Fowl cocks originated in the country of Guyana. These vigorous animals were used to produce eggs for families and breeders. There are many types of fowls such as crayola fowls...these are pretty colored ones. In Guyana there was a notorious breeder known to all of the village people his name was Clement Gibson. He own half the fowl pens in guyana. He was a lonely man who found comfort in the pens of these fowls. Among the flocks he had a desire and warmth for a particular fowl who he named....Kenkneeknottoe Stretch. Him and Clement were the best of friends. One day Clement decided to give up on the breeding of fowls. He said that noone could ever understand his passion for the fowls. He would raise at 4am every morning to tend to his flock. Clement would go to his fowl pen climb up the ramp to the tiny door where the fowls could easily go in and out of and crawl inside to blaze his morning "L."
