an’ organises his play on the gentleman-lady system. In the latter, the gent waits on his wife; he comes an’ he goes, steps high or soft, exactly as she commands. She gives the orders; an’ he rides a pony to death execootin’ ’em, an’ no reemonstrances nor queries. That wife is range an’ round-up boss for her outfit.

“But the buck-squaw system is after all more hooman an’ satisfactory. It’s opposite to the other. The gent is reesponsible for beef on the hook an’ flour in the bar’l. He’s got to provide the blankets, make good ag’in the household’s hunger, an’ see to it thar’s allers wood an’ water within easy throw of every camp he pitches. Beyond that, however, the gent who’s playin’ the buck-squaw system don’t wander. When he’s in camp, he distinguishes himse’f by doin’ nothin’. He wrops himse’f in his blankets, camps down by the fire, while his wife rustles his chuck an’ fills his pipe for him. At first glance, this yere buck-squaw system might strike a neeophyte as a mighty brootal scheme. Jest the same, it’ll eemerge winner twenty times to the gentleman-lady system’s once. The women folks like it. Which they’ll pretend they prefers the gentleman-lady system, where they sets still an’ the gent attends on ’em; but don’t you credit it, none whatever. It’s the good old patriarchal, buck-squaw idee, where the gent does nothin’ an’ the lady goes prancin’ about like the ministerin’ angel which she is, that tickles her to death. I states ag’in, that it’s my notion, Dave who begins with Tucson Jennie—they bein’ man an’ wife—on the gentleman-lady system, tharby hatches cold neglect for himse’f. An’ if it ain’t for the smooth savey of Doc Peets, thar’s no sport who could foretell the disastrous end. Dave, himse’f thinks he’d have had eventool to resign his p’sition as Jennie’s husband an’ quit.

“Which I’ve onfolded to you prior of Jennie’s gettin’ jealous of Dave touchin’ that English towerist female; but this yere last trouble ain’t no likeness nor kin to that. Them gusts of jealousy don’t do no harm nohow; nor last the day. They’re like thunder showers; brief an’ black enough, but soon over an’ leavin’ the world brighter.

Page 82

"This last attitooode of Jennie towards Dave is one of abandonment an' onthinkin' indifference that a-way. It begins hard on the fetlocks of that interestin' event, thrillin' to every proud Wolfville heart, the birth of Dave's only infant son, Enright Peets Tutt. Which I never does cross up with no one who deems more of her progeny than Jennie does of the yoothful Enright Peets. A cow's solicitoode concernin' her calf is chill regyard compared tharwith. Jennie hangs over Enright Peets like some dew-jewelled hollyhock over a gyarden fence; you'd think he's a roast apple; an' I don't reckon now, followin' that child's advent, she ever sees another thing in Arizona but jest Enright Peets. He's the whole check-rack—the one bet that wins on the layout of the possible—an' Jennie proceeds to conduct herse'f accordin'. It's a good thing mebbly for Enright Peets; I won't set camped yere an' say it ain't; but it's mighty hard on Dave.

"Jennie not only neglects Dave, she turns herse'f loose frequent an' assails him. If he shows up in his wigwam walkin' some emphatic, Jennie'll be down on him like a fallin' star an' accoose him of wakin' Enright Peets.

"'An' if you-all wakes him,' says Jennie to Dave, sort o' domineerin' at him with her forefinger, 'he'll be sick; an' if he gets sick, he'll die; an' if he dies, you'll be a murderer—the heartless deestroyer of your own he'pless offspring,—which awful deed I sometimes thinks you're p'intin' out to pull off.' An' then Jennie would put her apron over her head an' shed tears a heap; while Dave—all harrowed up an' onstrung—would come stampedin' down to the Red Light an' get consolation from Black Jack by the quart.

"That's the idee, son; it's impossible to go into painful details, 'cause I ain't in Dave's or Jennie's confidence enough to round 'em up; but you onderstands what I means. Jennie's forever hectorin' an' pesterin' Dave about Enright Peets; an' beyond that she don't pay no more heed, an' don't have him no more on her mind, than if he's one of these yere little jimcrow ground-owls you-all sees inhabitin' about dissoloote an' permiscus with prairie-dogs. What's the result? Dave's sperits begins to sink; he takes to droopin' about listless an' onregyardful; an' he's that low an' onhappy his nose-paint don't bring him no more of comfort than if he's a graven image. Why, it's the saddest thing I ever sees in Wolfville!

"We-all observes how Dave's dwindlin' an' pinin' an' most of us has a foggy onderstandin' of the trooth. But what can we do? If thar's ever a aggregation of sports who's powerless, utter, to come to the rescow of a comrade in a hole, it's Enright an' Moore an' Boggs an' Texas Thompson an' Cherokee an' me, doorin' them days when that neglect of Tucson Jennie's is makin' pore Dave's burdens more'n he can b'ar. Shore, we consults; but that don't come to nothin' until the o'casion when Doc Peets takes the tangle in ser'ous hand.

Page 83

"Thar's a day dawns when Missis Rucker gets exasperated over Dave's ill-yoosage. Missis Rucker is a sperited person an' she canters over an' onloads her opinions on Tucson Jennie. Commonly, these yere ladies can't think too much of one another; but on this one division of the house of Tutt, Missis Rucker goes out on Dave's angle of the game. An' you-all should have seen the terror it inspires when Missis Rucker declar's her hostile intentions.

"It's in the O.K. restauraw, when Missis Rucker, who's feedin' us our mornin' flap-jacks an' salt hoss as usual, turns to Old Man Enright, an' says:

"As soon as ever I've got the last drunkard fed an' outen the house, I'm goin' to put on my shaker an' go an' tell that Tucson Jennie Tutt what's on my mind. I shore never sees a woman change more than Jennie since the days when she cooks for me in this yere very restauraw an' lays plans an' plots to lure Dave into wedlock. I will say that Jennie, nacheral, is a good wife; but the fashion, wherein she tromples on Dave an' his rights is a disgrace to her sex, an' I'm goin' to deevote a hour this mornin' to callin' Jennie's attention tharunto.'

"Missis Rucker is a mighty intrepid lady,' says Enright, when we goes over to the New York store followin' feed. 'I'd no more embrace them chances she's out to tackle than I'd go dallyin' about a wronged grizzly. But jest the same, I'd give a stack of reds if Peets is here! When did he say he'd be back from Tucson?'

"The Doc don't allow he'll come trailin' in ag'in,' says Dan Boggs, 'ontil day after to-morry. Which this female dooel will be plumb over by then, an' most likely the camp a wrack.'

"While we-all stands thar gazin' on each other, enable to su'gest anything to meet the emergency, Texas Thompson's pony is brought up from the corral, saddled an' bridled, an' ready for the trail.

"Well, gents,' says Texas, when he sees his hoss is come, 'I reckons I'll say adios an' pull my freight. I'll be back in a week.'

"Wherever be you p'intin' for?' asks Cherokee Hall. 'Ain't this goin' of yours some sudden?'

"It is a trifle hasty,' says Texas; 'but do you cimmarons think I'm goin' to linger yere after Missis Rucker gives notice she's preparin' to burn the ground around Tucson Jennie about Dave? Gents, I don't pack the nerve! I ain't lived three years with my former wife who gets that Laredo divorce I once or twice adverts to, an' not know enough not to get caught out on no sech limb as this. No, sir; I sees enough of woman an' her ways to teach me that now ain't no time to be standin' about irresoloote an' undecided, an' I'm goin' to dig out for Tucson, you bet, ontill this uprisin' subsides.'

“This example of Texas scares us up a whole lot; the fact is, it stampedes us; an’ without a further word of argyment, the whole band makes a break for the corral, throws saddles onto the swiftest ponies, an’ in two minutes we’re lost in that cloud of alkali dust we kicks up down the trail toward the no’th.

Page 84

“Which I won’t say that this exodus is necessary,’ observes Enright, when ten miles out we slows up to a road gait to breathe our ponies, ’but I thinks on the whole it’s safer. Besides, I oughter go over to Tucson anyway on business.’

“The rest of us don’t make no remarks nor excooses; but every gent is feelin’ like a great personal peril has blown by.

“The next day, we rounds up Doc Peets, an’ he encourages us so that we concloods to return an’ make a size-up of results.

“I shore hopes we finds Dave safe.’ says Dan Boggs.

“‘It’s even money,’ says Jack Moore, ’that Dave pulls through. Dave’s a mighty wary sport when worst comes to worst; an’ as game as redhead ants.’

“‘That’s all right about Dave bein’ game,’ retorts Dan, ’but this yere’s a time when Dave ain’t got no show. I says ag’in, I trust he retains decision of character sufficient to go hide out doorin’ the storm. It ain’t no credit to us that we forgets to bring him along.’

“‘No; thar wasn’t no harm done,’ says Faro Nell, who reports progress to us after we rounds up in the Red Light followin’ our return. Nell’s a brave girl an’ stands a pat hand when the rest of us vamosed that time. ’Thar ain’t no real trouble. Missis Rucker merely sets fire to Jennie about the way she maltreats Dave; an’ she says Jennie’s drivin’ him locoed, an’ no wonder. Also, she lets on she don’t see whatever Dave marries Jennie for anyhow!

“‘At that, Jennie comes back an’ reminds Missis Rucker how she herse’f done treats Mister Rucker that turrible he goes cavortin’ off an’ seeks safety among the Apaches. An’ so they keeps on slingin’ it back’ards an’ for’ards for mebbby two hours, an’ me ha’ntin’ about to chunk in a word. Then, final, they cries an’ makes up; an’ then they both concedes that one way an’ another they’re the best two people each other ever sees. At this juncture,’ concloods Nell, ‘I declar’s myse’f in on the play; an’ we-all three sets down an’ admires Enright Peets an’ visits an’ has a splendid afternoon.’

“‘An’ wherever doorin’ this emute is Dave?’ asks Enright.

“‘Oh, Dave?’ says Nell. ‘Why he’s lurkin’ about outside som’ers in a furtive, surreptitious way; but he don’t molest us none. Which, now I remembers, Dave don’t even come near us none at all.’

“‘I should say not!’ says Texas Thompson, plenty emphatic. ‘Dave ain’t quite that witless.’

“‘Now, gents,’ remarks Doc Peets, when Nell is done, an’ his tones is confident like he’s certain of his foothold, ’since things has gone thus far I’ll sa’nter into the midst of these domestic difficulties an' adjust 'em some. I've thought up a s'lootion; an' it's apples to ashes that inside of twenty-four hours I has Jennie pettin' an' cossetin' Dave to beat four of a kind. Leave this yere matter to me entire.'

"We-all can't see jest how Peets is goin' to work these mir'cles; still, sech is our faith, we believes. We decides among ourse'fs, however, that if Peets does turn this pacific trick it'll ondoubted be the crownin' glory of his c'reer.

Page 85

"After Peets hangs up his bluff, we goes about strainin' eyes an' y'ears for any yells or signal smokes that denotes the advent of said changes. An', son, hard as it is to credit, it comes to pass like Peets prognosticates. By next evenin' a great current of tenderness for Dave goes over Jennie all at once. She begins to call him 'Davy'—a onheard of weakness!—an' hovers about him askin' whatever he thinks he needs; in fact, she becomes that devoted, it looks like the little Enright Peets'll want he'p next to play his hand for him. That's the trooth: Jennie goes mighty clost to forgettin' Enright Peets now an' then in her wifely anxieties concernin' Dave.

"As for Dave himse'f, he don't onderstand his sudden an' onmerited pop'larity; but wearin' a dazed grin of satisfied ignorance, that a-way, he accepts the sityooation without askin' reasons, an' proceeds to profit tharby. That household is the most reeconciled model fam'ly outfit in all broad Arizona. An' it so continyoos to the end.

"'Whatever did you do or say, Doc?' asks Enright a month later, as we-all from across the street observes how Jennie kisses Dave good-bye at the door an' then stands an' looks after him like she can't b'ar to have him leave her sight; 'what's the secret of this second honeymoon of Dave's?'

"'Which I don't say much,' says Peets. 'I merely takes Jennie one side an' exhorts her to brace up an' show herse'f a brave lady. Then I explains that while I ain't told Dave none—as his knowin' wouldn't do no good—I regyards it as my medical dooty to inform her so's she'll be ready to meet the shock. "The trooth is, Missis Tutt," I says, "pore Dave's got heart disease, an' is booked to cash in any moment. I can't say when he'll die exactly; the only shore thing is he can't survive a year." She sheds torrents of tears; an' then I warns her she mustn't let Dave see her grief or bushwhack anything but smiles on her face, or mightly likely it'll stop his clock right thar. "Can't nothin' be done for Dave?" she asks. "Nothin'," I replies, "except be tender an' lovin' an' make Dave's last days as pleasant an' easy as you can. We must jump in an' smooth the path to his totterin' moccasins with gentleness an' love," I says, "an' be ready, when the blow does fall, to b'ar it with what fortitooode we may." That's all I tells her. However, it looks like it's becomin' a case of overplay in one partic'lar; our pore young namesake, Enright Peets, is himse'f gettin' a trifle the worst of it, an' I'm figgerin' that to-morry, mebbly, I'll look that infant over, an' vouchsafe the news thar's something mighty grievous the matter with his lungs.'"

CHAPTER XII.

Bill Connors of the Osages.

"Nacherally, if you-all is frettin' to hear about Injuns," observed the Old Cattleman in reply to my latest request, "I better onfold how Osage Bill Connors gets his wife. Not that thar's trouble in roundin' up this squaw; none whatever. She comes easy; all the same said tale elab'rates some of them savage customs you're so cur'ous concernin'."

Page 86

My companion arose and kicked together the logs in the fireplace. This fireplace was one of the great room's comforts as well as ornaments. The logs leaped into much accession of flame, and crackled into sparks, and these went gossiping up the mighty chimney, their little fiery voices making a low, soft roaring like the talk of bees.

"This chimley draws plenty successful," commented my friend. "Which it almost breaks even with a chimley I constructs once in my log camp on the Upper Red. That Red River floo is a wonder! Draw? Son, it could draw four kyards an' make a flush. But that camp of mine on the Upper Red is over eight thousand foot above the sea as I'm informed by a passel of surveyor sports who comes romancin' through the hills with a spyglass on three pegs; an' high altitoods allers proves a heap exileratin' to a fire.

"But speakin' of Bill Connors: In Wolfville—which them days is the only part of my c'reer whereof I'm proud an' reviews with onmixed satisfaction—Doc Peets is, like you, inquis'tive touchin' Injuns. Peets puts it up that some day he's doo to write books about 'em. Which in off hours, an' when we-all is more or less at leesure over our Valley Tan, Peets frequent comes explorin' 'round for details. Shore, I imparts all I saveys about Bill Connors, an' likewise sech other aborigines as lives in mem'ry; still, it shakes my estimates of Peets to find him eager over Injuns, they bein' low an' debasin' as topics. I says as much to Peets.

"'Never you-all mind about me,' says Peets. 'I knows so much about white folks it comes mighty clost to makin' me sick. I seeks tales of Injuns as a relief an' to promote a average in favor of the species.'

"This Bill Connors' is a good-lookin' young buck when I cuts his trail; straight as a pine an' strong an' tireless as a bronco. It's about six years after the philanthrofigists ropes onto Bill an' drags him off to a school. You-all onderstands about a philanthrofigist—one of these sports who's allers improvin' some party's condition in a way the party who's improved don't like.

"'A philanthrofigist,' says Colonel Sterett, one time when Dan Boggs demands the explanation at his hands; 'a philanthrofigist is a gent who insists on you givin' some other gent your money.'

"For myse'f, however, I regyards the Colonel's definition as too narrow. Troo philanthrofigy has a heap of things to it that's jest as onreasonable an' which does not incloode the fiscal teachers mentioned by the Colonel.

"As I'm sayin'; these well-meanin' though darkened sports, the philanthrofigists, runs Bill down—it's mebbly when he's fourteen, only Injuns don't keep tab on their years none—an' immures him in one of the gov'ment schools. It's thar Bill gets his name, 'Bill Connors.' Before that he cavorts about, free an' wild an' happy onder the Injun app'lotion of the 'Jack Rabbit.'

“Shore! Bill’s sire—a savage who’s ‘way up in the picture kyards, an’ who’s called ‘Crooked Claw’ because of his left hand bein’ put out of line with a Ute arrow through it long ago—gives his consent to Bill j’inin’ that sem’nary. Crooked Claw can’t he’p himse’f; he’s powerless; the Great Father in Washin’ton is backin’ the play of the philanthrofists.

Page 87

“Which the Great Father is too many for Crooked Claw,’ says this parent, commentin’ on his helplessness. Bill’s gone canterin’ to his old gent to remonstrate, not hungerin’ for learnin’, an’ Crooked Claw says this to Bill: ‘The Great Father is too many for Crooked Claw; an’ too strong. You must go to school as the Great Father orders; it is right. The longest spear is right.’

“Bill is re-branded, ‘Bill Connors,’ an’ then he’s done bound down to them books. After four years Bill gradyooates; he’s got the limit an’ the philanthrofists takes Bill’s hobbles off an’ throws him loose with the idee that Bill will go back to his tribe folks an’ teach ‘em to read. Bill comes back, shore, an’ is at once the Osage laughin’-stock for wearin’ pale-face clothes. Also, the medicine men tells Bill he’ll die for talkin’ paleface talk an’ sportin’ a paleface shirt, an’ these prophecies preys on Bill who’s eager to live a heap an’ ain’t ready to cash in. Bill gets back to blankets an’ feathers in about a month.

“Old Black Dog, a leadin’ sharp among the Osages, is goin’ about with a dab of clay in his ha’r, and wearin’ his most ornery blanket. That’s because Black Dog is in mournin’ for a squaw who stampedes over the Big Divide, mebby it’s two months prior. Black Dog’s mournin’ has got dealt down to the turn like; an’ windin’ up his grief an’ tears, Osage fashion, he out to give a war-dance. Shore; the savages rings in a war-dance on all sorts of cer’monies. It don’t allers mean that they’re hostile, an’ about to spraddle forth on missions of blood. Like I states, Black Dog, who’s gone to the end of his mournful lariat about the departed squaw, turns himse’f on for a war-dance; an’ he nacherally invites the Osage nation to paint an’ get in on the festiv’ties.

“Accordin’ to the rooles, pore Bill, jest back from school, has got to cut in. Or he has his choice between bein’ fined a pony or takin’ a lickin’ with mule whips in the hands of a brace of kettle-tenders whose delight as well as dooty it is to mete out the punishment. Bill can’t afford to go shy a pony, an’ as he’s loth to accept the larrupin’s, he wistfully makes ready to shake a moccasin at the baile. An’ as nothin’ but feathers, blankets, an’ breech-clouts goes at a war-dance—the same bein’ Osage dress-clothes—Bill shucks his paleface garments an’ arrays himse’f after the breezy fashion of his ancestors. Bill attends the war dance an’ shines. Also, bein’ praised by the medicine men an’ older bucks for quittin’ his paleface duds; an’ findin’ likewise the old-time blanket an’ breech-clout healthful an’ saloobrious—which Bill forgets their feel in his four years at that sem’nary—he adheres to ‘em. This lapse into aboriginal ways brews trouble for Bill; he gets up ag’inst the agent.

“It’s the third day after Black Dog’s war-dance, an’ Bill, all paint an’ blankets an’ feathers, is sa’nterin’ about Pawhusky, takin’ life easy an’ Injun fashion. It’s then the agent connects with Bill an’ sizes him up. The agent asks Bill does he stand in on this yere Black Dog war-dance.

Page 88

“Don’t they have no roast dog at that warjig?’ asks Dan Boggs, when I’m relatin’ these reminiscences in the Red Light.

“No,’ I says; ‘Osages don’t eat no dogs.’

“It’s different with Utes a lot,’ says Dan, ‘Which Utes regyards dogs fav’rable, deem’in’ ’em a mighty sucyoolent an’ nootritious dish. The time I’m with the Utes they pulls off a shindig, “tea dance” it is, an’, as what Huggins would call “a star feacher” they ups an’ roasts a white dog. That canine is mighty plethoric an’ fat, an’ they lays him on his broad, he’pless back an’ shets off his wind with a stick cross-wise of his neck, an’ two bucks pressin’ on the ends. When he’s good an’ dead an’ all without no suffoosion of blood, the Utes singes his fur off in a fire an’ bakes him as he is. I partakes of that dog—some. I don’t nacherally lay for said repast wide-jawed, full-toothed an’ reemorseless, like it’s flapjacks—I don’t gorge myse’f none; but when I’m in Rome, I strings my chips with the Romans like the good book says, an’ so I sort o’ eats baked dog with the Utes. Otherwise, I’d hurt their sens’bilities; an’ I ain’t out to harrow up no entire tribe an’ me playin’ a lone hand.’

“That agent questions Bill as to the war-dance carryin’s on of old Black Dog. Then he p’int’s at Bill’s blankets an’ feathers an’ shakes his head a heap disapprobative.

“Shuck them blankets an’ feathers,’ says the agent, ‘an’ get back into your trousers a whole lot; an’ be sudden about it, too. I puts up with the divers an’ sundry rannikabooisms of old an’ case-hardened Injuns who’s savage an’ ontaught. But you’re different; you’ve been to school an’ learned the virchoos of pants; wherefore, I looks for you to set examples.’

“It’s then Bill gets high an’ allows he’ll wear clothes to suit himse’f. Bill denounces trousers as foolish in their construction an’ fallacious in their plan. Bill declar’s they’re a bad scheme, trousers is; an’ so sayin’ he defies the agent to do his worst. Bill stands pat on blankets an’ feathers.

“Which you will, will you!’ remarks this agent.

“Then he claps Bill in irons mighty decisive, an’ plants him up ag’in the high face of a rock bluff which has been frownin’ down on Bird River since Adam makes his first camp. Havin’ got Bill posed to his notion, this earnest agent, puttin’ a hammer into Bill’s rebellious hand, starts him to breakin’ rock.

“Which the issue is pants,’ says the obdurate agent sport; ‘an’ I’ll keep you-all whackin’ away at them boulders while the cliff lasts onless you yields. Thar’s none of you young bucks goin’ to bluff me, an’ that’s whatever!’

“Bill breaks rocks two days. The other Osages comes an’ perches about, sympathetic, an’ surveys Bill. They exhorts him to be firm; they gives it out in Osage he’s a patriot.

Page 89

“Bill’s willin’ to be a patriot as the game is commonly dealt, but when his love of country takes the form of poundin’ rocks, the noble sentiments which yeretofore bubbles in Bill’s breast commences to pall on Bill an’ he becomes none too shore but what trousers is right. By second drink time—only savages don’t drink, a paternal gov’ment barrin’ nosepaint on account of it makin’ ’em too fitfully exyooberant—by second drink time the second evenin’ Bill lays down his hand—pitches his hammer into the diskyard as it were—an’ when I crosses up with him, Bill’s that abject he wears a necktie. When Bill yields, the agent meets him half way, an’ him an’ Bill rigs a deal whereby Bill arrays himse’f Osage fashion whenever his hand’s crowded by tribal customs. Other times, Bill inhabits trousers; an’ blankets an’ feathers is rooled out.

“Shore, I talks with Bill’s father, old Crooked Claw. This yere savage is the ace-kyard of Osage-land as a fighter. No, that outfit ain’t been on the warpath for twenty years when I sees ’em then it’s with Boggs’ old pards, the Utes. I asks Crooked Claw if he likes war. He tells me that he dotes on carnage like a jaybird, an’ goes forth to battle as joobilant as a drunkard to a shootin’ match. That is, Crooked Claw used to go curvin’ off to war, joyful, at first. Later his glee is subdooed because of the big chances he’s takin’. Then he lugs out ’leven skelps, all Ute, an’ eloocidates.

“‘This first maverick,’ says Crooked Claw—of course, I gives him in the American tongue, not bein’ equal to the reedic’lous broken Osage he talks—’this yere first maverick,’ an’ he strokes the braided ha’r of a old an’ smoke-dried skelp, ’is easy. The chances, that a-way, is even. Number two is twice as hard; an’ when I snags onto number three—I downs that hold-up over by the foot of Fisher’s Peak—the chances has done mounted to be three to one ag’in me. So it goes gettin’ higher an’ higher, ontill when I corrals my ’leventh, it’s ’leven to one he wins onless he’s got killin’s of his own to stand off mine. I don’t reckon none he has though,’ says Crooked Claw, curlin’ his nose contemptuous. ‘He’s heap big squaw—a coward; an’ would hide from me like a quail. He looks big an’ brave an’ strong, but his heart is bad—he is a poor knife in a good sheath. So I don’t waste a bullet on him, seein’ his fear, but kills him with my war-axe. Still, he raises the chances ag’inst me to twelve to one, an’ after that I goes careful an’ slow. I sends in my young men; but for myse’f I sort o’ hungers about the suburbs of the racket, takin’ no resks an’ on the prowl for a cinch,—some sech pick-up as a sleeper, mebbby. But my ’leventh is my last; the Great Father in Washin’ton gets tired with us an’ he sends his walk-a-heaps an’ buffalo soldiers’—these savages calls niggers ‘buffalo soldiers,’ bein’ they’re that woolly—’an’ makes us love peace. Which we’d a-had the Utes too dead to skin if it ain’t for the walk-a-heaps an’ buffalo soldiers.’

Page 90

"An' at this Crooked Claw tosses the bunch of Ute top-knots to one of his squaws, fills up his red-stone pipe with kinnikinick an' begins to smoke, lookin' as complacent as a catfish doorin' a Joone rise.

"Bill Connors has now been wanderin' through this vale of tears for mebbly she's twenty odd years, an' accordin' to Osage tenets, Bill's doo to get wedded. No, Bill don't make no move; he comports himse'f lethargic; the reesponsibilities of the nuptials devolves on Bill's fam'ly.

"It's one of the excellentest things about a Injun that he don't pick out no wife personal, deemin' himse'f as too locoed to beat so difficult a game.

"Or mebbly, as I observes to Texas Thompson one time in the Red Light when him an' me's discussin', or mebbly it's because he's that callous he don't care, or that shiftless he won't take trouble.

"'Whatever's the reason,' says Texas, on that o'casion, heavin' a sigh, 'thar's much to be said in praise of the custom. If it only obtains among the whites thar's one sport not unknown to me who would have shore passed up some heartaches. You can bet a hoss, no fam'ly of mine would pick out the lady who beats me for that divorce back in Laredo to be the spouse of Texas Thompson. Said household's got too much savey to make sech a break.'

"While a Osage don't select that squaw of his, still I allers entertains a theery that he sort o' saveys what he's ag'inst an' no he'pmeet gets sawed off on him objectionable an' blind. I figgers, for all he don't let on, that sech is the sityooation in the marital adventures of Bill. His fam'ly picks the Saucy Willow out; but it's mighty likely he signs up the lady to some discreet member of his outfit before ever they goes in to make the play.

"Saucy Willow for a savage is pretty—pretty as a pinto hoss. Her parent, old Strike Axe, is a morose but common form of Osage, strong financial, with a big bunch of cattle an' more'n two hundred ponies. Bill gets his first glimpse, after he comes back from school, of the lovely Saucy Willow at a dance. This ain't no war-dance nor any other ceremonious splurge; it's a informal merrymakin', innocent an' free, same as is usual with us at the Wolfville dance hall. Shore, Osages, lacks guitars an' fiddles, an' thar's no barkeep nor nosepaint—none, in trooth, of the fav'able adjuncts wherewith we makes a evenin' in Hamilton's hurdygurdy a season of social elevation, an' yet they pulls off their fandangoes with a heap of verve, an' I've no doubt they shore enjoys themse'fs.

"For two hours before sundown the kettle-tenders is howlin' an' callin' the dance throughout the Osage camp. Thar's to be a full moon, an' the dance—the Ingraska it is; a dance the Osages buys from the Poncas for eight ponies—is to come off in a big, high-board corral called the 'Round House.'

Page 91

“Followin’ the first yell of the kettle-tenders, the young bucks begins to paint up for the hilarity. You might see ’em all over camp, for it’s August weather an’ the walls of the tents an’ teepees is looped up to let in the cool, daubin’ the ocher on their faces an’ braidin’ the feathers into their ha’r. This organisin’ for a baile ain’t no bagatelle, an’ two hours is the least wherein any se’f-respectin’ buck who’s out to make a centre shot on the admiration of the squaws an’ wake the envy of rival bucks, can lay on the pigments, so he paints away at his face, careful an’ acc’rate, sizin’ up results meanwhile in a jimcrow lookin’ glass. At last he’s as radiant as a rainbow, an’ after garterin’ each laig with a belt of sleigh-bells jest below the knee, he regyards himse’f with a fav’rable eye an’ allows he’s ondoubted the wildest wag in his set.

“Each buck arrives at the Round House with his blanket wropped over his head so as not to blind the onwary with his splendours. It’s mebbly second drink time after sundown an’ the full moon is swingin’ above effulgent. The bucks who’s doo to dance sets about one side of the Round House on a board bench; the squaws—not bein’ in on the proposed activities—occupies the other half, squattin’ on the ground. Some of ’em packs their papooses tied on to a fancy-ribboned, highly beaded board, an’ this they makes a cradle of by restin’ one end on the ground an’ the other on their toe, rockin’ the same meanwhile with a motion of the foot. Thar’s a half hoop over the head-end of these papoose boards, hung with bells for the papoose to get infantile action on an’ amoose his leesure.

“The bucks settin’ about their side of the Round House, still wrops themse’fs in their blankets so as not to dazzle the squaws to death preematoor. At last the music peals forth. The music confines itse’f to a bass drum—paleface drum it is—which is staked out hor’zontal about a foot high from the grass over in the centre. The orchestra is a decrepit buck with a rag-wropped stick; with this weepoon he beats the drum, chantin’ at the same time a pensive refrain.

“Mebby a half-dozen squaws, with no papooses yet to distract ’em, camps ’round this virchuooso with the rag-stick, an’ yoonites their girlish howls with his. You-all can put down a bet it don’t remind you none of nightingales or mockin’ birds; but the Injuns likes it. Which their simple sperits wallows in said warblin’s! But to my notion they’re more calc’lated to loco a henhawk than furnish inspiration for a dance.

““Tunk! tunk! tunk! tunk!” goes this rag-stick buck, while the squaws chorus along with, ‘Hy-yah! hy-yah! hy-yah-yah-yah! Hy-yah! hy-yah! hy-yah-yah-yah!’ an’ all grievous, an’ make no mistake!

Page 92

“At the first ‘tunk!’ the bucks stiffen to their feet and cast off the blankets. Feathers, paint, an’ bells! they blaze an’ tinkle in the moonlight with a subdooed but savage elegance. They skates out onto the grass, stilt-laig, an’ each buck for himse’f. They go skootin’ about, an’ weave an’ turn an’ twist like these yere water-bugs jiggin’ it on the surface of some pond. Sometimes a buck’ll lay his nose along the ground while he dances—sleigh bells jinglin’, feathers tossin’! Then he’ll straighten up until he looks like he’s eight foot tall; an’ they shore throws themse’fs with a heap of heart an’ sperit.

“It’s as well they does. If you looks clost you observes a brace of bucks, and each packin’ a black-snake whip. Them’s kettle-tenders,—floor managin’ the baile they be; an’ if a buck who’s dancin’ gets preeoccupied with thinkin’ of something else an’ takes to prancin’ an’ dancin’ listless, the way the kettle-tenders pours the leather into him to remind him his fits of abstraction is bad form, is like a religious ceremony. An’ it ain’t no bad idee; said kettle-tenders shore promotes what Colonel Sterett calls the elan of the dancin’ bucks no end.

“After your eyes gets used to this whirlin’ an’ skatin’ an’ skootin’ an’ weavin’ in an’ out, you notes two bucks, painted to a finish an’ feathered to the stars! who out-skoots an’ out-whirls an’ out-skates their fellow bucks like four to one. They gets their nose a little lower one time an’ then stands higher in the air another, than is possible to the next best buck. Them enthoosiasts ain’t Osages at all; which they’re niggers—full-blood Senegambians they be, who’s done j’ined the tribe. These Round House festivals with the paint, the feathers, an’ the bells, fills their trop’cal hearts plumb full, an’ forgettin’ all about the white folks an’ their gyarded ways, they’re the biggest Injuns to warm a heel that night.

“Saucy Willow is up by the damaged rag-stick buck lendin’ a mouthful or two of cl’ar, bell-like alto yelps to the harmony of the evenin’. Bill who’s a wonder in feathers an’ bells, an’ whose colour-scheme would drive a temp’rance lecturer to drink, while zippin’ about in the moonlight gets his eye on her. Mighty likely Bill’s smitten; but he don’t let on, the fam’ly like I relates, allers ropin’ up a gent’s bride. It’s good bettin’ this yere Saucy Willow counts up Bill. If she does, however,—no more than Bill,—she never tips her hand. The Saucy Willow yelps on unconcerned, like her only dream of bliss is to show the coyotes what vocal failures they be.

“It’s a week after the Ingraska, an’ Bill’s fam’ly holds a round-up to pick Bill out a squaw. He ain’t present, havin’ the savey to go squanderin’ off to play Injun poker with some Creek sports he hears has money over on the Polecat. Bill’s fam’ly makes quite a herd, bucks an’ squaws buttin’ in on the discussion permiscus an’ indiscrim’nate. Shore! the squaws has as much to say as the bucks among Injuns. They owns their own ponies an' backs their own play an' is as big a Injun as anybody, allowin' for that nacheral difference between squaw dooties an' buck dooties—one keeps camp while the other hunts, or doorin' war times when one protects the herds an' plunder while the other faces the foe. You hears that squaws is slaves? However is anybody goin' to be a slave where thar's as near nothin' to do in the way of work as is possible an' let a hooman live? Son, thar ain't as much hard labour done in a Injun camp in a week—ain't as much to do as gets transacted at one of them rooral oyster suppers to raise money for the preacher!

Page 93

“Bill's fam'ly comes trailin' in to this powwow about pickin' out a squaw for Bill. Besides Crooked Claw, thar's Bill's widow aunt, the Wild Cat—she's plumb cunnin', the Wild Cat is, an' jest then bein' cel'brated among the Osages for smokin' ponies with Black B'ar, a old buck, an' smokin' Black B'ar out of his two best cayouses. Besides these two, thar's The-man-who-bleeds, The-man-who-sleeps, Tom Six-killer, The-man-who-steps-high, an' a dozen other squaws an' bucks, incloosive of Bill's mother who's called the Silent Comanche, an' is takin' the play a heap steady an' livin' up to her name.

“The folks sets 'round an' smokes Crooked Claw's kinnikinick. Then the Wild Cat starts in to deal the game. She says it's time Bill's married, as a onmarried buck is a menace; at this the others grunts agreement. Then they all turns in to overhaul the el'gible young squaws. Which they shore shows up them belles! One after the other they're drug over the coals. At last the Wild Cat mentions the Saucy Willow jest as every savage present knows will be done soon or late from the jump. The Saucy Willow obtains a speshul an' onusual run for her money. But it's settled final that while the Saucy Willow ain't none too good, she's the best they can do. The Saucy Willow belongs to the Elk clan, while Bill belongs to the B'ar clan, an' that at least is c'rrect. Injuns don't believe in inbreedin' so they allers marries out of their clan.

“As soon as they settles on the Saucy Willow as Bill's squaw, they turns in to make up the 'price.' The Wild Cat, who's rich, donates a kettle, a side of beef, an' the two cayouses she smokes outen the besotted Black B'ar. The rest chucks in accordin' to their means, Crooked Claw comin' up strong with ten ponies; an' Bill's mother, the Silent Comanche, showin' down with a bolt of calico, two buffalo robes, a sack of flour an' a lookin' glass. This plunder is to go to the Saucy Willow's folks as a 'price' for the squaw. No, they don't win on the play; the Saucy Willow's parents is out dinero on the nuptials when all is done. They has to give Bill their wickeyup.

Page 94

"When Bill's outfit's fully ready to deal for blood they picks out some bright afternoon. The Saucy Willow's fam'ly is goin' about lookin' partic'lar harmless an' innocent; but they're coony enough to be in camp that day. A procession starts from the Crooked Claw camp. Thar's The-man-who-steps-high at the head b'arin' a flag, union down, an' riotin' along behind is Tom Six-killer, The-man-who-sleeps, the Wild Cat and others leadin' five ponies an' packin' kettles, flour, beef, an' sim'lar pillage. They lays it all down an' stakes out the broncos about fifty yards from Strike Axe's camp an' withdraws.

"Then some old squaw of the Strike Axe outfit issues forth an' throws the broncos loose. That's to show that the Saucy Willow is a onusual excellent young squaw an' pop'lar with her folks, an' they don't aim to shake her social standin' by acceptin' sech niggard terms.

"But the Crooked Claw outfit ain't dismayed, an' takes this rebuff phlegmatic. It's only so much ettyquette; an' now it's disposed of they reorganise to lead ag'in to win. This time they goes the limit, an' brings up fifteen ponies an' stacks in besides with blankets, robes, beef, flour, calico, kettles, skillets, and looking-glasses enough to fill eight waggons. This trip the old Strike Axe squaw onties the fifteen ponies an' takin' 'em by their ropes brings 'em in clost to the Strike Axe camp, tharby notifyin' the Crooked Claw band that their bluff for the Saucy Willow is regyarded as feasible an' the nuptials goes. With this sign, the Crooked Claws comes caperin' up to the Strike Axes an' the latter fam'ly proceeds to rustle a profoosion of grub; an' with that they all turns in an' eats old Strike Axe outen house an' home. The 'price' is split up among the Strike Axe bunch, shares goin' even to second an' third cousins.

"Mebby she's a week later when dawns the weddin' day. Bill, who's been lookin' a heap numb ever since these rites becomes acoote, goes projectin' off alone onto the prairie. The Saucy Willow is hid in the deepest corner of Strike Axe's teepee; which if she's visible, however, you'd be shore amazed at the foolish expression she wears, but all as shy an' artless as a yearlin' antelope.

"But it grows time to wind it up, an' one of the Strike Axe bucks climbs into the saddle an' rides half way towards the camp of Crooked Claw. Strike Axe an' Crooked Claw in antic'pation of these entanglements has done pitched their camps about half a mile apart so as to give the pageant spread an' distances. When he's half way, the Strike Axe buck fronts up an' slams loose with his Winchester; it's a signal the baile is on.

"At the rifle crack, mounted on a pony that's the flower of the Strike Axe herd, the Saucy Willow comes chargin' for the Crooked Claws like a shootin' star. The Saucy Willow is a sunburst of Osage richness! an' is packin' about five hundred dollars' worth of blankets, feathers, beads, calicoes, ribbons, an' buckskins, not to mention six pounds of brass an' silver jewelry. Straight an' troo comes the Saucy Willow; skimmin' like a arrow an' as rapid as the wind!

Page 95

“As Saucy Willow embarks on this expedition, thar starts to meet her—afoot they be but on the run—Tom Six-killer an’ a brace of squaw cousins of Bill’s. Nacherally, bein’ he out-lobes the cousins, Tom Six-killer runs up on the Saucy Willow first an’ grabs her bronco by the bridle. The two young squaw cousins ain’t far behind the Six-killer, for they can run like rabbits, an’ they arrives all laughter an’ cries, an’ with one move searches the Saucy Willow outen the saddle. In less time than it takes to get action on a drink of licker the two young squaws has done stripped the Saucy Willow of every feather, bead an’ rag, an’ naked as when she’s foaled they wrops her up, precious an’ safe in a blanket an’ packs her gleefully into the camp of Crooked Claw. Here they redresses the Saucy Willow an’ piles on the gew-gaws an’ adornments, ontill if anything she’s more gorgeous than former. The pony which the Saucy Willow rides goes to the Six-killer, while the two she-cousins, as to the balance of her apparel that a-way, divides the pot.

“An’ now like a landslide upon the Crooked Claws comes the Strike Axe household. Which they’re thar to the forty-leventh cousin; savages keepin’ exact cases on relatives a mighty sight further than white folks. The Crooked Claw fam’ly is ready. It’s Crooked Claw’s turn to make the feast, an’ that eminent Osage goes the distance. Crooked Claw shorely does himse’f proud, while Bill’s mother, the Silent Comanche, is hospitable, but dignified. It’s a great weddin’. The Wild Cat is pirootin’ about, makin’ mean an’ onfeelin’ remarks, as becomes a widow lady with a knowledge of the world an’ a bundle the size an’ shape of a roll of blankets. The two fam’lies goes squanderin’ about among each other, free an’ fraternal, an’ thar’s never a cloud in the sky.

“At last the big feed begins. Son, you should have beheld them fool Osages throw themse’fs upon the Crooked Claw’s good cheer. It’s a p’int of honour to eat as much as you can; an’ b’arin’ that in mind the revellers mows away about twenty pounds of beef to a buck—the squaws, not bein’ so ardent, quits out on mighty likely it’s the thirteenth pound. Tom Six-killer comes plenty clost to sacrificin’ himse’f utter.

“This last I knows, for the next day I sees the medicine men givin’ some sufferer one of their aboriginal steam baths. They’re on the bank of Bird River. They’ve bent down three or four small saplin’s for the framework of a tent like, an’ thar’s piled on ’em blankets an’ robes a foot deep so she’s plumb airtight. Thar’s a fire goin’ an’ they’re heatin’ rocks, same as Colonel Sterett tells about when they baptises his grandfather into the church. When the rocks is red-hot they takes ’em, one by one, an’ drops ’em into a bucket of water to make her steam. Then they shoves this impromptoo cauldron inside the little robe house where as I’m aware—for I onderstands the signs from the start—thar’s a sick buck quiled up awaitin' relief. This yere invalid buck stays in thar twenty minutes. The water boils an' bubbles an' the steam gets that abundant not to say urgent she half lifts the robes an' blankets at the aiges to escape. The ailin' buck in the sweat tent stays until he can't stay no more, an' then with a yowl, he comes burstin' forth, a reek of sweat an' goes splashin' into the coolin' waters of Bird River. It's the Six-killer; that weddin' feast comes mighty near to downin' him—gives him a 'bad heart,' an' he ondergoes the steam bath for relief.

Page 96

"But we're strayed from that weddin'. Bein' now re-arrayed in fullest feather the Saucy Willow is fetched into the ring an' receives a platter with the rest. Then one of the bucks, lookin' about like he's amazed, says: 'Wherever is the Jack Rabbit?' that bein' Bill's Osage title. Crooked Claw shakes his head an' reckons most likely the Jack Rabbit's rummagin' about loose some'ers, not knowin' enough to come in an' eat. A brace of bucks an' a young squaw starts up an' figgers they'll search about an' see if they can't round him up. They goes out an' thar's Bill settin' off on a rock a quarter of a mile with his back to the camp an' the footure.

"The two sharps an' the squaw herds Bill into camp an' stakes him out, shoulder to shoulder, with the little Saucy Willow. Neither Bill nor the little Saucy Willow su'gests by word, screech or glance that they saveys either the game or the stakes, an' eats on, takin' no notice of themse'fs or any of the gluttons who surrounds 'em. Both Bill an' the little Saucy Willow looks that witless you-all would yearn to bat 'em one with the butt of a mule whip if onfortoonately you're present to be exasperated by sech exhibitions. At last, however, jest as the patience of the audience is plumb played, both Bill an' the little Saucy Willow gives a start of surprise. Which they're pretendin' to be startled to find they're feedin' off the same dish. Thar you be; that makes 'em 'buck an' squaw'—'man an' wife;' an' yereafter, in Osage circles they can print their kyards 'Mister an' Missis Bill Connors,' while Bill draws an' spends the little Saucy Willow's annooty on payment day instead of Strike Axe."

CHAPTER XIII.

When Tutt first saw Tucson.

"An' speakin' of dooels," remarked the Old Cattleman, apropos of an anecdote of the field of honour wherewith I regaled his fancy, "speakin' of dooels, I reckons now the encounter Dave Tutt involves himse'f with when he first sees Tucson takes onchallenged preecedence for utter bloodlessness. She's shore the most lamb's-wool form of single combat to which my notice is ever drawn. Dave enlightens us concernin' its details himse'f, bein' incited tharunto by hearin' Texas Thompson relate about the Austin shootin' match of that Deaf Smith.

Page 97

“Which this yere is ‘way back yonder on the trail of time,’ explains Dave, ‘an’ I’m hardened a heap since then. I’ve jest come buttin’ into Tucson an’ it’s easy money I’m the tenderest an’ most ontaught party that ever wears store-moccasins. What I misses knowin’ would make as husky a library,—if it’s printed down in books,—as ever lines up on shelves. Also, I’m freighted to the limit with the tenderfoot’s usual outfit of misinformation. It’s sad, yet troo! that as I casts my gaze r’arward I identifies myse’f as the balmiest brand of shorthorn who ever leaves his parents’ shelterin’ roof.’

“All the same,’ says Dan Boggs, plenty conceited, ‘I’ll gamble a hoss I’m a bigger eediot when I quits Missouri to roam the cow country than ever you-all can boast of bein’ in your most drivelin’ hour.’

“Do they lock you up?’ asks Dave.

“No,’ says Dan, ‘they don’t lock me up none, but——’

“Then you lose,’ insists Dave, mighty prompt.

“But hold on,’ says Dan; ‘don’t get your chips down so quick. As I starts to explain, I ain’t locked up; but it’s because I’m in a camp like Wolfville yere that ain’t sunk to the level of no calaboose. But what comes to be the same, I’m taken captive an’ held as sech until the roodiments of Western sense is done beat into me. It takes the yoonited efforts of four of the soonest sharps that ever happens; an’ final, they succeeds to a p’int that I’m deemed cap’ble of goin’ about alone.’

“Well,’ retorts Dave, ‘I won’t dispoote with you; an’ even at that I regyards your present attitooode as one of bluff. I thinks you’re shore the cunnin’est wolf in the territory, Dan, an’ allers is. But, as I’m sayin’, when I first begins to infest Tucson, I’m so ignorant it’s a stain on that meetropolis. At this yere epock, Tucson ain’t spraddled to its present proud dimensions. A gent might have thrown the loop of a lariat about the outfit an’ drug it after him with a pony. No one, however, performs this labour, as the camp is as petyoolant as a t’rant’ler an’ any onauthorised dalliance with its sensibilities would have led to vivid plays. Still, she ain’t big, Tucson ain’t; an’ I learns my way about from centre to suburbs in the first ten minutes.

“At the beginnin’ I’m a heap timid. I suffers from the common eastern theery an’ looks on Arizona as a region where it’s murder straight an’ lynchin’ for a place. You-all may jedge from that how erroneous is my idees. Then, as now, the distinguishin’ feacher of Tucson existence is a heavenly ca’m. Troo, thar’s moments when the air nacherally fills up with bullets like they’re a passel of swallow-birds, an’ they hums an’ sings their merry madrigals. However, these busy seasons don’t set in so often nor last so long but peaceful folks has ample chance to breathe.

Page 98

“Never does I b’ar witness to as many as seven contemporaneous remainders but once; and then thar’s cause. It’s in a poker game; an’ the barkeep brings the dealer a cold deck onder a tray whereon he purveys the drinks. Which the discovery of this yere solecism, as you-all well imagines, arouses interest, earnest an’ widespread like I deescribes. I counts up when the smoke lifts an’ finds that seven has sought eternal peace. Commonly two is the number; three bein’ quite a shipment. Shore, it’s speshul sickly when as many as seven quits out together!

“Bein’ timid an’ ignorant I takes good advice. It’s in the Oriental. Thar’s that old gray cimmaron hibernatin’ about the bar whose name is Jeffords.

““Be you-all conversant with that gun you packs?” asks Jeffords.

“I feels the hot blush mountin’ in my tender cheeks, but I concedes I ain’t. “Pard,” I replies, “speakin’ confidenshul an’ between gent an’ gent, this yere weepoon is plumb novel to me.”

““Which I allows as much,” he says, “from the egreegious way you fidges with it. Now let me pass you-all a p’inter from the peaks of experience. You caper back to the tavern an’ take that weepoon off. Or what’s as well, you pass it across to the barkeep. If you-all goes romancin’ ’round with hardware at your belt it’s even money it’ll get you beefed. Allers remember while in Arizona that you’ll never get plugged—onless by inadvertence—as long as you wander about in onheeled innocence. No gunless gent gets downed; sech is the onbreakable roole.”

“After that I goes guiltless of arms; I ain’t hungerin’ for immortality abrupt.

“Old Jeffords is shore right; in the Southwest if you aims to b’ar a charmed life, never wear a six-shooter. This maxim goes anywhere this side of the Mississippi; east of that mighty river it’s the other way.

“Bein’ nimble-blooded in them days, I’m a heap arduous about the dance-hall. I gets infatyooated with the good fellowship of that hurdygurdy; an’ even after I leaves Tucson an’ is camped some miles away, I saddles up every other evenin’, rides in an’, as says the poet, “shakes ontirin’ laig even into the wee small hours.”

“Right yere, gents,’ an’ Dave pauses like he’s prounced on by a solemn thought, ‘I don’t reckon I has to caution none of you-all not to go repeatin’ these mem’ries of gay days done an’ gone, where my wife Tucson Jennie cuts their trail. I ain’t afraid of Jennie; she’s a kind, troo he’pmeet; but ever since that onfortunate entanglement with the English towerist lady her suspicions sets up nervous in their blankets at the mere mention of frivolities wherein she hears my name. I asks you, tharfore, not to go sayin’ things to feed her doubts. With Tucson Jennie, my first business is to live down my past.’

“‘You-all can bet,’ says Texas Thompson, while his brow clouds, ‘that I learns enough while enjoyin’ the advantages of livin’ with my former wife to make sech requests sooperfluous in my case. Speshully since if it ain’t for what the neighbours done tells the lady she’d never go ropin’ ’round for that divorce. No Dave; your secrets is plumb safe with a gent who’s suffered.

Page 99

“Which I saveys I’m safe with all of you,” says Dave, his confidence, which the thoughts of Tucson Jennie sort o’ stampedes, beginnin’ to return. ‘But now an’ then them gusts of apprehensions frequent with married gents sweeps over me an’ I feels weak. But comin’ back to the dance-hall: As I su’gests thar’s many a serene hour I whiles away tharin. Your days an’ your dinero shore flows plenty swift in that temple of merriment; an’ chilled though I be with the stiff dignity of a wedded middle age, if it ain’t for my infant son, Enright Peets Tutt, to whom I’m strivin’ to set examples, I’d admire to prance out an’ live ag’in them halcyon hours; that’s whatever!

“Thar’s quite a sprinklin’ of the elite of Tucson in the dance-hall the evenin’ I has in mind. The bar is busy; while up an’ down each side sech refreshin’ pastimes as farobank, monte an’ roulette holds prosperous sway. Thar’s no quadrille goin’ at the moment, an’ a lady to the r’ar is carollin’ “Rosalie, the Prairie Flower.”

“Fair as a lily bloomin’ in May,
Sweeter than roses, bright as the day!
Everyone who knows her feels her gentle power,
Rosalie the Prairie Flower.”

“On this yere o’casion I’m so far fortunate as to be five drinks ahead an’ tharfore would sooner listen to myse’f talk than to the warblin’ of the cantatrice. As it is, I’m conversin’ with a gent who’s standin’ hard by.

“At my elbow is posted a shaggy an’ forbiddin’ outlaw whose name is Yuba Tom, an’ who’s more harmonious than me. He wants to listen to “Rosalie the Prairie Flower.” Of a sudden, he w’irls about, plenty peevish.

“Stick a period to that pow-wow,” observes Yuba; “I wants to hear this prima donna sing.”

“Bein’ gala with the five libations, I turns on Yuba haughty. “If you’re sobbin’ to hear this songstress,” I says, “go for’ard an’ camp down at her feet. But don’t come pawin’ your way into no conversations with me. An’ don’t hang up no bluff.”

“Which if you disturbs me further,” retorts Yuba, “I’ll turn loose for shore an’ crawl your hump a lot.”

“Them foolhardy sports,” I replies, “who has yeretofore attempted that enterprise sleeps in onknown graves; so don’t you-all pester me, for the outlook’s dark.”

“It’s now that Yuba,—who’s a mighty cautious sport, forethoughtful an’ prone to look ahead,—regyards the talk as down to cases an’ makes a flash for his gun. It’s concealed by his surtoot an’ I ain’t noticed it none before. If I had, most likely I’d pitched the conversation in a lower key. However, by this time, I’m quarrelsome as a badger; an' a willin'ness for trouble subdooes an' sets its feet on my nacheral cowardice an' holds her down.'

“‘Dave, you-all makes me nervous,’ says Boggs, with a flash of heat, ‘settin’ thar lyin’ about your timidity that a-way. You’re about as reluctant for trouble as a grizzly bar, an’ you couldn’t fool no gent yere on that p’int for so much as one white chip.’

Page 100

“‘Jest the same,’ says Dave, mighty dogmatic, ‘I still asserts that in a concealed, inborn fashion, I’m timid absoloot. If you has ever beheld me stand up ag’in the iron it’s because I’m ‘shamed to quit. I’d wilt out like a jack-rabbit if I ain’t held by pride.

““‘You’re plenty ready with that Colt’s,” I says to Yuba, an’ my tones is severe. “That’s because you sees me weepoonless. If I has a gun now, I’d make you yell like a coyote.”

““‘S’pose you ain’t heeled,” reemonstrates Yuba, “that don’t give you no license to stand thar aboosin’ me. Be I to blame because your toilet ain’t complete? You go frame yourse’f up, an’ I’ll wait;” an’ with that, this Yuba takes his hand from his artillery.

“‘Thar’s a footile party who keeps the dancehall an’ who signs the books as Colonel Boone. He’s called the “King of the Cowboys”; most likely in a sperit of facetiousness since he’s more like a deuce than a king. This Boone’s packin’ a most excellent six-shooter loose in the waistband of his laiggin’s. Boone’s passin’ by as Yuba lets fly his taunts an’ this piece of ordnance is in easy reach. With one motion I secures it an’ the moment followin’ the muzzle is pressin’ ag’in’st a white pearl button on Yuba’s bloo shirt.

““‘Bein’ now equipped,” I says, “this war-dance may proceed.”

“‘I’m that scared I fairly hankers for the privilege of howlin’, but I realises acootely that havin’ come this far towards homicide I must needs go through if Yuba crowds my hand. But he don’t; he’s forbearin’ an’ stands silent an’ still. Likewise, I sees his nose, yeretofore the colour of a over-ripe violin, begin to turn sear an’ gray. I recovers sperit at this as I saveys I’m saved. Still I keeps the artillery on him. It’s the innocence of the gun that holds Yuba spellbound an’ affects his nose, an’ I feels shore if I relaxes he’ll be all over me like a baggage waggon.’

““‘Which I should say so!’ says Jack Moore, drawin’ a deep breath. ‘You takes every chance, Dave, when you don’t cut loose that time!’

“‘When Boone beholds me,’ says Dave, ‘annex his gun he almost c’lapses into a fit. He makes a backward leap that shows he ain’t lived among rattlesnakes in vain. Then he stretches his hand towards me an’ Yuba, an’ says, “Don’t shoot! Let’s take a drink; it’s on the house!”

“‘Yuba, with his nose still a peaceful gray, turns from the gun an’ sidles for the bar; I follows along, thirsty, but alert. When we-all is assembled, Boone makes a wailin’ request for his six-shooter.

““‘Get his,” I says, at the same time, animadvertin’ at Yuba with the muzzle.

“‘Yuba passes his weepoons over the bar an’ I follows suit with Boone’s. Then we drinks with our eyes on each other in silent scorn.

""Which we-all will see about this later,' growls Yuba, as he leaves the bar.

""Go as far as you like, old sport," I retorts, for this last edition, as Colonel Sterett would term it, of Valley Tan makes me that brave I'm miseratin' for a riot.

Page 101

“It’s the next day before ever I’m firm enough, to come ag’in to Tucson. This stage-wait in the tragedy is doo to fear excloosive. I hears how Yuba is plumb bad; how he’s got two notches on his stick; how he’s filed the sights off his gun; an’ how in all reespects he’s a murderer of merit an’ renown. Sech news makes me timid two ways: I’m afraid Yuba’ll down me some; an’ then ag’in I’m afraid he’s so popular I’ll be lynched if I downs him. Shore, that felon Yuba begins to assoome in my apprehensions the stern teachers of a whipsaw. At last I’m preyed on to that degree I’m desperate; an’ I makes up my mind to invade Tucson, cross up with Yuba an’ let him come a runnin’. The nervousness of extreme youth doubtless is what goads me to this decision.

“It’s about second drink time in the afternoon when, havin’ donned my weepens, I rides into Tucson. After leavin’ my pony at the corral, I turns into the main street. It’s scorchin’ hot an’ barrin’ a dead burro thar’s hardly anybody in sight. Up in front of the Oriental, as luck has it, stands Yuba and a party of doobious morals who slays hay for the gov’ment, an’ is addressed as Lon Gilette. As I swings into the causeway, Gilette gets his eye on me an’ straightway fades into the Oriental leavin’ Yuba alone in the street. This yere strikes me as mighty ominous; I feels the beads of water come onder my hatband, an’ begins to crowd my gun a leetle for’ard on the belt. I’m walkin’ up on the opp’site side from Yuba who stands watchin’ my approach with a serene mien.

““It’s the ca’mness of the tiger crouchin’ for a spring,” thinks I.

“As I arrives opp’site, Yuba stretches out his hand. “Come on over,” he sings out.

““Which he’s assoomin’ airs of friendship,” I roominates, “to get me off my gyard.”

“I starts across to Yuba. I’m watchin’ like a lynx; an’ I’m that harrowed, if Yuba so much as sneezes or drops his hat or makes a r’arward move of his hand, I’m doo to open on him. But he stands still as a hill an’ nothin’ more menacin’ than grins. As I comes clost he offers his hand. It’s prior to my shootin’ quick an’ ackerate with my left hand, so I don’t give Yuba my right, holdin’ the same in reserve for emergencies an’ in case thar’s a change of weather. But Yuba, who can see it’s fear that a-way, is too p’lite to make comments. He shakes my left hand with well-bred enthoosiasm an’ turns an’ heads the way into the Oriental.

“As we fronts the bar an’ demands nose paint Yuba gives up his arms; an’ full of a jocund lightheartedness as I realises that I ain’t marked for instant slaughter I likewise yields up mine. We then has four drinks in happy an’ successful alternation, an’ next we seeks a table an’ subsides into seven-up.

““Then thar ain’t goin’ to be no dooel between us?” I says to Yuba. It’s at a moment when he’s turned jack an’ I figgers he’ll be more soft an’ leenient. “It’s to be a evenin’ of friendly peace?”

Page 102

““An’ why not?” says Yuba. “I’ve shore took all the skelps that’s comin’ to me; an’ as for you-all, you’re young an’ my counsel is to never begin. That pooerile spat we has don’t count. I’m drinkin’ at the time, an’ I don’t reckon now you attaches importance to what a gent says when he’s in lickin’?”

““Not to what he says,” I replies; “but I does to what he shoots. I looks with gravity on the gun-plays of any gent, an’ the drunker he is the more ser’ous I regyards the eepisode.”

““Well, she’s a thing of the past now,” explains Yuba, “an’ this evenin’ you’re as pop’lar with me as a demijohn at a camp-meetin’.”

““Both our bosoms so wells with joy, settin’ thar as we do in a atmosphere of onexpected yet perfect fraternalism an’ complete peace, that Yuba an’ me drinks a whole lot. It gets so, final, I refooses to return to my own camp; I won’t be sep’rated from Yuba. When we can no longer drink, we turns in at Yuba’s wickeyup an’ sleeps. The next mornin’ we picks up the work of reeconciliation where it slips from our tired hands the evenin’ before. I does intend to reepair to my camp when we rolls out; but after the third conj’int drink both me an’ Yuba sees so many reasons why it’s a fool play I gives up the idee utter.

““Gents, it’s no avail to pursoo me an’ Yuba throughout them four feverish days. We drifts from one drink-shop to the other, arm in arm, as peaceful an’ pleased a pair of sots as ever disturbs the better element. Which we’re the scandal of Tucson; we-all is that thickly amiable it’s a insult to other men. Thus ends my first dooel; a conflict as bloodless as she is victorious. How long it would have took me an’ Yuba to thoroughly cement our friendships will never be known. At the finish, we-all is torn asunder by the Tucson marshal an’ I’m returned to my camp onder gyard. Me an’ Yuba before nor since never does wax that friendly with any other gent; we’d be like brothers yet, only the Stranglers over to Shakespear seizes on pore Yuba one mornin’ about a hoss an’ heads him for his home on high.”

CHAPTER XIV.

The Troubles of Dan Boggs.

“This yere,” remarked the Old Cattleman, at the heel of a half-hour lecture on life and its philosophy, “this yere is a evenin’ when they gets to discussin’ about luck. It’s doorin’ the progress of this dispoote when Cherokee Hall allows that luck don’t alternate none, first good an’ then bad, but travels in bunches like cattle or in flocks like birds. ‘Whichever way she comes,’ says Cherokee, ‘good or bad, luck avalanches itse’f on a gent. That’s straight!’ goes on Cherokee. ‘You bet! I speaks from a voloominous experience an’ a life that, whether up or down, white or black, ain’t been nothin’ but luck. Which nacherally, bein' a kyard sharp that a-way, I studies luck the same as Peets yere studies drugs; an' my discov'ries teaches that luck is plumb gregar'ous. Like misery in that proverb, luck loves company; it shore despises to be lonesome.'

Page 103

“Cherokee, I delights to hear you talk,’ says Old Man Enright, as he signs up Black Jack for the Valley Tan. ‘Them eloocidations is meant to stiffen a gent’s nerve an’ do him good. Shore; no one needs encouragement nor has to train for a conflict with good luck; but it’s when he’s out ag’inst the iron an’ the bad luck’s swoopin’ an’ stoopin’ at him, beak an’ claw like forty hawks, that your remarks is doo to come to his aid an’ uplift his sperits some. An’ as you says a moment back, thar’s bound in the long run to be a equilibr’um. The lower your bad luck, the taller your good luck when it strikes camp. It’s the same with the old Rockies, an’ wherever you goes it’s ever a never-failin’ case of the deeper the valley, the higher the hill!

“As is frequent with me,’ says Dan Boggs, after we sets quiet a moment, meanwhiles tastin’ our nosepaint thoughtful—for these outbursts of Cherokee’s an’ Enright’s calls for consid’rations,—’as is frequent with me,’ says Dan, ‘I reckons I’ll string my chips with Cherokee. The more ready since throughout my own checkered c’reer—an’ I’ve done most everything ’cept sing in the choir,—luck has ever happened bunched like he asserts. Which I gets notice of these pecooliarities of fortune early. While I’m simply doin’ nothin’ to provoke it, a gust of bad luck pronounces on me an’ thwarts me in a noble ambition, rooins my social standin’ an busts two of my nigh ribs all in one week.

“I’m a colt at the time, an’ jest about big enough to break. My folks is livin’ in Missouri over back of the Sni-a-bar Hills. By nacher I’m a heap moosical; so I ups—givin’ that genius for harmony expression—an’ yoonites myse’f with the “Sni-a-bar Silver Cornet Band.” Old Hickey is leader, an’ he puts me in to play the snare drum, the same bein’ the second rung on the ladder of moosical fame, an’ one rung above the big drum. Old Hickey su’gests that I start with the snare drum an’ work up. Gents, you-all should have heard me with that instrooment! I’d shore light into her like a storm of hail!

“For a spell the “Sni-a-bar Silver Cornet Band” used to play in the woods. This yere Sni-a-bar commoonity is a mighty nervous neighbourhood, an’ thar’s folks whose word is above reproach who sends us notice they’ll shoot us up if we don’t; so at first we practises in the woods. But as time goes on we improves an’ plays well enough so we don’t scare children; an’ then the Sni-a-bar people consents to let us play now an’ then along the road. All of us virchewosoes is looded to do good work, so that Sni-a-bar would get reeconciled, an’ recognise us as a commoonal factor.

“Well do I recall the day of our first public appearance. It’s at a political meetin’ an’ everything, so far as we’re concerned at least, depends on the impression we-all makes. If we goes to a balk or a break-down, the “Sni-a-bar Silver Cornet Band’s” got to go back an’ play in the woods.

Page 104

“It’s not needed that I tells you gents, how we-all is on aige. Old Hickey gets so perturbed he shifts me onto the big drum; an’ Catfish Edwards, yeretofore custodian of that instrooment, is given the snare. This play comes mighty clost to breakin’ my heart; for I’m ambitious, an’ it galls my soul to see myse’f goin’ back’ards that a-way. It’s the beginnin’ of my bad luck, too. Thar’s no chance to duck the play, however, as old Hickey’s word is law, so I sadly buckles on the giant drum.

“We’re jest turnin’ into the picnic ground where this meetin’s bein’ held an’ I’ve got thoughts of nothin’ but my art—as we moosicians says—an’ elevatin’ the local opinion of an’ concernin’ the meelodious merits of the band. We’re playin’ “Number Eighteen” at the time, an’ I’ve got my eagle eye on the paper that tells me when to welt her; an’ I’m shorely leatherin’ away to beat a ace-flush.

“Bein’ I’m new to the big drum, an’ onduly eager to succeed, I’ve got all my eyes picketed on the notes. It would have been as well if I’d reeserved at least one for scenery. But I don’t; an’ so it befalls that when we-all is in the very heart of the toone, an’ at what it’s no exaggeration to call a crisis in our destinies, I walks straddle of a stump. An’ sech is my fatal momentum that the drum rolls up on the stump, an’ I rolls up on the drum. That’s the finish; next day the Silver Cornet Band by edict of the Sni-a-bar pop’lace is re-exiled to them woods. But I don’t go; old Hickey excloodes me, an’ my hopes of moosical eminence rots down right thar.

“It’s mebbly two days later when I’m over by the postoffice gettin’ the weekly paper for my old gent. Thar’s goin’ to be a Gander-Pullin’ by torchlight that evenin’ over to Hickman’s Mills with a dance at the heel of the hunt. But I ain’t allowin’ to be present none. I’m too deeply chagrined about my failure with that big drum; an’ then ag’in, I’m scared to ask a girl to go. You-all most likely has missed noticin’ it a heap—for I frequent forces myse’f to be gala an’ festive in company—but jest the same, deep down onder my belt, I’m bashful. An’ when I’m younger I’m worse. I’m bashful speshul of girls; for I soon discovers that it’s easier to face a gun than a girl, an’ the glance of her eye is more terrifyin’ than the glimmer of a bowie. That’s the way I feels. It’s a fact; I remembers a time when my mother, gettin’ plumb desp’rate over my hoomility, offers me a runnin’ hoss if I’d go co’t a girl; on which o’casion I feebly urges that I’d rather walk.

“On the evenin’ of this yer dance an’ Gander-Pullin’ I’m pirootin’ about the Center when I meets up with Jule James;—Jule bein’ the village belle. “Goin’ to the dance?” says Jule. “No,” says I. “Why ever don’t you go?” asks Jule. “Thar ain’t no girl weak-minded enough to go with me,” I replies; “I makes a bid for two or three but gets the mitten.” This yere last is a bluff. “Which I reckons now,” says Jule, givin’ me a look, “if you’d asked me, I’d been fool enough to go.” Of course, with that I’m treed; I couldn’t flicker, so I allows that if Jule’ll caper back to the house with me I’ll take her yet.

Page 105

“We-all gets back to my old gent’s an’ I proceeds to hitch up a Dobbin hoss we has to a side-bar buggy. It’s dark by now, an’ we don’t go to the house nor indulge in any ranikaboo uproar about it, as I figgers it’s better not to notify the folks. Not that they’d be out to put the kybosh on this enterprize; but they’re powerful fond of talk my folks is, an’ their long suit is never wantin’ you to do whatever you’re out to execoote. Wherefore, as I ain’t got no time for a j’int debate with my fam’ly over technicalities I puts Jule into the side-bar where it’s standin’ in the dark onder a shed; an’ then, hookin’ up old Dobbin a heap surreptitious, I gathers the reins an’ we goes softly p’intin’ forth for Hickman’s.

“As we-all is sailin’ thoughtlessly along the trail, Dobbin ups an’ bolts. Sech flights is onpreecedented in the case of Dobbin—who’s that sedate he’s jest alive—an’ I’m shore amazed; but I yanks him up an’ starts anew. It’s twenty rods when Dobbin bolts ag’in. This time I hears a flutter, an’ reaches ’round Jule some to see if her petticoats is whippin’ the wheel. They ain’t; but Jule—who esteems said gesture in the nacher of a caress—seemin’ to favour the idee, I lets my arm stay ’round. A moment later an’ this yere villain Dobbin bolts the third time, an’ as I’ve sort o’ got my one arm tangled up with Jule, he lams into a oak tree.

“It’s then, when we’re plumb to a halt, I does hear a flutter. At that I gets down to investigate. Gents, you-all may onderstand my horror when I finds ’leven of my shawl-neck game chickens roostin’ on that side-bar’s reach! They’re thar when we pulls out. They’ve retired from the world an’ its cares for the night an’, in our ignorance of them chicken’s domestic arrangements, we blindly takes ’em with us. Now an’ then, as we goes rackin’ along, one of ’em gets jolted off. Then he’d hang by his chin an’ beat his wings; an’ it’s these frenzied efforts he makes to stay with the game that evolves them alarmin’ flutterin’s.

“Jule—who don’t own chickens an’ who ain’t no patron of cockfights neither—is for settin’ the shawl-necks on the fence an’ pickin’ ’em up as we trails back from the Gander-Pullin’.

““As long as it’s dark,” says Jule, “they’ll stay planted; an’ we rounds ’em up on our return.”

“But I ain’t that optimistic. I knows these chickens an’ they ain’t so somnolent as all that. Besides it’s a cinch that a mink or a fox comes squanderin’ ’round an’ takes ’em in like gooseberries. ’Leven shawl-necks! Why, it would be a pick-up for a fox!

““You’re a fine Injun to take a girl to a dance!” says Jule at last, an’ she’s full of scorn.

““Injun or no Injun,” I retorts a heap sullen, “thar ain’t no Gander-Pullin’ goin’ to jestify me in abandonin’ my ’leven shawl-necks an’ me with a main to fight next month over on the Little Bloo!”

“At that I corrals the chickens an’ imprisons ’em in the r’ar of the side-bar an’ goes a-weavin’ back for camp, an’ I picks up three more shawl-necks where they sets battin’ their he’pless eyes in the road.

Page 106

“But I shore hears Jule’s views of me as a beau! They’re hot enough to fry meat! Moreover, Jule tells all Sni-a-bar an’ I’m at once a scoff an’ jeer from the Kaw to the Gasconade. Jule’s old pap washes out his rifle an’ signs a pledge to plug me if ever ag’in I puts my hand on his front gate. As I su’gests, it rooins my social c’reer in Sni-a-bar.

“While I’m ground like a toad that a-way beneath the harrow of this double setback of the drum an’ Jule, thar’s a circus shows up an’ pitches its merry tent in Sni-a-bar. I knows this caravan of yore—for I’m a master-hand for shows in my yooth an’ allers goes—an’ bein’ by virchoo of my troubles ready to plunge into dissipation’s mad an’ swirlin’ midst, I sa’nters down the moment the waggons shows up; an’ after that, while that circus stays, folks who wants to see me, day or night, has to come to the show.

“The outfit is one of them little old jim-crow shows that charges two-bits an’ stays a month; an’ by the end of the first day, me an’ the clown gets wropped up like brothers; which I’m like one of the fam’iy! I fetches water an’ he’ps rub hosses an’, speakin’ gen’ral, does more nigger work than I ever crosses up with prior endoorin’ my entire life. But knowin’ the clown pays for all; sech trivial considerations as pullin’ on tent ropes an’ spreadin’ sawdust disappears before the honour of his a’quaintance. It’s my knowin’ the clown that leads to disaster.

“This merry-maker, who’s a “jocund wight” as Colonel Sterett says, gets a heap drunk one evenin’ ‘an’ sleeps out in the rain, an’ he awakes as hoarse as bull-frogs. He ain’t able to sing his song in the ring. It’s jest before they begins.

““Dan,” he croaks, plenty dejected, “I wish you’d clown up an’ go in an’ sing that song.”

“This cantata he alloodes to, is easy; it’s “Roll Jurdan, Roll,” an’ I hears it so much at nigger camp meetin’s an’ sim’lar distractions, that I carols it in my sleep. As the clown throws out his bluff I considers awhile some ser’ous. I feels like mebbby I’ve cut the trail of a cunnin’ idee. When Jule an’ old Hickey an’ the balance of them Sni-a-bar outcasts sees me in a clown’s yooniform, tyrannisin’ about, singin’ songs an’ leadin’ up the war-jig gen’ral, they’ll regret the opinions they so freely expresses an’ take to standin’ about, hopin’ I’ll bow. They’ll regyard knowin’ me as a boon. With that, I tells the clown to be of good cheer. I’ll prance in an’ render that lay an’ his hoarseness won’t prove no setback to the gaiety of nations.

“But I don’t sing after all; an’ I don’t pile up Jule an’ old Hickey an’ the sports of Sni-a-bar neither in any all ’round jumble of amazement at my genius.

““Dan,” says the ring master when we’re in the dressin’ room, “when the leapin’ begins, you-all go on with the others an’ do a somersault or two?”

““Shore!” I says.

“I feels as confidant as a kangaroo! Which I never does try it none; but I supposes that all you has to do is hit the springboard an’ let the springboard do the rest. That’s where I’m barkin’ at a knot!

Page 107

“This yere leapin’ comes first on the bill. I ain’t been in the ring yet; the tumblin’ business is where I makes my deeboo. I’ve got on a white clown soote with big red spots, an’ my face is all flour. I’m as certain of my comin’ pop’larity as a wet dog. I shore allows that when Jule an’ old Hickey observes my graceful agility an’ then hears me warble “Roll Jurdan, Roll,” I’ll make ’em hang their heads.

“The tumblin’ is about to begin; the band’s playin’, an’ all us athletes is ranged Injun file along a plank down which we’re to run. I’m the last chicken on the roost.

“Even unto this day it’s a subject of contention in circus cirkles as to where I hits that springboard. Some claims I hits her too high up; an’ some says too low; for myse’f, I concedes I’m ignorant on the p’int. I flies down the plank like a antelope! I hears the snarl of the drums! I jumps an’ strikes the springboard!

“It’s at this juncture things goes queer. To my wonder I don’t turn no flip-flap, but performs like a draw-shot in billiards. I plants my moccasins on the springboard; an’ then instead of goin’ on an’ over a cayouse who’s standin’ thar awaitin’ sech events, I shoots back’ard about fifteen foot an’ lands in a ondistinguishable heap. An’ as I strikes a plank it smashes a brace of my ribs.

“For a second I’m blurred in my intellects. Then I recovers; an’ as I’m bein’ herded back into the dressin’ room by the fosterin’ hands of the ring master an’ my pard, the clown, over in the audience I hears Jule’s silvery laugh an’ her old pap allowin’ he’d give a hoss if I’d only broke my neck. Also, I catches a remark of old Hickey; “Which that Boggs boy allers was a ediot!” says old Hickey.”

CHAPTER XV.

Bowlegs and Major Ben.

“Which this yere Major Ben,” remarked the Old Cattleman, “taken in conjunction with his bosom pard, Billy Bowlaigs, frames up the only casooalty which gets inaug’rated in Wolfville.”

“What!” I interjected; “don’t you consider the divers killings,—the death of the Stinging Lizard and the Dismissal of Silver Phil, to say nothing of the taking off of the Man from Red Dog—don’t you, I say, consider such bloody matters casualties?”

“No, sir,” retorted my friend, emitting the while sundry stubborn puffs of smoke, “no, sir; I regards them as results. Tharfore, I reiterates that this yere Major Ben an’ Bowlaigs accomplishes between ’em the only troo casooalty whereof Wolfville has a record.”

At this he paused and surveyed me with an eye of challenge; after a bit, perceiving that I proposed no further contradiction, he went on:

“This Billy Bowlaigs at first is a cub b’ar—a black cub b’ar: an’ when he grows up to manhood, so to speak, he’s as big, an’ mighty near as strong physical, as Dan Boggs. Nacherally, however, Dan lays over Bowlaigs mental like a ace-full.

Page 108

"It's Dave Tutt who makes Bowlaigs captive; Dave rounds Bowlaigs up in his infancy one time when he's pesterin' about over in the foothills of the Floridas lookin' for blacktail deer. Dave meets up with Bowlaigs an' the latter's mother who's out, evident, on a scout for grub. Bowlaig's mother has jest upturned a rotten pine-log to give little Bowlaigs a chance to rustle some of these yere egreegious white worms which looks like bald catapillars, that a-way, when all at once around a p'int of rocks Dave heaves in view. This parent of Bowlaigs is as besotted about her son as many hooman mothers; for while Bowlaigs stands almost as high as she does an' weighs clost onto two hundred pounds, the mother b'ar still has the idee tangled up in her intelligence that Bowlaigs is that small an' he'pless, day-old kittens is se'f-sustainin' citizens by compar'son to him. Actin' on these yere errors, Bowlaig's mother the moment she glimpses Dave grabs young Bowlaigs by the scruff of the neck an' goes caperin' off up hill with him. An' to give that parent b'ar full credit, she's gettin' along all right an' conductin' herse'f as though Bowlaigs don't heft no more than one of them gooseha'r pillows, when, accidental, she bats pore Bowlaigs ag'in the bole of a tree—him hangin' outen her mouth about three foot—an' while the collision shakes that monarch of the forest some, Bowlaigs gets knocked free of her grip an' goes rollin' down the mountain-side ag'in like a sack of bran. It puts quite a crimp in Bowlaigs. The mother b'ar, full of s'licitoode to save her offspring turns, an' charges Dave; tharupon Dave downs her, an' young Bowlaigs becomes a orphan an' a pris'ner on the spot.

"Followin' the demise of Bowlaig's mother, Dave sort o' feels reesponsible for the cub's bringin' up an' he ties him hand an' foot, an' after peelin' the pelt from the old mother b'ar, packs the entire outfit into camp. Dave's pony protests with green eyes ag'in carryin' sech a freight, but Dave has his way as he usually does with everything except Tucson Jennie.

"At first Dave allows he'll let Bowlaigs live with him a whole lot an' keep him until he grows up, an' construct a pet of him. But as I more than once makes plain, Dave proposes but Tucson Jennie disposes; an' so it befalls that on the third day after the cub takes up his residence with her an' Dave, Jennie arms herse'f with a broom an' harasses the onfortunate Bowlaigs from her wickeyup. Jennie declar's that she discovers Bowlaigs organisin' to devour her child Enright Peets Tutt, who's at that epock comin' three the next spring round-up.

"'I could read it in that Bowlaigs b'ar's eyes,' says Jennie, 'an' it's mighty lucky a parent's faculties is plumb keen. If I hadn't got in on the play with my broom, you can bet that inordinate Bowlaigs would have done eat little Enright Peets all up.

"Shore, no one credits these yere apprehensions of Jennie's; Bowlaigs would no more have chewed up Enright Peets than he'd played table-stakes with him; but a fond mother's fears once stampeded is not to be headed off or ca'med, an' Bowlaigs has to shift his camp a heap.

Page 109

“Bowlaigs takes up his abode on the heels of him bein’ run out by Tucson Jennie, over to the corral; that is, he bunks in thar temp’rary at least. An’ he shore grows amazin’, an’ enlarges doorin’ the next three months to sech a degree that when he stands up to the counter in the Red Light, acceptin’ of some proffered drink, Bowlaigs comes clost to bein’ as tall as folks. He early learns throughout his wakeful moments—what I’d deescribe as his business hours—to make the Red Light a hang-out; it’s the nose paint he’s hankerin’ after, for in no time at all Bowlaigs accoomulates a appetite for rum that’s a fa’r match for that of either Huggins or Old Monte, an’ them two sots is for long known as far west as the Colorado an’ as far no’th as the Needles as the offishul drunkards of Arizona. No; Bowlaigs ain’t equal to pourin’ down the raw nose paint; but Black Jack humours his weakness an’ Bowlaigs is wont to take off his libations about two parts water to one of whiskey an’ a lump of sugar in the bottom, outen one of these big tumbler glasses; meanwhile standin’ at the bar an’ holdin’ the glass between his two paws an’ all as ackerate an’ steady as the most talented inebriate.

“‘An’ Bowlaigs has this distinction,’ says Black Jack, alloodin’ to the sugar an’ water; ‘he’s shore the only gent for whom I so far onbends from reg’lar rools as to mix drinks.’

“Existence goes flowin’ onward like some glad sweet song for Bowlaigs for mighty likely it’s two months an’ nothin’ remarkable eventuates. He camps in over to the corral, an’ except that new ponies, who ain’t onto Bowlaigs, commonly has heart-failure at the sight of him, he don’t found no disturbances nor get in anybody’s way. Throughout his wakin’ hours, as I su’gests former, Bowlaigs ha’nts about the Red Light, layin’ guileful an’ cunnin’ for invites to drink; an’ he execootes besides small excursions to the O.K. Restauraw for chuck, with now an’ then a brief journey to the Post Office or the New York store. These visits of Bowlaigs to the last two places, both because he don’t get no letters at the post office an’ don’t demand no clothes at the store, I attribootes to motives of morbid cur’osity, that a-way.

“The first real trouble that meets up with Bowlaigs—who’s got to be a y’ar old by now—since Jennie fights the dooel with him with that broom, overtakes him at the O.K. Restauraw. Missis Rucker for one thing ain’t over fond of Bowlaigs, allegin’ as he grows older day by day he looks more an’ more like Rucker. Of course, sech views is figments as much as the alarms of Tucson Jennie about Bowlaigs meditatin’ gettin’ away with little Enright Peets; but Missis Rucker, in spite of whatever we gent folks can say in Bowlaigs’s behalf, believes firm in her own slanders. She asserts that Bowlaigs as he unfolds looks like Rucker; an’ for her at least that settles the subject an’ she assoomes towards Bowlaigs attitoodes which, would perhaps have been proper had her charge been troo.

Page 110

“Still, I’ll say for that most esteemable lady, that Missis Rucker never lays for Bowlaigs or assaults him until one afternoon when he catches the dinin’-room deserted an’ off its gyard an’ goes romancin’ over, cat-foot an’ surreptitious, an’ cleans up the tables of what chuck has been placed thar in antic’pation of supper. The first news Missis Rucker has of the raid is when Bowlaigs gets a half-hitch on the tablecloth an’ winds up his play by yankin’ the entire outfit of spoons, tin plates an’ crockery off onto the floor. It’s then Missis Rucker sallies from the kitchen an’ puts Bowlaigs to flight.

“Bowlaigs, who’s plumb scared, comes lumberin’ over to the Red Light an’ puts himse’f onder our protection. Enright squar’s it for him; for when Missis Rucker appears subsequent with a Winchester an’ a knife an’ gives it out cold she’s goin’ to get Bowlaig’s hide an’ tallow an’ sell ‘em to pay even for that dinin’-room desolation of which he’s the architect, Enright counts up the damage an’ pays over twenty-three dollars in full settlement. Does Bowlaigs know it? You can gamble the limit he knows it; for all the time Missis Rucker is prancin’ about the Red Light denouncin’ him, he secretes himse’f, shiverin’, behind the bar; an’ when that lady withdraws, mollified an’ subdooed by the money, he creeps out, Bowlaigs does, an’ cries an’ licks Enright’s hand. Oh, he’s a mighty appreciative b’ar, pore Bowlaigs is; but his nerves is that onstrung by the perils he passes through with Missis Rucker it takes two big drinks to recover his sperits an’ make him feel like the same b’ar. It’s Texas Thompson who buys the drinks:

““For I, of all gents, Bowlaigs,’ says Texas, as he invites the foogitive to the bar, ‘onderstands what you-all’s been through. It may be imagination, but jest the same thar’s them times when Missis Rucker goes on the warpath when she reminds me a lot of my divorced Laredo wife.’ With that Texas pours a couple of hookers of Willow Run into Bowlaigs, an’ the latter is a heap cheered an’ his pulse declines to normal.

“It’s rum, however, which final is the deestruction of Bowlaigs, same as it is of plenty of other good people who would have else lived in honour an’ died respected an’ been tearfully planted in manner an’ form to do ‘em proud.

“Excloosive of that casooalty which marks his wind-up, an’ which he combines with Major Ben to commit, thar’s but one action of Bowlaigs a enemy might call a crime. He does prounce on a mail bag one evenin’ when the post-master ain’t lookin’, an’ shore rends an’ worrits them letters scand’lous.

“Yes, Bowlaigs gets arrested, an’ the Stranglers sort o’ convenes informal to consider it. I allers remembers that session of the Stranglers on account of Doc Peets an’ Colonel William Greene Sterett entertain’ opp’site views an’ the awful language they indulges in as they expresses an’ sets ‘em forth.

Page 111

“Which I claims that this Bowlaigs b’ar,’ says Peets, combatin’ a suggestion of Dan Boggs who’s sympathisin’ with an’ urges that Bowlaigs is ‘ignorant of law an’ tharfore innocent of offence,’ ‘which I claims that this Bowlaig b’ar is guilty of rustlin’ the mails an’ must an’ should be hanged. His ignorance is no defences, for don’t each gent present know of that aphorism of the law, Ignoratis legia non excusat!’

“Dan, nacherally, is enable to combat sech profound bluffs as this, an’ I’m free to confess if it ain’t for Colonel Sterett buttin’ in with more Latin, the same bein’ of equal cogency with that of Peet’s, the footure would have turned plenty dark an’ doobious for Bowlaigs. As Dan sinks back speechless an’ played from Peet’s shot, the Colonel, who bein’ eddicated like Peets to a feather aige is ondismayed an’ cool, comes to the rescoo.

“That law proverb you quotes, Doc,’ says the Colonel, ‘is dead c’rrect, an’ if argyment was to pitch its last camp thar, your deductions that this benighted Bowlaigs must swing, would be ondeniable. But thar’s a element lackin’ in this affair without which no offence is feasible. The question is,—an’ I slams it at you, Doc, as a thoughtful eddicated sharp—does this yere Bowlaigs open them letters an’ bust into that mail bag causa lucrae? I puts this query up to you-all, Doc, for answer. It’s obv’ous that Bowlaigs ain’t got no notion of money bein’ in them missives an’ tharfore he couldn’t have been moved by no thoughts of gain. Wherefore I asserts that the deed is not done causa lucrae, an’ that the case ag’in this he’pless Bowlaigs falls to the ground.’

“Followin’ this yere collision of the classics between two sech scientists as Peets an’ the Colonel, we-all can be considered as hangin’ mighty anxious on what reply Doc Peets is goin’ to make. But after some thought, Peets agrees with the Colonel. He admits that this causa lucrae is a bet he overlooks, an’ that now the Colonel draws his attention to it, he’s bound to say he believes the Colonel to be right, an’ that Bowlaigs should be made a free unfettered b’ar ag’in. We breathes easier at this, for the tension has been great, an’ Dan himse’f is that relieved he comes a heap clost to sheddin’ tears. The trial closes with the customary drinks; Bowlaigs gettin’ his forty drops with the rest, on the hocks of which he signalises his reestoration to his rights an’ freedom as a citizen by quilin’ up in his corner an’ goin’ to sleep.

“But the end is on its lowerin’ way for Bowlaigs. Thar’s a senile party who’s packed his blankets into camp an’ who’s called ‘Major Ben.’ The Major, so the whisper goes, used to be quartermaster over to Fort Craig or Fort Apache, or mebbly now it’s Fort Cummings or some’ers; an’ he gets himse’f dismissed for makin’ away with the bank-roll. Be that as it may, the Major’s plenty drunk an’ military while he lasts among us; an’ he likewise has dinero for whatever nosepaint an’ food an’ farobank he sees fit to go ag’inst. From the jump the Major makes up to Bowlaigs an’ the two become pards. The Major allows he likes Bowlaigs because he can’t talk.

Page 112

“Which if all my friends,’ says the Major, no doubt alloodin’ to them witnesses ag’in him when he’s cashiered, ’couldn’t have talked no more than Bowlaigs, I’d been happy yet.’

“The Major’s got a diminyootive wickeyup out to the r’ar of the corral, an’ him an’ Bowlaigs resides tharin. This habitat of the Major an’ Bowlaigs ain’t much bigger than a seegyar box; it’s only eight foot by ten, is made of barn-boards an’ has a canvas roof. That’s the kind of ranch Bowlaigs an’ the Major calls ‘home’; the latter spreadin’ his blankets on one side while Bowlaigs sleeps on t’other on the board floor, needin’ no blankets, havin’ advantage over the Major seein’ he’s got fur.

“The dispoote between Bowlaigs an’ the Major which results in both of ‘em cashin’ in, gets started erroneous. The Major—who’s sometimes too indolent an’ sometimes too drunk to make the play himse’f—instructs Bowlaig how to go over to the Red Light an’ fetch a bottle of rum. The Major would chuck a silver dollar in a little basket, an’ Bowlaigs would take it in his mouth same as you-all has seen dogs, an’ report with the layout to Black Jack. That gent would make the shift, bottle for dollar, an’ Bowlaigs would reepair back ag’in to the Major, when they’d both tank up ecstatic.

“One mornin’ after Bowlaigs an’ the Major’s been campin’ together about four months, they wakes up mighty jaded. They’ve had a onusual spree the evenin’ prior an’ they feels like a couple of sore-head dogs. The Major who needs a drink to line up for the day, gropes about in his blankets, gets a dollar, pitches it into the basket an’ requests Bowlaigs to caper over for the Willow Run. Bowlaigs is nothin’ loth; but as he’s about to pick up the basket, he observes that the dollar has done bounced out an’ fell through a crack in the floor. Bowlaigs sees it through the same crack where it’s layin’ shinin’ onder the house.

“Now this yere Bowlaigs is a mighty sagacious b’ar, also froogal, an’ so he goes wallowin’ forth plenty prompt to recover the dollar. The Major, who’s ignorant of what’s happened, still lays thar groanin’ in his blankets, feelin’ like a loser an’ nursin’ his remorse.

“The first p’inter the Major gets of a new deal in his destinies is a grand crash as the entire teepee upheaves an’ goes over, kerwallop! on its side, hurlin’ the Major out through the canvas. It’s the thoughtless Bowlaigs does it.

“When Bowlaigs gets outside, he finds he can’t crawl onder the teepee none, seein’ it’s settin’ too clost to the ground; an’ tharupon, bein’ a one-ideed b’ar, he sort o’ runs his right arm in beneath that edifice an’ up-ends the entire shebang, same as his old mother would a log when she’s grub-huntin’ in the hills. Bowlaigs is pickin’ up the dollar when the Major comes swarmin’ ’round the ruins of his outfit, a bowie in his hand, an’ him fairly locoed with rage.

“Shore, thar’s a fight, an’ the Major gets the knife plumb to Bowlaigs’s honest heart with the first motion. But Bowlaigs quits game; he turns with a warwhoop an’ confers on the Major a swat that would have broke the back of a bronco; an’ then he dies with his teeth in the Major’s neck.

Page 113

“The Major only lives a half hour after we gets thar. An’ it’s to his credit that he makes a statement exoneratin’ Bowlaigs. ‘I don’t want you-all gents,’ says the Major, ‘to go deem’in’ hard of this innocent b’ar, for whatever fault thar is, is mine. Since Texas Thompson picks up that dollar, this thing is made plain. What I takes for gratooitous wickedness on Bowlaigs’ part is nothin’ but his efforts to execoote my desires. Pore Bowlaigs! it embitters my last moments as I pictures what must have been his opinions of me when I lams loose at him with that knife! Bury us in one grave, gents; it’ll save trouble an’ show besides that thar’s no hard feelin’s between me an’ Bowlaigs over what—an’ give it the worst name—ain’t nothin’ but a onfortunate mistake.’”

CHAPTER XVI.

Toad Allen’s Elopement.

“Four days after that pinfeather person,” remarked the Old Cattleman, while refilling his pipe, “four days after that pinfeather person gains Old Man Enright’s consent to make use of Wolfville as a pivotal p’int in a elopement, him an’ his loved one comes bulgin’ into camp. They floats over in one of these yere mountain waggons, what some folks calls a ‘buckboard’; the pinfeather person’s drivin’. Between him an’ his intended—all three settin’ on the one seat—perches a preacher gent, who it’s plain from the look in his eyes is held in a sort o’ captivity that a-way. What nacherally bolsters up this theory is that the maiden’s got a six-shooter in her lap.

“Which if thar’s a wearied hectored gent in Arizona,’ observes the pinfeather party, as he descends outen the buckboard at the corral an’ tosses the reins to a hoss-hustler, ‘you-all can come weavin’ up an’ chance a yellow stack that I’m shore that gent.’

“The preacher sharp, who’s about as young an’ new as the pinfeather party, looks like he yoonites with him in them views. As they onload themse’fs, the pinfeather person waves his hand to where we-all’s gathered to welcome ‘em, an’ says by way of introduction:

“Gents, yere’s Abby; or as this Bible sport will say later in the cer’mony, Abigail Glegg.’

“Of course, we, who represents the Wolfville public, comports ourse’fs as becomes gents of dignity, an’ after takin’ off our sombreros, plumb p’lite, Enright su’gests the O.K. Restauraw as a base of op’rations.

“Don’t you-all reckon,’ says Enright to the pinfeather party, ‘that pendin’ hostilities, Abby had better go over to Missis Rucker’s? Thar she gets combs an’ breshes an’ goes over her make-up an’ straightens out her game.’

“The pinfeather party allows this yere is a excellent notion, only him an’ Abby don’t seem cl’ar as to what oughter be done about the preacher sharp.

“‘You see, he don’t want to come,’ explains the pinfeather party, ‘an’ it’s cost me an’ Abby a heap of trouble to round him up. I ain’t none shore but he seizes on the first chance to go stampedin’; an’ without him these rites we-all is bankin’ on would cripple down.’

Page 114

“No, friends,’ says the preacher sharp; ‘I will promise to abide by you an’ embrace no openin’ to escape. Since I’m here I will yoonite you-all as you wish; the more readily because I trusts that as man an’ wife you’ll prove a mootual restraint one upon the other; an’ also for that I deems you both in your single-footed capac’ty as a threat to the commoonity. Fear not; prepare yourse’fs an’ I’ll bring you together in the happy bonds of matrimony at the drop of the hat.’

“‘You notes, Dan,’ says Texas Thompson, who’s off to one side with Dan Boggs, ‘you notes he talks like his heart’s resentful. Them culprits has r’iled him up; an’ now he allows that the short cut to play even is to marry ‘em as they deserves. Which if you-all knows that former wife of mine, Dan, you’ll appreciate what I says.’

“Even after the preacher sharp gives his p’role, Abby acts plenty doobious. She ain’t shore it’s wise to throw him loose. It’s Doc Peets who reasshores her.

“‘My dear young lady,’ says Peets, at the same time bowin’ to the ground, ‘you may trust this maverick with me. I’ll pledge my word to prodooce him at the moment when he’s called for to make these nuptials win.’

“‘Which I’m aheap obleeged to you, Mister,’ says Abby to Peets, sizing him up approvin’; ‘an’ now that I’m convinced thar’s no chance of my footure sufferin’ from any absenteeism on the part of this pastor, I reckons I better go over, like you-all hints, an’ take a look or two in the glass. It ain’t goin’ to consome a moment, however,—this yere titivation I plans; an’ followin’ said improvements we-all better pull off this play some prompt. My paw,—old Ben Glegg,—is on our trail not five miles behind; he’ll land yere in half a hour an’ I ain’t none convinced he won’t land shootin’.’ An’ with this bluff, an’ confidin’ the preacher sharp to Peets, Abby goes curvin’ over to the O.K. Restauraw.

“However does this yere virgin look? Son, I hes’tates to deescribe a lady onless the facts flows fav’rable for her. Which I’ll take chances an’ lie a lot to say that any lady’s beautiful, if you-all will only give me so much as one good feacher to go on. But I’m powerless in the instance of Abby. That’s a blizzard effect to her face; an’ the best you can say is that if she don’t look lovely, at least she looks convincin’. The gnurliest pineknot burns frequent the hottest, an’ you can take my word for it, this Abby girl has sperit. Speakin’ of her appearance, personal, Missis Rucker—who’s a fair jedge—allows later to Enright that if Abby’s a kyard in a faro game, she’d play her to lose.

“‘Which she looks like a sick cat in the face, an’ a greyhoun’ in the waist,’ says Missis Rucker; ‘an’ I ain’t got mortal use for no sech spindlin’ trollops as this yere Abby girl is, nohow.’

“‘I don’t know,’ says Enright, shakin’ his head; ‘I ain’t been enriched with much practical experience with women, but I reckons now it’s love that does it. Whoever is that gent,

Peets, who says, “love is blind”? He knows his business, that sport does, an’ about calls the turn.’

Page 115

“I ain’t none so shore neither,’ says Peets. ‘Love may be blind, but somehow, I don’t sign up the play that way. Thar’s plenty of people, same as this pinfeather party, who discerns beauties in their sweethearts that’s veiled to you an’ me.’

“Of course, these yere discussions concernin’ Abby’s charms takes place weeks later. On the weddin’ day, Wolfville’s too busy trackin’ ’round an’ backin’ Abby’s game to go makin’ remarks. In this connection, however, it’s only right to Abby to say that her pinfeather beau don’t share Missis Rucker’s views. Although Abby done threatens him with a gun-play to make him lead her to the altar that time her old paw creases him, an’ he begins to wax low-sperited about wedlock, still, the pinfeather party’s enamoured of Abby an’ wropped up in her.

“Shore! says this pinfeather party to Texas Thompson, who, outen pity for him, takes the bridegroom over to the Red Light, to be refreshed; ‘shore! while thar’s no one that egreegious to go claimin’ that my Abby’s doo to grade as “cornfed,” all the same she’s one of the most fascinatin’ ladies,—that is, an’ give her a gun,—in all the len’t’h an’ breadth of Arizona. I knows; for I’ve seen my Abby shoot.’

“‘Excoose me, pard,’ says Texas, after surveyin’ the pinfeather party plenty sympathetic; ‘pardon my seemin’ roodness, if I confers with the barkeep aside. On the level! now,’ goes on Texas to Black Jack as he pulls him off to a corner an’ whispers so the pinfeather party don’t hear; ‘on the level, Jack! ain’t it my dooty—me who saveys what he’s ag’instant—to go warn this victim ag’in matrimony in all its horrors?’

“‘Don’t you do it!’ remonstrates Black Jack, an’ his voice trembles with the emphasis he feels; ‘don’t you do it none! You-all stand paws off! Which you don’t know what you’ll be answerable for! If this yere marriage gets broke off, who knows what new line of conduct this Abby maiden will put out. She may rope onto Boggs, or Peets, or mebbly even me. As long as Abby ain’t marryin’ none of us, Wolfville’s attitooode oughter be one of dignified nootrality.’

“Texas sighs deep an’ sad as he turns ag’in to the pinfeather party; but he sees the force of Black Jack’s argyments an’ yields without a effort to combat ’em.

“‘After all,’ says Texas bitterly to himse’f, ‘others has suffered; wherefore, then, should this jaybird gent escape?’ An’ with that, Texas hardens his heart an’ gives up any notion of the pinfeather person’s rescOO.

“Which Abby now issues forth of the O.K. Restauraw an’ j’ines the pinfeather party when he emerges from the Red Light.

“‘This sky pilot,’ says Dan Boggs, approachin’ the happy couple, ‘sends word by me that he’s over in the New York store. In deefault of a shore-enough sanchooary, he allows he yootilises that depot of trade as a headquarters; an’ he’s now waitin’, all keyed up an’

ready to turn his little game. Likewise, he's been complainin' 'round some querulous that you folks is harsh with him, an' abducts him an' threatens his skelp.'

Page 116

“Now, see thar!’ ejac’lates Abby, liftin’ up her hands. ‘Does mortal y’ears ever before listen to sech folly! I suppose he takes that gun I has as threats! I’m a onprotected young female, an’ nacherally, when I embarks on this yere elopement, I packs one of paw’s guns. Besides, this sweetheart of mine might get cold feet, an’ try to jump the game, an’ then I’d need said weepoon to make good my p’sition. But it’s never meant for that pastor! When I’m talkin’ to him to prevail on him to come along, an’ that gun in my hand at the time, I does sort o’ make references to him with the muzzle. But he needn’t go gettin’ birdheaded over it; thar’s nothin’ hostile meant!’

“Enright explains to him satisfact’ry,’ says Boggs. ‘An’ as you urges, it don’t mean nothin’. Folks on the brink of bein’ married that a-way gets so joyfully bewildered it comes mighty near the same as bein’ locoed.’

“Well,’ says the pinfeather party, who’s been stackin’ up a dust-cloud where some one’s gallopin’ along about three miles over on the trail, ‘if I’m any dab at a guess that’s your infuriated paw pirootin’ along over yonder, an’ we better get these matrimonial hobbles on without further onreasonable delays. That old murderer would plug me; an’ no more hes’tation than if I’m a coyote! But once I’m moved up into p’sition as his son-in-law, a feelin’ of nearness an’ kinship mighty likely op’rates to stay his hand. Blood’s thicker than water, an’ I’m in a hurry to get reelated to your paw.’

“But Enright has his notions of what’s proper, an’ he su’gests the services be delayed ontill old Glegg gets in. Meanwhile he despatches Jack Moore an’ Dan Boggs as a gyard of honor to lead old Glegg to our trystin’ place in the New York store.

“An’ the first thing you-all do, Jack,’ says Enright, as Jack an’ Dan rides away, ‘you get that outcast’s guns.’

“It ain’t no more’n time for one drink when Jack an’ Dan returns in company of this Glegg. He’s a fierce, gray old gent with a eye like a wolf. Jest before he arrives, Enright advises the pinfeather person an’ the bride Abby, to go camp in the r’ar room so the sudden sight of ’em won’t exasp’rate this parent Glegg to madness.

“Whatever’s the meanin’ of this yere concourse?’ demands old Glegg, as he comes into the New York store, an’ p’intin’ to where Peets an’ Texas an’ Cherokee Hall, along with Enright, is standin’ about; ‘an’ why does these hold-ups’—yere he indicates Dan an’ Jack,—’denoode me of my hardware, I’d like to know?’

“These gents,’ says Enright, ‘is a quorum of that respectable body known as the Wolfville Stranglers, otherwise a Vig’lance Committee; an’ your guns was took so as to redooce the chances of hangin’ you—the same bein’ some abundant, nacheral,—to minimum. Now who be you? also, what’s your little game?’

“‘My name’s Benjamin Glegg,’ responds old Glegg. ‘I owns the Sunflower brand an’ ranch. As for my game: thar’s a member of my fam’ly escapes this mornin’—comes streamin’ over yere, I onderstands—an’ I’m in the saddle tryin’ to round her up. Gents,’ concloods old Glegg, an’ he displays emotion, ‘I’m simply a harassed parent on the trail of his errant offspring.’

Page 117

“Then Enright makes old Glegg a long, soft talk, an’ seeks to imboo him with ca’mness. He relates how Abby an’ the pinfeather sport dotes on each other; an’ counsels old Glegg not to come pesterin’ about with roode objections to the weddin’.

“Which I says this as your friend,’ remarks Enright.

“It’s as the scripiter says,’ replies old Glegg, who’s mollified a lot, ’it’s as the good book says: A soft answer turneth away wrath; but more speshully when the opp’sition’s got your guns. I begins to see things different. Still, I hates to lose my Abby that a-way. Since my old woman dies, Abby, gents, has been the world an’ all to me.’

“Is your wife dead?” asks Enright, like he sympathises.

“Shore!’ says old Glegg; ‘been out an’ gone these two years. She’s with them cherubim in glory. But folks, you oughter seen her to onderstand my loss. Five years ago we has a ranch over back of the Tres Hermanas by the Mexico line. The Injuns used to go lopin’ by our ranch, no’t h an’ south, all the time. You-all recalls when they pays twenty-five dollars for skelps in Tucson? My wife’s that thrifty them days that she buys all her own an’ my child Abby’s clothes with the Injuns she pots. Little Abby used to scout for her maw. “Yere comes another!” little Abby would cry, as she stampedes up all breathless, her childish face aglow. With that, my wife would take her hands outen the wash-tub, snag onto that savage with her little old Winchester, and quit winner twenty-five right thar.’

“Which I don’t marvel you-all mourns her loss,’ says Enright consoln’ly.

“She’s shorely—Missis Glegg is—’ says old Glegg, shakin’ his grizzly head; ‘she’s shore the most meteoric married lady of which hist’ry says a word. My girl Abby’s like her.’

“But whatever’s your objection,’ argues Enright, ‘to this young an’ trusty sport who’s so eager to wed Abby?’

“I objects to him because he gambles,’ says old Glegg. ‘I can see he gambles by him pickin’ up the salt cellar between his thumb an’ middle finger with the forefinger over the top like it’s a stack of chips, one evenin’ when he stays to supper an’ I asks him to “pass the salt.” Then ag’in, he don’t drink; he tells me so himse’f when I invites him to libate. I ain’t goin’ to have no teetotal son-in-law around, over-powerin’ me in a moral way; I’d feel criticised an’ I couldn’t stand it, gents. Lastly, I don’t like this yere felon’s name none.’

“Whatever is his name, then?’ asks Enright. ‘So far he don’t confide no title to us.’

“An’ I don’t wonder none!’ says old Glegg. ‘It shows he’s decent enough to be ashamed. Thar’s hopes of him yet. Gents, his name’s Toad Allen. “Allen” goes, but, gents, I flies in the air at "Toad." Do you-all blame me? I asks you, as onbiased sports, would you set ca'mly down while a party named "Toad" puts himse'f in nom'nation to be your son-in-law?'

Page 118

“None whatever!” says Jack Moore; an’ Dan an’ Cherokee an’ Texas echoes the remark.

“You-all camp down yere with a tumbler of Valley Tan,’ says Enright, ‘an’ make yourse’f comfortable with my colleagues, while I goes an’ consults with our Gretna Green outfit in the r’ar room.’

“Enright returns after a bit, an’ his face has that air of se’f-satisfaction that goes with a gent who’s playin’ on velvet.

“Your comin’ son-in-law,’ says Enright to old Glegg, ‘defends himse’f from them charges as follows: He agrees to quit gamblin’; he says he lies a whole lot when he tells you-all he don’t drink none; an’ lastly, deplorin’ “Toad” as a cognomen, an’ explainin’ that he don’t assoome it of free choice but sort o’ has it sawed off on him in he’pless infancy, he offers—you consentin’ to the weddin’—to reorganise onder the name of “Benjamin Glegg Allen.”

“Son, this yere last proposal wins over old Glegg in a body. He not only withdraws all objections to the nuptials, but allows he’ll make the pinfeather sport an’ Abby full partners in the Sunflower. At this p’int, Enright notifies the preacher sharp that all depends on him; an’ that excellent teacher at once acquits himse’f so that in two minutes Wolfville adds another successful weddin’ to her list of triumphs.

“It ‘lustrates too,’ says Enright, when two days later the weddin’ party has returned to Tucson, an’ Wolfville ag’in sinks to a normal state of slumbrous ease, ‘it sort o’ ‘lustrates how open to argyments a gent is when once he’s lost his weepens. Now if he isn’t disarmed that time, my eloquence wouldn’t have had no more effect on old Glegg than throwin’ water on a drowned rat.”

CHAPTER XVII.

The Clients of Aaron Green.

“And so there were no lawyers in Wolfville?” I said. The Old Cattleman filled his everlasting pipe, lighted it, and puffed experimentally. There was a handful of wordless moments devoted to pipe. Then, as one satisfied of a smoky success, he turned attention to me and my remark.

“Lawyers in Wolfville?” he repeated. “Not in my day; none whatever! It’s mighty likely though that some of ‘em’s done come knockin’ along by now. Them jurists is a heap persistent, not to say diffoosive, an’ soon or late they shore trails into every camp. Which we’d have had ‘em among us long ago, but nacherally, an’ as far as argyments goes, we turns ‘em off. Se’f-preservation is a law of nacher, an’ these maxims applies to commoonities as much as ever they does to gents personal. Wherefore, whenever we notices a law wolf scoutin’ about an’ tryin’ to get the wind on us, we employs our talents for lyin', fills him up with fallacies, an' teaches him that to come to Wolfville is to put down his destinies on a dead kyard; an' he tharupon abandons whatever of plans he's harbourin' ag'in us, seein' nothin' tharin.

"It's jest before I leaves for the East when one of these coyotes crosses up with Old Man Enright in Tucson, an' submits the idee of his professional invasion of our camp.

Page 119

“Which I’m in the Oriental at the time,’ says Enright, when he relates about his adventure, ‘an’ this maverick goes to jumpin’ sideways at me in a friendly mood. Bein’ I’m a easy-mannered sport with strangers, he has no trouble gettin’ acquainted. At last he allows that he aims to pitch his teepee in Wolfville, hang out a shingle, an’ plunge into joorisprudence. “I was thinkin’,” says he, “of openin’ a joint for the practice of law. As a condition prior advised by the barkeep, an’ one which also recommends itse’f to me as dictated of the commonest proodence, I figgers on gainin’ your views of these steps.”

““You does well,” I replies, “to consult me on them p’int. I sees you’re shore a jo-darter of a lawyer; for you handles the language like a muleskinner does a blacksnake whip. But jest the same, don’t for one moment think of breakin’ in on Wolfville. That outfit don’t practice law none; she practices facts. It offers no openin’ for your game. Comin’ to Wolfville onder any conditions is ever a movement of gravity, an onless a gent is out to chase cattle or dandle kyards or proposes to array himse’f in the ranks of commerce by foundin’ a s’loon, Wolfville would not guarantee his footure any positive reward.”

““Then I jest won’t come a whole lot,” says this law sharp. Whereupon we engages in mootual drinks an’ disperses to our destinies.’

““What you tells this sport,’ says Texas Thompson, who’s listenin’ to Enright, ‘echoes my sentiments exact. Anything to keep out law! It ain’t alone the judgments for divorce which my wife grabs off over in Laredo, but it comes to me as the frootes of a experience which has been as wide as it has been plenty soon, that law is only another word for trouble in egreegious forms.’

““So I decides,’ retorts Enright. ‘Still, I’m proud to be endorsed by as good a jedge of public disorder an’ its preventives as Texas Thompson. Sech approvals ever tends to stiffen a gent’s play. As I states, I reeverses this practitioner an’ heads him t’other way. Wolfville is the home of friendly confidence; the throne of yoonity an’ fraternal peace. It must not be jeopardised. We-all don’t want to incur no resks by abandonin’ ourse’fs to real shore-enough law. It would debauch us: we’d get plumb locoed an’ take to racin’ wild an’ cimarron up an’ down the range, an’ no gent could foresee results. It’s better than even money, that with the advent of a law sharp into our midst, historians of this hamlet would begin their last chapter. They would head her: “Wolfville’s Last Days.”

““It’s twenty years ago,’ goes on Enright, ‘while I’m that season in Texas, that a sharp packs his blankets into Yellow City an’ puts it up he’ll practice some law. No; he ain’t wanted, but he never does give no gent a chance to say so. He comes trackin’ in onannounced, an’ the first we-all saveys, thar’s his sign a-swingin’, an’ ashoorin’ the sports of Yellow City of the presence of

Page 120

AARON GREEN, ESQ. ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.

“Nobody gets excited; for while we agrees to prevail on him ultimately to shift his camp a heap, the sityooation don’t call for nothin’ preecipitate. In fact, the idee of him or any other besotted person turnin’ loose that a-way in Yellow City, strikes us as loodicrous. Thar’s nothing for a law-gent to do. I’ve met up with a heap of camps in my day; an’ I’ve witnessed the work of many a vig’lance committee; but I’m yere to state that for painstakin’ ardour an’ a energy that never sleeps, the Stranglers of Yellow City is a even break with the best. They uses up a bale of half-inch rope a year; an’ as for law an’ order an’ a scene of fragrant peace, that outfit is comparable only with flower gyardens on a quiet hazy August afternoon.

“This Aaron Green who pronounces thus on Yellow City, intendin’ to foment litigations an’ go ropin’ ’round for fees, is plenty young; but he’s that grave an’ dignified that owls is hilarious to him. One after the other, he tackles us in a severe onmitigated way, an’ shoves his professional kyard onto each an’ tells him that whenever he feels ill-used to come a-runnin’ an’ have his rights preserved. Shore! the boys meets this law person half way. They drinks with him an’ fills him up with lickier an’ fictions alternate, an’ altogether regyards him as a mighty yoomerous prop’sition.

“Also, observin’ how tender he is, an’ him takin’ in their various lies like texts of holy writ, they names him “Easy Aaron.” Which he don’t look on “Easy Aaron” none too well as a title, an’ insists on bein’ called “Jedge Green” or even “Squar’ Green.” But Yellow City won’t have it; she sticks to “Easy Aaron”; an’ as callin’ down the entire camp offers prospects full of fever an’ oncertainty, he at last passes up the insult an’ while he stays among us, pays no further heed.

“Doorin’ the weeks he harbours with us, a gen’ral taste deevelops to hear this Easy Aaron’s eloquence. Thar’s a delegation waits on him an’ requests Easy Aaron to come forth an’ make a speech. We su’gests that he can yootilise the Burnt Boot Saloon as a auditorium, an’ offers as a subject “Texas: her Glorious Past, her Glitterin’ Present, an’ her Transcendent Footure!”

““Thar’s a topic!” says Shoestring Griffith to Easy Aaron—Shoestring is the cha’rman of the committee,—“thar’s a burnin’ topic for you! An’ if you-all will only come surgin’ over to the Burnt Boot right now while you’re warm for the event, I offers two to one you makes Cicero look like seven cents.”

“But Easy Aaron waves ’em arrogantly away. He declines to go barkin’ at a knot. He says it’ll be soon enough to onbuckle an’ swamp Yellow City with a flood of eloquence when proper legal o’casion enfolds.

Page 121

“In the room to the r’ar of the apartments where this Easy Aaron holds forth as a practitioner, thar’s a farobank as is nacheral enough. It’s about second drink time in the afternoon, bein’ a time of day when the faro game is dead. A passel of conspirators, with Shoestring Griffith in the lead, goes to this room an’ reelaxes into a game of draw. Easy Aaron can hear the flutter of the chips through the partition—the same bein’ plenty thin—where he’s camped like a spider in its web an’ waitin’ for some sport who needs law to show up. Easy Aaron listens careless an’ indifferent to Shoestring an’ his fellow blacklaigs as they deals an’ antes an’ raises an’ rakes in pots, an’ everybody mighty joobilant as is frequent over poker.

“Of a suddent, roars an’ yells an’ reecriminations yoosurps the place of merriment. Then the guns! An’ half the lead comes spittin’ an’ splittin’ through that intervenin’ partition like she’s kyardboard. The bullets flies high enough to miss Easy Aaron, but low enough to invoke a gloomy frame of mind.

“This yere artillery practice don’t continyoo long before Yellow City descends on Shoestring an’ his band of homicides; an’ when they’ve got ‘em sorted out, thar’s Billy Goodnight too defunct to skin, an’ Shoestring Griffith does it.

“Thar’s no time lost; the Stranglers convenes in the Burnt Boot, an’ exact jestice stands on expectant tiptoe for its prey. But Shoestring raises objections.

““Which before ever you-all reptiles takes my innocent life,” says Shoestring, “I wants a lawyer. I swings off in style or I don’t swing. You hear me! send across for Easy Aaron. You can gamble, I’m going to interpose a defense.”

““That’s but right,” says Waco Anderson who’s the chief of the Stranglers. “Assembled as we be to revenge the ontimely pluggin’ of the late Billy Goodnight, still this Shoestring may demand a even deal. If some gent will ramble over an’ round up Easy Aaron, as Shoestring desires, it will be regyarded by the committee, an’ this lynchin’ can then proceed.”

“Easy Aaron is onearthed from onder his desk where he’s still quiled up, pale an’ pantin’, by virchoo of the bullets. Jim Wise, who goes for him, explains that the shower is over; an’ also that he’s in enormous demand to save Shoestring for beefin’ Billy Goodnight. At this, Easy Aaron gets up an’ coughs ‘round for a moment or two, recoverin’ his nerve; then he buttons his surtoot, assoomes airs of sagacity, tucks the Texas Statootes onder his arm, reepairs to the Burnt Boot an’ allows he’s ready to defend Shoestring from said charges.

““But not onless my fees is paid in advance,” says this Easy Aaron.

“At that, we-all passes the hat an’ each chucks in a white chip or two, an’ when Waco Anderson counts up results it shows wellnigh eighty-five dollars. Easy Aaron shakes his head like it's mighty small; but he takes it an' casts himse'f loose. An', gents, he's shore verbose! He pelts an' pounds that committee with a hailstorm of observations, until all they can do is set thar an' wag their y'ears an' bat their eyes. Waco Anderson himse'f allows, when discussin' said oration later, that he ain't beheld nothin' so muddy an' so much since the last big flood on the Brazos.

Page 122

“After Easy Aaron holds forth for two hours, Waco preevails on him with a six-shooter to pause for breath. Waco’s tried twenty times to get Easy Aaron to stop long enough to let the Strangers get down a verbal bet, but that advocate declines to be restrained. He treats Waco’s efforts with scorn an’ rides him down like he, Easy Aaron, is a bunch of cattle on a stampede. Thar’s no headin’ or holdin’ him ontill Waco, in desperation, takes to tyrannisin’ at him with his gun.

““It’s this,” says Waco, when Easy Aaron’s subdooed. “If the eminent gent will quit howlin’ right yere an’ never another yelp, the committee is willin’ to throw this villain Shoestring loose. Every one of us is a slave to dooty, but we pauses before personal deestruction in a awful form. Billy Goodnight is gone; ondoubted his murderer should win the doom meted out for sech atrocities; but dooty or no dooty, this committee ain’t called on to be talked to death in its discharge. Yellow City makes no sech demands of its servants; wherefore, I repeats, that if this Easy Aaron sits mute where he is, we agrees to cut Shoestring’s bonds an’ restore him to that freedom whereof he makes sech florid use.”

“At this, Easy Aaron stands up, puffs out his chest, bows to Waco an’ the others, an’ evolves ’em a patronisin’ gesture signifyin’ that their bluff is called. Shoestring Griffith is saved.

“Doorin’ the subsequent line-up at the bar which concloods the ceremonies, Easy Aaron waxes indignant an’ is harrowed to observe Billy Goodnight imbibin’ with the rest.

““I thought you-all dead!” says Easy Aaron, in tones of wrathful reproach.

““Which I was dead,” says Billy, sort o’ apol’getic, “but them words of fire brings me to.”

“Easy Aaron don’t make no answer, but as he jingles the fee the sour look relaxes.

“As I remarks, Easy Aaron ain’t with us over long. Yellow City is that much worse off than Wolfville that she has a little old ’doby calaboose that’s been built since the old Mexico days. Thar’s no shore-enough judge an’ jury ever comes to Yellow City; an’ if the kyards was so run that we has a captive which the Strangers deems beneath ’em, he would be drug ’way over yonder to some county seat. It’s but fair to say that no sech contretemps presents itse’f up to the advent of Easy Aaron; an’ while thar’s now an’ then a small accoomulation of felons doorin’ sech seasons as the boys is off on the ranges or busy with the roundups, thar never fails to come a clean-up in plenty of time. The Strangers comes back; jesticte resoomes her sway, an’ the calaboose is ag’in as empty as a church.

“It befalls, however, that doorin’ the four or five weeks to follow the acquittal of that homicide Shoestring, an’ while Waco Anderson an’ a quorum of the committee is away teeterin’ about in their own affairs, the calaboose gets filled up with two white men and either four or five Mexicans—I can't say the last for shore, as I ain't got a good mem'ry for Mexicans. These parties is held for divers malefactions from shootin' up a Greaser dance-hall to stealin' a cow over on the Honeymoon.

Page 123

“To his joy, Easy Aaron is reetained to defend this crim’nal herd. It’s shore pleasant to watch him! I never sees the sport who’s that proudly content. Easy Aaron visits these yere clients of his every day; an’ when he has time, he walks out onto the plains so far that you-all can’t hear his tones, an’ rehearses the speeches he’s aimin’ to make when he gets them cut-throats before a jury. We-all could see him prancin’ up an’ down, tossin’ his hands an’ all in the most locoed way. As I states, he’s too far off to be heard none; but he’s in plain view from the front windows of the Burnt Boot, an’ we-all finds them antics plumb divertin.’

““These cases,” says Easy Aaron to me, for he’s that happy an’ enthoosiastic he’s got to open up on some gent; “these cases is bound to fix my fame as the modern Demosthenes. You knows how eloquent I am about Shoestring? That won’t be a marker to the oration I’ll frame up for these miscreants in the calaboose. For why? Shoestring’s time I ain’t organised; also, I’m more or less shook by the late bullets buzzin’ an’ hummin’ like a passel of bloo-bottle flies about my office. But now will be different. I’ll be ready, an’ I’ll be in a cool frenzy, the same bein’ a mood which is excellent, partic’lar if a gent is out to break records for rhetoric. I shore regyards them malefactors as so many rungs for my clamberin’ up the ladder of fame.” An’ with that this Easy Aaron goes pirootin’ forth upon the plains ag’in to resoome his talking at a mark.

“It’s mebbly a week after this exultation of Easy Aaron’s, an’ Waco Anderson an’ the others is in from the ranges. Yellow City is onusual vivacious an’ lively. You-all may jedge of the happy prosperity of local feelin’ when I assoores you that the average changed in at farobank each evenin’ ain’t less than twenty thousand dollars. As for Easy Aaron, he’s goin’ about in clouds of personal an’ speshul delight. It’s now crowdin’ along towards the time when him an’ his clients will adjourn over to that county seat an’ give Easy Aaron the opportoony to write his name on the deathless calendars of fame.

“But black disapp’intment gets Easy Aaron squar’ in the door. One morning he reepairs to the calaboose to consult with the felons on whose interests he’s ridin’ herd. Horror seizes him; he finds the cells as vacant as a echo.

““Where’s these clients?” asks Easy Aaron, while his face grows white.

““Vamosed!” says the Mexican who carries the calaboose keys; an’ with that he turns in mighty composed, to roll a cigarette.

““Vamoosed, where at?” pursoos Easy Aaron.

““Por el inferno!” says the Mexican; he’s got his cigarette lighted, an’ is puffin’ as contented as hoss-thieves. “See thar, Amigo!” goes on the Greaser, indicatin’ down the street.

“Easy Aaron gazes where the Mexican p’int’s, an’ his heart turns to water. Thar swayin’ an’ swingin’ like tassels in the mornin’ breeze, an’ each as dead as Gen’ral Taylor, he beholds his entire docket hangin’ to the windmill. Easy Aaron approaches an’ counts ’em up. Which they’re all thar! The Stranglers shorely makes a house cleanin’. As Easy Aaron looks upon them late clients, he wrings his hands.

Page 124

““Thar hangs fame!” says Easy Aaron; “thar hangs my chance of eminence! That eloquence, wherewith my heart is freighted, an’ which would have else declar’d me the Erskine of the Brazos, is lynched with my clients.” Then wheelin’ on Waco Anderson who strolls over, Easy Aaron demands plenty f’rocious: “Whoever does this dastard deed?”

““Which this agitated sport,” observes Waco coldly to Shoestring Griffith, who comes loungin’ up likewise, “asks whoever does these yere dastard deeds! Does you-all recall the fate, Shoestring, of the last misguided shorthorn who gives way to sech a query? My mem’ry is never ackerate as to trifles, an’ I’m confoosed about whether he’s shot or hung or simply burned alive.”

““That prairie dog is hanged a lot,” says Shoestring. “Which the boys was goin’ to burn him, but on its appearin’ that he puts the question more in ignorance than malice, they softens on second thought to that degree they merely gets a rope, adds him to the windmill with the others, an’ lets the matter drop.”

“Easy Aaron don’t crowd his explorations further. He can see thar’s what you-all might call a substratum of seriousness to the observations of Waco an’ Shoestring, an’ his efforts to solve the mystery that disposes of every law case he has, an’ leaves him to begin life anew, comes to a halt!

““But it lets pore Easy Aaron out. He borrys a hoss from the corral, packs the Texas Statootes an’ his extra shirt in the war-bags, an’ with that the only real law wolf who ever makes his lair in Yellow City, p’intz sadly no’tward an’ is seen no more. As he’s about to ride away, Easy Aaron turns to me. He’s sort o’ got the notion I ain’t so bad as Waco, Shoestring, an’ the rest. “I shall never return,” says Easy Aaron, an’ he shakes his head plenty disconsolate. “Genius has no show in Yellow City. This outfit hangs a gent’s clients as fast as ever he’s retained an’ offers no indoocements—opens no opoortoonities, to a ambitious barrister.””

CHAPTER XVIII

Colonel Sterett Relates Marvels.

“As I asserts frequent,” observed the Old Cattleman, the while delicately pruning a bit of wood he’d picked up on his walk, “the funds of information, gen’ral an’ speshul, which Colonel William Greene Sterett packs about would freight a eight-mule team. It’s even money which of ’em saveys the most, him or Doc Peets. For myself, after careful study, I inclines to the theery that Colonel Sterett’s knowledge is the widest, while Peets’s is the most exact. Both is college gents; an’ yet they differs as to the valyoo of sech sem’naries. The Colonel coppers colleges, while Peets plays ’em to win.

“Them temples of learnin’,’ says the Colonel, ’is a heap ornate; but they don’t make good.’ This is doubted by Peets.

“One evenin’ Dan Boggs, who’s allers tantalisin’ ‘round askin’ questions—it looks like a sleepless cur’osity is proned into Dan—ropes at Peets concernin’ this topic:

Page 125

“Whatever do they teach in colleges, Doc?’ asks Dan.

“They teaches all of the branches,” retorts Peets.

“An’ none of the roots,’ adds Colonel Sterett, ‘as a cunnin’ Yank once remarks on a o’casion sim’lar.’

“No, the Colonel an’ Peets don’t go lockin’ horns in these differences. Both is a mighty sight too well brought up for that; moreover, they don’t allow to set the camp no sech examples. They entertains too high a regyard for each other to take to pawin’ about pugnacious, verbal or otherwise.

“The Colonel’s information is as wide flung as a buzzard’s wing. Thar’s mighty few mysteries he ain’t authorised to eloocidate. An’ from time to time, accordin’ as the Colonel’s more or less in licker, he enlightens Wolfville on a multitoode of topics. Which the Colonel is a profound eddicational innocence; that’s whatever!

“It’s one evenin’ an’ the moon is swingin’ high in the bloo-black heavens an’ looks like a gold doorknob to the portals of the eternal beyond. Texas Thompson fixes his eyes tharon, meditative an’ pensive, an’ then he wonders:

“Do you-all reckon, now, that folks is livin’ up thar?’

“Whatever do you think yourse’f, Colonel?’ says Enright, passin’ the conundrum over to the editor of the Coyote. ‘Do you think thar’s folks on the moon?’

“Do I think thar’s folks on the moon?’ repeats the Colonel as ca’mly confident as a club flush. ‘I don’t think,—I knows.’

“Whichever is it then?’ asks Dan Boggs, whose ha’r already begins to bristle, he’s that inquisitive. ‘Simply takin’ a ignorant shot in the dark that away, I says, “No.” That moon looks like a mighty lonesome loominary to me.’

“Jest the same,’ retorts the Colonel, an’ he’s a lot dogmatic, ‘that planet’s fairly speckled with people. An’ if some gent will recall the errant fancies of Black Jack to a sense of dooty, I’ll onfold how I knows.

“It’s when I’m crowdin’ twenty,’ goes on the Colonel, followin’ the ministrations of Black Jack, ‘an’ I’m visitin’ about the meetropolis of Looeyville. I’ve been sellin’ a passel of runnin’ hosses; an’ as I rounds up a full peck of doubloons for the fourteen I disposes of, I’m feelin’ too contentedly cunnin’ to live. It’s evenin’ an’ the moon is shinin’ same as now. I jest pays six bits for my supper at the Galt House, an’ lights a ten cent seegyar —Oh! I has the bridle off all right!—an’ I’m romancin’ leesurly along the street, when I encounters a party who’s ridin’ herd on one of these yere telescopes, the same bein’ p’inted at the effulgent moon. Gents, she’s shorely a giant spy-glass, that instrooment is; bigger an' longer than the smokestack of any steamboat between Looeyville an' Noo Orleans. She's swung on a pa'r of shears; each stick a cl'ar ninety foot of Norway pine. As I goes pirootin' by, this gent with the telescope pipes briskly up.

""Take a look at the moon?"

Page 126

““No,” I replies, wavin’ him off some haughty, for that bag of doubloons has done puffed me up. “No, I don’t take no interest in the moon.”

“As I’m comin’ back, mebbly it’s a hour later, this astronomer is still swingin’ an’ rattlin’ with the queen of night. He pitches his lariat ag’in an’ now he fastens.

““You-all better take a look; they’re havin’ the time of their c’reers up thar.”

““Whatever be they doin’?”

““Tellin’ wouldn’t do no good,” says the savant; “it’s one of them rackets a gent has to see to savey.”

““What’s the ante?” I asks, for the fires of my cur’osity begins to burn.

““Four bits! An’ considerin’ the onusual doin’s goin’ for’ard, it’s cheaper than corn whiskey.”

“No; I don’t stand dallyin’ ‘round, tryin’ to beat this philosopher down in his price. That ain’t my style. When I’m ready to commit myse’f to a enterprise, I butts my way in, makes good the tariff, an’ no delays. Tharfore, when this gent names four bits, I onpouches the dinero an’ prepares to take a astronomic peek.

““How long do I gaze for four bits?” I asks, battin’ my right eye to get it into piercin’ shape.

““Go as far as you likes,” retorts the philosopher; “thar’s no limit.”

“Gents,’ says the Colonel, pausin’ to renoo his Valley Tan, while Dan an’ Texas an’ even Old Man Enright hitches their cha’rs a bit nearer, the interest is that intense; ‘gents, you-all should have took a squint with me through them lenses. Which if you enjoys said privilege, you can gamble Dan an’ Texas wouldn’t be camped ‘round yere none tonight, exposin’ their ignorance an’ lettin’ fly croode views concernin’ astronomy. That telescope actooally brings the moon plumb into Kaintucky;—brings her within the reach of all. You could stretch to her with your hand, she’s that clost.’

“But is thar folks thar?’ says Dan, who’s excited by the Colonel’s disclosures. ‘Board the kyard, Colonel, an’ don’t hold us in suspense.”

“Folks!’ returns the Colonel. ‘I wishes I has two-bit pieces for every one of ‘em! The face of that orb is simply festered with folks! She teems with life; ant-hills on election day means desertion by compar’son. Thar’s thousands an’ thousands of people, mobbin’ about indiscrim’nate; I sees ‘em as near an’ plain as I sees Dan.’

“An’ whatever be they doin’?’ asks Dan.

“‘They’re pullin’ off a hoss race,’ says the Colonel, lookin’ steady in Dan’s eye. ‘An’ you hears me! I never sees sech bettin’ in my life.’

“Nacherally we-all feels refreshed with these experiences of Colonel Sterett’s, for as Enright observes, it’s by virchoo of sech casooal chunks of information that a party rounds out a eddication.

“‘It ain’t what a gent learns in schools,’ says Enright, ‘that broadens him an’ stiffens his mental grip; it’s knowledge like this yere moon story from trustworthy sources that augments him an’ fills him full. Go on, Colonel, an’ onload another marvel or two. You-all must shore have witnessed a heap!’

Page 127

“Them few sparse facts touchin’ the moon,’ returns Colonel Sterett, ‘cannot be deemed wonders in any proper sense. They’re merely interestin’ details which any gent gets onto who brings science to his aid. But usin’ the word “wonders,” I does once blunder upon a mir’cle which still waits to be explained. That’s a shore-enough marvel! An’ to this day, all I can state is that I sees it with these yere eyes.’

“‘Let her roll!’ says Texas Thompson. ‘That moon story prepares us for anything.’

“‘Texas,’ observes the Colonel, a heap severe, ‘I’d hate to feel that your observations is the jeerin’ offspring of distrust.’

“‘Me distrust!’ replies Texas, hasty to squar’ himse’f. ‘I’d as soon think of distrustin’ that Laredo divorce of my former he’pmeet! An’ as the sheriff drives off two hundred head of my cattle by way of alimony, I deems the fact of that sep’ration as fixed beyond cavil. No, Colonel, you has my fullest confidence. I’d go doubtin’ the evenhanded jestic of Cherokee’s faro game quicker than distrustin’ you.’

“‘An’ I’m present to say,’ returns the Colonel mighty complacent, ‘that I looks on sech assoorances as complimentary. To show which I onhesitatin’ly reels off that eepisod to which I adverts.

“‘I’m only a child; but I retains my impressions as sharp cut an’ cl’ar as though she happens yesterday. It’s a time when one of these legerdemain sharps pastes up his bills in our village an’ lets on he’ll give a show in Liberty Hall on the comin’ Saturday evenin’. An’ gents, to simply read of the feats he threatens to perform would loco you! Besides, thar’s a picture of Satan, black an’ fiery an’ frightful, where he’s he’pin’ this gifted person to foist said mir’cles upon the age. I don’t exaggerate none when I asserts that the moment our village gets its eye on these three-sheets it comes to a dead halt.

“‘Old Squar’ Alexanders is the war chief of the hamlet, an’ him an’ the two other selectmen c’llects themse’fs over their toddies an’ canvasses whether they permits this wizard to give his fiendish exhibitions in our midst. They has it pro an’ con until the thirteenth drink, when Squar’ Alexanders who’s ag’in the wizard brings the others to his views; an’ as they staggers forth from the tavern it’s the yoonanimous decision to bar that Satan-aided show.

“‘“Witches, wizards, elves, gnomes, bull-beggars, fiends, an’ devils is debarred the Bloo Grass Country,” says Squar’ Alexanders, speakin’ for himse’f an’ his fellow selectmen, “an’ they’re not goin’ to be allowed to hold their black an’ sulphurous mass meetin’s yere.”

“‘It comes Saturday evenin’ an’ the necromancer is in the tavern eatin’ his supper. Shore! he looks like common folks at that! Squar’ Alexanders is waitin’ for him in the bar. When he shows up, carelessly pickin' his teeth, it's mebbby half a hour before the show, Squar' Alexanders don't fritter away no time, but rounds up the wizard.

Page 128

“““Thar’s no show which has Satan for a silent partner goin’ to cut itse’f loose in this village,” says Squar’ Alexanders.

“““What’s this talk about Satan?” responds the wizard. “I don’t savey no more about Satan than I does about you.”

“““Look at them bills,” says Squar’ Alexanders, an’ he p’int to where one is hangin’ on the barroom wall. It gives a picture of the foul fiend, with pitchfork, spear-head tail an’ all. “Whatever do you call that?”

“““That’s a bluff,” says the wizard. “If Kaintucky don’t get tangled up with Satan ontill I imports him to her fertile shores, you cimmarons may regyard yourse’fs as saved.”

“““Be you-all goin’ to do the sundry deeds you sets forth in the programmes?” asks Squar’ Alexanders after a pause.

“““Which I shorely be!” says the wizard, “an’ if I falls down or fails you can call me a ab’litionist.”

“““Then all I has to say is this,” returns Squar’ Alexanders; “no gent could do them feats an’ do ’em on the level. You’d have to have the he’p of demons to pull em off. An’ that brings us back to my first announcement; an’ stranger, your show don’t go.”

““At this the wizard lets on he’s lost patience with Squar’ Alexanders an’ declares he won’t discuss with him no more. Also, he gives it out that, Satan, or no Satan, he’ll begin to deal his game at eight o’clock.

“““Very well!” rejoins Squar’ Alexanders. “Since you refooses to be warned I shall shore instruct the constable to collar you on the steps of Liberty Hall.” As he says this, Squar’ Alexanders p’int across to Chet Kishler, who’s the constable, where he’s restin’ hhense’f in front of Baxter’s store.

““This yere Chet is a giant an’ clost onto eight foot high. It’s a warm evenin’, an’ as the wizard glances over at Chet, he notices how that offishul is lazily fannin’ himse’f with a barn-door which he’s done lifted off the hinges for that coolin’ purpose. The wizard don’t say nothin’, but he does turn a mite pale; he sees with half a eye that Satan himse’f would be he’pless once Chet gets his two paws on him. However, he assoomes that he’s out to give the show as per schedoole.

““It’s makin’ toward eight when the wizard lights a seegyar, drinks four fingers of Willow Run, an’ goes p’intin’ out for Liberty Hall. Chet gets up, hangs the barn-door back on its hinges, an’ sa’nters after. Squar’ Alexanders has posted Chet as to his dooties an’ his orders is to pounce on the necromancer if he offers to enter the hall. That’s how the cavalcade lines up: first, the wizard; twenty foot behind is Chet; an’ twenty foot behind our constable comes the public in a body.

“About half way to Liberty Hall the wizard begins to show nervous an’ oncertain. He keeps lookin’ back at Chet; an’ even in my childish simplicity I sees that he ain’t pleased with the outlook. At last he weakens an’ abandons his idee of a show. Gents, as I fills my glass, I asks you-all however now do you reckon that wizard beats a retreat?’

Page 129

“Thar’s no reply. Dan, Texas, an’ the others, while Colonel Sterett acquires his lick, shakes their heads dumbly as showin’ they gives it up.

“‘Which you’d shorely never guess!’ retorts the Colonel, wipin’ his lips. ‘Of a sudden, this wizard tugs somethin’ outen his pocket that looks like a ball of kyarpet-rags. Holdin’ one end, quick as thought he tosses the ball of kyarpet-rags into the air. It goes straight up until lost to view, onwindin’ itse’f in its flight because of the wizard holdin’ on.

“‘Gents, that ball of kyarpet-rags never does come down no-more! An’ it’s all done as easy as a set-lock rifle! The wizard climbs the danglin’ string of kyarpet-rags, hand over hand; then he drifts off an’ up’ards until he don’t look bigger than a bumble-bee; an’ then he’s lost in the gatherin’ shadows of the Jooly night.

“‘Squar’ Alexanders, Chet, an’ the village stands strainin’ their eyes for twenty minutes. But the wizard’s vamoused; an’ at last, when each is convinced tharof, the grown folks led by Squar’ Alexanders reepairs back into the tavern an’ takes another drink.’

“‘That’s a mighty marvellous feat your necromancer performs, Colonel,’ remarks Enright, an’ the old chief is grave as becomes the Colonel’s revelations; ‘he’s a shore-enough wonder-worker, that wizard is!’

“‘But I ain’t got to the wonders none as yet,’ reemonstrates the Colonel, who spunks up a bit peevish for him. ‘An’ from the frequent way wherein I’m interrupted, it don’t look much like I will. Goin’ sailin’ away into darklin’ space with that ball of enchanted kyarpet-rags,—that ain’t the sooper-nacheral part at all! Shore! ondoubted it’s some hard to do as a feat, but still thar’s other feachers which from the standp’int of the marvellous overpowers it like four kings an’ a ace. That wonder is this: It’s quarter to eight when the wizard takes his flight by means of the kyarpet-rags. Gents, at eight o’clock sharp the same evenin’ he walks on the stage an’ gives a show at St. Looey, hundreds of miles away.’”

CHAPTER XIX.

The Luck of Hardrobe.

“Which I tells this yere narrative first, back in one of them good old Red Light evenin’s when it’s my turn to talk.”

The Old Cattleman following this remark, considered me for a moment in silence. I had myself been holding the floor of discussion in a way both rambling and pointless for some time. I had spoken of the national fortune of Indians, their superstitions, their ill-luck, and other savage subjects various and sundry. My discourse had been remarkable perhaps for emphasis rather than accuracy; and this too held a purpose. It was calculated to rouse my raconteur and draw him to a story. Did what I say lack energy, he might go to sleep in his chair; he had done this more than once when I failed of interest. Also, if what I told were wholly true and wanting in ripple of romantic error, even though my friend did me the compliment of wakefulness, he would make no comment. Neither was he likely to be provoked to any recital of counter experiences. At last, however, he gave forth the observation which I quote above and I saw that I had brought him out. I became at once wordless and, lighting a cigar, leaned back to listen.

Page 130

"As I observes," he resumed, following a considerable pause which I was jealous to guard against word or question of my own; "I tells this tale to Colonel Sterett, Old Man Enright, an' the others one time when we're restin' from them Wolfville labours of ours an' renootin' our strength with nosepaint in the Red Light bar. Jest as you does now, Dan Boggs takes up this question of luck where Cherokee Hall abandons it, an' likewise the subject of savages where Texas Thompson lays 'em down, an' after conj'inin' the two in fashions I deems a heap weak, allows that luck is confined strictly to the paleface; aborigines not knowin' sufficient to become the target of vicissitoodes, excellent or otherwise.

"Injuns is too ignorant to have what you-all calls "luck,"" says Dan. 'That gent who's to be affected either up or down by "luck" has got to have some mental cap'ilities. An' as Injuns don't answer sech deescriptions, they ain't no more open to "luck" than to enlight'ment. "Luck" an' Injuns when took together, is preepost'rous! It's like talkin' of a sycamore tree havin' luck. Gents, it ain't in the deck! An' tharupon Dan seals his views by demandin' of Black Jack the bottle with glasses all 'round.

"When it comes to that, Boggs,' says Colonel Sterett, as he does Dan honour in four fingers of Valley Tan, 'an' talkin' of luck, I'm yere to offer odds that the most poignant hard-luck story on the list is the story of Injuns as a race. An' I won't back-track their game none further than Columbus at that. The savages may have found life a summer's dream prior to the arrival of that Eytalian mariner an' the ornery Spainiards he surrounds himse'f with. But from the looks of the tabs, the deal since then has gone ag'inst 'em. The Injuns don't win once. White folks, that a-way, is of themse'fs bad luck incarnate to Injuns. The savage never so much as touches 'em or listens to 'em or imitates 'em, but he rots down right thar. Which the pale-face shorely kills said Injuns on the nest! as my old grand-dad used to say.'

"When I recalls the finish of Hardrobe,' I remarks, sort o' cuttin' into the argyment, the same bein' free an' open to all, 'an' I might add by way of a gratootity in lines of proof, the finish of his boy, Bloojacket, I inclines to string my chips with Colonel Sterett.'

"Give us the details concernin' this Hardrobe,' says Doc Peets. 'For myse'f, I'm prone an' eager to add to my information touchin' Injuns at every openin'.'

"As Enright an' the rest makes expression sim'lar, I proceeds to onbuckle. I don't claim much for the tale neither. Still, I wouldn't copper it none for it's the trooth, an' the trooth should allers be played 'open' every time. I'll tell you-all this Hardrobe story as I onfolds it to them."

It was here my friend began looking about with a vaguely anxious eye. I saw his need and pressed the button.

"I was aimin' to summon my black boy, Tom," he said.

Page 131

When a moment later his favourite decanter appeared in the hands of one of the bar-boys of the hostelry, who placed it on a little table at his elbow and withdrew, the necessity for “Tom” seemed to disappear, and recurring to Hardrobe, he went on.

“Hardrobe is a Injun—a Osage buck an’ belongs to the war clan of his tribe. He’s been eddicated East an’ can read in books, an’ pow-wows American mighty near as flooent as I does myse’f. An’ on that last p’int I’ll take a chance that I ain’t tongue-tied neither.

“Which this yere is a long time ago. Them is days when I’m young an’ lithe an’ strong. I can heft a pony an’ I’m six foot two in my moccasins. No, I ain’t so tall by three inches now; old age shortens a gent up a whole lot.

“My range is on the south bank of Red River—over on the Texas side. Across on the no’t h is the Nation—what map folks call the ‘Injun Territory.’ In them epocks we experiences Injuns free an’ frequent, as our drives takes us across the Nation from south to no’t h the widest way. We works over the old Jones an’ Plummer trail, which thoroughfare I alloodes to once or twice before. I drives cattle over it an’ I freights over it,—me an’ my eight-mule team. An’ I shorely knows where all the grass an’ wood an’ water is from the Red River to the Flint Hills.

“Speakin’ of the Jones an’ Plummer trail, I once hears a dance-hall girl who volunteers some songs over in a Tucson hurdygurdy, an’ that maiden sort o’ dims my sights some. First, she gives us The Dying Ranger, the same bein’ enough of itse’f to start a sob or two; speshul when folks is, as Colonel Sterett says, ‘a leetle drinkin’.’ Then when the public clamours for more she sings something which begins:

“‘Thar’s many a boy who once follows the herds,
On the Jones an’ Plummer trail;
Some dies of drink an’ some of lead,
An’ some over kyards, an’ none in bed;
But they’re dead game sports, so with naught but good words,
We gives ‘em “Farewell an’ hail.”’

“Son, this sonnet brings down mem’ries; and they so stirs me I has to vamos that hurdygurdy to keep my emotions from stampedin’ into tears. Shore, thar’s soft spots in me the same as in oilier gents; an’ that melody a-makin’ of references to the old Jones an’ Plummer days comes mighty clost to meltin’ everything about me but my guns an’ spurs.

“This yere cattle business ain’t what it used to be; no more is cow-punchers. Things is gettin’ effete. These day it’s a case of chutes an’ brandin’ pens an’ wire fences an’ ten-mile pastures, an’ thar’s so little ropin’ that a boy don’t have practice enough to know how to catch his pony.

Page 132

"In the times I'm dreamin' of all this is different. I recalls how we frequent works a month with a beef herd, say of four thousand head, out on the stark an' open plains, ropin' an' throwin' an' runnin' a road-brand onto 'em. Thar's a dozen different range brands in the bunch, mebbby, and we needs a road-brand common to 'em all, so in case of stampedes on our trip to the no'th we knows our cattle ag'in an' can pick 'em out from among the local cattle which they takes to minglin' with. It's shorely work, markin' big strong steers that-away! Throwin' a thousand-pound longhorn with a six hundred-pound cayouse is tellin' on all involved an' a gent who's pitchin' his rope industrious will wear down five broncos by sundown.

"It's a sharp winter an' cattle dies that fast they simply defies the best efforts of ravens an' coyotes to get away with the supply. It's been blowin' a blizzard of snow for weeks. The gales is from the no'th an' they lashes the plains from the Bad Lands to the Rio Grande. When the storm first pronounces on the cattle up yonder in the Yellowstone country, the he'pless beasts turns their onprotestin' tails and begins to drift. For weeks, as I remarks, that tempest throws itse'f loose, an' night an' day, what cattle keeps their feet an' lives, comes driftin' on.

"Nacherally the boys comes with 'em. Their winter sign-camps breaks up an' the riders turns south with the cattle. No, they can't do nothin'; you-all couldn't turn 'em or hold 'em or drive 'em back while the storm lasts. But it's the dooty of the punchers to keep abreast of their brands an' be thar the moment the blizzard abates.

"It's shore a spectacle! For a wild an' tossin' front of five hundred miles, from west to east, the storm-beat herds comes driftin'. An' ridin' an' sw'arin' an' plungin' about comes with 'em the boys on their broncos. They don't have nothin' more'n the duds on their backs, an' mebbby their saddle blankets an' slickers. But they kills beef to eat as they needs it, an' the ponies paws through the snow for grass, an' they exists along all right. For all those snow-filled, wind-swept weeks they're ridin' an' cussin'. They comes spatterin' through the rivers, an' swoopin' an' whoopin' over the divides that lays between. They crosses the Heart an' the Cannon Ball an' the Cheyenne an' the White an' the Niobrara an' the Platte an' the Republican an' the Solomon an' the Smoky an' the Arkansaw, to say nothin' of the hundreds of forks an' branches which flows an' twines an' twists between; an' final, you runs up on boys along the Canadian who's come from the Upper Missouri. An' as for cattle! it looks like it's one onbroken herd from Fort Elliot to where the Canadian opens into the Arkansaw!

Page 133

"The chuck waggon of a thousand brands ain't two days behind the boys, an' by no time after that blizzard simmers, thar's camp-fires burnin' an' blinkin' between the Canadian an' the Red all along from the Choctaw country as far west as the Panhandle. Shore, every cow-puncher makes for the nearest smoke, feeds up an' recooperates; and then he with the others begins the gatherin' of the cattle an' the slow northern drive of the return. Which the spring overtakes 'em an' passes 'em on it's way to the no'th, an' the grass is green an' deep before ever they're back on their ranges ag'in.

"It's a great ride, says you? Son, I once attends where a lecture sharp holds forth as to Napoleon's retreat from Moscow. As was the proper thing I sets silent through them hardships. But I could, it I'm disposed to become a disturbin' element or goes out to cut loose cantankerous an' dispoatious in another gent's game, have showed him the French experiences that Moscow time is Sunday school excursions compared with these trips the boys makes when on the breath of that blizzard they swings south with their herds. Them yooths, some of 'em, is over eight hundred miles from their home-ranch; an' she's the first an' only time I ever meets up with a Yellowstone brand on the Canadian.

"You-all can put down a bet I'm no idle an' listless looker-on that blizzard time; an' I grows speshul active at the close. It behooves us Red River gents of cattle to stir about. The wild hard-ridin' knight-errants of the rope an' spur who cataracts themse'fs upon us with their driftin' cattle doorin' said tempest looks like they're plenty cap'ble of drivin' our steers no'th with their own, sort o' makin' up the deeficiencies of the storm.

"I brands over four thousand calves the spring before, which means I has at least twenty thousand head,—or five times what I brands—skallihootin' an' hybernatin' about the ranges. An' bein' as you-all notes some strong on cattle, an' not allowin' none for them Yellowstone adventurers to drive any of 'em no'th, I've got about 'leven outfits at work, overhaulin' the herds an' round-ups, an' ridin' round an' through 'em, weedin' out my brand an' throwin' 'em back on my Red River range. I has to do it, or our visitin' Yellowstone guests would have stole me pore as Job's turkey.

"Whatever is a 'outfit' you asks? It's a range boss, a chuck waggon with four mules an' a range cook, two hoss hustlers to hold the ponies, eight riders an' a bunch of about seventy ponies—say seven to a boy. These yere 'leven outfits I speaks of is scattered east an' west mebbly she's a-hundred miles along the no'th fringe of my range, a-combin' an' a-searchin' of the bunches an' cuttin' out all specimens of my brand when found. For myse'f, personal, I'm cavortin' about on the loose like, stoppin' some nights at one camp' an' some nights at another, keepin' cases on the deal.

Page 134

"It's at one of my camps one evenin' when I crosses up first with this yere Hardrobe. His boy, Bloojacket, is with him. Hardrobe himse'f is mebb'y goin' on fifty, while Bloojacket ain't more'n say twenty-one. Shore, they're out for cattle, too; them savages has a heap of cattle, an' since they finds their brands an' bunches same as the rest of us all tangled up with the Yellowstone aliens doorin' the blizzard, Hardrobe an' his boy Bloojacket rides up an' asks can they work partners with a outfit of mine.

"As I explains previous I'm averse to Injuns, but this Hardrobe is a onusual Injun; an' as he's settin' in ag'in'st a stiff game the way things is mixed up, an' bein' only him an' his boy he's too weak to protect himse'f, I yields consent, I yields the more pleasant for fear, —since I drives through the Osage country now an' then—this Hardrobe an' his heir plays even by stampedin' my cattle some evenin' if I don't. Thar's nothin' like a dash of se'f-interest to make a gent urbane, an' so I invites Hardrobe an' Bloojacket to make my camp their headquarters like I'd been yearnin' for the chance.

"As you-all must have long ago tracked up on the information, it's sooperfluous for me to su'gest that a gent gets used to things. Moreover he gets used frequent to things that he's born with notions ag'in'st; an' them aversions will simmer an' subside ontill he's friendly with folks he once honed to shoot on sight. It turns out that a-way about me an' this Hardrobe an' his boy Bloojacket. What he'ps, no doubt, is they're capar'soned like folks, with big hats, bloo shirts, trousers, cow-laiggin's, boots an' spurs, fit an' ready to enter a civilised parlour at the drop of the handkerchief. Ceasin' to rope for reasons, however, it's enough to say these savages an' me waxes as thick as m'lasses. Both of 'em's been eddicated at some Injun school which the gov'ment—allers buckin' the impossible, the gov'ment is,—upholds in its vain endeavours to turn red into white an' make folks of a savage.

"Bloojacket is down from the Bad Land country himself not long prior, bein' he's been servin' his Great Father as one of Gen'ral Crook's scouts in the Sittin' Bull campaign. This young Bloojacket,—who's bubblin' over with sperits—has a heap of interestin' stories about the 'Grey Fox.' It's doo to Bloojacket to say he performs them dooties of his as a scout like a clean-strain sport, an' quits an' p'int's back for the paternal camp of Hardrobe in high repoote. Thar's one feat of fast hard ridin' that Injun performs, which I hears from others, an' which you-all might not find oninterestin' if I saws it onto you.

Page 135

"Merritt with three hundred cavalry marches twenty-five miles one mornin'. Thar's forty Injun scouts along, among 'em this Bloojacket; said copper-hued auxiliaries bein' onder the command of Gen'ral Stanton, as game an' good a gent as ever packs a gun. It's at noon; Merritt an' his outfit camps at the Rawhide Buttes. Thar's a courier from Crook overtakes 'em. He says that word comes trailin' in that the Cheyennes at the Red Cloud agency is makin' war medicine an' about to go swarmin' off to hook up with Sittin' Bull an' Crazy Hoss in the Sioux croosades. Crook tells Merritt to detach a band of his scouts to go flutterin' over to Red Cloud an' take a look at the Cheyennes's hand.

"Stanton tells off four of his savages an' lines out with them for the Red Cloud agency; Bloojacket bein' one. From the Rawhide Buttes to the Red Cloud agency is one hundred even miles as a bullet travels. What makes it more impressive, them one hundred miles is across a trailless country, the same bein' as rocky as Red Dog whiskey an' rough as the life story of a mule. Which Stanton, Bloojacket an' the others makes her in twelve hours even, an' comes up, a crust of dust an' sweat, to the Red Cloud agency at midnight sharp. The Cheyennes has already been gone eight hours over the Great Northern trail.

"Stanton, who's a big body of a man an' nacherally tharfore some road-weary, camps down the moment he's free of the stirrups an' writes a letter on the agency steps by the light of a lantern. He tells Merritt to push on to the War Bonnet an' he'll head the Cheyennes off. Then he sends the Red Cloud interpreter an' four local Injuns with lead hosses to pack this information back to Merritt who's waitin' the word at the Rawhide Buttes. Bloojacket, for all he's done a hundred miles, declar's himse'f in on this second excursion to show the interpreter the way.

"'But you-all won't last through,' says Stanton, where he sets on the steps, quaffin' whiskey an' reinvig'ratin' himse'f.

"'Which if I don't, I'll turn squaw!' says Bloojacket, an' gettin' fresh hosses with the others he goes squanderin' off into the midnight.

"Son, them savages, havin' lead hosses, rides in on Merritt by fifth drink time or say, 'leven o'clock that mornin';—one hundred miles in 'leven hours! An' Bloojacket some wan an' weary for a savage is a-leadin' up the dance. Mighty fair ridin' that boy Bloojacket does! Two hundred miles in twenty-three hours over a clost country ain't bad! Which it's me who says so: an' one time an' another I shore shoves plenty of scenery onder the hoofs of a cayouse myse'f.

"About the foogitive Cheyennes? Merritt moves up to the War Bonnet like Stanton su'gests, corrals 'em, kills their ponies an' drives 'em back to the agency on foot. Thar's nothin' so lets the whey outen a hoss-back Injun like puttin' him a-foot: an the Cheyennes settles down in sorrow an' peace immediate.

Page 136

“While Hardrobe an’ his boy Bloojacket is with me, I’m impressed partic’lar by the love they b’ars each other. I never does cut the trail of a father an’ son who gives themse’fs up to one another like this Hardrobe an’ his Bloojacket boy. I can see that Bloojacket regyards old Hardrobe like he’s the No’t’h Star; an’ as for Hardrobe himse’f, he can’t keep his eyes off that child of his. You’d have had his life long before he’d let you touch a braid of Bloojacket’s long ha’r. Both of ’em’s plenty handsome for Injuns; tall an’ lean an’ quick as coyotes, with hands an’ feet as little as a woman’s.

“While I don’t go pryin’ ’round this Hardrobe’s private affairs—savages is mighty sensitive of sech matters—I learns, incidental, that Hardrobe is fair rich. He’s rich even for Osages; an’ they’re as opulent savages as ever makes a dance or dons a feather. Later, I finds out that Hardrobe’s squaw—Bloojacket’s mother—is dead.

“‘See thar?’ says Hardrobe one day. We’re in the southern border of the Osage country on the Grayhoss at the time, an’ he p’int to a heap of stones piled up like a oven an’ chimley, an’ about four foot high. I saveys thar’s a defunct Osage inside. You-all will behold these little piles of burial stones on every knoll an’ hill in the Osage country. ‘See thar,’ says this Hardrobe, p’intin’. ‘That’s my squaw. Mighty good squaw once; but heap dead now.’

“Then Hardrobe an’ Bloojacket rides over an’ fixes a little flag they’ve got in their war-bags to a pole which sticks up’ards outen this tomb, flyin’ the ensign as Injuns allers does, upside down.

“It’s six months later, mebbby—an’ it’s now the hard luck begins—when I hears how Hardrobe weds a dance-hall girl over to Caldwell. This maiden’s white; an’ as beautiful as a flower an’ as wicked as a trant’ler. Hardrobe brings her to his ranch in the Osage country.

“The next tale I gets is that Bloojacket, likewise, becomes a victim to the p’isenous fascinations of this Caldwell dance-hall damsel, an’ that him an’ Hardrobe falls out; Hardrobe goin’ on the warpath an’ shootin’ Bloojacket up a lot with a Winchester. He don’t land the boy at that; Bloojacket gets away with a shattered arm. Also, the word goes that Hardrobe is still gunnin’ for Bloojacket, the latter havin’ gone onder cover some’ers by virchoo of the injured pinion.

“As Colonel Sterett says, these pore aborigines experiences bad luck the moment ever they takes to braidin’ in their personal destinies with a paleface. I don’t blame ’em none neither. I sees this Caldwell seraph on one o’casion myse’f; she’s shore a beauty! an’ whenever she throws the lariat of her loveliness that a-way at a gent, she’s due to fasten.

“It’s a month followin’ this division of the house of Hardrobe when I runs up on him in person. I encounters him in one of the little jim-crow restauraws you-all finds now an’

then in the Injun country. Hardrobe an' me shakes, an' then he camps down ag'in at a table where he's feedin' on fried antelope an' bakin' powder biscuit.

Page 137

"I'm standin' at the counter across the room. Jest as I turns my back, thar's the crack! of a rifle to the r'ar of the j'int, an' Hardrobe pitches onto the floor as dead as ever transpires in that tribe. In the back door, with one arm in a sling, an' a gun that still smokes, ca'm an' onmoved like Injuns allers is, stands Bloojacket.

"My hand is forced,' he says, as he passes me his gun; 'it's him or me! One of us wore the death-mark an' had to go.'

"'Couldn't you-all have gone with Crook ag'in?' I says. 'Which you don't have to infest this yere stretch of country. Thar's no hobbles or sidelines on you; none whatever!'

"Bloojacket makes no reply, an' his copper face gets expressionless an' inscrootable. I can see through, however; an' it's the hobbles of that Caldwell beauty's innocence that's holdin' him.

"Bloojacket walks over to where Hardrobe's layin' dead an' straightens him round—laigs an' arms—an' places his big white cow hat over his face. Thar's no more sign of feelin', whether love or hate, in the eyes of Bloojacket while he performs these ceremonies than if Hardrobe's a roll of blankets. But thar's no disrespects neither; jest a great steadiness. When he has composed him out straight, Bloojacket looks at the remainder for mebbly a minute. Then he shakes his head.

"'He was a great man,' says Bloojacket, p'intin' at his dead father, with his good hand; 'thar's no more like him among the Osages.'

"Tharupon Bloojacket wheels on the half-breed who runs the deadfall an' who's standin' still an' scared, an' says:

"'How much does he owe?' Then he pays Hardrobe's charges for antelope steaks an' what chuck goes with it, an' at the close of these fiscal op'rations, remarks to the half-breed—who ain't sayin' no more'n he can he'p,—'Don't touch belt nor buckle on him; you-all knows me!' An' I can see that half-breed restauraw party is out to obey Bloojacket's mandates.

"Bloojacket gives himse'f up to the Osages an' is thrown loose on p'role. But Bloojacket never gets tried.

"A week rides by, an' he's standin' in front of the agency, sort o' makin' up some views concernin' his destinies. He's all alone; though forty foot off four Osage bucks is settin' together onder a cottonwood playin' Injun poker—the table bein' a red blanket spread on the grass,—for two bits a corner. These yere sports in their blankets an' feathers, an' rifflin' their greasy deck, ain't sayin' nothin to Bloojacket an' he ain't sayin' nothin' to them. Which jest the same these children of nacher don't like the idee of downin' your parent none, an' it's apparent Bloojacket's already half exiled.

“As he stands thar roominatin,’ with the hot August sun beatin’ down, thar’s a atmosphere of sadness to go with Bloojacket. But you-all would have to guess at it; his countenance is as ca’m as on that murderin’ evenin’ in the half-breed’s restauraw.

Page 138

"Bloojacket is still thar, an' the sports onder the cottonwood is still gruntin' joyously over their poker, when thar comes the patter of a bronco's hoofs. Thar's a small dust cloud, an' then up sweeps the Caldwell beauty. She comes to a pull-up in front of Bloojacket. That savage glances up with a inquirin' eye an' the glance is as steady as the hills about him. The Caldwell beauty—it seems she disdains mournin'—is robed like a rainbow; an' she an' Bloojacket, him standin', she on her bronco, looks each other over plenty intent.

"Which five minutes goes by if one goes by, an' thar the two stares into each other's eyes; an' never a word. The poker bucks keeps on with their gamble over onder the cottonwood, an' no one looks at the two or seems like they heeds their existence. The poker savages is onto every move; but they're troo to the Injun idee of p'liteness an' won't interfere with even so much as the treemor of a eyelash with other folks's plays.

"Bloojacket an' the Caldwell beauty is still gazin'. At last the Caldwell beauty's hand goes back, an' slow an' shore, brings to the front a eight-inch six-shooter. Bloojacket, with his eye still on her an' never a flicker of feelin', don't speak or move.

"The Caldwell beauty smiles an' shows her white teeth. Then she lays the gun across her left arm, an' all as solid as a church. Her pony's gone to sleep with his nose between his knees; an' the Caldwell beauty settles herse'f in the saddle so's to be ready for the plunge she knows is comin'. The Caldwell beauty lays out her game as slow an' delib'rate as trees; Bloojacket lookin' on with onwinkin' eye, while the red-blanket bucks plays along an' never a whisper of interest.

"'Which this yere pistol overshoots a bit!' says the Caldwell beauty, as she runs her eye along the sights. 'I must aim low or I'll shore make ragged work.'

"Bloojacket hears her, but offers no retort; he stands moveless as a stachoo. Thar's a flash an' a crash an' a cloud of bloo smoke; the aroused bronco makes a standin' jump of twenty foot. The Caldwell beauty keeps her saddle, an' with never a swerve or curve goes whirlin' away up the brown, burnt August trail, Bloojacket lays thar on his face; an' thar's a bullet as squar' between the eyes as you-all could set your finger-tip. Which he's dead—dead without a motion, while the poker bucks plays ca'mly on."

My venerable friend came to a full stop. After a respectful pause, I ventured an inquiry.

"And the Caldwell beauty?" I said.

"It ain't a week when she's ag'in the star of that Caldwell hurdygurdy where she ropes up Hardrobe first. Her laugh is as loud an' as' free, her beauty as profoundly dazzlin' as before; she swings through twenty quadrilles in a evenin' from 'Bow-to-your-partners' to 'All-take-a-drink-at-the-bar'; an' if she's preyed on by them Osage tragedies you shore can't tell it for whiskey, nor see if for powder an' paint."

Page 139

CHAPTER XX.

Colonel Coyote Clubbs.

"Which as a roole," said the Old Cattleman, "I speaks with deference an' yields respects to whatever finds its source in nacher, but this yere weather simply makes sech attitooode reedic'lous, an' any encomiums passed thar-on would sound sarkastic." Here my friend waved a disgusted hand towards the rain-whipped panes and shook his head. "Thar's but one way to meet an' cope successful with a day like this," he ran on, "an' that is to put yourse'f in the hands of a joodicious barkeep—put yourse'f in his hands an' let him pull you through. Actin' on this idee I jest despatches my black boy Tom for a pitcher of peach an' honey, an', onless you-all has better plans afoot, you might as well camp an' wait deevolvements, same as old man Wasson does when he's treed by the b'ar."

Promptly came the peach and honey, and with its appearance the pelting storm outside lost power to annoy. My companion beamingly did me honour in a full glass. After a moment fraught of silence and peach and honey, and possibly, too, from some notion of pleasing my host with a compliment, I said: "That gentleman with whom you were in converse last evening told me he never passed a more delightful hour than he spent listening to you. You recall whom I mean?"

"Recall him? Shore," retorted my friend as he recurred to the pitcher for a second comforter. "You-all alloodes to the little gent who's lame in the nigh hind laig. He appeals to me, speshul, as he puts me in mind of old Colonel Coyote Clubbs who scares up Doc Peets that time. Old Coyote is lame same as this yere person."

"Frighten Peets!" I exclaimed, with a great air; "you amaze me! Give me the particulars."

"Why, of course," he replied, "I wouldn't be onderstood that Peets is terrorised outright. Still, old Colonel Coyote shore stampedes him an' forces Peets to fly. It's either vamos or shoot up pore Coyote; an' as Peets couldn't do the latter, his only alternative is to go scatterin' as I states.

"This yere Coyote has a camp some ten miles to the no'th an' off to one side of the trail to Tucson. Old Coyote lives alone an' has built himse'f a dugout—a sort o' log hut that's half in an' half outen the ground. His mission on earth is to slay coyotes—"Wolfin" he calls it—for their pelts; which Coyote gets a dollar each for the furs, an' the New York store which buys 'em tells Coyote to go as far as he likes. They stands eager to purchase all he can peel offen them anamiles.

"No; Coyote don't shoot these yere little wolves; he p'isens 'em. Coyote would take about twelve foot, say, of a pine tree he's cut down—this yere timber is mebbly eight inches through—an' he'll bore in it a two-inch auger hole every two foot. These holes is some deep; about four inches it's likely. Old Coyote mixes his p'isen with beef tallow, biles them ingredients up together a lot, an' then, while she's melted that a-way, he pours it into these yere auger holes an' lets it cool. It gets good an' hard, this arsenic-tallow does, an' then Coyote drags the timber thus reg'lated out onto the plains to what he regyards as a eligible local'ty an' leaves it for the wolves to come an' batten on. Old Coyote will have as many as a dozen of these sticks of timber, all bored an' framed up with arsenic-tallow, scattered about. Each mornin' while he's wolfin', Coyote makes a round-up an' skins an' counts up his prey. An' son, you hear me! he does a flourishin' trade.

Page 140

"Why don't Coyote p'isen hunks of meat you asks? For obvious reasons. In sech events the victim bolts the piece of beef an' lopes off mebbby five miles before ever he succumbs. With this yere augur hole play it's different. The wolf has to lick the arsenic-tallow out with his tongue an' the p'isen has time an' gets in its work. That wolf sort o' withers right thar in his tracks. At the most he ain't further away than the nearest water; arsenic makin' 'em plenty thirsty, as you-all most likely knows.

"Old Coyote shows up in Wolfville about once a month, packin' in his pelts an' freightin' over to his wickeyup whatever in the way of grub he reckons he needs. Which, if you was ever to see Coyote once, you would remember him. He's shore the most egreegious person, an' in appearance is a cross between a joke, a disaster an' a cur'osity. I don't reckon now pore Coyote ever sees the time when he weighs a hundred pound; an' he's grizzled an' dried an' lame of one laig, while his face is like a squinch owl's face—kind o' wide-eyed an' with a expression of ignorant wonder, as if life is a never-endin' surprise party.

"Most likely now what fixes him firmest in your mind is, he don't drink none. He declines nosepaint in every form; an' this yere abstinence, the same bein' yoonique in Wolfville, together with Coyote conductin' himse'f as the p'litest an' best-mannered gent to be met with in all of Arizona, is apt to introode on your attention. Colonel Sterett once mentions Coyote's manners.

"Which he could give Chesterfield, Coyote could, kyards an' spades,' observes the Colonel. I don't, myse'f, know this Chesterfield none, but I can see by the fashion in which Colonel Sterett alloodes to him that he's a Kaintuckian an' a jo-darter on manners an' etiquette.

"As I says, a pecooliar trait of Coyote is that he won't drink nothin' but water. Despite this blemish, however, when the camp gets so it knows him it can't he'p but like him a heap. He's so quiet an' honest an' ignorant an' little an' lame, an' so plumb p'lite besides, he grows on you. I can almost see the weasened old outlaw now as he comes rockin' into town with his six or seven burros packed to their y'ears with pelts!

“This time when Coyote puts Doc Peets in a toomult is when he’s first pitched his dug-out camp an’ begins to honour Wolfville with his visits. As yet none of us appreciates pore Coyote at his troo worth, an’ on account of them guileless looks of his sech humourists as Dan Boggs an’ Texas Thompson seizes on him as a source of merriment.

Page 141

“It’s Coyote’s third expedition into town, an’ he’s hoverin’ about the New York store waitin’ for ‘em to figger up his wolf pelts an’ cut out his plunder so he freights it back to his dug-out. Dan an’ Texas is also procrastinatin’ ‘round, an’ they sidles up allowin’ to have their little jest. Old Coyote don’t know none of ‘em—quiet an’ sober an’ p’lite like I relates, he’s slow gettin’ acquainted—an’ Dan an’ Texas, as well as Doc Peets, is like so many onopened books to him. For that matter, while none of them pards of mine knows Coyote, they manages to gain a sidelight on some of his characteristics before ever they gets through. Doc Peets later grows ashamed of the part he plays, an’ two months afterwards when Coyote is chewed an’ clawed to a standstill by a infooriated badger which he mixes himse’f up with, Peets binds him up an’ straightens out his game, an’ declines all talk of recompense complete.

“‘It’s merely payin’ for that outrage I attempts on your feelin’s when you rebookes me so handsome,’ says Peets, as he turns aside Coyote’s dinero an’ tells him to replace the same in his war-bags.

“However does Coyote get wrastled by that badger? It’s another yarn, but at least she’s brief an’ so I’ll let you have it. Badgers, you saveys, is sour, sullen, an’ lonesome. An’ a badger’s feelin’s is allers hurt about something; you never meets up with him when he ain’t hostile an’ half-way bent for war. Which it’s the habit of these yere morose badgers to spend a heap of their time settin’ half in an’ half outen their holes, considerin’ the scenery in a dissatisfied way like they has some grudge ag’inst it. An’ if you approaches a badger while thus employed he tries to run a blazer on you; he’ll show his teeth an’ stand pat like he meditates trouble. When you’ve come up within thirty feet he changes his mind an’ disappears back’ard into his hole; but all malignant an’ reluctant.

“Now, while Coyote saveys wolves, he’s a heap dark on badgers that a-way. An’ also thar’s a badger who lives clost to Coyote’s dug-out. One day while this yere ill-tempered anamile is cocked up in the mouth of his hole, a blinkin’ hatefully at surroundin’ objects. Coyote cuts down on him with a Sharp’s rifle he’s got kickin’ about his camp an’ turns that weepoon loose.

“He misses the badger utter, but he don’t know it none. Comin’ to the hole, Coyote sees the badger kind o’ quiled up at the first bend in the burrow, an’ he exultin’ly allows he’s plugged him an’ tharupon reaches in to retrieve his game. That’s where Coyote makes the mistake of his c’reer; that’s where he drops his watermelon!

“That badger’s alive an’ onhurt an’ as hot as a lady who’s lost money. Which he’s simply retired a few foot into his house to reconsider Coyote an’ that Sharp’s rifle of his. Nacherally when the ontaught Coyote lays down on his face an’ goes to gropin’ about to fetch that badger forth the latter never hes’tates. He grabs Coyote’s hand with tooth and claw, braces his back ag’in the ceilin’ of his burrow an’ stands pat.

Page 142

“Badgers is big people an’ strong as ponies too. An’ obdurate! Son, a badger is that decided an’ set in his way that sech feather-blown things as hills is excitable an’ vacillatin’ by comparison. This yere particular badger has the fam’ly weaknesses fully developed, an’ the moment he cinches onto Coyote, he shore makes up his mind never to let go ag’in in this world nor the next.

“As I tells you, Coyote is little an’ weak, an’ he can no more move that hardened badger, nor yet fetch himse’f loose, than he can sprout wings an’ soar. That badger’s got Coyote; thar he holds him prone an’ flat ag’in the ground for hours. An’ at last Coyote swoons away.

“Which he’d shore petered right thar, a prey to badgers, if it ain’t for a cowpuncher—he’s one of Old Man Enright’s riders—who comes romancin’ along an’ is attracted to the spot by some cattle who’s prancin’ an’ waltzin’ about, sizin’ Coyote up as he’s layin’ thar, an’ snortin’ an’ curvin’ their tails in wonder at the spectacle. Which the visitin’ cow sharp, seein’ how matters is headed, shoves his six-shooter in along-side of Coyote’s arm, drills this besotted badger, an’ Coyote is saved. It’s a case of touch an’ go at that. But to caper back to where we leaves Dan an’ Texas on the verge of them jocyoolarities.

““No, gentlemen,’ Coyote is sayin’, in response to some queries of Dan an’ Texas; ‘I’ve wandered hither an’ yon a heap in my time, an’ now I has my dug-out done, an’ seein’ wolves is oncommon plenty, I allows I puts in what few declinin’ days remains to me right where I be. I must say, too, I’m pleased with Wolfville an’ regyards myse’f as fortunate an’ proud to be a neighbour to sech excellent folks as you-all.”

““Which I’m shore sorry a lot,’ says Dan, ‘to hear you speak as you does. Thar’s a rapacious sport about yere who the instant he finds how you makes them dug-out improvements sends on an’ wins out a gov’ment patent an’ takes title to that identical quarter-section which embraces your camp. Now he’s allowin’ to go squanderin’ over to Tucson an’ get a docyment or two from the judge an’ run you out.’

“Son, this pore innocent Coyote takes in Dan’s fictions like so much spring water; he believes ‘em utter. But the wonder is to see how he changes. He don’t say nothin’, but his-eyes sort o’ sparks up an’ his face gets as gray as his ha’r. It’s now that Doc Peets comes along.

““Yere is this devourin’ scoundrel now,’ says Texas Thompson, p’intin’ to Peets. ‘You-all had better talk to him some about it.’ Then turnin’ to Peets with a wink, Texas goes on: ‘Me an’ Mister Boggs is tellin’ our friend how you gets a title to that land he’s camped on, an’ that you allows you’ll take possession mebbly next week.’

““Why, shore,’ says Peets, enterin’ into the sperit of the hoax, an’ deemin’ it a splendid joke; ‘be you-all the maverick who’s on that quarter-section of mine?’

“Which I’m Colonel Coyote Clubbs,’ says Coyote, bowin’ low while his lips trembles, ‘an’ I’m at your service.’

Page 143

“Well,’ says Peets, ‘it don’t make much difference about your name, all you has to do is hit the trail. I needs that location you’ve done squatted on because of the water.’

“An’ do I onderstand, sir,’ says Coyote some agitated, ‘that you’ll come with off’cers to put me outen my dug-out?’

“Shore,’ says Peets, in a case-hardened, pitiless tone, ‘an’ why not? Am I to be debarred of my rights by some coyote-slaughterin’ invader an’ onmurmurin’ly accede tharto? Which I should shore say otherwise.’

“Then I yereby warns you, sir,’ says Coyote, gettin’ pale as paper. ‘I advises you to bring your coffin when you comes for that land, for I’ll down you the moment you’re in range.’

“In which case,’ says Peets, assoomin’ airs of blood-thirsty trucyoolence, ‘thar’s scant use to wait. If thar’s goin’ to be any powder burnin’ we might better burn it now.’

“I’ve no weepoon, sir,’ says Coyote, limpin’ about in a circle, ‘but if ary of these gentlemen will favour me with a gun I’ll admire to put myse’f in your way.’

“Which the appearance of Coyote when he utters this, an’ him showin’ on the surface about as war-like as a prairie-dog, convulses Dan an’ Texas. It’s all they can do to keep a grave front while pore Coyote in his ignorance calls the bluff of one of the most deadly an’ gamest gents who ever crosses the Missouri—one who for nerve an’ finish is a even break with Cherokee Hall.

“Follow me,’ says Peets, frownin’ on Coyote like a thunder cloud; ‘I’ll equip you with a weepoon myse’f. I reckons now that your death an’ deestruction that a-way is after all the best trail out.

“Peets moves off a heap haughty, an’ Coyote limps after him. Peets goes over where his rooms is at. ‘Take a cha’r,’ says Peets, as they walks in, an’ Coyote camps down stiffly in a seat. Peets crosses to a rack an’ searches down a 8-inch Colt’s. Then he turns towards Coyote. ‘This yere discovery annoys me,’ says Peets, an’ his words comes cold as ice, ‘but now we’re assembled, I finds that I’ve only got one gun.’

“Well, sir,’ says Coyote, gettin’ up an’ limpin’ about in his nervous way, his face workin’ an’ the sparks in his eyes beginnin’ to leap into flames; ‘well, sir, may I ask what you aims to propose?’

“I proposes to beef you right yere,’ says Peets, as f’rocious as a grizzly. ‘Die, you miscreant!’ An’ Peets throws the gun on Coyote, the big muzzle not a foot from his heart.

“Peets, as well as Dan an’ Texas, who’s enjoyin’ the comedy through a window, ondoubted looks for Coyote to wilt without a sigh. An’ if he had done so, the joke would have been both excellent an’ complete. But Coyote never wilts. He moves so quick no one ever does locate the darkened recess of his garments from which he lugs out that knife; the first p’inter any of ’em gets is that with the same breath wherein Peets puts the six-shooter on him, Coyote’s organised in full with a bowie.

Page 144

“Make a centre shot, you villyun!’ roars Coyote, an’ straight as adders he la’nches himse’f at Peets’s neck.

“Son, it’s the first an’ last time that Doc Peets ever runs. An’ he don’t run now, he flies. Peets comes pourin’ through the door an’ into the street, with Coyote frothin’ after him not a yard to spar’. The best thing about the whole play is that Coyote’s a cripple; it’s this yere element of lameness that lets Peets out. He can run thirty foot to Coyote’s one, an’ the result occurs in safety by the breadth of a ha’r.

“It takes two hours to explain to Coyote that this eepisod is humour, an’ to ca’m him an’ get his emotions bedded down. At last, yoonited Wolfville succeeds in beatin’ the trooth into him, an’ he permits Peets to approach an’ apol’gise.

“An’ you can gamble all the wolves you’ll ever kill an’ skin,’ says Doc Peets, as he asks Coyote to forgive an’ forget, ‘that this yere is the last time I embarks in jests of a practical character or gives way to humour other than the strickly oral kind. Barkeep, my venerated friend, yere will have a glass of water; but you give me Valley Tan.”

CHAPTER XXI.

Long Ago on the Rio Grande.

“Which books that a-way,” observed the Old Cattleman, “that is, story-books, is onfrequent in Wolfville.” He was curiously examining Stevenson’s “Treasure Island,” that he had taken from my hand. “The nearest approach to a Wolfville cirk’latin’ library I recalls is a copy of ‘Robinson Crusoe,’ an’ that don’t last long, as one time when Texas Thompson leaves it layin’ on a cha’r outside while he enters the Red Light for the usual purpose, a burro who’s loafin’ loose about the street, smells it, tastes it, approoves of it, an’ tharupon devours it a heap. After that I don’t notice no volumes in the outfit, onless it’s some drug books that Doc Peets has hived over where he camps. It’s jest as well, for seein’ a gent perusin’ a book that a-way, operates frequent to make Dan Boggs gloomy; him bein’ oneddedicated like I imparts to you-all yeretofore.

“Whatever do we do for amoosements? We visits the Dance Hall; not to dance, sech frivol’ties bein’ for younger an’ less dignified sports. We goes over thar more to give our countenance an’ endorsements to Hamilton who runs the hurdy-gurdy, an’ who’s a mighty proper citizen. We says ‘How!’ to Hamilton, libates, an’ mebbly watches ‘em ‘balance all,’ or ‘swing your partners,’ a minute or two an’ then proceeds. Then thar’s Huggins’s Bird Cage Op’ry House, an’ now an’ then we-all floats over thar an’ takes in the dramy. But mostly we camps about the Red Light; the same bein’ a common stampin’-ground. It’s thar we find each other; an’ when thar’s nothin’ doin’, we upholds the hours tellin’ tales an’ gossipin’ about cattle an’ killin’s, an’ other topics common to a cow country. Now an' then, thar's a visitin' gent in town who can onfold a story. In sech event he's made a lot of, an' becomes promptly the star of the evenin'.

Page 145

“Thar’s a Major Sayres we meets up with once in Wolfville,—he’s thar on cattle matters with old man Enright—an’ I recalls how he grows absorbin’ touchin’ some of his adventures in that War.

“Thar’s a passel of us, consistin’ of Boggs, Tutt, Cherokee, an’ Texas Thompson, an’ me, who’s projectin’ ’round the Red Light when Enright introdooes this Major Sayres. Him an’ Enright’s been chargin’ about over by the Cow Springs an’ has jest rode in. This Major is easy an’ friendly, an’ it ain’t longer than the third drink before he shows symptoms of bein’ willin’ to talk.

“‘Which I ain’t been in the saddle so long,’ says the Major, while him an’ Enright is considerin’ how far they goes since sunup, ’since Mister Lee surrenders.’

“‘You takes your part, Major,’ says Enright, who’s ropin’ for a reminiscence that a-way, ‘in the battles of the late war, I believes.’

“‘I should shorely say so,’ says the Major. ‘I’m twenty-two years old, come next grass, when Texas asserts herse’f as part of the confed’racy, an’ I picks up a hand an’ plays it in common with the other patriotic yooths of my region. Yes, I enters the artillery, but bein’ as we don’t have no cannon none at the jump I gets detailed as a aide ontill something resemblin’ a battery comes pokin’ along. I goes through that carnage from soup to nuts, an’ while I’m shot up some as days go by, it’s allers been a source of felic’tation to me, personal, that I never slays no man myse’f. Shore, I orders my battery to fire, later when I gets a battery; an’ ondoubted the bombardments I inaug’rates adds to an’ swells the ghost census right along. But of my own hand it’s ever been a matter of congratoolations to me that I don’t down nobody an’ never takes a skelp.

“‘As I turns the leaves of days that’s gone I don’t now remember but one individyooal openin’ for blood that ever presents itse’f. An’ after considerin’ the case in all its b’arin’s, I refooses the opportunity an’ the chance goes glidin’ by. As a result thar’s probably one more Yank than otherwise; an’ now that peace is yere an’ we-all is earnestly settlin’ to be brothers No’t’h and South, I regyards that extra Yank as a advantage. Shore, he’s a commoonal asset.’

“‘Tell us how you fails to c’llect this Yankee, Major,’ says Faro Nell: ‘which I’m plumb interested every time that some one don’t get killed.’

“‘I reecounts that exploit with pleasure,’ says, the Major, bowin’ p’lite as Noo Orleans first circles an’ touchin’ his hat to Nell. ‘It’s one day when we’re in a fight. The line of battle is mebbly stretched out half a mile. As I su’gests, I’m spraddlin’ ’round permiscus with no stated arena of effort, carryin’ despatches an’ turnin’ in at anything that offers, as handy as I can. I’m sent final with a dispatch from the left to the extreme right of our lines.

Page 146

“When we goes into this skirmmage we jumps the Lincoln people somewhat onexpected. They has their blankets an’ knapsacks on, an’ as they frames themse’fs up for the struggle they casts off this yere baggage, an’ thar it lays, a windrow of knapsacks, blankets an’ haversacks, mighty near a half mile in length across the plain. As we-all rebs has been pushin’ the Yankees back a lot, this windrow is now to our r’ar, an’ I goes canterin’ along it on my mission to the far right.

“Without a word of warnin’ a Yank leaps up from where he’s been burrowin’ down among this plunder an’ snaps a Enfield rifle in my face. I pulls my boss back so he’s almost settin’ on his hocks; an’ between us, gents, that onexpected sortie comes mighty near surprisin’ me plumb out of the saddle. But the Enfield don’t go off none; an’ with that the Yank throws her down an’ starts to’ run. He shorely does vamos with the velocity of jackrabbits!

“As soon as me an’ my hoss recovers our composure we gives chase. Bein’ the pore Yank is afoot, I runs onto him in the first two hundred yards. As I comes up, I’ve got my six-shooter in my hand. I puts the muzzle on him, sort o’ p’intin’ between the shoulders for gen’ral results; but when it comes to onhookin’ my weepson I jest can’t turn the trick. It’s too much like murder. Meanwhile, the flyin’ Yank is stampedin’ along like he ain’t got a thing on his mind an’ never turnin’ his head.

“I calls on him to surrender. He makes a roode remark over his shoulder at this military manooover an’ pelts ahead all unabated. Then I evolves a scheme to whack him on the head with my gun. I pushes my hoss up ontill his nose is right by that No’thern party’s y’ear. Steadyin’ myse’f, I makes a wallop at him an’ misses. I invests so much soul in the blow that missin’ that a-way, I comes within’ a ace of clubs of goin’ off my hoss an’ onto my head. An’ still that exasperatin’ Yank goes rackin’ along, an’ if anything some faster than before. At that I begins to lose my temper ag’in.

“I reorganises,—for at the time I nearly makes the dive outen the stirrups, I pulls the hoss to a stop,—an’ once more takes up the pursoot of my locoed prey. He’s a pris’ner fair enough, only he’s too obstinate to admit it. As I closes on him ag’in, I starts for the second time to drill him, but I can’t make the landin’. I’m too young; my heart ain’t hard enough; I rides along by him for a bit an’ for the second time su’gests that he surrender. The Yank ignores me; he keeps on runnin’.

“Which sech conduct baffles me! It’s absolootely ag’in military law. By every roole of the game that Yank’s my captive; but defyin’ restraint he goes caperin’ on like he’s free.

“As I gallops along about four foot to his r’ar I confess I begins to feel a heap he’pless about him. I’m too tender to shoot, an’ he won’t stop, an’ thar we be.

Page 147

“While I’m keepin’ him company on this retreat, I reflects that even if I downs him, the war would go on jest the same; it wouldn’t stop the rebellion none, nor gain the South her independence. The more I considers, too, the war looks bigger an’ the life of this flyin’ Yank looks smaller. Likewise, it occurs to me that he’s headed no’t’h. If he keeps up his gait an’ don’t turn or twist he’ll have quitted Southern territory by the end of the week.

“After makin’ a complete round-up of the sityooation I begins to lose interest in this Yank; an’ at last I leaves him, racin’ along alone. By way of stim’lant, as I pauses I cracks off a couple of loads outen my six-shooter into the air. They has a excellent effect; from the jump the Yank makes at the sound I can see the shots puts ten miles more run into him shore. He keeps up his gallop ontill he’s out of sight, an’ I never after feasts my eyes on him.

“Which I regyards your conduct, Major, as mighty hoomane,’ says Dan Boggs, raisin’ his glass p’litley. ‘I approves of it, partic’lar.’

“The Major meets Dan’s attentions in the sperit they’re proposed. After a moment Enright speaks of them cannons.

“But you-all got a battery final, Major?’ says Enright.

“Six brass guns,’ says the Major, an’ his gray eyes beams an’ he speaks of ’em like they was six beautiful women. ‘Six brass guns, they be,’ he says. We captured ’em from the enemy an’ I’m put in command. Gents, I’ve witnessed some successes personal, but I never sees the day when I’m as satisfied an’ as contentedly proud as when I finds myse’f in command of them six brass guns. I was like a lover to every one of ’em.

“I’m that headlong to get action—we’re in middle Loosiana at the time—that I hauls a couple of ’em over by the Mississippi an’ goes prowlin’ ’round ontill I pulls on trouble with a little Yankee gun boat. It lasts two hours, an’ I shore sinks that naval outfit an’ piles the old Mississippi on top of ’em. I’m so puffed up with this yere exploit that a pigeon looks all sunk in an’ consumptif beside me.

“Thar’s one feacher of this dooel with the little gun boat which displeases me, however. Old Butler’s got Noo Orleans at the time, an’ among other things he’s editin’ the papers. I reads in one of ’em a month later about me sinkin’ that scow. It says I’m a barb’rous villain, the story does, an’ shoots up the boat after it surrenders, an’ old Butler allows he’ll hang me a whole lot the moment ever he gets them remarkable eyes onto me. I don’t care none at the time much, only I resents this yere charge. I shore never fires a shot at that gunboat after it gives up; I ain’t so opulent of amm’nition as all that. As time goes on, however, thar’s a day when I’m goin’ to take the determination of old Butler more to heart.

“Followin’ the gun-boat eepisode I’m more locoed than ever to get my battery into a fight. An’ at last I has my hopes entirely fulfilled. It’s about four o’clock one evenin’ when we caroms on about three brigades of Yanks. Thar’s mebbby twelve thousand of us rebs an’ all of fourteen thousand of the Lincoln people. My battery is all the big guns we-all has, while said Yanks is strong with six full batteries.

Page 148

“The battle opens up; we’re on a old sugar plantation, an’ after manoeoverin’ about a while we settles down to work. It’s that day I has my dreams of carnage realised in full. I turns loose my six guns with verve an’ fervour, an’ it ain’t time for a second drink before I attracts the warmest attention from every one of the Yankee batteries. She’s shore a scandal the way them gents in bloo does shoot me up! Jest to give you-all a idee: the Yankees slams away at me for twenty minutes; they dismounts two of my guns; they kills or creases forty of my sixty-six men; an’ when they gets through you-all could plant cotton where my battery stands, it’s that ploughed up.

“It’s in the midst of the baile, an’ I’m standin’ near my number-one gun. Thar’s a man comes up with a cartridge. A piece of a shell t’ars him open, an’ he falls across the gun, limp as a towel, an’ then onto the ground. I orders a party named Williams to the place. Something comes flyin’ down outen the heavens above an’ smites Williams on top the head; an’ he’s gone. I orders up another. He assoomes the responsibilities of this p’sition jest in time to get a rifle bullet through the jaw. He lives though; I sees him after the war.

“As that’s no more men for the place, I steps for’ard myse’f. I’m not thar a minute when I sinks down to the ground. I don’t feel nothin’ an’ can’t make it out.

“While I’m revolvin’ this yere phenomenon of me wiltin’ that a-way an’ tryin to form some opinions about it, thar’s a explosion like forty battles all in one. For a moment, I reckons that somehow we-all has opened up a volcano inadvertent, an’ that from now on Loosiana can boast a Hecla of her own. But it ain’t no volcano. It’s my ammunition waggons which, with two thousund rounds is standin’ about one hundred yards to my r’ar. The Yanks done blows up the whole outfit with one of their shells.

“It’s strictly the thing, however, which lets my battery out. The thick smoke of the two thousand cartridges drifts down an’ blankets what’s left of us like a fog. The Yanks quits us; they allows most likely they’ve lifted me an’ my six brass guns plumb off the earth. Thar’s some roodiments of trooth in the theery for that matter.

“These last interestin’ details sort o’ all happens at once. I’ve jest dropped at the time when my ammunition waggons enters into the sperit of the o’casion like I describes. As I lays thar one of my men comes gropin’ along down to me in the smoke.

““Be you hurt, Major?” he says.

““I don’t know,” I replies: “my idee is that you better investigate an’ see.”

“He t’ars open my coat; thar’s no blood on my shirt. He lifts one arm an’ then the other; they’re sound as gold pieces. Then I lifts up my left laig; I’ve got on high hoss-man boots.

""Pull off this moccasin," I says.

"He pulls her off an' thar's nothin' the matter thar. I breaks out into a profoose sweat; gents, I'm scared speechless. I begins to fear I ain't plugged at all; that I've fainted away on a field of battle an' doo to become the scandal of two armies. I never feels so weak an' sick!

Page 149

“I’ve got one chance left an’ trembles as I plays it; I lifts up my right boot. I win; about a quart of blood runs out. Talk of reprievin’ folks who’s sentenced to death! Gents, their emotions is only imitations of what I feels when I finds that the Yanks done got me an’ nary doubt. It’s all right—a rifle bullet through my ankle!

“That night I’m mowed away, with twenty other wounded folks, in a little cabin off to one side, an’ thar’s a couple of doctors sizin’ up my laig.

““Joe,” says one, that a-way, “we’ve got to cut it off.”

“But I votes “no” emphatic; I’m too young to talk about goin shy a laig. With that they ties it up as well as ever they can, warnin’ me meanwhile that I’ve got about one chance in a score to beat the game. Then they imparts a piece of news that’s a mighty sight worse than my laig.

““Joe,” says this doctor, when he’s got me bandaged, “our army’s got to rustle out of yere a whole lot. She’s on the retreat right now. Them Yanks outheld us an’ out-played us an’ we’ve got to go stampedin’. The worst is, thar’s no way to take you along, an’ we’ll have to leave you behind.”

““Then the Yanks will corral me?” I asks.

““Shore,” he replies, “but thar’s nothin’ else for it.”

“It’s then it comes on me about that gunboat an’ the promises old Butler makes himse’f about hangin’ me when caught. Which these yere reflections infooses new life into me. I makes the doctor who’s talkin’ go rummagin’ about ontill he rounds up a old nigger daddy, a mule an’ a two-wheel sugar kyart. It’s rainin’ by now so’s you-all could stand an’ wash your face an’ hands in it. As that medical sharp loads me in, he gives me a bottle of this yere morphine, an’ between jolts an’ groans I feeds on said drug until mornin.’

“That old black daddy is dead game. He drives me all night an’ all day an’ all night ag’n, an’ I’m in Shreveport; my ankle’s about the size of a bale of cotton. Thar’s one ray through it all, however; I misses meetin’ old man Butler an’ I looks on that as a triumph which shore borders on relief.’

““An’ I reckons now,’ says Dan Boggs, ‘you severs your relations with the war?’

““No,’ goes on the Major; ‘I keeps up my voylence to the close. When I grows robust enough to ride ag’in I’m in Texas. Thar’s a expedition fittin’ out to invade an’ subdoo Noo Mexico, an’ I j’ines dogs with it as chief of the big guns. Thar’s thirty-eight hundred bold and buoyant sperits rides outen Austin on these military experiments we plans, an’ as evincin’ the luck we has, I need only to p’int out that nine months later we returns with a scant eight hundred. Three thousand of 'em killed, wounded an' missin' shows that efforts to list the trip under the head of "picnics" would be irony.

Page 150

“Comin’, as we-all does, from one thousand miles away, thar ain’t one of us who saveys, practical, as much about the sand-blown desert regions we invades as we does of what goes on in the moon. That Gen’ral Canby, who later gets downed by the Modocs, is on the Rio Grande at Fort Craig. While we’re pirootin’ about in a blind sort o’ fashion we ropes up one of Canby’s couriers who’s p’intin’ no’t h for Fort Union with despatches. This Gen’ral Canby makes the followin’ facetious alloosion: After mentionin’ our oninvited presence in the territory, he says:

““But let ’em alone. We’ll dig the potatoes when they’re ripe.”

“Gents, we was the toobers!’ An’ yere the Major pauses for a drink. ‘We was the potatoes which Canby’s exultin’ over! We don’t onderstand it at the time, but it gets cl’arer as the days drifts by.

“I’m never in a more desolate stretch of what would be timber only thar ain’t no trees. Thar’s nothin’ for the mules an’ hosses; half the time thar ain’t even water. An’ then it’s alkali. An’ our days teems an’ staggers with disgustin’ experiences. Once we’re shy water two days. It’s the third day about fourth drink time in the evenin’. The sun has two hours yet to go. My battery is toilin’ along, sand to the hubs of gun-carriages an’ caissons, when I sees the mules p’int their y’eers for’ard with looks of happy surprise. Then the intelligent anamiles begins a song of praise; an’ next while we-all is marvellin’ thereat an’ before ever a gent can stretch hand to bridle to stop ’em, the mules begins to fly. They yanks my field pieces over the desert as busy an’ full of patriotic ardour as a drunkard on ’lection day. The whole battery runs away. Gents, the mules smells water. It’s two miles away,—a big pond she is,—an’ that locoed battery never stops, but rushes plumb in over its y’eers; an’ I lose sixteen mules an’ two guns before ever I’m safe ag’in on terry firmy.

“It’s shore remarkable,’ exclaims the Major, settin’ down his glass, ‘how time softens the view an’ changes bitter to sweet that a-way. As I brings before me in review said details thar’s nothin’ more harassin’ from soda to hock than that campaign on the Rio Grande. Thar’s not one ray of sunshine to paint a streak of gold in the picture from frame to frame; all is dark an’ gloom an’ death. An’ yet, lookin’ back’ard through the years, the mem’ry of it is pleasant an’ refreshing a heap more so than enterprises of greater ease with success instead of failure for the finish.

“Thar’s one partic’lar incident of this explorin’ expeditions into Noo Mexico which never recurs to my mind without leavin’ my eyes some dim. I don’t claim to be no expert on pathos an’ I’m far from regyardin’ myse’f as a sharp on tears, but thar’s folks who sort o’ makes sadness a speshulty, women folks lots of ’em, who allows that what I’m about to recount possesses pecooliar elements of sorrow.

Page 151

“Thar’s a young captain—he ain’t more’n a boy—who’s brought a troop of lancers along with us. This boy Captain hails from some’ers up ‘round Waco, an’ thar ain’t a handsomer or braver in all Pres’dent Davis’s army. This Captain—whose name is Edson,—an’ me, bein’ we-all is both young, works ourse’fs into a clost friendship for each other; I feels about him like he’s my brother. Nacherally, over a camp fire an’ mebbly a stray bottle an’ a piece of roast antelope, him an’ me confides about ourse’fs. This Captain Edson back in Waco has got a old widow mother who’s some rich for Texas, an’ also thar’s a sweetheart he aims to marry when the war’s over an’ done. I reckons him an’ me talks of that mother an’ sweetheart of his a hundred times.

“It falls out that where we fords the Pecos we runs up on a Mexican Plaza—the “Plaza Chico” they-all calls it—an’ we camps thar by the river a week, givin’ our cattle a chance to roll an’ recooperate up on the grass an’ water.

“Then we goes p’intin’ out for the settin’ sun ag’in, allowin’ to strike the Rio Grande some’ers below Albuquerque. Captain Edson, while we’re pesterin’ ‘round at the Plaza Chico, attaches to his retinoo a Mexican boy; an’ as our boogles begins to sing an’ we lines out for that west’ard push, this yere boy rides along with Edson an’ the lancers.

“Our old war chief who has charge of our wanderin’s is strictly stern an’ hard. An’ I reckons now he’s the last gent to go makin’ soft allowances for any warmth of yooth, or puttin’ up with any primrose paths of gentle dalliance, of any an’ all who ever buckles on a set of side arms. It thus befalls that when he discovers on the mornin’ of the second day that this Mexican boy is a Mexican girl, he goes ragin’ into the ambient air like a eagle.

“The Old Man claps Edson onder arrest an’ commands the girl to saddle up an’ go streakin’ for the Plaza Chico. As it’s only a slow day’s march an’ as these Mexicans knows the country like a coyote, it’s a cinch the girl meets no harm an’ runs no resks. But it serves to plant the thorns of wrath in the heart of Captain Edson.

“The Old Man makes him loose an’ gives him back his lancers before ever we rides half a day, but it don’t work no mollifications with the young Captain. He offers no remarks, bein’ too good a soldier; but he never speaks to the Old Man no more, except it’s business.

““Joe,” he says to me, as we rides along, or mebbly after we’re in camp at night, “I’ll never go back to Texas. I’ve been disgraced at the head of my troop an’ I’ll take no sech record home.”

““You oughter not talk that a-way, Ed,” I’d say, tryin’ to get his sensibilities smoothed down. “If you don’t care none for yourse’f or for your footure, you-all should remember thar’s something comin’ to the loved ones at home. Moreover, it’s weak sayin’ you-all ain't goin' back to Texas. How be you goin' to he'p it, onless you piles up shore-enough disgrace by desertin' them lancers of yours?"

Page 152

““Which if we has the luck,” says this Captain Edson, “to cross up with any Yanks who’s capable of aimin’ low an’ shootin’ half way troo, I’ll find a way to dodge that goin’ back without desertin’.”

“No, I don’t make no argyments with him; it’s hopeless talkin’ to a gent who’s melancholly an’ who’s pride’s been jarred; thar’s nothing but time can fix things up for him. An’ I allers allows that this boy Captain would have emerged from the clouds eventooal, only it happens he don’t get the time. His chance comes too soon; an’ he shore plays it desperate.

“Our first offishul act after reachin’ the Rio Grande is to lay for a passel of Yank cavalry—thar’s two thousand of ’em I reckons. We rides up on these yere lively persons as we sounds a halt for the evenin’. It looks like our boogles is a summons, for they comes buttin’ into view through a dry arroya an’ out onto the wide green bottoms of the Rio Grande at the first call. They’re about a mile away, an’ at sight of us they begins in a fashion of idle indifference to throw out a line of battle. They fights on foot, them bloo folks do; dismounting with every fourth man to hold the hosses. They displays a heap of insolence for nothin’ but cavalry an’ no big guns; but as they fights like infantry an’ is armed with Spencer seven-shooters besides, the play ain’t so owdacious neither.

“Thar’s mebbly a hour of sun an’ I’m feelin’ mighty surly as I gets my battery into line. I’m disgusted to think we’ve got to fight for our night’s camp, an’ swearin’ to myse’f in a low tone, so’s not to set profane examples to my men, at the idee that these yere Yanks is that preecip’tate they can’t wait till mornin’ for their war-jig. But I can’t he’p myse’f. That proverb about it takin’ two to make a fight is all a bluff. It only takes one to make a fight. As far as we-all rebs is concerned that evenin’ we ain’t honin’ for trouble, leastwise, not ontill mornin’; but them inordinate Yanks will have it, an’ thar you be. The fight can’t be postponed.

“Thar’s no tumblin’ hurry about how any of us goes to work. Both sides has got old at the game an’ war ain’t the novelty she is once. The Yanks is takin’ their p’sition, an’ we’re locatin’ our lines an’ all as ca’mly an’ with no more excitement than if it’s dress p’rade. The Yanks is from Colorado. My sergeant speaks of ’em to me the next day an’ gives his opinion touchin’ their merits.

““Where did you say them Yankees comes from, Major?” says my serjeant.

““Colorado,” I replies.

““Which thar’s about thirty minutes last evenin’,” says my serjeant, “when I shorely thinks they’re recrooted in hell,” an’ my serjeant shakes his head.

“While I’m linin’ up my battery mighty discontented an’ disgruntled, an orderly pulls my sleeve.

""Look thar, Major!" he says.

"I turns, an' thar over on our right, all alone, goes Captain Edson an' his lancers. Without waiting an' without commands, Captain Edson has his boogler sound a charge; an' thar goes the lancers stampedin' along like they're a army corps an' cap'ble of sweepin' the two thousand cool an' c'llected Yankees off the Rio Grande.

Page 153

“For a moment all we does is stand an’ look; the surprise of it leaves no idee of action. The lancers swings across the grassy levels. Thar’s not a shot fired; Edson’s people ain’t got nothin’ but them reedic’lous spears, an’ the Yanks, who seems to know it, stands like the rest of us without firin’ an’ watches ’em come. It’s like a picture, with the thin bright air an’ the settin’ sun shinin’ sideways over the gray line of mountains fifty miles to the west.

“I never sees folks more placid than the Yanks an’ at the same time so plumb alert. Mountain lions is lethargic to ’em. When Captain Edson an’ his lancers charges into ’em the Yanks opens right an’ left, each sharp of ’em gettin’ outen the way of that partic’lar lancer who’s tryin’ to spear him; but all in a steady, unruffled fashion that’s as threatenin’ as it is excellent. The lancers, with Captain Edson, goes through, full charge, twenty rods to the r’ar of the Yankee line. An’, gents, never a man comes back.

“As Edson an’ his troop goes through, the Yanks turns an’ opens on ’em. The voices of the Spencers sounds like the long roll of a drum. Hoss an’ man goes down, dead an’ wounded; never a gent of ’em all rides back through that awful Yankee line. Pore Edson shore has his wish; he’s cut the trail of folks who’s cap’ble of aimin’ low an’ shootin’ half way troo.

“These sperited moves I’ve been relatin’ don’t take no time in the doin’. The hairbrain play of Captain Edson forces our hands. The Old Man orders a charge, an’ we pushes the Yanks back onto their hosses an’ rescoos what’s left of Edson an’ his lancers. After skirmishin’ a little the Yanks draws away an’ leaves us alone on the field. They earns the encomiums of my serjeant, though, before ever they decides to vamos.

“Edson’s been shot hard and frequent; thar’s no chance for him. He looks up at me, when we’re bringin’ him off, an’ says:

““Joe,” an’ he smiles an’ squeezes my hand, while his tones is plenty feeble, “Joe, you notes don’t you that while I ain’t goin’ back to Texas, I don’t have to desert.”

“That night we beds down our boy Captain in a sol’tary Mexican ’doby. He’s layin’ on a pile of blankets clost by the door while the moon shines down an’ makes things light as noonday. He’s been talkin’ to me an’ givin’ me messages for his mother an’ the rest of his outfit at Waco, an’ I promises to carry ’em safe an’ deliver ’em when I rides in ag’in on good old Texas. Then he wants his mare brought up where he can pet her muzzle an’ say Adios to her.

““For, Joe,” he says, “I’m doo to go at once now, an’ my days is down to minutes.”

““The medicine man, Ed,” I says, “tells me that you-all has hours to live.”

""But, Joe," he replies, "I knows. I'm a mighty good prophet you recalls about my not goin' back, an' you can gamble I'm not makin' any mistakes now. It's down to minutes, I tells you, an' I wants to see my mare."

Page 154

“Which the mare is brought up an’ stands thar with her velvet nose in his face; her name’s “Ruth,” after Edson’s sweetheart. The mare is as splendid as a picture; pure blood, an’ her speed an’ bottom is the wonder of the army. Usual a hoss is locoed by the smell of blood, but it don’t stampede this Ruth; an’ she stays thar with him as still an’ tender as a woman, an’ with all the sorrow in her heart of folks. As Edson rubs her nose with his weak hand an’ pets her, he asks me to take this Ruth back to his sweetheart with all his love.

““Which now I’m goin’,” he whispers, “no one’s to mention that eepisode of the Pecos an’ the little Mexican girl of Plaza Chico!”

“Edson is still a moment; an’ then after sayin’ “Good-by,” he lets on that he desires me to leave him alone with the mare.

““I’ll give Ruth yere a kiss an’ a extra message for my sweetheart,” he says, “an’ then I’ll sleep some.”

“I camps down outside the ‘doby an’ looks up at the moon an’ begins to let my own thoughts go grazin’ off towards Texas. It’s perhaps a minute when thar’s the quick crack! of a six-shooter, an’ the mare Ruth r’ars up an’ back’ard ontill she’s almost down. But she recovers herse’f an’ stands sweatin’ an’ shiverin’ an’ her eyes burnin’ like she sees a ghost. Shore, it’s over; pore Edson won’t wait; he’s got to his guns, an’ thar’s a bullet through his head.”

THE END.